Ethopia covers the western wing of the entire cinar. earth under the sum, just as hadia dues the castern wing; and at Meroe it adjoins Egypt, and, after skirting a part of Libya lncegnita, it ends at the linds and sea which the poets call by the name of the Occam, that being the name they applied to the mass of water which surrounds the earth. This country supplies Egypt with the river Nile, which takes its rise at the cataracts (Caludupi), and brings down from Ethiopia all Egypt, the soil of which in fiood-time it imundates. Now in size this comery is not worthy of comparison with India, nor for that matter is any other onc of the continents that are famous among men; and even if you put together all Egypt with Ethiopia; and we may regard the river as so combining the two, we could not compare the two together with India, so vast is the standard of comparison. However their respective rivers, the Indus and the Nile, resemble one another, if we cuns. consider their natures. For they both spread their i moisture orer the land in the summer season, when the earth most wants it, and molike all other rivers they produce the erocodile and the river-horse; and the religious rites celebrated over them correspond with one another, for many of the religious invocations of the Indians are repeated in the case of the Nile. We have a proof of the similarity of the two comntries in the spices which are found in them, also in the fact that the lion and the elephant are eaptured and confined in both the une and the other. They are also the haunts of amimals not found elsewhere, and of blaek men-a feature not found in other continents-and we mect in them with races of pigmies and of people who bark in various ways instead of talking, and other wonders of the kind. And the griffins of the Indians and the ants of the Ethiopians, though they are dissimilar in form, yet, from what we hear, play similar parts; for in each country they are, according to the tales of poets, the guardians of gold, and devoted to the gold reefs of the two countries. But we will not pursue this subject; for we must resume the course of our histury and follow in the sage's footsteps.

watch them at the crossways. I will explain the chap. meaning of this, for the same custom still survives among ourselves. It was a market place to which the Ethiopians bring all the products of their country; and the Egyptians in their turn take them all away and bring to the same spot their own wares of equal raluc, so bartering what they have got for what they have not. Now the inhabitants of the marches are not yet fully black but are halfbreeds in matier of colour, for they are partly not so black as the Ethiopians, yet partly more so than the Egyptians. Apollonius, accordingly, when he realised Compared the character of the market, remarked. "Contrast with (radiug our good Hellenes: they pretend they camot live unless one penny begets another, and unless they can force up the price of their goods by chaffering or holding them back; and one pretends that he has got a danghter whom it is time to marry, and another that he has got a son who has just reached manhood, and a third that he has to pay his subseription to his club, and a fourth that he is having a house built for him, and a fifth that he would be ashamed of being a worse man of business than his father was before him. What a splendid thing then it would be, if wealth were held in less homomr and equality flourished a little more, and 'if the black iron were left to rust in the gromd,' for then all men would agree with one another, and the whole earth would be like one brotherhood."

steps towards Memnon ; an Egyptian boy showed chap. them the way, of whom Damis gives the following account: Timasion was the name of this stripling, They mect who was just emeroing from boyhood, and was now who tells in the prime of life and strength. He had a stepmother who had fallen in love with him ; and when he rejected her overtures, she set upon him and by way of spiting him had poisoned his father's mind against him, condescending to a lower intrigue than ever Phaedra had done, for she acensed him of being effeminate, and of finding his pleasure in favourites rather than in women. He had accordingly abandoned Naucratis, for it was there that all this happened, and was living in the neighbourhood of Memphis; and he had acquired and manned a boat of his own and was plying as a waterman on the Nile. He then, was going down the river when he saw Apollonius sailing up it; and he concluded that the crew consisted of wise men, because he judged them by the cloaks they wore and the books they were hard at work studying. So he asked them whether they would allow one who was so passionately fond of wisdom as himself to share their royage; and Apollonius said: "This youtl is wise, my friends, so let him be granted his request." And he further related the story about the step-mother to those of his companions who were nearest to him, in a low tone while the stripling was still sailing towards them. But when the ships were alongside of one another, Timasion stepped out of his boat, and after addressing a word or two to his pilot, about the cargo in his own boat, he greetel the company. Apollonius then ordered him to sit down under his eyes, and said: "You stripling of Egypt, for you seem to be one of the natives, tell me what you have chap. done of evil or what of grood; for in the one case 111 you shall be forgiven by me, in consideration of your youth; but in the other you shall reap my commendation and become a fellow-stadent of philosophy with me and with these gentlemen." Then noticing that Timasion blushed and checked his impulse to speak, and hesitated whether to say or not what he had been going to say, he pressed his question and repeated it, just as if he had no fore-knowledge of the youth at his command. Then Timasion plucked up courage and said: "O Heavens, how shall I deseribe myself? for I am not a bad boy, and yet I do not know whether I ought to be considered a good one, for there is no particular merit in having abstained from wrong." But Apollonius cried: "Bravo, my boy, you answer me just as if you were a sage from India; for this was just the sentiment of the divine Iarchas. But tell me how you came to form these opinions, and how long ago; for it strikes me that you have been on your guard against some sin." The youth then began to tell them of his step-mother's infatuation for himself, and of how he had rejeeted her advanecs; and when he did so, there was a shout in recognition of the divine inspiration under whieh Apollonius had foretold these details. Timasion, however, caught them up and said: "Most excellent people, what is the matter with you? for my story is one which calls as little for your admiration, I think, as for your ridicule." But Damis said: "It was not that Apminnius we were admiring, but something else which you hin don't know about yet. very remarkable." And Apollonius asked: "Do chap. you sacrifice to Aphrodite, my boy :" And Timasion III answered: " Yes, by Zeus, every day; for 1 consider that this goddess has great influence in human and divine affairs." Thereat Apollonius was dehghted beyond measure, and cried: "Let us, gentlemen, vote a crown to him for his continence rather than to Hippolytus the son of 'Theseas, for the latter insulted Aphrodite; and that perhaps is why he never fell a victim to the tender passion, and why love never ran riot in his soul; but he was allotted an austere and unbending nature. But our friend here admits that he is deroted to the goddess, and yet did not respond to his step-mother's guilty overtures, but went away in terror of the goddess herself, in case he were not on his guard against another's evil passions; and the mere aversion to any one of the gods, such as Hippolytus entertained in regard to Aphrodite, 1 do not class as a form of sobriety; for it is a much greater proof of wisdom and sobriety to speak well of all the gods, especially at Athens, where altars are set up in honour even of monnown gods." So great was the interest whieh he took in Timasion. Nevertheless he called him Hippolytus for the eyes with whieh he looked at his step-mother. It seemed also that he was a young man who was partieular about his person and enhanced its charms by attention to athletic exercises.

But his countrymen being the longest of Hemmon lived of men, still mourn him as a mere vouth and deplore his untimely death. But the place in which his statue is set up resembles, they tell us, an aneient market-place, such as remain in cities that were long ago inhaisited, and where we eome on the remains of columns delicately worked, and find traces of walls and of seats and of the jambs of doors, and images of Hermes, some destroved ly the hand of man, others by that of time. Now this statue, says Damis, was turned towards the sumrise, and was that of a youth still umbearded; and it was made of a black stone, and the two feet were joined together after the style in which statues were made in the time of Daedalus; and the hands were thrust down supporting the body upright upon its seat, for though the figure was still sitting it was represented in the rery act and impulse of rising up. We hear much of this attitude of the statue, and of the expression of its eyes. and of how the lips seem about to speak; hut they say that they had no opportunity of admiring these effects until they saw them realised; for when the sun's rays fell upen the statue, and this happened exactly at dawn, they could not restrain their admiration; for the lips spoke immediately the sun's ray touched them, and the eyes seemed to stand out and gleam against the light as do those of men who love to bask in the sum. Then they say they understood that the figure was of one in the act of rising and making obcisance to the sun, in the way those do who worship the powers above standing erect. They accordingly ciar. offered a sacrifice to the Sun of Ethiopia and to IV Memon of the Dawn, for this the priests recommended them to do, explaining that the one name was derived from the words signifying "to burn and be wam," 1 and the other from his mother. upon him as if he were a suppliant." Apollonius cuap. therefore put the question to 'Timasion: "What do v the naked philosophers think of this particular exile?" And he mswered: "l do not know anything more than that this is the seventh month that he has remained here as a suppliant, and that he has not yet obtained redemption." Said Apolionius: "You don't eall men wise, who refuse to purify him, and are not aware that Philiscus whom he slew was a deseendant of Thamus the Egyptian, who long ago laid waste the comntry of these naked philosophers." Thereat Timasion said in surprise: "What do you mean :" "I mean," said the other, "my good youth, what was actually the fact; for this Thamus once on a time was intrigning against the inhabitants of Memphis, and these philosophers detected his plot and prevented him; and he having failed in his enterprise retaliated by laying waste all the land upon whech they live, for by his brigandage he tyrannised the eomintry romd Memplis. I perceive that Philiseus whom this man slew was the thirteenth in descent from this Thamus, and was obviously an object of exceration to those whose country the latter so thoroughy ravaged at the time in question. Where then is their wisdom: Here is a man that they ought to erown, even if he had slain the other intentionally ; and yet they refuse to purge him of a murder which he committed involuntarily on their behalf." The youth then was astounded and said: "Stranger, who are you?" And Apollonius replied: "He whom you shall find among these naked philosophers. Thence they rode out at sumrise, and arrived before cirap. midday at the academy of the naked sages, who dwell, they relate, upon a moderate-sized hill a little of the naked way from the bank of the Nile; and in point of wis- sages dom they fall short of the Indians rather more than they excel the Egyptians. And they wear next to no elothes in the same way as people do at $\Lambda$ thens in the heat of summer. And in their district there are few trees, and a certain grove of no great size to which they resort when they meet for the transaction of common affairs; but they do not build their shrines in one and the same place, as Indian shrines are built, but one is in one part of the hill and another in another, all worthy of observation, according to the accounts of the Egyptians. The Nile is the chief object of their worship, for they regard this river as land and water at once. They have no need, however, of hut or dwelling, because they live in the open air directly under the heaven itself, but they have built an hospice to accommodate strangers, and it is a portico of no great size, about cqual in length to those of Elis, beneath which the athletes await the sound of the midday trumpet.

At this place Damis records an action of Euphrates, chap. which if we do not regard it as juvenile, was anyow unworthy of the dignity of a philosopher. Euphrates Euphrates had heard Apollonius often say that he wished to with them compare the wisdom of India with that of Egypt, $A$, aginsturius so he sent up to the naked sages one Thrasybulus, a native of Nameratis, to take away our sage's character. Thrasybulus at the same time that he pretended to have come there in order to enjoy their society, told them that the sage of Tyana also would presently arrive, and that they would have no little trouble with him, beeause he estecmed himself more highly than the sages of India did themselves, though he extolled the latter whenever he opened his mouth; and he added that $A$ pollonius had contrived a thousand pitfalls for them, and that he would not allow any sort of influence either to the sum, or to the sky, or to the earth, but pretended to move and juggle and rearrange these forces for whatever end he chose.

VIII

Having concocted these stories the man of Nam- ciiap. cratis went away; and they, imagining they were true, V11 did not indeed decline to meet Apollonius when he arrived, but pretended that they were oceupied with important business and were so intent upon it, that they could only arrange an interview with him if they had time, and if they were informed first of what he wanted and of what attracted him thither.

And a messenger from them bade them stay and ladge chap. in the portico, but Apollonius remarked: "We do Vin not want to hear about a house for ourselves, for the climate here is such that anyone can live naked,"an unkind reference this to them, as it implied that they went without clothes not to show their endurance, but because it was too hot to wear any. And he added: "I am not surprised indeed at their not yet knowing what $I$ want, and what $I$ an come here for, though the Indians never asked me these questions."

IX

Accordingly Apollonius lay down under one of cilap. the trees, and let his companions who were there $1 x$ with him ask whatever question they plased. But Thanainn Damis took Timasion apart and asked lim the these question in private: " About these naked sages, my ${ }^{\text {intrigucs }}$ good fellow, as you have lived with them, and in all probability know, tell me what their wisdom comes to?" "It is," answered the other, "manifold and profound." "And yet," said Damis, "their demeanour towards us does not evince any wisdom, my fine fellow; for when they refuse to converse about wisdom with so great a man as our master, and assume all sorts of airs against him, what can I say of them except that they are too vain and proud." "Pride and vanity!" said the other, "I have already come among them twice, and I never saw any such thing about them ; for they were always very modest and courteous towards those who came to visit them. "Now l have it, by Athene," cried Damis, in a loud tone of indignation. "I warrant he has played us some dirty trick." Timasion then replied: "Your master, when l asked him yesterday who he was, would not answer me at once, but kept his name a seeret; but do you, muless this is a mystery, tell me who he is, for then l could probably help you to find what you seck." And when he heard from Damis, that it was the sage of Tyana, "You have put the matter," he said, " in a nutshell. For Thrasybulus, as he descended the Nile with me, in answer tomy question, what he had gone up there for, explained to me that his love of wisdom was not genuine, and said that he had filled these naked sages here with suspicion of Apollonius, to the end that whenever he came here they might flout him ; and what his quarrel is with him I know not, but anyhow, it is, I think, worthy of a woman or of a vulgar person to backbite him as he has done. But 1 will address myself to these people and ascertain their real disposition; for they are friendly to me." And about eventide Timasion returned, though without telling Apollonins any more than that he had interchanged words with them; however he told Damis in private that they meant to come the next morning primed with all that they had heard from Thrasybulus.

They spent that evening conversing about trifles chap. which are not worth recording, and then they lay down to sleep on the spot where they had supped; but at day-break Apollonius, after adoring the sun according to his custom, had set himself to meditate upon some problem, when Nilus, who was the youngest of the naked philosophers, rumning up to him, exclaimed: "We are coming to you." "Quite right," said Apollonius, "for to get to you I have made this long journey from the sea all the way here." And with these words he followed Nilus. So after exehanging greetings with the sages, and they met him close to the portico, "Where," said Apollonius, "shall we hold our interview?" "Here," said Thespesion, pointing to the grove. Now Thespesion was the eldest of the sect, and presided over them all; and they followed him with an orderly and leisurely step, just as the jury of the athletic sports at Olympia follow the eldest of their number. And when they had sat down, which they did anyhow, and without observing their previous order, they all fixed their eyes on 'Thespesion as the one who should regale them with a discourse. which he proceeded to do as follows: "They say, Apollonius, ine attacks that you have visited the Pythian aud Olympie the sares festivals; for this was reported of you here by Stratocles of Pharos, who says that he met you there. with an exhibition of games and races run by naked chats. athletes. At the Olympic festival, however, these $x$ superfluities are omitted as inappropriate and unworthy of the place; and those who go to the festival are only provided with the show of naked athletes originally instituted by Heracles. You may see the same contrast between the wisdom of the Indians and our own. For they, like those who invite others to the Pythian festival, appeal to the erowd with all sorts of eharms and wizardry; but we, like the athletes of Olympia, go naked. Here earth strews for us no conches, nor does it yield us milk or wine as if we were bacchants, nor does the air uplift us and sustain us aloft. But the earth beneath us is our only conch, and we live by partaking of its natural fruits, whieh we would have it yield to us gladly and without being tortured against its will. But you shall see that we are not unable to work trieks if we like. Heigh! you tree yonder,'" he eried, pointing to an elm tree, the third in the row from that under which they were talking, "just salute the wise Apollonius, will you:" And forthwith the tree saluted him, as it was bidden to do, in aecents which were articulate and like those of a woman. Now he wrought this sign to diseredit the Indians, and in the belief that by doing so he would wean Apollonius of his excessive estimate of their powers; for he was always reeounting to everybody what the Indians said and did.

Then the Egyptian added these precepts: he said that it is suffieient for the sage to abstain from cating all flesh of living animals, and from the roving desires which mount up into the soul through the eyes, and from envy which ends by teaching injustice to hand and will, and that truth stands not in need Crap. of miracle-mongering and sinister arts. "For look," X he said, "at the Apollo of Delphi, who keeps the And centre of Hellas for the utterance of his oraeles. There then, as you probably know yourself, a person who desires a response, puts his question briefly, and Apollo tells what he knows without any miraculous display. And yet it would be just as easy for him to convulse the whole mountain of larnassus, and to alter the springs of the Castalian fountain so that it should run with wine, and to check the river Cephisus and stay its stream; but he reveals the bare truth without any of this show or ostentation. Nor must we suppose that it is by his will, that so much gold and showy offerings enter his treasury, nor that he would care for his temple even if it were made twiee as large as it already is. For once on a time this god Apollo dwelt in quite a humble habitation ; and a little hut was construeted for him to whieh the bees are said to have contributed their honeycomb and was, and the birds their feathers. For simplieity is the teacher of wisdom and the teaeher of truth ; and you must embrace it, if you would have men think you really wise, and forget all your legendary tales that you aequired among the Indians. For what need is there to beat the drum over such simple matters as: 'Do this, or do not do it,' or ' I know it, or I do not know it,' or 'It is this and not that'? What do you want with thunder, my, I would say, What do you want to be thmoder-struck for?

You have seen in pieture-books the representation of Hercules by Prodicus; in it Hereules is represented as a youth, who has not yet chosen the life he

Vice is adorned with gold and necklaces and with purple rament, and her cheeks are painted and her hair delicately plaited and her eyes underlined with hema; and she also wears molden slippers, for she is pietured strutting about in these; but virtue in the picture resembles a woman worn out with toil, with a pinehed look; and she has chosen for her adornment rough squalor, and she goes without shoes and in the plainest of raiment, and she would have appeared naked if she had not too much regard for feminine decency. Now figure yourself, Apollonius, as standing between Indian wisdom on one side, and our own humble wistom on the other ; :magine that you hear the one telling you how she will strew Howers under you when you lie down to sleep, yes, and by Heaven, how she will regale you upon milk and nourish you on honey-comb, and how she will supply yon with nectar and wings, whenever you want them; and how she will wheel in tripods, whenerer you drink, and golden thrones; and you shall have no hard work to do, but everything will be flung unsought into your lap. But the other discipline insists that you must lie on the bare ground in squalor, and be seen to toil naked like ourselves; and that you must not find dear or sweet anything which you have not won by hard work ; and that you must not be boastful, nor hunt after vanities and pursue pride ; and that you must be on your guard against all dreams and visions which lift you of the carth. If then you really make the choice of Hercules, and steel your will resolutely neither to dishonour truth, nor to decline the simplicity of nature, then you baly say

Whes he ended. all turned their eyes upon $\Lambda_{\text {pol- chirp. }}$ lonius; his own followers knowing well that he would reply, while Thespesion's friends wondered what he Apollonius could say in answer. But he, after praising the flueney and vigour of the Egyptian, merely said: "Hare you anything more to say ?" "No, by Zeus,", said the other, "for I have said all I have to say." Then he asked afresh: "And has not any one of the rest of the Egyptians anything to say:" "I am their spokesman," answered his antagonist, "and you have heard them all." Apollonius accordingly paused for a minute and then, fixing his cyes, as it were, on the discourse he had hard, he spoke as follows: "You have very well described and in a sound philosophic spirit the choice which Prodicus declares Hereules to have made as a young man; lout, ye wise men of the Egyptians, it does not apply in the least to myself. not find that yon had already made the choice. chap. Being, however, as old as I am, and so far advanced XI in wisdom as I am, I shail not hesitate as it were to make you the auditors of my life and motives, and teach you that I rightly chose this life of mine, than which no better one has ever suggested itself to me. For I discerned a certain sublimity in the diseipline of Pythagoras, and how a certain secret wisdom enabled him to know, not only who he was himself, but also who he had been; and I saw that he approached the altars in prrity, and suffered not his belly to be polluted by partaking of the flesh of animals; and that he kept his body pure of all garments woven of dead animal refuse; and that he was the first of mankind to restrain his tongue, inventing a discipline of silence described in the proverbial phrase, "An ox sits upon it." I also saw that his philosophical system was in other respects oracular and true. So 1 ran to embrace his teachings, not choosing one form of wisdom rather than another of two presented me, as you, my excellent Thespesion, advise me to do. For philosophy marshalled before me her various points of view, investing them with the adomment proper to each, and she commanded me to look upon them and make a sound ehoice. Now they were all possessed of an august and divine beauty; and some of them were of such dazzling brightness that you might well have closed your eyes. However I fixed my eyes firmly upon all of them, for they themselves encouraged me to do so by moving towards me, and telling me beforehand how much they would wive me. Well, one of them professed that she would shower uron me a swarm of pleasures without any toil on my part ; and another that she would give me rest after toil; and a third Cimap. that she would mingle mirth and merriment in my XI toil ; and everywhere I had glimpses of pleasures and of unrestrained indngence in the pleasures of the table ; and it seemed that I had only to stretch out my hand to be rich, and that I needed not to set any bridle upon my eyes, but love and loose de ire and such-like feelings were freely allowed me. One of them, howerer, boasted that she would restrain me from such things, but she was bokd and abusive and in an unabashed manner elbowed all others aside; and $l$ beheld the inefiable form of wisdom which long ago conquered the soul of Pythatgoras; and she stood, I may tell you, not among the many, but kept herself apart and in silence; and when she saw that I ranged not myself with the rest, thongh as yet I knew not what were her wares, she said: 'Young man, 1 am unpleasing and a lady full of sorrows ; for, if anyone betakes himself to my abode, he must of his own choice put away all dishes which contain the Hesh of living animals, and he must forget wine, nor make muddy therewith the cup of wisdom which is set in the souls of those that drink no wine; nor shall blanket keep him warm, nor wool shom from a living animal. But $I$ allow him shoes of bark, and he must sleep anywhere and anyhow, and if 1 find my votaries yiedding to sensual pleasures, I have precipices to which justice that waits upon wisdom crarries them and pushes them over ; and $I$ am so harsh to those who make choice of my discipline that I have bits ready to restrain their tongues. at once, and the faculty to regard no man with char. envy, and to be dreaded by tyrants rather than eringe to them, and to have your humble offerings appear sweeter to the gods than the offerings of those who pour out before them the blood of bulls. And when you are pure I will grant you the faculty of foreknowledge, and I will so fill your cyes with light, that you shall distinguish a god, and recognise a hero, and detect and put to shame the shadowy phantoms which disguise themselves in the form of men.' This was the life I chose, ye wise of the Egyptians; it was a sound choice and in the spirit of Pythagoras, and in making it I neither deceived myself, nor was dcceived; for I have become all that a philosopher should become, and all that she promised to bestow upon the philosopher, that is mine. For I have studied profoundly the problem of the rise of the art and whence it draws its first principles; and I have realised that it belongs to men of transcendent religious gifts, who have thoroughly investigated the nature of the ssoul, the well-springs of whose existence lie back in the immortal and in the unbegotten.

Now I agree that this doctrine was wholly alien to the Athenians; for when Plato in their city lifted up his voice and discoursed upon the soul, fuil of inspiration and wisdom, they cavilled against him and adopted opinions of the soul opposed thereto and altogether false. And one may well ask whether there is any city, or any race of men, where not one more and another less, but wherein men of all ages alike, will cnunciate the same doctrine of the soul. And I myself, because my youth and inexperience so inclined me, began by looking up to

If then you were enamoured of the wisdom which the Indians discovered, would you call it not by the name which its matural parents bore, but by the name of its adoptive sires ; and so confer upon the Egyptians a greater boom, than if that were to happen over again which their own pocts relate. namely if the Nile on reaching its full were fomend to be with honey hlent?' It was this which turned my steps to the Indians rather than to yourselves; for I reflected that they were more subtle in their understanding, because such men as they live in contact with a purer daylight, and entertain truer opinions of nature and of the gods, beeause they are near unto the latter, and live on the edge and confines of that thermal essence whieh quickens all unto life. pression upon me as the talent of Aeschylus is said Crise. to have made upon the Athenians. For he was a poet of tragedy, and finding the art to be rude and thom with inchoate and as yet not in the least thaborated, he Aeschylus went to work, and curtailed the prolixity of the chorus, ${ }^{1}$ and invented dialogues for the actors, discarding the long monodies of the earlier time; and he hit upon a plan of killing people behind the stage instead of their being slain before the eyes of the audience. Well, if we cannot deny his talent in making all these improvements, we must nevertheless admit that they might hase suggested themselves equally well to an inferior dramatist. But his talent was twofold. On the one hand as a poct he set himself to make his diction worthy of tragedy, on the other hand as a manager, to adapt his stage to sublime, rather than to humble and grovelling, themes. Accordingly he devised masks which rupresented the forms of the heroes, and he mounted his actors on buskins so that their gait might correspond to the characters they played; and he was the first to devise stage dresses, which might convey an adequate impression to the audience of the heroes and herones they saw. For all these reasons the Athenians aceounted him to be the father of tragedy : and even after his death they continued to insite him to represent his plays at the Dionysiac festival, for in accordance with public decree the plays of Aeschylus continued to be put upon the stage and win the prize anew. And yet the gratification of a well-staged tragedy is insigiificant, for its pleasures last a brief Jay, as brief as is the season of the Dionysiac festival; but the gratification of a philosophic system devised to chap. meet the requirements of a Pythagoras, and also xt breathing the inspiration in which Pythagoras was anticipated by the Indians, lasts not for a brief time, but for an endless and incalculable period. It is then not umeasonable on my part. I think, to have devoted myself to a philosophy so highly elaborated, and to one which, to use a metaphor from the stage, the Indians mount, as it deserves to be mounted, upon a lofty and divine mechanism, and then wheel it forth upon the stage. And that I was right to Describes admire them, and that $I$ am right in considering them to be wise and blessed, it is now time to who were convince you. I beheld men dwelling upon the theners of earth, and yet not upon it, I beheld them fortified satges without fortifications, I beheld them possessed of nothing, and yet possessed of all things. You will say that I have taken to riddles, but the wisdom of P'ythagoras allows of this ; for he taught us to speak in riddles, when he discovered that the word is the teacher of silence. And there was a time when yon yourselves took counsel with Pythagoras, and were advocates of this same wisdom; that was in the time when you could say nothing too good of the Indian philosophy, for to begin with and of old you were Indians. Subsequently because your soil was wrath with you, you came hither; and then ashamed of the reasons owing to which you quitted it, you tried to get men to regard you as anything rather than Ethiopians who had come from India hither, and you took every pains to efface your past. This is why you stripped yourselves of the apparel in which you came thence, as if you were ansions to dolf along with it your Ethiopian nationality. This is why yon have resolved to worship the gods in the Egyptian cmap. rather than in your own fashion, and why you have $x$ set yourselves to disseminate unflattering storics of the Indians, as if in maligning them you did not foul your own nest. And in this respect you hase not yet altered your tone for the better : for only to-day you have given here an exhibition of your propensities for abuse and satire, pretending that the Indians are no better employed than in startling people and in pandering to their eyes and cars. And because as yet you are ignorant of $m$ w wisdom, you show yourself indifferent to the fame which crowns it. Well, in defence of myself I do not mean to say anything, for I am content to be what the Indians think me; but I will not allow them to be attacked. And if you are so sonnd and sane as to possess any tineture of the wisdom of the man of Himera, who composed in honour of Helen a poem whieh contradicted a former one and called it a palinode, it is high time for you also to use the words he used and say: 'This discourse of ours is not true,' so changing your opinion and adopting one better than you at present entertain about these people. But if you have not the wit to recant, you must at least spare men to whom the gods vouchsafe, as worthy of them, their own prerogatives, and whose possessions they do not disdain for themselves.

"You have also, Thespesion, made some remarks Refutes the about the simplicity and frectom from pomp which argunent characterises the Pythian oracle: and by way of frout the example you instanced the temple cemposed of Pythian wax and feathers; but I do not myself find that even this was devoid of pomp, for we have the char. line:

'Oh birds bring hither your wings, and bees your

Such language betokens a earefully prepared home and the form of house. And the god I believe regarded even this as too humble and below the dignity of his wisdom, and therefore desired to have another and yet another temple, big ones these and a hundred feet in breadth; and from one of themit is said that golden figures of the wryneck were hung up which possessed in a manner the charm of the Sirens; and the god collected the most precious of the offerings into the Pythian temple for ornament ; nor did he reject works of statuars, when their authors brought him to his temple colussal tigures both of gods and men, and also of horses, oxen and other animals; nor did he refuse the gift which Glaucus brought thither of a stand for a goblet, nor the pieture of the taking of the citadel of llimm which Polygnotus painted there. For I imagine he did not consider that the gold of Lydia really beautified the Pythian fane, but he admitted it on behalf of the Hellenes themselves, by way of pointing out to them, I believe, the immense riches of the barbarians, and inducing them to covet that rather than eontinue to ravage one another's lands. And he accordingly adopted the Greck fashion of art whieh suited his peculiar wisdom, and adomed his shane therewith. And I believe that it was by way of adormment that he alno puts his oracles in metrical form. For if he did not wish to make a show in this matter, he would surcly

For here are short formulas, or as you call it naked ones. But in order to display his mastery of the grand style, and in order to please those who came to consult his oracle, he adopted the poetical form; and he does not allow that anything exists which he does not know, but elaims to have counted the sunds of the sea and to know their number, and also to have fathomed the depths of the sea.
" But I suppose you will call it miracle-mongering, that Apollo dictates his oracles with such proud dignity and elation of spirit? But if you will not be annoyed, Thespesion, at what I say, there are certain old women who go about with sieves in their hands to shepherds, sometimes to cow-herds, pretending to heal their flocks, when they are sick, by divination, as they eall it, and they claim to be called wise women, yea wiser than those who are unfeignedly prophets. It seems to me that you are in the same case, when I contrast your wisdom with that of the Indians; for they are divine, and have trimmed and adorned their science after the manner of the Pythian oracle; but you-however I will say no more, for modesty in speech is as dear to me as it is dear to the Indians, and I would be glad to have it at once to attend upon and to guide my tongue, seeking to compass what is in my power when I am praising those to whom I am so devoted, but leaving alone what is too high for me to attain unto, without bespattering it with petty disapproval. Homer about the Cyclopes, how their land, all unsown Cifar. and unploaghed, nourished the most fearless and XI most lawless of beings; and if it is some Edoni or Lydians who are conducting their bacchic revels, you are quite ready to believe that the carth will supply them with fomntains of milk and wine, and give them to drink thereof; but you would deny to these Indians, lovers of all wisdom as enthusiastic as ever bacchants were, the unsonglat bounties which earth offers them. Moreover tripods, gifted with wills of their own, attend the banquets of the gods also ; and Ares, ignorant and hostile as he was to Hephacestus, yet never accused him merely for making them; nor is it conceivable that the gods ever listened to such an indictment as this: 'You commit an injustice, $O$ Hephaestns, in adorning the banquet of the gods, and encompassing it with miracles.' Nor was Hephaestus ever sued for constructing handmaids of gold, nor accused of debasing the metals beeause he made the gold to breathe. For every art is interested to adorn, and the very existence of the arts was a discovery made in behalf of ornament. Moreover a man who goes without shoes and wears a philosopher's cloak and hangs a wallet on his back is a creature of ornament; nay, more even the nakedness which you affect, in spite of its rough and plain appearance, has for its object ornament and decoration, though here too there is not absent a certain element of what they call empty pride. Whereupon Thespesion said: "But if you were a merchant or a seafarer, and you brought to us some cargo or other from over there, would you claim, merely because it came from India, to dispose of it untested and unexamined, refusing us, either the liberty of looking at it or tasting it?" "Be it so," said Apollonius, " and let us hold a conversation, for that will be the best way of reconciling us."

And Nilus, as he was passionately anxious to listen Chap. to Apollonius, said: "And what's more, it behores you to begin the conversation, and to tell us all abont the jommey which yon made to the people of India, and about the conversations which yon lield there, I have un loubt on the most brilliant topice", " bud experimen I too," said Thespesion, "long to hear about the wisdom of Phraotes, for you are said to have brought from India some examples. of his arguments." Apollonius accordingly began by telling them about the events which occurred in Babylon, and told them everything, and they gladly listened to bim, spellbound by his words. But when it was mid-day, they broke off the conversation, for at this time of day the naked sages, like others attend to the ceremonies of religion.

Apollonics and his comrades were about to dine, chap. when Nilus presented himself with vegetables and bread and dried fruits, some of which he carried himself, while his friends earried the rest; and very adhesion to politely he said: "The sages send these gifts of hospitality, not only to yourselves but to me; for I mean to share in your repast, not uninvited, as they say, but inviting myself." "It is a delightful gift of hospitality," said Apollonius, "which you bring to us, $O$ youth, in the shape of yourself and of your disposition, for you are evidently a philosopher without guile, and an enthonsiastic lover of the doctrines of the Indians and of Pythagoras. So lie down here and eat with us." "I will do so," said the other, "but your dishes will not be ample enough to satisfy me." "It seems to me," said the other, "that you are a goumand and an appalling eater." "None like me," said the other, "for althongl you have set lefore me so ample and so brilliant a repast, I am not sated; and after a little time I am come back again to eat afresh. What then ean you eall me but an insatiable cormorant?" "Eat your fill," said Apollonius," and as for topies of conversation, some you must yourself supply, and I will give you others."

"But," Milus quit, said Apollonius, "I think, my good Egyptian, that sagestoj, win you will incur the censure of Thespesion and his society for two reasons; firstly, that after no further examination and testing of ourselves you have left them, and secondly that you give the preference to our mamers and discipline with more precipitancy than is admissible where a man is making choice of how he shall live." "I agree with you," said the young man, "but if I am to blame for making this choice, I might also be to blame if I did not make it ; and anyhow they will be most open to rebuke, if they make the same choice as myself. For it will be more justly reprehensible in them, as they are both older and wiser than myself, not to have made the choice long ago which I make now; for with all their advantages they will have failed to choose what in practice would so much redound to their advantage." "A very generous sentiment indeed, my good routh, is this which you have expressed," said Apollonius; "but beware lest the mere fact of their being so wise and aged should give them an appearance, at any rate, of being right in choosing as they have donc, and of having good reason for rejecting my doctrine; and lest you should seem to take up a very bold position in setting them to rights rather than in following them." But the Egyptian turned short round upon Apollonius and countering his opinion said: "So fir as it was right for a young man to agree with his elders, I have been careful to do so ; for so long as I thought that these gentlemen were pyssessed of a

And after he had had intercourse with the Indians of the seaboard, he bronght home stories of the wise men of that region, closely similar to those which you have told us. And his acconnt which $l$ heard was somewhat as follows, namely that the Indians are the wisest of mankind, but that the Ethiopians are colonists sent from India, who follow their forefathers in matters of wisdom, and fix their eyes on the institutions of their home. Well, l, having reached my teens, surrendered my patrimony to those who wanted it more than myself, and frequented the socicty of these naked sages, naked myself as they, in the hope of picking up the teaching of the Indians, or at any rate teaching allicd to theirs. And they certainly appeared to me to be wise, though not after the manner of India; but when $I$ asked them point blank why they did not teach the philosophy of India, they plunged into abose of the natives of that country very much as you have heard them do in their specehes this very day. making any voyage over the Red Sea or adventuring chap. to the inhabitants of the Gulf, to taste the wisdom of India. It is not to-day therefore for the first time that I shall make my choice, but I made it long ago, though I did notobtain what I hoped to obtain. For what is there to wonder at if a man who has missed what he was looking for, returns to the search? And if I should convert my friends yonder to this point of view, and persmade them to adopt the convictions which I have adopted myself, should I, tell me, be guilty of any hardihood? For yon must not reject the elaim that youth makes, that in some way it assimilates an idea more easily than old age; and anyone who counsels another to adopt the wisdom and teaching which he himself has chosen, anyhow escapes the imputation of trying to persuade others of things he does not believe himself. And anyone who takes the blessings bestowed upon him by fortune into a comer and there enjoys them by himself, violates their character as blessings, for he prevents their sucetness from being enjoyed by as many as possible."

After they had held this diseussion and listened to some recollections of India, they lay down to sleep upon the grass; but at daybreak, having offered their accustomed prayers, they followed Nilus, who led them into the presence of Thespesion. They accordingly greeted one another, and sitting down logether in the grove they began a conversation in which Apollonius led as follows: "How important it is," said he, " not to conceal wisdom, is proved by our conversation of yesterday; for because the Indians taught me as much of their wisdom as I thought it proper for me to know, I not only remember my teachers, but I go about instilling into others what I heard from them. And you too will be richly rewarded by me, if you send me away with a knowledge of your wisdom as well; for I shall not cease to go about and repeat your teachings to the Greeks, while to the Indians I shall write them."

"Ask," they said, "for you know question comes CHAp. first and argument follows on it." And Apollonius Alumbins said: "It is about the gods that I would like to attacks the ask you a question first, namely, what induced you of Egyt to impart, as your tradition, to the people of this country forms of the gods that are alosurd and grotesque in all but a few eases? In a few cases, do I say? I would rather say that in very few are the gods' images fashioned in a wise and god-like manner, for the mass of your shrines seem to have been erected in honour rather of irrational and ignoble animals than of gods." Thespesion, resenting these remarks, said: "And your own images in Grecee, how are they fashoned:" "In the way," he replied, "in which it is best and most reverent to eonstruct images of the gods." "I suppose you allude." said the other, "to the statue of Zeus in Olympia, and to the image of Athema and to that of the Cnidian goddess and to that of the Argive goddess and to other images equally beantiful and full of charm." "Not only to these," replied Apollonius, " but withont exception I maintain, that whereas in other lands statuary has serupulously observed deeeney and fitness, ron rather make ridienle of the gods than really believe in them." "Your artists, then, like Phidias," said the other, "and like Praxiteles, went up, I suppose, to beaven and took a eopy of the forms of the gods, and then reproduced these by their art, or was there any other inflnence which presided over and guided their moulding ?" an influence pregnant with wisdom and genius." Chap. "What was that ?" said the other, "for I do not Xix think you ean adduee any exceptimitation." "Imagination," said Apollonius, "wrought these works, a wiser and subtler artist by far than imitation; for imitation can only create as its handiwork what it has seen, but imagination equally what it has not seen ; for it will conceive of its ideal with reference to the reality, and imitation is often baffled by terror, but imagination by nothing ; for it marches undismayed to the goal which it has itself laid down. When you entertain a notion of Zeus you must, I suppose, envisage him along with heaven and seasons and stars, as Phidias in his day endeavoured to do, and if you would fashion an image of Athene you must image in your mind armies and cumming, and handicrafts, and how she leapt out of Zeus himself. But if you make a hawk or an owl or a wolf or a dog, and put it in your temples instead of Hermes or Athene or Apollo, your animals and your birds may be esteemed and of much price as likencesses, but the gods will be very moch lowered in their dignity." "I think," said the other, " that you criticise our religion very superficially; for if the Egyptians have any wisdom, they show it by their deep respect and reverence in the representation of the gods, and by the cireumstance that they fashion their forms as symbols of a profound inner meaning, so as to enhance their solemnity and august character." Apollonius thereon merely laughed and said: "My good friends, you have indeed greatly profited by the wisdom of Egypt and Ethiopia, if your dog and your ibis and your goat seem particularly angust and god-like, for this is what I learn from Thespesion the sage.

But what is there that is august or awe-inspiring in chap. these images? Is it not likely that perjurers and XIX temple-thieves and all the rabble of low jesters will despise such holy objects rather than dread them; and if they are to be held :mgust for the hidden meanings which they convey, surely the gods in Egypt would have met with mucll greater reverence, if no images of them had ever been set up at all, and if you had planned your theology along other lines wiser and more mysterious. For I imagine you might have built temples for them, and have fixed the altars and laid down rules about what to saerifiee and what not, and when and on what seale, and with what liturgies and rites, without introducing any image at all, but leaving it to those who frequented the temples to imagine the images of the gods ; for the mind ean more or less delineate and figure them to itself better than can any artist; but you have denied to the gods the privilege of beauty both of the outer eve and of imer sarggestion." Thespesion reptied and said: "There was a certain Athemian, ealled Socrates, a foolish old man like ourselves, who thought that the dog and the goose and the plane tree were gods and used to swear by them." scourging in Sparta, and asked if the Lacedacmon- ciat. ians were smitten with rods in public. "Y'es," XX answered the other, "as hard, O Thespesion, as men The ritual can smite them; and it is especially men of nohle of spartan and distinguished birth among them that are so treated." "Then what do they do to menials," he asked, "when they do wrong ?" "They do not kill them nowadays," said Apollonius, "as Lycurgus formerly allowed, but the same whip is used to them too." "And what judgment does Hellas pass upon the matter?" "They flock," he answered, "to see the spectacle with pleasire and utmost enthusiasm, as if to the festival of Hyacinthus, or to that of the naked boys." "Then these excellent Hellenes are not ashamed, either to behold those publicly whipped who erewhile governed them or to reflect that they were governed by men who are whipped before the eyes of all? And how is it that you did not reform this abuse? For they say that you interested yourself in the affairs of the Lacedaemonians, as of other people." "So far as anything could be reformed, I gave them my advice, and they readily adopted it; for they are the freest of the Hellenes; but at the same time they will only listen to one who gives them good advice. Now the custom of scourging is a ceremony in honour of the Scythian Artemis, so they say, and was prescribed by oracles, and to oppose the regulations of the gods is in my opinion utter madness." "'Tis a poor wisdom, Apollonius," he replied, "which you attribute to the gods of the Hellenes, if they countenance scourging as a part of the discipline of freedom." "It's not the scourging," he said, "but the sprinkling of the altar with homan blood that is important, for the Scythians too held the altar to be worthy thereof; but the Laeedac- chap. monians modified the ceremony of sacrifice because of its implacable cruelty, and turned it into a contest of endurance, undergone without any loss of life, and yet securing to the goddess as first fruits an offering of their own blood." "Why then," said the other, "do they not sacrifice strangers right out to Artemis, as the Scythians formerly considered it right to do?" " Because," he answered, " it is not congenial to any of the Greeks to adopt in their full rigour the manners and eustoms of barbarians." "And yet," said the other, "it seems to me that it would be more humane to sacrifice one or two of them than to enforee as they do a policy of exclusion against all foreigners."

"Let us not assail," said the other, "O Thespesion, the law-giver Lycurgus; but we must understand him, and then we shall sce that his prohibition to strangers to settle in Sparta and live there was not inspired on his part by mere boorish exclusiveness, but by a desire to keep the institutions of Sparta in their original purity by preventing outsiders from mingling in her life." "Well," said the other, "I should allow the men of Sparta to be what they claim to be, if they had ever lived with strangers, and yet had faithfully adhered to their home principles; for it was not by keeping true to themselves in the absence of strangers, but by doing so in spite of their presence, that they needed to show their superiority. But they, although they enforeed this policy of excluding strangers, corrupted their institutions, and were found doing exactly the same as did those of the Greeks whom they most detested. subsequent naval programme and policy of im- criap. posing tribute was modelled entircly upon that of $x x$ Athens, and they themselves ended by committing acts which they had themselves regarded as a just casus belli against the Athenians, whom they had no sooner beaten in the field than they humbly adopted, as if they were the beaten party, their pet institution. Aud the very fact that the goddess was introduced from Taurus and Scythia was the action of men who embraced alien customs. But if an oracle prescribed this, what want was there of a scourge? What need to feign an endurance only fit for slaves? Had they wanted to prove the disdain that Lacedaemonians felt for death, they had I think done better to sacrifice a youth of Sparta with his own consent upon the altar. For this would have been a real proof of the superior courage of the Spartans, and would have disinclined Hellas from ranging herself in the opposite camp to them. But you will say that they had to save their young men for the battlefield; well, in that case the law which prevails among the Scythians, and sentences all men of sixty ycars of age to death, would have been more suitably introduced and followed among the Lacedaemonians than among the Scythians, supposing that they embrace death in its grim reality and not as a mere parade. 'These remarks of mine are directed not so much against the Lacedaemonians, as against yourself, O Apollonius. For if ancient institutions, whose hoary age defies our understanding of their origins, are to be examined in an unsympathetic spirit, and the reason why they are pleasing to heaven subjected to cold criticism, such a line of speculation will produce a crop of odd conclusions;

"It was very sensible," said the other, "of the Indians to reject such a view; for good sense is something more than not entertaining nonsense, just as courage is something more than not running away from the ranks; and so temperance is something more than the avoidance of adultery, and no one reserves his praise for a man who has simply shown himself to be not bad. For beeause a thing, no matter what, is equi-distant between praise and punishment, it is not on that aecount to be reckoned off-hand to be virtue." "If it had been Phraotes," said Apollonius, " who turned up on that oceasion, you might rightly blame me for not gravely discussing the subject of justice in his presence. But you know from the account which I gave of him yesterday that the man is a drunkard and an enemy of all philosophy. What need therefore was there to inflict on him the trouble? Why should we try to win eredit for ourselves in the presence of a sybarite who thinks of nothing but his own pleasures? But inasmuch as it is incumbent upon wise men like ourselves to explore and trace out justice, more so than on kings and generals, let us proceed to examine the absolutely just man. For though I thought myself just in the affair of the ship, and thought others just too, becanse they do not practise iniustice, you deny that this in itself constitutes them just or worthy of honour." "And rightly so," said the other, "for whoever heard of a decree being drafted by Athenians or Lacedaemonians in firour of crowning so and so, because lie is not a libertine, or of granting the freedom of the city to so and so, because the temples have not been robbed by him? Still they ${ }_{\text {The }}$ xate of at least were put to death on the score of acts of Aristides injustice imputed to them, and the verdict was a distortion of the truth; whereas in the case of Aristides the son of Lysimachus, it was very justice that was the undoing of him, for he in spite of his integrity was banished merely becanse of his reputation for this very virtue. And I am sure that justice will appear in a very ridiculous light; for having been appointed by Zeus and by the Fates to prevent men being unjust to one another, she has never been able to defend herself against injustice.

And the history of Aristides is suffieient to me to show the difference between one who is not unjust and one who is really just. For, tell me, is not this the same Aristides of whom your Hellenic compatriots when they come here tell us that he mondertook a voyage to the islands to fix the tribute of the allies, and after settling it on a fair basis, returned again to his country still wearing the same cloak in which he left it?" to their ability to pay, and not in excess of the chap. resources of their respective comntries; and whereas he has endeavoured to keep them loyal to the Athenians, and to see that they shall feel it no grievance to pay upon this scale, it is hereby resolved to crown him for justice.' Do rou not suppose that Aristides would himself have opposed the first of these resolutions, as an indignity to his entire life, seeing that it only honoured him for not doing injustice; whereas, he might perhaps have supported the other resolution as a fair attempt to express his intentions and policy? For I imagine it was with an eye to the interest of Athenians and subject states alike, that he took care to fix the tribute on a fair and moderate basis, and in fact his wisdom in this matter was conclusively proved after his death. For when the Athenians exceeded his valuations and imposed heavier tributes upon the islands, their naval supremacy at once went to pieces, though it more than anthing else had made them formidable ; on the other hand the prowess of the Lacedaemonians passed on to the sea itself; and nothing was left of Athenian supremaey. for the whole of the subject states rushed into revolution and made good their escape. It follows then, () Apollonius, that rightly judged, it is not the man who alstains from injustice that is just, but the man who himself does what is just, and also influences others not to be unjust; and from such justice as his there will spring up a crop of other virtues, especially those of the law-court and of the legislative chamber. For such a man as he will make a muich fairer judge than people who take their oaths upon the dissected parts of rietins, and his "Farewell then," said the other, "and pray to the springs for whatever you desire, for they are divine. But 1 imagine you will take as your guide Timasion, who formerly lived at Naucratis, but is now of Memphis; for he is well aequainted with the springs of the Nile and he is not so impure as to stand in need of further lustrations. The Catadupi are mountains formed of good soil, about the same size as the hill of the Lydians called Tmolus; and from them the Nile flows rapidly down, washing with it the soil of which it creates Egypt; but the roar of the stream, as it breaks down in a cataract from the mountains and hurls itself noisily into the Nile, is terrible and intolerable to the ears, and many of those who have approached it too close have returned with the loss of their hearing.

And Timasion said: "A eataract is at hand, gentlemen, the last for those who are descending the. river, but the first to meet you on your way up." And after they had adranced about ten stades, he says that they saw a river diseharging itself from the hill-side quite as big as the Marsyas and the Macander at their first eonfluence; and he says that after they had put up a prayer to the Nile, they went on till they no longer saw any animals at all; for the latter are naturally afraid of noise, and therefore live by ealm waters rather than by those which rush headiong with a noise. And after fifteen stades they heard another cataract which this time was horrible and unbearable to the senses, for it was twiee as loud as the first one and it fell from much higher mountains. And Damis relates that his own ears and those of one of his companions were so stunned by the noise, that he himself turned back and besought Apollonius not to go any further ; however he, along with Timasion and Nilus, boldly pressed on to the third cataract, of which he made the following report on their return. Peaks there overhang the Nile, at the most eight stades in height; but the eminence faces the mountains, namely a beetling brow of rocks mysterionsly eut away, as if in a quarry, and the fountains of the Nile eling to the edge of the momntain, till they overbalance and fall on to the rocky eminenee, from which they pour into the Nile as an expanse of whitening billows. "But," said Apollonius, "I have a remedy against these hell-homeds, which Midas is said once to have employed; for Midas himself had some of the blood of satyrs in his veins, as was elear from the shape of his ears; and a satyr onee, trespassing on his kinship with Midas, made merry at the expense of his ears, not only singing about them, but piping about them. Well, Midas, I understand, had heard from his mother that when satyr is overeome by wine he falls asleep, and at such times comes to his senses and will make friends with you; so he mixed wine which he had in his palaee in a fountain and let the satyr get at it, and the latter drank it up and was overcome. And to show that the story is true, let us go to the head man of the village, and if the villagers have any wine, we will mix it with water for the satyr and he will share the fate of Midas' satyr." They thought it a good plan, so he poured four Egyptian jars of wine into the trongh out of whieh the village cattle drank, and then ealled the satyr by means of some seeret rebuke or threat; and though as yet the latter was not visible, the wine sensibly diminished as if it was being drunk up. And when it was quite finished, Apollonius said: "Let us drink the satyr's health, for he is fast asleep." And with these words he led the villagers to the eave of the nymphs, which was not quite a furlong away from the village; and he showed them the satyr lying fast asleep in it, but told them not to hit him or abuse him, "For," he said, "his nonsense is stopped for ever." But we must not disbelieve that satyrs both exist and are suseeptible to the passion of love; for l knew a youth of my own age in Lemmos whose mother was said to be visited by a satyr, as he well might to judge by this story; for he was represented as wearing on his back a fawn-skin that exactly fitted him, the front paws of which were drawn around his neck and fastened over his ehest. was not he himself that had accomplished this char. exploit, but that he hiad merely lent his arms to God, XXIX who had so manifested his wrath ; and Apollonius praised his action, for therein he displayed a great deal of judgment and understanding of things himan and divine, and it showed great moderation on his part that he refused to be crowned because he had shed blood. Accordingly Apollonius indited to him a letter which he sent by the hand of Damis and of which the text was as follows :
"Apollonius sends greetings to Titus the Roman General. Whereas you have refused to be proclaimed for snecess in war and for shedding the blood of your enemies, I myself assign to you the crown of temperance and moderation, becanse you thoronghly understand what deeds really merit a crown. Thercupon Apollonins, after stroking his neek, said (for he had as stout a neek as any athlete in training): "And who will force so sturdy a bull-neck as yours moder the yoke?" "He that from my youth up reared me as a calf," answered Titus, meaning his own father, and implying that he could only be controlled by the latter, who had acenstomed him from childhood to obey himself. "I am delighted then," said Apollonius, "in the first place to see you prepared to smbordinate yourself to your father, whom without being his natural children so many are delighted to obey, and next to see you rendering to his court a homage in which others will associate yourself. When youth and age are parred in authority, is there any lyre or any flute that will produce so sweet a harmony and so nicely blended? "Only such rules," replied the other, "as you have laid upon yourself; for in so submitting yourself to your father's will, it is, I think, certain that you will grow like him. And I wonld like to repeat to you on this oceasion a saying of Archytas, which is a noble one and worth committing to memory. But for myself, I propose to assoeiate with you my own eompanion Demetrins, who will attend you as much as you like and instruct you in the whole duty of a good ruler." "And what sort of wisdom, O Apollonius, does this person possess?" "Comrage," he replied, " to speak the truth unabashed by anyone, for he possesses the constaney and strength of character of a cynic." And as Titus did not seem very pleased to hear the name of $\operatorname{dog},{ }^{1}$ he continued : "And yct in Homer, Telemaehus, when he was young, required, it appears, two dogs, and the poet sends these to aceompany the youth to the market-place of Ithaca, in spite of their being irrational animals; but you will have a dog to aecompany you who will bark in your behalf not only at other people, but at yourself in ease you go wrong, and he will bark withal wisely, and never irrationally." Damis interprets the above utterance as Xxxif follows: Namely, that he was to be on his guard against the eusp of the fish called the trygon, with which they say Odysseus was wounded. Anyhow, after he had oceupied the throne for two years, in succession to his father, he died through eating the fish called the sea-hare; and this fish, according to Damis, causes secret humours in the body worse and more fatal than anything else either in the sea or on land. And Nero, he says, introduced this seahare in his dishes to poison his worst enemies ; and so did Domitian in order to remove his brother Titus, not because he objected to sharing his throne with his brother, but to sharing it with one who was both gentle and good. Such was their conversation in private, after which they embraced one another in public, and as Titus departed Apollonius greeted him with these last words: "Pray you, my King, overcome your enemies by your arms, but your father by your virtues."

Now the inhabitants of Tarsus had previously ciasp detested Apollonius, because of the violent reproaches which he addressed to them, owing to the fact that through their languid indifference and sensual in- to the dolence they could not put up with the vigour of his Antioch remarks. But on this occasion they became such devoted admirers of our hero as to regard him as their second founder and the mainstay of their city. For on one occasion the Emperor was offering a sacrifice in public, when the whole body of citizens met and presented a petition to him asking for certain great favours; and he replied that he would mention the matter to his father, and be himself their ambassador to procure them what they wanted; whereupon Apollonius stepped forward and said: "Supposing I convicted some who are standing here of being your own and your father's enemies, and of having sent legates to Jerusalem to excite a rebellion, and of being the secret allies of your most open enemies, what would happen to them?" "Why, what else," said the Emperor, "than instant death?" "Then is it not disgraceful," replied Apollonius, "that you should be instant in demanding their punishment, and yet dilatory in conferring a boon ; and be ready yourself to undertake the punishment, but reserve the benefaction until you can see and consult your father?" But the king, over-delighted with this remark, said: "I grant the favours they ask for, for my father will not be annoyed at my yielding to truth and to yourself."

So many were the races which they say Apollonius chap. had visited mntil then, eager and zealois for others as they for him. But his subsequent journeys abroad, though they were numerous, were yet not so many Apollunius as before, nor did he go to fresh districts which he was not already acquainted with; for when he came down from Ethiopia he made a long stay on the sea-board of Egypt, and then he returned to Phoenicia and Cilicia, and to Ionia and Achaea, and Italy, never failing anywhere to shew himself the same as ever. For, hard as it is to know oneself, I myself consider it still harder for the sage to remain always himself; for he camot ever reform evil natures and improve them, unless he has first trained himself never to alter in his own person. Now about these matters I have discoursed at length in other treatises, and shewn those of my readers who were careful and hard students, that a man who is really a man will never alter his nature nor become a slave. But lest I should unduly prolong this work by giving a minute account of the several teachings which he addressed to individuals, and lest on the other hand 1 should skip over any important chapter of a life, which I am taking so much pains to transmit to those who never knew Apollonius, I think it time to record more important incidents and matters which will repay the remembering ; for we must consider that such episodes are comparable to the visits to mankind paid by the sons of Aesclepius.

Apollonims met him tirds to and asked: "How are you occupying yourself"? And when he replied, and told him all about his nightingales and his blackbirds, and how he trained the tongues of stone eurlews-as he had himself a very uneducated accent-Apollonius said: "I think you are spoiling the accents of the lirds, in the first plaee because you don't let them utter their own notes, which are so sweet that not even the best musical instruments could rival or imitate them, and in the second place because you yourself talk the vilest Greck dialects and are only teaching them to stutter like yourself. And what is more, my good youth, you are also wasting your own substance; for when I look at all your hangers-on, and at your get-up, I should say that you were a delicately bred and somewhat wealthy man ; but sycophants squeeze people like yourself, at the same time that they shoot out their tongues at them like so many goads. And what will be the use to you of all this bird-fancying when the time eomes? For if you collected all the songbirds in the world, it would not help you to shake off these parasites that cling to you and oppress you; nay you are forced to shower your wealth upon them and cast your gold before them, as you scatter tit-hits before dogs; and to stop their barking you must give again and again, mitil at last char. you will find yourself redueed to hunger and to xxxvi poverty.

"What you want is some splendid diversion which will instantly make some alteration in your character, otherwise you will wake up one day and find that you have been plucked of your wealth as if it were plumage, and that you are a fitter subject to excite the birds to lament than to sing. The remedy you need to effeet such a change is not a very great one ; for there is in all cities a class of men, whose aequaintance you have never made, but who are called schoolmasters. You give them a little of your substanee with the certainty of getting it back with interest ; for they will teach you the rhetoric of the Forum, and it is not a difficult art to acquire. I may add that, if I had known you as a child and come across you then, I should have advised you assiduously to attend at the doors of the philosophers and sophists, so as to be able to hedge round your habitation with a wider learning ; but, since it is too late for you to manage that, at any rate learn to plead for yourself ; for remember, if you had acquired a more complete training and education, you would have resembled a man who is heavy-armed and therefore formidable; yet, if you thoroughly learn this branch, you will at any rate be equipped like a light-armed soldier or a slinger, for you will be able to fling words at your syeophants, as you would stones at dogs." The young man took to heart this advice, and he gave up wasting his time over birds and betook himself to sehool, mueh to the improvement both of his judgment and of his tongue.

Two stories are told in Sardis, one that the River chap Pactolus used to bring down gold-dust to Croesus, Xxxin and the other that trees are older than earth. Tine Golddant former story Apollonius said he accepted because it Patcolus was probable, for that there had once been a sand of gold on mount Tmolus, and that the showers of rain had swept it down into the river Pactolus; although sulsequently, as is generally the case in such matters, it had given out, being all washed away. But the second story he ridiculed and said: " lou pretend that trees were created before the earth; well, I have been studying philosophy all this time, yet never heard of the stars being created before the heaven." The inference he wished to convey was that nothing could be created as long as that in which it grows does not exist.

The ruler of Syria had plinged Antioch into a feud, by disseminating among the citizens suspicions such that when they met in assembly they all quarrelled with one another. But a violent earthquake happening to occur, they were all cowering, and as is usual in the case of heavenly portents, praying for one another. Apollonius accordingly stepped forward and remarked: "It is God who is clearly anxious to reconcile you to one another, and you will not revive these feuds since you cherish the same fears." And so he implanted in them a sense of what was to happen to them, and made each faction entertain the same fears as the other.

Here is another incident worth recording. A chap. certain :man was sacrificing to mother Earth in hope XXXix of finding a treasure, and he did not hesitate to story of the offer a man who, ofce a prayer to Apollonius with that intent. He, gurawh, perceiving what he was after, said: "I see that you found a are terribly fond of filthy lucre." "Nay, I am a poor treasure devil," remarked the other, "that have nothing except a few pence, and not enough to feed my family." "You seem," said the other, "to keep a large household of idle servants, nor do you yourself appear to be wanting in wits." But the man shed a quiet tear and answered: "I have four danghters, who want four dowries, and, when my daughters have had their dowries assigned to them, my capital, which is now only 20,000 drachmas, will have vanished ; and they will think that they have got all too little, while I shall perish because I shall have nothing at all." Therefore Apollonius took compassion on him and said: "We will provide for you, myself and mother Earth, for I hear that you are sacrificing to her." With these worls he conducted the man into the suburbs, as if he were going to buy some fruit, and there he saw an cstate planted with olive-trees; and being delighted with the trees, for they were very good ones and well grown, and there was also a little garden in the place, in which he saw bee-hives and flowers, he went on into the garden as if he had some important business to examine into, and then, having put up a prayer to Pandora, he returned to the city. Then he proceeded to the owner of the fieid, who had amassed a fortune in the most unrighteons manner, cпnar. by informing against the estates of Phoenicians, and xxxix said: "For how much did you purchase such and such an estate, and how mueh labour have you spent upon it?" The other replied that he had bought the estate a year before for the sum of 15,000 drachmas, but that as yet he had spent no labour upon it, whereupon Apollonius persuaded him to sell it to him for 20,000 drachmas, which he did, esteeming the 5,000 to be a great windfall. Now the man who wanted to find the treasure did not in the least understand the gift that was made him, indeed he hardly eonsidered it a fair bargain for himself, and all the worse a bargain, beeause, whereas he might have kept the 20,000 drachmas that he had in hand, he now reflected that the estate which he purchased for the sum might suffer from frost and hailstorms and from other influences ruinous to the erops. But when he found a jar almost at once in the field eontaining 3,000 daries, elose by the beehive in the little garden, and when he got a very large yield from the olive-trees, when everywhere else the crops had failed, he began to hymm the praises of the sage, and his house was crowded with suitors for the hands of his daughters urging their suits upon him.

Aecordingly he called to him the languishing lover and asked him if he believed in the existence of gods: and when he replied that he believed in their existence so firmly that he was actually in love with them, and mentioned a marriage with one of them whieh he hoped to celebrate shortly, Apollonius replied: "The poets have turned your poor head by their talk of unions of Anchises and Peleus and other heroes with goddesses ; but I know this much about loving and being loved: gods fall in love with gods, and human beings with human beings, and animals with aninals, and in a word like with like. and they have true issue of their own kind ; but when two beings of different kinds contract a mion, there is no true marriage or love. Here too is a story which they tell of him in char. Tarsus. And he had been ill in this way for thirty days, when Apollonius, who had recently come to Tarsus, met him and ordered him to look for the dog which had done the harm. But they said that the dog had not been found, becanse the youth had been attacked outside the wall when he was practising with javelins, nor could they learn from the patient what the dog was like, for he did not even know himself any more. Then Apollonitis reflected a moment and said: "O Damis, the dog is a white shaggy sheep-dog, as big as an Amphilochian hound, and he is standing at a certain fountain trembling all over, for he is longing to drink the water, but at the same time is afraid of it. the wrestling grounds, merely telling him that it is I chap. who call him." So Damis dragged the dog along, and it crouched at the feet of Apollonius, crying out as a suppliant might do before an altar. But he quite tamed it by stroking it with his hand, and then he stood the lad close by, holding him with his hand; and in order that the multitude might be cognisant of so great a mystery, he said: "The sonl of Telephus of Mysia has been transferred into this boy, and the Fates impose the same things upon him as upon Telephus." And with these words he bade the dog lick the wound all round where he had bitten the boy, so that the agent of the wound might in turn be its physician and healer. After that the boy returned to his father and recognised his mother, and saluted his comrades as before, and drank of the waters of the Cydnus. Nor did the sage neglect the dog cither, but after offering a prayer to the river he sent the dog across it; and when the dog had crossed the river, he took his stand on the opposite bank, and began to bark, a thing which mad dogs rarely do, and he folded back his ears and wagged his tail, because he knew that he was all right again, for a dranght of water cures a mad dog, if he has only the comage to take it.

Such were the exploits of our sage in behalf of both temples and cities; such were the discourses he delivered to the public or in behalf of different communities, and in behalf of those who were dead or who were sick; and such were the harangues lie delivered to wise and umwise alike, and to the sovereigns who consulted him about moral virtue.

I am aware that the conduct of philosophers under ciat. despotism is the truest touchstone of their character, and am in favour of inquiring in what way one man displays more courage than another. And my argu- Apollonius ment also urges me to consider the point; for during to ohampions the reign of Domitian Apollonius was beset ly aceu- of liberty sations and writs of information, the several origins, sources and counts of which I shall presently enlarge upon; and as I shall be under the necessity of specifying the language which he used and the rôle which lie assumed, when he left the court after convicting the tyrant rather than being himself convicted, so I must first of all enumerate all the feats of wise men in the presence of tyrants which I have found worthy of commemoration, and contrast them with the conduct of Apollonius. For this I think is the best way of finding out the truth.

though he accused of disloyalty those who were chap. loyal to the tyrant, with the result that, wheras they were put to death on the assmmption that his accusations were true, he effected the liberation of the Mysians, by tripping despotism up over itself. And Plato also declares that he took up the cause of the Plato liberation of the people of Sicily, and associated himself in this enterprise with Dion. And Phyton, when Phston if he was banished from Rhegimm, fled to Dionysius the tyrant of Sieily ; but being treated with more honour than an exile might expect, he realized that the tyrant had designs also upon Rhegium ; and he informed the pcople there of this by letter. But he was caught doing so by the tyrant, who forthwith fastened him to one of his siege engines alive, and then pushed it forward against the walls, imagining that the inhabitants of Rhegium would not shoot at the machine in order to spare Phyton. He, however, cried out to them to shoot, for, said he: " I am the target of your liberty." And Heraclides and Heraelides Python who slew Cotys the Thracian were both of and Python them young men, and they embraced the discipline and life of the Academy, and made themselves wise and so free men. And who does not know the story of Callisthenes of Olynthus? He on one and the Callisthenes same day delivered himself of a panegyric and of an attack upon the Macedonians, just at the time when they were at the acme of their power; and they put him to death for exciting their displeasure. Then there were Diogenes of Synope and Crates of Thebes, Diogenes of whom the former went direct to Chaeronea, and crates and rebuked Philip for his treatment of the Athenians, on the ground that, though asserting himself to be a descendant of Hercules he yet was destroying by force of arms those who had taken up arms in Cirap. defence of the descendants of llercules. The other Crates, when Alexander had declared that he would rebuild Thebes for his sake, replied that he would never stand in need of a conntry or of a city, which anyone could raze to the ground by mere force of arms. Many more examples of this kind could be adduced, but my treatise does not allow me to prolong them. It is indeed incumbent upon me to criticise these examples, not in order to show that they were not as remarkable as they are universally famous, but only to show that they fall short of the exploits of Apollonius, in spite of their being the best of their kind.

III

About the conduct of Zeno of Elea then, and char. about the murder of Cotys there is nothing very remarkable; for as it is easy to enslave Thracians of Critism and Getae, so it is an act of folly to liberate them ; for indeed they do not appreciate freedom, because, I imagine, they do not esteem slavery to be base. I will not say that Plato somewhat lacked wisdom of rlato, when he set himself to reform the aftiars of Sieily rather than those of Athens, or that he was sold in all fairness when, after deceiving others, he found himself deceived, for I fear to oftend my readers. But the despotic sway of Dionysius ower Sicily was already tottering when Phyton of Rhegiom of Phyton, made his attempt agranst him, and in any case he would have been put to death by him, cren if the people of that city had not shot their bolts at him ; his achievement, then, I think, was by no means wonderful: he only preferred to die in behalf of char. the liberty of others rather than to endure the death 111 penalty of being himself a slave. And as for Callis- of Callisthenes, even to-day he cannot acquit himself of thenes, baseness; for in first commending and then attacking one and the same set of people, he either attacked those whom he felt to be worthy of praise, or he praised those whom he ought to have been openly attacking. Moreover a person who sets himself to abuse grod men cannot escape the charge of being envious, while he who flatters the wicked by his very praises of them draws down upon his own head the guilt of their misdecds, for evil men are only rendered more evil when you praise them. And Diogenes, if he had addressed lhilip in the way he of Diogenes, did before the battle of Chaeronea instead of after it, might have preserved him from the guilt of taking up arms against Athens; but instead of doing so he waited till the harm was done, when he could only reproach him, but not reform him. As for Crates, he of Crates must needs incur the censure of every patriot for not seconding Alexander in his design of recolonising Thebes. But Apollonius had not to fear for any country that was endangered, nor was he in despair of his own life, nor was he reduced to silly and idle speeches, nor was he championing the cause of Mysians or Getae, nor was he face to face with one who was only sovereign of a single island or of an inconsiderable country, but he confronted one who was master both of sea and land, at a time when his tyranny was harsh and bitter ; and he took his stand against the tyrant in behalf of the welfare of the subjects, with the same spirit and purpose as he had taken his stand against Nero.

Some may think that his attitude towards Nero ceap. was a mere bit of skimishing, because he did not come to elose quarters with him, but merely undermined his despotism by his eneouragement of Vindex, and the terror with which he inspired Tigellinus. as well as And there are certain braggarts here who foster the Nero tale that it required no great courage to assail a man like Nero who led the life of a female harpist or flautist. But what, I would ask, have they to say about Domitian? For he was vigorous in body, and he abjured all those pleasures of musie and song whieh wear away and soften down feroeity ; and he took pleasure in the sufferings of others and in any lamentations they uttered. And he was in the habit of saying that distrust is the best safeguard of the people against their tyrants and of the tyrant against the multitude; and though he thought that a sovereign ought to rest from all hard work during the night, yet he deemed it the right season to begin murdering people in. And the result was that while the Senate had all its most distinguished members cut off, philosophy was reduced to cowering in a corner, to such an extent that some of its votaries disguised themselves by changing their dress and ran away to take refuge among the western Celts, while others fled to the deserts of Libya and Scythia, and others again stooped to compose orations in which his crimes were paliated. And he also reminded them of the Panathenaic festival in Attica, at which hymms are sung in honour of Harmodius and Aristogiton, and of the sally that was made from Phyle, when thirty tyrants at once were overthrown ; and he also reminded them of the ancient history of the Romans, and of how they too had originally been a democracy, after driving out despotism, arms in hand.

for the throne which after Domitian's death he cirmp. occupied with so much wisdom, and the same 111 opinion was entertained of Orphitus and of Rufus. Apmonnims Domitian accused the two latter of intriguing with against himself, and they were confined in islands, while Nerva was commanded to live in Tarentum. Now Apollonius had been intimate with them all the time that Titus shared the throne with his father, and also reigned after his father's death; and he was in constant correspondence with them on the subject of self-control, being anxious to enlist them on the side of the sovereigus whose excellence of character he esteemed. Bat he did his best to alienate them from Domitian, on account of his cruelty, and encouraged them to espouse the cause of the freedom of all. Now it occurred to him that his epistles conveying advice to them were fraught with danger to them, for many of those who were in power were betrayed by their own slaves and friends and womenkind, and there was not at the time any house that could keep a secret ; accordingly he would take now one and now another of the discrectest of his own companions, and say to them: "I have a brilliant secret to entrust to you; for you must betake yourself as my agent to Rome to so and so," mentioning the party, "and you must hold converse with him and do the utmost I could do to win him over." But when he heard that they were banished for having displayed a tendency to revolt against the tyrant, and yet had from timidity abandoned their plans, he delivered a discourse on the subject of the Fates and of Destiny in the grove of Simyma in which stands the statue of the river Meles.

And being aware that Nerva would before long be- Cinap. come sovereign, he went on to explain in his oration IX that not even tyrants are able to foree the hand of discourse destiny, and directing the attention of his audience at Smyrma to the brazen statue of Domitian which had been rates ereeted close by that of Meles, he said: "Thou fool, how much art thon mistaken in thy views of Destiny and Fate. For even if thon shouldst slay the man who is fated to be despot after thyself, he shall come to life again." This saying was reported to Domitian by the malevolence of Euphrates, and though no one knew to which of the personages above mentioned this oracle applied, yet the despot in order to allay his fears determined to puit them to death. But in order that he might seem to have an exeuse for doing so, he summoned Apollonius Domitian before him to defend himself on the charge of requires holding seeret relations with them. For he con- tur clear sidered that if he came, he could get a sentence pro- himself of nomeed against him, and so avoid the imputation of rebellion having put people to death without trial, secing that they would have been convicted through Apollonius, or in the altermative ease, if the latter by some ruse avoided an open trial, then the fate of the others would all the more certainly be seated, because sentence would have been passed on them by their own accomplice.

the man of Tyana to be arrested and brought to char. Rome, when the latter foresceing in his usual way through a divine instinct what was coming, told his forestalls companions that he needed to depart on a mys- summors terious voyage; and they were reminded of the ont for opinion enunciated by Abaris of old, and felt that Rome he was intent upon some such seheme. Apollonius however, without revealing his intention even to Damis, set sail in his company for Achaca, and having landed at Corinth and worshipped the Sun about midday, with his usual rites, embarked in the evening for Sicily and Italy. And falling in with a favourable wind and a good current that ran* in his direction, he reached Dicaearehia on the filth day. There he met Demetrius who passed for being Meet-with the boldest of the philosophers, simply because he Denetrius did not live far away from Rome, and knowing that he was really to get out of the way of the tyrant, he said by way of amusing himself: "I have caught you in your luxury, dwelling here in the most blessed part of happy Italy, if indeed she be happy, here where Odysseus is said to have forgotten in the company of Calypso the smoke of his Ithacan home." Thereupon Demetrius embraced him and after sundry pious ejaculations said: "O ye gods, what will come upon philosophy, if she risks the loss of such a man as yourself ?" "And what risks does she run?" asked he. "Those surely, a foreknowledge of which brought you here," said the other; "for if I do not know what is in your mind, then I do not know what is in my own. But let us not conduct our conversation here, but let us retire where we can talk together alone, and let only Damis be present whom, by Hercules, I am inelined to consider an Iolaus of your labours."

With these words, Demetrius led them to the Chap. villa in which Cicero lived of old, and it is elose by the XI city. There they sat down under a plane tree where $\begin{gathered}\text { Thecir talk } \\ \mathrm{at}_{\mathrm{G}} \mathrm{Cicerv} \text { 's }\end{gathered}$ the grasshoppers were ehirping to the soft musie villa of the summer's breeze, when Demetrius glancing $u_{1}$ ) at them, remarked: " $O$ ye blessed insects and unfeignedly wise, it would seem then that the Muses have taught you a song which is meither actionable, nor likely to be informed against; and they made you superior to all wants of the belly, and settled you far above all human envy to live in these trees, on which you sit and sing in your blessedness about your own and the Muses' prerogative of happiness." Now Apollonius understood the drift of this apostrophe, but it jarred upon him as inconsistent with the strenuous professions of his friend, "It seems then," he said, " that, though you only wanted to sing the praises of the grasshoppers, you could not do it openly, but come cowering hither, as if there were a publie law against anyone praising the grasshoppers." "I said what I did," he replied, " not by Domitian's way of praising them, but of signifying that while ofersention they are left mmolested in their concert halls, phers we are not allowed even to mutter; for wisdom has been rendered a penal ofience. And whereas the indictment of Anytus and Meletus ran: Socrates conmits wrong in corrupting youth and introdueing a new religion, we are indicted in such terms as these: So and so commits wrong by being wise and just and gifted with moderstanding of the gods no less than of men, and with a wide

And as for yourself, so chap. far forth as you are cleverer and wiser than the rest of us, so much the more cleverly is the indictment against you drawn up: for Domitian intends to implicate you in the charges for which Nerva and his associates are banished." "But for what erime," said Apollonius, "are they banished?" "For what is reckoned by the persecutor to be the greatest of latter-day crimes. He says that he has The charges caught these persons in the act of trying to usurp his throne, and accuses you of instigating their attempt by mutilating, I think, a boy." "What, as if it were by an eunuch that I want his empire overthrown?" "It is not that," he replicd, " of which we are falsely accused ; but they declare that you sacrificed a boy to divine the secrets of futurity which are to be learned from an inspection of youthful entrails; and in the indictment your dress and manner of life are also impugned, and the fact of your being an object of worship to some. This then is what 1 have heard from our Telesinus, no less rour intimate than mine." "What luck," exclaimed Apollonius, "if we could Telesinus meet Telesinus: for I suppose you mean the philo- the Constul sopher who held consular rank in the reign of tonnitinso. Nero" "The same," he said, "but how are you phers to come across him? For despots are doubly suspicious of any man of rank, should they find him holding communication with people who lie under such an accusation as you do. And Telesinus, moreover, gave way quietly before the edict which has lately been issued against philosophers of every kind, because he preferred to be in exile as a philosopher, to remaining in Rome as a consul." "But tell me this, Demetrius, what do you think cmap. I had better say or do in order to allay my own fears?" "You had better not trifle," said the other, " nor pretend to be afraid of what you do not dread; for if you really thought these accusations dangerous, you would have been away by now and evaded the necessity of defending yourself from them." "And would you run away," said Apollonius, "if you were plaeed in the same danger as myself?" "I would not," he replied,"I swear by Athene, if there were some one to judge me; but in fact there is no fair trial, and if I did offer a defence, no one would even listen to me; or if I were listened to, I shouid be slain all the more certainly because I was known to be imnoeent. You would not, I suppose, care to see me choose so coldblooded and slavish a death as that, rather than one which befits a philosopher. And I imagine it behoves a philosopher to die in the attempt either to liberate his city or to protect his parents and children and brothers and other kinsfolk, or to die struggling for his friends, who in the eyes of the wise are more preeious than mere kinsfolk or for favourites that have been purchased by love. But to be put to death not for true reasons, but for fancy ones, and to furnish the tyrant with a pretext for being considered wise, is much worse and more grievous than to be bowed and bent high in the sky on a wheel, as they say Ixion was. But it seems to me the very fact of your coming here will be the begimning of your trial; for though chap. you may attribute your journey hither to your quiet conscience, and to the fact that you would have never ventured upon it if you were guilty, Domitian will credit you with nothing of the kind; but will merely believe that you ventured on so hardy a course because you possess some mysterious power. For think, ten days, they say, have not clapsed since you were cited to appear, and you turn up at the court, without even having heard as yet that you were to undergo a trial. Will not that be tantamount to justifying the aecusation, for everyone will think that you foreknew the event, and the story about thie boy will gain eredit therefrom? And take eare that the discourse which they say you delivered about the Fates and Necessity in Ionia does not come true of yourself; and that, in case destiny has some cruelty in store, you are not marehing straight to meet it with your hands tied, just because you won't see that discretion is the better part of valour. And if you have not forgotten the affairs of Nero's reign, you will remember my own case, and that I showed no eoward's dread of death. But then one gained some respite: for although Nero's harp was ill attuned to the dignity that befits a king, and clashed therewit!, yet in other ways its musie harmonised his mood not unpleasantly with ours, for he was often induced thereby to grant a truce to his victims, and stay his murderous hand. At any rate he did not slay me, although I attraeted his sword to myself as mueh by your diseourses as by my own, which were delivered against the bath ; and the reason why he did not slay me was that just then his voice improved, and he achieved, as he thought, a very b:illiant melody. nightingale, and where the harp to which we can cirap. to-day make our peace offerings? For the outlook XII of to-day is unredeemed by music, and full of spleen, and this tyrant is as little likely to be charmed by himself, as by other people. It is truc that Pindar says in praise of the lyre, that it charms the savage breast of Ares, and stays his himd from war; but this ruler, although he has established a musical contest in Rome, and offers a public crown for those who win therein, nevertheless slew several of the people who, so I hear, piped and sang in his last musical contest. And you should also consider our friends and their safety, for you will eertainly ruin them as well as yourself, if you make a show of being brave, or use arguments which will not be listened to. But your life lies within your reach; for here are ships, yon see how many there are, some about to sail for Libya, others for Egypt, others for Phoenicia and Cyprus, others direct to Sardinia, others still for places heyond Sardinia. It were best for you to embark on one of these, and betake yourself to one or another of these provinces; for the hand of tyraniny is less heavy upon distinguished men, if it perceives that they only desire to live quictly and not put themselves forward."

As a matter of fact I should never have known, if I had not met you, what he meant ly his journey hither ; for 1 follow him more readily, more blindly, than another man would follow himself; and if you asked me where I am bound or for what, I should merely excite your laughter by telling you that I was traversing the seas of Sicily and the bays of Etruria, without knowing in the least why I took ship. And if only I were courting these dangers after I had reccived open warning, I could then say to those who asked me the question, that Apollonius was courting death, and that 1 was accompanying him on board ship because I was his rival in his passion. But as I know nothing of this matter, it's time for me to speak of what I do know; and 1 will say it in the interests of my master. For if I were put to death, it would not do much harm to philosophy, for I am like the esquire of some distinguished soldier, and am only entitled to consideration because I am of his suite. But if someone is going to be set on to slay him, and tyrants find it easy to contrive plots and to remove olstacles from their path, then 1 think a regular trophy will have been raised over the defeat of philosophy in the person of the noblest of her human representatives; and as there are many people lurking in our path, such as were Anytus and Meletus, writs of information will be scattered from all quarters at once against the companions of Apollonius; one will be accused of having laughed when his master attacked tyramy, another of laving encouraged him to talk, a third of haring suggested to him a topic to talk about, a fourth of having left his leeture-room with praise on his lips for what he char. had heard. I admit that one ought to die in the ${ }^{x 111}$ cause of philosophy in the sense of dying for one's temples, one's own walls, and one's sepulchres; for there are many famous heroes who have embraced death in order to save and protect such interests as those; but I pray that neither I myself may die in order to bring about the ruin of plilosophy, and that no one else either may die for such an objeet who loves philosophy and loves Apollonius."

Apollonius answered thus: "We must make chap. allowanee for the very timid remarks which Damis has made about the situation ; for he is a Syrian Apollonius and lives on the border of Media where tyrants expostuare worshipped, and where no one eutertains Demetrins are worshipped, and where no one entertains a for his lofty ideal of freedom; but as for yourself, 1 do not cowardice see how you can defend yourself at the bar of philosophy from the charge of trumping up fars, from which, even if there were really any reason for them, you ought to try to wean him; instead of doing so you try to plunge into terror a man who is only too inclined to tremble at imaginary dangers. I would indeed have a wise man sacrifice his life for the objects you have mentioned, but any man without being wise would equally die for them; for it is an obligation of law that we should die in behalf of our freedom, and an injunction of nature that we should die in behalf of our kinsfolk or of our friends or darlings. Now all men are the slaves of nature and of law; the willing slaves of nature, as the unwilling ones of law. But it is the duty of the wise in a still chap. higher degree to lay down their lives for tenets they XIV have embraced. Here are interests which neither law has laid upon us, nor nature planted in us from birth, but to which we have devoted ourselves out of mere strength of claracter and courage. In behalf therefore of these, should anyone try to violate them, let the wise man pass through fire, let him bare his neck to the axe, for he will not be overcome by any such threats, nor driven to any sort of subterfuge ; but he will cleave to all he knows as firmly as if it were a religion in which he had been initiated. As for myself, I am acquainted with more than other human beings, for I know all things, and what I know, I know partly for good men, partly for wise oncs, partly for myself, partly for the gods, but for tyrants nothing. But that I am not come on any fool's errand, you can see if you will ; for I run no risk of my life myself, nor shall I die at the hands of a despot, however much I might wish to do so ; but I am aware that I am romming a risk in connection with persons of whom the tyrant may accuse me of being either the leader or the accomplice; let me be whatever he likes, I am content. But if I were to betray them by holding back or by cowardly refusal to face the accusation, what would good men think of me? Who would not justly slay me, for playing with the lives of men to whom was entrusted everything I had besought of heaven? And I would like to point out to you, that I could not possibly escape the reputation of being a traitor.

"For there are two kinds of tyrants ; the one kind put their victims to death without trial. the other after they have been bronght before a court of law.

That hoti kinds are cruel is clear to everybody whotakes Neroas an example of the impetuous disposition which does not trouble about legal forms, Tiberius, on the other hand, of the tardy and sluggish nature ; for the former destroyed his victims before they had any suspicion of what was coming, and the other after he had tortured them with long drawn out terror. For myself I consider those the crieller who make a pretence of legal trial, and of getting a verdict pronounced in accordance with the law; for in reality they set them at defiance, and bring in the same verdict as they would have done without any real trial, giving the name of law to that which merely ekes out their own spleen. The very fact of their being put to death in legal form does but deprive the wretches so condemned to death of that compassion on the part of the crowd, which should be tendered like a winding sheet to the victims of injustice. Well, I perceive that the present ruler eloaks his tyranny under legal forms. But it seems to me that he ends by condemming without trial ; for he really sentences men before they enter the court, and then brings them before it as if they had not yet been tried. Now one who is formally condemned ly a verdiet in court, can obviously say he perished owing to an illegal sentence, but how ean he that evades his trial escape condemnation by his own conseience? brand of infamy ? Now supposing I set out for Ethiopia, what, my excellent friend, could I tell Thespesion? For if I concealed this episode, I should prove myself a lover of falsehood, nay worse, a slave; while if I frankly confessed all to him, I could only use such words as these: O Thespesion, Euphrates slandered me to you and aceused me of things that are not on my conscience; for he said that I was a boaster and a miracle-monger, and one that violated wisdon, especially that of the Indians; but while I am none of these things, I am nevertheless a betrayer of my own friends, and their murderer, and utterly unreliable and so forth; and if there is any wreath for virtue, I come to wear it, because I have ruined the greatest of the Roman houses so utterly, that heneeforth they are left desolate. You blush, Demetrius, to hear such words; I see that you do so. What, then, if you turn from Thespesion to Phraotes and imagine me fleeing to India to take refuge with such a man as he? him before, I was a gentleman not too fiint-hearted to lay down my life for my friends; but that after enjoying hissociety, I had at your bidding thrown away with scorn this divinest of human privileges. And as for Iarchas, he surely would not ask me any question at all when I arrived, but just as Acolus once bade Odysseus quit his island with ignominy, becanse he had made a bad use of the gift of a good wind which he had bestowed on him, so Iarchas, I imagine, would drive me from his eminence, and tell me that I had disgraced the dranght I there had from the cup of Tantalus. For they require a man who stoops and drinks of that goblet, to share the dangers of his friends. I know, Demetrius, how clever you are at chopping logic, and this, I believe, is why you will tender me some further advice, such as this: But you must not resort to those you have named, but to men with whom you have never had anything to do, and then your flight will be alright; for you will find it easier to lie hidden among people who do not know you. Well, let me examine this argument too, and see whether there is anything in it. For this is how I regard it: I consider that a wise man does nothing in private nor by himself alone; I hold that not even his immost thoughts can be so devoid of witness, that he himself at least is not present with himself; and whether the Pythian inscription was suggested by Apollo himself, or by some man who had a healthy conscience, and was therefore minded to publish it as an aphorism for all, I hold that the sage who 'knows himself,' and has his own conscience as his perpetual companion, will never cower before things that seare the many, nor venture upon courses which others would engage upon without shame. For being the slaves of ciap. despots, they have been ready at times to betray XIN to them even their dearest; because just as they trembled at imaginary terrors, so they felt no fear where they should have trembled.

"But Wisdom allows of none of these things. For beside the P'ythian epigram, she also praises Euripides Emip. or. who regarded ' conscience in the case of human beings ${ }^{336}$ as a disease which works their ruin, whenever they realise that they have done wrong.' For it was such conscience that brought up before Orestes and and depicted in his imagination the shapes of the Eumenides, when he had gone mad with wrath against his mother; for whereas reason decides what should be done, conscience revises the resolutions taken by reason. If then reason chooses the better part, conscience forthwith escorts a man to all the temples, into all the by-strects, into all groves of the gods, and into all haunts of mankind, applauding him and singing his praises. She will even hymn his merits as he sleeps, and will weave around him a chorus of angels from the world of dreams; but if the determination of reason trip and fall into evil courses, conscience permits not the sinner to look others in the face, nor to address them freely and boldly with his lips; and she drives him away from temples and from prayer. For she suffers him not even to uplift his hands in prayer to the images, but strikes them down as he lifts them, as the law strikes down those who rebel against it ; and she drives such men from every social meeting, and terrifies them in their sleep; and while she turns into dreams and windy forms all that they see by day, and any things they think they hear or say, she lends to their empty

Damis was so impressed by this address, he chap. tells us, that he took fresh resolution and courage, and Demetrius no longer despaired of Apollonius, Damis is but rather praising and agreeing with his appeal, and denarts wished godspeed to him in his perilous enterprise for fith and to his mistress Philosophy for whose sake Apollonits he braved so mueh. And he led them, Damis says, to where he was lodging; but Apollonius deelined and said: "It is now eventide, and about the time of the lighting up of the lamps and I must set out for the port of Rome, for this is the usual hour at which these ships sail. However we will dine together another time, when my affairs are on a better footing; for just now some charge would be trumped up against yourself of having dined with an enemy of the Emperor. Nor must you come down to the harbour with us, lest you should be accused, merely for having conversed with me, of harbouring criminal designs." Demetrius accordingly consented, and after embracing them he quitted them, though he often turned back to look towards them chap. and wiped tears from his eyes. But Apollonius XV looked at Damis and said: "If you are firmly resolved, and are as courageous as myself, let us both embark upon the ship; bat if you are dispirited, it is better for you to remain here, for you can live with Demetrius during the interval, since he is as much your friend as mine." But Damis took him up and said: "What could I think of myself, if after you have so nobly discoursed to-day about the duty of sharing the dangers of one's friends, when they fall upon them, I let your words fall on deaf ears, and abandoned you in the hour of danger, and this although until now I have never shewn cowardice where you were concerned?" "You speak rightly", said Apollonius, "so let us depart; I will go as I am, but you must needs disguise yourself as a man of the people, nor must you wear yout hair long as you do now, and you must exchange your philosopher's cloak for namis doffs this linen garment, and you must put away the his phimsoshoes you wear. But I must tell you what my intention is in this; for it were best to hold out as long as we can before the trial: then I do not wish that you should be a sharer of my fate through being detected by your dress, which will certainly betray you and lead to your arrest; but I would rather that you followed me in the guise of one not sworn to my philosophy, but just-attached to me for other reasons, and so accompanying me in all I do." This is the reason why Damis put off his Pythagorean garb; for he says he did not do it through cowardice, nor through any regret at having worn it, but merely

They sailed from Dikacarchia, and on the third chap. day they put in to the month of the Tiber from xvi which it is a fairly short sail up to Rome. Now the Aclian in Emperor's sword was at time in the keeping of the nage Aelian, a person who long ago had been attached to Apollonius, because he once met him in Egypt. And although he said nothing openly in his farour to Domitian, for that his office did not allow of his doing,-for how could he have praised to his sovereign's face one who was supposed to be an object of his detestation any more than he conld intercede in his behalf as for a friend of his own?Nevertheless whatever means there were of helping him in an unobtrusive way, he resorted to in his behalf; and accordingly at the time when, before he arrived, Apollonins was being calumniated to Domitian, he would say: "My sovercign, sophists are all prattle and Hippancy; and their art is all for show, and they are so eager to die because they get no good out of life; and therefore they don't wait for death to come of itself, but try to anticipate and draw it on themselves by provoking those who hold the sword. This I think was the reason which weighed with Nero and prevented his being drawn on by Demetrins into slaving him. For as he saw that he was anxious for death, he let him off not because he wished to pardon him, but because he disdained to put him to death.

Moreover in the case of Musonius the Tyrrhenian, chapr. who opposed his rule in many ways, he only kept XVI him in the island called Gyara; and Hellenes are so fond of these sophists, that at that time they were all making voyages by ship to visit him, as they now do to visit the spring; for until Musonius went there, there was no water in the island, but he diseovered a spring, which the Greeks celebrate as loudly as they do the horse's spring at Helieon."

In this way Aelian tried to put off the king until cirap. Apollonius arrived, and then he began to use more address; for he ordered Apollonius to be arrested and bronght into his presence. And when the counsel for the prosecution began to abuse him as a sage wizard and an adept at magic, Aelian remarked, "Keep yourself and your charges against him for the Royal Court." But Apollonius remarked: "If I am a wizard, how is it I am brought to trial? And if I am brought to trial, how can I be a wizard? Unless indeed the power of slander is so great that even wizards cannot get the better of it." Then when the accuser was about to say something still more forlish, Aelian eut him short and said: "Leave me the time that will elapse until his trial begins; for I intend to examine the sophist's character privately, and not before yourselves; and if he admits his guilt. then the pleadings in the court can be cut short, and you can depart in peace, but if he denies his guilt, the emperor will try him." For I am the sentinel of the harshest of tyrants, whom if I betray, I am afraid of the wrath of heaven. But I have shown you how friendly I am towards yourself, for in reminding you how our friendship began, I have surely made it clear to you that it can never cease, as long as we can remember those beginnings.... But the charge which most appeals to the credulity of the Emperor, althongh I eannot credit it in the least, for I know that you are opposed even to shedding the blood of victims, is the following: they say that you visited Nerva in the country, and that you eut up an Arcadian boy for him when he was consulting the auspiees against the Emperor: and that by sueh rites as these you roused his ambitions; and that all this was done by night when the moon was already on the wane. because it far outweighs them all. For if the accuser chap. attacks your dress and your mode of life and your xx gift of foreknowledge, it is only by way, I assure you, of leading up to this charge ; and it was moreover these peculiarities which prompted you to commit the crime of conspiring against the Einperor, so he says, and emboldened you to offer such a sacrifice. You must then be prepared to defend yourself upon these counts, and I would only ask you in what you say to show great respect for the sovereign." And Apollonius replied: "That I shall show no disrespect, you may clearly gather from the fact that I am come here to justify myself; and even if my circumstances were such as to embolden me to treat a despot in a haughty mamer, I should anyhow submit myself to a man like yourself who also loves me. For though it does not so much matter if you merely fall into the bad graces of an enemy, -for your cnemies will hate you not for reasons which make you an object of public suspicion, but for private causes of offence which you have given them, -nothing is graver than to give a friend reason to think ill of you: this is worse than all your enemies put together can effect, for no man can avoid being disliked even by lis enemies for his bad qualities."

jailors who had charge of such cases and said: "My chap. orders are to detain this man, until the Emperor be xxi informed of his arrival and learn from his lips all he has said to me." And he said this with the air of a man very much enraged; and then he went into the palace and began to attend to the duties of his office.

At this point Damis records an incident which in a way resembles and in a way is unlike the episode tribune related of Aristides long ago at Athens. For they were ostracising Aristides because of his virtue, and he had no sooner passed the gates of the city than a rustic came up to him and begged him to fill up his voting sherd against Aristides. This rustic knew no more to whom he was speaking than he knew how to write; he only knew that Aristides was detested because he was so just. Now on this occasion a tribune who knew Apollonius perfectly well, addressed him and asked him in an insolent mamner, what had brought him to such a pass. Apollonias replied that he did not know. "Well," said the other, " I can tell you: for it is allowing yourself to be worshipped by your fellow-men that has led you to be accused of setting yourself on a level with the gods." "And who is it," asked the other, "that has paid me this worship?" "I myself," said the other, "when I was still a boy in Ephesus, at a time when you stayed our epidemic." "Lucky it was both for you," said Apollonius, " and for the eity of Ephesus that was saved." "Well this is a reason," said the other, "why I have prepared a method of defence for yourself, which will rid you of the charge against you. For let us go outside

So mueh coarser and ruder was this fellow than the man who wished to banish Aristides, and he uttered his words with grimace and moeking laughter ; but Apollonius affected not to have heard him, and went on with his conversation with Damis about the delta, about whieh they say the Nile is divided into two branches.

Aelian next summoned him and ordered him into Cuap. the prison, where the captives were not bound, xin "until," he said, "the Emperor shall have leisure, Apullonius for he desires to talk with you privately before converse taking any further steps." Apollonins accordingly fohlow left the liw-eourt and passed into the prison, where ${ }^{\text {prisonas }}$ he said: "Let us talk, Damis, with the people here. For what else is there for us to do until the time comes when the despot will give me such andience as he desires?" "Will they not think us babblers," said Damis, "and bores, if we intermpt them in the preparation of their defenee, and moreover, it is a mistake to talk philosophy with men so broken in spirit as they." "Nay," said Apollonius, "they are just the people who most want someone to taik to them and eonfort them. For you may remember the verses of Homer in whieh he relates how Helen odyss. 4.

"And that is likely enough," said Damis, "seeing that she came to Egypt and consorted with Proteus; or, if we.prefer Homer's account, was well acquainted with Polydamma, the daughter of Thon. However let us dismiss these topics for the moment, for I want to ask you something." "I know," said but first Apollonius, "what you are groing to ask me, for I ann $\begin{gathered}\text { rensures } \\ \text { Danis }\end{gathered}$ sure you wish me to tell you what my conversation was about with the consul, and what he said, and whether he was formidable and severe or gentle to me." And forthwith he told Damis all that had passed. Thereupon Damis prostrated himself before him and said: "Now I am ready to believe that Lencothea did really once give her veil to Odyssens, after he had fallen out of his ship and was paddling olyss. 5. himself over the sea with his hands. For we are reduced to just as awful and impossible a plight, when some god, as it seems to me, stretches out his hand over us, that we fall not away from all hope of salvation." But Apollonius disapproved of the way he spoke, and said: "How long will you continue to cherish these fears, as if you could never understand that wisdom amazes all that is sensible of her, but is herself not amazed by anything." "But we," said Damis, "are bronght here before one who is quite insensible, and who not only camot be amazed by us, but would not allow anything in the world to anaze him." "And when I think of cities and walls, it seems chatp. to me that these are common prisons, so that the xavi merchants are in chains, in chains no less the members of the Assembly, and the frequenters also of spectacles, as well as those who organise publie processions. Then there are the Scythians who go abont upon waggons; they are just as much in chains as ourselves; for rivers like the Ister and the Thermodon and the Tanais, hem them in, and they are very diflicult to cross, except when they are hard frozen; and they fix up their houses on their waggons, and they imagine they are driving about, when they are merely cowering in them. And if you don't think it too silly a thing to say, there are those who teach that the occan also encompasses the earth in order to chain it in. Come, O ye poets, for this is your domain. Recite your rhapsodies to this despondent crowd, and tell them how Kronos was once put in bonds by the wiles of Zeus; and Ares, the most warlike of the gods, was first enchained in heaven bephaestus, and later upon earth by the sons of Alois. When we think of these things, and reflect on the many wise and blessed men who have been thrown into prison by wanton mobs, or insulted by despots, let us accept our fate with resignation, that we may not be found inferior to those who have accepted the same before us." Such were the words which he addressed to his companions in the prison, and they had such an effect upon them that most of them took their food and wiped away their tears, and walked in hope, believing that they could never come to ham as long as they were in his company.

On the next day he was haranguing them in a cimp. discourse of the same tenor, when a man was sent into the prison privately by Domitian to listen to what he said. ln his deportment this person had a downeast air, and, as be himself admitted, looked as if he ran a great risk. He had great volubility of speech, as is usually the case with sycophants who have been chosen to draw up eight or ten informations. Apollonius saw throngh the trick and talked about themes which could in no way serve his purpose; for he told his audience about rivers and mountains, and he described wild animals and trees to them, so that they were amused, while the informer gained nothing to his purpose. And when he tried to draw him away from these subjects and get him to abuse the tyrant, "My good fricud," said Apollonius, " you say what you like, for I am the last man in the world to inform against you; but if I find anything to blame in the Emperor, I'll say it to his face."

There followed other episodes in this prison, cirap. some of them insidiously contrived, and others of Xxtir mere chance, and not of sufficient importance to An enisisary merit my notice. But Damis, I believe, has duscribes recorded them in his anxiety to omit nothing; I only emperor's give what is to the point. And this he appeared to have heard direct from Aelian. "I will keep your secret," said Apollonius, "for it is only Aclian, I think, who ean know so much." "Moreover," said the other, "word has been given to the chief jailor to supply you with everything which you may want." "You are very kind," said Apollonius, "but I lead exactly the same life here as I would outside; for I converse about casual topics, and I do not need anything." "And do you not, O Apollonius, need someone to advise you how to converse with the Emperor?" "Yes, by heaven," he replied, "if only he will not try to get me to flatter him." "And what if he merely advised you not to slight him nor flout him?" "He could give no better advice," said Apollonius, "and it is what I have made up my own mind to do." "Well, it was about this that I am come," said the other, " and I am delighted to find you so sensibly disposed; but you ought to be prepared for the way in which the Emperor speaks, and also for the disagreeable quality of his face; for he talks in a deep voice, even if he is mercly engaged in a gentle conversation, and his cyebrows overhang the sockets of his eyes and his cheeks are so bloated with bile, that this distinguishes him more than anything else. We must not be frightened, $O$ man of Tyana, by these characteristics, for they rather belong to nature than to anything else, and they always are the same." And Apollonius replied:

He accordingly went away: but Apollonius after Crisp. resting himself a little while on his bed said, "Damis, I need sleep, for I have had a bad night of Plirateses trying to remember what Phraotes once told me." tolion"Well," said the other, "if you had to keep awake, you had much better have occupied yourself in preparing for so great an occasion as now is amounced to you." "And how could I prepare myself," said Apollonius, " when I do not even know what questions he will ask of me?" Then are you going to defend your life extempore?" said Damis. "Yes, by Heaven," he replied, "for it is an extempore life that I have always led. But I want to tell you what I could remember of the conversation of 1praotes, for I think you will find it very profitable under the circumstances. Phraotes enjoined the tamers of lions not to strike them, for he said that they bear you a grudge if they are struck; but also not to flatter them, because that tends to make them proud and fierce; but he advised them rather to stroke them with the hand at the same time that they threatened them, as the best way of reducing them to obedience and docility. Well, he made these remarks not really about lions,--for we were not interested about how to keep lions and wild beasts,-but he was really supplying a curb and rein for tyrants of such a kind as he thought would in practice keep them within the lines of good sense and moderation." "This story," said Damis, " is indeed most apposite to the manne"s of tyrants; but there is also a story in Aesop about a certain lion

And Apollonius remarked: "Well, as for myself I should have regarded your fox as a cleverer animal, if he had gone in to see the lion, and instead of being canght had issued from the cave safely and left elear traeks belind him."

After making this remark he took a short nap, Chap. just enough to close his eyes, and when day came he offered his prayers to the Sun, as best he could is Anollonius in prison, and then he eonversed with all who to the came up and asked him questions; and so about the time when the market fills a notary came and ordered him to repair at once to the court, adding : "Lest we should not get there in time for the summons into his presence." And Apollonius said : "Let us go," and eagerly went forth. And on the way four body-guards followed him, keeping at a greater distance from him than would an escort appointed merely to guard him. And Damis also followed in his train, in some trepidation indeed, but apparently plunged in thought. Now the eyes of all were turned upon Apollonius, for not only were they attracted by his dress and bearing, but there was a godlike look in his eyes, which struck them with astonishment; and moreover the fact

When he halted at the Palace and beheld the throng of those who were either being courted or were courting their superiors, and heard the din of those who were passing in and out, he remarked: "It seems to me, O Damis, that this place resembles a bath ; for I see people outside hastening in, and those within, hastening out; and some of them resemble people who have been thoroughly well washed, and others those who have not been washed at all." This saying is the inviolable property of Apollonius, and I wish it to be resersed to him and not ascribed to this man and that, for it is so thoroughly and genuinely his, that he has repeated it in one of his letters. There he saw a very old man who was trying to get an appointment, and in order to dor sowas

But the goddess has not yet purged your eyes as she did his, my sovereign ; yet it were well, if Athene did so, that you might behold her more elearly and not confuse mere men with the forms of demons." "And you," said the Emperor, "O philosopher, when did you have this mist cleared away from your eyes?" "Long ago," said he, " and ever since I have been a philosopher." "How comes it then," said the Emperor, "that you have come to regard as gods persons who are most hostile to myself?" "And what hostility," said Apollonins, " is there between yourself and Tarchas or Phraotes, both of them Indians and the only human beings that I regard as gods and meriting such a title?" "Don't try to put me off with Indians," said the Fmperor, "bnt just tell me about your darling Nerva and his accomplices." "Am I to plead his cause," said Apollonius, "or- ? " "No, you shall not plead it," said the Emperor, "for he has been taken redhanded in guilt; but just prove to me, if yon can, that you are not yourself equally guilty as being privy to his designs." "If," said Apolloninc, " you would hear how far I an in his counsel, and privy to his designs, please hear me, for why should I conceal the truth?" Now the Emperor imagined that he

Sucu was the prelude of his defence, which he made in private to Domitian, as Damis outlines it. but some have, out of malignity, perverted the facts, of the *age's and say that he first made his defence, and only history then was imprisoned, at the same time that he was cnemies also shorn; and they have forged a certain letter in the Ionic dialect, of tedious prolixity, in which they pretend that Apollonins went down on his knees to Domitian and besought him to release him of his bonds. Now Apollonius, it is true, wrote his testament in the Ionian style of language; but I never met with any letter of his composed in that dialect, although I have come across a great many of them; nor did I ever find any verbosity in any letter of the sage's, for they are laeonically brief as if they had been unwound from the ferule of a herald. Moreover, he won his cause and quitted the court, so how could he ever have been imprisoned after the verdict was given? But I must defer to relate what happened in the law court. I had best narrate first what ensued after he was shaved and what he said in his discourses, for it is wortliy of notice.

This person then was a native of Syracnse, and was mind and mouthpiece of Domitian; and he had been suborned, like the earlier one, by him. But he had a more plausible mission; for whereas the first one beat about the bush, this one took up his parable straight from what he saw before him, and said: "Heavens, who would ever have thought of Apollonius being thrown into chains?" "The person who threw him," said Apollonins, "for surely he would not have done so, if he had not thought of it." "And who ever thought that his ambrosial locks could be cut off?" "I myself," said Apollonius, " who wore them." "And how ean you endure it?" said the other. "As a man well may bear it who is brought to this pass neither with nor without his will." "And how ean your leg endure the weight of the fetters?" "I don't know," said Apollonius, "for my mind is intent upon other matters." "And yet the mind," said the other, "mast attend to what causes pain." "Not necessarily," said Apollonius, "for if you are a man like myself, your mind will either not feel the pain or will order it to cease." "And what is it that occupies your mind?" "The necessity," answered Apollonius, " of not noticing such things." 'Then the other reverted to the matter of his locks and led the conversation round to them again, whereupon Apollonius remarked:

The other of course had only made his remarks out of malice, in order to see what would make Apollonius wince, and, by Heaven, to see whether he would reproach his sovereign on accomut of his sufferings. "I understand," said he, " that he has been suborned to trip you up; but the suy to what you mean by Python, and what is the sense of such a name, I do not know." "Python," replied Apollonius, " of Byzantium, was, they say, a rhetor skilful to persmade men to evil courses. He was sent in the interests of Philip, son of Amyntas, on an embassy to the Hellenes to urge their enslavement, and though he passed by other states, he was careful to go to Athens, just at a time when rhetorie most Hourished there. And he told them that they did a great injury to Philip, and made a great mistake in trying to liberate the Hellenic nation. Python delivered these sentiments, as they say, with a flood of words, but no one save Demosthenes of the Paeanian deme spoke to the contrary and checked his presumption; and he reckons it amongst his achievements that he bore the brunt of his attack unaided. Now I would never call it an achievement that I refused to be drawn into the avowals which he wanted. Nevertheless I said that he was employed on the same job as Python, because he has come here as a despot's hireling to tender me monstrous advice."

And with these words he took his leg out of the fetters and remarked to Damis: "Here is proof positive to you of my freedom, so eheer up." Damis says that it was then for the first time that he really and truly understood the nature of Apollonius, to wit that it was divine and superhman, for without any sacrifice,--and how in prison could he have offered any?-and without a single prayer, withont even a word, he quietly laughed at the fetters, and then inserted his leg in them afresh, and behaved like a prisoner once more.

And they really believe what they say. Magic also besieges the doors of merchants no less, for we shall find them too attributing their successes in trade to the wizard or magician, no less than they ascribe their losses to their own parsimony and to their failure to sacrifice as often as they should have done. But it is especially lovers who are addicted to this art ; for as the disease which they suffer from in any case renders them liable to be deluded, so much so that they go to old hags to talk about it, it is no wonder, I think, that they resort to these impostors and give ear to their quackeries. They will accept from them a box with stones in it which they are to wear, some of the bits of stone having come from the depths of the earth and others from the moon and the stars; and then they are given all the spices which the gardens of India yield; and the cheats exact vast sums of money from them for all this, and yet do nothing to help them at all. For let their favourites only give them the least encouragement, or let the attractions of the lover's presents adrance his suit in the very least, and he at once sets out to laud the art as able to achieve everything; while if the experiment does not come off, he is as ready as ever to lay the blame on some omission, for he will say that he forgot to burn this spice, or to sacrifice or melt up that, and that everything turned upon that and it was impossible to do without it. And when the prisoners in the free prison saw him again, they all flocked round him, as around one restored to them against all expectations; for they entertained the same affectionate longing for Apollomius as children do for a parent who devotes himself to giving them good advice in an agreeable and modest manner, or who tells them stories of his own youth; nor did they try to hide their feelings; and Apollonius continued incessantly to give tliem advice.

"Alive," asked Damis, "or how?" Apollonius with a smile replied: "As I myself belicve, alive, but as yon will believe, risen from the dead." Accordingly be says that be went away with much regret, for although he did not quite despair of his master's life, yet he hardly expected him to escape death. And on the third day he arrived at Dicaearchia, where be at once heard news of the great storm which had raged during those days; for a gale with rain had burst over the sea, sinking some of the ships that were sailing thither, and driving out of their course those which were tending to Sicily and the straits of Messina. the former did not seruple to declare themselves, so char. strong was their attachment. The youth however XLII was too high-principled and respected his honour. But he was tempted with larger honours than all those put together who ever attracted the glances of sovereigus, yet disdained them all for himself. In consequenee he was cast into prison, by his own admirer's orders. He came up to Apollonius, and made as if he would speak to him, but, being eounselled by his modesty to keep silent, did not venture to. Apollonins noticed this and said: "You are confined here, and yet are not of an age to be a malefactor, like ourselves who are hardened sinners." "Yes, and I shall be put to death," said the other; "for by our latter-day laws self-respeet is honoured with (apital punishment." "So it was in the time of Theseus," answered Apollonius, "for Hippolytus was murdered by his own sire for the same reason." "And I too," said the other, "am my own father's victim. For' though I am an Arcadian from Messene, he did not give me an Hellenic education, but sent me here to study law ; and when I had come here for that purpose the Emperor east an evil eye on me." But Apollonius feigned not to understand what he meant and said: "Tell me, my boy, surely the Emperor does not imagine you have blue eyes, when you have, as I see, black ones? "That is just what has ruined me," said the other, "for he has condescended to favour me and instead of sparing what he praises is prepared to insult me as a woman's lovers might." Apollonius admired the Areadian too mueh to ply him with any further questions, as he noticed that he blushed and was most decorous in his language; so he only put to him the question: "Have you any slaves in Areadia?" "Why yes, many," replied the lad. "What relation to them," said Apollonius, " do you eonsider yourself as holding?" "That," he replied, "which the laws assign to me, for I am their master." "And must slaves obey their masters or disdain the wishes of those who are masters of their persons?" 'The other discerned the drift of his question and answered: "I know indeed how irresistible and harsh is the power of tyrants, for they are inclined to use it to overpower even free men, but I am master of my person and shall guard it inviolate." "How can yon do that," said Apollonius, " for you have to do with an admirer who is prepared to run amuck of your youth, sword in hand ?" "I shall simply hold out my neek, whieh is all his sword requires." Whereon Apollonius commended him, and said: "I perceive you are an Arcadian." The secretary commended this sentiment, for indeed he was already favourabìy disposed to Apollonius, as he proved from the very beginning. "And how long will your pleading last by the water-clock's reckoning? 'For I must know this before the trial begins." "If," said Apollonius, "I am allowed to plead as long as the necessities of the suit require me to, the whole of the Tiber might run throngh the meter before 1 should have done; but if $I$ am only to answer all the questions put to me, then it depends on the crossexaminer how long I shall be making my answers." Whereat his accuser burst into shouts: "O my Emperor," he said, "this wizard threatens to beat me, for it was I who gave you this advice." "Then," said Apollonius, "it is you who are a wizard rather than myself; for you say that you have persuaded the Emperor of my being that which so far I have failed to persuade him that I am not." embarrassing and difficult to answer. "What induces char. you," he said, "Apollonius, to dress yourself differently from everybody else, and to wear this peculiar and singular garb?" "Because," said Apollonius, " the earth which feeds me also clothes me, and I do not like to bother the poor animals." The Emperor next asked the question: "Why is it that men call you a god?" " Because," answered Apollonius, " every man that is thought to be good, is honoured by the title of god." I have shown in my narrative of India how this tenet passed into our hero's philosophy. The third question related to the plague in Ephesus; "What motived," he said, "or suggested your prediction to the Ephesians that they would suffer from a plague?" "I used," he said, "O my sovereign, a lighter diet than others, and so I was the first to be sensible of the danger; and, if you like, I will enumerate the causes of pestilences." But the Emperor, fearful, I imagine, lest Apollonius should reckon among the causes of such epidemics his own wrong-doing, and his incestuous marriage, and his other misdemeanours, replicd: "Ol, I do not want any such answer as that." And when he came to the fourith question which related to Nerva and his friends, instead of hurrying straight on to it, he allowed a certain interval to elapse, and after long reflection, and with the air of one who felt dizzy, he put his question in a way whieh surprised them all; for they expected him to throw off all disguise and burt out the names of the persons in question without any reserve, complaining loudly and bitterly of the sacrifice; but instead of putting the question in this way, he beat about the bush, and said: "Tell me, you went out of your house on a certain day,

But let these assertions be proved by trustworthy witnesses." Such a reply on the part of the sage aroused louder applause than beseemed the court of an Emperor ; and the latter deeming the andience to have borne witness in favour of the accused, and also not a little impressed himself by the answers he had received, for they were both firm and sensible, said: "I acquit you of the charres; Apollonins but you must remain here until we have had a acquitted private interview." Thereat Apollonius was much encouraged and said: "I thank you indeed, my sovereign, but 1 would fain tell you that by reason of these miscreants your cities are in ruin, and the islands full of exiles, and the mainland of lamentations, and your armies of cowardice, and the senate of suspicion. publie eye and to law: but that they should give cirap. themselves the airs of superhuman beings and presume to know better than the gods, I camnot approve or allow; and the mere rumour of it fills me with horror. And if you allow such things to be, they will perhaps accuse even yourself of offending against established religion. and after commending me and saying to me things cmap. which he would have satid to no one else, and having VII heard from me what he would have heard from no one else, he departed. I most confirmed him in his aspirations for the throne, when others already sought to dissuade him,-in no unfriendiy spirit, I admit, though you anylow camot agree with them; for those who iried to persuade him not to assume the reins of Empire were assuredly on their way to deprive you also of the succession to him which you now hold. But by my advice he did not hold himself mworthy, he said, of the kingdom whici lay within his grasp and of making you the heirs thereto ; and he fully acknowledged the entire wisdom of my advice, and he was raised himself to the pimacle of greatuess, as in turn he raised yourselves. Now if he had looked upon me as a wizard, he would never have taken me into his confidence, for he did not come and say such things as this to me: Compel the Fates or compel Zeus to appoint me tyrant, or to work miracles and portents in my behalf, and show me the sun rising in the west and setting at the point where be rises. For I should not have thought him a fit person for empire if he had either considered me as an adept in such art, or resorted to such tricks in pursuit of a crown which it behoved him to win by his virtues alone. More than this my conversation with bim was held publicly in a temple, and wizards do not affect temples of the gods as their places of remion; for such places are inimical to those who deal in magie, and they cloak their art under the cover of night and of every sort of darkness, so as to preclude their dupes from the use of their eyes and ears. sation with me, but there were present at it beside chap. myself Euphrates and Dion, one of them my bitter vir enemy, but the other my firmest friend; for may there never come a time when I shall not reckon Dion among my friends. Now I ask you, who would begin to talk wizardry in the presence of wise men or of men anyhow laying claim to wisdom? And who would not be equally on his guard both among friends and anong enemies of betraying his villainy? And moreover our conversation on that occasion was directed against wizards; for you surely will not suppose that your own father when he was aspiring to the throne set more confidence in wizards than in himself, or that he got me to put pressure upon heaven, that he might obtain his object, when, on the contrary, be was confident of winning the crown before ever he came to Fgypt ; and subsequently he had more important matters to talk over with me, namely the laws and the just acquisition of wealth, and how the gods ought to be worshipped, and what blessings they have in store for those monarchs who govern their people in accordance with the laws. These are the subjects which he desired to learn about, and they are all the direct opposite of wizardry; for if they count for anything at all, there will be an end of the black art.
(iii) And there is another point, my prince, which merits your attention. The varions arts known to mankind, in spite of the difference of their functions and achievements, are yet all eoncerned to make moncy, some earning less, some earning more, and some just enough to live upon; and not only the base mechmic arts, but of the rest those which are esteemed liberal ${ }^{1}$ arts as well as those which only chap. border upon being liberal, and true philosophy is the only exception. And by liberal arts I mean poetry, music, astronomy, the art of the sophist and of the orator, the merely forensie kinds excepted; and by the arts which border upon liberal I mean those of the painter, modeller, sculptor, navigator, agriculturist, in case the latter waits upon the seasons; for these arts are not very inferior to the liberal professions. And on the other hand, my prince, there are the pseudo-liberal arts of jugglers, which I would not have you confuse with divination, for this is highly esteemed, if it be genuine and tell the truth, though whether it is an art, I am not yet sure. But I anyhow affirm wizards to be professors of a pseudo-liberal art, for they get men to believe that the unreal is real, and to distrust the real as unreal, and I attribute all such effeets to the imaginative faney of the dupes; for the cleverness of this art is relative to the folly of the persons who are deeeived by them, and who offer the sacrifices they preseribe; and its professors are given up wholly to filthy luere, for all their parade of skill is devised by them in hope of gain, and they are always on the look ont for big fortunes, and they try to persuade people who are passionately attached to something or another that they are eapable of getting everything for them. Do yon then find me so opulent as to warrant me in supposing that I eultivate this sort of false and illiberal wisdom, the more so as your own father considered me to be above all pecuniary eonsiderations? ## LIFE OF APOLLONIUS, BOOK VIII

I speak the truth, here is a letter to me from that crap. noble and divine man, who in it praises me more sil especially for my poverty. It runs thus:
"The autocrat Vespasian to Apollonius the philo- Verpasian's sopher sends greetings.
"If all men, Apollonius, were disposed to be Ap,illonins philosophers in the same spirit as yourself, then the lot no less of philosophy than of poverty would be an extremely happy one ; for your philosophy is pure and disinterested, and your poverty is voluntary. Farewell."

Let this be your sire's pleading in my behalf, when he thus lays stress upon the disinterestedness of my philosophy, and the volmutariness of my poverty. For I have no doubt he had in mind the episode in Egypt, when Euphrates and several of those who pretended to be philosophers approached him, and in no obscure language begged for money ; whereas I myself not only did not solicit him for money, but repudiated them as impostors for doing so. And $I$ also showed an aversion from money from my first youth; for realising that my patrimony, and it was a considerable property, was at best but a transitory toy, I gave it up to my brothers and to my friends and to the poorer of my relatives, so disciplining myself from my very home and hearth to want nothing. I will not dwell upon Babylon and the parts of India beyond the Cancasus and the river Hyphasis, through which I journeyed ever true to myself. But in favour of my life here and no less of the fact that I have never coveted money, I will invoke the testimony of this Egyptian here; for he accuses me of every sort of evil deed and design, yet we hear nothing from bin of how chap. much money I made by these villainies, nor of how vir much gain I had in view ; indeed he thinks me such a simpleton as to practise my wizardry for nothing, and whereas others only commit its crimes for much money, he thinks that 1 eommit them for none at all. It is as if I cried my wares to the public in such terms as the following: Come, O ye Dupes, for I am a wizard ; and I practise my art not for money, but free, gratis, and for nothing ; and so you shall carn a great reward, for each of you will go off with his heart's desire, while I shall get away with nothing but dangers and writs of aecusation.

(iv) But without deseending to such silly argu- Avoilance ments, I would like to ask the accuser which of his of animai counts I ought to take first. And yet why need I ask him? for at the begimning of his speech he dwelt upon my dress, and by Zeus, upon what I eat and what I do not eat. O divine Pythagoras, do thou defend me upon these counts ; for we are put upon our trial for a rule of life of which thou wast the discoverer, and of which $I$ am the humble partisan. For the earth, my prince, grows cverything for mankind; and those who are plased to live at peace with the brute creation wat nothing, for some fruits they can cull from earth, others they win from her furrows, for she is the marse of men, as suits the seasons; but these men, as it were deaf to the eries of motherearth, whet their knife against her children in order to get themselves dress and food. Here then is something which the Brahmans of India themselves condemmed, and which they taught the naked sages of Egypt also to eondemm; and from them Pythagoras Rule of took his rule of life, and he was the first of Hellenes Pyhaboras who had intercourse with the Egyptians. And it chap was his rule to give up and leave her anmals to the vu earth; but all things which she grows, he deelared, were pure and undefiled, and ate of them aceordingly, because they were best adapted to nourish both body and soul. But the garments whieh most men wear made of the hides of dead animals, he declared to be impure; and accordingly elad himself in linen, and on the same principles had his shoes woven of byblus. And what were the advantages which he derived from such purity? Many, and before all the privilege of recognising his own sonl. For he had existed in the age when Troy was fighting about Helen, and he had been the fairest of the sons of Panthus, and the best equipped of them all, yet he died at so young an age as to exeite the lamentations even of Homer. Well after that he passed into several bodies aecording to the decree of Adrastea, which transfers the sonl from body to *body, and then he again resumed the form of man, and was bom to Mnesarchides of Samos, this time a sage instead of a barbarian, and an Ionian instead of a Trojan, and so immone from death that he did not even forget that he was Euphorbus. I have then told you who was the begetter of my own wisdom, and I have shown that it is no discovery of my own, but an inheritance come to me from another. And as for myself though I do not condemn or judge those who make it part of their luxury to consume the red-plumared bird, or the fowls from Phasis or the land of the Paeones, which are fattened up for their banquets by those who can deny nothing to their bellies, and though I have never yet brought an aecusation against anyone, because they buy fish for their cuap tables at greater prices than grand seigneurs ever tit gave for their Corinthian chargers, and though I have never grudged anyone his purple garment nor his soft rament and Pamphylan tissues-yet I am accused and put upon my trial, O ye sods, because I indulge in asphodel and dessert of dried fruits and pure delicacies of that kind.

(v) Nor even is my mode of dress protected from The charge their calumnies, for the aceuser is ready to steal even that off my back, because it has such vast value for wizards. And yet apart from my contention about the use of living animals and lifeless things, according as he uses one or the other of which I regard a man as impure or pure, in what way is linen better than wool? Was not the latter taken from the baek of the gentlest of animals, of a creature beloved of the gods, who do not disdain themselves to be shepherds, and, hy Zeus, once held the fleece to be worthy of a golden form, if it was really a god that did so, and if it be not a mere story? On the other hand linen is grown and sown anywhere, and there is no talk of gold in comection with it. Nevertheless, because it is not phacked from the back of a living animal, the Indians regard it as pure, and so do the Egyptians, and I myself and Pythagoras on this account have adopted it as our garb when we are discoursing or praying or offering sacrifice. And it is a pure substance under which to sleep of a night, for to those who live as I do dreams bring the truest of their revelations.

the squalor thereof. But surely the Egyptian is not chap. entitled to judge me for this, but rather the dandies with their yellow and well-combed locks, who seek by means of them to inflame the hearts of their lovers and the mistresses of their revels. I et them congratulate and compliment themselves upon their locks and on the myrrh which drips from them ; but think me everything that is unattractive, and if a lover of anything, of abstention from love. For I am inclined to address them thus: O ye poor wretches, do not falsely accuse an institution of the Dorians; for the wearing of your hair long has come down from the Lacaedenomians who affected it in the period when they reached the height of their military fame ; and a king of Sparta, Leonidas, wore his hair long in token of his bravery, and in order to appear dignified to his friends, yet terrible to his enemies. For these reasons Sparta wears her hair long no less in his honour than in that of Lycurgus and of Iphitus. And let every sage be eareful that the iron knife does not touch his hair, for it is impious to apply it thereto; inasmuch as in his head are all the springs of his senses, and all his intuitions, and it is the source from which his prayers issue forth and also his speech, the interpreter of his wisdom. And whereas Empedocles fastened a fillet of deep purple around his hair, and walked proudly about the streets of the Hellenes, composing hymms to prove that he had passed from humanity and was become a god; I only wear my hair dishevelled, and I have never needed to sing such hymns about it, yet am hailed before the lawcourts as a eriminal. the man himself or his contemporaries for their happi- cirar. ness, seeing that they never levelled false aecusation against him for such a reason ?
(vii) But let us say no more about my hair, for it The charge has been ent off, and the accusation has been fore- cation of stalled by the same hatred which inspires the next ${ }^{A_{p} \text { ollonius }}$ count, a much more serious one from which I must now defend myself. For it is one calculated to fill not only you, my prince, but Zeus himself with apprehension. For he declares that men regard me as a god, and that those who have been thunderstruck and rendered stark-mad by myself proclaim this tenet in public. And yet before accusing me there are things which they shonld have informed us of, to wit, by what discourses, or by what miracles of word or deed I induced men to pray to me; for I never talked among Hellenes of the goal and origin of my soul's past and future transformations, although I knew full well what they were; nor did I ever disseminate such opinions about myself ; nor go about in search of presages and oracular strains, as is the instinct of candidates for divine honours. Nor do I know of a single city in which a deeree was passed that the citizens should assemble and sacrifice in honour of Apollonius. And yet I have been much esteemed in the several cities which asked for my aid, whatever the objects were for which they asked it, and they were such as these : that their sick might be healed of their diseases, that both their initiations and their sacrifices might be rendered more holy, that insolence and pride might be extirpated, and the laws strengthened. And whereas the only reward which I obtained in all this was that men were made much better than they were before, they were all so many boons bestowed upon chap. yourself by me. For as eow-herds, if they get the vil cows into good order earn the gratitude of their owners, and as shepherds fatten the sheep for the owner's profit, and as bee-keepers remove diseases from the hive, so that the owner may not lose his swarm, so also I myself, I think, by eorrecting the defeets of their polities, improved the cities for your benefit. Consequently if they did regard me as a god, the deception brought profit to yourself; for I an sure they were the more ready to listen to me, beeause they feared to do that which a god disapproved of. But in fact they entertained no such illusion, though they were aware that there is between man and God a certain kinship whieh enables him alone of the ammal creation to recognise the Gods, and to speeulate both about his own nature and the manner in which it partieipates in the divine substance. Accordingly man declares that his very form resembles God, as it is interpreted by seulptors and painters; and he is persuaded that his virtues come to him from God, and that those who are endowed with sueh virtues are near to God and divine.

But we need not hail the Athenians as the teachers of this opinion, because they were the first to apply to men the titles of just and Olympie beings and the like, though they are too divine, in all probability, to be applicable to man, but we must mention the Apollo in the Pythian temple as their author. For when Lyeurgus from Sparta came to his temple, having just pemed his code for the regulation of the affairs of Lacedaemon, Apollo addressed him, and weighed and examined the reputation he enjoyed; and at the commencement of his chap. oracle the god declares that he is puzzled whether vil to call him a god or a man, but as he advances he decides in favour of the former appellation and assigns it to him as being a good man. And yet the Lacedaemonians never forced a lawsuit on this accomnt upon Lyeurgus, nor threatened him on the ground that he clamed to be immortal ; for he never rebuked the Pythian god for so addressing him, but on the contrary the citizens agrecd with the oracle, for I believe they were already persuaded of the fact before ever it was delivered.

And the truth about the Indians and the Egyptians is the following: The Egyptians falsely accuse the Indians of several things and in particular find fault with their ideas of conduct; but though they do so, they yet approve of the account which they have given of the crator of the Universe, and even have taught it to others, though originally it belonged to the Indians. Now this account recognises God as the creator of all things, who brought them into being and sustains them; and it declares further that his motive in designing was his goodness. Since then these notions Therdogy of are kindred to one another, I carry the argmment Apollonius further and declare that good men have in their composition something of God. And by the universe which depends upon God the creator we must understand things in heaven and all things in the sea and on earth, which are equally open to all men to partake of, though their fortunes are not equal. But there is also a universe dependent on the good man whieh does not transcend the limits of wistom, which I imagine you yourself, my prince, will allow stands in need of a man fashioned in the image of God. chap. And what is the fashion of this universe? There are fir undisciplined souls which in their madness clutch at every fashon, and they have laws which are ont-ofdate and vain; and there is no good sense among them, but the honours which they pay to the gods really dishonour them; and they are in love with idle chatter and luxury which breed idleness and sloth, the worst of all practical advisers. And there are other souls which are drunken and rush in all directions at once, though their anties lead to nothing, nor could do so, even if they drank all the drugs accounted, as the Mandragoras is, to be soporific. Now you need a man to administer and A human care for the universe of such souls, a god sent down by Sariour wisdom. For he is able to wean them from the lusts and passions, which they rush to satisfy with instincts too fierce for ordinary society, and from their avarice, which is such that they deny they have anything at all unless they can hold their months open and have the stream of wealth flow into it. For perhaps such a man as I speak of could even restrain them from committing murder; however, neither I myself nor even the God who ereated all things, ean wash off them the guilt of that.

(viii) Let me now, my prince, take the accusation The dewhich concerus Ephesus, since the salvation of that Livery of city was gained ; and let the Egyptian be my judge, from inage according as it bests suits his accusation. For this is the sort of thing the accusation is. to be subject to yourself; let us then suppose that it crap. was about to be destroyed by a pestilence, and that VH1 Apollonius found a remedy and averted it. I imagine that a wise man would be able to defend himself even against such a charge as that, umess indeed the sovereign desires to get rid of his adrersaries, not by use of ams, but by plague ; for I pray, my prince, that no city may ever be wholly wiped out, either to please yourself or to please me, nor may 1 ever behold in temples a disease to which those who lie sick should succumb in them. (ii) The accuser here interrupts me, you hear him chap. yourself do so, ney prince, and he remarks that I am not accused for having brought about the salvation the charge wizardy of the Ephesians, but for having foretold that the plague would fall upon them; for this, he says, transcends the power of wisdom and is miraculuns, so that I could never have reached such a pitch of truth if I were not a wizard and an unspeakable wretch. What then will Socrates say here of the lore which he declared he learned from his demonie genius? Or what would Thales and Anaxagoras, both Jonians, say, of whom one foretold a plenteous crop of olives, and the other not a few meteorological disturbances? That they foretold these things by dint of being wizards? Why, is it not a fact that they were brought before the law-courts upon other charges, but that no one ever heard among their aecusations that of their being wizards, because they had the gift of foreknowledge? For that would have been thought ridiculous, and it would not have been a plausible charge to bring against men of wisdom even in Thessaly, where the women had a bad reputation for drawing the moon down to earth.

How then did I get my sense of the coming disaster at Ephesus? You have listened to the statement made even by my accuser, that instead of living like other people, I keep to a light diet of my own, and prefer it to the luxury of others, and I began by saying so myself. This diet, my king, guards my senses in a kind of indescribable ether or clear air, and forbids them to contract any foul or turbid matter, and allows me to discern, as in the sheen of a looking-glass, everything that is happening or is to be. For the sage will not wait for the CHAP. earth to send up its exhalations, or for the atmosphere to be corrupted, in ease the evil is shed from above; but he will notice these things when they are impending, not so soon indeed as the gods, yet sooner than the many. For the gods perceive what lies in the future, and men what is going on before them, and wise men what is approaching. But I would have you, my prince, ask of me in private about the causes of pestilence; for they are secrets of a wisdom which should not be divulged to the many. Was it then my mode of living which alone develops such a subtlety and keenness of perception as can apprehend the most important and wonderful phenomena? You can ascertain the point in question, not only from other considerations, but in particular from what took place in Ephesus in comnection with that plague. For the genius of the pestilence,-and it took the form of a poor old man,-I both detected, and having detected took it captive : and I did not so much stay the disease as phuek it out. And who the god was to whom I had offered my prayers is shown in the statue which I set up in Ephesus to commemorate the event; and it is a temple of the Hereules who averts disease, for I chose him to help me, because he is the wise and courageons god, who once purged of the plague the city of Elis, by washing away with the river-tide the foul exhalations which the land sent up under the tyrinny of Augeas.

Who then do you think, my prince, being ambitious to be considered a wizard, would dedicate his personal achievement to a god? And whom would he get to admire his art, if he gave the eredit of the miracle to God? And who would offer his prayers to chap. Hercules, if he were a wizard? For in fact these wretches attribute such feats to the trenches they dig and to the gods of the under-earth, among whom we must not class Heracles, for he is a pure deity and kindly to men. I offered my prayer to him once on a time also in the Peloponnese, for there was an apparition of a lamia there too ; and it infested the neighbourhood of Corinth and devoured good-looking young men. And Hercules lent me his aid in my contest with her, without asking of me any wonderful gifts,--nothing more than honey-cake and frankincense, and the chance to do a salutary turn to mankind ; for in the case of Eurysthcus also this was the only guerdon which he thought of for his labours. I would ask you, my prince, not to be displeased at my mention of Hercules; for Athene had him under her care because he was good and kind and a Saviour of man.

(x) But inasmach as you bid me vindicate myself The charge in the matter of the sacrifice, for I observe you of human beckoning with your hand for me to do so, hear my condnceted defence. It shall set the truth before you. In all my actions I have at heart the salvation of mankind, yet I have never offered a sacrifice in their behalf, nor will I ever sacrifice anything, nor tonch sacraments in which there is blood, nor offer any prayer with my eyes fixed upon a knife or a sacrifice as he understands it. It is no Seythian, my prince, that you have got before you, nor a native of some sarage and inhospitable land; nor did I ever mingle with Massagetae or Taurians, for in that case I should have reformed even them and altered their sacrificial custom. sequence should I have descended if, after talking chap so much about divination and about the conditions under which it flourishes or does not flourish, I, who understand better than anyone that the gods reveal their intentions to holy and wise men even without their possessing prophetic gifts, made myself guilty of bloodshed, by meddling with the entrails of victims, as unacceptable to myself as they are ill-omened? In that ease the revelation of heaven would surely have abandoned me as impure.

However, if we drop the fact that I have a horror of any such sacrifice, and just examine the accuser in respect to the statements which be made a little earlier, he himself acquits me of this charge. For if, as he says, I could foretell to the Ephesians the impending pestilence without use of any sacrifice whatever, what need had I of slaying victims in order to discover what lay within my cognizance without offering any sacrifice at all?" And what need had I of divination in order to find out things of which I myself was already assured as well as another? For if I am to be put upon my trial on account of Nerva and his companions, I shall repeat what I said to you the day before yesterday when you accused me about these matters. For I regard Nerva as a man wortlly of the highest office and of all the consideration that belongs to a good name and fame, but as one ill-ealeulated to carry throngh any difficult plan ; for his frame is undermined by a disease which fills his sonl with bitterness, and incapacitates him even for his home affairs. As to yourself, certainly he admires your vigour of body no less than he admires your judgment; and in domes so I think he is not singular, because men are by nature more prone to admire what they themselves lack the chap. strength to do. But Nerva is also anmated towards myself by feelings of respect ; and I never saw him in my presence laughing or joking as he is aceustomed to do among his friends; but like young men towards their fathers and teachers, he obscrves a reverence in every thing that he says in my presence, nay he even blushes; and because he knows that $I$ appreciate and set so high a value upon modesty, he therefore so sedulously cultivates that quality, as sometimes to appear even to me humbler than beseems him. Who then can regard it as probable that Nerva is ambitious of Empire, when he is only too glad if he can govern his own household ; or that a man who has not the nerve to discuss with me minor issues, would discuss with me the greatest of all, or would concert with me plans which, if he thought like myself, he would not even concert with others? How again could I retain my reputation for wisdon and interpreting a man's judgment, if I believed over-much in divination, yet wholly distrusted wisdom? As for Orphitus and Rufus, who orphitis are just and sensible men though somewhat shggish, and hufus as I well know to be the case, if they say that they are under suspicion of aspiring to become despots, I hardly know over which they make the greater mistake, over them or over Nerva; if howerer they are accused of being his accomplices, then I ask, which you would most readily believe, that Nerva was usurping the throne, or that they had conspired with him.

(xi) I must confess that there are also other points which the accuser who brings me to the bar on these accounts should have entertained and considered:

What sense was there in my aiding these revolution- char. ists? For he does not say that I received any money from them, nor that $I$ was tempted by presents to commit these crimes. But let us consider the point whether 1 might not have advanced great claims, but have deferred their recognition of them until the time came at which they expected to win the throne, when I might have demanded much and have obtained still more as my duc. But how can yon prove all this? Call to mind, my prince, Apollonius' your own reign and the reigns of your prede of his life cessors, I mean of your own brother, and of your father, and of Nero mnder whom they held office; for it was under these princes chiefly that I passed my life before the eres of all, the rest of my time being spent on my visit to India. Well, of these thirty-eight years, for such is the period which has elapsed since then up to your own day, I have never come near the courts of princes, except that once in Egypt, and then it was yonr father's, though he was not at that time actually Emperor; and he admitted that he came there on my account. Nor have 1 ever uttered anything base or humiliating either to emperors, or in behalf of emperors to peoples; nor have I sought distinction through letters which princes might either write to myself or I myself ostentatiously address to them; nor have 1 ever demeaned myself by flattery of princes in order to win their largess. If then after due consideration of rich and poor, you should ask me in which class I register myself, I should say among the very rich, for the fact that I want nothing is worth to me all the wealth of Lydia and of Pactolus. Is it likely then that I who never would take presents from yourself whose throne I regarded as perfectly secire, should either chaf. have gone cadging to mere pretenders, and have de- Vir ferred the receipt of my recompense from them until such time as I thought would find them emperors; or that I should plan a change of dynasty, who never onee, for purposes of my advancement, resorted to that which was already established? And yet if you Greed of want to know how much a philosopher may obtain by Euphates flattery of the mighty, you have only got to look at the case of Euphrates. For why do I speak of his having got mere money out of them? Why, he has perfect fountains of wealth, and already at the banks he diseusses prices as a merchant might, or a huckster, a tax-gatherer, a low money-changer, for ail these rôles are his if there is anything to buy or sell ; and he clings like a limpet to the doors of the mighty, and you see him standing at them more regularly than any doorkeeper, indeed he often outstays the doorkeepers, just as greedy dogs would do; but he never yet bestowed a farthing upon any philosopher, but he walls up all his wealth within his own house, only supporting this Egyptian eut of the money of others, and whetting against me a tongue which ought to have been cut out.

(xii) However I will leave Euphrates to voarsclf; The sacrifor unless you approve of flatterers you will find the fice of an fellow worse than I depiet him ; and I only ask you boy to listen to the rest of my apologr. What then is it to be, and from what comnts is it to defend me? In the aet of aceusation, my prince, a regular dirge is chanted over an Areadian boy, whom I am accused of having cut up by night, perhaps in a dream, for 1 am sure I do not know. This, child is said to be of respectable parentage and to have possessed all the good-looks which Areadians wear even in the midst of chap. squalor. They pretend that I massacred him in spite Vin of his entreaties and lamentations, and that after thus imbruing my hands in the blood of this child I prayed the gods to reveal the truth to me. So far they only attack myself in their charges, but what follows is a direct assault upon the gods; for they assert that the gods heard my prayers under such circumstances, and vouchsafed to me victims of good omen, instead of slaying me for my impiety. Need I say, O my prince, it is defiling even to listen to such stuff?

But to confine my pleadings to the counts which affect myself, I would ask who is this Arcadian? For since he was not of nameless parentage, and by no means slave-like in appearance, it is time for you to ask what was the name of those who begot him and of what family he was, and what city in Arcadia had the honour of rearing him, and from what altars he was dragged away in order to be sacrificed here. My accuser does not supply this information, in spite of his ingenuity in the art of lying. Let us then suppose it was only a slave in whose behalf he accuses me. For by heaven, we surely must class among slaves one who had neither name of his own, nor parentage, nor city, nor inheritance? For slaves have no proper names of their own. In that case who was the slave-merchant who sold him? Who was it that bought him from Arcadians? For if this breed is specially suitable for the butchering kind of diviners, he must surely have purchased the boy for much money. And some messenger must have sailed straight to the Peloponnese in order to fetch this Areadian and conduct him to us. For though one can buy here on the spot slaves from Pontus or Lydia or Phrygia,-for indeed you can meet whole cras. droves of them being conducted hither, since these like other barbarous races have always been subject to foreign masters, and as yet see nothing disgraceful in servitude; anyhow with the Phrygians it is a f:ashion even to sell their children, and once they are enslaved, they never think any more abont them,--yet the Hellenes retain their love of liberty, and no man of Hellas will ever sell a slave out of his country; for which reason kidnappers and slave-dealers never resort thither, least of all to Arcadia; for in addition to the fact that they are beyond all other Hellenes jealons of liberty, they also require a grat number of slaves themselves. For Areadia contains a vast expranse of grass land and of timber, which covers not only the highlands, but all the plains as well. Consequently they require a great many labourers, many goat-herds and swine-herds, and shepherds and drivers either for the oxen or for the horses ; and there is much need in the land of wood-cutters, a craft to which they are traned from boyhood. And even if the land of Arcatia were not such as I have described, so that they could in addition afford like other nations to sell their own slaves abroad, what advantage could the wisdom the accuser babbles of derive by getting a ehild from Arcadia to murder and cut up? For the Areadians are not so much wiser than other Hellenes, that their entrails should convey more information than those of other people. On the contrary they are the most boorish of men, and resemble logs in other ways and especially in this that they can stomach acorns.

It is possible that I have conducted my defence on more rhetorical lines than is my eustom, in thus characterising the habits of the Areadians and cinap. digressing into the Peloponnese. What however is my right line of defence? This I think: I never Condemaasacrificed blood, I do not sacrifice it now, I never ${ }^{\text {tion of }}$ toueh it, not even if it be shed upon an altar; for offerings this was the rule of Pythagoras and likewise of his disciples, and in Egypt also of the Naked sages, and of the sages of India, from whom these principles of wisdom were derived by Pythagoras and his school. In adhering to this way of sacrifice they do not seem to the gods to be criminal ; for the latter suffer them to grow old, sound in body and free from disease, and to increase in wisdom daily, to be free from tyranny of others, to be wanting in nothing. Nor do I think it is mulikely that the gods have need of good men in order to offer them pure sacrifices. For I believe that the gods have the same mind as myself in the matter of sacrifice, and that they therefore place those parts of the earth which grow frankincense in the purest region of the world, in order that we may use their resources for purposes of sacrifice without drawing the knife in their temples or shedding blood upon altars. And yet, it appears, I so far forgot myself and the gods as to sacrifice with rites which are not only unusual with myself, but which no human being would employ.

(xiii) Let me add that the very hour which my accuser alleges aequits me of this charge. For on Apollonius that day, the day on which he says I committed this $\begin{gathered}\text { Mlezdis an }\end{gathered}$ crime, I allow that, if I was in the country, I offered sacrifice, and that if I sacrificed, then I ate of the vietim. And yet, my prinee, you repeatedly ask me if I was not staying at Rome at that time? And you too, $O$ best of princes, were staying there ; and yet you would not on that aecount admit you offered erfap. such a sacrifice ; and my false accuser was there likewise, but he will not own on that account that he committed murder, just because he was living in Rome. And the same is the case of thousands of people, whom you would do better to expel as strangers, than expose to acts of accusation, if in these the mere fact of their having been in Rome is to be held to be a proof of their guilt. On the other hand, the fact of my coming to Rome is in itself a disproof of the charge of revolutionary plotting ; for to live in a city, where there are so many cyes to see and so miny ears to hear things which are and which are not, is a serious handicap for anyone who desires to play at revolntion, unless he he wholly intent upon his own death. On the contrary it prompts prudent and sensible people to walik slowly even when engaged in wholly permissible pursuits.

(xiv) What then, O sycophant, was I really doing on that night? Suppose I were yourself and was being asked this question. inasmuch as you are come to ask questions, why then the answer would be this: I was tromping up actions and accusations against decent and respectable people, and I was trying to ruin the immocent, and to persuade the Emperor by dint of hard lying, in order that while I myself elimbed to fame, I might soil him with the blood of my victims. If again you ask me as a philosopher, I was praising the langhter with whieh Democritus laughed at all luman affairs. I was sleeping out at his house, because he was chap. suffering so terribly that he died of his disease. Ah, many are the clarms I would have prayed to obtain, if they could have saved his life. Fain would I have known of any melodies of Orphens, if any there are, to bring back the dead to us. Nay I rerily think 1 would have made a pilgrimage even to the nether world for his sake, if such things were feasible; so deeply attached was I to him by all his conduct, so worthy of a philosopher and so much in accord with my own ideals.

Here are facts, my prince, which you may learn also from Telesinus the consul ; for he too was at the bedside of the man of Melos, and nursed him by night like myself. But if you do not believe Celesinus, because he is of the number of philosophers, I call upon the physicians to bear me witness, and they were the following: Selencus of Cyzicus and Stratocles of Sidon. Ask them whether I tell the truth. And what is more, they had with them over thirty of their disciples, who are ready, I believe, to witness to the same fact; for if 1 were to summon hither the relatives of Philiscus, you might probably think that 1 was trying to interpose delays in the case ; for they have lately sailed from Rome to the Melian comntry in order to pay their last sad respects to the dead. Come forward, O ye witnesses, for you have been expressly summoned to give your testimony upon this point."
(The witnesses give their evidence.)

(xv) What then is the Areadian doing in this case? What becomes of the absurd stories of victims slain: What is the use of urging you to believe such lies? For what never took place will be real, if you deeide that it did take place. And Human how, my prince, are you to rate the improb-sacrifices ability of the sacrifice? For of course there have been long ago soothsayers skilled in the art of examining slain victims, for example I can name Megistias of Acamania, Aristandres of Lycia, and Silanus who was a native of Ambracia, and of these the Acarnanian was sacrificer to Leonidas the king of Sparta, and the Lycian to Alexander of Macedon, and Silanus to Cyrus the Pretender ; and supposing there had been found stored in the entrails of a hmman being some information truer or more profound or surer than usual, such a sacrifice was not difficult to effeet; inasmuch as there were kings to preside over it, who had plenty of eup-bearers at their disposal, besides plenty of prisoners of war as vietims ; and moreover these monarchs could violate the law with impmity, and they had no fear of being aceused, in case they committed so small a murder. But I believe, these persons had the same conviction which I also entertain, who am now in risk of my life because of such aceusation, namely that the entrails of animals which we slay while they are ignorant of death, are for that reason, and just because the animals laek all understanding of

A human being however has constintly in his soul the VII apprehension of death, even when it does not as yet impend; how therefore is it likely that when death is already present and stares him in the face, he should be able to give any intimation of the future through his entrails, or be a proper subject for saerifice at all ?

In proof that my conjecture is right and con- Why use. sonant with nature, I would ask you, my prince, to $\begin{gathered}\text { less for } \\ \text { purposes of }\end{gathered}$ consider the following points. The liver, in which divination adepts at this art declare the tripod of their diviniation to reside, is on the one hand not composed of pure blood, for all ummixed blood is retained by the heart which through the bloodvessels sends it flowing as if through camals over the entire body; the bile on the other hand lies over the liver, and whereas it is excited by anger, it is on the other hand driven back by fear into the cavities of the liver. Accordingly if, on the one hand, it is eaused to effervesce by irritants, and ceases to be able to contain itself in its own receptaele, it overflows the liver which underlies it, in which case the mass of bile occupies the smooth and prophetic parts of the bowels; on the other hand, under the influence of fear and panic it subsides, and draws together into itself all the light which resides in the smooth parts; for in such cases even that pure element in the blood recedes to which the liver owes its spleenlike look and distension, because the blood in question by its nature drains away under the membrane which encloses the entrails and floats upon the muddy surface. prince, is it to slay a human victim, if the sacrifice is char. going to furnish-no presage? And human nature does VII render such rites useless for purposes of divination, becanse it has a sense of impending death ; and dying men themselves meet their end, if with courage, then also with anger, and, if with despondency, then also with fear. And for this reason the art of divination, except in the case of the most ignorant savages, while recommending the slaying of kids and lambs, because these animals are silly and not far removed from being insensible, does not consider cocks and pigs and bulls worthy vchicles of its mysteries, because these creatures have too much spirit. I realise, my prinec, that my accuser chafes at my discourse, because $I$ find so intelligent a listener in yourself, for indeed you seem to me to give your attention to my discourse ; and if I have not clearly enongh explained any point in it, I will allow you to ask me any questions about it.
(xvi) I have then answered this Egyptian's act of Against accusation; but since I do not think I ought Euphrates altogether to pass by the slanders of Euphrates, I would ask you, my prince, to be judge between us, and decide which of us is more of a philosopher: Well then, whereas he strains every nerve to tell lies about myself, I disdain to do the like about him; and whereas he looks upon you as a despot, I regard you as a constitutional ruler ; and while he puts the sword into your hand for use against me, I merely supply you with argument.

Fates and of Necessity, and I only used as an chap. example of my argument the affairs of kings, be- Vir cause your rank is thought to be the highest of human ranks; and 1 dwelled upon the infuence of the Fates, and argued that the threads which they spin are so unchangeable, that, even if they decreed to someone a kingdom which at the moment belonged to amother, and even if that other slew the man of destiny, to save himself from ever being deprived by him of his throne, nevertheless the dead man would come to life again in order to fulfil the decree of the Fates. For we employ hyperbole in our arguments in order to convince those who will not believe in what is probable, and it is just as if I had used such an eximple as this: He who is destined to become a carpenter, will become one even if his hands have been cut off: and he who has been destined to carry off the prize for ruming in the Olympic games, will not fail to win even if he broke his leg: and a man to whom the Fates have decreed that he shall be an eminent archer, will not miss the mark, even thongh he lost his eyesight. And in drawing my examples from Royalty 1 had reference 1 believe to the Acrisii and to the house of Lains, and to Astyages the Mede, and to many other monarchs who thought that they were well-established in their kingdoms, and of whom some slew their own children as they imagined and others their descendints, and yet were subsequently deprived by them of thair thrones when they issued forth from obscurity in aecordance with the decrees of fate. Well, if 1 were inclined to flattery, l shonld have said that 1 had your own history in my mind, when you were blockaded in this city by Vitellius, and the temple of chap. Jupiter was burnt on the brow of the hill overlooking the eity, and Vitellius declared that his own fortune was assured, so long as you did not escape him, this although you were at the time quite a stripling and not the man you are now; and yet, because the Fates had decreed otherwise, he was undone with all his counsels, while you are now in possession of his throne. However, since I abhor the concords of flattery, for it seems to me that they are everything that is out of time and out of tune, let me cut the string out of my lyre, and request you to consider that on that occasion I had not your fortunes in my mind, but was talking exchusively of questions of the Fates and of Necessity for it was in speaking of them that they aceused me of having assailed yourself. And yet such an argument as mine is tolerated by most of the gods; and even Zeus himself is not angry when he hears from the poet in "the story of Lycia" this language :-

'Alas for myself, when Sarpedon . . . ,'

And there are other such strains referring to himself, such as those in which he accuses the Fates of having deprived him of his son ; and in the weighing of souls again the poets tell you that, although after her death he presented Minos the brother of Odyss. 11. ever fixed and assured, and who never slew poets on Chap. that account? For it is our duty to follow the Fates and obey them, and not take offence with the changes of fortune, and to believe in Sophocles when he says:-
'For the gods alone there comes no old age, nay, Oed. Col. nor ever death; but all other things are ${ }^{607}$ squ. confounded by all-mastering time . . .'
No man ever put the truth so well. For the prosperity of men runs in a circle, and the span of happiness, my prince, lasts for a single day. My property belongs to another and his to another, and his again to a third; and each in having hath not. Think of this, my prince, and put a stop to your decrees of exile, stay the shedding of blood, and have recourse to philosophy in your wishes and plans; for true philosophy feels no pangs. And in doing so wipe away men's tears; for at present echoes reach us from the sea of a thousand sighs, and they are redoubled from the continents, where each laments over his peculiar sorrows. Thence is bred an incalculable crop of evils, all of them due directly to the slanderous tongues of informers, who render all men objeets of hatred to yourself, and yourself, O prince, to all."

together with the words which preceded and led up chap. to this quotation. But the effect upon the despot of "III his quitting the court in a manner so godlike and inexplicable was quite other than that which the many expected; for they expected him to make a terrific uproar and institute a bunt for the man, and to send forth proclamations over his empire to arrest him wherever they should find him. But he did nothing of the kind, as if he set himself to defeat men's expectations; or because he now at last realised that as against the sage he had no resources of his own. But whether he acted from contempt, let us conjecture from what ensued, for he will be seen to have been confounded with astonishment rather than filled with contempt.

For he had to hear another case after that of chap. Apollonius, an action brought, I think, in comnexion I. with a will by some city against a private individual; and he had forgotten not only the names of the parties, but also the matter at issue in the suit; for his questions were without meaning and his answers were not even relevant to the cause,-all which argued the degree of astonishment and perplexity muder which the despot laboured, the more so because his flatterers had persuaded him that nothing could escape his memory.

philosophy who had been the terror of Hellenes and cirar. barbarians; and before midday he left the court, and at dusk appeared to Demetrius and Damis at translated Dicaearchia. And this accounts for his having miracuinstructed Damis to go by land to Dicacarchia, Dicaearcha without waiting to hear his defence. For he had given no previous notice of his intentions, but had merely told the man who was mostly in his intimacy to do what best accorded with his plans.

XI

Now Damis had arrived the day before and had cmap. talked with Demetrius about the preliminaries of the trial; and the account filled the latter, when he listened to it, with more apprehension than you might expect of a listener when Apollonius was in the cave question. The next day also he asked him afresh Dymphs about the same particulars, as he wandered with him along the edge of the sea, which figures in the fables told about Calypso for they were almost in despair of their master coming to them, beeause the tyrant's hand was hard upon all; yet out of respect for Apollonius' character they obeyed his instructions. Discouraged, then, they sat down in the chamber of the nymphs, where there is the cistern of white marhle, which contains a spring of water which neither orerflows its edges, nor recedes, even if water be drawn from it. They were talking ibout the quality of the water in no very serious mamner ; and presently, owing to the anxiety they felt about the sage, brought back their conversation to the circumstances which preceded the trial

Dams' grief had just broken out afresh, and he cmap. had made some such exclamation as the following: $x 11$ "Shall we ever behold, O ye gods, our noble and good companion?" when Apollonius, who had heard him,-for as a matter of fact he was already present in the chamber of the nymiphs,-answered: "Ye shall see him, nay, ye have atready seen him." But if I resist your touch, then you shall persuade Damis also that I am both alive and that I have not abandoned my body." They were no longer able to disbelieve, but rose up and threw themselves on his neck and kissed him, and asked him about his defence. For while Demetrius was of opinion that he had not even made his defence,-for he expected him to be destroyed without any wrong being proved against him,-Damis thought that he had made his defence, but perhaps more quickly than was expected; for he never dreamed that he had made it only that day. But Apollonius said: "I have made my defence, gentlemen, and have gained my cause; and my defence took place this very day not so long ago, for it lasted on even to midday." "How then," said Demetrius," have you accomplished so long a jommey in so small a fraction of the day?" And

And in honour of the gods who inspire such happy presages he poured out a libation in eonsequence of this dream, and he bade me be of good cheer on your account." And Apollonius said: "I am not surprised at Telesinus dreaming about me, for in his vigils, I assure you, he long ago oecupied his mind about me ; but as regards the trial, you shall learn everything, but not in this place; for it is already growing late in the evening, and it is time for us to proceed to the town ; and it is pleasant too to talk as you go along the road, for conversation assists you on your way like an escort.

Whereupon Demetrius cried out:"I thought you chap. had come hither because you were saved; but this is only the beginning of your dangers, for he will proscribe you, seize your person, and cut off all means of escape." Apollonius, however, told Demetrius not to be afraid and encouraged him by saying; "I only wish that you were both no more casy for him to catch than I am. But I know exactly in what condition of mind the tyrant is at this moment; hitherto he has never lieard anything except the utterances of flatterers, and now he has had to listen to the language of rebuke; such language breaks despotic natures down and enrages them. But I require some rest, for I have not bent the knce since I had this struggle." And Damis said: "Demetrius, my own attitude towards our friend's affairs was such

Well, it was then for the first time that I understood our master to be a divine being, transcending all our poor wisdom and knowledge. Consequently, even if I were called upon to expose myself to still greater risks than these, I should not fear anything, as long as I was under his protection. But since the evening is at hand, let us go into the imn to minister to and take care of him." "It seems to me," said the other, "O Apollonins, that the festival is not only something corporeal, but is made up of more wonderful material than are cities; for there is summoned together into one community on such occasions the best of the best, and the most celebrated of the celebrated."
"Then," said Apollonius, "O Isagoras, are we to consider the people we meet there in the same light as some people regard walls and ships, or do you need some other opinion of the festival?" "The opinion," answered the other, "which we have formulated, is quite adequate and complete, $O$ man of 'Tyana, and we had better adhere to it." "And yet," said the other, "it is neither adequate nor complete to one who considers about it as 1 do ; for it appears to me that ships are in need of men and men of ships, and that men would never have thought about the sea at all if they had not had a ship; and men are kept safe by walls and walls by men; and in the same way I consider a festival to be not only the meeting of human beings, lat also the place itself in which they have to meet, and the more so, beause walls and ships would never have come into being, unless there had been men's hands cuap. to build them, while these places, so far forth as they xviri are deprived of their natural and original characteristies, are by the hands of men spoiled; for it was owing to their matural advantages that they were held worthy of being made their meeting-places; for though the gymnasiums and porticoes and fountains and houses have been all created by human art, just like the walls and the ships, yet this river $A l_{p}$ heus with the hippodrome and the stadium and the groves, existed, I suppose, hefore men came here, the one providing water for drinking and for the bath, and the second a broad plain for the horses to race in, and the third provided just the space required for the athletes to raise the dust in as they run along in their races, namely a valley a stadium in length, and the groves around supplied wreaths for the winners and served the athletes who were runners as a place to practise in. For I imagine that Hercules considered these facts, and because he admired the natural advantages of Olympia, he found the place worthy of the festival and games which are still held here.'

Aften forty days, given up to discussions in char. an interview with Trophonius, although I onee chap. visited his shrine." Andwith these worls he at once Xix started for Boeotia attended by every one of his admirers. Now the cavern in Lebadea is dedicated to Trophonius, the son of $A_{p}$ ollo, and it can only be entered by those who resort thither in order to get an oracle, and it is not visible in the temple, but lies a little above it on a mound ; and it is shat in by iron spits whieh surround it, and you descend into it as it were sitting down and being drawn down. Those who enter it are clad in white raiment, and are eseorted thither with honey-cakes in their hands to appease the reptiles which assail them as they deseend. But the earth brings them to the surface again, in some cases close by, but in other eases a long way off; for they are sent up to the surface beyond Loeri and bevond Phocis, but most of them about the borders of Boeotia. Accordingly Apollonius entered the shrine and said : "I wish to descend into the cave in the interests of philosophy."

But the priests opposed him and though they told the multitude that they would never allow a wizard like him to examine and test the shrine, they pretended to the sage himself that only nefarions and impure women ever gave the oracles. So on that day he delivered a discourse at the springs of Hercyne, about the origin and conduct of the shrine : for it is the only oracle which gives responses through the person himself who consults it. And when the evening approached, he went to the mouth of the cave with his train of youthful followers, and having pulled up four of the obelisks, which constitute a bar to the passage, he went down below ground wearing his philosopher's mantle, having cuap. dressed himself as if he were going to deliver in address upon philosophy,--a step which the god Trophonius so thoroughly approved of, that he appeared to the priests and not only rebnked them for the reeeption they had given Apollonius, but enjoined them all to follow him to Aulis, for he said it was there that he would eome to the surface in such a marvellous fashion as no man before. And in fact he emerged after seven days, a longer period than it Emerges had taken anyone of those who until then had entered the oracle, and he had with him a volume thoroughly in keeping with the questions he had asked: for he had gone down saying: "What, O Pythatoras Trophonius, do you consider the most complete and purest philosophy?" And the volume contained the tenets of Pythagoras, a good proof this, that the oracle was in agreement with this form of wisdom.

From Ionia also there came to see him the band of chap. eompanions who were named in Hellas the company of XXI Apollonius; and mixing with the people of the place Apollonims they formed a band of youths, remarkable for their accompany number and for their philosophie enthusiasm. For the seienee of rhetorie had been left neglected and little attention was paid to the professors of the art, on the ground that the tongue was their only teacher; but now they were all impelled to study his philosophy. But he, like Gyges and Croesus, who they say left the door of their treasuries unlocked, in order that all who needed might fill their pockets from them, threw open the treasures of his wisdom to those who loved it, and allowed them to ask him questions upon every subject.

conducted a traffic in hatred and feud; accordingly ciasp. he tried to dissuade these yomg men from associating with them, and those that did so associate with them he sharply reproved, as if to wash off them a monstrous stain. For he had been long before on bad terms with them; and his experience of the prisons in Rome, and of the persons who were confined and perishing in them, so prejudiced him against the forensie art, as that he believed all these evils were due to sycophants and lawyers puffed up by their own eleverness, rather than to the despot himself.

Just at the time when he was holding these cuntr. conversations with the people of Hellas, the follow- Xxili ing remarkable portent overspread the heavens. The orb of the sun was surrounded by a wreath which resembled a rainbow, but dimmed the sumlight. That the heavenly sign portended a revolution was of course clear to all. Howeser, when the governor of Hellas summoned Apollonius from Athens to Boeotia, and said: "I hear that you have a talent for understanding things divine," he replied: "Yes, and perhaps you have heard that I have some moderstanding of human affairs." "I have heard it," he replied, "and I quite agree." "Since then," said Apollonius, "you are of one opinion with me, I would advise you not to pry into the intentions of the gods; for this is what human wisdom recommends you to do." Whereupon the assassin said; "Your bitter enemy, Clement, is not dead, as you imagine, but he lives and I know where he is ; and he is making ready to attack you." When the Emperor uttered a loud ery over this information, before he could recover his composure, Stephanus threw himself upon him and drawing the dagger from the hand which he had trussed up, he stabbed him in the thigh, inflicting a wound which was not immediately mortal, though it was well timed in view of the struggle which followed. The Emperor was still strong and full of bodily vigour, although he was about five and forty years of age; and in spite of the wound he closed with his assailant, and throwing him down, kneeled upon him and dug out his eyes and crushed his eheeks with the stand of a gold cup which lay thereby for use in sacred ceremonits, at the same time calling upon Athene to assist him. 'Thereupon his body-guard, realising that he was in distress, rushed into the room pell-mell, and despatched the tyrant, who had alieady swooned.

he was delivering an address in the groves of the chap. colomade, just at the moment when it all happened in the palace at Rome; and first be dropped his voice, as if he were terrified, and then, though with less vigour than was nsual with him, he continued ${ }_{E_{\mathrm{E}} \mathrm{thesh}}^{\text {thos }}$ his exposition, like one who between his words caught glimpses of something foreign to his subject, and at last he lapsed into silence, like one who has been interrupted in his discourse. And with an awful glance at the gromnd, and stepping forward three or four paees from his pulpit, he cried: "Smite the tyrant, smite him,"-not like one who derives from some looking-glass a faint image of the truth, but as one who sees things with his own eyes, and is taking part in a tragedy. All Ephesus, for all Ephesus was at his lecture, was strnck dumb with astonishment; but he, pausing like those who are trying to see and wait until their doubts are ended, said: "Take heart, gentlemen, for the tyrant has been slain this day; and why do I say to day? Now it is, by Athene, even now at the moment I uttered my words, and then lapsed into silence." The inhabitants of Ephesus thonght that this was a fit of madness on his part; and although they were anxions that it should be true, yet they were anxions about the risk they ran in giving ear to his words, whereupon he added: "I an not surprised at those who do not yet accept my story, for not even all Rome as yet is cognizant of it. But behold, Rone begins to know it: for the rumour runs this way and that, and, thousands now are convinced of it; and they begin to leap for joy, twice as many as before, and twice as many as they, and four times as many, yea the whole of the populace there. They were still sceptical, when swift rumners char; arrived with the good news, and bore testimony to axvil the sage's wisdom; for the tyrant's murder, and the day which brought the event to birth, the hour of mid-day and the murderers to whom he addressed his exhortation, everything agreed with the revelation which the gods had made to Apollonius in the midst of his harangue.

And thirty days later Nerva sent a letter to him Nerra to say that he was already in possession of the aeeces and Empire of the Romans, thanks to the good-will of sage to the gods and to his good counsels; and he added Rome that he would more casily retain it, if Apollonius would come to advise him. Whereupon at the moment the latter wrote to him the following enigmatical sentence: "We will, my prince, enjoy one another's company for a very long time during which neither shall we govern others, nor others us." Perhaps he realised, when he wrote thus, that it was not to be long before he himself should quit this human world, and that Nerva was only to retain the throne for a short time; for his reign lasted but one year and four months, when he left behind him the reputation of having been a sober and serious ruler.

But as he did not wish to seem to neglect so good a friend and ruler, he composed later on for him a letter giving him advice about matters of state ; and calling Damis to him, he said: "You are wanted here, for this letter which I have written to the hima letter king contains secrets, and though it is written, they are of such a kind that they must be communicated orally either by myself or through you." And Damis declares that he only understood his master's device much later; for that the letter was composed in admirable style, and though it treated of important subjects, yet it might equally well have been sent through anyone else. What then was the sage's device? All through his life, he is said often to have exclaimed: "Live unobserved, and if that cannot be, slip unobserved from life." His letter, then, and Damis' visit to Rome were of the nature of an excuse for getting the latter out of the way, in order that he might have no witnesses of his dissolution. Damis accordingly says that, though he was much affected at leaving him, in spite of his having no knowledge of what was coming, yet Apollonius, who knew full well, said nothing of it to him, and far from addressing him after the manner of those who are never to see one another again, so abundant was his conviction that he would exist for cver, merely pledged him in these words: " $O$ Damis, even if you have to philosophise by yourself, keep your eyes upon me."

Tue memoirs then of Apollonius of Tyana which Damis the Assyrian eomposed, end with the above story; for with regard to the manner in which he died, if he did actually die, there are many stories, though Damis has repeated none. But as for myself I ought not to omit even this, for my story should, I think, have its natural ending. Neither has Damis told us anything about the age of our hero; but there are some who say that he was eighty, others that he was over ninety, others again who say that his age far execeded a hundred. He was fresh in all his body and upright, when he died, and more agreeable to look at than in his youth. For there is a certain beauty even in wrinkles, which was espeeially conspicuous in his ease, as is elear from the likenesses of him which are preserved in the temple at Tyana, and from aceounts whieh praise the old age of Apollonius more than was once praised the youth of Aleibiades.

Others again say that he died in Lindus, where he or in entered the temple of Athene and disappeared Liudus within it. Others again say that he died in Crete or Crete in a much more remarkable manner than the people of Lindus relate. For they say that he continued to live in Crete, where he became a greater centre of admiration than ever before, and that he came to the temple of Dictyma late at night. Now this temple is guarded by dogs, whose duty it is to watch over the wealth deposited in it, and the Cretans claim that they are as good as bears or any other animals equally fierce. None the less, when he came, instead of barking, they approached him and fawned upon him, as they would not have done even with people they knew familiarly. The guardians of the shrine arrested him in consequence, and threw lim in bonds as a wizard and a robber, accusing hinn of having thrown to the dogs some charmed morsei. But about midnight he loosened his bonds, and after calling those who had bound him, in order that they might witness the spectacle, he ran to the doors of the temple, which opened wide to receive him; and when he had passed within they closed afresh, as if they had been shut, and there was heard a chorus of madens singing from within the temple, and their song was this. "Hasten thou from eart!1, hasten thon to Heaven, hasten." In other words: "Do thou go upwards from earth."

And even after his death he continued to preach chap. that the soul is immortal; but although he taught this account of it to be correct, yet he discouraged men from meddling in such high subjects. For there came to Tyana a youth who did not shrink from acrimonious discussions, and would not accept truth in argument. Now Apollonius had already passed away from among men, but people still wondered at his passing, and no one ventured to dispute that he was immortal. This being so, the discussions were mainly about the soul, for a band of youths were there passionately addicted to wisdom. The young man in question, however, would on no account allow the tenet of the immortality of the soul, and said: "I myself, gentlemen, have done nothing now for over nine months but pray to Apollonins that he would reveal to me the truth about the soul; but he is so utterly dead that he will not appear to me in response to my entreaties, nor give me any reason to consider him immortal." Such were the young man's words on that occasion, but on the fifth day following, after discussing the same subject, he fell aslcep where he was talking with them, and of the young men who were studying with him, some were reading books, and others were industriously drawing geometrical figures on the ground, when on a sudden, like one possessed, he leapt up from an uneasy sleep, streaming with perspiration, and cried out: "I believe thee." And, when those who were present asked him what was the matter ; "Do you not see," said he, "Apollonius the sage, how that he is present with us and is listening to our discussion, and is chap. reciting wondrous verses about the soul? "But XXXI where is he?" they asked, "For we cannot see him anywhere, although we would rather do so than possess all the blessings of mankind." And the youth replied: "It would seem that he is come to converse with myself alone concerning the tenets which I would not believe. Listen therefore to the inspired argument which he is delivering:

"The soul is immortal, and 'tis no possession of thine own, but of Providence,
"And after the body is wasted away, like a swift horse freed from its traces,
"It lightly leaps forward and mingles itself with the light air,
"Loathing the spell of harsh and painful servitude which it has endured.
"But for thee, what use is there in this? Some day when thou art no more thou shalt believe it.
"So why, as long as thou art among living beings, dost thou explore these mysteries?"

Here we have a clear utterance of Apollonius, estab)lished like an oracular tripod, to convince us of the mysteries of the soul, to the end that checrfully, and with due knowledge of our own true nature, we may pursue our way to the goal appointed by the Fates. With any tomb, however, or cenotaph of the sage I never met, that I know of, although I have traversed most of the earth, and have listened everywhere to stories of his divine quality. And his shrine at Tyana is singled out and honoured with royal officers: for neither have the Emperors denied to him the honours of which they themselves were held worthy.

THE EPISTLES OF APOLLONIUS OF TYANA

I.-To Euphrates.

As for myself I am on friendly terms with philosophers; with sophists however or low clerks or any such other kind of wretches, I an neither on friendly terms now, and Heaven forbid I should ever be so at any later time. Although this does not apply to you, unless indeed you chance to be one of them, the following words do very much apply to you: heal and remedy your passions, and try to be a philosopher, and not to be jealous of those who really are such, for in your ease old age is already at hand and death.
II.-To the same.

Forasmucu as virtue cometh by nature, by acquirement, by use, each of these may be held to be worthy of acceptation. See then whether you have any one of them, and either give up the teaching of wisdom for the future or at least communicate it freely and for nothing to those who associate with you, for you already have the riches of Megabyzes.

III. -To the same.

You have visited the countries that lie between me and Italy, begimning from Syria, parading yourself in the so-called royal eities. And you had a philosopher's doublet all the time, and a long white beard, but besides that nothing. And now how comes it that you are returning by sea with a full cargo of silver, of gold, of vases of all sorts, of embroidered raiment, of every other sort of ornament, not to mention overweening pride, and boasting and unhappiness? What eargo is this, and what the purport of these strange purchases? Zeno never purchased but dried fruits.
IV.-To the same

You would need little for your servants, if only they were servants of a philosopher. Nay, you should not even think of purchasing more than you really want, especially as you incur some ill-fame thereby. But since you have once made the mistake, the next best thing would be if you made as much haste as possible to give away some of what you have to others. You will still retain both your fatherland and your friends.
V.-To the same.

There is no need henceforth for any inmate of his garden, or follower of his school to plead the merit of one of the discourses of Epicurus which is entitled: "About Pleasure." For a genuine adsocate thereof has turned up in the Porch itself. But if by way of

VI.-To the s.ime.

I lately asked some rich men, if they foster such bitter feelings. And they answered: "How can we do otherwise?" So I asked them what was the reason of their duress, and they blimed their wealth. But you, my poor wretch, only acquired your wealth yesterday.

As soon as you have reached Aegae in your hurry, and discharged your ship there, you have to return again post-haste to Italy, where you must fawn as usual upon the sick, the old men, old women, orphans, rich men, dandies, Midas, Getae. For they say that a merchant must let out every reef. For myself, I would rather clear out the salt-cellar in the house of Themis.

"He wears his hair long on his head." Well, and so does the Hellene, because he is a Hellene and not a barbarian. "He wears linen raiment." Yes, for this purest garb is that of priests. "He practises divination." les, for many are the things we know not, and there is no other way of foreseeing anything that is going to happen. "But such practices are not consonant with philosophy." Nevertheless they befit the deity. "And moreover he eases the flesh of its agonies and allays suffering." You might equally bring this charge against Aselepius. "He eats alone." Yes, and the rest of the world feed. "He uses few words and on few oceasions." Yes, for he has a faculty of holding his tongue altogether. " He abstains from all flesh and from eating any animal food." That is surely a proof of his humanity. If you tell me, Euphrates, that you have put these counts into your indictment, you will probably add the following as well: "lf there had been any going, he would have taken money as I have, and presents, and civil promotions." If there had been money going, he would not have taken it. "Nay, but he would have taken it for his country." Yes, but that is not one's country which knows not what it hath.

X.-To the same.

Some people ask the reason why I have left off giving lectures to large andiences. Let all know then, who may be interested to understand such matters: No discourse can be really useful, unless, if it be single, it be also delivered to a single individual. Anyone then who discourses in any other manner is motived by vain glory to diseourse.

XI.--To the Chief Councillors of Caesarea.

Men's first need is of gods for everything and above everything; their second of cities, for next after the gods we must honour our citics; and if we are men of sense we prefer our citics' welfare. Now if yours were only one city of many, instead of being, as it is, the greatest in Palestine, excelling all others there in size and in laws, and in institutions and in the warlike virtues of ancestors, and still more in the arts and manners of peace, I should still see reason to admire and honour your city more than all others, and so would every man who has any sense. By common report this would be the reason for preferring your city on a comparison of it with the run of eities. But whenever a city leads the way in paying honour to a single individual, and that onc who is a stranger, and comes from afar off, seeing that it is a city which honours him, what can the individual do by way of return, and what worthy repayment of yourselves is possible? This perhaps and none other: That if he is a man beloved of the gods by reason of some natural endowment, he should pray that that city may obtain all blessings, and that his prayer may be granted. This I shall never cease to do in your behalf, for I am pleased to see the manners of Hellenism revealing their own excellence, and doing it by means of public inscriptions. But as Apollonides the son of Aphrodisius is a young man of firm and constant character, and worthy to bear your name, I shall endeavour to render him of use to you in every particnlar, with the help of some good fortune.

XII.-To the Chief Counclllors of Seleucha.

Whatever city is so well affected as yours both towards the gods and towards such men as are worthy of acceptation, is both blessed in itself, and contributes to the excellence of those in whose favour it bears witness. Now though it is not difficult to lead the way in displaying graceful good-will, indeed it is the noblest of human acts, it is yet not easy to requite it ; nay it is altogether impossible to find a true equivalent, for I imagine that what in time sequence is second, can never in nature be first. Consequently I am obliged to ask heaven to reward you who have shewn yourselves not only my superiors in ability, but also in deeds. For no man could possibly rise to such achievements as yours. ## XIII.-To the same Persons.

Straton has indeed passed away from among men, and has left upon earth all that he had of mortality ; but we who are here, still undergoing punishment, in other words still living, ought to have some concern for his affairs. One of us then must do one thing, another another, and it is our duty to do it now rather than later ; for if in the past we were some of us known as his relations, and some of us merely as his friends, now is the time to show with all sincerity that we are really such, nor must we delay doing our duty to an indefinite future, supposing these names meant anything. I myself, however, am desirous in this matter to be especially your friend, and therefore I undertake to bring up myself Alexander who was his son by Seleucis, and to impart to him my own education. And I should certainly have given him money also, who am bestowing what is so much more important, if it were right that he should receive it.

You think it your duty to eall philosophers who follow Pythagoras magicians, and likewise also those who follow Orpheus. For my own part I think that those who follow no matter whom, ought to be called magieians, if only they are determined to be divine and just men.

The Persians give the name of magi to divine beings. A magus then is either a worshipper of the gods or one who is by nature divine. Well, you are no magus, but a man without god.

XIX.-To Scopllinnus, the Sophist.

In all there are five characters in rational discourse: the philosopher, the historian, the advocate, the writer of epistles, the commentator. And when these general characters have been settled, there emerges afresh in sequence of dignity, first he who is peculiar by reason of his own faculties or nature, and there comes second he who is an imitator of the best, supposing he be one of those who lack natural endowment. But the best is both difficult to find and difficult to appraise; consequently his own character is more fitting for each man to assume, so far forth as it is also more lasting.

XX.-To Domitian.

If you have power, and you have it, then it would be well if you also aequired prudence. For supposing you to have prudence, but to lack power, you would have been equally in need of power; for the one of these ever stands in need of the other, just as the eye needs light and light the eye.

Do not then allow men here to misunderstand me so profoundly, nor permit them to consider me rieh rather than a philosopher. For of the people there, no one is the friend of another, to the extent of denying out of good-will the most monstrous charges.

XL.--To the same People.

Coddari, and Xurisitauri. And how are you going to call your daughters and your wives? For they too belong to the same castes, and are more froward than yourselves.

XLI.-To the same People.

You cannot expect even your servants to be wellwishers of yourselves, firstly because they are servants, and secondly because most of them belong to castes opposed to your own. For they too, like yourselves, have their pedigrees.

XLII.-To the Platonic Thinkers.

If anyone offers money to Apollonius, and he considers the donor to be worthy, he will accept it, if he is in need; but for his philosophy he will take no reward, even though he be in want.

XLIII.-To those who ane puffed up with Wispom.

If anyone professes to be my disciple, let his profession be that he remains within his house, that he abstains from all bathing, that he kills no living creature, nor eats flesh, that he is exempt from feelings of jealousy, of spite, of hatred, of slander, of enmity, in order to bear the name of a free man and belong to their class. For surely he must beware of carrying about a pretence of manners and character and of language which he merely feigns, in order to make others believe that he leads the life which he does not. Farewell.

XLIV.-To Hestineus, his Brother.

Other men regard me as the equal of the gods, and some of them even as a god, but until now my own country alone ignores me, my country for which in particular I have striven to be distingnished. What wonder is there in this? For not even on you my brothers, as I perceive, has it clearly dawned that I am superior to most men, both in my language and in my eharacter. For otherwise how could you judge me so harshly as to need to be reminded at all of matters about which, as about no others, even the dullest persons are likely to resent instruction, to wit about country and brethren? Nevertheless you must be aware that it is a noble thing to regard the whole earth as your country and all men as your brethren and friends, seeing that they are the family of one God, that they are of one nature, and that there is a communion of each and all in speech, and likewise in feelings, which is the same, no matter how or where a man has been born, whether he is barbarian or whether he is Hellene, so long only as he is a man. But there is, it must be admitted, a kinship which over-rides philosophical theory, and a familiarity which attracts to itself everything that shares it. So the Odysseus of Homer, as they relate, did not prefer even immortality, when a goddess offered it, to Ithaca. And for my own part I notice that this law pervades even the animal kingdom; for there is not a single bird that will sleep away from its own nest, and though the fishermen may drag the tenants of the deep from their lair, yet they will return unless they are overeome. As for widd beasts neither hunger nor satiety induces them to remain outside their holes. And man is one of these ereatures that nature hath so produced, even though he bear the name of sage, for whom all the earth may supply everything else, but can never eall up before his eyes the sepulchres of his fathers.

XLV.-To the same.

If philosophy be the most precious thing in existence, and if we are convinced that we are philosophers, we cannot rightly be supposed to hate our brethren, and that for a meari and illiberal reason. - For it appears our misunderstanding is on the point of money; and that is something which we tried to despise, even before we beeame philosophers; and therefore it is more likely and reasomable that you should suspect me of having neglected to write to you for some other reason than that. For in fact $\tilde{I}$ was as much afraid to write you the truth, because you might think me boastful, as to write you less than the truth, for fear you might think me over-humble; and both of these things are equally annoying no less to brethren than to friends. Now however I have this information to give you. If heaven should perhaps consent, I will, after meeting my friends in Rhodes, shortly depart thence, and return to you towards the end of spring.

XLVI.-To Gondius.

Tuev tell me that Hestiaeus has been wronged by yourself in spite of your having been his friend, if indeed you are the friend of anyone. Beware then, my Gordius, lest you find yourself in confliet not with the semblance of a man, but with the reality. My greetings to your son, Aristocleides, who may, I pray, never resemble yourself. And yet you, as a young man, were beyond reproach.
XLVII.-To the Senate and People of Tyana.

And if you merit a still wider and higher consideration, it is only myself and my own natural gifts which are capable of an effort involving so much ability and seriousness. Farewell.

XLVIII.-To Diotimus.

You make a mistake in supposing that I want anything either from yourself, with whom I have never had anything in common, or from any body else like you, or under like circumstances. But in fact, even what I have expended on any object conducive to your welfare has been inconsiderable. I shall be best pleased, therefore, if you accept my kindness without incurring any expense yourself. For in no other way but this shall I retain my principles intact. And that this is my way, and this my attitude towards all my fellowcitizens, I might almost say towards all men, you can learn from the rest of the citizens who have accepted my kindness, as often as they stood in need thereof, but who have never been asked to make any return. Do not then take it amiss, if I have rebuked my servant as he deserved, for having in the first instance accopted anything, and if he at once handed back to Lysias your friend, and also a friend of my own, what he received, because he did not know personally any of your servants whom you had left behind. But that there are two aecounts of me current, and that they will continue to eirculate even in the future, need I be surprised? For it is inevitable in the case of everyone at all prominent in any way, that there should be contradictory accounts of him in circulation. It was so with Pythagoras, with Orpheus, with Plato, and with Soerates; not only were contrary statements made about them, but they were embodied in writing as well, and we need not be surprised seeing that even concerning God himself men's aceounts differ from one another. However, good men by a sort of natural affinity will aecept the truth, just as bad men will aeeept the opposite, and we can afford to langh at such people, I mean the worst sort. This much only it is right for the moment to impress upon you about myself, that even the gods have spoken of me as of a divine man, not only on many occasions to private individuals, but also in public. I shall shock you if I speak more or more highly of myself. I pray for your good health.

XLIX.-To Pheruclanus.

I am very delighted with the letters whieh you have sent me, for they reveal much intimacy and reminiscence of my family; and I am sure that you are most anxious to see me, and to be seen by me. I shall therefore visit you as soon as possible ; wherefore please remain at home. Even the most wise Pythagoras belonged to the class of demons; but you still seem to me to be utterly remote from philosophy, and from true science, or you would neither abuse that great man, nor persist in hating certain of those who follow him. You should turn to something else now. For "you have missed your cue" in philosophy, "nor have you hit it off" better than Pandarus, when he Iliad iv. 140 aimed at Menelaus, in the episode of the violation of oaths.

LI.-To the same Pehson.

Tuere are those who rebuke you for having taken money from the Emperor. There would be nothing absurd in your doing so, were it not clear that you have taken money rewards for your philosophy on so many occasions and on such a large seale, and from so many persons, and from people whom you had got to believe that you were a philosopher.

If anyone converses with a Pythagorean, and asks what boons and how many he shall derive from him, I should myself answer as follows: he will aequire legislative seience, geometry, astronomy, arithmetic, knowledge of harmony and of masic, and of the physician's art, god-like divination in all its branches, and the still better qualities of magnanimity, greatness of soul, magnificence, constancy, reverence, knowledge and not mere opinion

Haring conferred upon him the honours he deserved, and which are proper to good men who are so truly eminent in philosophy, we have desired to manifest to you by letter our good-will. Fare ye well.

Some of you have taken trouble to provide harbours and public buildings and enclosures and promenades; but neither you yourselves nor your laws evince any solicitude for the children in your cities, or for the young, or for women. Were it not so it would be a fine thing to be one of your subjects.

old age for every man, after which he remaineth no more. Let not therefore the loss of thy wife in the flower of her age grieve thee beyond measure, nor, because such a thing as death is spoken of, imagine that life is superior thereto, when it is altogether inferior in the eyes of one who reflects. Make thyself then the brother of one that is a philosopher, in the common acceptation of the word, and in particular is a Pythagorean and Apollonius, and restore the former estate of thy household. For if we had found anything to blame in thy former wife, we might reasonably expect thee to shrink from another union; but inasmuch as she was consistently holy and pure and attaehed to her husband and therefore worthy of your regrets, what should lead us to expect that a second wife should not resemble her? Nay she would in all probability be cncouraged to improve in virtue by the fact that her predecessor was not forgotten nor wronged by neglect of her memory. And I would pray thee seriously to concern thyself about the condition of thy brethren as up to the present it is. For thy elder brother has never yet had offspring; and though thy younger brother may still look forward to having a child, yet it is only in the far future ; and so here are we three sons, the children of a single father, and we threc between us have not a single son. Wherefore there is great risk no less for our country than for the life of our posterity. For if we are better than our father,--though of course, so far forth as he was our father, we are worse,-how can we not reasonably expect our descendants to be still better? I trust then that there may be some to whom we may at least hand on our names, as our ancestors devised

LVI.-To the People of Sardis.

Croesus lost the empire of the Lydians by crossing the river Halys. He was taken alive, he was bound in chains, he was set upon the high raised pyre, he saw the fire lit and the flames rising aloft. He was saved, for it appeared that he was honoured and valued by the god. What then ensued ? This man, your progenitor, and also your king, who had suffered so mueh that he deserved not to suffer, was invited to the table of his enemy, and became his adviser and well-wisher, his faithful friend. But you, in your relations with your parents, your children, your friends, kinsmen and tribesmen, evince nothing but truceless, implacable, irreconcilable hatred, and worse than this, unholy and godless frenzy. Ye have made yourselves hateful, by neither crossing the Halys, nor receiving among yourselves anyone from outside. And yet earth bears you her fruit. The earth is unjust.

LVII.-To certain ieained Publicists.

Light is the presence of fire, without which it could not be. Now fire is itself an affection, and that whereunto it comes, is of course burnt up. But light can only supply its own radiance to our eyes, on condition of using not force to them, but persuasion. Speech therefore in its turn, resembles in its one aspect, fire which is the affection, and in its other,

LVIII.-To Valerius.

There is no death of anyone save in appearance only, even as there is no birth of anyone or becoming, except only in appearance. For when a thing passes from essence into nature we consider that there is a birth or becoming, and in the same way that there is death when it passes from nature into essence; though in truth a thing neither comes into being at any time nor is destroyed. But it is only apparent at one time and later on invisible, the former owing to the density of its material, and the latter by the reason of the lightness or tenuity of the essence, which however remains always the same, and is only subject to differences of movement and state. For this is necessarily the characteristic of change caused not by anything outside, but by a conversion of the whole into the parts, and by a return of the parts into the whole, due to the oneness of the universe. But if someone asks: What is this, which is at one time visible, and at another invisible, as it presents itself in the same or in different objects? It may be answered, that it is characteristic of each of the several genera of things here, when it is full, to be apparent to us because of the resistance of its density to our senses, but to be unseen in case it is emptied of its matter by reason of its tenuity, the latter being perforce shed abroad, and flowing away from the eternal measure which confined it; albeit the measure itself is never created nor destroyed.

Why is it then that error has passed unrefuted on such a scale? The reason is that some imagine that they have themselves actively brought about what they have merely suffered and experienced ; because they do not understand that a child brought into the world by parents, is not begotten by its parents, any more than what grows by means of the earth grows out of the earth; nor are phenomenal modifications or affections of matter properties of the individual thing, but it is rather the case that each individual thing's affections are properties of a single phenomenon. And this single phenomenon cannot be rightly spoken of or characterised, except we name it the first essence. For this alone is agent and patient, making itself all things unto all and through all, God eternal, which in so far as it takes on the names and person of individuals, forfeits its peculiar character to its prejudice. Now this is of lesser importance; what is of greater is this, that some are apt to weep so soon as ever God arises out of mankind, ${ }^{1}$ by mere change of place and not of nature. But in very truth of things, you should not lament another's death, but prize and reverence it. And the highest and only befitting honour you can pay to death, is to resign unto God him that was here, and continue to rule as before over the human beings entrusted to your care. You dishonour yourself if you improve less through your judgment than by lapse of time, seeing that time alleviates the sorrows even of the wicked. High command is the most important of things; and he will best succeed in the most important office, who has first learnt to govern himself. And what piety moreover is there in deprecating that which has happened by the will of God? If there is an order of reality, and there is, and if God presides over it, the just man will not desire to deprecate his blessings; for such conduct savours of avarice and violates that order ; but he will consider that what happens is for the best. Go forward then and heal yourself, dispense justice and console the wretched ; so will you wipe away men's tears. You must not prefer your private welfare to the public, but the public to your private. And think what manner of consolation is offered you: the entire province has mourned with you for the loss of your son. Reward those who have grieved with you, and you will far sooner reward them by ceasing to mourn than by confining yourself in your house. "You have no friends?" But you have a son. "What, the one who is just dead (you will ask)?" "Yes," will be the reply of all who reflect; "for that which exists is not lost, but exists by the very fact that it will be for ever. Or would you argue that that which has no existence comes into being? But how can that be without the destruction of that which is?" Another might say, that you are impious and unjust. Impious towards God, and unjust towards your son, nay impious towards him rather than towards God. Would you then learn what death is? Send and slay me the moment I have uttered these words, and unless you can clothe them afresh with flesh, you have there and then made me superior to yourself.

You have abundant time, you have a wife who is sensible, devoted to her husband; you are yourself sound in body, take from yourself whatever lacks. One of the ancient Romans, in order to uphold the law and order of his state, slew his own son, and indeed slew him after crowning him. You are a governor of fifty cities, and noblest of the Romans; yet this present humour of yours is such as to prevent you from affording a stable government even to your household, not to speak of cities and provinces. If Apollonius were with you, he would have persuaded Fabulla not to mourn.
LIX.-The King of the Babylonians, Garmos, to Neggydes, the King of the Indians.

If you were not of a prying disposition, you would not be laying down the law in other people's affairs : nor as sovereign in India would you be playing the judge for Babylonians. For how came you to know anything about my people? But just recently you have made an attempt upon my kingdom, by trying to cajole me with your letters and by insinuating into my realm such magistrates as these, and you try to cloak under the veil of philanthropy your own aggressive designs. But you will not succeed at all, for you cannot deceive me or take me in.

And we have also set $u_{p}$ an inscribed image, painted and made of bronze, to commemorate his virtues. For this is the way in which our fathers did honour to good men; for they regarded as sons of Lyeurgus all who have chosen a way of life in aceordance with the will of the gods."

LXIV.-To the Same.

You invite me again and again to reform your laws and your youth. Now the city of Solon does not invite me. Reverence Lycurgus.
LXV.--To those of the Ephesians who frequented the Temple of Artemis.

You are devoted to holy ceremonies no less than to honouring the Emperor. In general I cannot condemn your custom of inviting and being invited to feasts; but I do condemn the people who by night and by day share the home of the goddess, otherwise I should not see issuing thence thieves and robbers and kidnappers and every sort of wretch or sacrilegious raseal ; for your temple is just a den of robbers.

> LXVI.-To the same Persons.

There is come from Hellas a man who was a Hellene by race; and though he was not an Athenian or indeed a native of Megara, yet he had a better name, and was intent upon making his home together with your goddess. So I would have you assign me some place, where I can stay without contracting a need of purificatory rites, though I always remain inside.

LXVII,-To the same Persons.
Your temple is thrown open to all who would sacrifice, or offer prayers, or sing hymns, to suppliants, to Hellenes, barbarians, free men, to slaves. Your law is transcendentally divine. I could recognise the tokens of Zeus and of Leto, if these were alone.

LXVIII.-To the Milestans.

An earthquake has shaken your land, as has often happened with the countrics of many other people. But as the misfortunes which they suffered were unavoidable, so they exhibited towards one another feelings of pity and not of hatred. You alone have hurled against the gods both missiles and fire, and against such gods as people in either case must have, both after danger and before it. Nay more, when a distinguished philosopher of Hellenic race had often warned you publicly of the disaster in store for yon, and had foretold the earthquakes that have happened, him, when the god actually shook your land, you began to accuse daily of having brought it about. Alas, for your public folly ; and yet your forefather's name was Thales.

LXIX.-To the Trallians.

Many from all parts, some for one reason and some for another, flock to me both young and old. I then scan the nature of each individual and his manners, as closely as I can, and I mark his disposition towards his own city, to see whether it is just or the reverse ;

What then is the reason, why, so much approving of yourselves, I yet do not take up my residence among so excellent a people, although I am of your own race? I will tell you on some other occasion; but at present I have only time to praise you, and say how much superior are your leading citizens in virtue and in speech to those of other cities, and still more to those among whom they have been.

LXX.-To the people of Sais.

As Plato says in his Timaens, you are the descendants of Athenians, though they have expelled from Attica the goddess you have in common with them, who is called Neith by you, but Athene by them. They have ceased to be Hellenes, and why they have ceased to be, I will tell you. No wise and aged man is an Athenian; for no Athenian ever grew a full beard, since you never saw one of them with any at all. The flatterer is at their doors, the sycophant stands before their gates, the pimp even before their long walls, the parasite in front of Munychia and in front of the Piraeus; as for the goddess she has not even Sunium left to her.

once on a time a colony of them; but just as the Hellenes are characterised by their customs and laws and language and private life so are men in general by their deportment and appearance. But as for you, most of you have abandoned even your names; nay, owing to this recent prosperity of yours, you have forfeited all tokens of your ancestors. It is quite right therefore that the latter should refuse to welcome you even in their tombs, on the ground that you are no longer recognizable by them. For whereas formerly they bore the names of heroes and sea-captains and legislators, they now bear names such as Lucullus and Fabricius and names of other blessed Lucanians. For myself I would rather be called Minnnermus.

LXXII.--To Hestiaeus.

Our father Apollonius had the name of Menodotus thrice over in his pedigree, but you wish to style yourself once for all Lucretius or Lupercus. Of which of these are you the descendant? It is a disgrace to have a person's name without also having his countenance.

LXXIII.-To the same.

I am far away by God's will from my country, but I always ponder in my mind my city's affairs. 'The generation of those who won the first honour hastens to its end, and in future it will be a reign of children, and a little later on of babes. Here then is what we have to fear, lest the state governed by youth should go wrong; but you need not fear, for our lives are over.

Bassus was beautiful, but starving; although his sire had plenty of money. Accordingly he began by fleeing to Megara with one of his lovers so-called, and who was one of his pimps as well; for both the one lot and the other were in need of food and money for the journey. Then he fled thence and turned up in Syria. There the pretty youth met with a warm welcome from Euphrates, and from anyone else who like Euphrates was in need of the latest beauty, and was ready out of mere regard for that sage to ehoose for himself so odd an ideal.
LXXV.-To the people of Sardis.

Tine son of Alyattes was unable to save his own eity and had no resources left, though he was a king, and his name Croesus. Well, I would like to know what sort of lion you have put your trust in, that you should have embraced this truceless war among yourselves, children and youths all alike, full-grown men and aged, nay even maidens and women? One would suppose that yours was a city of the Erinyes rather than of Demeter. For this goddess is a lover of mankind, and I would know what all this spleen of yours is about.

THE TREATISE OF EUSEBIUS,

THE SON OF PAMIPHILUS, AGAINST THE LIFE OF APOLLONIUS OF TYANA WRITTEN BY PHILOSTRATUS, OCCASIONED BY THE PARALLEL DRAWN BY HIEROCLES BETWEEN HIM AND CHRIST

I

So then, my dear friend, you find worthy of no chap. little admiration the parallel ${ }^{1}$ which, embellished with many marvels, this author has drawn between the Most of the many man of Tyana and our own Saviour and teacher. For already against the rest of the contents of the "Lover of hass Origed Truth" (Philalethes), for so he has thought fit to entitle his work against us, it would be useless to take my stand at present ; because they are not his own, but have been pilfered in the most shameless mamer, not only I may say in respect of their ideas, hut even of their words and syllables, from other authorities. Not but what these parts also of his treatise call for their refutation in due season; but to all intents and purposes they have, even in advance of any special work that might be written in answer to them, been upset and exposed beforehand in a work which in ${ }^{1}$ Or perhaps we should render " the parallel this writer has paradoxically drawn," ete.

as many as eight books Origen eomposed against chap. the book whieh Celsus wrote and-even more boastfully thain the "Lover of Truth,"-entitled "True Reason." The work of Celsus is there subjected to an examination in an exhanstive manner and on the scale above mentioned by the author in question, who in his eomprehensive survey of all that anyone has said or will ever say on the same topic, has forestalled any solution of your difficulties which I could offer. To this work of Origen I must refer those who in good faith and with genuine "love of truth" desire aecurately to understand my own position. I will therefore ask you for the present to confine your attention to the comparison of Jesus Christ with Apollonius which is found in this treatise called the " Lover of Truth," without insisting on the neeessity of our meeting the rest of his arguments, for these are pilfered from other people. We may reasonably contine our attention for the present to the history of Apollonius, because Hierocles, of all the writers who have ever attaeked us, stands alone in selecting Apollonius, as he has recently done, for the purposes of comparison and contrast with our Saviour.

II

I need not say with what admiring approval he at- chap tributes his thaumaturgic feats not to the tricks of wizardry, but to a divine and mysterious wisdom; and IIicrocles he believes they were truly what he supposes them deifying of to have been, though he advanees no proof of this contention. certain other miracles of the kind." Then after an chap. interval he adds as follows: "Let us note however if how much better and more sensible is the view which we take of such matters, and explain the conception which we entertain of men gifted with remarkable powers." And thereupon after passing heedlessly by Aristeas of Procomnesus and Pythagoras as somewhat too old, he continues thus: " But in the time of our own ancestors, during the reign of Nero, there flourislied Apollonius of Tyana, who from mere boyhood when he became the priest in Acgae of Cilicia of Asclepius, the lover of mankind, worked any number of miracles, of which I will omit the greater number, and only mention a few." Then he begins at the begimning and enumerates the wonders worked by Apollonius, after which he continues in the following words: "What then is my reason for mentioning these facts? It was in order that you may be able to contrast our own accurate and well-established judgment on each point, with the easy credulity of the Christians. For whereas we reckon him who wrought such feats not a god, but only a man pleasing to the gods, they on the strength of a few miracles proclaim their Jesus a god." To this he adds after a little more the following remark: "And this point is also worth noticing, that whereas the tales of Jesus have been vamped up by Peter and Paul and a few others of the kind,-men who were liars and devoid of education and wizards,-the history of Apollonins was written by Maximus of Aegae, and by Damis the philosopher who lived constantly with him, and by Philostratus of Athens, men of the highest education, who out of respect for the truth and their love of mankind determined to give the publicity

Now Damis who spent so much of his time with criap. Apollonius was a native of Assyria, where for the first time, on his own soil, he came into contact with him; and he wrote an account of his intercourse Apollonius with the person in question from that time onwards. Maximus however wrote quite a short account of a portion only of his career. Philostratus, however, the Athenian, tells us that he collected all the aecounts that he found in circulation, using both the book of Maximus and that of Damis himself and of other authors; so lie compiled the most complete history of any of this person's life, begiming with his birth and ending with his death.

If then we may be permitted to contrast the chap. reckless and easy credulity which he goes out of his way to accuse us of, with the accurate and well- Inferiorfounded judgment on particular points of the Mishedby "Lover of Truth," let us ask at once, not which of them was the more divine nor in what capacity one worked more wondrous and numerous miracles than the other ; nor let us lay stress on the point that our Saviour and Lord Jesus Clirist was the only man of whom it was prophesied, thanks to their divine CHAP. inspiration, by Hebrew sages who lived far back iv thousands of years ago, that he should once come among mankind; nor on the fact that he converted to his own scheme of divine teaching so many people; nor that he formed a group of genuine and really sincere disciples, of whom almost without exaggeration it can be said that they were prepared to lay down their lives for his teaching at a moment's call ; nor that he alone established a school of sober and chaste living which has survived him all along ; nor that by his peeuliar divinity and virtue he saved the whole inhabited world, and still rallies to his divine teaching races from all sides by tens of thousands; nor that he is the only example of a teacher who, after being treated as an enemy for so many years, I might almost say, by all men, subjects and rulers alike, has at last trimmphed and shown himself far mightier, thanks to his divine and mysterious power, than the infidels who persecuted him so bitterly, those who in their time rebelled against his divine teaching being now easily won over by him, while the divine doctrine which he firmly laid down and handed on has come to prevail for ages without end all over the inhabited world; nor that even now he displays the virtue of his godlike might in the expulsion, by the mere invocation of his mysterious name, of sundry troublesome and evil demons which beset men's bodies and souls, as from our own experience we know to be the case. To look for such results in the ease of Apollonius, or even to ask about them, is absurd. So we will merely examine the work of Philostratus, and by close serutiny of it show that

Apollonius was not fit to be classed, I will not say cmap. among philosophers, but even among men of integrity and good sense, much less to be eompared with our Saviour Christ, so far as we ean depend on the work of a writer who, though aceording to the "Lover of Truth," he was highly educated, was in any ease no respecter of truth. For such is his deseription of Philostratus the Athenian among others. In this way we shall easily appreeiate the valne of the rest of the authorities, who though, aecording to him, they were most highly educated, yet never by actual sifting of the facts, established them with any aceuracy in the ease of Apollonius. For when we have thoroughly examined these faets, we shall no doubt obtain a elear demonstration of the solidity and, as he imagines to himself, of the accuracy in detail of the condemnation which the "Lover of Truth," who has at the same time taken possession of the supreme courts all over the province, passes on Christians, and at the same time of what they are pleased to call our reckless and facile credulity, for we are accounted by them to be mere foolish and deluded mortals.

opinion ; and I would like to set before you, if you char. ask it, my own personal opinion of him. If anyone wishes to class him with any philosopher you like, and to forget all the legends about him and not bore me with them, I am quite agreeable. Not so if anyone ventures, whether he be Damis the Assyrian, or Philostratus, or any other compiler or chronicler, to overleap the bounds of humanity and transcend philosophy, and while repelling the charge of wizardry in word, yet to bind it in act rather than in name upon the man, using the mask of Pythagorean discipline to disguise what he really was. For in that case his reputation for us as a philosopher will be gone, and we shall have an ass instead concealed in a lion's skin; and we shall detect in him a sophist in the truest sense, cadging for alms among the citics, and a wizard, if there ever was one, instead of a philosopher.

VI

Do you ask me what I mean and what are my chap. reasons for speaking thus? I will tell you. There are bounds of nature which prescribe and circumscribe the existence of the universe in respect of its beginnings and of its continuance and of its end, being limits and rules imposed on everything. By these this entire mechanism and edifice of the whole universe is constantly being brought to perfection ; and they are arranged by unbreakable laws and indissoluble bonds, and they guard and obserse the all-wise will of a Proridence which dispenses and disposes all things. Now no one can change or alter the place and order of anything that has been once arranged; and if anyone is so venturesome as to char. wish to transeend his limits, he is restraned from transgressing divine law by the rule and decree of nature. So it is that the fish that lives in the waters is unable in deffance of nature to change on to dry land and live there; and on the other hand the creature bred on dry land will not plunge into the waters, and embraee there any permanent repose or abode ; nor by any huge leap can any tenant of earth raise himself aloft into the air, from a desire to soar about with the eagles; and in turn, although of course the latter can alight upon the earth, by depressing and lowering their faculty of flight, and by relaxing the working of their wings, and renouncing the privilege of nature,-for this too is determined by the divine laws, namely that beings able to soar aloft are able to descend from on high,-yet the converse is not possible, so that the lowly habitant of earth should ever raise limself into the welkin. In this way then the mortal race of men, while provided with soul and body, is yet circmmseribed by divine bounds. Consequently lie can never traverse the air with his body, however much he scorns to linger upon the paths of earth, withont instantly paying the penalty of his folly; nor by spiritual exaltation ean he in his thinking attain to the unattanable, without falling back into the disease of melancholy.

It is wisest then for him, on the one hand to transport his body along the ground with the feet given him for the purpose, and on the other hand to sustain his soul with education and philosophy. But he may well pray that some one may come to help Possibility him from aloft from the paths of heaven, and reveal of a saviour himself to him as a teacher of the salvation that is to earth.

there. For the following is a valid example to use : chap. as it is right for the physieian to visit the sick, and for the teacher to accommodate himself to the pupil who is entering upon lis studies, and for a superior to quit his heights and condescend to the lowly, yet the converse is not right or possible. It follows then that there is no reason to prevent a divine nature, being beneficent and inclined to save and take providential care of things to come, from associating itself with men, for this is allowed also by the rule of divine providence; for according to Plato God was good, and no good being can ever feel any jealousy of any thing. It follows that the controller of this universe, being good, will not eare for our bodies alone, but much more for our souls, upon which he has conferred the privilege of immortality and free-will. On these then, as lord of the entire economy and of gifts of grace his bestowal of which will benefit our nature, he will, they being able to appreciate his bounty, bestow plenteously an illumination as it were of the light which streams from him, and will despatch the most intimate of his own messengers from time to time, for the salvation and succour of men here below. Of these messengers anyone so favoured by fortune, having eleansed his understanding and dissipated the mist of mortality, may well be deseribed as truly divine, and as earrying in his soul the image of some great god. Surely so great a personality will stir up the entire human race, and illuminate the world of mankind more brightly than the sum, and will leave the effects of his eternal divinity for the contemplation of future ages, in no less a degree affording an example of the divine and inspired nature than creations of artists

In what light then, this being so, do you envisage char. for us Apollonius, my good compiler? If as a divine being and superior to a philosopher, in a word as one superhuman in his nature, I would ask you to keep to this point of view throughout your history, and to point me oat effects wrought by his divinity enduring to this day. For surely it is an absurdity that the works of carpenters and builders should last on ever so long after the craftsmen are dead, and raise as it were an immortal monument to the memory of their constructive ability; and yet that a human character clained to be divine should, after shedding its glory upon mankind, finish in darkness its shortlived career, instead of displaying for ever its power and excellence. Instead of being so niggardly liberal to some one individual like Damis and to a few other short-lived men, it should surely make its coming among us the occasion of blessings, conferred on myriads not only of his contemporaries, but also of his posterity. 'This I ween is how the sages of old raised up earnest bands of disciples, who continued their tradition of moral excellence, sowing in men's hearts a spirit truly immortal of progress and reform. But enough of this. His hero is introduced to us Chap. as a divine man, who assumes from birth the guise and personality of a demon of the sea. For he says that to his mother when she was about to bear her child, there appeared the figure of a demon of the sea, namely l'roteus, who in the story of Homer ever changes his form. But she, in no way frightened, asked him what she would bring to birth; and he replied: "Myself." Then she asked: "And who are you? " "Proteus," he replied, " of Egypt." And then he writes about a certain meadow and about swans, that assisted the lady to bear her child, though without telling us whence he derived this particular ; for assuredly he does not attribute this story to Damis the Assyrian writer. But a little further on in the same history he represents Apollonius as using, in token of his being of a divine nature these very words to Damis himself: "I myself, my companion, understand all languages though I have learned none." And again he says to him: " Do not be surprised, for I know what men are thinking about, even when they are silcnt." And again in the temple of Asclepius he was much honoured by the god, and is said to , have possessed a certain natural gift of preseience, which he did not aequire by learning, from very childhood. We learn, in a word, that he was born superior to mankind in general, and so he is described from the first moment cinar. of his birth throughout his history. Anyhow on one occasion after he had loosed himself from his bonds, his historian adds the remark: "Then Damis declares he for the first time clearly understood the nature of Apollonius, that it was divine and superior to humanity. For without offering any sacrifice,-for how could he offer one in the prison -and without offering any prayer, without a single word, he just laughed at his fetters." And at the end of the book ${ }^{1}$ we learn that his grave was nowhere to be found on earth; but that he went to heaven in his physical body accompanied by hymos and dances. Naturally if he was so great as he is described in the above, he may be said "to have wooed philosophy in a more divine manner than Pythagoras, or Empedocles, or Plato." For these reasons we must surely class the man among the gods.

Well, we will not grudge him his natural and self- chirp. taught gift of understanding all languages. But if ix he possessed it, why was he taken to a school-master, If $A \mathrm{~A}^{(1, y)}$ and if he had never learnt any language whatever, divine why why does his historian malign him and declare that, di.1 he newd not by nature, but by dint of close study and application, he acquired the Attic dialect? For he tells us outright "that as he advanced in youth he displayed a knowledge of letters and great power of memory, and force of application, and that he spoke the Attic dialect." We also learn that "when he reached his fourteenth year his father took him to Tarsus, to Euthydemus of Phoenicia, who was a good ${ }^{1}$ Or render : "And at death we," etc.

rhetor, and gave him his education, while Apollonius char. clung to his teacher." We further learn that "he ix had as fellow-students members of the school of Plato and of Chrysippus and members of the Peripatetic set. That he also diligently listened to the doctrines of Epicurus, because he did not despise even them, though he grasped the teachings of Pythagoras with a certain indescribable wisdom." So varied was the education of one who had never learnt any language, and who by his divine power anticipated "the thoughts of men even when they are silent."

X

And after an interval our author again expresses char. his admiration at the ease with which Apollonins understood the language of animals, and he goes on to tell us the following: "And moreover he acquired an understanding of the language of animals; and he learnt this, too, in the course of his travels through Arabia, where the inhabitants best know this language and practise it. For the Arabians have a way of understanding without difficulty swans and other birds when they presage the future in the same way as oracles. And they get to understand the dumb animals by eating, so they say, some of them the heart and others the liver of dragons." In this instance, then, it seems anyhow to have been the case that the Pythagorean who abstained from animal food and could not even bring himself to sacrifice to the gods, devoured the heart and liver of dragons, in order to participate in a form of wisdom that was in vogue among the Arabs. After learning under such masters, how could he attain to their cuap. accomplishments otherwise than by imitating their $X$ example? We must therefore and to the teachers whom we have already emmorated the sages of Arabia who taught him his knowledge of augury; and this no doubt inspired him subsequently to foretell what the sparrow meant when he called his fellows to a meal, and so to impress the bystanders with the idea that he had worked a mighty miracle. And again when he came to converse with Vardan the Babylonian king, it is related that he addressed him as follows: "My system of wisdon is that of Pytha- He progoras, a man of Samos, who taught me to worship the fessed the gods in this way and to recognize them, whether pythaguras they are seen or unseen, and to be regular in converse with the gods." this to be true of him, seeing that Pythagoras CHAP. himself has left no scripture of the kind, nor any secret writings, such that we can even suspect him to have had such resources at his disposal? As for his teacher of the Pythagorean philosophy, it is testified that he was in no way better than the Epicureans by Philostratus himself, who speaks of him as follows: "He had as a teacher of the system of Pythagoras not a very good man, nor one who put his philosoply into practice; for he was the slave of his belly and his desires and modelled his life on that of Epicurus. And this man was Euxenus of Heraclea in Pontus. But he had a good acquaintance with the tenets of Pythagoras, just as birds have of what they learn to say from men." What ridiculous nonsense to pretend that He kearned Apollonius can have derived from this man, his gift of conversing with the gods. But let us for the Pythagoras moment admit that there were other expounders of the system from whom he may have learned, although the author anyhow gives no hint of any such thing. Still we must ask: was there then ever any one of these teachers that professed either to know himself, by having learnt from Pythagoras personally, or to teach others, how to recognize and frequent in their conversations gods, whether seen or unseen? Why, even the famous Plato, although more than anyone else he shared in the philosophy of Pythagoras, and Archytas too, and Philolaus the one man who has handed down to us in writing the conversations of Pythagoras, and any others who were disciples of the philosopher and have handed down to his posterity his opinions and tenets in writing,-none of these ever boasted of any such form of wisdom. It follows then that he learnt these things not from Pythagoras, but from other cirap sources ; and with a wilful affectation of solemnity XI he only labels limself with the philosopher's name. But admitting, thongh it is against all probability, that he is not lying, but telling the truth, we are still at a loss to know, how he can pretend to have acquired this lore from the Samian himself above mentioned, inasmuch as the latter deceased some thousand years before him. Therefore we must reckon among the Arabians this teacher also who communicated to him a knowledge of the gods of so mysterious character as he imagines this to be. If then he was of a divine nature, it follows that the story of his teaehers is a pure fietion. On the other hand if the story was true, then the legend was false, and the allegation in the book that he was divine is devoid of all truth.

compliment to a good man; for I could still bring char. myself to accept them, as long as they are not bewilderingly wonderful and full of nonsense. I do not therefore mind the author telling us that Apollonius was of an ancient family and lineally descended from the first settlers, and was rich, if it were so, beyond all other people of that region; and that when he was young he not only had the distinguished teachers mentioned, but, if he likes, I will allow that he became himself their teacher and master in learning. I grant too, in addition, that he was skilful in ordinary matters, and so was able by giving the best of advice to rid of his malady one who had come to the temple of Asclepius in order to be healed. For we read that he suggested to a man afflicted with dropsy a régime of abstinence well suited to cure his disease, and in that way restored him to health : and so far we must needs commend the youthful Apollonius for his good sense. On another occasion he very properly excluded from the temple a man who was notorious for his wickedness, although he was prepared to offer the most expensive sacrifices, for he represents the man in question as the richest and most distinguished of all the people of his region. Nor would anyone object to his being classed among the temperate, inasmuch as he repelled with insults a lover who designed to corrupt his youth, and also, as the narrative informs us, kept himself throughout pure of intercourse with women.

We can also believe the story of his keeping silence for five years in the spirit of Pythagoras; and the way moreover in which he accompliched this vow of silence was praiseworthy. All this and the like

The story of the takes him on his travels and brings him from Persia seom, hoo to India. He next shows a want of grood taste by stratus relating, as if it were a miracle, how Apollonius and his companions saw some sort of demon, to which he gives the name of Empusa, along the road, and of how they drove it away by dint of abuse and bad words. And we learn that when some animals were offered them for food, he told Damis that he was quite willing to allow him and his companions to eat the flesh, for as far as he could see their abstinence from meat had in no way advanced their moral development, though in his own case it was imposed by the philosophic profession he had made in childhood. And yet is it not incredible to anyone that he should not have hindered Damis, as his best friend, and as the only diseiple and follower of his life that he had, and the

In the next place I would have you notice what chap. sort of samples of truth are set before us by this メッ Philostratus to whose truthfumess Hierocles the selfstyled Lover of Truth bears witness. For we are told that when Apollonins was among the Indians, he employed an interpreter, and through him held the conversation with Phraotes, for that was the name of the king of the Indians. Thus he, who just before, aceording to Philostratus, had an understanding of all languages, now on the contrary, according to the same witness, is in need of an interpreter. And again, he who read the thoughts of men, and almost like their god Apollo "Understood the dumb and heard him who spake not" has to ask, by means of an interpreter, what was the king's way of life, and he asks him to supply him with a guide on his journey to the Brahmans. And after an interval the other, who is king of the Indians, and a barbarian to boot, gets rid of the interpreter, and addresses Apollonius in Greek ; and speaking in that language details to him his education and

On the contrary he is astonished to find the ciar. Indian talking Greek, as Philostratus consistently, it would seem, with himself, tells us in his book. For Finclings how could he be astonished thereat, unless he had regarded him as a barbarian? And in spite of his $A_{\text {sicicica of of }}^{\text {situs }}$ having admired him for what he was, he could never have expected him to talk Greek. In the sequel, as if he were astonished at some exhibition of the miraculous and were still unable to explain it, Apollonius says: "Tell me, O king, how you came to have such facility in the Greek tongue? And where did you get hereabouts the philosophy you possess? For I do not think that you can say you owe it to teachers anyhow, for it is not likely that the Indians have any teachers of this." Such are the wonderful utterances to which one, whose prescience included everything, gives vent; and the king answers them by saying that he had had teachers, and he tells him who they were, and relates all the partieulars of his own history on his father's side.

Next we are told that the Indian had to judge between certain parties about a treasure which had been honted up in a field, the question at issue being whether this field ought to be assigned to the seller or buyer of the place. Our supreme philosopher and darling of heaven is asked his opinion, and awards it to the purchaser, assigning his reason in these words:

"That the gods would never have deprived the one of chap. the land, if he had not been a bad man; nor would XV ever have given the other riches under the soil, unless he had been better than the seller." We must conclude then, if we are to believe him, that men who are comfortably off and richer than their neighbours, are to be esteemed thrice happy and beloved of the gods, even though they should be the most shameless and abandoned of mankind; on the other hand only the poorest, say, even a Socrates, or a Diogenes, or the famous Pythagoras himself, or any other of the most temperate and farest-minded of men, are to be esteemed ill-starred wretches. For if one follows the reasoning here used, one must allow that on its showing the gods would never have deprived the poor, that is to say, the very men who excel others, if judged by the standard of philosophy, even of a bare living and of the necessities of life, muless they had been utterly vile in character, and at the same time they have endowed those who are abandoned in their character with a plenty even of things that were not necessary to them, unless they proved themselves better than the others just mentioned; from which the absurdity of the conclusion is manifest to everyone.

It is anyhow worth our while to examine these, because this self-styled lover of truth has not serupled to fasten on ourselves a eharge of reckless eredulity and levity of character, while claiming for himselfi and for those like him an accurate judgment, well based on an understanding of the fact. Note then the sort of miracles on whieh he prides himself, when he prefers Philostratus to our own divine evangelists, on the ground that he was not only a most highly edueated man, but most attentive to the truth.

XVII

To begin with then, oa the way to the Brammans, XHAP Philostratus introduces us to a lady who met Apol- Ridicules lonius, and who, from ber head down to her loins, of the the was wholly white in colour, while the rest of her Brahmans person was black. The momitains again, as they went forward on the road to the Brahmans, were planted with pepper trees, and the apes cultivated the same; and then there were certain dragons of extraordinary size, from whose heads were thrown off sparks of fire, and if you slew one of them, he says that you found marvellous stones upon the head rivalling the gem of Gyges, as mentioned in Plato. And all this was before they reached the hill on which the Brahmans lived. And when they reached this, we read that they saw there a well of sandarac, full of wonderful water, and hard by a crater of fire, from whieh there arose a lead-coloured flame; and there were two jars there of black stone, the one of cuap. which contaned rain, and the other winds, from xin which the Bralmans supply such people of the country as they are pleased to favour. Besides this they found among them images of Athene Polias and of Apollo Pythius, and of Dionysus of the Lake and of certain other Hellenic gods. And the master of them all was named larchas, and they saw him sitting on a very lofty throne in a state of pomp that was far from philosophie, but rather appropriate to a satrap. And this throne was made of black bronze and was decorated with golden images, such as we might of course expect philosophers to fabricate when they take to working like base mechanics at forge and steel, even if they do not like conjurers make their handiwork to move by itself. But the thrones upon which the rest of them, who were inferior teachers to him, were sitting, were, he says, of bronze, but not incised and not so high. For I suppose they eould not help bestowing upon the teacher of so divine a philosophy the privilege of having images and gold on his throne, just as if he were a tyrant.

And we are told that Iarchas, the moment he saw cinsp. Apollonins, addressed him by name in the Greck tongue, and asked him for the letter which he Prescience brought from Phraotes, for he had already received of tarchas this by dint of his foreknowledge ; and by way of parading the inspired character of his prescience, he told him before he set eyes on the epistle, that it was one letter short, namely of a delta; and he began at once in a vulgar manner in that very first inter- cmar. view, like a man who has got wealth for the first XVAI time and does not know how to use it, to show off his superiority as a seer, by rumning off the names of Apollonins' father and mother, and telling him all about his family and upbringing and education, and about his periodical voyages abroad, and about his journey thither to himself, and about what he had done himself or said to his companions on the road. And next this wonderful author tells us that the Brahmans, after anointing themselves together with Apollonius with an amber-like drug, took a bath, and then standing round as if in chorus, struck the earth with their staves, and the earth arched itself up and elevated them some two cubits into the air, so that they stood there levitated up in the air itself for some considerable length of time. And he relates that they drew down fire from the sun without any effort on their part and whenever they chose. And the miracle-monger adds another marvel to these, when he tells that there were four tripods like those of Pytho which wheeled themselves forth, moving of their own accord; and he goes so far as to compare these to the tripods in Homer, and he says that there were set upon them cup-bearers to serve in the banquet, four in number and made of bronze. And in addition he tells us that the earth too strewed grass beneath them of her own accord and masked. And of these tripods two, he siys, ran with wine, and of the other two, the one supplied hot water and the other cold. And the cup-bearers of bronze drew for the guests in due mixture both the wine and the water, and pushed round the cups in a circle, just as they are handed round in a symposium.

chaff them about their dignity? Why, when Apol-cirap. lonius asked them whom they considered themselves to be, "Gods," answered larehas; who, I suppose The peers in his quality as god, as little as could be in the style of philosopher, save the mark, nay, surely betraying an equally seant respeet for the dignity of the god whom he professed himself to be, set the example of drinking to his fellow-banqueters by stooping down over the bowl, whieh, as our author is eareful to tell us, supplied plenty of drink for all of them, and refreshed itsclf, as do holy and mysterions wells for those who fill their pitehers from them.

After this there was general conversation and cmap. some serious disenssion among the philosophers, in the course of which larchas explained that his own soul had once been in the body of another man who was a king, and that in that state he had performed this and that exploit; while $A$ pollonius told them that he had once been the pilot of a ship in Eqypt, and had accomplished all sorts of exploits which he enumerated to them. Then they put questions to each other, and received answers, which in the name of wisdom have scant title to be recorded at all. Thus we learn that Apollonius asked if they had any golden water among them. What a clever and marvellous question! And he also asked about men who live moderground, and abont others called pigmies, and shadow-footed men, and he asked if they had among them a four-footed animal called a martichora, which has a head like that of a man, but

After that Philostratus deseribed a wool which cimap. the earth grew for them to supply material for their dress, from which we must infer that these philosophers plied the loom and oceupied themselves with spinning wool in order to make their raiment, for we do not hear of any woman being smuggled into their community ; but perhaps he means that by a miracle the wool grew of its own initiative into their sacred garments. And we hear that each of them carried a staff and a ring which was imbued with mysterious power. There follow a series of miraculous performances on the part of the Bralman, -how for example he reealled to his senses by means of a letter one who was possessed with a demon, how by stroking a man who was lame he Euschins healed his dislocated hip, how he vouchsafed to restore a man's hand that was withered, and to a blind man gave sight. the truth of his earlier tales, I refer to those of cuap. lightning and wind kept in jars, and of tripods of xxir stone walking about of their own accord and of cupbearers of bronze passing round the cups in a circle, fully betrays and exposes the mythical charaeter of everything else which he has to tell us. Philostratus moreover declares that 1 amis related how carefully Apollonius excluded himself from being present at the philosophical sessions which he held with Iarchas; and he says that Apollonins was given by the latter seven rings which were called after the stars, and that he wore these one by one upon the days respectively called by their names.
'Though we learn this mueh on this oceasion from a gentleman who is esteemed by the Lover of Truth to have had a respect for facts, further on in his book, as if by way of condemning the wizardry of the Brahmans, and as if he was anxious to acquit Apollonius of the charge of having dabbled therein, he adds the following remark, which I repeat textually: "But when he saw among the Indians the tripods and the cup-bearers and the other figures which I have said entered of their own aecord, he did not either ask how they were contrived, or desire to learn; but although he praised them, he disclaimed any wish to imitate them." And how, my good fellow, did he disclaim any wish of the kind? Is this the man who was eareful to exclude Damis from the philosophieal seances he held with them, and who thought it his duty to eonceal from his only companion all that he had done in those seanees? And how could he have disclaimed any wish to imitate them when he accepted the seven rings named after the stars, and held it needful to wear these ali through the rest of his life upon the days severally named after cmar. them, and that although, as you say yourself, they xxh had a secret power in them. Even if we grant that he did not aspire to imitate these inventions, it is clear that his disclaimer was not due to their being uncanny. How then could he praise things which he disdained to imitate? If he praised them, as being divinely operated, why did he not imitate things so praiseworthy? To crown all, on his return after he had stayed with them, we learn that he arrived with his companions at the country of the Oritae, where he found the rocks and the sand and the dust which the rivers bring down to the sea, all alike made of bronze.

XXIII

All this is contained in the third book of Philostratus, and let us now pass on to those which follow. We learn that when he had returned from the The precomntry of the Indians to the land of Mellas, the Apohmina gods themselves proclaimed him to be the companion of the gods, inasmuch as they sent on to him the sick to be healed. And, indeed, as if his visit to the Arabs and to the Magi and to the Indians had turned him into some miraculous and divine being, our author, now that he has got him home again, plunges straight into a lengthy description of his miracles. And yet one might fairly argue that if he had been of a diviner than merely hman nature, then he ought long before, and not only now, after entering into relation with other teachers, to have begun his career of wonder-working; and it was superfluons for him to take so much trouble to CHAP. acquire the multifarious lore of Arabs and of Magi Xxin and of lndians, if he was really what the initial assumption made by Philostratus assumes him to have been. But anyhow, according to this trathloving author, we have now got him back again, ready to show off the wisdem which he has acçuired from so great masters ; and as one fresh from Arabia and equipped with the science of augury in vogue among the inhabitants of that country, he begins by interpreting to the bystanders what the sparrow wanted and intended when it summoned its fellows to their dinner. Next he has a presentiment of the plague in Ephesus, and warns the citizens of what is coming. And he himself sets before us in his Apology to Domitian the explanation of this presentiment. For when the latter asked him what was his prediction, he answered: "Because, my prince, I use a very light diet, I was the first to seent the danger."

And then he relates a third miracle of him, Story in the which was nothing less than that of his averting Elheriun the plague. Although the anthor has been eareful not to include this story in the final counts retained against Apollonius, probably because it was impossible for him to rebut a charge founded upon it by any defence which he could offer, we nevertheless will, if yon will allow us, publish the story and give it full publicity, because our doing so will render needless any further criticism of it. For if anybody fects the shadow of doubt about the matter, the very mamer in which the story is told will convince him that fraud and makebelieve was in this case everything, and that if ever anything reeked of wizardry this did. For he rusp. pretends that the plague was seen in the form of xxin an aged man, a beggar and dressed in rags; who, when Apollonius ordered the mol to stone him, began by shooting fire from his eyes, but afterwards, when he had been orerwhehmed by the stones thrown at him, he appeared as a dog aill erushed and vomiting foam, as mad dogs do. And he writes that Apollonius mentioned this episode also in the defence he addressed to the autocrat Domitian, as follows: "For the form of the plague-and it resembled an aged beggar-was both seen by me, and when I saw it I overeame it, not by staying the course of the disease, but by utterly destroying it." Who, I would ask, after reading this would not langh heartily at the miricle-mongering of this thaumaturge? For we learn that the nature of the plague was a living creature and as such exposed at once to the eyes of the bystanders and to the showers of stones they hurled at it, and that it was crushed by men, and vomited foam, when all the time a plague is nothing in the world but a corruption and vitiation of the atmosphere, the circumambient air being changed into a morbid condition composed of noxious and evil exhalations, as medieal theory teaehes us. And on other grounds, too, this story of the phantom plague ean be exploded; for the story tells us that it only afficted the city of Ephesus, and did not risit the neighbouring populations; and how could this not have been the case, if the surrounding atmosphere had undergone ritiation? for the infection could not have been confined to one spot, nor have beset the air of Ephesus alone.

Tue fourth wonder which he relates is how the chap. soul of Achilles appeared close by his own sepulchre, XXiv dressed the first time in a tunic, and five enbits ligh, of Achilles and subsequently growing till it was twelve eubits in stature, and aceusing the Thessalians for not continuing aecording to custom to offer him the due funeral rites, and furthermore still nursing wrath against the Trojans for the wongs which they had committed against him, and bidding Apollonius ask him questions on five topics, such as he himself might desire to learn about, and the Fates permit him to know of. We next learn that the omniscient one, who boasted of his prescience of future events, was still ignorant of whether Aehilles had been buried, and of whether the Muses and Nereids had bestowed their dirges upon him. And accordingly he asked Aehilles about these matters, and encuires most earnestly whether Polyxena had been slain over his tomb, and whether Helen had really come to Proy, -questions surely of a most solemm kind, and sueh as to stimulate others to lead the philosophical life of the hero, besides being in themselves of mueh importanee. Thereupon he falls to wondering if there had ever been among the Hellenes so many heroes all at one time, and whether Palamedes had ever reached Troy. Surely it was disgraeeful in the extreme that one who was the companion of gods, whether seen or unseen, should know so little of such matters as to need to ask questions again and again about them? author intentionally gives a frigid turn to his ques- CHAP. tions, in order to avert the suspicion of his having XXiv irreligiously pryed into the secrets of magic. For we may notice he represents him as arguing in his Apology that there was no colour of necromancy in the manner in which the spectre appeared to him, and says: "For without digging any trench like Odyssens, and without tempting the souls of the dead with the blood of lambs, I mamaged to converse with Achilles, merely by using the prayers which the Indians declare we ought to make use of in addressing heroes." 'This is how Apollonius now brags to his companion, although our author testifies that he had learned nothing from the Indians nor felt attracted by their wisdom.

What then is the reason, my good fellow, sup- chap. posing that there was no devilish curiosity here at XXV work, why he would not allow Damis, whom you Eusehius admit to have been his sole and genuine and single that an companion, to share with him in this marvellons evil spirit vision and interview? And why, too, was he not Apollonius able to do all this by daytime, instead of doing it in the dead of night and alone? Why, too, did the mere cry of the cocks drive away the soul of the hero? For he says, " It vanished with a mild flash of lightning, for indeed the cocks were already beginning to crow." I cannot but think that evil demons would have found such an hour seasonable and appropriate for their devilish interviews, rather than the soul of a hero which, having been freed from the crass matter of the body, must nccessarily be good cuap. and unsullied. In any ease the demon conjured up xxy on this occasion is represented as of a maliguant and envious disposition, both rancorous and mean in humour. For how else can we characterise one who drove away Antisthenes, a poor youth so serious that he was endeavouring to become a follower of the philosopher Apollonius? For Achilles insists that he shall not initiate him in his philosophy, and he adds the reason: "For," says he, " he is too much of a descendant of Priam, and the praise of Hector is never out of his mouth." And how could he be other than rancorous and mean, if he was wrath with the Thessalians for not sacrificing to him, and still refused to be reconciled to the Trojans, because thousands of years before they had simned against him, and that although the latter were continually sacrifieing and pouring out libations to him? The only exception is that he ordered Apollonius to restore the tomb of Palamedes, which together with his statue had fallen into decay.

Tue fifth and sixth miracles however in this book do not stand in need of much argument and Xxis discussion, so thoroughly do they prove our writer's easy eredulity. ealls by no other names than those of Empusa and criap. Lamia. As for the damsel whom he is said subsequently to have brought back again to life in The girl Rome after she had dief, the story clearly impressed Philostratus himself as being extremely ineredible, and we may safely reject it. Anyhow he hesitates and doubts, whether after all a spark of life might have not lingered on in the girl mmoticed by her attendants. For he says that according to report "it was raining at the time, and a vapour exhaled from the face of the girl." Anyhow if such a miracle had really been wrought in Rome itself, it could not have escaped the notice first of the emperor and after him of his subordinate magistrates, and least of all of the philosopher Euphrates who at the time was in the country and was staying in Rome, who indeed, as we learn later on, is related to have launched against Apollonius the accusation of being no other than a wizard. It would certainly too, had it actually occurred, have been included by the accuser among the other eharges levelled against him. Well, just these and no more are the more particular and speeial aehievements of Apollonius, although there are a myriad other cases in the book in which his sooth-siyings and prophecies are set down to his gift of foreknowledge; and we learn that at Athens, when he desired to be initiated in the Eleusinian mysteries, the priest there would not admit him, and declared that he would never initiate a wizard nor throw open the Eleusinian mysteries to a man who was addicted to impure rites. We also hear about a lewd fellow who went begging about Rome, rehearsing the songs of Nero on his lyre for pay; and we are told that Sucn are the contents of the fourth book, and in chap. the fifth book of his history, after a few remarks XXVII about his gift of prescience, our author is so lost in of wizardiy admiration as to add the following remark, which I true repeat textually. "That then he was enabled to make such forecasts by some divine impulse, and that it is no sound inference to suppose, as some people do, that Apollonius was a wizard, is clear from what I have said. But let us consider the following facts: wizards, whom for my part I reckon to be the most unfortunate of mankind, claim to alter the course of destiny, either by tormenting the ghosts whom they encounter, or by means of barbaric sacrifices, or by means of certain incantations or anointings. But Apollonius himself submitted to the decrees of the Fates, and foretold that they must nceds come to pass; and his forcknowledge was not due to wizardry, but derived from what the gods revealed to him. And when among the Indians he beheld their tripods, and their dumb waiters and other automata which I described as entering the room of their own accord, he neither asked how they were contrised, nor wished to learn. He only, praised them, but did not aspire to imitate them." Such a passage as the above clearly exhibits in the light of wizards the famous philosophers of India.

For notice that when he is arguing about wizards, he char. mentions them too and says that their marvels were ${ }^{\text {xxpin }}$ cleverly contrived indeed, but that his hero held himself carefully aloof from such their contrivances, on the ground that they were not moral. If therefore we find Apolloning ealling these Indians grods, and emrolling himself as their disciple, we have no alternative but to bring him also under the imputation under which his teachers lay. And aecordingly he is introdueed as saying among the so-called Naked sages of the Egyptians, the following,-I quote his very words: "It is then not mreasonable on my part, I think, to have yielded myself to a philosophy so highly elaborated, to a philosophy which, if I may use a metaphor from the stage, the Indians mount, as it deserved to be mounted, upon a lofty and divine mechanism before they wheel it out upon the stage. And that I was right to admire them, and that I am right in considering them wise and blessed, it is now time to learn." And after a little he says: "For they are not only gods, but are adorned with all the gifts of the Pythian prophetess." And he is introduced to Domitian with these words on his lips: "What war have you with Iarchas or with Phraotes, both of them Indians, whom I consider to be the only men that are really gods and that deserve this appellation?" And there are other passages also in which this history of Philostratus recognises the persons above mentioned as gods and teachers of the sage, and admits him to have accepted rings from them, but now he forgets all about it, and does not see that in maligning the teachers, he maligns the disciple.

And a little lower down in the book he cinsp. brings a flute-player upon the stage, and he relates Xximi at length how Apollonias delivered himself with Anollonins great gravity of long essays upon the different modes maker of playing the flute, as if it were the most important and clever of the sciences. And he relates how the Emperor Vespasian offered him prayers just as if he were a god, for we learn that Vespasian said in a tone of prayer: "Do thou make me Emperor," whereupon Apollonius answered: "I have made you so." What else can anyone do but loathe this atterance for its boastfulness, so nearly does it approach downright madness, for one who was the pilot of a ship in Egypt to boast of being himself a god already and a maker of kings? Whereupon Vespasian answered: "I throw my doors open wide to wise men." What can we think of the prescience of our hero? On this oeeasion Euphrates is both good and wise, hecause he has not yet quarrelled with him; but when he has,-and before long he is going to,-then see how the same person writes to the Emperor Domitian: "And yet if you want to know how much a philosopher may attain by flattery of the mighty you have only to look it the case of Euphrates. For in his case why do I speak of wealth from that source? Why, he has perfect fountains of wealth, and already at the banks he discusses prices as a merehant might or a huckster, or a tax-gatherer or a low moner-changer; for all these rôles are his if there is anything to buy or sell. And he clings like a limpet to the doors of the mighty, and you see him standing at them more regularly than any doorkeeper would do; indeed he is often canght by the doorkeepers, just as greedy dogs might be. But he never yet bestowed a farthing on a philosopher, but he walls up all his wealth within his house; only supporting this Egyptian out of other people's money, and sharpening his tongue against me, when it ought to be cut out. Howerer I will leave Euphrates to yourself: for unless you approve of flatterers, you will find the fellow worse than I represent him." Surely one who first bears witness to Vespasian the father that Euphrates is a wise and good man, and then inveighs against him in this style to his son, is openly consicted of praising and blaming the same person. Was it then the case chap. that this man, who was endowed with knowledge of XXIX the future, did not know what the character of Euphrates was, nor what it was going to be: For it is not now the first time, but already in the case of Vespasian himself he is inclined to accuse him of being the worst of characters. How then is it that he recommended such a person to the sovereign so warmly, that in consequence of his recommendation the latter threw open wide the doors of his palace to him? Why, is it not clear to a blind man, as they say, that in the matter of foreknowledge the fellow is traduced by his own historian ; though on other ground he might be regarded as an honest man, if we could suppose that originally, and before he learned by experience, he wished to gain access to the palace as freely for his friends, Euphrates included, as for himself, but was afterwards moved by his quarrel to use such language of him. I have no wish in thus arguing to accuse Apollonius of having falsely blamed Euphrates, who was the most distinguished philosopher of all the men of his age, so much so that his praises are still on the lips of students of philosophy. Not but what anyone who was minded to do so could take this as a palmary example of slander and back-biting and use it against Apollonius. For if Euphrates be really by their admission a leader in all philosophy, it is open to us to aceuse his rival of censoriousness, when he attacks him for his monstrous conduct ; and to suppose that the latter contracted his evil repritation because he was thus attacked by him for pursuing, that was the accusation,-a life so little satisfactory to a philosopher.

THE TREATISE OF EUSEBIUS

In the sixth book our story-teller resumes his tale cmar. of miracles; for he brings his hero, together with his companions, on camel-back to see those whom he the wisit to calls the Naked philosophers of Egypt. Here then sars of at the bidding of one of these sages an elm-tree, we Etionia are told, spoke to Apollonius in an articulate but feminine voice, and this is the sort of thing which the Lover of Truth expects us to believe. Then he has a story of pigmies who live on the other side of their country and of man-eaters and of shadowfooted men and of a satyr whom Apollonius made drunk. From these sages $\Lambda$ pollonius is brought back again to Hellas, where he renews his interviews and his prophesies to Titus. Then we hear about a youth who was bitten by a mad dog. He is rescued from his distress by Apollonius, who forthwith proeeeds to divine whose soul it was that the dog haid inside him ; and we learn that it was that of Amasis, a former king of Egypt, for the sage's humanity extended to dogs. ${ }^{1}$

XXXI

These then are the achievements which preceded cimp. his accusation, and it behoves us to notice through- Xxxi out the treatise that, even if we admit the author to tell the truth in his stories of miracles, he yet clearly shows that they were severally performed by Apoilonius with the co-operation of a demon. For his evil demons ${ }^{1}$ Eusebins confuses the mad doy of YI 43 with the tame lion of V 42.

presentiment of the plague, though it might not char. seem to be magieal and uncanny, if he owed it, Xxxi as he himself said, to the lightness and purity of his diet, yet might quite as well have been a premonition imparted to him in intercourse with a demon. For though the other stories of his having grasped and foretold the future by virtue of his preseience can be refuted by a thousand arguments which Philostratus' own text supplies, nevertheless, if we allow this particular story to be true, I should eertainly say that his apprehension of futurity was anyhow in some eases, though it was not so in all, due to some uncamy contrivance of a demon that was his familiar. This is clearly proved by the fact that he did not retain his gift of foreknowledge uniformly and in all eases; but was at fault in most eases, and had through ignorance to make enquiries, as he would not have needed to do, if he had been endowed with divine power and virtue. And the very cessation of the plague, according to the particular turn which was given to the drama, has already been shown to have been a delusion and nothing more. Moreover, the soul of Achilles should not have been lingering about his own monument, quitting the Islands of the Blest and the places of repose, as people would probably say. In this case too it was surely a demon that appeared to Apollonius and in whose presence he found himself? Then again the licentious youth was clearly the victim of an indwelling demon ; and both it and the Empusa and the Lamia which is said to have played off its mad pranks on Menippus, were probably driven out by hinn with the help of a more important demon; the same is true also of the youth who had been driven out of chap. his mind by the mad dog ; and the firmzied dog Xxxi itself was restored to its senses by the same method. You must then, as I said, regard the whole series of mirackes wrought by him, as having been accomplished through a ministry of demons; for the resuscitation of the girl must be divested of any miraculous character, if she was really alive all the time and still bore in herself a vital spark, as the author says, and if a vapour rose orer her face. Ch. 29 For it is impossible, as 1 said before, that such a miracle should have been passed over in silence in Rome itself, if it happened when the sovereign was close by.

XXXII

There are a thousand other examples then which chap. we may select from the same books, where the Xxxin narrative refutes itself by its very incongruities, so enabling us to detect its mythical and miraclemongering character. At the same time we need not devote too much attention and study to the gentleman's eareer, seeing that those of our contemporaries among whom his memory survives at all, are so far from classing him among divine and extraordinary and wonderful beings, that they do not even rank him among philosophers. 'This being so, let us be content with the remarks we have made, and proceed to consider the seventh book of his history.

Here then we find him categorically accused of chap. being a wizard. Next we find Demetrius the philo- xixin sopher trying to dissuade him from soing on to Rome, and Apollonius rejects his advice in words which are full of vulgar effrontery and fulsome praise of himself. They are as follows: "But I know most human affairs, seeing that I know everything; at the same time $I$ reserve $m y$ knowledge partly for good men, partly for the wise, partly for myself, partly for the gods." And yet the man who in these words brags about his omniscience, before he goes much further is accused by the text itself of an ignorance in cortain matters. Next Apollonius disguises Danis, for the latter conceals the fact of his being a philosopher because he is afraid of death. Listen then to the words in which our author apologises for him: "This was the reason then of Damis' putting off his Pythagorean dress. For he says that it was not cowardice that led him to make the change, nor regret at having worn it; but he did it becanse the device recommended itself as suggested by the expedience of the noment."

After this Philostratus sets forth four comits of cuar. the indictment which he imagines it will be easy xxxiv for his hero to defend himself from, and he admits that he has collected these out of a great many others. Of these the first was: What induced him to wear a different robe from everybody else? and the rmap. second: Why was it that men esteemed him to be a $\quad$ xxiv god? the third, How had he managed to predict the plague to the Ephesians? and last of all: In whose behoof had he gone to a certain field and cut up the Arcadian boy? To meet these then he alleges Apollonius to have written an apology. But first of all he relates how he was cast into prison, and the minacle which he wrought there. For we hear that Damis was extremely downcast at the misfortunes which he imagined had bofallen his teacher ; whereupon Apollonius showed him his leg released without effort from the chain. 'Then having thas alleviated his follower's grief, he put his font back again into its former condition and habit. After that he was bronght to trial before the Emperor Domitian, and we read that he was acpuitted on the charges, and that after being so acquitted he, with curious inopportmeness, as it seems to me, cried ont in the court exactly as follows : "Accord me too, if you will, an opportunity to speak; but if not, then send someone to take my body, for my soul you camot take. Nay you cannot even take my body, 'for thon shalt not slay me, since I tell thee I am not mortal.", And then after this famous utterance, we are told that he vanished from the court, and this is the conclusion of the whole drama.

XXXV

Now in regard to the miracle in the prison, which cuAp. it seems was an illusion, imposed on the eyes of XXXV Damis by the familiar demon, our author adds the following remark; " Damis says that it was then for cras. the first time that he truly understood the nature of XxSV Apollonius, to wit that it was divine and superhuman; for without offering any sacrifice,-and how indeed in prison could he have offered one:-and without a single prayer, without even a word, he quietly langhed at the fetters, and then inserting his leg in them afresh, he comported himself like any other prisoner." I should be the last to accuse his pupil of being a dull-witted man, because, after being with him all his life, and winessing him work miracles by means of certain momny agencies, he failed to regard him as in my way superior to the rest of mortal men ; but now after such a display of thaumaturgic energy as the above, he is still ignorant of his true character; and taking him to be a mere man he 1 s full of anxiety (as in that case he might well be), and full of apprehension in his behalf, lest any atfliction should come upon him against his own wish and will. But if indeed it was now for the first time, after having passed so long a time with him, that he realised that he was indeed divine, and superior to the rest of the human race, then it behoves us to scrutinize the reason which our author alleges for his doing so, in these words:"For without any sacrifice, and without a single prayer, and without uttering a single mysterious word "he saw that he had wrought this miracle. It follows that the fellow's earlier feats were accomplished by the help of some uncany trick, and that is why, as he sars, Damis was not astounded at these things, nor filled with wonder by them. Naturally, then he now for the first time experienced these feelings, because he felt that his master had accomplished something which was quite musual and contrary to chats: his habitual performances. In reference however to ${ }^{\text {xxit }}$ the phantom chains shown to Damis and to his departure from the law-eourts, I will guote the words which Apollonius himself addresses to Domitian. For when the monarch ordered him to be thrown into chains, Apollonius, with perfeet consisteney, argued as follows: "If you think me a wizard, how will you bind me? And if you bind me, how can you say that I am a wizard." Surely one may invert this argument and use it against him somewhat as follows, keeping to his own premisses: If you are not a wizard, then how was your leg liberated from the chains? and if it was liberated, then how are yon not a wizard? And if, becanse he submits to the chains, he is not a wizard, then if he does not submit to them, he is a wizard by his own admission. And again if, because he sumitted to be brought to trial, he was not a wizard, he was yet clearly revealed as such when he ran off and eluded the court and retinue of the Emperor, I mean of course the bodyguard that stood round him. Now I believe that our author is aware of this, and endeavours to gloze over the fact, when he pretends that this miracle was exhibited without sacrifice or any sort of incantation by some ineffable and superhuman power.

Next this most divine of men composes in the chap. most careful of mamers an harangue in defence of XAXviI himself, quite unaware that after all his composition would prove a mere waste of effort. For he imagines that the Emperor will listen to his defence of his case, and on that assumption he arranges his apology along extremely plausible lines; but the latter by refusing to wait, renders all his trouble useless and unnecessary. I would ask you then to listen to the following, for what he says is a refutation of himself: "But inasmuch as he had composed an oration which he meant to deliver in defence of himself by the clock, only the tyrant confined him to the questions which I have enmmer-, ated, I have determined to publish this oration also." Nute then how utterly at fault this entirely divinest of beings was about the future, if he took so much trouble and care to proportion the length of his apology to the time allowed him by the waterclock.

But we must not omit to pass in review the defence which he so vainly composed, for it contains CHAP. among many examples of the arrogance with which he addressed Domitian, the following utterance, to wit, when he says " as Vespasian made you Emperor, so I made him." Heavens, what braggadocio! No ordinary person anyhow, nor any real philosopher either, transcending the rest of mankind, could indulge in such high-faluting bombast without exposing himself in the eyes of sensible men to a charge of being mad. Next in trying to rid himself of the suspicion which weighed upon him, he holds the following language concerming magicians and wizards; "But I call wizards men of false wisdom, for with them the unreal is made real, and the real becomes incredible." One may learn then from the whole treatise and from the particular episodes set forth therein, whether we ought to rank him among divine and philosophic men or among wizards. We have only to observe what he himself has said about wizards and falsely wise men together with what is published in his own history. For when oak trees and elms talk in articulate and feminine tones, and tripods move of their own accord, and waiters of copper serve at table, and jars are filled with showers and with winds, and water of sandarac and all the other things of the kind are introduced among those whom he accomnted gods and also did not hesitate to entitle his teachers, of whom else are all these things characteristic, except of people who can exhibit "the unreal as real and the real as

In the same book we are told that he had reasoned chap. in Ionia about the power of the Fates, and had xxaix taught that the threads they spin are so immutable that, if they deeree a kingrtom to another which already belongs to some one, then, even if that other Fates in were slain by the possessor for fear lest he should ever have it taken away by him, the latter would yet be raised from the dead and live again in fultilment of the decrees of the Fates; and he continues in these very words: "He who is destined to become a earpenter, will becone one, even though his hands have been cut off: and he who has been predestined to carry off the prize for ruming in the Olympie games, will never fail to win, even though he break his legr and the man to whom the Fates have decreed that he shall be an eminent archer, will not miss the mark, even though he lose his eyesight." Well, if I were inclined to flattery I should have said that I had your own history in my mind, when you were blockaded by Vitellius, and the temple of Jupiter was burnt on the brow of the hill overlooking the city. And Vitellius deelared that his own fortune was assured, so long as you did not escape him, although you were at the time quite a stripling, and not the man you are now. And yet because the Fates had deereed otherwise, he perished with all his counsels, while you are now in possession of his throne. However, since $I$ abhor the foreed concords of flattery, for it seems to me that they are everything that is out of time and out of tunc, let me at once cut this string out of my lyre, and request you to consider that on that occasion I had not your fortunes in my mind." In this passige, a treatise written ostensibly in the interest of truth draws a pieture of a man who was at once a flatterer and a liar, and anything rather than a philosopher; for after inveighing so bitterly on the earlier oceasion against Domitian, he now flatters him, generous fellow that he is, and pretends that the doctrines he mooted in Ionia about the Fates and Necessity, so far from being direeted against him rather told in his favour.

Take then your history, my author, and regaining cuap. your sobriety after your fit of drumkemness, xxxix read out loud and in a truth-loving tone the passages you wrote on a former occasion, without concealing anything; read how when he was staying in Ephesus he did his best "to alienate his friends from Domitian, and encouraged them to espouse the cause of the safety of all, and as it occurred to him that intercourse with them by letter was dangerous to them, he would take now one and now another of the most discreet of his own companions aside and say to them: 'I have a most important secret business to entrust to yourselves, so you must betake yourself to Rome to such and such persons, and converse with them!'" And of how " he delivered a discourse on the subject of the Fates and Necessity, and argued that not even tyrants can overpower the decrees of the Fates." And how "directing the attention of his audience to a brazen statue of Domitian which stood close by that of the Mcles, he said: 'Thou fool, how much art thou mistaken in thy views of Necessity and of the Fates. For even if thou shouldst slay the man who is fated to be despot after thyself, he shall come to life again.'" The man then who, after holding such lamguage as this, proceeds to flatter the tyrant, and cynically pretends that none of this language was directed against him, how can we judge him other tham capable of all villainy and meanness; unless indeed you assume that the authors who have handed down to us these details of him were lying fellows who meant to accuse their hero and not true historians? My good fellow, what was yomr hero up to in this line, for him alone to have been regarded botia long ago and now as a wizard in contrast with these great men; who though, as you admit, they had made trial of the same teachers as he, yet were eminent both in the age in which they fourished, and also bequeathed to posterity in their philosophy a gift of such excellence that its praises are still smor. Is such a contrast possible, unless he was caught by men of good sense meddling with things that were unlawful ? There are still among our contemporaries those who say that they have found smperstitious devices dedicated in the name of this man ; though I admit I have no wish to pay attention to then. However as regards his death, although Philostratus follows in his book the aecounts of earlier writers, he declares that he knows nothing of the truth; for he says that people in Ephesus related that Apollonins died there, while others said that he died in Lindus after entering the temple of Athene, and others in Crete; and after shedding so much doubt on the manner of his end, he yet inclines to believe that he went to heaven body and all. For he says that after he had rum into the temple, the gates were closed and a strange hymm of madens was heard to issue from the building, and the words of their song were : "Come, come, to heaven, come." But he says that he had never come across any sepulchre or cenotaph of his hero, although he had visited the greater part of the whole earth ; but what he would like us to believe is that his hero never encountered

Although then the limits of our discourse are reached in the above, 1 would yet, if you will allow me, raise a few points in connexion with the Fates and with destiny, in order to ascertain what am his work has in view, when throughout its argument it sets itself to demolish our responsibility, and to sul)stitute for it necessity, and destiny and the Fates. For in this way we shall fimally and completely refute the tenets professed by the author and prove their falsity. If then, according to the views of true philosophy, every soul is immortal, for that which is perpetually moving is immortal, whereas that which moves another, and is itself moved by others, in admitting a cessation of its own movement, admits a cessation of life; and if responsibility depends on personal choice, and God is not responsible, then what reason is there for concluding that the nature, which is ever in movement, is actuated against its will, and not rather in accordance with its own choice and decision; for otherwise it would resemble a lifeless body in being moved by some outside agencr. and would be as it were a puppet pulled by strings hither and thither. The nature which ever moves itself CHAP. would, on such an hypothesis, effect nothing of its XLI own initiative and movement, nor could it refer to itself the responsibility of its actions. In such a case, when it reasoned of truth it would surely not be worthy of praise ; nor on the other hand be blameworthy, because it was filled with vice and wickedness? Why then, I would ask you, my good fellow, do you revile Euphrates and find fanlt with him, if it is not of his own initiative, but by the force of destiny, that he devoted himself to gain, as you pretend, and neglected the philosophical ideal? And why do you insult wizards, by calling them false sophists, if they are dragged down by the Fates, as you believe, to their miserahle life? And why do you keep in your vocabulary at all such a word as vice, when any evil man is unjustly condemned by you, since it is by necessity that he fulfils his destined term? And again on what principle do you solemnly emroll yourself a diseiple of the wonderful teacher l'ythagoras, and insist on praising one who, instead of being a lover of philosophy, was a mere toy in the hands of the Fates? And as for Phrotes and Iarchas, the philosophers of the Indians, what have they done to win from you the reputation of being gools, unless the glory they acquired by their culture and virtue was their own? And in the same way with regard to Nero and Domitian, why do you not saddle upon the Fates and on Necessity the responsibility for their unbridled insolence, and aequit them of all responsibility and blame? But if as you say a man who is destined to be a rmmer, or an archer or a earpenter, eamot avoid heing so, surely also if it has been destined that a man should be a wizard, and, that being his eharacter, a magician or a murderer cnap. and a wicked man and a reprobate, come what will, Xhi he must of neeessity end by being such a person. Why then do you go wandering about, preaching the virtues to those who are incapable of reform? Why do you blame those who are the monsters they are, not of their own ehoice, but by predestination? And why too, if it was deereed by fate that you yourself being of a divine nature should transcend the glory of kings, did you visit schools of teachers and philosophers, and trouble yourself about Arabians and about the Magi of Babylon, and the wise men of India? For in any ease surely, even without your holding eommunications with them, the decrees of the Fates were bound to be fulfilled in your case.

And why do you vainly cast before those whom you consider to be gods, your honey-cake and your frankincense, and putting on the cloak of religion eneourage your companions to be diligent at their prayers? And what do you yourself in your prayers ask of the gods. inasmuch as you admit that they too are subject to Destiny? Nay you onght to make a clean sweep of all the other gods, and sacrifice to Neeessity alone and to the Fates, and pay your respects rather to Destiny than to Zeus himself. In that case no doubt you would have no gods left; and rightly too, seeing that they are not even able to help mankind. And again, if it were decreed by fate that the eitizens of Ephesus shonld be afflicted with pestilence, why did you sametion the opposite and so try to thwart destiny? Nay, why did you dare to transcend destiny, and as it were raise a trophy over her? And again in the case of the maiden raised to life, the thread of Clotho had reached its limet, and that being so why did yon, when she was crap. dead, bind a fresh thread on the spindle, by coming xti forward yourself in the role of the saviour of her life?

But perhaps you will say the Fates drove you also on to these courses. Fet you eamot say that they did so out of respect to your merits: far from it, seeing that before you passed into this body of yours, you were yourself, by your own account, a sea-faring man who spent his life upon the waves, and that of necessity, for even this could not have been otherwise. There is therefore nothing remarkable about your earliest birth, or your upbringing, or your edueation in the circle of arts, or in your wise selfdiscipline in the prime of your life, or of your training in philosophy; for it was after all some necessity of the Fates that led yon to Babylon, and yon were as it were driven on to associate with the sages of India; and it was not your own will and choiee, nor a love of philosophy either, but Fate that led you in her noose to the Naked sages of the Egrptians, and to Gadeira and to the pillars of Hercules; and it was she who forced you to wander about the eastern and western oceans, and along with her spindles whirled you idly around. But if anyone admits, as they must, that his endowment with wisdom was due to these causes, then it was destiny that was responsible for them; and we must no longer reckon your hero among those who are fond of learning, nor ean we with any pretence of reason admire a philosophy which was provided, not intentionally, but by necessity, for him. And we shall have to class on one and the same level, according to him, Pythagoras himself with any pretentious and abject slave, and

However, the herald of truth will raise his voice char. against such arguments, and say: O ye men, mortal XLII and perishable race, whither are you drifting, after drinking the umnixed eup of ignorance? Be done with it at last, wake up and be sober; and, raising the eyes of your intelligence, gaze upon the angust countenance of truth. It is not lawful for truth to be in conflict and contradiction with herself; nor that of two pronounced opposites there should exist but one and the same ground and cause. The universe is ordered by the divine laws of the providence of God that controls all things, and the peculiar mature of man's soul renders him master of himself and judge, ruler and lord of himself; and it teaches him through the laws of nature, and the tenets of philosophy, that of things which exist some are within our own control, but others not; and within our control is everything which comes into being in accordance with our will and choice and action, and these are naturally free, unhindered and unimpeded. But such things as are not in our control are weak and chas. servile, restrained and alien to oursclves; for Xlil example, our bodily processes and external objects which are both lifeless and destitute of reason, and in their manner of existence wholly foreign to the proper nature of a reasonable living creature. As for things which are in our control, cach one of us possesses in the will itself altermative impulses of virtue and vice ; and while the principle which controls the universe and governs it executes its rounds in direct accordance with nature, it is at the same time always accompanied by a justice which punishes infractions of the divine law ; but for the motives on which we act the responsibility lies not with destiny nor fate, nor with necessity. It lies with him who makes the choice, and God is not to be blamed. If therefore anyone is so foolhardy as to controvert the fact of oir responsibility, let him be duly exposed; aud let him openly proclaim that he is an atheist, seeing that he does not recognise either providence or God or anything else except the Fates and necessity. And let him bare-headed enumerate the consequences of these doctrines, let him cease to call anyone wise or foolish, just or unjust, virtuous or vicious, or charlatan ; let him deny that anyone is divine in our humanity, that there is any philosophy, any education, in a word any art of any kind, or science; let him not call anyone else by mature good or evil, but admit that everything whatever is whirled round in an eddy of necessity by the spindles of the Fates. Let such a person then be registered as an atheist and impious man in the tribunal of the pious and of philosopliers. And if anyone under the cloak of other opinions undertakes

This then is so. But if after this there still remain those who are disposed to register this man's name in the schools of philosophers, it shall be said that, even if they sueceed in clearing him from the filth thrown by others, nay in disentangling him from the pinchbeck properties in which the author of this book has wheeled him in upon the stage, we shall raise no objection to their doing so. At the same time if anyone ventures to overpass the limits of truth and tries to deify him as no other philosopher has been deified, he will at the best, though mawares, be rubling into him the aceusation of wizardry; for this work of pretentions sophistry ean only serve, in my opinion, to convict him, an him open in the eyes of all men of sense to this terrible acensation.
