I woot ek wel, but certeyn, men shal fynde
As worthi folk withinne Troie town, As konnyng, and as parfit, and as kynde, 970

As ben bitwixen Orkades and Inde
And that ye koude wel yowre lady serve,
I trowe ek wel, hire thank for to deserve

“But as to speke of love, ywis,” she seyde, “I hadde a lord, to whom I wedded was, 975
The whos myn herte al was, til that he deyde,

And other love, as help me now Pallas, Ther in myn herte nys, ne nevere was
And that ye ben of noble and heigh kyn-rede,

I have wel herd it tellen, out of drede 980

“And that doth me to han so gret a wonder,
That ye wol scornen any womman so
Ek, God woot, love and I ben fer ysonder!
I am disposed bet, so mot I go, Unto my deth, to pleyne and maken

wo 985
What I shal after don, I kan nat seye,
But trowelich, as yet me list nat pleye

‘Myn herte is now in tribulacioun,
And ye in armes busy day by day
Herafter, whan ye wonnen han the town,
Peraunter, thanne so it happen may, 991
That than I se that nevere yit I say,
Than wol I werke that I nevere wrought!
This word to yow ynough suffisen oughte

“To-morwe ek wol I speken with yow fayn, 995

So that ye touchen naught of this matere
And whan yow list, ye may come here ayayn,

And er ye gon, thus muche I sey yow here
As help me Pallas with hire heres clere, If that I sholde of any Grek han
routhe, 1000
It sholde be youreselfen, by my trouthe!

“I say nat therefore that I wol yow love, N’y say nat nay, but in conclusioun,
I mene wel, by God that sit above!”
And therwithal she caste hire eyen down, 1005

And gan to sike, and seyde, “O Troie town, Yet bidde I God, in quite and in reste
I may yow sen, or do myn herte breste”

But in effect, and shortly for to seye,

This Diomede al fresshly newe ay, eyn 1010 Gan pressen on, and faste hire mercy
preye,

And after this, the sothe for to seyn, Hire glove he took, of which he was ful feyn

And finaly, whan it was woxen eve,
And al was wel, he roos and tok his leve 1015

The bryghte Venus folwede and ay taughte
The wey ther brode Phebus down alighte,
And Cynthea hire char-hors overraughte
To whirle out of the Leoun, if she myghte, And Signifer his candels sheweth
bryghte, 1020

Whan that Criseyde unto hire bedde wente
Inwith hire fadres faire bryghte tente,

Retournyng in hire soule ay up and down
The wordes of this sodeyn Diomede,
His grete estat, and perel of the town, 1025
And that she was allone and hadde nede

Of frendes help, and thus bygan to brede
The cause whi, the sothe for to telle,
That she took fully purpos for to dwelle

The morwen com, and gostly for to speke, 1030

This Diomede is come unto Criseyde,
And shortly, lest that ye my tale breke,
So wel he for hymselfen spak and seyde,
That alle hire sikkes soore adown he leyde
And finaly, the sothe for to seyne, 1035
He refte hire of the grete of al hire peyne

And after this the storne telleth us
That she hym yaf the faire baye stede,
The which he ones wan of Troilus,
And ek a broche — and that was litel
nede — 1040

That Troilus was, she yaf this Diomede
And ek, the bet from sorwe hym to releve,
She made hym were a pencil of hire steve

I fynde ek in the stornes elleswhere, Whan thourgh the body hurt was Diomede 1045

Of Troilus, tho wepte she many a teere, Whan that she saw his wide wounides blede

And that she took, to lepen hym, good
hede,
And for to helen hym of his sorwes smerte, Men seyn — I not — that she yaf hym hire herte 1050

But trewely, the storne telleth us,
Ther made nevere woman moore wo
Than she, whan that she falsed Troilus
She seyde, "Allas! for now is elene ago
My name of trouthe in love, for everemo!
For I have falsed oon the gentileste 1056
That evere was, and oon the worthieste!"

"Allas! of me, unto the worldes ende, Shal neyther ben ywritten nor ysonge No good word, for thise bokes wol me shende 1060
O, rolled shal I ben on many a tonge!
Thoroughout the world my belle shal be ronge!"

And women moost wol haten me of alle Allas, that swich a cas me sholde falle!

"Thei wol seyn, in as muche as in me is, 1065
I have hem don dishonour, weylaway!
Al be I nat the first that dide amys,
What helpeth that to don my blame away?
But syn I se ther is no bettre way,
And that to late is now for me to rewe, 1070
To Diomedes algate I wol be trewe

"But, Troilus, syn I no bettre may,
And syn that thus departen ye and I,
Yet prey I God, so yeve yow right good
day,
As for the gentileste, trewely, 1075
That evere I say, to serven feythfully,
And best kan ay his lady honour kepe", — And with that word she brast anon to wepe

"And certes, yow ne haten shal I nevere, And frendes love, that shal ye han of me, 1080
And my good word, al sholde I lyven evere
And, trewely, I wolde sory be
For to seen yow in adversteie,
And gilteles, I woot wel, I yow leve But al shal passe, and thus take I my
leve" 1085

But trewely, how longe it was bytwene
That she forsok hym for this Diomedes,
Ther is non auctour telleth it, I wene
Take every man now to his bokes heede,
He shal no terme fynden, out of drede 1090
For though that he bigan to wowe hire soone,
Er he hire wan, yet was ther more to doone

Ne me ne list this sely womman chyde Forther than the storye wol devyse
Hire name, allas! is punysshed so wide, 1095
That for hire gilt it oughte ynough suffice
And if I myghte excuse hire any wise,
For she so sory was for hire untrouthe,
Iwis, I wolde excuse hire yet for routhe

This Troilus, as I byfore have told, 1100 Thus driveth forth, as wel as he hath
myght

But often was his herte hoot and cold,
And namely that ilke nynthe nyght,
Which on the morwe she hadde hym bi-hight
To com ayeyn God woot, ful litel reste 1105 Hadde he that nyght, nothyng to slepe hym leste

The laurer-crowned Phebus, with his heete, Gan, in his course av upward as he wente,
To warnen of the est see the wawes weete,
And Nysus daughter song with fressh entente, 1110
Whan Troilus his Pandare after sente,
And on the walles of the town they pleyde,
To loke if they kan sen aught of Criseyde

Tyl it was noon, they stoden for to se Who that ther come, and every maner
wight 1115
That com fro fer, they seyden it was she,
Til that thei koude knowen hym aright
Now was his herte dul, now was it light
And thus byjaped stonden for to stare Aboute naught this Troilus and Pan-dare 1120

To Pandarus this Troilus tho seyde,
"For aught I woot, byfor noon, sikirly,
Into this town ne comth nat here Criseyde.
She hath ynough to doone, hardyly,
To wynnen from hire fader, so trowe I 1125

Hire olde fader wol yet make hire dyne
Er that she go, God yeve hys herte pyne!"

Pandare answerede, "It may wel be, certeyn

And forthi lat us dyne, I the byseche,
And after noon than maystow come ayeyn " 1130

And hom they go, withoute more speche, And comen ayeyn, but longe may they seche

Er that they fynde that they after gape
Fortune hem bothe thenketh for to jape!

Quod Troilus, "I se wel now that she 1135
Is taryed with hire olde fader so,
That er she come, it wol neigh even be
Com forth, I wole unto the yate go
These porters ben unkonnyng evere mo,
And I wol don hem holden up the yate 1140
As naught ne were, although she come late "

The day goth faste, and after that com eve,
And yet com nought to Troilus Criseyde
He loketh forth by hegge, by tre, by greve,
And fer his hed over the wal he leyde, 1145
And at the laste he torned hym and seyde,
"By God, I woot hire menyng now, Pan-
dare!

Almoost, ywys, al newe was my care

"Now douteles, this lady kan hire good,
I woot, she meneth riden pryvely 1150
I comende hire wisdom, by myn hood!
She wol nat maken peple nyceley
Goure on hire whan she comth, but softly
By nyghte into the town she thenketh ride

And, deere brother, thynk not longe t' abide 1155

"We han naught elles for to don, ywis
And Pandarus, now woltow trowen me?
Have here my trouthe, I se hire! yond she is!

Heve up thyn eyen, man! maistow nat se?" Pandare answerede, "Nay, so mote I the! 1160

Al wrong, by God! What saistow man, where arte?

That I se yond nys but a fare-carte "

"Allas! thow seyst right soth," quod Troilus

"But, hardily, it is naught al for nought
That in myn herte I now rejoysse thus 1165
It is ayeyns som good I have a thought
Not I nat how, but syn that I was wrought, Ne felte I swich a comfort, dar I seye, She comth to-nyght, my lif that dorste I leye!"

Pandare answerde, "It may be, wel ynough," 1170

And held with hym of al that evere he
seyde

But in his herte he thoughte, and softe lough,

And to hymself ful sobrelche he seyde,
"From haselwode, there joly Robyn pleyde, Shal come al that that thow abidest
heere 1175

Ye, fare wel al the snow of ferne yere!"

The warden of the yates gan to calle
The folk which that withoute the yates were,

And bad hem dryven in hire bestes alle,
Or al the nyght they moste bleven
there 1180

And fer withunne the nyght, with many a teere,

This Troilus gan homward for to ride,
For wel he seth it helpeth naught t'abide

But natheles, he gladed hym in this He thought he misaccounted hadde his
day 1185

And seyde, "I understonde have al amys
For thilke nyght I last Criseyde say,
She seyde, 'I shal ben here, if that I may,
Er that the moone, O deere herte swete,
The Leoun passe, out of this Ariete' 1190

"For which she may yet holde al hire by-heste "

And on the morwe unto the yate he wente,
And up and down, by west and ek by este,
Upon the walles made he many a wente,
But al for nought, his hope alway hym blente 1195

For which at nyght, in sorwe and sikes sore

He wente hym hom, withouten any more

His hope al clene out of his herte fiedde,
He nath wheron now lenger for to honge,
But for the peyne hym thoughte his herte bledde, 1200

So were his throwes sharpe and wonder stronge

For whan he saugh that she abood so longe,
He nyste what he juggen of it myghte,
Syn she hath broken that she hym bihighte

The thridde, ferthe fifte, sexte day 1205
After tho dayes ten of which I tolde, Bitwixen hope and drede his herte lay,
Yet somewhat trustyng on hire hestes olde
But whan he saugh she nolde hire terme
holde,

He kan now sen non other remedie 1210
But for to shape hym soone for to dye

Therwith the wikked spirit, God us blesse,
Which that men clepeth the woode jalousie,
Gan in hym crepe, in al this hevynesse,
For which, by cause he wolde soone dye, 1215

He ne ete no drank, for his malencolye,
And ek from every compaignye he fiedde
This was the lif that al the tyme he ledde

He so defet was, that no manere man Unneth hym myghte knowen ther he wente, 1220

So was he lene, and therto pale and wan,
And feble, that he walketh by potente,
And with his ire he thus hymselfe shente
And whoso axed hym wherof hym smerte, He seyde, his harm was al aboute his
herte 1225

Priam ful ofte, and ek his moder deere,
His bretheren and his sustren gonne hym freyne

Whi he so sorrowful was in al his cheere,
And what thyng was the cause of al his peyne,

But al for naught He nolde his cause
pleyne, 1230

But seyde he felte a grevous malache
Aboute his herte, and fayn he wolde dye

So on a day he leyde hym down to slepe,
And so byfel that in his slep hym thoughte
That in a forest faste he walk to wepe 1235

For love of here that hym these peynes
wroughte,

And up and down as he the forest soughte,
He mette he saugh a bor with tuskes grete,
That slepte ayeyn the bryghte sonnes hete

And by this bor, fast in his armes folde, 1240
Lay, kissing ay, his lady bryght, Criseyde For sorwe of which, whan he it gan by-
holde,

And for despit out of his slep he breyde,
And loude he cride on Pandarus, and seyde
"O Pandarus, now know I crop and roote 1245

I n'am but ded, ther nys non other bote

"My lady bryght, Criseyde, hath me by-trayed,

In whom I trusted most of any wight
She elliswhere hath now here herte apayed
The blisful goddes, thorough here grete
myght, 1250

Han in my drem yshewed it ful right Thus yn my drem Criseyde have I by-
holde" --

And al this thing to Pandarus he tolde

"O my Criseyde, allas! what subtilte, What newe lust, what beaute, what science, 1255

What wratthe of juste cause have ye to
me?

What gilt of me, what fel experience,
Hath fro me raft, allas! thyn advertence?
O trust, O feyth, O depe aseuraunce, Who hath me reft Criseyde, al my ples-aunce? 1260

"Allas! whi leet I you from hennes go,
For which wel neigh out of my wit I breyde?

Who shal now trowe on any othes mo?
God wot, I wende, O lady bryght, Criseyde, That every word was gospel that ye
seyde! 1265

But who may bet bigile, yf hym lyste, Than he on whom men weneth best to triste?

"What shal I don, my Pandarus, allas?
I fele now so sharp a newe peyne,
Syn that ther is no remedye in this cas, 1270

That bet were it I with myn hondes tweyne Myselfen slow than thus alwey to pleyne For thorough my deth my wo shold han an ende,

Ther every day with lyf myself I shende " Pandare answerde and seyde, "Allas the while 1275

That I was born! Have I nat seyde er this,
That dremes many a maner man bigile?
And whi? For folk expounden hem amys
How darstow seyn that fals thy lady ys,
For any drem, right for thyn owene
drede? 1280

Lat be this thought, thow kanst no dremes
rede

"Peraunter, ther thow dremest of this boor,
It may so be that it may signifie,
Hire fader, which that old is and ek hoor,
Ayeyn the sonne lith, o poynt to dye, 1285
And she for sorwe gynneth wepe and crie, And kisseth hym, ther he lith on the grounde

Thus sholdestow thi drem aight expounde!"

"How myghte I than don," quod Troilus,
"To knowe of this, yee, were it nevere so lite?" 1290

"Now seystow wisly," quod this Pandarus
"My red is this, syn thow kanst wel endite,
That hastily a lettre thow hire write, Thorough which thow shalt wel bryngyn it aboute,

To know a soth of that thow art in doute 1295

"And se now whi, for this I dar wel seyn,
That if so is that she untrewede be,
I kan nat trowen that she wol write ayeyn
And if she write, thow shalt ful some yse,
As whether she hath any lberte 1300
To come ayeyn, or ellis in som clause,
If she be let, she wol assigne a cause

"Thow hast nat writen hire syn that she
wente,

Nor she to the, and this I dorste laye,
Ther may swich cause ben in hire entente,
That hardly thow wolt thiselven saye 1306
That hire abod the best is for yow twaye

Now writ hire thanne, and thow shalt feele sone

A soth of al, ther is namore to done "

Acorded ben to this conclusioun, 1310
And that anon, thise ilke lordes two,
And hastily sit Troilus adown,
And rolleth in his herte to and fro,
How he may best discryven hire his wo
And to Criseyde, his owen lady deere, 1315
He wrot right thus, and seyde as ye may here

Litera Troili

"Right fresshe flour, whos I ben have and
shal,

Withouten part of elleswhere servyse,
With herte, body, lif, lust, thought, and al,
I, woful wyght, in everich humble wise 1320
That tonge telle or herte may devyse,
As ofte as matere occupieth place,
Me recomaunde unto youre noble grace

"Liketh yow to witen, swete herte,
As ye wel knowe, how longe tyme agon 1325
That ye me lefte in aspre peynes smerte, Whan that ye wente, of which yit boote non

Have I non had, but evere wors bigon
Fro day to day am I, and so mot dwelle, While it yow list, of wele and wo my welle 1330

"For which to yow, with dredful herte
trewe,

I write, as he that sorwe drifeth to write,
My wo, that everich houre encresseth newe,
Compleyayng as I dar or kan endite
And that defaced is, that may ye write 1335
The teris which that fro myn eyen reyne, That wolden speke, if that they koude, and
pleyne

"Yow first biseche I, that youre eyen clere,

To loke on this, defouled ye nat holde,
And over al this, that ye, my lady deere,
Wol vouchesauf this lettre to byholde 1341
And by the cause ek of my cares colde,
That sleth my wit, if aught amys m'asterte, Foryeve it me, myn owen swete herte!

"If any servant dorste or oughte of right
Upon his lady pitously compleyne, 1346 Thanne wene I that ich oughte be that
wight,
Considered this, that ye thise monthes tweyne
Han taried, ther ye seyden, soth to seyne,
But dayes ten ye nolde in oost sojourne, —
But in two monthes yet ye nat re-tourne 1351

"But for as muche as me moot nedes like
Al that yow liste, I dar nat pleyne moore,
But humblely, with sorwful sikis sike, Yow write ich myn unresty sorwes soore, 1355
Fro day to day desiryng evere moore
To knowen fully, if youre wille it weere, How ye han ferd and don whil ye be
there,

"The whos welfare and hele ek God encesse
In honour swich, that upward in degree
It growe alway, so that it nevere cesse 1361 Right as youre herte ay kan, my lady free,
Devyse, I prey to God so moot it be,
And graunte it that ye soone upon me
rewe,
As wisly as in al I am yow trewe 1365

"And if yow liketh knowen of the fare
Of me, whos wo ther may no wit discryve,
I kan namore but, chiste of every care,
At wrytyng of this lettre I was on-lyve,
Al redy out my woful gost to dryve, 1370 Which I delaye, and holde hym yet in honde,
Upon the sighte of matere of youre sonde

"Myn eyen two, in veyn with which I se,
Of sorwful teris salte arn woxen welles,
My song, in pleynte of myn adversitee, 1375
My good, in harm, myn ese ek woxen helle
is,
My joie, in wo, I kan sey yow naught ellis,
But torned is, for which my lif I warne, Everich joie or ese in his contrarie

"Which with youre comyng hom ayeyn to Troie 1380

Ye may redesse, and more a thousand sithe
Than evere ich hadde, encessen in me joie
For was ther nevere herte yet so blithe
To han his lif as I shal ben as swithe
As I yow se, and though no manere routhe Commeve yow, yet thynketh on youre
trouthe 1386

"And if so be my gilt hath deth deserved
Or if yow list namore upon me se,
In guerdoun yet of that I have yow served,
Byseche I yow, myn hertes lady free, 1390
That hereupon ye wolden write me,
For love of God, my righte lode-sterre, That deth may make an ende of al my werre

"If other cause aught doth yow for to dwelle,
That with youre lettre ye me recom-forte, 1395
For though to me youre absence is an helle,
With pacience I wol my wo comorte,
And with youre lettre of hope I wol de-sporte
Now writeth, swete, and lat me thus nat
pleyne,
With hope, or deth, delivereth me fro
peyne 1400

"Iwis, myne owene deere herte trewe,
I woot that, whan ye next upon me se,
So lost have I myn hele and ek myn hewe, Criseyde shal nought konne knowen me
Iwys, myn hertes day, my lady free, 1405
So thursteth ay myn herte to byholde Youre beute, that my lif unnethe I holde

"I say namore, al have I for to seyne
To yow wel more than I telle may But whether that ye do me lyve or deye, 1410
Yet praye I God, so yeve yow right good
day!

And fareth wel, goodly, faire, fresshe may
As ye that lif or deth may me comande!
And to youre trouthe ay I me recomande

"With heleswich that, but ye even me 1415
The same hele, I shal non hele have In yow lith, whan yow liste that it so be,

The day in which me clothen shal my grave,
In yow my lif, in yow myght for to save Me fro disese of alle peynes smerte, 1420
And far now wel, myn owen swete herte!
le vostre T"

This lettre forth was sent unto Criseyde,
Of which hire answeere in effect was thus Ful pitously she wroot ayeyn, and seyde,
That also sone as that she myghte, ywys, 1425
She wolde come, and mende al that was mys
And fynaly she wroot and seyde hym thenne,
She wolde come, ye, but she nyste whenne

But in hire lettre made she swich festes
That wonder was, and swerth she loveth hym best, 1430
Of which he fond but botmeles bihestes
But Troilus, thow maist now, est or west, Pipe in an ivy lef, if that the lest!
Thus goth the world God shuide us fro meschaunce,
And every wight that meneth trouthe avaunce! 1435

Encressen gan the wo fro day to nyght
Of Troilus, for taryng of Criseyde,
And lessen gan his hope and ek his myght,
For which al down he in his bed hym leyde
He ne eet, ne dronk, ne slep, ne no word
seyde, 1440
Ymagynyng ay that she was unkynde, For which wel neigh he wex out of his mynde

This drem, of which I told have ek byforn,
May nevere come out of his remembraunce
He thought ay wel he hadde his lady lorn, 1445
And that Joves, of his purveyaunce,
Hym shewed hadde in slep the signifaunce
Of hire untrouthe and his disaventure,
And that the boor was shewed hym in figure 1449

For which he for Sibille his suster sente,
That called was Cassandre ek al aboute,
And al his drem he tolde hire er he stente,

And hire bisoughte assoulen hym the doute
Of the stronge boor with tuskes stoute,
And fynaly, withinne a litel stounde, 1455 Cassandre hym gan right thus his drem expounde

She gan first smyle, and seyde, "O brother deere,
If thow a soth of this desirest knowe,
Thow most a fewe of olde stories heere,
To purpos, how that Fortune overthowe Hath lordes olde, thorough which, withinne a throwe, 1461 Thow wel this boor shalt knowe, and of what kynde
He comen is, as men in bokes fynde

"Diane, which that wroth was and in ire
For Grekus nolde don hire sacrifice, 1465
Ne encens upon hire auter sette afire,
She, for that Grekus gonne hire so despise, Wrak hire in a wonder cruel wise,
For with a boor as gret as ox in stalle
She made up frete hire corn and vynes alle 1470

"To sle this boor was al the contre rayسد, Amonges which ther com, this boor to se A mayde, oon of this world the beste ypreyسد,
And Meleagre, lord of that contree,
He loved so this fresshe mayden free, 1475
That with his manhod, er he wolde stente, This boor he slough, and hire the hed he sente,

"Of which, as olde bokes tellen us,
Ther ros a contek and a gret envye,
And of this lord descended Tideus 1480
By ligne, or ellis olde bookes lye
But how this Meleagre gan to dye
Thorough his moder, wol I yow naught telle,
For al to longe it were for to dwelle"

She tolde ek how Tideus, er she stente, 1485 Unto the stronge citee of Thebes,
To cleyemen kyngdom of the citee, wente,
For his felawe, daun Polymytes,
Of which the brother, daun Ethiocles, Ful wrongfully of Thebes held the strengthe, 1490
This tolde she by proces, al by lengthe.

She tolde ek how Hemonydes asterte,
 Whan Tideus slough fifty knyghtes stoute
 She tolde ek alle the prophecyes by herte,
 And how that seven kynges with hire route
 Bysegeden the citee al aboute, 1496
 And of the holy serpent, and the welle,
 And of the furies, al she gan hym telle,

Of Archymoris buryng and the pleyes,
 And how Amphiorax fil thourgh the
 grounde, 1500

How Tideus was sleyn, lord of Argeyes,
 And how Ypomedoun in litel stounde Was dreynt, and ded Parthonope of wownde,

And also how Capaneus the proude
 With thonder-dynt was slayn, that cride loude 1505

She gan ek telle hym how that eyther brother,

Ethiocles and Polymyte also,
 At a scarmuche ech of hem slough other,
 And of Argyves wepyng and hire wo,
 And how the town was brent, she tolde ek tho 1510

And so descendeth down from gestes olde
 To Diomede, and thus she spak and tolde

"This ilke boor bitokneth Diomede, Tideus sone, that down descended is Fro Meleagre, that made the boor to blede
 And thy lady, wherso she be, ywis, 1516
 This Diomede hire herte hath, and she his Wep if thou wilt, or lef! For, out of doute,
 This Diomede is inne, and thou art oute"

"Thow seyst nat soth," quod he, "thow sorceresse 1520

With al thy false goost of prophecy!
 Thow wenest ben a gret devyneresse!
 Now sestow nat this fool of fantasie Peyneth hire on ladys for to lye?
 Away!" quod he, "ther Joves yeve the sorwe! 1525

Thow shalt be fals, peraunter, yet to-morwe!

"As wel thow myghtest lien on Alceste,
 That was of creatures, but men lye,
 That evere weren, kyndest and the beste!
 For whan hire housbonde was in jupertye

To dye hymself, but if she wolde dye, 1531
 She ches for hym to dye and gon to helle,
 And starf anon, as us the bokes telle "

Cassandre goth, and he with cruel herte
 Foryat his wo, for angre of hire speche, 1535
 And from his bed al sodeynly he sterte,
 As though al hool hym hadde ymad a leche
 And day by day he gan enquere and seche
 A sooth of this with al his fulle cure,
 And thus he drieth forth his aventure 1540

Fortune, which that permutacioun
 Of thynges hath, as it is hire comitted
 Thourgh purveyaunce and disposicioun
 Of heighe Jove, as regnes shal be fitted Fro folk in folk, or when they shal be smytte, 1545
 Gan pulle away the fetheres brighte of Troie
 Fro day to day, til they ben bare of joie

Among al this, the fyn of the parodie
 Of Ector gan aprochen wonder blyve
 The fate wolde his soule sholde unbodye, 1550
 And shapen hadde a mene it out to dryve, Ayeyns which fate hym helpeth nat to stryve,
 But on a day to fighten gan he wende,
 At which, allas! he caught his lyves ende

For which me thynketh every manere
 wight 1555
 That haunteth armes oughte to biwaille
 The deth of hym that was so noble a knyght,
 For as he drough a kyng by th'aventaille,
 Unwar of this, Achilles thourgh the maille
 And thourgh the body gan hym for to ryve, And thus this worthi knyght was brought of lye 1561

For whom, as olde bokes tellen us,
 Was mad swich wo, that tonge it may nat telle,

And namely, the sorwe of Troilus,
 That next hym was of worthynesse welle
 And in this wo gan Troilus to dwelle, 1566 That, what for sorwe, and love, and for unreste,

Ful ofte a day he bad his herte breste.

But natheles, though he gan hym dispaire,
And dradde ay that his lady was untrewre,
Yet ay on hire his herte gan repaire 1571
And as thus loveres don, he soughte ay
newe

To gete ayeyn Criseyde, brighte of hewe,
And in his herte he wente hire excusynge,
That Calkas caused al hire tariynge 1575

And ofte tyme he was in purpos grete Hymselfen lik a pilgrym to desgise,
To seen hire, but he may nat contrefete
To ben unknowen of folk that weren wise,
Ne fynde excuse aright that may suffice,
If he among the Grekis knowen were, 1581
For which he wep ful ofte and many a tere

To hire he wroot yet ofte tyme al newe Ful pitously, — he lefte it nought for slouthe, —

Bisechyng hire, syn that he was trewe, 1585
That she wol come ayeyn and holde hire
trouthe

For which Criseyde upon a day, for routhe, —

I take it so, — touchyng al this matere, Wrot hym ayeyn, and seyde as ye may here

Itera Criseydis

“Cupides sone, ensample of goodlyheede, 1590

O swerd of knyghthod, sours of gentillesse, How myght a wight in torment and in
drede

And heleles, yow sende as yet gladnesse?
I herteles, I sik, I in destresse!

Syn ye with me, nor I with yow, may dele, 1595

Yow neyther sende ich herte may nor hele

“Youre lettres ful, the papir al ypleynted, Conceyved hath myn hertes pietee

I have ek seyn with ters al depeynted Youre lettre, and how that ye requeren
me 1600

To come ayeyn, which yet ne may nat be But whi, lest that this lettre founden were,
No mencioune ne make I now, for feere “Grevous to me, God woot, is youre un-reste,

Youre haste, and that the goddes ordin
aunce, 1605

It semeth nat ye take it for the beste Nor other thyng nys in youre remembraunce,

As thynketh me, but only youre plesaunce
But beth nat wroth, and that I yow biseche,

For that I tarie is al for wikked speche 1610

“For I have herd wel moore than I wende, Touchyng us two, how thynges han ystonde,

Which I shal with dissymulyng amende And beth nat wroth, I have ek under-stonde

How ye ne do but holden me in honde 1615
But now no force, I kan nat in yow gesse
But alle trouthe and alle gentillesse

“Come I wole, but yet in swich disjoynte I stonde as now, that what yer or what
day

That this shal be, that kan I naught apoynte 1620

But in effect I pray yow, as I may,
Of youre good word and of youre frendship ay

For trewely, while that my hf may dure,
As for a frend ye may in me assure “Yet preye ich yow, on yvel ye ne take 1625

That it is short which that I to yow write,
I dar nat, ther I am, wel lettres make,
Ne nevere yet ne koude I wel endite
Ek gret effect men write in place lite, Th'entente is al, and nat the lettres space And fareth now wel, God have yow in his grace! 1631

La vostre C”

This Troilus this lettre thoughte al straunge,

Whan he it saugh, and sorwfullch he sighte

Hym thoughte it lik a kalendes of change
But fynaly, he ful ne trowen myghte 1635
That she ne wolde hym holden that she hyghte,

For with ful yvel wille list hym to leve,
That loveth wel, in swich cas, though hyr greve

But natheles, men seyen that at the laste,
For any thyng, men shal the soothe se 1640
And swich a cas bitidde, and that as faste, That Trolous wel understod that she Nas trouht so kynde as that hire oughthe
be

And fynaly, he woot now, out of doute,
That al is lost that he hath ben aboute

Stood on a day in his malenchole 1646
This Trolous, and in suspicioun
Of hire for whom he wende for to dye
And so bifel that thoroughout Troye town, As was the gise, iborn was up and down 1650
A manere cote-armure, as seith the storie, Byforn Deiphebe, in signe of his victorie,

The whiche cote, as telleth Lollus, Deiphebe it hadde rent fro Diomedee
The same day And whan this Trolous 1655
It saugh, he gan to taken of it hede, Avysyng of the lengthe and of the brede,
And al the werk, but as he gan byholde,
Ful sodeynly his herte gan to colde,

As he that on the coler fond withinne 1660
A broche, that he Criseyde yaf that morwe
That she from Troie moste nedes twynne,
In remembraunce of hym and of his sorwe
And she hym leyde ayeyn hire feith to borwe

To kepe it ay! But now ful wel he wiste,
His lady nas no lenger on to triste 1666

He goth hym hom, and gan ful soone sende
For Pandarus, and al this newe chauce,
And of this broche, he tolde hym word and
ende,

Compleynyng of hire hertes variaunce, 1670
His longe love, his trouthe, and his pen-
aunce

And after deth withouten wordes moore,
Ful faste he cride, his reste hym to restore

Than spak he thus, "O lady myn, Criseyde, Where is youre feith, and where is youre biheste?" 1675

Where is youre love? where is youre trouthe?" he seyde

"Of Diomedee have ye now al this feeste!
Allas! I wolde han trowed atte leeste

That, syn ye nolde in trouthe to me stonde, That ye thus nolde han holden me in honde! 1680

"Who shal now trowe on any othes mo?
Allas! I nevere wolde han wend, er this,
That ye, Criseyde, koude han chaunged so,
Ne, but I hadde aglit and don amys,
So cruel wende I nought youre herte, ywis, To sle me thus! Allas, youre name of
trouthe 1686
Is now fordon, and that is al my routhe

"Was ther non other broche yow liste lete To feffe with youre newe love," quod he,
"But thilke broch that I, with teris wete, 1690

Yow yaf, as for a remembraunce of me?
Non other cause, allas, ne hadde ye
But for despit, and ek for that ye mente
Al outrelly to shewen youre entente

"Thorough which I se that clene out of youre
mynde 1695

Ye han me cast, and I ne kan nor may,
For al this world, withinne myn herte fynde
To unloven yow a quarter of a day!
In corsed tyme I born was, weilaway,
That yow, that doon me al this wo endure,
Yet love I best of any creature! 1701

"Now God," quod he, "me sende yet the
grace

That I may meten with this Diomedee!
And trewely, if I have myght and space,
Yet shal I make, I hope, his sydes blede O God," quod he, "that oughtest taken
heede 1706

To fortheren trouthe, and wronges to punyce,
Whi nyltow don a vengeaunce of this vice?"

"O Pandarus, that in dremes for to triste Me blamed hast, and wont art oft upbreyde, 1710

Now maistow se thuself, if that the liste,
How trewe is now thi nece, bright Criseyde!
In sondry formes, God it woot," he seyde,
"The goddes shewen bothe joye and tene
In slep, and by my drem it is now sene 1715

"And certeynly, withouten moore speche,

From hennesforth, as ferforth as I may,
Myn owen deth in armes wol I seche
I recche nat how soone be the day!
But trewely, Criseyde, swete may, 1720
Whom I have ay with al my myght yserved,
That ye thus doon, I have it nat deseived "

This Pandarus, that al thise thynges herde,
And wiste wel he seyde a soth of this,
He nought a word ayeyn to hym answerde,
For sory of his frendes sorwe he is, 1726
And shamed for his nece hath don amys,
And stant, astoned of thise causes tweye,
As stille as ston, a word ne kowde he seye

But at the laste thus he spak, and
seyde 1730

"My brother deer, I may do the namore
What sholde I seyen? I hate, ywys, Cryseyde,

And, God woot, I wol hate hire evermore!
And that thow me bisoughtest don of yoore,

Havyng unto myn honour ne my reste 1735
Right no reward, I dide al that the leste

"If I dide aught that myghte liken the,
It is me lief, and of this tresoun now,
God woot that it a sorwe is unto me!
And dredeles, for hertes ese of yow, 1740 Right fayn I wolde amende it, wiste I how

And fro this world, almyghty God I preye Delivere hire soon! I kan namore seye "

Gret was the sorwe and pleynte of Troilus, But forth hire cours Fortune ay gan to
holde 1745

Criseyde loveth the sone of Tideus,
And Troilus moot wepe in cares colde
Swich is this world, whoso it kan byholde
In ech estat is litel hertes reste
God leve us for to take it for the beste! 1750

In many cruel bataille, out of drede,
Of Troilus, this ilke noble knyght,
As men may in thuse olde bokes rede,
Was seen his knyghthod and his grete
myght

And dredeles, his ire, day and nyght, 1755
Ful cruwely the Grekis ay aboughte,
And alwey moost thus Diomedes he soughte

And ofte tyme, I fynde that they mette
With bloody strokes and with wordes grete, Assayinge how hire speres weren whette, 1760

And, God it woot, with many a cruel hete
Gan Troilus upon his helm to bete!
But natheles, Fortune it naught ne wolde,
Of oothers hond that eyther deyen sholde

And if I hadde ytaken for to write 1765
The armes of this ilke worthi man,
Than wolde ich of his batailles endrite,
But for that I to writen first bigan
Of his love, I have seyde as I kan, — His worthi dedes, whoso list hem
heere, 1770
Rede Dares, he kan telle hem alle ifeere —

Bysechyng every lady bright of hewe,
And every gentil womman, what she be,
That al be that Criseyde was untrewede, That for that gilt she be nat wroth with
me 1775

Ye may hire giltes in other bokes se,
And gladlier I wol write, yif yow leste, Penelopees trouthe and good Alceste

N'y sey nat this al oonly for thise men,
But moost for women that bitraised be Thorough false folk, God yeve hem sorwe,
amen! 1781

That with hire grete wit and subtilte Bytrause yow! And this commeveth me
To speke, and in effect yow alle I preye, Beth war of men, and herkneth what I seye! — 1785

Go, litel bok, go, litel myn tragedye,
Ther God thi makere yet, er that he dye,
So sende myght to make in som comedye!
But litel bok, no making thow n'envie,
But subgt be to alle poesye, 1790
And kis the steppes, where as thow seest pace

Virgile, Ovide, Omer, Lucan, and Stace

And for ther is so gret diversite
In Englishh and in wrytyng of oure tonge,
So prey I God that non myswrite the, 1795
Ne the mys metre for defaute of tonge
And red wherso thow be, or elles songe,

That thow be understonde, God I biseche!
But yet to purpos of my rather speche —

The wrath, as I bigan yow for to seye, 1800
Of Troilus the Grekis boughten deere
For thousandes his hondes maden deye,
As he that was withouten any peere,
Save Ector, in his tyme, as I kan heere
But weilaway, save only Goddes wille! 1805
Despitously hym slough the fierse Achille

And whan that he was slayn in this manere,
His lighte goost ful blisfully is went Up to the holughnesse of the eighth spere,
In convers letyng everich element, 1810
And ther he saugh, with ful avysement,
The erratik sterres, herkenyng armonye
With sownes ful of hevenyssh melodie

And down from thennes faste he gan avyse
This litel spot of erthe, that with the se Embraced is, and fully gan despise 1816
This wrecched world, and held al vanite
To respect of the pleyn felchite
That is in hevene above, and at the laste, Ther he was slayn, his lokyng down he caste 1820

And in hymself he lough right at the
wo

Of hem that wepten for his deth so faste,
And dampned aloure werk that foloweth so

The blynde lust, the which that may nat
laste, 1824

And sholden aloure herte on heven caste
And forth he wente, shortly for to telle, Ther as Mercurye sorted hym to dwelle

Swich fyn hath, lo, this Troilus for love!
Swich fyn hath al his grete worthynesse!
Swich fyn hath his estat real above, 1830 Swich fyn his lust, swich fyn hath his noblesse!

Swych fyn hath false worldes brotelnesse!
And thus bigan his lovyng of Criseyde,
As I have told, and in this wise he deyde

↪ yonge, fresshe folkes, he or she, 1835

In which that love up groweth with youre age,

Repeyreth hom fro worldly vanyte,
And of youre herte up casteth the visage
To thilke God that after his ymage Yow made, and thynketh al nvs but a fare 1840
This world, that passeth soone as floures
fare

And loveth hym, the which that right for love

Upon a crois, oure soules for to beye,
First starf, and roos, and sit in hevene above,
For he nyl falsen no wight, dar I seye, 1845
That wol his herte al holly on hym leye
And syn he best to love is, and most meke,
What nedeth feynede loves for to seke?

Lo here, of payens corsed olde rites, Lo here, what alle hire goddes may availe, 1850

Lo here, thuse wrecched worldes appetites,
Lo here, the fyn and guerdoun for travaille Of Jove, Appollo, of Mars, of swich ras-caille!

Lo here, the forme of olde clerkis speche
In poetrie, if ye hire bokes seche 1855

O moral Gower, this book I directe
To the and to the, philosophical Strode,
To vouchen sauf, ther nede is, to correcte,
Of youre benignites and zeles goode
And to that sothefast Crist, that starf on rode, 1860
With al myn herte of mercy evere I preye, And to the Lord right thus I speke and
seye

Thow oon, and two, and thre, eterne on lyve,

That regnest ay in thre, and two, and oon, Uncircumscrip, and al maist circumscribe,
Us from visible and invisible foon 1865
Defende, and to thy mercy, everichon,
So make us, Jesus, for thi mercy digne,
For love of mayde and moder thyn benigne
Amen

Explicit liber Troili et Criseydis.

THE LEGEND OF GOOD WOMEN

NEXT to the description of April "with his shoures sote" at the beginning of the Canterbury Tales, probably the most familiar and best loved lines of Chaucer are those in the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women which tell of his adoration of the daisy. Both passages are notable examples of the freshness and simplicity — the "vernal spirit which soothes and refreshes" — long ago praised by Lowell as characteristic of Chaucer. The quality is truly Chaucerian, and by no means restricted to descriptions of outward nature. But the secret of it is hard to discover. It is partly, without doubt, the effect of the language, — not of the " quaintness " falsely ascribed to Chaucer's speech by those to whom it is simply unfamiliar, but of a real simplicity of structure in early English, found also in Old French and comparable to that which distinguishes Homeric Greek from the later Attic. In part, too, the freshness of Chaucer's poetry is a reflection of his age, of a certain youthful directness in its relation to life. And in great measure it is an expression of his own mind and temperament. In any case it is not to be set down to naive simplicity on the part of the poet or his contemporaries. Nor in the two poems which have been mentioned is the effect in question due to the avoidance of literary material or, it must be granted, to the direct observation of nature. The passage in the General Prologue follows an established convention, in which, to be sure, it surpasses all its models, and the panegyric on the daisy is almost a cento of quotations or imitations of contemporary poetry, French and perhaps Italian. Indeed the whole Prologue to the Legend is steeped in literary associations. The truth of its description and sentiment is not for that reason to be denied or disparaged. But the reader cannot understand the Prologue aright without knowing something of the conventions which underlie it and the fund of poetry on which it has drawn for its enrichment.

Like the Book of the Duchess, the House of Fame, and the Parliament of Fowls, the Legend of Good Women is a love-vision. But before the relation of the actual dream, the scene is set by an account of the poet's worship of the daisy on the first of May. In that passage, besides the simple delight in nature which has endeared it to generations of readers, must be recognized the skilful use of literary and social conventions. The relative merits of the flower and the leaf were a subject of poetic debate in Chaucer's time, as they were in the next century, when the poem entitled the Flower and the Leaf was composed. The ladies and gentlemen of the court — so the Prologue to the Legend indicates — divided themselves into two orders, devoted one to the Leaf and the other to the Flower. Similarly there is evidence, in both French and English poetry, of the existence of a cult of the marguerite. Both these courtly fashions are reflected in the Prologue. In the controversy of Flower against Leaf Chaucer refuses to take sides. But he proclaims his utter devotion to the daisy, and in his celebration of this queen of flowers, which is modeled chiefly on the Lai de Franchise of Deschamps, he interweaves many lines and phrases derived from Machaut and Froissart, and perhaps from Boccaccio. To complete the glorification of the daisy he invents a happy metamorphosis, worthy of the old mythologies, and represents the flower as a transformation of the queen Alceste, the leader of his "good women," who appears in his vision as an attendant of the god of Love.

According to the central fiction of the Prologue, Chaucer is condemned by the god of Love for having written heresies against his law — in particular, for having defamed women by composing the Troilus and translating the Roman de la Rose. As a penalty for his misconduct he is commanded to write a legendary of Cupid's saints — that is, of women who were good according to the standard of the religion of Love. The Legend thus falls at once into the ancient category of palmodes, known in literary history from the time of Stesichorus, who first wrote an ode against Helen of Troy, and then composed his Palinodia in her praise. Perhaps the most familiar Latin example of the type is Horace's "O matre pulchra filia pulchrior," and among classical writings known to Chaucer Ovid's Ars Amatoria, Book III, and his Remedia Amoris form a kind of double palinode. In mediæval French literature the fashion was revived. Jean le Fèvre, who translated the strongly antifeminist Lamentations of Matheoli, composed his Leesce as a contrepeuse, and Nicholas de Bozon atoned for his Char d'Orgeuil by his counterplea de la Bonté des Femmes. Machaut's Jugement dou Roy de Navarre was not only a palinode, but may also have furnished an actual suggestion for Chaucer's Legend. Again in the fifteenth century, in English, the Dialogue with a Friend by Hoccleve, Chaucer's disciple, still continues the convention. In writing such a recantation, then, Chaucer was following a familiar custom. And perhaps the occasion of his palinode was not wholly fictitious. Just as Ovid's Remedia Amoris is held to have been his apology to the gossiping critics of the Amores, so, it has been not unreasonably suggested, Chaucer's defense of good women may have been called forth by actual condemnation of his Troilus.

The form of the work imposed upon Chaucer as a penance is that of a legendary, or collection of lives of saints. The good women whose tragic stories he relates are heroines of classical antiquity who suffered or died out of devotion to their lovers. They are represented as saints or martyrs on Cupid's calendar. So the Legend may be regarded, in the words of a recent critic, as "a cross between the Heroides of Ovid and the Legenda Aurea." In an age which produced a lover's manual of sins — the Confessio Amantis, the Ten Commandments of love, matins and lauds of love sung by the birds, paternosters and credos of love, and masses of Venus, the Legend affords another striking example of the adaptation of Christian ideas and institutions to the affairs of love.

Such are the varied origins and antecedents of the Legend of Good Women. In spite of Chaucer's uncommon skill in combining diverse elements in a simple and artistic design, he was not altogether successful in achieving unity or consistency in the Prologue. He doubtless realized this himself, and for that reason gave the poem a careful revision. Even in what appears to be the later version, preserved in a single manuscript, the inconsistencies are not wholly removed, though the structure is improved and made more logical. Some of the most delightful poetry is sacrificed in the revision, so that many critics prefer the earlier version. And in fact the charm of the Prologue lies not so much in the orderly development of the argument as in the pleasant description and the happy expression of poetic feeling and fancy.

The legends themselves, regarded as narratives, are much inferior to the stories of Chaucer's latest period. They lack the variety, brilliancy, and dramatic reality of the Troilus or the best of the Canterbury Tales. Yet if compared with any contemporary narrative poems except Chaucer's own, they would be reckoned among the masterpieces of the age. They were very likely written, at least in part, earlier than the Prologue, and represent an important stage in Chaucer's literary development. Composed largely under the influence of Virgil and Ovid, they show a definite advance in narrative structure over the poems of the so-called French period of Chaucer's youth, and though they have not the interest of his more independent works, yet if read attentively and compared with their sources they reveal great care in translation and no small degree of artistry. From his painstaking study and imitation of Ovid Chaucer profited in the niceties of observation and expression.

The monotonous theme of the legend — the praise of faithful women — and its conventional treatment make the stories tiresome to the modern reader, and Chaucer himself appears to have lost interest in them, though he may never have deliberately abandoned them. The introduction to the Man of Law's Tale implies that while occupied with the Canterbury Tales he still had in mind the composition of more lives of good women, and he appears to have revised the Prologue as late as 1394. But he did not actually bring the series to completion, and we may well suppose that it was simply superseded in his interest by the Canterbury Tales. Indeed critics have questioned whether Chaucer could ever have felt real enthusiasm for the Legend, whether it was ever anything more than a concession to contemporary taste, or perhaps to a royal command. One scholar has gone so far as to suggest that Chaucer composed the work from the outset with satirical purpose — writing, so to speak, with his tongue in his cheek. Some of the good women, this writer reminds us, were anything but good, being guilty of murder and other crimes. Chaucer selected them and praised them, he argues, precisely for the purpose of making his ostensible defense of women ridiculous, and so of perpetrating a huge joke upon critics and patrons. This attempt to find unrecognized humor in the Legend, and so to rescue it from the charge of dullness, even if it seemed needful, is ill-advised. For there can be no doubt that in the mind of Chaucer and his contemporaries the heroines he celebrates were good in the only sense that counted for the purpose in hand — they were faithful followers of the god of Love. The rubric “Explicit Legenda Cleopataras Marturis” has a humor for us that it would hardly have had for the readers at the court of Richard II.

Apart from the real interest of its substance, the Legend of Good Women is an important landmark in versification. Chaucer, always an experimenter in meter, here employed — for the first time in English, so far as is known — the decasyllabic couplet, the principal verse-form of the Canterbury Tales and the “heroic couplet” of a long line of English poets.

THE LEGEND OF GOOD WOMEN

THE PROLOGUE

TEXT F

A thousand tymes have I herd men telle That ther ys joy in hevene and peyne in helle,
And I acorde wel that it ys so,
But, natheles, yet wot I wel also That ther nis noon dwellyng in this con-tree, 5
That eyther hath in hevene or helle ybe,
Ne may of hit noon other weyes witen,
But as he hath herd seyde, or founde it
 writen,
For by assay ther may no man it preve
But God forbode but men shulde leve 10
Wel more thyng then men han seen with yel
Men shal not wenen every thyng a lye
But yf himself yt seeth, or elles dooth,
For, God wot, thyng is never the lasse sooth,
'Thogh every wight ne may it nat ysee 15
Bernard the monk ne saugh nat all, pardee!
Than mote we to bokes that we fynde, Thurgh whiche that olde thynges ben in mynde,

TEXT G

A thousand sythes have I herd men telle That there is joye in hevene and peyne in
 helle,
And I acorde wel that it be so,
But natheles, this wot I wel also,
That there ne is non that dwelleth in this contre, 5
That eyther hath in helle or hevene ybe,
Ne may of it non other weyes witen,
But as he hath herd seyde or founde it
 writen,
For by assay there may no man it preve
But Goddes forbode, but men shulde leve 10 Wel more thyng than men han seyn with yel
Men shal nat wenen every thyng a lye,
For that he say it nat of yore ago
God wot, a thyng is nevere the lesse so,
Thow every wyght ne may it nat ysee 15
Bernard the monk ne say nat all, pardee!
Thanne mote we to bokes that we fynde, Thourgh whiche that olde thynges ben in
 mynde,

And to the doctrine of these olde wyse,
Yeve credence, in every skylful wise, 20
That tellen of these olde appoved stories
Of holynesse, of regnes, of victories,
Of love, of hate, of other sondry thynges,
Of whiche I may not maken rehersynges
And yf that olde bokes were awaye, 25
Yloren were of remembraunce the keye
Wel ought us thanne honouren and beleve
These bokes, there we han noon other preve

And as for me, though that I konne but
lyte,

On bokes for to rede I me delyte, 30
And to hem yive I feyth and ful credence,
And in myn herte have hem in reverence
So hertely, that ther is game noon
That fro my bokes maketh me to goon,
But yt be seldom on the holyday, 35
Save, certeynly, whan that the month of
May

Is comen, and that I here the foules synge,
And that the floures gynnen for to sprynge,
Farewel my bok, and my devocoun!

Now have I thanne eek this condicioun
That, of al the floures in the mede, 41 Thanne love I most these floures white and
rede,

Swiche as men callen daysyes in our toun
To hem have I so gret affecioun,
As I seyde erst, whanne comen is the
May, 45

That in my bed ther daweth me no day
That I nam up and walkyng in the mede
To sen this flour ayen the sonne sprede, Whan it upryseth erly by the morwe
That blisful sighte softneth al my sorwe, 50
So glad am I, whan that I have presence
Of it, to doon it alle reverence,
As she that is of alle floures flour,
Fulfilled of al vertu and honour,
And evere ilyke faire, and fresch of hewe,
And I love it, and ever ylike newe, 56
And evere shal, til that myn herte dye
Al swere I nat, of this I wol nat lye, Ther loved no wight hotter in his lyve
And whan that hit ys eve, I renne blyve, 60
As sone as evere the sonne gynneth weste,
To sen this flour, how it wol go to reste,
For fere of nyght, so hateth she derknesse

And to the doctryne of these olde wyse
Yeven credence, in every skylful wyse, 20
And trowen on these olde appoved storyes
Of holynesse, of regnes, of victories,
Of love, of hate, of other sondry thynges,
Of whiche I may nat make rehersynges
And if that olde bokes weren awaye, 25
Yloren were of remembrance the keye
Wel oughte us thanne on olde bokes leve, There as there is non other assay by
preve

And as for me, though that my wit be lite,

On bokes for to rede I me delyte, 30
And in myn herte have hem in reverence,
And to hem yeve swich lust and swich credence

That there is wel unethe game non
That fro my bokes make me to gon,
But it be other upon the halyday, 35
Or ellis in the joly tyme of May,
Whan that I here the smale foules synge,
And that the floures gynne for to sprynge
Farwel my stodye, as lastyng that sesoun!

Now have I therto this condicioun, 40
That, of alle the floures in the mede, Thanne love I most these floures white and
rede,

Swyche as men calle dayesyys in oure toun
To hem have I so gret affecioun,
As I seyde erst, whan comen is the
May, 45

That in my bed there daweth me no day
That I n'am up and walkyng in the mede
To sen these floures agen the sonne sprede, Whan it up ryseth by the morwe shene,
The longe day thus walkyng in the
grene 50

And whan the sonne gynneth for to weste, Thanne closeth it, and draweth it to reste,
So sore it is afered of the nyght,
Til on the morwe, that it is dayes light!
This dayesye, of alle floures flour, 55

Hire chere is pleynly sprad in the bright-
nesse

Of the sonne, for ther yt wol unclose 65 Allas, that I ne had Englyssh, ryme or
prose,

Suffisant this flour to preyse aryght!
But helpeth, ye that han konnyng and
myght,

Ye lovers that kan make of sentement,
In this cas oghte ye be diligent 70

To forthren me somewhat in my labour, Whethir ye ben with the leef or with the flour

For wel I wot that ye han her-biforn
Of making ropen, and lad away the corn,
And I come after, gleyng here and there,
And am ful glad yf I may fynde an ere 76
Of any goodly word that ye han left
And thogh it happen me rehercen eft
That ye han in your fresshe songes sayd,
Forbereth me, and beth nat evele apayd,
Syn that ye see I do yt in the honour 81
Of love, and eke in service of the flour
Whom that I serve as I have wit or myght

[Cf ll 188-196, below]

She is the cler nesse and the verray lyght That in this derke world me wynt and ledeth 85

The hert in-with my sorwfull brest yow dredeth

And loveth so sore that ye ben verrayly
The maistr esse of my wit, and nothing I My word, my werk ys knyht so in youre bond

That, as an harpe obeieyth to the hond 90
And maketh it soun after his fyngerynge, Ryght so mowe ye oute of myn herte bringe

Swich vois, ryght as yow lyst, to laughe or
pleyne

Be ye my gide and lady sovereyne!
As to myn erthly god to yow I calle, 95
Bothe in this werk and in my sorwes alle

Fulfyld of vertu and of alle honour,
And evere ylike fayr and fresh of hewe,
As wel in wynter as in somer newe,
Fayn wolde I preysen, if I coude aryght,
But wo is me, it lyth nat in my myght! 60

For wel I wot that folk han here-beforn
Of making ropen, and lad away the corn,
And I come after, gleyng here and there,
And am ful glad if I may fynde an ere
Of any goodly word that they han left 65
And if it happe me rehercen eft
That they han in here freshe songes said,
I hope that they wole nat ben evele apayd, Sith it is seyde in fortheryng and honour
Of hem that eyther serven lef or flour 70
For trusteth wel, I ne have nat undertake
As of the lef agayn the flour to make,
Ne of the flour to make ageyn the lef,
No more than of the corn agen the shef,
For, as to me, is lefer non, ne lother 75
I am witholde yt with never nother,
I not who serveth lef, ne who the flour
That nys nothyng the entent of my labour
For this werk is al of another tonne,
Of olde story, er swich strif was begonne 80

But wherfore that I spak, to yive credence

To olde stories and doon hem reverence,
And that men mosten more thyng beleve
Then men may seen at eye, or elles
preve, — 100

That shal I seyn, whanne that I see my tyme,

I may not al at-ones speke in ryme
My besy gost, that thursteth alwey newe To seen this flour so yong, so fressh of heve,

Constreyned me with so gledy desir 105
That in myn herte I feele yet the fir
That made me to ryse, er yt were day —
And this was now the firste morwe of
May —

With dredful hert and glad devocioun,
For to ben at the resureccoun 110
Of this flour, whan that yt shulde unclose Agayn the sonne, that roos as red as rose,
That in the brest was of the beste, that
day,

That Agenores doghtre ladde away

[Cf II 197-210, below]

And down on knes anoon-ryght I me sette, 115

And, as I koude, this fresshe flour I grette, Knelyng alwey, til it unclosed was,
Upon the smale, softe, swote gras,
That was with floures swote enbrouded al,
Of swich swetnesse and swich odour overal,
That, for to speke of gomme, or herbe, or tree, 121

Comparisoun may noon ymaked bee,
For yt surmounteth pleynly alle odoures,
And of riche beaute alle floures
Forgeten hadde the erthe his pore estat 125
Of wynter, that hym naked made and mat,
And with his swerd of cold so sore greved,
Now hath th'atempre sonne all that releved,

That naked was, and clad him new agayn

But wherfore that I spak, to yeve credence

To bokes olde and don hem reverence,
Is for men shulde autoritees beleve, There as there lyth non other assay by
preve

For myn entent is, or I fro yow fare, 85
The naked text in English to declare Of many a story, or elles of many a geste,

As autours seyn, leveth hem if yow leste!

Whan passed was almost the month of
May,

And I hadde romed, al the someres day, 90
The grene medewe, of which that I yow
tolde,

Upon the freshe dayseie to beholde,
And that the sonne out of the south gan weste,

And closed was the flour, and gon to reste,
For derknesse of the nyght, of which she dredde, 95

Hom to myn hous ful swiftly I me spedde,
And in a lytel herber that I have,
Ybenched newe with turves, fresshe ygrave,

I bad men shulde me my couche make,
For deynte of the newe someres sake, 100
I bad hem strowe floures on my bed

Whan I was layd, and hadde myn eyen hed,
I fel aslepe withinne an hour or two

Me mette how I was in the medewe tho,
And that I romed in that same gyse, 105
To sen that flour, as ye han herd devyse Fayr was this medewe, as thoughte me, overal,

With floures sote enbrouded was it al
As for to speke of gomme, or herbe, or tre Comparisoun may non ymaked be, 110
For it surmountede pleynly alle odoures,
And of ryche beaute alle floures

Forgeten hadde the erthe his pore estat
Of wynter, that hym naked made and mat,
And with his swerd of cold so sore hadde greved 115

Now hadde th'atempre sonne al that releved,

And clothed hym in grene al newe ageyn.

The smale foules, of the sesoun fayn, 130
That from the panter and the net ben scaped,

Upon the foweler, that hem made awhaped
In wynter, and distroyed hadde hire brood,
In his dispit hem thoughte yt did hem good

To synge of hym, and in hur song despise
The foule cherl that, for his coveytise, 136
Had hem betrayed with his sophistrye
This was hire song, "The foweler we deffye, And al his craft" And somme songen
clere

Layes of love, that joye it was to here, 140
In worship and in preysunge of hir make,
And for the newe blisful somers sake,
Upon the braunches ful of blosmes softe,
In hire delyt they turned hem ful ofte,
And songen, "Blessed be Seynt Valentyn,
For on this day I chees yow to be myn, 146
Withouten repentyng, myn herte swete!"
And therwithalle hire bekens gonnen meete,
Yeldyng honour and humble obeysaunces
To love, and diden hire other observ-aunces 150

That longeth onto love and to nature,
Construeth that as yow lyst, I do no cure
And thoo that hadde doon unkyndenesse—
As dooth the tydif, for newfangelnesse —
Besoghte mercy of hir trespassyng, 155
And humbly songen hire repentyng,
And sworn on the blosmes to be trewe,
So that hire makes wolde upon hem rewe,
And at the laste maden hire acord
Al founde they Daunger for a tyme a lord, Yet Pitee, thurgh his stronge gentil
myght, 161

Forgaf, and made Mercy passen Ryght, Thurgh innocence and ruled Curtesye
But I ne clepe nat innocence folye,
Ne fals pitee, for vertu is the mene, 165
As Etik seith, in swich maner I mene
And thus thise foweles, voide of al malice, Acordeden to love, and laften vice
Of hate, and songen alle of oon acord, "Welcome, somer, oure governour and lord!" 170

And Zepherus and Flora gentilly
Yaf to the floures, softe and tenderly, Hire swoote breth, and made hem for to sprede,
As god and goddesse of the floury mede,

The smale foules, of the seson fayn,
That from the panter and the net ben skaped, 119

Upon the foulere, that hem made awhaped
In wynter, and distroyed hadde hire brood,
In his dispit hem thoughte it dide hem
good

To synge of hym, and in here song despise
The foule cherl that for his coveytise
Hadde hem betrayed with his sophistrye
This was here song, "The foulere we de-fye" 126

Some songen [layes] on the braunches clere Of love and [May], that joye it was to
here,

In worshipec and in preysyng of hire make,
And for the newe blysfyl somers sake, 130

[They] songen, "Blyssed be Seynt Valen-tyn!"

For on his day I ches yow to be myn, Withoute repentyng, myn herte swete!"
And therwithal here bekens gonne mete,
[Yeldyng] honour and humble obeysaunces,
And after diden othere observaunces 136
Ryht [longyng] onto love and to nature
So ech of hem [doth wel] to creature
This song to herkenen I dide al myn entente,

For-why I mette I wiste what they mente, 140

[Cf ll 71-80, above]

In which me thoghte I myghte, day by day, 175

Duellen alwey, the joly month of May,
Withouten slep, withouten mete or drynke
Adoun ful softely I gan to synke,
And leynge on myn elbowe and my syde,
The longe day I shoop me for t abide 180
For nothing elles, and I shal nat lye,
But for to loke upon the dayesie,
That wel by reson men it calle may
The "dayesye," or elles the "ye of day,"
The emperice and flour of floures alle 185
I pray to God that faire mote she falle,
And alle that loven floures, for hire sake!
But natheles, ne wene nat that I make
In preysing of the flour agayn the leef,
No more than of the corn agayn the sheef,
For, as to me, nys lever noon ne lother 191
I nam withholden yit with never nother,
Ne I not who serveth leef, ne who the flour
Wel browken they her service or labour,
For this thing is al of another tonne, 195
Of olde storye, er swich stryf was begonne

Whan that the sonne out of the south gan weste,
And that this flour gan close and goon to reste

For derknesse of the nyght, the which she dredde,

Hom to myn hous ful swiftly I me spedde
To goon to reste, and erly for to ryse, 201
To seen this flour to sprede, as I devyse
And in a litel herber that I have,
That benched was on turves fressh ygrave,
I bad men sholde me my couche make, 205
For deyntee of the newe someres sake,
I bad hem strawen floures on my bed
Whan I was leyd, and had myn eyen hed,
I fel on slepe within an houre or twoo Me mette how I lay in the medewe 210
thoo,

To seen this flour that I so love and drede,
And from afer com walkyng in the mede
The god of Love, and in his hand a quene,
And she was clad in real habit grene
A fret of gold she hadde next her heer, 215
And upon that a whit corowne she beer
With flourouns smale, and I shal nat lye,
For al the world, ryght as a dayesye Ycorouned ys with white leves lyte,
So were the flowrouns of hire coroune white 220

[Cf ll 93-106, above]

Tyl at the laste a larke song above
"I se," quod she, "the myghty god of Love Lo! yond he cometh! I se his wynges
sprede"

Tho gan I loken endelong the mede, 144
And saw hym come, and in his hond a quene Clothed in real habyt al of grene
A fret of goold she hadde next hyre her
And upon that a whit corone she ber
With many floures, and I shal nat lye,
For al the world, ryght as the dayesye 150
Ycorouned is with white leves lite, Swiche were the floures of hire coroune
white

For of o perle fyn, oriental,
 Hire white coroune was ymaked al,
 For which the white coroune above the
 grene
 Made hire lyk a daysie for to sene,
 Considered eke hir fret of gold above 225
 Yelothed was this myghty god of Love
 In silk, enbrouded ful of grene greves,
 In-with a fret of rede rose-leves,
 The freshest syn the world was first bygone
 His gilte heer was corowned with a sonne, 230
 Insteed of gold, for hevynesse and wyghte Therwith me thoghte his face shoon so
 bryghte
 That wel unnethes myghte I him beholde,
 And in his hand me thoghte I saugh him
 holde
 Two firy dartes, as the gledes rede, 235
 And aungelyke hys wynges saugh I sprede
 And al be that men seyn that blynd ys he,
 Algate me thoghte that he myghte se,
 For sternely on me he gan byholde,
 So that his lokyng dooth myn herte colde
 And by the hand he held this noble quene, 241
 Corowned with whit, and clothed al in
 grene,
 So womanly, so benigne, and so meke,
 That in this world, thogh that men wolde
 seke,
 Half hire beaute shulde men nat fynde 245
 In creature that formed ys by kynde

[Cf II 276-296, below]

For of o perle fyn and oryental Hyre white coroun was ymaked al, For which the white coroun above the
 grene 155
 Made hire lyk a dayesye for to sene,
 Considered ek the fret of gold above
 Yelothed was this myghty god of Love
 Of silk, ybrouded ful of grene greves,
 A garlond on his hed of rose-leves, 160
 Stiked al with lylve floures newe
 But of his face I can not seyn the hewe,
 For sikerly his face shon so bryghte
 That with the glem astoned was the syghte,
 A furlong-wey I myhte hym not beholde
 But at the laste in hande I saw hym
 holde 166
 Two firy dartes, as the gleedes rede,
 And aungellych hys wnges gan he sprede
 And al be that men seyn that blynd is he,
 Algate me thoughte he myghte wel yse, 170
 For sternely on me he gan beholde,
 So that his lokyng doth myn herte colde
 And by the hond he held the noble quene, Corowned with whit, and clothed al in
 grene,
 So womanly, so benygne, and so meke, 175
 That in this world, thogh that men wolde
 seke,
 Half hire beaute shulde men nat fynde
 In creature that formed is by kynde
 Hire name was Alceste the debonayre
 I preye to God that evere falle she fayre!
 For ne hadde confort been of hire presence, 181
 I hadde be ded, withouten any defence,
 For dred of Loves wordes and his chere,
 As, whan tyme is, hereafter ye shal here Byhynde this god of Love, upon this
 grene, 185
 I saw comyng of ladyes nyntene
 In real habyt, a ful esy pas,
 And after hem come of wemen swich a tras That, syn that God Adam had mad of erthe,
 The thridde part, of wemen, ne the ferthe,
 Ne wende I not by possibilite 191
 Hadden evere in this wyde world ybe,
 And trewe of love these wemen were echon
 Now whether was that a wonder thyng, or non,
 That ryght anon as that they gonne espye
 This flour, which that I clepe the dayesye,

And therefore may I seyn, as thinketh me,
This song in preysyng of this lady fre

Balade

Hyd, Absolon, thy gilte tresses clere,
Ester, ley thou thy meknesse al adoun,
Hyd, Jonathas, al thy frendly manere, 251
Penalopee and Marcia Catoun,
Make of youre wifhod no comparysoun, Hyde ye youre beautes, Ysoude and
Eleyne
My lady cometh, that al this may disteyne 255

Thy faire body, lat yt nat appere, Lavyne, and thou, Lucesse of Rome toun,
And Polixene, that boghten love so dere,
And Cleopatre, with al thy passyoun, Hyde ye your trouthe of love and your renoun, 260
And thou, Tisbe, that hast for love swich
peyne
My lady cometh, that al this may disteyne

Herro, Dido, Laudomia, alle yfere,
And Phillis, hangyng for thy Demophoun,
And Canace, espied by thy chere, 265
Ysiphile, betrayed with Jasoun, Maketh of your trouthe neythir boost ne
soun,
Nor Ypermystre or Adriane, ye tweyne
My lady cometh, that al this may dys-
teyne

This balade may ful wel ysongen be, 270
As I have seyde erst, by my lady free,
For certeynly al thise mowe nat suffice
To apperen wyth my lady in no wyse
For as the sonne wole the fyr disteyne,
So passeth al my lady sovereyne, 275
That ys so good, so faire, so debonayre,
I prey to God that ever falle hire faire!
For, nadde comfort ben of hire presence,
I hadde ben ded, withouten any defence,
For drede of Loves wordes and his chere,

Ful sodeynly they stynten alle atones, 197
And knelede adoun, as it were for the nones
And after that they wenten in compas, Daunsyng aboute this flour an esy pas, 200
And songen, as it were in carole-wyse,
This balade, which that I shal yow devyse

Balade

Hyd, Absalon, thy gilte tresses clere,
Ester, ley thou thy meknesse al adoun,
Hyd, Jonathas, al thyn frendly manere, 205
Penelope and Marcia Catoun,
Mak of youre wyfhod no comparisoun, Hyde ye youre beautes, Ysoude and
Eleyne
Alceste is here, that al that may desteyne

Thy fayre body, lat it nat apeere, 210 Laveyne, and thow, Lucesse of Rome
toun,
And Polixene, that boughte love so dere,
Ek Cleopatre, with al thy passyoun, Hide ye youre trouthe in love and youre
renoun,
And thow, Tysbe, that hast for love swich
peyne 215
Alceste is here, that al that may desteyne

Herro, Dido, Laodomya, alle in-fere, Ek Phillis, hangyng for thy Demophoun,
And Canace, espied by thy chere, 220
Ysiphile, betrayed with Jasoun,
Mak of youre trouthe in love no bost ne
soun,
Nor Ypermystre or Adriane, ne pleyne
Alceste is here, that al that may disteyne

Whan that this balade al ysongen was,

[Cf II 179-198, above]

As, when tyme ys, hereafter ye shal here 281

Behynde this god of Love, upon the grene,

I saugh comyng of ladyes nyntene,

In real habit, a ful esy paas,

And after hem coome of wymen swich a traas 285

That, syn that God Adam hadde mad of erthe,

The thridde part, of mankynde, or the ferthe,

Ne wende I not by possibiltee

Had ever in this wide world ybee,

And trewe of love thise women were echon

Now whether was that a wonder thing,
or non, 291

That ryght anon as that they gonne espye

Thys flour, which that I clepe the dayesie,

Ful sodeynly they stynten al attones,

And kneled down, as it were for the nones, 295

And songen with o vois, "Heel and honour

To trouthe of womanhede, and to this flour

That bereth our alder pris in figurynge!

Hire white crowne bereth the witnessynge "

And with that word, a-compas envyroun,

They setten hem ful softly adoun 301

First sat the god of Love, and syth his queene

With the white crowne, clad in grene,

And sithen al the remenaunt by and by,

As they were of estaat, ful curteysly, 305

Ne nat a word was spoken in the place

"The mountaunce of a furlong wey of space

I, knelyng by this flour, in good entente,

Abod to knowen what this peple mente,

As stille as any ston, til at the laste 310

"This god of Love on me hys eyen caste,

And seyde, "Who kneleth there?" and I answerde

"Unto his askynge, whan that I it herde,

And seyde, "Sr it am I," and com him ner, 246

And salwed him Quod he, "What dostow her 315

So nygh myn oune floure, so boldely?

Yt were better worthy, trewely,

A worm to neghen ner my flour than thow "

"And why, sure," quod I, "and yt lyke yow?"

Upon the softe and sote grene gras 225

They setten hem ful softly adoun,

By order alle in compas, enveroun

Fyrst sat the god of Love, and thanne this queene

With the white corone, clad in grene,

And sithen al the remenant by and by, 230

As they were of degre, ful curteysly,

Ne nat a word was spoken in that place

The mountaunce of a furlong-wey of space

I, lenynge faste by under a bente,

Abod to knowe what this peple mente, 235

As stille as any ston, til at the laste

The god of Love on me his eye caste

And seyde "Who restith there?" and J answerde

Unto his axynge, whan that I hym herde

And seyde, "Sire, it am I," and cam hyr ner, 246

And salewede hym Quod he, "What dostow her

In my presence, and that so boldely?

For it were better worthy, trewely,

A worm to comen in my syght than thow "

"And why, sure," quod I, "and it lyke yow?" 246

' For thow," quod he, "art therto nothing able 320

Yt is my ielyke, digne and delytable,
And thow my foo, and al my folk werreyest,

And of myn olde servauntes thow mys-
seyest,

And hynderest hem with thy translacioun,
And lettest folk from hire devocioun 325

To serve me, and holde it folye
To serve Love Thou maist yt nat denye, For in pleyn text, withouten nede of glose,

Thou hast translated the Romaunce of the Rose,

That is an heresyse ayeins my lawe, 330
And makest wise folk fro me withdrawe,

And of Creseyde thou hast seyde as the lyste,

That maketh men to wommen lasse triste,
That ben as trewe as ever was any steel
Of thyn answer a wise the ryght weel, 335

"For thow," quod he, "art therto nothyng able

My servauntes ben alle wyse and honourable

Thow art my mortal fo and me werreyest,
And of myne olde servauntes thow mys-
seyest, 249

And hynderest hem with thy translacyoun,
And lettest folk to han devocoun

To serve me, and holde it folye
To truste on me Thow maist it nat denye,

For in pleyn text, it nedeth nat to glose, Thow hast translated the Romauns of the Rose, 255

That is an heresyse ageyns my lawe,
And makest wise folk fro me withdrawe,

And thynkest in thy wit, that is ful col,
That he nys but a verray propre fol

That loveth paramours, to harde and hote
Wel wot I therby thow begynnyst dote 261

As olde foles, whan here spuryt fayleth, Thanne blame they folk, and wite nat what hem ayleth

Hast thow nat mad in Englysh ek the bok
How that Crisseyde Troylus forsok, 265

In shewynge how that women han don mis?
But natheles, answer me now to this,

Why noldest thow as wel han seyde good-
nesse

Of women, as thow hast seyde wikednesse?
Was there no good matere in thy mynde,

Ne in alle thy bokes ne coudest thow nat
fynde 271

Som story of women that were goode and
trewe?

Yis, God wot, sixty bokes olde and newe
Hast thow thyself, alle ful of storyes grete,

That bothe Romayns and ek Grekes trete Of sundry women, which lyf that they ladde, 276

And evere an hundred goode ageyn oon badde

Thus knoweth God, and alle clerkes eke,
That usen swiche materes for to seke

What seith Valerye, Titus, or Claudyan?
What seith Jerome agayns Jovynyan? 281

How clene maydenes, and how trewe wyves,

How stedefaste widewes durynge alle here
lyves,

Telleth Jerome, and that nat of a fewe,
But I dar seyn, an hundred on a rewe, 285

For thogh thou reneyed hast my lay,
As other wrecches han doon many a day,
By Seynt Venus, that my moder ys,
If that thou lyve, thou shalt repenten this

So cruelly that it shal wel be sene!" 340
Thoo spak this lady, clothed al in grene,
And seyde, "God, ryght of youre curteseye,

Ye moten herken yf he can repleye
Agayns al this that ye have to him meved
A god ne sholde nat thus be agreved, 345
But of hys detee he shal be stable,
And therto gracious and merciable
And yf ye nere a god, that knowen al,
Thanne myght yt be as I yow tellen shal
This man to yow may falsly ben accused, 350

Ther as by right him oughte ben excused
For in youre court ys many a losengeour,

That it is pite for to rede, and routhe,
The wo that they endure for here trouthe
For to hyre love were they so trewe
That, rathere than they wolde take a newe,
They chose to be ded in sondry wyse, 290
And deiden, as the story wol devyse,
And some were brend, and some were cut the hals,

And some dreynt, for they wolden not be fals

For alle keped they here maydenhede,
Or elles wedlok, or here widewehede 295
And this thing was nat kept for holynesse,
But al for verray vertu and clenness,
And for men schulde sette on hem no lak,
And yt they were hethene, al the pak,
That were so sore adrad of alle shame 300
These olde wemen kepte so here name
That in this world I trowe men shal nat
fynde

A man that coude be so trewe and kynde
As was the leste woman in that tyde
What seyth also the epistel of Ovyde 305
Of trewe wyves and of here labour?
What Vincent in his Estorial Mayroure?
Ek al the world of autours maystow here, Cristene and hethene, trete of swich matere,

It nedeth nat al day thus for to endite 310
But yt, I seye, what eyleth the to wryte
The draf of storyes, and forgete the corn?
By Seynt Venus, of whom that I was born,
Although thow reneyed hast my lay,
As othere olde foles many a day, 315

Thow shalt repente it, so that it shal be sene!"

Thanne spak Alceste, the worthyeste queene,

And seyde, "God, ryght of youre curteysye,
Ye moten herkenen if he can repleye Ageyns these poynts that ye han to hym meved 320

A god ne sholde not thus been agreved,
But of his dete he shal be stable,
And therto ryghtful, and ek mercyable
He shal nat ryghtfully his yre wreke, 324
Or he have herd the tother partye speke
Al ne is nat gospel that is to yow pleynd,
The god of Love hereth many a tale fyeynd.
For in youre court is many a losengeour

And many a queynte totelere accusour,
That tabouren in youre eres many a sown,
Ryght after hire ymagynacioun, 355
To have youre dalance, and for envie Thise ben the causes, and I shal not lye Envie ys lavandere of the court alway,
For she ne parteth, neither nyght ne day,
Out of the hous of Cesar, thus seith
Dante, 360
Whoso that gooth, algate she wol nat wante

[Cf ll 350-351, above]

And eke, peraunter, for this man ys nyce,
He myghte doon yt, gessyng no malice,
But for he useth thynges for to make,
Hym rekketh nocht of what matere he take 365

Or him was boden maken thilke tweye Of som persone, and durste yt nat with-
seye,

Or him repenteth outrelly of this
He ne hath nat doon so grevously amys,
To translaten that olde clerkes writen, 370
As thogh that he of malice wolde enditen
Despit of love, and had himself yt wroght This shoold a ryghtwis lord have in his thought,

And nat be lyk tirauntz of Lumbardye,
That han no reward but at tyrannye 375
For he that kyng or lord ys naturel, Hym oghte nat be tiraunt ne crewel,
As is a fermour, to doon the harm he kan
He moste thinke yt is his lige man,

And is his tresour, and his gold in cofre 380
This is the sentenee of the philosophre,
A kyng to kepe his liges in justice,
Withouten doute, that is his office

Al wol he kepe his lordes hire degree,
As it ys ryght and skulful that they bee 385
Enhanced and honoured, and most dere — Fer they bea half-goddes in this world
here —

And many a queynte totelere accusour,
That tabouren in youre eres many a thyng
For hate, or for jelous ymagynyng, 331
And for to han with you som dalyaunce Envye—I preye to God yeve hire mys-chance! —

Is lavender in the grete court alway,
For she ne parteth, neyther nyght ne day,
Out of the hous of Cesar, thus seyth
Dante, 336

Whoso that goth, alwey she mot nat wante
This man to yow may wrongly ben acused,
There as by ryght hym oughte ben excusid
Or elles, sire, for that this man is nyce, 340
He may translate a thyng in no malyce,
But for he useth bokes for to make,
And taketh non hed of what matere he take,

Therefore he wrot the Rose and ek Cris-
seyde

Of innocence, and nyste what he seyde 345
Or hym was boden make thilke tweye
Of som persone, and durste it not withseye,
For he hath write many a bok er this
He ne hath not don so grevously amys
To translate that olde clerkes wryte, 350
As thogh that he of maleys wolde endyte Despit of love, and hadde hymself ywrought

This shulde a ryghtwys lord han in his thought,

And not ben lyk tyraunts of Lumbardye,
That usen wilfulhed and tyrannye 355
For he that kyng or lord is naturel, Hym oghte nat be tyraunt and crewel,
As is a fermour, to don the harm he kan
He moste thynke it is his lige man,
And that hym oweth, of verray dutee, 360
Shewen his peple pleyn benygnete,
And wel to heren here excusacyouns,
And here compleyntes and petyciouns,
In duewe tyme, when they shal it profre
This is the sentence of the philosophre, 365
A kyng to kepe his lyges in justice,
Withouten doute, that is his office
And therto is a kyng ful depe ysworn
Ful many an hundred wynter herebeforn,
And for to kepe his lordes hir degree, 370
As it is ryght and skylful that they be Enhanced and honoured, and most dere —
Fer they bea half-goddes in this world
here —

Yit mot he doon bothe ryght, to poore and ryche,

Al be that hire estaat be nat yliche,
And han of poore folk compassyoun 390

For loo, the gentyl kynde of the lyoun!

For whan a flye offendeth him or biteth,

He with his tayl away the flye smyteth

Al esely, for, of hys genterye,

Hym deyneth not to wreke hym on a flye,

As dooth a curre, or elles another best 396

In noble corage without answere of word,

And weyen every thing by equitye,

And ever have reward to his owen degree

For, syr, yt is no maistrye for a lord 400

To dampne a man without answere of word,

And, for a lord, that is ful foul to use

And if so be he may hym nat excuse,

But asketh mercy with a sorweful herte,

And profereh hum, ryght in his bare

sherte, 405

To ben ryght at your owen jugement,

Than oght a god, by short avyusement,

Consydre his owne honour and hys

trespas

For, syth no cause of deth lyeth in this caas,

Yow oghte to ben the lyghter merciabe,

Leteth youre ire, and beth sumwhat

tretable 411

The man hath served yow of his kunnyng,

And furthred wel youre lawe in his mak-

yng

Al be hit that he kan nat wel endite,

Yet hath he maked lewed folk delyte 415

To serve yow, in preysynge of your name

He made the book that hight the Hous of

Fame,

And eke the Deeth of Blaunche the Duch-

esse,

And the Parlement of Foules, as I gesse,

And al the love of Palamon and Arcite 420

Of Thebes, thogh the storye ys knowen

lyte,

And many an ympne for your halydayes,

That highten balades, roundels, virelayes,

And for to speke of other holynesse,

He hath in prose translated Boece, 425

This shal be don bothe to pore and ryche,

Al be that her estat be nat alyche, 375

And han of pore folk compassioun

For lo, the gentyl kynde of the lyoun!

For whan a flye offendeth hym or byteth,

He with his tayl away the flye smyteth

Al esyly, for, of hys genterye, 380

Hym deyneth nat to wreke hym on a flye,

As doth a curre, or elles another best

In noble corage oughte ben arest,

And weyen every thing by equite,

And evere han reward to his owen degre 385

For, sire, it is no maistrye for a lord

To dampne a man withoute answere of word,

And, for a lord, that is ful foul to use

And if so be he may hym nat excuse,

But axeth mercy with a sorweful herte, 390

And profereh hym, ryght in his bare

sherte,

To been ryght at youre owene jugement,

Than ought a god, by short avisement,

Considere his owene honour and his

trespas

For syth no cause of deth lyth in this cas, 395

Yow oughte to ben the lyghter merciabe,

Leteth youre yre, and beth somwhat

tretable

The man hath served yow of his konnyng,

And forthered wel youre lawe with his makynge

Whil he was yong, he kepte youre estat, 400

I not wher he be now a renegat

But wel I wot, with that he can endyte

He hath maked lewed folk delyte

To serven yow, in preysynge of youre

name

He made the bok that highte the Hous of

Fame, 405

And ek the Deeth of Blaunche the Duchesse,

And the Parlement of Foules, as I gesse,

And al the love of Palamon and Arcite

Of Thebes, thogh the storye is knowen

lite,

And many an ympne for your halydayes,

That highten balades, roundeles, vyre-layes, 411

And, for to speke of other besynesse,

He hath in prose translated Boece,

And of the Wreched Engendrynge of Mankynde,

And maad the lyf also of Seynt Cecile
 He made also, goon ys a gret while,
 Origenes upon the Maudeleyne
 Hym oughte now to have the lesse peyne,
 He hath maad many a lay and many a thing 430

Now as ye be a god, and eke a kyng,
 I, your Alceste, whilom quene of Trace,
 Y aske yow this man, ryght of your grace,
 That ye him never hurte in al his lyve,
 And he shal sweren to yow, and that as blyve, 435

He shal no more agliten in this wyse,
 But he shal maken, as ye wol devyse,
 Of women trewe in lovyng al hire lyve,
 Wherso ye wol, of mayden or of wyve,
 And forthren yow, as muche as he mys-
 seyde 440

Or in the Rose or elles in Creseyde " The god of Love answerede hire thus
 anon

"Madame," quod he, "it is so long agoon
 That I yow knew so charitable and trewe, That never yit, syn that the world was
 newe, 445

To me ne fond y better noon than yee
 If that I wol save my degree,
 I may, ne wol, nat werne your requeste Al lyeth in yow, dooth wyth hym what yow leste

I al foryeve, withouten lenger space, 450
 For whoso yeveth a yifte, or dooth a grace,
 Do it by tyme, his thank ys wel the more
 And demeth ye what he shal doo therfore Goo thanke now my lady here," quod he
 I roos, and doun I sette me on my knee, 455
 And seyde thus, "Madame, the God above
 Foryelde yow, that ye the god of Love
 Han makid me his wraathe to foryive,
 And yeve me grace so longe for to lyve,
 That I may knowe soothly what ye bee, 460
 That han me holpe and put in this degree
 But trewly I wende, as in this cas,
 Naught have aglit, ne doon to love trespas
 For-why a trewe man, withouten drede,
 Hath nat to parten with a theves dede, 465
 Ne a trewe lover oght me not to blame, Thogh that I speke a fals lovere som
 shame

They oghte rather with me for to holde,
 For that I of Creseyde wroot or tolde,

As man may in pope Innocent yfynde, 415
 And mad the lyf also of Seynt Cecile
 He made also, gon is a gret while,
 Orygenes upon the Maudeleyne
 Hym oughte now to have the lesse peyne,
 He hath mad many a lay and many a thyng 420

Now as ye ben a god, and ek a kyng,
 I, youre Alceste, whilom quene of Trace,
 I axe yow this man, ryght of youre grace,
 That ye hym nevere hurte in al his lyve,
 And he shal swere to yow, and that as
 blyve, 425

He shal no more agliten in this wyse,
 But he shal maken, as ye wol devyse,
 Of women trewe in lovyng al here lyve,
 Wherso ye wol, of mayden or of wyve,
 And fortheren yow, as muche as he mys-
 seyde 430

Or in the Rose or elles in Crisseyde "
 The god of Love answerede hire thus
 anon

"Madame," quod he, "it is so longe agon
 That I yow knew so charytable and trewe, That nevere yit, sith that the world was
 newe, 435

To me ne fond I betere non than ye,
 That, if that I wol save my degree,
 I may, ne wol, nat warne youre requeste Al lyth in yow, doth with hym what yow
 leste,

And al foryeve, withoute lenger space 440
 For whoso yeveth a yifte, or doth a grace,
 Do it by tyme, his thank is wel the more
 And demeth ye what he shal doo therfore
 Go thanke now my lady here," quod he

I ros, and doun I sette me on my knee, 445
 And seyde thus, "Madame, the God above
 Foryelde yow, that ye the god of Love
 Han makid me his wraathe to foryive,
 And yeve me grace so longe for to live,
 That I may knowe sothly what ye be, 450
 That han me holpen and put in swich degre
 But trewly I wende, as in this cas,
 Naught have aglit, ne don to love trespas
 For-why a trewe man, withoute drede,
 Hath nat to parte with a theves dede, 455
 Ne a trewe lovere oghte me nat to blame,
 Thogh that I speke a fals lovere som
 shame

They oughte rather with me for to holde,
 For that I of Crisseyde wroot or tolde,

Or of the Rose, what so myn auctour
mente, 470

Algate, God woot, yt was myn entente
To forthren trouthe in love and yt cheryce,

And to ben war fro falsnesse and fro vice
By swich ensample, thus was my men-yngne "

And she answerde, "Lat be thyn arguynge,
For Love ne wol nat countrepleted be 476
In ryght ne wrong, and lerne that at me!
Thow hast thy grace, and hold the ryght
therto

Now wol I seyn what penance thou shalt do

For thy trespas, and understonde yt here Thow shalt, while that thou lyvest, yer by yere, 481

The moste partye of thy tyme spende
In makyng of a glorious legende
Of goode wymmen, maydenes and wyves,
That weren trewe in lovyng al hire
lyves, 485

And telle of false men that hem bytraien,
That al hur lyf ne do nat but assayen
How many women they may doon a shame,
For in youre world that is now holde a game

And thogh the lyke nat a lovebe, 490
Speke wel of love, this penance yve I thee
And to the god of Love I shal so preye
That he shal charge his servantz, by any weye,

To forthren thee, and wel thy labour quyte

Goo now thy wey, this penaunce ys but
lyte 495

And when this book ys maad, yve it the
quene,

On my byhalf, at Eltham or at Sheene " The god of Love gan smyle, and than he sayde

"Wostow," quod he, "wher this be wyf or mayde,

Or queene, or countesse, or of what degre,
That hath so lytel penaunce yven thee, 501
That hast deserved sorer for to smerte?
But pite renneth soone in gentil herte,
That maistow seen, she kytheth what she ys "

And I answered, "Nay, sire, so have I
blys, 505

Or of the Rose, what so myn auctour
mente, 460

Algate, God wot, it was myn entente
To forthere trouthe in love and it cheryce,
And to be war fro falsnesse and fro vice
By swich ensample, thus was my men-
yngne "

And she answerde, "Lat be thyn argu-ynge, 465

For Love ne wol nat counterpletyd be In ryght ne wrong, and lerne this at me!
Thow hast thy grace, and hold the ryght
therto

Now wol I seyn what penaunce thou shalt do

For thy trespas, and understand it here 470 Thow shalt, whil that thou livest, yer by
yere,

The moste partye of thy tyme spende
In makynge of a gloryous legende
Of goode women, maydenes and wyves,
That were trewe in lovyng al here
lyves, 475

And telle of false men that hem betrayen,
That al here lyf ne don nat but assayen
How many wemen they may don a shame,

For in youre world that is now holden
game

And thogh the lesteth nat a lovebe, 480
Spek wel of love, this penaunce yve I thee
And to the god of Love I shal so preye
That he shal charge his servaunts, by any
weye,

To fortheren the, and wel thy labour quite Go now thy wey, thy penaunce is but
lyte " 485

The god of Love gan smyle, and thanne he seyde

"Wostow," quod he, "wher this be wif or
mayde,

Or queen, or countesse, or of what degre,
That hath so lytel penaunce yven the,
That hast deserved sorer for to smerte? 490
But pite renneth sone in gentil herte, That mayst thou sen, she kytheth what she is "

And I answerde, "Nay, sire, so have I
blys,

No moore but that I see wel she is good ”
“That is a trewe tale, by myn hood”

Quod Love, “and that thou knowest wel, pardee,

If yt be so that thou avise the Hastow nat in a book, lyth in thy cheste, 510

The grete goodnesse of the queene Alceste,
That turned was into a dayesye,
She that for hire housbonde chees to dye,
And eke to goon to helle, rather than he,
And Ercules rescued hire, parde, 515
And broght hir out of helle agayn to blys?”
And I answerd ageyn, and sayde, “Yis, Now knowe I hire And is this good Al-ceste,

The dayesye, and myn owene hertes reste?
Now fele I weel the goodnesse of this wyf,
That both aftir hir deth and in hir lyf 521
Hir grete bounte doubleth hire renoun
Wel hath she quyt me myn affeccoun,
That I have to hire flour, the dayesye
No wonder ys thogh Jove hire stellyfyte, 525
As telleth Agaton, for hire goodnesse!
Hire white corowne berith of hyt wittnesse,
For also many vertues hadde shee
As smale flourons in hire corowne bee
In remembrance of hire and in honour 530
Cibella maade the daysye and the flour
Ycrowned al with whit, as men may see,
And Mars yaf to hire corowne reed, pardee,
In stede of rubyes, sette among the white ”

Therwith this queene wex reed for shame a lyte, 535

Whan she was preysed so in hire presence
Thanne seyde Love, “A ful gret negligence
Was yt to the, that ylke tyme thou made ‘Hyd, Absolon, thy tresses,’ in balade,
That thou forgate hire in thi song to sette, Syn that thou art so gretly in hire dette, 541
And wost so wel that kalender ys shee
To any woman that wol lover bee
For she taught al the craft of fyn lovyng,
And namely of wyfhod the lvyng, 545
And al the boundes that she oughte kepe
Thy litel wit was thilke tyme aslepe
But now I charge the, upon thy lyf,
That in thy legende thou make of thys
wyf,

Whan thou hast other smale ymaad before, 550

And far now wel, I charge the namore

No more but that I se wel she is good ”
“That is a trewe tale, by myn hood!” 495

Quod Love, “and that thow knowest wel, parde,

Yif it be so that thow avise the Hast thow nat in a bok, lyth in thy cheste,
The grete goodnesse of the queene Alceste,
That turned was into a dayesye, 500
She that for hire husbonde ches to dye,
And ek to gon to helle rather than he,
And Ercules rescued hire, parde,
And broghte hyre out of helle ageyn to
blys?”

And I answerde ayen, and seyde, “Yis, 505
Now knowe I hire And is this goode Alceste,

The dayesye, and myn owene hertes reste?
Now fele I wel the goodnesse of this wyf,
That bothe after hire deth and in hire lyf
Hire grete bounte doubleth hire renoun 510
Wel hath she quit me myn affeccoun,
That I have to hire flour the dayesye
No wonder is thogh Jove hire stellfyte,
As telleth Agaton, for hyre goodnesse!
Hire white coroun bereth of it wittnesse, 515
For also manye vertues hadde shee
As smale flourys in hyre coroun be
In remembrance of hire and in honour
Cibella made the dayesye and the flour
Ycrowned al with whit, as men may se, 520
And Mars yaf to hire corone red, parde,
In stede of rubies, set among the white ”

Therwith this queene wex red for shame a lyte,

Whan she was preysed so in hire presence Thanne seyde Love, “A ful gret neglygence 525

Was it to the, to write unstedefastnesse
Of women, sith thow knowest here good-
nesse

By pref, and ek by storyes herebyform
Let be the chaf, and writ wel of the corn
Why noldest thow han writen of Alceste,
And laten Criseide ben aslepe and reste?
For of Alceste shulde thy wrytyng be, 532 Syn that thow wost that calandier is she
Of goodnesse, for she taughte of fyn lov-
yng,

And namely of wifhod the lvyng, 538
And alle the boundes that she oughte kepe
Thy litel wit was thilke tyme aslepe
But now I charge the, upon thy lyf,

But er I goo, thus muche I wol the telle
Ne shal no trewe lover come in helle
These other ladies sittinge here arowe Ben in thy balade, yf thou kanst hem
knowe, 555

And in thy bookes alle thou shalt hem
fynde

Have hem now in thy legende al in mynde,
I mene of hem that ben in thy knowynge
For here ben twenty thousand moo sittynge

Than thou knowest, goode wommen alle,
And trewe of love, for oght that may byfalle 561

Make the metres of hem as the lest —
I mot goon hom (the sonne draweth west)

To paradys, with al this companye —
And serve alwey the fresshe dayesy 565
At Cleopatre I wol that thou begynne,
And so forth, and my love so shal thou wynne

For lat see now what man that lover be, Wol doon so strong a peyne for love as she
I wot wel that thou maist nat al yt ryme,
That swiche lovers diden in hire tyme, 571
It were to long to reden and to here
Suffiseth me thou make in this manere,
That thou reherce of al hir lyf the grete,
After these olde auctours lysten for to trete
For whoso shal so many a storye telle, 576
Sey shortly, or he shal to longe dwelle ”
And with that word my bokes gan I take,
And ryght thus on my Legende gan I make

That in thy legende thou make of this wif, Whan thou hast othere smale mad by-fore, 540
And far now wel, I charge the no more

At Cleopatre I wol that thou begynne,
And so forth, and my love so shalt thou
wynne ”

And with that word, of slep I gan awake,
And ryght thus on my Legende gan I
make 545

Explicit prohemium

I

THE LEGEND OF CLEOPATRA

Incipt legenda Cleopatrie, Martiris, Egypti regine

After the deth of Tholome the kyng, 580
That al Egypt hadde in his govornyng, Regned his queene Cleopataras,
Tyl on a tyme befel there swich a cas,
That out of Rome was sent a senatour,

For to conqueren regnes and honour 585
Unto the toun of Rome, as was usaunce,
To han the world at hire obeysaunce,
And soth to seyne, Antonus was his name
So fil it, as Fortune hym oughte a shame,

Whan he was fallen in prosperite, 590 Rebel unto the toun of Rome is he
 And over al this, the suster of Cesar,
 He lafte hire falsly, or that she was war,
 And wolde algates han another wyf,
 For which he tok with Rome and Cesar stryf 595

Natheles, for sothe, this ilke senatour
 Was a ful worthy gentil werreyour,
 And of his deth it was ful gret damage
 But love hadde brought this man in swich a rage,

And hym so narwe bounden in his las, 600
 Al for the love of Cleopataras,
 That al the world he sette at no value Hym thoughte there nas nothyng to hym so due

As Cleopatras for to love and serve, 604
 Hym roughte nat in armes for to sterve
 In the defence of hyre and of hire ryght
 This noble queene ek lovede so this knyght, Thourgh his desert, and for his chyvalrye,
 As certeynly, but if that bokes lye,
 He was, of persone and of gentillesse, 610
 And of discrecioun and hardynesse, Worthu to any wyght that liven may,
 And she was fayr as is the rose in May
 And, for to make shortly is the beste, She wax his wif, and hadde hym as hire
 leste 615

The weddyng and the feste to devyse,
 To me, that have ytake swich emprise
 Of so many a story for to make,
 It were to longe, lest that I shulde slake Of thyng that bereth more effect and charge, 620

For men may overlade a ship or barge And forthy to th'effect thanne wol I skyppe,

And al the remenaunt, I wol lete it slippe
 Octovyan, that wod was of this dede, 625
 Shop hym an ost on Antony to lede
 Al uterly for his destruccioun
 With stoute Romeyns, crewel as lyoun, To ship they wente, and thus I lat hem sayle

Antonius was war, and wol nat fayle To meten with these Romeyns, if he
 may, 630

Tok ek his red, and bothe, upon a day,
 His wif and he, and al his ost, forth wente
 To shipe anon, no lengere they ne stente,

And in the se it happede hem to mete Up goth the trompe, and for to shoute and shete, 635

And peynen hem to sette on with the sunne

With gryselly soun out goth the grete gonne,
 And heterly they hurtelen al atones,
 And from the top doun come the grete stones

In goth the grapenel, so ful of crokes, 640
 Among the ropes renne the sheryngehokes

In with the polax preseth he and he,
 Byhynde the mast begynnyth he to fle,
 And out ageyn, and dryveth hym overbord,

He styngeth hym upon his speres ord, 645
 He rent the seyl with hokes lyke a sithe,
 He bryngeth the cuppe, and biddeth hem be blythe,

He poureth pesen upon the haches shidere,
 With pottes ful of lyme they gon togidere,
 And thus the longe day in fyght they spende, 650

Tyl al the laste, as every thyng hath ende, Antony is schent, and put hym to the flyghte,

And al his folk to-go, that best go myghte Fleth ek the queen, with al hire purple sayl,

For strokes, whiche that wente as thikke as hayl, 655

No wonder was she myghte it nat endure
 And whan that Antony saw that aventure,
 "Allas," quod he, "the day that I was born!

My worshipe in this day thus have I lorn"
 And for dispeyr out of his wit he sterte, 660 And rof hymself anon thourghout the
 herte,

Or that he ferther wente out of the place
 His wif, that coude of Cesar have no grace,
 To Egypt is fled for drede and for destresse
 But herkeneth, ye that speken of kynde-
 nesse, 665

Ye men that falsly sweren many an oth That ye wol deye, if that youre love be wroth,

Here may ye sen of women which a
 trouthe!

This woful Cleopatre hath mad swich routh

That ther is tonge non that may it telle
 But on the morwe she wolde no lengere
 dwelle, 671
 But made hire subtyl werkmen make a shryne
 Of alle the rubyes and the stonys fyne
 In al Egypte, that she coude espie,
 And putte ful the shryne of spicerye, 675
 And let the cors enbaume, and forth she fette
 This dede cors, and in the shryne it shette
 And next the shryne a pit thanne doth she grave,
 And alle the serpentis that she myghte have,
 She putte hem in that grave, and thus she
 seyde 680
 "Now, love, to whom my sorweful herte obeyde
 So ferforthly that from that blisful houre
 That I yow swor to ben al frely youre — I mene yow, Antonius, my knyght — That nevere wakyng, in the day or nyght, 685
 Ye nere out of myn hertes remembraunce,

For wel or wo, for carole or for daunce,
 And in myself this covenaunt made I tho,
 That ryght swich as ye felten, wel or wo,
 As fer forth as it in my power lay, 690
 Unreprovable unto my wyfhod ay,
 The same wolde I fele, lyf or deth, —
 And thilke covenant, whil me lasteth breth,
 I wol fulfille, and that shal ben wel sene,
 Was nevere unto hire love a trewer
 quene" 695
 And with that word, naked, with ful good
 herte,
 Among the serpentis in the pit she sterte,
 And there she ches to have hire buryng Anon the nadderis gonne hire for to styng,
 And she hire deth receyveth wrth good cheere, 700
 For love of Antony that was hire so dere
 And this is storyal soth, it is no fable Now, or I fynde a man thus trewe and stable,
 And wol for love his deth so frely take,
 I preye God let oure hedes nevere ake!
 Amen 705

Explicit Legenda Cleopatre, martiris

II

THE LEGEND OF THISBE

Incipit Legenda Tesbe Babilonie, martiris

At Babiloyne whylom fil it thus,
 The whyche toun the queen Semyramus Let dychen al aboute, and walles make Ful hye, of hard tiles wel ybake
 There were dwellyng in this noble toun 710
 Two lordes, whiche that were of gret
 renoun,
 And woneden so nygh, upon a grene,
 That there nas but a ston-wal hem betweene,
 As ofte in grete tounes is the wone
 And, soth to seyne, that o man hadde a sone, 715
 Of al that lond oon of the lustyeste
 That other hadde a doughter, the fayreste

That tho was in that lond estward dwell-
 yng
 The name of everych gan to other spryng
 By women that were neighbores aboute
 For in that contre yit, withouten doute, 721
 Maydenes been ykept, for jelosye,
 Ful streyte, lest they diden som folye
 This yonge man was called Piramus, And Tysbe hight the maide, Naso seyth
 thus, 725
 And thus by report was hire name yshove
 That, as they wex in age, wex here love
 And certeyn, as by resoun of hire age, There myghte have ben bytwixe hem maryage, 729

But that here fadres nolde it nat assente,
 And bothe in love ylyke sore they brente,
 That non of alle hyre frendes myght it lette,

But pryvvy som tyme yt they mette
 By sleighte, and spoken som of here desyr,
 As, wry the glede, and hotter is the fyr, 735
 Forbode a love, and it is ten so wod

This wal, which that bitwixe hem bothe
 stod,

Was clove a-two, ryght from the top adoun,
 Of olde tyme of his fundacioun,
 But yt this clyfte was so narw and lyte, 740
 It nas nat sene, deere ynogh a myte
 But what is that that love can nat espye?

Ye lovers two, if that I shal nat lye,
 Ye fouden first this litel narwe clifte,
 And with a soun as softe as any shryfte, 745
 They lete here wordes thourgh the clifte
 pace,

And tolden, whil that they stode in the place,

Al here compleynt of love, and al here wo,
 At every tyme whan they durste so
 Upon that o syde of the wal stod he, 750
 And on that other side stod Thesbe,
 The swote soun of other to receyve
 And thus here wardeyns wolde they deceive,

And every day this wal they wolde threte,
 And wisse to God that it were down ybete Thus wolde they seyn "Alas, thow wik-kede wal!" 755

Thorgh thyn envye thow us lettest al
 Why nyht thow cleve, or fallen al a-two?
 Or at the leste, but thou woldist so,
 Yt woldest thow but ones lat us mete, 760
 Or ones that we mayghte kysen swete, Thanne were we covered of oure cares colde
 But, natheles, yt be we to thee holde,
 In as muche as thow sufferest for to gon Oure wordes thourgh thy lym and ek thy ston 765

Yt oughte we with the been wel apayd"
 And whan these ydele wordes weren sayd,
 The colde wal they wolden kysse of ston,
 And take here leve and forth they wolden gon

And this was gladly in the eve-tyde, 770
 Or wonder erly, lest men it espyde
 And longe tyme they wroughte in this manere,

Tyl on a day, whan Phebus gan to cleere—
 Aurora with the stremes of hire hete Hadde dreyed up the dew of herbes
 wete— 775

Unto this clyft, as it was wont to be,
 Com Piramus, and after com Thysbe,
 And plyghten trouthe fully in here fey
 That ilke same nyght to stele away,
 And to begile here wardeyns everichon, 780
 And forth out of the cite for to goon,
 And, for the feldes ben so brode and wide,
 For to mete in o place at o tyde,
 They sette mark here metynge sholde be There kyng Nynus was grave, under a tre,— 785

For olde payens, that idoles heryed, Useden tho in feldes to ben beryed,—
 And faste by this grave was a welle
 And, shortly of this tale for to telle,
 This covenant was affermed wonder faste, 790

And longe hem thoughte that the sonne
 laste,

That it nere gon under the se adoun
 This Tisbe hath so gret affeccioun
 And so gret haste Piramus to se,
 That whan she say hire tyme myghte be,
 At nyght she stal away ful pryvvyly, 795
 With hire face ywmpyl subtyly,
 For alle hire frendes—for to save hire
 trouthe—

She hath forsake, allas! and that is routhe
 That evere woman wolde ben so
 trewe 800

To truste man, but she the bet hym knewe!
 And to the tre she goth a ful good pas,
 For love made hire so hardy in this cas,
 And by the welle adoun she gan hyre
 dresse

Allas! than cometh a wilde lyoness 805
 Out of the wode, withoute more arest, With bloody mouth, of strangelynge of a best,

To drynken of the welle there as she sat
 And whan that Tisbe hadde espyed that,
 She rist hire up, with a ful dreary herte, 810
 And in a cave with dredful fot she sterte,
 For by the mone she say it wel withalle
 And as she ran, hire wmpyl let she falle,
 And tok non hed, so sore she was awhaped,
 And ek so glad of that she was escaped, 815

And thus she sit, and darketh wonder style

Whan that this lyonesse hath dronke hire fille,

Aboute the welle gan she for to wynde,
And ryght anon the wympe! gan she fynde,
And with hire bloody mouth it al torente Whan this was don, no lengere she ne
stente, 821

But to the wode hire weye thanne hath she nome

And at the laste this Piramus is come,
But al to longe, allas! at hom was he
The mone shon, and he myghte wel yse, 825

And in his wey, as that he com ful faste,
His eye to the ground adoun he caste,
And in the sond, as he byheld adoun,
He sey the steppes brode of a lyoun,
And in his herte he sodeynly agros, 830
And pale he wex, therwith his heer aros,
And ner he com, and fond the wimpel torn
"Allas," quod he, "the day that I was born!

This o nyght wol us lovers bothe sle!
How shulde I axe mercy of Tisbe, 835
Whan I am he that have yow slayn, allas!
My bidding hath yow slayn, as in this cas Allas! to hidde a woman gon by nyghte
In place there as peril falle myghte!

And I so slow! allas, I ne hadde be 840
Here in this place a furlong wey or ye!
Now what lyoun that be in this forest,
My body mote he renten, or what best That wilde is, gnawe mote he now myn
herte!"

And with that word he to the wympe!
sterste, 845

And kiste it ofte, and wep on it ful sore,
And seyde, "Wympe!, allas! there is no more

But thou shalt feele as wel the blod of me
As thou hast felt the bledyng of Tisbe!"
And with that word he smot hym to the
herte 850

The blod out of the wounde as brode sterste
As water, whan the condit broken is Now Tisbe, which that wiste nat of this,

But sittinge in hire drede, she thoughte
thus

"If it so falle that my Piramus 855
Be comen huder, and may me not yfynde,

He may me holde fals and ek unkynde"
And out she cometh and after hym gan esprien,

Bothe with hire herte and with hire yen,
And thoughte, "I wol hym tellen of my
drede, 860

Bothe of the lyonesse and al my deede"
And at the laste hire love thanne hath she founde,

Betyng with his heles on the grounde,
Al bloody, and therwithal a-bak she sterste,
And lik the wawes quappe gan hire
herte, 865

And pale as box she was, and in a throwe
Avised hire, and gan hym wel to knowe,
That it was Piramus, hire herte deere
Who coude wryte which a dedly cheere Hath Tisbe now, and how hire heer she rente, 870

And how she gan hireselve to turmente,
And how she lyth and swouneth on the
grounde,

And how she wep of teres ful his wounde,
How mede!eth she his blod with hire com-pleynate,

How with his blod hireselve gan she peynate, 875

How clyppeth she the deede cors, allas!
How doth this woful Tisbe in this cas!
How kysseth she his frosty mouth so cold!
"Who hath don this, and who hath been so bold

To sle my leef? O spek, my Piramus! 880
I am thy Tisbe, that the calleth thus"
And therwithal she lifteth up his hed

This woful man, that was nat fully ded, Whan that he herde the name of Tisbe cryen,

On hire he caste his hevvy, dedly yen, 885
And doun agayn, and yeldeth up the gost Tysbe ryst up withouten noyse or bost,
And saw hire wympe! and his empty shethe,

And ek his swerd, that hym hath don to dethe

Thanne spak she thus "My woful hand," quod she, 890

"Is strong ynogh in swich a werk to me,
For love shal yeve me strengthe and hardy-
nesse

To make my wounde large ynogh, I gesse.
I wol thee folwe ded, and I wol be Felawe and cause ek of thy deth," quod

 she 895
 "And thogh that nothing, save the deth only,
 Mighte thee fro me departe trewely,
 Thow shalt no more departe now fro me
 Than fro the deth, for I wol go with thee
 And now, ye wrechede jelos fadres oure, 900
 We that whilom were children youre,
 We preyen yow, withouten more envye,
 That in o grave yfere we moten lye, Sith love hath brought us to this pitous
 ende
 And ryghtwis God to every love se,
 That loveth trewely, more prosperite 906
 Than evere yit had Piramus and Tisbe!
 And lat no gentil woman hyre assure

To putten hire in swich an aventure
 But God forbode but a woman can 910
 Ben as trewe in lovynge as a man!
 And for my part, I shal anon it kythe"
 And with that word his swerd she tok as swythe,
 That warm was of hire loves blod, and hot,
 And to the herte she hureselven smot 915
 And thus are Tisbe and Piramus ygo
 Of trewe men I fynde but fewe mo
 In alle my bokes, save this Piramus,
 And therefore have I spoken of hym thus
 For it is deynte to us men to fynde 920 A man that can in love been trewe and
 kynde
 Here may ye se, what love se he be,
 A woman dar and can as wel as he

Explicit Legenda Tesbe

III

THE LEGEND OF DIDO

Incipt Legenda Didonis martiris, Cartaginis Regine

Glorye and honour, Virgil Mantoan,
 Be to thy name! and I shal, as I can, 925
 Folwe thy lanterne, as thow gost byforn,
 How Eneas to Dido was forsworn
 In Naso and Eneydos wol I take The tenor, and the grete effectes make Whan Troye brought was to destruccioun By Grekes sleighte, and namely by Synoun, 931
 Feynyng the hors offered unto Mynerve, Thourgh which that many a Trojan moste sterve,
 And Ector hadde, after his deth, apeered,
 And fyr, so wod it myghte nat been steered,
 In al the noble tour of Yhoun, 936
 That of the cite was the chef dongeoun,
 And al the contre was so lowe ybrought,
 And Priamus the kyng fordon and nought,
 And Enyas was charged by Venus 940
 To fleen away, he tok Ascanus, That was his sone, in his ryght hand, and fledde,

And on his bak he bar, and with hym ledde,
 His olde fader ycleped Anchises,
 And by the weye his wif Creusa he les 945
 And moche sorwe hadde he in his mynde,
 Or that he coude his felaweshipe fynde
 But at the laste, whan he hadde hem
 founde,
 He made hym redy in a certeyn stounde,
 And to the se ful faste he gan him hie, 950
 And sayleth forth with al his companye
 Toward Ytaylor, as wolde his destinee
 But of his adventures in the se
 Nis nat to purpos for to speke of here,
 For it acordeth nat to my matere 955
 But, as I seyde, of hym and of Dido Shal be my tale, til that I have do So longe he saylede in the salte se Tyl in Libie unneth aryvede he,
 With shipes sevene and with no more navye, 960
 And glad was he to londe for to hie,
 So was he with the tempest al toshake

And whan that he the haven hadde ytake,
 He hadde a knyght, was called Achates,
 And hym of al his felawshipe he ches 965
 To gon with hym, the cuntre for t'espie
 He tok with hym no more companye,
 But forth they gon, and lafte his shipes ryde,

His fere and he, withouten any gyde
 So longe he walketh in this wilderness, 970

Til at the laste he mette an hunteresse
 A bowe in hande and arwes hadde she,
 Hire clothes cutted were unto the kne
 But she was yit the fayreste creature
 That evere was yformed by Nature, 975
 And Eneas and Achates she grette,
 And thus she to hem spak, whan she hem mette

"Saw ye," quod she, "as ye han walked wyde,

Any of my sustren walke yow besyde
 With any wilde bor or other best, 980

That they han hunted to, in this forest, Ytucked up, with arwes in hire cas?"

"Nay, sothly, lady," quod this Eneas,
 'But by thy beaute, as it thynketh me, Thow myghtest nevere erthly woman
 be, 985

But Phebus syster art thou, as I gesse
 And, if so be that thou be a goddessse,
 Have mercy on oure labour and oure wo "
 "I n'am no goddessse, sothly," quod she tho, 989

"For maydens walken in this contre here,
 With arwes and with bowe, in this manere

This is the reyne of Libie, there ye ben,
 Of which that Dido lady is and queen " —

And shortly tolde hym al the occasoun
 Why Dido cam into that regioun, 995

Of which as now me lesteth nat to ryme,
 It nedeth nat, it were but los of tyme

For this is al and som, it was Venus,
 His owene moder, that spak with hum thus,

And to Cartage she bad he sholde hym dighte, 1000

And vanysed anon out of his syghte
 I coude folwe, word for word, Virgule

But it wolde lasten al to longe while This noble queen, that cleped was Dido,

That whilom was the wif of Sytheo, 1005
 That fayrer was than is the bryghte sonne,

This noble toun of Cartage hath bigonne,
 In which she regneth in so gret honour,

That she was holden of alle queenes flour,
 Of gentillesse, of fredom, of beaute, 1010
 That wel was hym that myghte hire ones se,

Of kynges and of lordes so desyred,
 That al the world hire beaute hadde yfyred,
 She stod so wel in every wightes grace

Whan Eneas was come unto that place, 1015

Unto the mayster temple of al the toun,
 Ther Dido was in hire devocoun,

Ful pryvvyly his weye than hath he nome Whan he was in the large temple come,

I can nat seyn if that it be possible, 1020
 But Venus hadde hym maked invysible —

Thus seyth the bok, withouten any les
 And whan this Eneas and Achates

Hadden in this temple ben overal, Thanne founde they, depeynted on a wal, 1025

How Troye and al the lond destroyed was
 "Allas, that I was born!" quod Eneas,

"Throughout the world oure shame is kid so wyde,

Now it is peynted upon every syde
 We, that weren in prosperite, 1030

Ben now desclandred, and in swich degre,

No lenger for to lyven I ne kepe "
 And with that word he brast out for to wepe

So tenderly that routhe it was to sene
 This freshe lady, of the cite queene, 1035

Stod in the temple, in hire estat real,
 So rychevely and ek so fayr withal,

So yong, so lusty, with hire eyen glade,
 That, if that God, that hevене and erthe made,

 Wolde han a love, for beaute and good-

nesse, 1040
 And womanhod, and trouthe, and semely-

nesse,
 Whom shulde he loven but this lady swete?

Ther nys no woman to hym half so mete Fortune, that hath the world in governance,

 Hath sodeynly brought in so newe a chaunce 1045

That nevere was ther yit so fremde a cas
 For al the companye of Eneas,

Which that he wende han loren in the se,
 Aryved is nat fer from that cite,

For which, the gretteste of his lordes some 1050

By aventure ben to the cite come,
Unto that same temple, for to seke
The queene, and of hire socour to beseke, Swich renoun was there sprongen of hire goodnesse

And whan they hadden told al here
distresse, 1055

And al here tempest and here harde cas,
Unto the queen apeered Eneas,
And openly biknew that it was he Who hadde joye thanne but his meyne,
That hadde founde here lord, here gover-nour? 1060

The queen saugh that they dide hym swych honour,

And hadde herd ofte of Eneas er tho,
And in hire herte she hadde routhe and wo
That evere swich a noble man as he

Shal ben disherited in swich degre, 1065

And saw the man, that he was lyk a knyght,
And suffisaunt of persone and of myght,
And lyk to been a verray gentil man,

And wel his wordes he besette can,
And hadde a noble visage for the nones, 1070

And formed wel of braunes and of bones
For after Venus hadde he swich fayr-
nesse

That no man myghte be half so fayr, I
gesse,

And wel a lord he semede for to be
And, for he was a straunger, somewhat she Lakede hym the bet, as, God do bote, 1076

To som folk ofte newe thyng is sote
Anon hire herte hath pite of his wo,
And with that pite love com in also,

And thus, for pite and for gentillesse, 1080
Refreshed moste he been of his distresse
She seyde, certes, that she sory was

That he hath had swych peryl and swich
cas,

And, in hire frendly speche, in this manere
She to hym spak, and seyde as ye may
here 1085

“Be ye nat Venus sone and Anchises?
In good feyth, al the worshipe and encres
That I may goodly don yow, ye shal have Youre shupes and youre meyne shal I save”

And many a gentil word she spak hym to,

And comaunded hire messageres to go 1091
The same day, withouten any fayle,
His shippes for to seke, and hem vitayle
Ful many a beste she to the shippes sente,
And with the wyn she gan hem to pre-sente, 1095

And to hire royal paleys she hire spedde,
And Eneas alway with hire she ledde
What nedeth yow the feste to descrive?
He nevere beter at ese was in his lyve Ful was the feste of deyntees and rychesse, 1100

Of instruments, of song, and of gladnesse,
Of many an amorous lokyng and devys
This Eneas is come to paradys

Out of the swolow of helle, and thus in joye Remembreth hym of his estat in Troye

To daunsyng chamberses ful of para-mentes, 1106

Of riche beddes, and of ornementes,
This Eneas is led, after the mete
And with the queene, whan that he hadde sete,

And spices parted, and the wyn agon, 1110
Unto his chambres was he led anon

To take his ese and for to have his reste,
With al his folk, to don what so hem leste
There nas courser wel ybrydeled non,

Ne stede, for the justing wel to gon, 1115
Ne large palfrey, esy for the nones,

Ne jewel, fretted ful of ryche stones,
Ne sakkes ful of gold, of large wyghte,
Ne ruby non, that shynede by nyghte,

Ne gentil hawtein faucoun heroner, 1120
Ne hound, for hert or wilde bor or der,

Ne coupe of gold, with floreyngs newe ybete,

That in the land of Libie may be gete,
That Dido ne hath it Eneas ysent,
And al is payed, what that he hath spent

Thus can this queene honourable hire gastes calle, 1126

As she that can in fredom passen alle Eneas sothly ek, withouten les,
Hadde sent unto his ship, by Achates,

After his sone, and after riche thynges, 1130 Bothe sceptre, clothes, broches, and ek
rynges,

Some for to were, and some for to presente
To hire, that alle thise noble thynges hym
sente,

And bad his sone how that he shulde make

The presentang, and to the queen it take Repeyred is thus Achates agayn, 1136
 And Eneas ful blisful is and fayn
 To sen his yonge sone Ascanys
 But natheles, oure autour telleth us,
 That Cupido, that is the god of love, 1140
 At preyere of his moder hye above,
 Hadde the liknesse of the child ytake,
 This noble queen enamored to make
 On Eneas, but, as of that scripture,
 Be as be may, I take of it no cure 1145
 But both is this, the queen hath mad swich
 chere

Unto this child, that wonder is to here,
 And of the present that his fader sente
 She thanked hym ful ofte, in good entente Thus is this queen in plesaunce and in joye, 1150

With alle these newe lusty folk of Troye
 And of the dedes hath she more enquired
 Of Eneas, and al the story lered
 Of Troye, and al the longe day they tweye Entendeden to speken and to pleye, 1155
 Of which ther gan to bredden swich a fyr,
 That sely Dido hath now swich desyr
 With Eneas, hire newe gest, to dele,
 That she hath lost hire hewe, and ek hire hele

Now to th'effect, now to the fruyt of al, 1160

Whi I have told this story, and telle shal
 Thus I begynne at fil upon a nyght, Whan that the mone up reysed hadde his lyght,

This noble queene unto hire reste wente
 She siketh sore, and gan hyreself tur-
 mente, 1165

She waketh, walweth, maketh many a breyd,

As don these lovers, as I have herd seyde
 And at the laste, unto hire syster Anne She made hire mone, and ryght thus spak she thanne

"Now, dere sister myn, what may it
 be 1170

That me agasteth in my drem?" quod she
 "This newe Troyan is so in my thought,
 For that me thynketh he is so wel y-wrought,

And ek so likly for to ben a man,
 And therwithal so moche good he can, 1175
 That al my love and lyf lyth in his cure

Have ye nat herd him telle his aventure?
 Now certes, Anne, if that ye rede it me,
 I wolde fayn to hym ywedded be,
 This is th'effect, what sholde I more
 seye? 1180

In hym lyth al, to do me live or deye " Hyre syster Anne, as she that coude hire
 good,

Seyde as hire thoughte, and somdel it withstod

But herof was so long a sermounyng,
 It were to long to make reheryng 1185
 But finaly, it may nat ben withstonde
 Love wol love, for nothing wol it wonde.

The dawenyng up-ris out of the se
 This amerous queene chargeth hire meyne
 The nettes dresse, and speres brode and kene, 1190

An huntynng wol this fusty freshe queene,
 So priketh hire this newe joly wo.

To hors is al hir lusty folk ygo,
 Into the court the houndes been ybrought,
 And upon coursers, swift as any thought,
 Hire yonge knyghtes hoven al aboute, 1195
 And of hire women ek an huge route

Upon a thikke palfrey, paper-whit,
 With sadel red, embrouded with delyt,

Of gold the barres up embosed hie, 1200
 Sit Dido, al in gold and perre wrye,

And she as far as is the bryghte morwe,
 That heleth syke folk of nyghtes sorwe.

Upon a courser sterlyng as the fyr — Men myghte turne hym with a litel wyr — 1205

Sit Eneas, lyk Phebus to devyse,
 So was he fressh arayed in his wyse

The fomy brydel with the bit of gold Governeth he, ryght as hymself hath wold.

And forth this noble queen thus lat I ride 1210

On huntynge, with this Troyan by hyre side

The herde of hertes founden us anon,
 With "Hay! go bet! pryke thow! lat gon, lat gon!

Why nyl the leoun comen, or the bere,
 That I myghte ones mete hym with this spere?" 1215

Thus sey these yonge folk, and up they kylle

These bestes wilde, and ham hem at here
 wille

Among al this to rumbelen gan the hevene,
The thunder rored with a grisely stevene, Doun cam the reyn, with hayl and slet, so
faste, 1220

With hevenes fyr, that it so sore agaste
This noble queen, and also hire meyne,
That ech of hem was glad away to fle
And shortly, from the tempest hire to save,

She fledde hireself into a litel cave, 1225
And with hire wente this Eneas also I not, with hem if there wente any mo,
The atour maketh of it no mencion
And here began the depe affeccion Betwixe hem two, this was the firste
morwe 1230

Of hire gladnesse, and gynning of hire
sorwe

For there hath Eneas ykneled so,
And told hire al his herte and al his wo,
And swore so depe to hire to be trewe,
For wel or wo, and chaunge hire for no
newe, 1235

And as a fals love so wel can pleyne,
That sely Dido rewede on his peyne, And tok hym for husbonde, and becom his wyf

For everemo, whil that hem laste lyf
And after this, whan that the tempest
stente, 1240

With myrthe out as they comen, hom they
wente

The wikke fame upros, and that anon,
How Eneas hath with the queen ygon
Into the cave, and demede as hem liste
And whan the kyng, that Yarbas highte, it wiste, 1245

As he that hadde hur loved evere his lyf,
And wowede hyre, to han hire to his wyf, Swich sorwe as he hath maked, and swich
cheere,

It is a routhe and pite for to here
But, as in love, alday it happeth so, 1250
That oon shal laughen at anothers wo
Now laugheth Eneas, and is in joye
And more richesse than evere he was in Troye

O sely women, ful of innocence, 1254
Ful of pite, of trouthe, and conscience,
What maketh yow to men to truste so?
Have ye swych routhe upon hire feyned
wo,

And han swich olde ensaumples yow beforn?

Se ye nat alle how they ben forsworn?
Where sen ye oon, that he ne hath laft his leef, 1266

Or ben unkynde, or don hire som myscheef,
Or piled hire, or bosted of his dede?
Ye may as wel it sen, as ye may rede
Tak hede now of this grete gentil-man,
This Troyan, that so wel hire plesen can,
That feyneth hym so trewe and obeys-
yng, 1266

So gentil, and so privy of his doinge,
And can so wel don alle his obeysaunces,
And wayten hire at festes and at daunces,
And whan she goth to temple and hom ageyn, 1270

And fasten til he hath his lady seyn,
And beren in his devyises, for hire sake,
Not I not what, and songes wolde he make,
Justen, and don of armes many thynges, Sende hire lettres, tokens, broches,
rynges — 1275

Now herkneth how he shal his lady serve!
There as he was in peril for to sterve
For hunger, and for myschef in the se,
And desolat, and fled from his cuntre,
And al his folk with tempest al todryven,
She hath hire body and ek hire reame
yiven 1281

In'o his hand, there as she myghte have been

Of othere land than of Cartage a queen,
And lyved in joye ynogh, what wole ye more?

This Eneas, that hath so depe yswore, 1285
Is very of his craft withinne a throwe,
The hote ernest is al overblowe
And pryvly he doth his shipes dyghte,
And shapeth hym to stele away by nyghte

This Dido hath suspiccoun of this, 1290
And thoughte wel that it was al amys
For in his bed she lyth a-nyght and syketh, She axeth hym anon what hym mysly-keth —

“My dere herte, which that I love most?” “Certes,” quod he, “this nyght my faderes gost 1295

Hath in my slep so sore me tormented,
And ek Mercurye his message hath presented,

That nedes to the conquest of Ytaylor

My destine is sone for to sayle,
For which, me thynketh, brosten is myn
herte!" 1300

Therwith his false teres out they sterte,
And taketh hire withinne his armes two
"Is that in earnest?" quod she, "wole ye so?"

Have ye nat sworn to wyve me to take?
Allas! what woman wole ye of me make?
I am a gentil woman and a queen 1306
Ye wole nat from youre wif thus foule fleen?

That I was born, allas! What shal I do?"
To telle in short, this noble quen Dydo,
She seketh halwes and doth sacryfise, 1310 She kneleth, cryeth, that routhe is to devyse,

Conjureth hym, and profereth hym to be His thral, his servant in the leste degre,
She falleth hym to fote and swouneth ther,
Dischevele, with hire bryghte gilte her,
And seyth, "Have mercy! and let me with yow ryde!" 1316

These lordes, which that women me besyde, Wole me distroyen only for youre sake
And, so ye wole me now to wive take,
As ye han sworn, thanne wol I yeve yow
leve 1320
To slen me with youre swerd now sone at eve!

For thanne yit shal I deyen as youre wif I am with childe, and yeve my child his lyf!

Mercy, lord! have pite in youre thought!"
But al this thing avayleth hire ryght nought, 1325

For on a nyght, slepynge, he let hire lye,
And stal away unto his companye,
And as a traytour forth he gan to sayle
Toward the large contre of Ytaylor 1329
Thus he hath laft Dido in wo and pyne,
And wedded ther a lady, hyghte Lavyne

A cloth he lafte, and ek his swerd stond-
ynge,
Whan he from Dido stal in hire slepynge,
Ryght at hire beddes hed, so gan he hie,

Whan that he stal away to his navye, 1335
Which cloth, whan sely Dido gan awake,
She hath it kyst ful ofte for his sake,
And seyde, "O swete cloth, whil Juppiter it leste,

Tak now my soule, unbynd me of this un-reste!"

I have fulfild of fortune al the cours" 1340
And thus, allas! withouten his socours,
Twenty tyme yswouned hath she thanne
And whanne that she unto hire syster
Anne

Compleyned hadde — of which I may nat wryte,

So gret a routhe I have it for t'endite — 1345
And bad hire norice and hire sister gon
To fechen fyr and other thyng anon,
And seyde that she wolde sacryfye, —

And whan she myghte hire tyme we-espie,

Upon the fir of sacryfice she sterte, 1350
And with his swerd she rof hyre to the
herte

But, as myn auctour seith, yit thus she
seyde,

Or she was hurt, byforen or she deyde,
She wrot a letre anon that thus began
"Ryght so," quod she, "as that the white swan 1355

Ayens his deth begynnyth for to synge,
Right so to yow make I my compleynynge
Not that I trowe to geten yow ageyn,
For wel I wot that it is al in veyn, Svn that the goddes been contraire to
me 1360

But syn my name is lost thourgh yow,"
quod she,

"I may wel lese on yow a word or letter,
Al be it that I shal ben nevere the better,
For thilke wynd that blew youre shup away,

The same wynd hath blowe away youre fey" 1365

But who wol al this letter have in mynde, Rede Ovyde, and in hym he shal it
fynde

Explicit Legenda Didonis martiris, Cartaginis Regine

IV

THE LEGEND OF HYPSPYLE AND MEDEA

Incipt Legendā Ysiphile et Medee, martirum

Thow rote of false lovers, Duc Jason, 1370
 Thow sly devourere and confusioun
 Of gentil wemen, tendre creatures,
 Thow madest thy recleymyng and thy lures

To ladyes of thy statly aparauce,
 And of thy wordes, farced with plesaunce,
 And of thy feyned trouthe and thy manere,
 With thyn obeysaunce and humble cheere, 1375

And with thy contrefeted peyne and wo
 There othere falsen oon, thow falsest two!
 O, often swore thow that thow woldest dye
 For love, whan thow ne feltest maladye
 Save foul delyt, which that thow callest love! 1380

Yif that I live, thy name shal be shove
 In English that thy sekte shal be knowe!
 Have at thee, Jason! now thyn horn is blowe!

But certes, it is bothe routhe and wo
 That love with false loveres werketh so,
 For they shal have wel betere love and chere 1386

Than he that hath abought his love ful dere,

Or hadde in armes many a bloody box
 For evere as tendre a capoun et the fox,
 Thow he be fals and hath the foul betrayed, 1390

As shal the good-man that therefore hath payed

Al have he to the capoun skille and ryght,

The false fox wol have his part at nyght
 On Jason this ensauple is wel ysene
 By Isiphile and Medea the queene 1395

1 The Legend of Hypsipyle

In Tessahe, as Guido tellith us,
 There was a kyng that highte Pelleus,
 That hadde a brother which that highte Eson,
 And whan for age he myghte unnethes gon,

He yaf to Pelleus the governing 1400
 Of al his regne, and made hym lord and kyng

Of which Eson this Jason geten was,
 That in his tyme in al that land there nas
 Nat swich a famous knyght of gentillesse,
 Of fredom, and of strengthe and lusty-nesse 1405

After his fadres deth he bar hym so
 That there nas non that liste ben his fo,
 But dide hym al honour and companye
 Of which this Pelleus hadde gret envye, Imagynge that Jason myghte be 1410

Enhaunsed so, and put in swich degre
 With love of lordes of his regioun,
 That from his regne he may ben put adoun
 And in his wit, a-nyght, compassed he How Jason myghte best destroyed be 1415

Withoute sclauder of his compassement,
 And at the last he tok avyusement
 To senden hym into som fer contre,
 There as this Jason may destroyed be
 This was his wit, al made he to Jasoun
 Gret chere of love and of affeccoun, 1421
 For drede lest his lordes it espide
 So fyl it, so as fame renneth wide,
 There was swich tydyng overal and swich loos,

That in an yle that called was Colcos, 1425
 Beyondre Troye, estward in the se,
 That therin was a ram, that men mighte se,
 That hadde a fles of gold, that shon so bryghte

That nowher was swich another syghte,
 But it was kept alwey with a dragoun, 1430
 And many other mervayles, up and doun,
 And with two boles, maked al of bras,
 That spitten fyr, and moche thyng there was

But this was ek the tale, natheles,
 That whoso wolde wyne thylke fles, 1435
 He moste bothe, or he it wyne myghte,
 With the boles and the dragoun fyghte
 And kyng Oetes lord was of that yle
 This Pelleus bethoughte upon this wile,

That he his neveu Jason wolde enhorte 1440

To saylen to that lond, hym to disporte,
And seyde, "Nevew, if it myghte be That swich a worshipe myghte fallen the,
That thow this famous tresor myghtest
wynne,

And bryngen it my regioun withinne, 1445
It were to me gret plessaunce and honour
Thanne were I holde to quyte thy labour,
And al the cost I wol myselfen make And chees what folk that thow wilt with the take, 1449

Lat sen now, darst thow take this viage?"

Jason was yong, and lusty of corage,
And undertok to don this ilke emprise
Anon Argus his shipes gan devyse,
With Jason wente the stronge Ercules,
And many another that he with hym ches
But whoso axeth who is with hym gon, 1456
Lat hym go rede Argonautycon,
For he wole telle a tale long ynogh Philotetes anon the sayl up drogh, Whan that the wynd was good, and gan hym hye 1460

Out of his contre called Thessalye
So longe he seyled in the salte se, Til in the yle of Lemnon aryvede he — Al be this nat rehersed of Guudo, Yit seyth Ovyde in his Epistels so — 1465
And of this le lady was and quene
The fayre yonge Ysiphelle, the shene, That whylom Thoas doughter was, the kyng

Isiphile was gon in hire pleyng,
And, romynge on the clyves by the se, 1470
Under a banke anon aspied she Where that the ship of Jason gan arive
Of hire goodnesse adoun she sendeth blythe
To witen if that any straunge wight With tempest thider were yblowe a-nyght, 1475

To don him socour, as was hire usaunce
To fortheren every wight, and don plessaunce

Of verrey bounte and of curteysye
This messangeer adoun hym gan to hye,
And fond Jason and Ercules also, 1480
That in a cog to londe were ygo,
Hem to refreshen and to take the eyr
The morwenynge attempre was and fayr,
And in his weye this messanger hem mette

Ful cunnyngly these lordes two he grette, 1485

And dide his message, avenge hem anon
If they were broken, or ought wo begon,
Or hadden nede of lodman or vitayle,
For of socour they sholde nothyng fayle,
For it was outrely the quenes wille 1490

Jason answerde mekely and styлле
"My lady," quod he, "thanke I hertely
Of hire goodnesse, us nedeth, trewely, Nothyng as now, but that we wery be,
And come for to pleye, out of the se, 1495
Tyl that the wynd be better in oure weye"

This lady rometh by the clyf to pleye,
With hire meyne, endelong the stronde,
And fynt this Jason and this other stonde In spekyng of this thyng, as I yow
tolde 1500

This Ercules and Jason gan beholde
How that the queen it was, and fayre hire
grette

Anon-ryght as they with this lady mette
And she tok hed, and knew by hyre man-ere,

By hire aray, by wordes, and by chere, 1505
That it were gentil-men of gret degre,
And to the castel with hire ledeth she These straunge folk, and doth hem gret
honour,

And axeth hem of travayle and labour
That they han suffered in the salte se, 1510
So that, withinne a day, or two, or thre,
She knew, by folk that in his shipes be,
That it was Jason, ful of renome,
And Ercules, that hadde the grete los,
That soughten the aventures of Coloos, 1515

And dide hem honour more than before,
And with hem deled evere lenger the
more,

For they ben worthy folk, withouten les
And namely, most she spak with Ercules,
To hym hire herte bar, he shulde be 1520
Sad, wys, and trewe, of wordes avyse, Withouten any other affeccoun
Of love, or evyl ymagynacyoun

This Ercules hath so this Jason preyed That to the sonne he hath hym up arey-sed, 1525

That half so trewe a man there nas of love
Under the cope of heven that is above,
And he was wis, hardy, secre, and ryche.

Of these thre poyntes there nas non hym lche

Of fredom passede he, and lustyhede, 1530
Alle tho that lyven or been dede, Therto so gret a gentilman was he,
And of Thessalye likly kyng to be There nas no lak, but that he was agast
To love, and for to speke shamefast 1535 He hadde lever hymself to morder, and
dye,

Than that men shulde a loveure hym espye
"As wolde almighty God that I hadde yve

My blod and flesh, so that I myghte live, With the nones that he hadde owher a wif 1540

For hys estat, for swich a lusty lyf
She shulde lede with this lusty knyght!"

And al this was compassed on the nyght
Bytwixe hym Jason and this Ercules
Of these two here was a shrewed lees, 1545
To come to hous upon an innocent!
For to bedote this queen was here assent
And Jason is as coy as is a mayde,
He loketh pitously, but nought he sayde,
But frely yaf he to hire conseyleres 1550
Yiftes grete, and to hire officeres
As wolde God I leyser hadde and tyme
By proces al his wowyng for to ryme!
But in this hous if any fals loveure be,
Ryght as hymself now doth, ryght so dide
he, 1555

With feynynge, and with every subtil dede
Ye gete namore of me, but ye wole rede Th'origynal, that telleth al the cas

The somme is this, that Jason wedded was

Unto this queen, and tok of hir substaunce 1560

What so hym leste, unto his purveyaunce,
And upon hire begat he children two,
And drogh his sayl, and saw hir nevere mo
A letter sente she to hym, certeyn, Which were to longe to wryten and to sen, 1565

And hym reprevith of his grete untrouthe,
And preyeth him on hire to have som
routhe

And of his children two she seyde hym this
That they ben lyk of alle thyng, ywis,
To Jason, save they coude nat begile, 1570
And preyede God, or it were longe while,

That she, that hadde his herte yraft hire fro,

Moste fynden hym untrewre to hir also,
And that she moste bothe hire chyl dren spylle,
And alle tho that sufferede hym his wille
And trewe to Jason was she al hire lyf, 1576
And evere kepte hire chast, as for his wif,
Ne nevere hadde she joye at hire herte,
But deyede, for his love, of sorwes smerte

2 The Legend of Medea

To Colcos comen is this duc Jasoun, 1580
That is of love devourer and dragoun
As mater appetiteth forme alwey,
And from forme into forme it passen may,
Or as a welle that were botomles,
Ryght so can false Jason have no pes 1585
For, to desyren, though his appetit,
To don with gentil women his delyt,
This is his lust and his felcitate

Jason is romed forth to the cyte,
That whilom cleped was Jaconitos, 1590
That was the mayster-toun of al Colcos,
And hath ytold the cause of his comyng
Unto Oetes, of that contre kyng, Preynge hym that he moste don his assa,
To gete the fles of gold, if that he may, 1595
Of which the kyng assenteth to his bone,
And doth hym honour, as it was to done,
So fer forth that his doughter and his eyr,
Medea, which that was so wis and fayr That fayrer say there nevere man with ye, 1600

He made hire don to Jason companye
At mete, and sitte by hym in the halle

Now was Jason a semely man withalle,
And lyk a lord, and hadde a gret renoun,
And of his lok as real as a leoun, 1605
And goodly of his speche, and familer,
And coude of love al the art and craft pleynr

Withoute bok, with everych observaunce
And, as Fortune hire oughte a foul mys-
chaunce,

She wex enamoured upon this man 1610
"Jason," quod she, "for ought I se or can,

As of this thyng the whiche ye ben aboute,
Ye han youreself yput in moche doute
For whoso wol this aventure acheve,

He may nat wel asterten, as I leve, 1615 Withouten deth, but I his helpe be But natheles, it is my wylle," quod she,
 "To fortheren yow, so that ye shal nat die, But turnen sound hom to youre Tessalye "
 "My ryghte lady," quod this Jason tho,
 "That ye han of my deth or of my wo 1621
 Any reward, and don me this honour,
 I wot wel that my myght ne my labour
 May nat disserve it in my lyves day God thanke yow, there I ne can ne
 may! 1625
 Youre man I am, and lowely yow beseche
 To ben my helpe, withoute more speche,
 But, certes, for my deth shal I nat spare "
 Tho gan this Medea to hym declare The peril of this cas, from poynt to poynt, 1630
 And of his batayle, and in what disjoynt
 He mote stonde, of which no creature,
 Save only she, ne myghte his lyf assure
 And, shortly to the poynt ryght for to go,
 They been acorded ful bytwixe hem two That Jason shal hire wedde, as trewe
 knyght, 1636
 And terme set, to come sone at nyght
 Unto hire chamber and make there his oth
 Upon the goddes, that he for lef or loth Ne sholde nevere hire false, nyght ne
 day, 1640
 To ben hire husbonde whil he lyve may,
 As she that from his deth hym saved here
 And hereupon at nyght they mette in-feere, And doth his oth, and goth with hire to bedde,
 And on the morwe upward he hym
 spedde, 1645
 For she hath taught hym how he shal nat fayle
 The fles to wyinne, and stynten his batayle,

And saved hym his lyf and his honour,
 And gat hym a name ryght as a conquerour, Ryght though the sleyghte of hire en chaumentement 1650
 Now hath Jason the fles, and hom is went With Medea, and tresor ful gret won
 But unwist of hire fader is she gon
 To Tessaly, with Duk Jason hire lef, That afterward hath brought hire to myschef 1655
 For as a traytour he is from hire go,
 And with hire lafte his yonge children two,
 And falsly hath betrayed hire, allas!
 As evere in love a chef traytour he was,
 And wedded yit the thridde wif anon, 1660
 That was the daughter of the kyng Creon
 This is the mede of lovyng and guerdoun
 That Medea receyved of Jasoun Ryght for hire trouthe and for hire kynde-
 nesse,
 That lovede hym beter than hireself, I
 gesse, 1665
 And lafte hire fader and hire herytage
 And of Jason this is the vassellage,
 That, in his dayes, nas ther non yfounde
 So fals a lovere gonge on the grounde
 And therefore in hire letter thus she seyde Fyrst, whan she of his falsnesse hym upbreyde 1671
 "Whi lykede me thy yelwe her to se
 More than the boundes of myn honeste?
 Why lykede me thy youthe and thy fayr-
 nesse,
 And of thy tonge the infynyt gracious-
 nesse? 1675
 O, haddest thow in thy conquest ded ybe, Ful mikel untrouthe hadde ther deyde with
 the!"
 Wel can Ovyde hire letter in vers endyte,
 Which were as now to long for me to wryte

Explicit Legenda Ysiphile et Medee, marturum

V

THE LEGEND OF LUCRECE

Incipit Legenda Lucrecie Rome, martiris

Now mot I seyn the exlynge of kynges
 Of Rome, for here horrible doinges, 1681
 And of the laste kyng Tarquinius,
 As seyth Ovyde and Titus Lyvius
 But for that cause telle I nat this storye,
 But for to preyse and drawe to memorye
 The verray wif, the verray trewe Lu-cresse, 1686
 That, for hyre wifhod and hire stedefast-
 nesse,

Nat only that these payens hire comende,
 But he that cleped is in oure legende
 The grete Austyn, hath gret compassioun Of this Lucesse, that starf at Rome
 toun, 1691

And in what wise, I wol but shortly trete,
 And of this thyng I touche but the grete Whan Ardea beseged was aboute With Romeyns, that ful sterne were and stoute, 1695

Ful longelay the sege, and lytel wroughten,
 So that they were half idel, as hem thoughten,

And in his pley Tarquinius the yonge
 Gan for to jape, for he was lyght of tonge,
 And seyde that it was an ydel lyf, 1700
 No man dide there no more than his wif
 "And lat us speke of wyves, that is best,
 Preyse every man his owene, as hym lest,
 And with oure speche lat us ese oure herte "

A knyght, that highte Colatyn, up sterte, 1705

And seyde thus "Nay, sire, it is no nede
 To trowen on the word, but on the dede
 I have a wif," quod he, "that, as I trowe, Is holden good of alle that evere hire
 knowe

Go we to-nyght to Rome, and we shal se " Tarquinius answerde, "That liketh
 me" 1711

To Rome be they come, and faste hem
 dyghte

To Colatynes hous and doun they lyghte, Tarquinius, and ek this Colatyn
 The husbonde knew the estris wel and fyn,

And prively into the hous they gon, 1716
 Nor at the yate porter nas there non,
 And at the chambre-dore they abyde
 This noble wif sat by hire beddes side Dischevele, for no malyce she ne thoughte, And softte wolle oure bok seyth that she
 wroughte 1721

To kepen hire from slouthe and idelnesse,
 And bad hire servaunts don hire besynesse,
 And axeth hem, "What tydyngs heren ye?"
 How seyth men of the sege, how shal it be?
 God wolde the walles were falle adoun! 1726
 Myn husbonde is to longe out of this toun,
 For which the drede doth me so to smerte
 That with a swerd it stingeth to myn herte Whan I thynke on the sege or on that place 1730

God save my lord, I preye hym for his
 grace!"

And therwithal ful tenderly she wep,
 And of hire werk she tok no more kep,
 And mekely she let hyre eyen falle,
 And thilke semblaunt sat hire wel with-alle 1735

And eek hire teres, ful of honeste, Embelshed hire wify chastite,
 Hyre contenance is to hire herte dygne,
 For they acorde bothe in dede and sygne
 And with that word hire husbonde Colatyn, 1740

Or she of him was war, com stertynge in,
 And seyde, "Drede the nat, for I am here!"
 And she anon up ros, with blysfyl chere,
 And kiste hym, as of wives is the wone

Tarquinius, this proude kynges sone, Conceived hath hire beaute and hyre
 cheere, 1746

Hire yelwe her, hire shap, and hire manere, Hire hew, hire wordes, that she hath compleyned

(And by no craft hire beaute nas nat feyned),

And caughte to this lady swich desyr 1750
 That in his herte brende as any fyr
 So woldy that his wit was al forgeten

For wel thoghte he she wolde nat ben geten,

And ay the more that he was in dispayr,
The more he coveyteth and thoughte hire fayr 1755

Hys blynde lust was al his coveytinge

A-morwe, whan the brid began to synge,
Unto the sege he cometh ful prively,
And by hymself he walketh soberly, Th'ymage of hire recordyng alwey newe
"Thus lay hire her, and thus fresh was hyre hewe, 1761

Thus sat, thus spak, thus span, this was hire chere,

Thus fayr she was, and this was hire
manere "

Al this consent hys herte hath newe ytake
And as the se, with tempest al toshake, 1765
That after, whan the storm is al ago, Yit wol the water quappe a day or two,
Ryght so, thogh that hire forme were absent,

The plesaunce of hire forme was present,
But natheles, nat plesaunce but delit, 1770
Or an unryghtful talent, with dispit —

"For, maugre hyre, she shal my leman be!
Hap helpeth hardy man alday," quod he "What ende that I make, it shal be so "

And grte hym with his swerd, and gan to go, 1775

And forth he rit til he to Rome is come,
And al alone his wey than hath he nome
Unto the hous of Colatyn ful ryght Doun was the sonne, and day hath lost his lyght,

And in he cometh into a prive halke, 1780
And in the nyght ful thefly gan he stalke, Whan every wight was to his reste brought,

Ne no wight hadde of tresoun swich a thought

Were it by wyndow or by other gyn,
With swerd ydrawe, shortly he com in 1785
There as she lay, this noble wif Luressse
And as she wok, hire bed she felte presse
"What beste is that," quod she, "that weyeth thus?"

"I am the kynges sone, Tarquinius," Quod he, "but, and thow crye or noyse
make, 1790

Or if there any creature awake,
By thulke God that formed man alyve,

This swerd thourghout thyn herte shal I ryve "

And therewithal unto hire throte he sterte,
And sette the poynt al sharp upon hire
herte 1795

No word she spak, she hath no myght
therto

What shal she seyn? hire wit is al ago
Ryght as a wolf that fynt a lomb alone,
To whom shal she compleyne, or make mone?

What! shal she fyghte with an hardy
knyght? 1800

Wel wot men that a woman hath no
myght

What! shal she crye, or how shal she asterte
That hath hire by the throte, with swerd at herte?

She axeth grace, and seyth al that she can
"Ne wilt thow nat," quod he, this crewel man, 1805

"As wisly Jupiter my soule save,
As I shal in the stable slen thy knave,
And ley hym in thy bed, and loude crye
That I the fynde in swich avouterye
And thus thow shalt be ded, and also lese Thy name, for thow shalt non other chese " 1811

These Romeyn wyves lovede so here
name

At thulke tyme, and dredde so the shame,
That, what for fer of sclaunder and drede of deth, 1814

She loste bothe at ones wit and breth,
And in a swogh she lay, and wex so ded,
Men myghte smyten of hire arm or hed,
She feleth no thyng, neyther foul ne fayr

Tarquinius, that art a kynges eyr,
And sholdest, as by lynage and by ryght,
Don as a lord and as a verray knyght, 1821
Whi hastow don dispit to chivalrye?

Whi hastow don this lady vilanye?
Allas! of the this was a vileyns dede!

But now to purpos, in the story I rede, Whan he was gon, and this myschaunce is
falle, 1826

This lady sente after hire frendes alle,
Fader, moder, husbonde, alle yfeere;
And al dischevele, with hire heres cleere,
In habit swich as women used the 1830
Unto the buryng of hire frendes go,
She sit in halle with a sorweful sighte.

Hyre frendes axen what hire eylen myghte,
And who was ded, and she sit ay wepyng,
A word, for shame, forth ne myght she bryngre, 1835

Ne upon hem she durste nat beholde
But atte last of Tarquyny she hem tolde
Thus rewful cas and al thys thing horryble
The woo to tellen were an impossible,
That she and al hir frendes made attones
Al hadde folkes hertes ben of stones, 1841 Hyt myght have maked hem upon hir
rewe,

Hir herte was so wyfly and so trewe
She sayde that, for hir gylt ne for hir blame,

Hir husbonde shulde nat have the foule
name, 1845

That wolde she nat suffre, by no wey
And they answerden alle, upon hir fey,
That they forgave yt hyr, for yt was ryght,
It was no gilt, it lay not in hir myght,
And seyden hir ensamples many oon 1850
But al for nocht, for thus she seyde anoon
"Be as be may," quod she, "of forgyvyng,
I wol not have noo forgyft for nothing"
But pryvely she kaughte forth a knyf,
And therewithal she rafte hirself hir lyf, 1855
And as she fel adoun, she kaste hir lok,
And of hir clothes yet she hede tok
For in hir fallynge yet she had a care,
Lest that hir fet or suche thyng lay bare,
So wel she loved clenness and eke
trouthe 1860

Of hir had al the toun of Rome routhe,
And Brutus by hir chaste blood hath swore

That Tarquyn shulde ybanysshed be ther
fore,
And al hys kyn, and let the peple calle,
And openly the tale he tolde hem alle, 1865
And openly let cary her on a bere Thurgh al the toun, that men may see and here

The horryble dede of hir oppressyoun,
Ne never was ther kyng in Rome toun Syn thulke day, and she was holden
there 1870

A seynt, and ever hir day yhalwed dere
As in hir lawe, and thus endeth Lucesse,
The noble wyf, as Tytus bereth witnessse

I telle hyt, for she was of love so trewe, Ne in hir wille she changed for no
newe, 1875

And for the stable herte, sadde and
kynde,

That in these wymmen men may alday
fynde

Ther as they kaste hir herte, there it dwelleth

For wel I wot that Crist himselve telleth
That in Israel, as wyd as is the lond, 1880
That so gret feyth in al that he ne fond
As in a woman, and thus is no lye
And as of men, loke ye which tyrannye
They doon alday, assay hem whoso lyste
The trewest ys ful brotel for to triste 1885

Explicit Legenda Lucrecie Rome, martiris

VI

THE LEGEND OF ARIADNE

Incipit Legenda Adriane de Athenes

Juge infernal, Mynos, of Crete kyng, Now cometh thy lot, now comestow on the ryng

Nat for thy sake oonly write I this storrye,
But for to clepe ageyn unto memorye Of Theseus the grete untrouthe of love, 1890

For which the goddes of the heven above Ben wrothe, and wreche han take for thy synne

Be red for shame! now I thy lyf be-gynne

Mynos, that was the myghty kyng of Crete,

That hadde an hundred citees stronge and grete, 1895
 To scole hath sent hys sone Androgeus,
 To Athenes, of the which hyt happed thus,
 That he was slayn, lernynge philosophie,
 Ryght in that citee, nat but for envye
 The grete Mynos, of the which I speke, Hys sones deth ys come for to wreke 1901
 Alcatheo he besegeth harde and longe,
 But natheles, the walles be so stronge,
 And Nysus, that was kyng of that citee,
 So chevalrous, that lytel dredeth he 1905
 Of Mynos or hys ost tok he no cure,
 Til on a day befel an aventure,
 That Nysus daughter stod upon the wal,
 And of the sege saw the maner al
 So happed it that, at a scarmishyng, 1910
 She caste hire herte upon Mynos the kyng,
 For his beaute and for his chyvalrye,
 So sore that she wende for to dye
 And, shortly of this proces for to pace,
 She made Mynos wynnen thilke place, 1915
 So that the cite was al at his wille,
 To saven whom hym leste, or elles spille
 But wikkedly he quitte hire kyndenesse,
 And let hire drenche in sorwe and distresse, Nere that the goddes hadde of hire pite, 1920
 But that tale were to long as now for me Athenes wan thys kyng Mynos also,
 As Alcatheo, and other tounes mo
 And this th'effect, that Mynos hath so driven Hem of Athenes, that they mote hym
 yiven 1925
 From yer to yer hire owene children dere
 For to be slayn, right thus as ye shal here This Mynos hadde a monstre, a wiked
 best,
 That was so crewel that, withoute arest, Whan that a man was brought in his presence, 1930
 He wolde hym ete, ther helpeth no defence
 And every thridde yeer, withouten doute,
 They caste lot, and as it com aboute
 On riche or pore, he moste his sone take,
 And of his child he moste present
 make 1935
 Unto Minos, to save hym or to spylle,
 Or lete his best devoure hym at his wille
 And this hath Mynos don, ryght in dspit,
 To wreke his sone was set al his delyt,
 And maken hem of Athenes his thral 1940
 From yer to yer, whil that he liven shal,
 And hom he sayleth, whan this toun is wonne
 This wiked custom is so longe yronne,
 Til that of Athenes kyng Egeus
 Mot senden his owene sone, Theseus, 1945
 Sith that the lot is fallen hym upon,
 To ben devoured, for grace is there non
 And forth is lad this woful yonge knyght
 Unto the court of kyng Mynos ful ryght,
 And into a prysoun, fetered, cast is he Tyl thilke tyme he sholde freten be 1951
 Wel maystow wepe, O woful Theseus, That art a kynges sone, and dampned thus Me thynketh this, that thou were depe yholde
 To whom that savede thee from cares colde! 1955
 And if now any woman helpe the,
 Wel oughtestow hire servaunt for to be,
 And ben hire trewe lover yere be yere!
 But now to come ageyn to my matere
 The tour, there as this Theseus is throwe Down in the botom derk and wonder lowe, 1961
 Was joynynge in the wal to a foreyne,
 And it was longynge to the doughtren
 tweyne
 Of Mynos, that in hire chaumbers grete Dwellten above, toward the mayster-strete 1965
 Of Athenes, in joye and in solas
 Noot I not how, it happede par cas,
 As Theseus compleynede hym by nyghte,
 The kynges daughter, Adryane that highte,
 And ek hire syster Phedra, herden al 1970 His compleynynge, as they stode on the
 wal,
 And lokeden upon the bryghte mone
 Hem leste nat to go to hedde so sone,
 And of his wo they hadde compassioun
 A kynges sone to ben in swich prysoun, 1975
 And ben devoured, thoughte hem gret pite
 This Adryane spak to hire syster fre,
 And seyde, "Phedra, leve syster dere,
 This woful lordes sone may ye nat here,
 How pitously compleyneth he his kyn, 1980
 And ek his povre estat that he is in,
 And gilteles? Now, certes, it is routhe!
 And if ye wol assenten, by my trouthe,

He shal ben holpen, how so that we do "
 Phedra answerde, "Ywis, me is as wo 1985
 For hym as evere I was for any man,
 And, to his help, the beste red I can
 Is that we do the gayler prively
 To come and speke with us hastily,
 And don this woful man with hym to
 - - come 1990
 For if he may this monstre overcome, Thanne were he quyt, ther is non other
 bote
 Lat us wel taste hym at his herte-rote,
 That if so be that he a wepen have,
 Wher that he dar, his lyf to kepe and save, 1995
 Fyghten with the fend, and hym defende
 For in the prysoun, ther he shal descende, Ye wote wel that the beste is in a place That nys nat derk, and hath roum eek and space
 To welde an ax, or swerd, or staf, or knyf, So that, me thynketh, he shulde save his
 lyf 2001
 If that he be a man, he shal do so
 And we shul make hym balles ek also
 Of wex and tow, that whan he gapeth faste,
 Into the bestes throte he shal hem caste To slake his hunger and encombre his teth, 2006
 And right anon, whan that Theseus seth
 The beste achoked, he shal on hym lepe
 To slen hym, or they comen more to-hepe This wepen shal the gayler, or that tyde, 2010
 Ful prively withinne the prysoun hyde,
 And for the hous is krynkeled to and fro,
 And hath so queynte weyes for to go —
 For it is shapen as the mase is wrought — Therto have I a remedye in my thought,
 That, by a clewe of twyn, as he hath
 gon, 2016
 The same weye he may returne anon, Folwyrnge alwey the thred, as he hath come
 And whan that he this beste hath overcome,
 Thanne may he fien away out of this
 drede, 2020
 And ek the gayler may he with hym lede,
 And hym avauce at hom in his cuntre, Syn that so gret a lordes sone is he
 This is my red, if that he dar it take "
 What sholde I lenger sarmoun of it make?

This gayler cometh, and with hym Theseus 2026
 Whan these thynges ben acorded thus,
 Adoun sit Theseus upon his kne —
 "The ryghte lady of my lyf," quod he,
 I, sorweful man, ydampned to the deth, Fro yow, whil that me lasteth lyf or breth, 2031
 I wol nat twynne, after this aventure,
 But in youre servise thus I wol endure,
 That, as a wreche unknowe, I wol yow serve
 For everemo, til that myn herte sterve
 Forsake I wol at hom myn herytage, 2036
 And, as I seyde, ben of youre court a page,
 If that ye vouche-sauf that in this place
 Ye graunte me to han so gret a grace That I may han nat but my mete and drynke 2040
 And for my sustenaunce yit wol I swynke, Ryght as yow leste, that Mynos ne no
 wight —
 Syn that he saw me nevere with eyen syght —
 Ne no man elles, shal me conne espye,
 So slyly and so wel I shal me gye, 2045
 And me so wel disfigure and so lowe,
 That in this world ther shal no man me
 knowe,
 To han my lyf, and for to han presence
 Of yow, that don to me this excellence
 And to my fader shal I sende here 2050
 This worthy man, that is now youre gaylere,
 And, hym so gwerdone, that he shal wel be Oon of the gretteste men of my cuntre
 And if I durste seyn, my lady bryght,
 I am a kynges sone, and ek a knyght 2055
 As wolde God, if that it myghte be Ye weren, in my cuntre, alle thre,
 And I with yow, to bere yow compaignye,
 Thanne shulde ye se if that I therfore lye
 And if I profre yow in low manere 2060
 To ben youre page and serven yow ryght
 here,
 But I yow serve as lowly in that place,
 I preye to Mars to yeve me swich a grace
 That shames deth on me ther mote falle,
 And deth and poverte to my frendes
 alle, 2065
 And that my spirit by nyghte mote go,
 After my deth, and walke to and fro,

That I mote of traytour have a name,
 For which my spirit go, to do me shame!
 And if I ever cleyme other degre, 2070
 But if ye vouche-sauf to yeve it me,
 As I have seyde, of shames deth I deye!
 And mercy, lady! I can nat elles seye "

A semely knyght was Theseus to se, And yong, but of a twenty yer and thre 2075

But whoso hadde seyn his contenance, He wolde have wept, for routhe of his penaunce,

For which this Adryane in this manere Answerde hym to his profre and to his chere

"A kynges sone, and ek a knyght," quod
 she, 2080

"To ben my servaunt in so low degre,
 God shulde it, for the shame of wemen alle,
 And lene me nevere swich a cas befalle!
 But sende yow grace of herte and sleighte also,

Yow to defende, and knyghtly slen youre fo, 2085

And leve hereafter that I may yow fynde
 To me and to my syster here so kynde,
 That I repente nat to yeve yow lyf!

Yit were it betere that I were youre wyf,
 Syn that ye ben as gentil born as I, 2090

And have a reaume, nat but faste by,
 Than that I suffered, gilteles, yow sterve,
 Or that I let yow as a page serve
 It nys no profre as unto youre kynrede, But what is that that man nyl don for
 drede? 2095

And to my syster, syn that it is so
 That she mot gon with me, if that I go,
 Or elles suffre deth as wel as I,
 That ye unto youre sone as trewely Don hire ben wedded at youre hom-com-
 yng 2100

This is the final ende of al this thyng, Ye swere it here, upon al that may be sworn "

"Ye, lady myn," quod he, "or elis torn Mote I be with the Mynotaur to-morwe!
 And haveth hereof myn herte blod to
 borwe, 2105

If that ye wole, if I hadde knyf or spere,
 I wolde it laten out, and theron swere,
 For thanne at erst I wot ye wole me leve
 By Mars, that is the chef of my beleve,

So that I myghte liven and nat fayle 2110
 To-morwe for t'acheve my batayle,
 I wolde nevere from this place fle,
 Til that ye shulde the verray preve se
 For now, if that the sothe I shal yow say,
 I have yloved yow ful many a day, 2115
 Thogh ye ne wiste it nat, in my cuntre,
 And aldermost desired yow to se
 Of any erthly lvyng creature
 Upon my trouthe, I swere, and yow assure This sevene yer I have youre servaunt
 be 2120

Now have I yow, and also have ye me,
 My dere herte, of Athenes duchesse!"

This lady smyleth at his stedefastnesse,
 And at his hertely wordes, and his chere,
 And to hyre sister seyde in this man-
 ere, 2125

Al softlye "Now, syster myn," quod she,
 "Now be we duchesses, bothe I and ye,
 And sekered to the regals of Athenes,
 And bothe hereafter likly to ben quenes,
 And saved from his deth a kynges sone,
 As evere of gentil wemen is the wone 2131
 To save a gentyll man, emforth hire myght,
 In honest cause, and namely in his ryght Me thynketh no wight oughte herof us
 blame,

Ne beren us therfore an evl name " 2135
 And shortly of this mater for to make,
 This Theseus of hire hath leve take
 And every poynt was performed in dede,
 As ye han in this covenaut herd me rede His wepne, his clewe, his thyng, that I have sayd, 2140

Was by the gayler in the hous yleyd,
 Ther as the Mynotaur hath his dwellyng,
 Ryght faste by the dore, at his entrynge
 And Theseus is lad unto his deth,
 And forth unto this Mynotaur he geth, 2145
 And by the techyng of this Adryane
 He overcom this beste, and was his bane,
 And out he cometh by the clewe agayn
 Ful prively, whan he this beste hath slayn,
 And by the gayler geten hath a barge, 2150
 And of his wyves tresor gan it charge,
 And tok his wif, and ek hire sister fre,
 And ek the gayler, and with hem alle thre,
 Is stole away out of the lond by nyghte,
 And to the contre of Ennopye hym dyghte
 There as he hadde a frend of his know-
 yng 2156

There feste they, there daunce they and synge,

And in his armes hath this Adryane,
That of the beste hath kept hym from his bane,

And gat hym there a newe barge anon, 2160
And of his contre-folk a ful gret won,
And taketh his leve, and homward sayleth
he

And in an yle, amynd the wilde se, Ther as there dwelled creature non Save wilde bestes, and that ful many oon,
He made his ship a-londe for to sette, 2166
And in that yle half a day he lette,
And seyde that on the lond he moste hym
reste

His maryners han don ryght as hym leste,
And, for to tellen shortly in this cas, 2170 Whan Adryane his wif aslepe was,
For that hire syster fayrer was than she,
He taketh hire in his hond, and forth goth
he

To shipe, and as a traytour stal his wey, Whil that this Adryane aslepe lay, 2175
And to his contre-ward he sayleth blyve—
A twenty devel-wey the wynd hym
dryve!—

And fond his fader drenched in the se
Me lest no more to speke of hym, parde These false lovers, poysoun be here
bane! 2180

But I wol turne ageyn to Adryane,
That is with slep for werynesse atake
Ful sorwefully hire herte may awake
Allas, for thee myn herte hath now pite!
Ryght in the dawenyng awaketh she, 2185
And gropeth in the bed, and fond ryght
nought

“Allas,” quod she, “that evere that I was wrought!

I am betrayed!” and hire her torente,
And to the stronde barefot faste she wente,
And cryed, “Theseus! myn herte swete!
Where be ye, that I may nat with yow mete, 2191

And myghte thus with bestes ben yslayn? ”
The holwe rokkes answerde hire agayn
No man she saw, and yit shynded the mone,
And hye upon a rokke she wente sone, 2195
And saw his barge saylynge in the se Cold wex hire herte, and ryght thus seyde
she

“Meker than ye fynde I the bestes wilde!”
Hadde he nat synne, that hire thus begy lde?
She cryed, “O turn ageyn, for routhe and
synne! 2200

Thy barge hath nat al his meyne inne!”
Hire coverchef on a pole up steked she,
Ascaunce that he shulde it wel yse,
And hym remembre that she was behynde,
And turne ageyn, and on the stronde hire
fynde 2205

But al for nought, his wey he is ygon
Adoun she fyl aswoune upon a ston,
And up she rist, and kyssed, in al hire care,

The steppes of his fet, ther he hath fare,
And to hire bed ryght thus she speketh
tho 2210

“Thow bed,” quod she, “that hast receyved two,

Thow shalt answer of two, and nat of oon!
Where is thy gretter part away ygon?
Allas! where shal I, wreche wight, become?
For thogh so be that ship or boot here
come, 2215

Hom to my contre dar I nat for drede
I can myselven in this cas nat rede ”
What shulde I more telle hire compleyn-
yng?

It is so long, it were an hevy thyng
In hire Epistel Naso telleth al, 2220
But shortly to the ende I telle shal
The goddes han hire holpen for pite,
And in the signe of Taurus men may se
The stones of hire corone shyne clere
I wol no more speke of this mateere, 2225
But thus this false lovere can begyle His trewe love, the devel quyte hym his while!

VII

THE LEGEND OF PHILOMELA

Incipt Legenda PhlomenaDeus dator formarum

Thow yevere of the formes, that hast wrought

This fayre world, and bar it in thy thought Eternaly, er thow thy werk began, 2230
Why madest thow, unto the slaunder of man,

Or, al be that it was nat thy doing,
As for that fyn, to make swich a thyng,
Whi sufferest thow that Tereus was bore,
That is in love so fals and so forswore, 2235
That fro this world up to the firste hevене Corrupmeth, whan that folk his name nevene?

And, as to me, so grisely was his dede
That, whan that I his foule storye rede, Myne eyen wexe foule and sore also 2240
Yit last the venym of so longe ago,
That it infeceteth hym that wol beholde
The storye of Tereus, of which I tolde

Of Trace was he lord, and kyn to Marte,
The crewel god that stant with bloody darte, 2245
And wedded hadde he, with a blysful cheere,

Kyng Pandionis fayre daughter dere,
That highte Progne, flour of hire cuntre, Thogh Juno lyst nat at the feste to be,
Ne Imeneus, that god of wedyng is, 2250
But at the feste redy ben, ywis,
The Furies thre, with al here mortal brond
The oule al nyght aboute the balkes wond,
That prophete is of wo and of myschaunce
This revel, ful of song and ek of daunce, Laste a fortentyght, or lytel lasse 2255

But, shortly of this story for to passe,
For I am wery of hym for to telle,
Fyve yer his wif and he togeder dwelle,
Til on a day she gan so sore longe 2260
To sen hire sister, that she say nat longe,
That for desyr she nyste what to seye
But to hire husbonde gan she for to preye,
For Godes love, that she moste ones gon
Hyre syster for to sen, and come anon, 2265

Or elles, but she moste to hire wende,
She preyde hym that he wolde after hire sende,

And this was, day by day, al hire preyere,
With al humblesse of wifhod, word and chere

This Tereus let make his shipes yare, 2270
And into Grece hymself is forth yfare Unto his fadyr-in-lawe gan he preye
To vouche-sauf that, for a month or tweye,
That Philomene, his wyves syster, myghte
On Progne his wyf but ones han a syghte — 2275

“And she shal come to yow ageyn anon
Myself with hyre I wol bothe come and gon,

And as myn hertes lyf I wol hire kepe”
This olde Pandion, this kyng, gan wepe
For tendernesse of herte, for to leve 2280
His daughter gon, and for to yeve hire leve,

Of al this world he loveth nothyng so,
But at the laste leve hath she to go
For Philomene, with salte teres eke,
Gan of hire fader grace to beseke 2285
To sen hire syster, that she loveth so,
And hym embraseth with hire armes two
And therwithal so yong and fayr was she
That, whan that Tereus saw hire beaute,
And of aray that there was non hire lyche, 2290

And yit of beaute was she two so ryche,
He caste his fyry herte upon hyre so
That he wol have hir, how so that it go,
And with his wiles kneled and so preyde,
Tyl at the laste Pandyon thus seyde 2295 “Now, sone,” quod he, “that art to me so dere,

I the betake my yonge daughter here,
That bereth the keye of al myn hertes lyf
And gret me wel my daughter and thy wif,
And yif hire leve somtyme for to pleye,
That she may sen me ones er I deye” 2301

And sothly, he hath mad hym riche feste,
And to his folk, the moste and ek the leste,
That with hym com, and yaf hym yiftes
grete,

And hym conveyeth thourgh the mayster-
strete 2305

Of Athenes, and to the se hym broughte,
And turneth hom, no malyce he ne thoughte

The ores pullen forth the vessel faste,
And into Trace aryveth at the laste,
And up into a forest he hire ledde, 2310
And to a cave pryvely hym spedde,
And in this derke cave, yif hir leste,
Or leste nat, he bad hire for to reste,
For which hire herte agros, and seyde thus
"Where is my sister, brother Tereus?"

And therwithal she wepte tenderly, 2316
And quok for fere, pale and pitously, Ryght as the lamb that of the wolf is biten,
Or as the culver, that of the egle is smiten,
And is out of his claws forth escaped, 2320
Yit it is afered and awhaped,

Least it be hent eft-sones, so sat she But utterly, it may non other be By force hath he, this traytour, don that dede,

That he hath reft hire of hire mayden-
hede, 2325

Maugre hire hed, by strengthe and by his
myght

Lo' here a dede of men, and that a ryght!
She cryeth "syster!" with ful loud a stevene,

And "fader dere!" and "help me, God in hevene!"

Al helpeth nat, and yit this false thef 2330
Hath don this lady yit a more myschef,
For fere lest she shulde his shame crye,
And don hym openly a vilenye,
And with his swerd hire tonge of kerveth
he,

And in a castel made hire for to be 2335
Ful pryvely in prisoun everemore,
And kepte hire to his usage and his store,
So that she myghte hym neveremore
asterte

O sely Philomene, wo is thyn herte!
God wreke thee, and sende the thy bone!
Now is it tyme I make an ende sone 2341

This Tereus is to his wif ycome,
And in his armes hath his wif ynome,

And pitously he wep, and shok his hed,
And swor hir that he fond hir sister ded,
For which this sely Progne hath swich
wo 2346

That nygh hire sorweful herte brak a-two
And thus in terys lete I Progne dwelle,
And of hire sister forth I wol yow telle This woful lady lerned hadde in youthe 2350

So that she werken and enbroude couthe,
And weven in hire stol the radevore
As it of women hath be woned yore
And, sothly for to seyne, she hadde hire file

Of mete and drynk, and clothyng at hire
wille 2355

She coude eek rede, and wel ynow endyte,
But with a penne coude she nat wryte
But letters can she weve to and fro,
So that, by that the yer was al ago,
She hadde ywoven in a stamyn large 2360
How she was brought from Athenes in a barge,

And in a cave how that she was brought,
And al the thyng that Tereus hath wrought,
She waf it wel, and wrot the storrye above,
How she was served for hire systers love
And to a knave a ryng she yaf anon, 2366
And preyed hym, by signes, for to gon
Unto the queen, and beren hir that cloth,
And by signes swor hym many an oth,
She wolde hym yeven what she geten
myghte 2370

This knave anon unto the queene hym
dyghte,

And tok it hire, and al the maner tolde And whan that Progne hath this thing be-
holde,

No word she spak, for sorwe and ek for rage, 2374

But feynede hire to gon on pilgrimage
To Bacus temple, and in a litel stounde Hire dombe sister sittyng hath she
founde,

Wepyng in the castel, here alone
Allas! the wo, the compleynt, and the mone That Progne upon hire doumbe syster maketh! 2380

In armes everych of hem other taketh,
And thus I late hem in here sorwe dwelle
The remenaunt is no charge for to telle,
For this is al and som thus was she served,

That never harm agilte ne deserved 2385
 Unto this crewel man, that she of wiste
 Ye may be war of men, if that yow liste
 For al be it that he wol nat, for shame,
 Don as Tereus, to lese his name, 2389

Ne serve yow as a morderour or a knave, Ful lytel while shal ye trewe hym have —
 That wol I seyn, al were he now my brother —
 But it so be that he may have non other

Explicit Legenda Philomene

VIII

THE LEGEND OF PHILLIS

Incept Legenda Phillis

By preve as wel as by autorite,
 That wiked fruit cometh of a wiked
 tre, 2395

That may ye fynde, if that it like yow
 But for this ende I speke this as now,
 To tellen yow of false Demophon
 In love a falsur herde I nevere non,
 But if it were his fader Theseus 2400
 "God, for his grace, fro swich oon kepe us!"

Thus may these women preyen that it
 here

Now to the effect turne I of my matere Destroyed is of Troye the cite;

This Demophon com seylyng in the se
 Toward Athenes, to his paleys large 2406 With hym com many a ship and many a barge

Ful of his folk, of whiche ful many oon
 Is wounded sore, and sek, and wo begon,
 As they han at th'asege longe yleyn 2410
 Byhynde hym com a wynd and ek a reyn
 That shof so sore, his sayl ne myghte
 stonde,

Hym were lever than al the world a-londe,
 So hunteth hym the tempest to and fro
 So derk it was, he coude nowher go, 2415
 And with a wave brosten was his stere
 His ship was rent so lowe, in swich manere,
 That carpenter ne coude it nat amende
 The se, by nyghte, as any torche it brende For wod, and possith hym now up, now doun, 2420

Til Neptune hath of hym compassioun,
 And Thetis, Chorus, Triton, and they alle,

And maden hym upon a lond to falle,
 Wherof that Phillis lady was and queene, 2425
 Ligure's doughter, fayrer on to sene
 Than is the flour ageyn the bryghte sonne Unnethe is Demophon to londe ywonne, Wayk, and ek wery, and his folk forpynd
 Of werynesse, and also enfamyned, 2429
 That to the deth he almost was ydriven
 His wise folk to conseyl han hym yven
 To seken help and socour of the queen,
 And loke what his grace myghte been,
 And maken in that lond som chevysaunce,
 To kepen hym fro wo and fro mys-
 chaunce 2435

For syk he was, and almost at the deth, Unnethe myghte he speke or drawe his
 breth,

And lyth in Rodopeya hym fro to reste Whan he may walke, hym thoughte it was the beste

Unto the court to seken for socour 2440
 Men knewen hym wel, and diden hym
 honour,

For of Athenes duk and lord was he,
 As Theseus his fader hadde be,
 That in his tyme was of gret renoun,
 No man so gret in al the regyoun, 2445
 And lyk his fader of face and of stature,
 And fals of love, it com hym of nature,
 As doth the fox Renard, the foxes sone,
 Of kynde he coude his olde faders wone,
 Withoute lore, as can a drake swimme Whan it is caught and caryed to the brymme 2451

This honourable Phillis doth hym chere;

Hire liketh wel his port and his manere
 But, for I am agroted herebyforn To wryte of hem that ben in love for-sworn, 2455

And ek to haste me in my legende,
 (Which to performe God me grace sende!)
 Therefore I passe shortly in this wyse
 Ye han wel herd of Theseus devyae

In the betraysynge of fayre Adryane, 2460
 That of hire pite kepte him from his bane
 At shorte wordes, ryght so Demophon
 The same way, the same path hath gon,
 That dide his false fader Theseus
 For unto Phillis hath he sworn thus, 2465
 To wedden hire, and hire his trouthe plyghte,

And piked of hire al the good he myghte, Whan he was hol and sound, and hadde his
 reste,

And doth with Phillis what so that hym
 leste,

As wel coude I, if that me leste so, 2470
 Tellen al his doynge to and fro

He seyde, unto his contre moste he sayle,
 For there he wolde hire weddyng aparyle,
 As fel to hire honour, and his also
 And openly he tok his leve tho, 2475

And hath hire sworn he wolde nat sojorne,
 But in a month he wolde ageyn retourne,
 And in that lond let make his ordenaunce
 As verray lord, and tok the obeysaunce
 Wel and homly, and let his shipes dighte, And hom he goth the nexte wey he
 myghte 2481

For unto Phillis yit ne com he nought,
 And that hath she so harde and sore
 aboute,

Allas! that, as the storyes us recorde,
 She was hie owene deth ryght with a corde, 2485

Whan that she saw that Demophon hire
 trayed

But to hym first she wrot, and faste him prayed

He wolde come, and hire delyvere of peyne,
 As I reherce shal a word or tweyne Me lyst nat vouche-sauf on hym to swynke, 2490

Ne spende on hym a penne ful of ynke,
 For fals in love was he, ryght as his syre
 The devil sette here soules bothe afyre!
 But of the letter of Phillis wol I wryte

A word or two, although it be but lyte 2495
 "Thyn hostesse," quod she, "O Demophon,

Thy Phillis, which that is so wo begon,
 Of Rodopeye, upon yow mot compleyne
 Over the terme set bytwix us tweyne,
 That ye ne holde forward, as ye seyde 2500 Youre anker, which ye in oure haven leyde,

Hyghte us that ye wolde comen, out of
 doute,

Or that the mone wente ones aboute
 But tymes foure the mone hath hid hire face, 2504

Syn thilke day ye wente from this place,
 And foure tymes lyghte the world ageyn
 But for al that, yif I shal soothly seyn, Yit hath the strem of Sytho nat ybrought From Athenes the ship, yit cometh it noght

And if that ye the terme rekene wolde, 2510
 As I or as a trewe love shulde,

I pleyne nat, God wot, byforn my day "
 But al hire letter wryten I ne may
 By order, for it were to me a charge, Hire letter was ryght long and therto large 2515

But here and ther in rym I have it layd, There as me thoughte that she wel hath sayd

She seyde, "Thy sayles come nat agen,
 Ne to thy word there is no fey certeyn,
 But I wot why ye come nat," quod she, 2520

"For I was of my love to yow to fre
 And of the goddes that ye han forswore, Yif hire vengeance falle on yow therefore,
 Ye be nat suffisaunt to bere the peyne

To moche trusted I, wel may I pleyne, 2525
 Upon youre lynage and youre fayre tonge,
 And on youre teres falsly out ywronge

How coude ye wepe so by craft?" quod she "May there swiche teres feyned be?

Now certes, yif ye wol have in memorye,
 It oughte be to yow but lyte glorye 2531
 To han a sely mayde thus betrayed!

To God," quod she, "preye I, and ofte have prayed,

That it not be the grettest prys of alle,
 And most honour that evere the shal be-
 falle! 2535

And whan thyne olde auncestres peyated
 be,

In which men may here worthynesse se, Thanne preye I God thow peynted be also That folk may rede, forby as they go,
 'Lo' this is he, that with his flaterye 2540
 Bytraised hath and don hire vilenye That was his trewe love in thought and dede!'

But sothly, of oo poynt yit may they rede,
 That ye ben lyk youre fader as in this,
 For he begyled Adriane, ywis, 2545
 With swich an art and with swich subtilte
 As thow thyselfen hast begyled me
 As in that poynt, although it be nat fayr, Thow folwest hym, certayn, and art his ayr

But syn thus synfully ye me begile, 2550
 My body mote ye se, withunne a while,
 Ryght in the haven of Athenes fletyng, Withoute sepulture and buryng, Thogh ye ben harder than is any ston ''
 And whan this letter was forth sent
 anon, 2555

And knew how brotel and how fals he was,
 She for dispeyr fordide hyreself, allas!
 Swych sorwe hath she, for she besette hire
 so

Be war, ye wemen, of youre subtyl fo, Syn yit this day men may ensauple
 se, 2560

And trusteth, as in love, no man but me

Explicit Legenda Phillis

IX

THE LEGEND OF HYPERMNESTRA

Incript Legenda Ypermystre

In Grece whlom weren brethren two,
 Of whiche that oon was called Danao,
 That many a sone hath of his body wonne,
 As swiche false lovers ofte conne 2565
 Among his sones alle there was oon
 That aldermost he lovede of everychoon
 And whan this child was born, this Danao
 Shop hym a name, and callede hym Lyno
 That other brother called was Egiste, 2570
 That was of love as fals as evere hym liste,

And many a daughter gat he in his lyf,
 Of whiche he gat upon his ryghte wyf
 A daughter dere, and dide hire for to calle Ypermystra, yongeste of hem alle 2575
 The whiche child, of hire natyvyte,
 To alle thewes goode yborn was she,
 As likede to the goddes, er she was born,
 That of the shef she sholde be the corn
 The Wirdes, that we clepen Destyne, 2580 Hath shapen hire that she mot nedes be Pyetous, sad, wis, and trewe as stel,
 As to these wemen it acordeth wel
 For thogh that Venus yaf hire gret beaute,
 With Jupiter compounded so was she 2585

That conscience, trouthe, and drede of shame,
 And of hyre wifhod for to kepe hire name,
 Thus, thoughte hire, was felycite as here
 The rede Mars was that tyme of the yeere
 So feble that his malyce is hym raft, 2590
 Repressed hath Venus his crewel craft,
 That, what with Venus and other oppression

Of houses, Mars his venim is adoun,
 That Ypermystra dar nat handle a knyf
 In malyce, thogh she shulde lese hire lyf
 But natheles, as hevене gan tho turne, 2595
 To badde aspectes hath she of Saturne,
 That made hire for to deyen in prisoun,
 As I shal after make mencion

To Danao and Egistes also — 2600
 Although so be that they were brethren two,
 For thilke tyme was spared no lynage —
 It lykede hem to make a maryage Bytwixen Ypermystre and hym Lyno,
 And casten swich a day it shal be so, 2605
 And ful accorded was it utterly,
 The aray is wrought, the tyme is faste by
 And thus Lyno hath of his faders brother

The doughter wedded, and ech of hem hath other

The torches brennen, and the laumpes
bryghte, 2610

The sacryfices ben ful redy dighte,
Th'encens out of the fyre reketh sote,
The flour, the lef is rent up by the rote
To maken garlondes and crounes hye

Ful is the place of soun of minstralsye, 2615
Of songes amerous of maryage,

As thylke tyme was the pleyne usage
And this was in the paleys of Egiste,

That in his hous was lord, ryght as hym
lyste

And thus the day they dryve to an ende, The frendes taken leve, and hom they wende, 2621

The nyght is come, the bryd shal go to
bedde

Egistus to his chamber faste hym spedde,
And prively he let his doughter calle

Whan that the hous was voyded of hem
alle, 2625

He loketh on his doughter with glad
chere,

And to hire spak, as ye shal after here
"My ryghte doughter, tresor of myn herte,

Syn fyrst that day that shapen was my
sherte,

Or by the fatal systren had my dom, 2630
So nygh myn herte nevere thyng ne com

As thow, myn Ypermystre, doughter dere
Tak hed what I, thy fader, seye the here,

And werk after thy wiser evere mo
For alderfirst, doughter, I love the so 2635

That al the world to me nis half so lef,
Ne I nolde rede the to thy myschef

For al the good under the colde mone
And what I mene, it shal be seyde right
sone,

With protestacioun, as in this wyse, 2640
That, but thow do as I shal the devyse,

Thow shalt be ded, by hym that al hath wrought!

At shorte wordes thow ne scapest nought
Out of my paleys, or that thow be ded,

But thow consente and werke after my red, 2645

Tak this to thee for ful conclusioun "

This Ypermystre caste hire eyen doun,
And quok as doth the lef of aspe grene

Ded'wex hire hew, and lyk an ash to sene,

And seyde, "Lord and fader, al youre
wille, 2650

After my myght, God wot, I shal fulfille,
So it to me be non confusioun "

"I nele," quod he, "have non exceptioun ",
And out he caught a knyfe, as rasour kene

"Hyd this," quod he, "that it be nat ysene, 2655

And, whan thyn husbonde is to bedde go,
Whil that he slepeth, lit his throte atwo

For in my dremes it is warned me
How that my nevew shal my bane be,

But which I noot, wherfore I wol be siker If thow sey nay, we two shul have a biker, 2661

As I have seyde, by hym that I have sworn!"

This Ipermystre hath nygh hire wit forlorn,

And, for to passen harmles of that place,
She graunteth hym, ther is non other
grace 2665

And therewithal a costret taketh he,
And seyde, "Herof a draught, or two, or
thre,

Yif hym to drynke, whan he goth to reste,
And he shal slepe as longe as evere thee
leste,

The narcotyks and opies ben so stronge
And go thy way, lest that him thynke longe " 2671

Out cometh the bryd, and with ful sobre
cheere,

As is of maydens ofte the manere,
To chaumbre is brought with revel and with song

And shortly, lest this tale be to long, 2675 This Lyno and she sone ben brought to
bedde,

And every wight out at the dore hym
spedde

The nyght is wasted, and he fyl aslepe
Ful tenderly begynneth she to wepe,

She rist hire up, and dredfully she quak eth, 2680

As doth the braunche that Zepherus shaketh,

And hust were alle in Argon that cite
As cold as any frost now waxeth she,

For pite by the herte hire streyneth so,
And drede of deth doth hire so moche
wo, 2685

That thryes doun she fyl in swich a were She rist yit up, and stakereth her and
 there,
 And on hire hondes faste loketh she
 "Allas' and shal myne hondes blody be?
 I am a mayde, and, as by my nature, 2690
 And bi my semblaunt and by my vesture, Myne handes ben nat shapen for a knyf,
 As for to reve no man fro his lyf
 What devel have I with the knyf to do?
 And shal I have my throte korve a-two?
 Thanne shal I blede, allas' and me be-shende! 2696
 And nedes-cost this thyng moste have an
 ende,
 Or he or I mot nedes lese oure lyf
 Now certes," quod she, "syn I am his wif,
 And hath my feyth, yit is it bet for me
 For to be ded in wify honeste 2701
 Than ben a traytour lyvyng in my shame
 Be as be may, for ernest or for game,
 He shal awake, and ryse, and gon his way,

Out at this goter, or that it be day" —
 And wep ful tenderly upon his face, 2706
 And in hyre armes gan hym to enbrace,
 And hym she roggeth and awaketh softe
 And at a wyndow lep he fro the lofte, Whan she hath warned hym, and don hym
 bote 2710
 This Lyno swift was, and lyght of fote,
 And from his wif he ran a ful good pas
 This sely woman is so weik, allas!
 And helples so, that, or that she fer wente, Hire crewel fader dide hire for to hente 2715
 Allas' Lyno! whi art thou so unkynde?
 Why ne haddest thou remembred in thy
 mynde
 To taken hire, and lad hire forth with the?
 For, whan she saw that gon away was he,
 And that she myghte nat so faste go, 2720
 Ne folwen hym, she sat hire doun ryght tho,
 Til she was caught and fetered in prysoun
 This tale is seyde for this conclusioun —

[Unfinished]

SHORT POEMS

It is supposed that in addition to the narrative poems by which Chaucer is chiefly known he also composed lyrics in considerable number. This is altogether probable in itself. He would be likely, as a young courtier, to have possessed and practiced such accomplishments as he ascribes to the Squire in the General Prologue, who, it will be recalled, "koude songes make and wel endite." In the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women Alceste pleads on Chaucer's behalf that he has made

Many an ympne for Loves haldayes
That highte balades, roundels, virelayes, and her testimony — lest it should be dismissed as fiction — is confirmed by that of Gower and Lydgate. But of all these songs, if they ever existed, very few have come down to us under Chaucer's name. Only about a score of his short poems are now known, and of these not more than ten, including some of doubtful authorship, could be reckoned as hymns for the God of Love. The others, which are nearly all ballades in form, are either humorous epistles or poems on moral or religious subjects.

Hardly any of Chaucer's short poems can be precisely dated. The Envoy of the Complaint to His Empty Purse was certainly written after the accession of Henry IV, and so may be the latest piece of his composition that is preserved. But the Complaint itself is possibly of earlier date. The A B C, if the association with the Duchess Blanche of Lancaster is trustworthy, may be the earliest of the poet's surviving works. In any case there is every probability that he composed it in his youth. The Envoy to Bukton can be attached with considerable confidence to an expedition of the year 1396, and the Envoy to Scogan, less confidently, to the floods of 1393. But the events which underlie the other pieces are either entirely doubtful or of uncertain date, and the poems can be arranged only in an approximate order, based partly upon the evidence of their relation to Chaucer's longer works.

It is only in the looser sense of the word that most of Chaucer's short poems can be called lyrics. In so far as lyrical poetry is an intensely individual expression of thought or feeling, it would seem not to have been natural to Chaucer's temperament. Even among narrative poets he is exceptionally objective and impersonal, and for that matter, the individual "lyric cry" was not characteristic of his age. His few love-poems, to be sure, are written in the first person, and have been held by biographers to give evidence of a "long, early, and hopeless" attachment. But they sound rather like exercises in a conventional style of composition. The more mature pieces are in a didactic or satirical vein. Whether any poems of the whole series are lyrics in the particular sense of having been composed as songs, is hard to judge. The rondel in the Parliament of Fowls — "Now welcom somer with thy sonne softe" — proves that Chaucer could write verse that sings itself, and several of the short poems have a comparable movement. Chaucer may very well have written some of them for music, if he did not, like a number of his contemporaries, himself compose the melodies. But very few of them would find a place in a song-book.

They do show, however, that Chaucer, from his early years, was concerned with metrical technique and given to experimentation, and they are consequently of much interest to the historian of English verse. The Complaint unto Pity and Complaint to his Lady furnish what are probably the earliest English examples of the seven-line stanza known as rime royal, and the latter contains also the first attempt in English at the imitating of Dante's terza rima. Most striking of all, Chaucer found, apparently at the very outset, the measure which he practically introduced into English versification, and which he employed in all of his greatest works — the five-accent, or decasyllabic, line. Only a few inconspicuous examples of it have been shown to occur earlier in English. Chaucer is commonly said to have derived it, at least in the couplet arrangement, from Machaut, but his persistent use of it must have been largely due to the endecasillabi of his Italian masters. He employed it in his earliest short poems, even in the A B C, of which the French original was in octosyllabics. It not only remained the favorite measure of his later works, but became, in the stanzaic combinations and couplets which he made current, and afterwards in blank verse, the most characteristic line of English prosody.

AN A B C — According to a statement in Speght's edition of Chaucer, the A B C, or La Priere de Nostre Dame, was made "at the request of Blanche, Duchess of Lancaster, as a prayer for her private use, being a woman in her religion very devout." The Duchess died in 1369, and there is no reason for hesitating to date the poem in or before that year. It is a rather free rendering, with the metrical modification already mentioned, of a prayer in Deguilleville's Pelerinage de la Vie Humaine. A complete translation of the French poem, with the exception of the prayer, was afterward made by Lydgate. It is interesting to note that Deguilleville's work, used by the young Chaucer, was a forerunner, if not in some measure an actual model, of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress.

The A B C being only a translation, reveals very little about Chaucer. If the tradition about the Duchess Blanche is true, it is not possible even to credit him with the choice of the subject, and to draw inferences therefrom. But the poem itself, if not an evidence of Chaucer's piety, is a characteristic expression of the piety of his age, and is by no means an unworthy specimen of the hymns and prayers evoked by the veneration of the Blessed Virgin.

THE COMPLAINT UNTO PITY — The three pieces that follow, together with the Complaint d'Amours and the complaints of Mars, Venus, and Anelida, belong to a type of poetry that was very much cultivated in mediæval France and England. As a literary term, "complaint," or its Latin equivalent "planctus," had a variety of applications. The De Planctu Naturæ of Alanus de Insulis is a kind of poetic treatise, in which Nature is represented as deploring the sins and shortcomings of mankind. Similarly, in various languages, the title was given to religious lyrics, and there are complaints of Christ and of the Virgin, complaints of the Soul and of the Flesh. The term was applied also to poems of lamentations on particular catastrophes, as when Geoffrey of Vinsauf "complained the death so sore" of Richard I. Indeed the idea of a formal lament became so familiar that Chaucer puts more or less elaborate complaints into the mouths of the characters in a number of his stories, and in the Physician's Tale Virginia asks her father, before killing her to preserve her honor, to grant her a respite in which she may "complain her death."

The theme of love-poetry, from antiquity down, has often been the sorrow or grievance of the unaccepted lover, and this sentiment found natural expression in the complaint. It is to the type of amorous complaint that nearly all of Chaucer's lyrics, so entitled, belong, and the first of them, the Complaint unto Pity, is an excellent specimen. No definite source is known for it, though parallels have been pointed out for the ideas, which are for the most part familiar and conventional. As in the following Complaint to his Lady and the Complaint d'Amours, the poet speaks in the first person and appears to be the lover. But there is little likelihood that the poems reflect a serious experience of Chaucer's.

A COMPLAINT TO HIS LADY — The piece usually printed as the Complaint to his Lady is fragmentary, and it is not certain that the three parts constitute a single poem. But they are bound together by the common theme of unrequited love. For this complaint, again, no source is known, but the attempt at terza rima points to the influence of Dante. The ideas are thoroughly conventional, and the poem is chiefly interesting for the versification.

THE COMPLAINT OF MARS — In The Complaint of Mars the speaker is no longer the poet, but the Roman divinity, and the cause of his lament, as in the case of the Complaint of Anelida, is explained in an introductory narrative. The simple incident of the separation of Mars and Venus by the coming of Phebus is told with various complications of detail which have been shown to refer, not properly to the gods, but to the positions and movements of the corresponding planets. So the whole poem may be regarded as a treatment, in personal or human terms, of a conjunction of Mars and Venus. Whether it has further meaning, as an allegory of an intrigue at court, is a matter of disagreement. Shirley, in a note at the end of his copy of the poem, recorded the belief that it referred to a raison between John Holland, Lord Huntingdon, and Isabel, Duchess of York. He added that the French original of the so-called Complaint of Venus (here printed among Chaucer's late poems) was written by Otes de Granson for Isabel, in the character of Venus. Most editors of Chaucer have accepted the tradition, at least as regards the Complaint of Mars. Chaucer's recent biographer, Mr Cowling, would interpret the Mars as referring rather to the seduction of Elizabeth, daughter of John of Gaunt, by the same John Holland. But both these personal applications are altogether doubtful, and the astronomical interpretation would account sufficiently for the poem. It seems clear in any case that the Complaint of Venus, traditionally so entitled because of Shirley's explanation, had originally no connection with the Complaint of Mars.

ROSAMOUNDE — The metrical form which Chaucer chiefly employed in his later lyrics was the ballade. In origin a dance-song, the ballade came to be written in various measures and stanzaic arrangements. In Chaucer's hand it usually consisted of seven-line or eight-line stanzas, followed by an envoy. In substance, very commonly, the ballade was a love-lyric. But its uses, like those of the English sonnet in the time of Milton, were extended to cover a great variety of subjects, conspicuously by Chaucer's French contemporary, Eustace Deschamps, who wrote innumerable poems of the type dealing with moral philosophy and social satire. In treating a similar range of subjects, in his later ballades, Chaucer may have been consciously following Deschamps's example.

The poem to Rosamonde, the following one, entitled Womanly Noblesse, and the one Against Women Inconstant (here included among pieces of doubtful authorship) appear to be the earliest of Chaucer's ballades that are preserved. The Rosamonde, addressed to an unknown lady, is a typical complimentary poem in the spirit of courtly love. But in its grace and humor it is distinctively Chaucerian.

WOMANLY NOBLESSE — Although called a ballade in the manuscript and accompanied by the usual envoy, Womanly Noblesse has a difficult rime scheme not elsewhere adopted by Chaucer in poems of the type. In spite of the scribe's ascription to Chaucer, his authorship has been questioned. The poem is less characteristic of him than the Rosamonde, but there seems to be no good reason for rejecting it from the canon.

ADAM SCRIVEYN The lines to Adam Scriveyn, which read like one of the personal epigrams of the ancients, reveal some of the anxieties which beset an author before the invention of printing. The poem could hardly be more vivid if the record searchers should succeed in discovering Adam's family name. Some of their conjectures on the subject are recorded in the explanatory notes.

THE FORMER AGE — The following five ballades, all on moral or philosophical subjects, are associated by a common, though unequal, indebtedness to the De Consolatione Philosophiæ. They are here printed in a series because of this relationship to Boethius. But it is not necessarily to be inferred that they were written in close sequence. The date of none of them is certain, but such doubtful references to contemporary events as have been noted in them point to their composition at intervals of several years.

The Former Age cannot be attached to any definite occasion, though the reflections on the happiness of man's primeval state might well have been prompted by the troubled conditions of the reign of Richard II. The central idea of the poem is familiar in literature — classical, early Christian, mediæval, and modern. Chaucer must have known many expressions of it, but his actual sources were apparently few. In addition to Boethius he made use of Ovid and the Roman de la Rose, and possibly of Virgil.

FORTUNE — Chaucer's general conception and doctrine of Fortune are derived primarily from Boethius. In the Consolation, as in Chaucer's ballade sequence, there is a complaint against Fortune, a defense of the goddess, and a discussion of her significance. But the influence of other authors, certainly Jean de Meun and probably Dante, is also apparent. It is noteworthy that here, as in some of his other references to Fortune, Chaucer, following the teaching of Boethius and Dante, so to speak adopts the pagan divinity into the system of Christian theology, and makes her the executor of the will of God.

The occasion of the poem is unknown. It is clearly an appeal for favor, and the poet's "beste frend" might be either John of Gaunt or the King. Some critics, favoring on literary grounds a date in the eighties, hold the reference to be to Lancaster. But the three princes addressed in the Envoy seem to be the Dukes of Lancaster, York, and Gloucester, who were given control, in 1390, over gifts made at the cost of the King. Unless the Envoy, then, was attached to an earlier poem, the appeal was apparently intended for the King himself.

TRUTH — To judge by the twenty-two manuscript copies that are preserved, Truth, or the Ballade de Bon Conseyl, would seem to have been the best known or most admired of Chaucer's short poems. The interest in it may have been increased by the belief that it was the parting counsel of the poet, composed upon his deathbed. Reasons have been found for doubting that tradition, but the poem is none the less an epitome of a wise practical philosophy, expressed in a Christian spirit. In its general thought Truth shows the influence of Boethius, though it does not closely follow particular passages. Biblical influence is also apparent in both thought and language, most notably in the refrain, which echoes the Gospel of John: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

According to the traditional opinion, as has just been said, Chaucer's good counsel was intended to be general, and was written at the end of his life. But an acute observer has recognized in the puzzling word "vache" in the Envoy the name of Sir Philip de la Vache, who married the daughter of Chaucer's intimate friend, Sir Lewis Clifford. The question again arises whether the ballade proper was composed independently of the envoy. But it is highly probable that Chaucer wrote the poem to give advice or encouragement to his young friend. And though the immediate occasion is unknown, a date before 1390 seems best to fit the circumstances of Sir Philip's life.

GENTILESSE — Chaucer's teaching concerning "gentilesse," like that concerning Fortune, is compounded of ideas derived from Boethius, Dante, and Jean de Meun. He repeats it in very similar terms in the Wife of Bath's Tale, where Dante is quoted by name. The sentiments he expresses are sometimes treated by critics as if they were bold utterances, far in advance of the social philosophy of the age. But on the contrary the doctrine that gentility depends on character, not inheritance — virtus, non sanguis — was commonly received opinion. It might be described as the Christian democracy regularly taught by the church, though not regularly exemplified in Christian society.

LAK OF STEDFASTNESSE — The title Lak of Stedfastnesse is now commonly used for the poem described by Shirley as a "Balade Royal made by our Laureal poete of Albyon in hees laste yeres." The envoy, in Shirley's copy, is headed "Lenvoye to Kyng Richard." Another manuscript also says that Chaucer sent the poem to the King, and there is no reason for discrediting the statement. But Shirley's assignment of the poem to Chaucer's last years is more open to question, especially since doubt has been cast upon his similar dating of Truth. The complaint of lack of steadfastness in the state of England would certainly have been appropriate in the period from 1386 to 1390, to which reasons have been given for assigning some of the other ballades of the Boethian group.

THE COMPLAINT OF VENUS The inappropriate title of the Complaint of Venus, and the allegorical interpretation which applies it to the Duchess of York, have already been explained in the account of the Complaint of Mars. The series of ballades which compose the Venus are freely translated from ballades of Otes de Granson, and appear to have no relation to the Mars. Nor is it necessary to see in either the Mars or the Venus a reference to the love-affairs of Isabel of York. Some critics who reject the allegory still hold that Chaucer probably translated the ballades for Isabel. But this also is rendered doubtful by the well-supported reading Princes, for Princess, in the envoy. On the whole the purpose and destination of the poem must be regarded as entirely uncertain. The date is likewise unknown. The French ballades are held by M. Piaget, who edited them, to have been written in Granson's youth, but Chaucer's envoy contains a reference to old age which has led to the classification of his translation with his later poems.

LENVOY DE CHAUCER A SCOGAN — In the envoys to Scogan and Bukton Chaucer employs, not the ballade form with its continuous rime scheme and recurrent refrain, but a free sequence of seven-line or eight-line stanzas. In each case, however, the last stanza, with its personal message, has somewhat the effect of the envoy of a regular ballade.

The serious purpose of the letter to Scogan, in so far as it had any, was apparently to ask for the good offices of a friend at court. This appears in the final stanza. In the body of the epistle Chaucer rallies Scogan humorously on his disloyalty to Venus, and warns him against the vengeance of the goddess. Thus the poem takes its place among the documents cited in exposition of Chaucer's treatment of courtly love.

Scogan is probably to be identified as Henry Scogan, an avowed disciple of Chaucer, who wrote a Moral Ballade, addressed to the sons of Henry IV. Chaucer's Envoy is supposed to have been written in 1393.

LENVOY DE CHAUCER A BUKTON — The Envoy to Bukton, from its reference to capture "in Fryse," can be confidently dated in 1396, the year of an expedition against Friesland. It may have been addressed to either Sir Peter Bukton, of Holderness in Yorkshire, or Sir Robert Bukton, of Goosewold in Suffolk. Both men were associated with Chaucer's circle, but Sir Peter's close relations with the house of Lancaster make it seem probable that the Envoy was intended for him.

Like the Envoy to Scogan, it is a humorous epistle. But this time the humor takes a different turn. Bukton's approaching marriage is the occasion of the bantering address, in which Chaucer, in gay spirit, rehearses some of the time-honored attacks upon matrimony. It ought not to be necessary to add, but some remarks of the commentators invite the observation, that the Envoy is not to be taken seriously as evidence that Chaucer either disapproved his friend's marriage or regretted his own!

THE COMPLAINT OF CHAUCER TO HIS PURSE — The envoy of the Complaint to his Purse must have been written immediately after the coronation of Henry IV, on September 30, 1399. From the fact that the Complaint is preserved in some manuscripts without the envoy, it is conjectured that Chaucer wrote it earlier, perhaps as a petition to Richard II. But in the date of its actual use, or what might be called its publication, it is the last work known to have come from the author's hand. It is interesting to see the elderly Chaucer reverting to the type of poem which he wrote in his youth, the lover's complaint, here skillfully travestied in the appeal to his new lady, his empty purse. And the petition was not only skillful, but also effective. At all events, on October 3, 1399, Chaucer received a grant from Henry IV.

SHORT POEMS OF DOUBTFUL AUTHORSHIP

A few poems have been here classified by themselves as of doubtful authorship, either because they are not ascribed to Chaucer in the manuscripts, or because something in their language or style makes their authenticity questionable. Of this group the ballades

Against Women Inconstant and Complaynt d'Amours and the roundel Merciles Beaute are almost certainly Chaucer's. The Balade of Complaint and the Proverbs are very doubtful indeed.

AGAINST WOMEN UNCONSTANT — This ballade bears a general resemblance to one of Machaut's, which has the same refrain. But Chaucer's poem is not a translation of the French one, and no source for it has been discovered. Its occasion is also unknown. Its mood, as Skeat observed, is somewhat like that of Lak of Stedfastnesse, but the subject is more personal.

COMPLAYNT D'AMOURS — This is a typical complaint for unrequited love, and was perhaps written merely as a poetic exercise for St. Valentine's Day. If genuine it is probably to be assigned to Chaucer's early period, along with several other poems on the same theme.

MERCILES BEAUTE — The roundel appropriately entitled Merciles Beaute in the single manuscript which contains it, treats its conventional subject in characteristically Chaucerian spirit and style. No definite source has been found for it, though several passages which Chaucer may well have had in mind have been pointed out in French poetry.

A BALADE OF COMPLAINT — This is an undistinguished specimen of the familiar type. There is no strong reason for attributing it to Chaucer.

PROVERBS — The Proverbs are ascribed to Chaucer in two manuscripts, and may be his in spite of one suspicious rhyme. The brevity of the piece and its complete unlikeness to Chaucer's other work make the question of authorship hard to decide. The structure of the quatrains, which begin with descriptive or illustrative matter and lead up to the literal words of the proverb, is traditional in gnomic poetry in various languages.

AN A B C

Incipit carmen secundum ordinem litterarum alphabeti

Almighty and al merciable queene,
To whom that al this world fleeth for socour,

To have relees of sinne, of sorwe, and teene,
Glorious virgine, of alle floures flour,
To thee I flee, confounded in error 5
Help and releeve, thou mighti debonayre,
Have mercy on my perilous langour!
Venquished me hath my cruel adversaire

Bountee so fix hath in thin herte his tente,
That wel I wot thou wolt my socour bee, 10 Thou canst not warne him that with good entente

Axeth thin helpe, thin herte is ay so free
Thou art largesse of pleyn felicitee,
Haven of refut, of quete, and of reste
Loo, how that theeves sevene chasen mee!
Help, lady bright, er that my shup tobreste! 16

Comfort is noon but in yow, ladi deere,
For, loo, my sinne and my confusioun,
Which oughten not in thi presence appeere,
Han take on me a greevous accioun 20
Of verrey right and desperacioun,
And, as bi right, thei mighten wel susteene
That I were wurthi my dampnacioun, Nere merci of you, blisful hevене queene!

Dowte is ther noon, thou queen of miseri-corde, 25
That thou n'art cause of grace and merci
heere,

God vouched sauf thurgh thee with us to accorde

For, certes, Crystes blisful mooder deere,
Were now the bowe bent in swich maneeere
As it was first, of justice and of ire, 30
The rightful God nolde of no mercy heere,
But thurgh thee han we grace, as we desire

Evere hath myn hope of refut been in thee,
 For heer-biforn ful ofte, in many a wyse,
 Hast thou to misericorde receyved me 35
 But merci, lady, at the grete assyse, Whan we shule come before the hye justyse!

So litel fruit shal thanne in me be founde
 That, but thou er that day me wel chastyse,
 Of verrey right my werk wol me confounde

Fleeinge, I flee for socour to thi tente 41
 Me for to hide from tempeste ful of dreede,
 Biseeching yow that ye you not absente, Thouh I be wikke O help yit at this neede!

All have I ben a beste in wil and deede, 45
 Yit, lady, thou me clothe with thi grace
 Thin enemy and myn — lady, tak heede! —
 Unto my deth in poynt is me to chace!

Glorious mayde and mooder, which that nevere

Were bitter, neither in erthe nor in see, 50
 But ful of swetnesse and of merci evere,
 Help that my Fader be not wroth with me
 Spek thou, for I ne dar not him ysee,
 So have I doon in erthe, allas the while!
 That certes, but if thou my socour bee, 55
 To stank eterne he wole my gost exile

He vouched sauf, tel him, as was his wille, Bicomme a man, to haveoure alliaunce,
 And with his precious blood he wrot the bille

Upon the crois, as general acquitaunce, 60
 To every penitent in ful creaunce,
 And therefore, lady bright, thou for us praye Thanne shalt thou bothe stunte al his grevaunce,
 And makeoure foo to failen of his praye

I wot it wel, thou wolt benoure socour, 65
 Thou art so ful of bowntee, in certeyn
 For, whan a soule falleth in errour,
 Thi pitee goth and haleth him ayern Thanne makest thou his pees with his sovereyn,

And bringest him out of the crooked strete Whoso thee loveth, he shal not love in veyn, 71

That shal he fynde, as he the lyf shal lete

Kalenderes enlumyned ben thei
 That in this world ben lighted with thi
 name,

And whoso goth to yow the righte wey, 75
 Him thar not drede in soule to be lame Now, queen of comfort, sith thou art that same

To whom I seeche for my medicyne, Lat not my foo no more my wounde en-tame,

Myn hele into thin hand al I resygne 80

Lady, thi sorwe kan I not portreie
 Under the cros, ne his greevous penaunce
 But for youre bothes peynes I yow preye, Lat notoure alder foo make his bobaunce
 That he hath in his lystes of mischaunce 85 Convict that ye bothe have bought so deere

As I seide erst, thou ground ofoure substance,

Continue on us thi pitous eyen cleere!

Moyses, that saugh the bush with flawmes
 rede

Brenninge, of which ther never a stukke brende, 90

Was signe of thin unwemmed maidenhede Thou art the bush on which ther gan de-scende

The Holi Gost, the which that Moyses
 wende

Had ben a-fyr, and this was in figure
 Now, lady, from the fyr thou us defende 95
 Which that in helle eternalli shal dure

Noble princesse, that nevere haddest peere, Certes, if any comfort in us bee,
 That cometh of thee, thou Cristes mooder deere

We han noon oother melodye or glee 100
 Us to rejoyse inoure adversitee,

Ne advocat noon that wole and dar so
 preye

For us, and that for litel hire as yee,
 That helpen for an Ave-Marie or tweye

O verrey light of eyen that ben blynde, 105
 O verrey lust of labour and distresse,
 O tresoreere of bountee to mankynde, Thee whom God ches to mooder for humblesse!

From his ancille he made the maistresse Of hevене and erthe, oure bille up for to beede 110

This world awaiteth evere on thi goodnesse,
For thou ne failest nevere wight at neede

Purpos I have sum time for to enquire Wherfore and whi the Holē Gost thee soughte,

Whan Gabrielles vois cam to thin ere 115
He not to werre us swich a wonder
wroughte,

But for to save us that he sithen boughte,
Thanne needeth us no wepen us for to save,
But only ther we dide not, as us oughte,
Doo penitence, and merci axe and have 120

Queen of comfort, yit whan I me bithinke
That I agilt have bothe hum and thee,
And that my soule is worthi for to sinke, Allas! I caityf, whider may I flee?

Who shal unto thi Sone my mene bee? 125
Who, but thuself, that art of pitee welle?
Thou hast more reuthe on oure adversitee
Than in this world might any tonge telle

Redresse me, mooder, and me chastise,
For certeynly my Faderes chastisinge, 130
That dar I nouht abiden in no wise,
So ludous is his rightful rekenyngē Mooder, of whom oure merci gan to springe,

Beth ye my juge and eek my soules leche,
For evere in you is pitee haboundinge 135
To ech that wole of pitee you biseeche

Soth is that God ne granteth no pitee
Withoute thee, for God, of his goodnesse, Foryveth noon, but it like unto thee
He hath thee maked vicairē and maistresse
Of al this world, and eek governouresse 141
Of hevене, and he represeth his justise
After thi wil, and therefore in witnessē
He hath thee crowned in so rial wise

Temple devout, ther God hath his woningē, 145

Fro which these misbileeved deprived been,

To you my soule penitent I bringe Receyve me — I can no ferther flee!
With thornes venymous, O hevене queen,
For which the eerthe acursed was ful yore,
I am so wounded, as ye may wel seen, 151
That I am lost almost, it smert so sore

Virgine, that art so noble of appaule,
And ledest us into the hye tour
Of Paradys, thou me wisse and counsaile
How I may have thi grace and thi socour,
All have I ben in filthe and in errour 157
Ladi, unto that court thou me ajourne
That cleped is thi bench, O freshe flour!
Ther as that merci evere shal sojourne 160

Kristus, thi sone, that in this world alighte
Upon the cros to suffre his passioun,
And eek that Longius his herte pighte,
And made his herte blood to renne adoun,
And al was this for my salvacioun, 165
And I to him am fals and eek unkynde,
And yit he wole not my dampnacoun —
This thanke I yow, socour of al mankynde!

Ysaac was figure of his deth, certeyn,
That so fer forth his fader wolde obeye 170
That him ne roughte nothing to be slayn,
Right soo thi Sone lst, as a lamb, to deye
Now, ladi ful of merci, I yow preye, Sith he his merci mesured so large,
Be ye not skant, for alle we singe and seye
That ye ben from vengeance ay oure targe 176

Zacharie yow clepeth the open welle
To washe sinful soule out of his gilt
Therefore this lessoun oughte I wel to telle,
That, nere thi tender herte, we were spilt Now, ladi bryghte, sith thou canst and wilt 181

Ben to the seed of Adam merciāble,
Bring us to that palais that is bilt
To penitentes that ben to merci able
Amen

Explicit carmen.

THE COMPLAINT UNTO PITY

Pite, that I have sought so yore agoo,
 With herte soore, and ful of besy payne,
 That in this world was never wight so woo Withoute deth, — and, yf I shal not fe, ne,
 My purpos was to Pite to compleyne 5
 Upon the crueltee and tyrannye
 Of Love, that for my trouthe doth me dye

And when that I, be lengthe of certeyne yeres,

Had evere in oon a tyme sought to speke,
 To Pittee ran I, al bespreynt with teres, 10
 To prayen hir on Cruelte me awreke
 But er I myghte with any word outbreke,
 Or tellen any of my peynes smerte,
 I fond hir ded, and buried in an herte

Adoun I fel when that I saugh the herse, 15 Ded as a ston, while that the swogh me
 laste,

But up I roos, with colour ful dyverse,
 And pitously on hir myn eyen I caste,
 And ner the corps I gan to presen faste,
 And for the soule I shop me for to preye 20
 I nas but lorn, ther was no more to seye

Thus am I slayn, sith that Pite is ded Allas, that day! that ever hyt shulde falle!
 What maner man dar now hold up his hed?
 To whom shal any sorrowful herte calle? 25
 Now Cruelte hath cast to slee us alle,
 In ydel hope, folk redeless of payne, — Syth she is ded, to whom shul we com-
 pleyne?

But yet encreseth me this wonder newe,
 That no wight woot that she is ded, but
 I — 30

So many men as in her tyme hir knewe —
 And yet she dyed not so sodeynly,
 For I have sought hir ever ful besely
 Sith first I hadde wit or mannes mynde,
 But she was ded er that I koude hir fynde

Aboute hir herse there stoden lustely, 36
 Withouten any woo, as thoughte me,
 Bounte parfyt, wel armed and richely,
 And fresshe Beaute, Lust, and Jolyte, Assured Maner, Youthe, and Honeste, 40

Wisdom, Estaat, Drede, and Governauce, Confedred both by bonde and alliaunce

A compleynt had I, written, in myn hond,
 For to have put to Pittee as a bille,
 But when I al this companye ther fond, 45
 That rather wolden al my cause spille
 Then do me help, I held my pleynte stille,
 For to that folk, withouten any fayle,
 Withoute Pittee ther may no bille availe

Then leve I al these vertues, sauf Pite, 50 Keypyng the corps, as ye have herd me
 seyn,

Confedred alle by bond of Cruelte,
 And ben assented when I shal be sleyn
 And I have put my complaynt up ageyn,
 For to my foes my bille I dar not shewe, 55 Th'effect of which seith thus, in wordes fewe —

The Bill of Complaint

Humblest of herte, highest of reverence,
 Benygne flour, coroune of vertues alle,
 Sheweth unto youre rial excellence
 Your servaunt, yf I durste me so calle, 60
 Hys mortal harm, in which he is yfalle,
 And noght al oonly for his evel fare,
 But for your renoun, as he shal declare

Hit stondesth thus your contraire, Cruel-tee,

Allyed is ayenst your regalye, 65
 Under colour of womanly Beaute, —
 For men shulde not, lo, knowe hir tirannyne, —

With Bounte, Gentlesse, and Curtesye,
 And hath depryved yow now of your place That hyghte "Beaute apertenant to Grace" 70

For kyndely, by youre herytage ryght,
 Ye ben annexed ever unto Bounte,
 And verrayly ye oughte do youre myght
 To helpe Trouthe in his adversyte
 Ye be also the crowne of Beaute, 75
 And certes, yf ye wanten in these tweyne,
 The world is lore, ther is no more to seyne

Eke what availeth Maner and Gentillesse Withoute yow, benygne creature?
Shal Cruelte be your governeresse? 80
Allas! what herte may hyt longe endure?
Wherefore, but ye the rather take cure
To breke that perlouse alliaunce,
Ye sleen hem that ben in your obeisaunce

And further over, yf ye suffre this, 85
Youre renoun ys fordoo than in a throwe, Ther shal no man wite well what Pite is Allas, that your renoun sholde be so lowe!
Ye be than fro youre heritage ythrowe
By Cruelte, that occupieth youre place, 90
And we despeyred, that seken to your grace

Have mercy on me, thow Herenus quene,
That yow have sought so tendirly and yore,
Let som strem of youre lyght on me be sene
That love and drede yow, ever lenger the
more 95

For, sothly for to seyne, I bere the soore, And, though I be not konnyng for to
pleyne,

For Goddis love, have mercy on my peyne!

My peyne is this, that what so I desire
That have I not, ne nothing lvk therto, 100
And ever setteth Desir myn hert on fire
Eke on that other syde, where so I goo, What maner thing that may encrease my woo,

That have I redy, unsoght, everywhere, Me [ne] lakketh but my deth, and than my bere 105

What nedeth to shewe parcel of my peyne?
Syth every woo that herte may bethynke
I suffre, and yet I dar not to yow pleyne,
For wel I wot, although I wake or wynke,
Ye rekke not whether I fiete or synke 110
But natheles, yet my trouthe I shal sustene Unto my deth, and that shal wel be sene

This is to seyne, I wol be youre evere, Though ye me slee by Cruelte, your foo,
Algate my spirit shal never dissevere 115
Fro youre servise, for any peyne or woo Sith ye be ded — allas, that hyt is soo! — Thus for your deth I may wel wepe and
pleyne

With herte sore, and ful of besy peyne

Explicit

A COMPLAINT TO HIS LADY

I

The longe nightes, whan every creature Shulde have hir rest in somewhat, as by
kynde,

Or elles ne may hir lif nat long endure,
Hit falleth most into my woful mynde
How I so fer have broght myself behynde, That, sauf the deeth, ther may nothyng me lisse, 6

So desespaired I am from alle blisse

This same thoght me lasteth til the
morwe,

And from the morwe forth til hit be eve,
Ther nedeth me no care for to borwe, 10
For bothe I have good leyser and good
leve,

Ther is no wyght that wol me wo bereve

To wepe ynogh, and wailen al my file,
The sore spark of peyne now doth me spille

II

This Love, that hath me set in swich a place 15

That my desir he nevere wol fulfille,
For neither pitee, mercy, neither grace,
Can I nat fynde, and yit my sorwful
herte,

For to be deed, I can hit nought arace
The more I love, the more she doth me
smerte 20

Though which I see, withoute remedye That from the deeth I may no wyse asterte

III

Now sothly, what she hight I wol reherse
Hir name is Bountee, set in womanhede, Sadnesse in youthe, and Beautee pryde-lees 25
And Plesaunce, under governaunce and
drede,
Hir surname is eek Faire Rewthelees,
The Wyse, ykmit unto Good Aventure, That, for I love hir, she sleeth me giltelees
Hir love I best, and shal, whyl I may dure, Bet than myself an hundred thousand deel, 31
Than al this worldes richesse or creature
Now hath not Love me bestowed weel
To love ther I never shal have part?
Allas! right thus is turned me the wheel, 35
Thus am I slayn with Loves fyry dart
I can but love hir best, my swete fo,
Love hath me taught no more of his art
But serve alwey, and stante for no wo

IV

in my trewe and careful herte ther is 40
So moche wo, and [eek] so litel blis
That wo is me that ever I was bore,
For al that thyng which I desyre I mis,
And al that ever I wolde not, ywis,
That finde I redy to me evermore, 45
And of al this I not to whom me pleyne For she that mighte me out of this brynge Ne reccheth nought whether I wepe or syngne,
So litel rewthe hath she upon my peyne Allas! whan slepyng-tyme is, than I wake, 50
Whan I shulde daunce, for fere, lo, than I quake,
This hevyl hif I lede for your sake,
Thogh ye therof in no wyse hede take,
My hertes lady, and hool my lyves quene!
For trewly dorste I seye, as that I fele, 55
Me semeth that your swete herte of stele
Is whetted now ageynes me to kene
My dere herte and best beloved fo,

Why lyketh yow to do me al this wo,
What have I doon that greveth yow, or sayd, 60
But for I serve and love yow and no mo?
And whilst I lyve I wol ever do so,
And therfor, swete, ne beth nat yvel apayd
For so good and so fair as ye be Hit were right gret wonder but ye hadde 65
Of alle servantes, bothe of goode and
badde,
And leest worthy of alle hem, I am he
But nevertheles, my righte lady swete, Thogh that I be unconnyng and unmete
To serve, as I coude best, ay your hy-
nesse, 70
Yit is ther fayner noon, that wolde I hete,
Than I, to do yow ese, or elles bete
What so I wiste that were to you [distresse],
And hadde I myght as good as I have
wille,
Than shulde ye fele wher it were so or noon, 75
For in this world than lvyng is ther
noon
That fayner wolde your hertes wil fulfille
For bothe I love and eek drede yow so sore,
And algates moot, and have doon yow, ful yore,
That bettre loved is noon, ne never
shal, 80
And yit I wolde beseche yow of no more,
But leveth wel, and be not wrooth therfore,
And lat me serve yow forth, lo, this is al!
For I am not so hardy, ne so wood,
For to desire that ye shulde love me, 85
For wel I wot, allas! that may nat be,
I am so litel worthy, and ye so good
For ye be oon the worthiest on-lyve
And I the most unlykly for to thryve, Yit, for al this, witeth ye right wele 90
That ye ne shul me from your servyce
dryve
That I nil ay, with alle my wittes fyve,
Serve yow trewly, what wo so that I fele
For I am set on yow in swich manere,

That, thogh ye never wil upon me
rewe, 95
I moste yow love, and been ever as
trewe
As any man can, or may, on-lyve [here]

But the more that I love yow, goodly free,
The lasse fynde I that ye loven me, Allas! whan shal that harde wit
amende? 100

Wher is now al your wommanly pitee,
Your gentillesse and your debonaartee?
Wil ye nothyng therof upon me spende?
And so hool, swete, as I am your es al,
And so gret wil as I have yow to serve, 105
Now, certes, and ye lete me thus sterve, Yit have ye wonne theron but a smal

For at my knowyng, I do nought why,
And this I wol beseche yow hertely,
That, ther ever ye fynde, whyl ye
lyve, 110

A trewer servant to yow than am I, Leveth thanne, and sleeth me hardely
And I my deeth to yow wol al foryive
And if ye fynde no trewer verrayly,
Wil ye suffre than that I thus spille, 115
And for no maner gilt but my good wile?
As good were thanne untrewre as trewe to
be

But I, my lyf and deeth, to yow obeye,
And with right buxom herte hooly I preye, As [is] your moste plesure, so doth by
me, 120
Wel lever is me liken yow and deye
Than for to anythyng or thynke or seye
That yow myghte offende in any tyme
And therfor, swete, rewe on my paynes
smerte
And of your grace graunteth me som drope, 125
For elles may me laste no blis ne hope,
Ne dwelle within my trouble careful herte.

THE COMPLAINT OF MARS

The Proem

GLADETH, ye foules, of the morowe gray!
Lo! Venus, rysen among yon rowes rede!
And floures fressh, honoureth ye this day,
For when the sunne uprist, then wol ye
sprede
But ye lovers, that lye in any drede, 5
Fleeth, lest wikked tonges yow espye!
Lo! yond the sunne, the candel of jelosye!
Wyth teres blewe, and with a wounded
herte,
Taketh your leve and with sent John to borowe,
Apeseth sumwhat of your sorowes smerte Tyme cometh eft that cese shal your sorowe 11
The glade nyght ys worth an hevvy mo-rowe! — Seynt Valentyne, a foul thus herde I
synge
Upon thy day, er sonne gan up-sprynge

Yet sang this foul — I rede yow al awake, 15
And ye that han not chosen in humble wyse, Without repentyng cheseth yow your
make,
And ye that han ful chosen as I devise,
Yet at the leste renoveleth your servyse, Confermeth hyt perpetuely to dure, 20
And patiently taketh your aventure

And for the worship of this highe feste,
Yet wol I, in my briddes wise, synge
The sentence of the compleynt, at the leste,
That woful Mars made atte departynge 25
Pro fresshe Venus in a morw enynge, Whan Phebus, with his firy torches rede, Ransaked every lover in hys drede

The Story

Whilom the thridde hevenes lord above,
As wel by hevenysh revolucioun 30
As by desert, hath wonne Venus his love,
And she hath take him in subjeccioun,
And as a maistresse taught him his lessoun,

Commaundyng he that nere, in her service,
He nere so bold no lover to dispise 35

For she forbad him jelosye at al,
And cruelte, and bost, and tyrannye,
She made him at her lust so humble and tal,
That when her deynd to cast on hym her
ye,
He tok in pacience to lyve or dye 40
And thus she brydeleth him in her manere,
With nothing but with scourging of her
chere

Who regneth now in blysse but Venus,
That hath thys worthy knyght in governaunce?

Who syngeth now but Mars, that serveth
thus 45
The faire Venus, causer of plesaunce?
He bynt him to perpetuall obeisaunce,
And she bynt her to loven him for evere,
But so be that his trespas hyt desever

Thus be they knyht, and regnen as in
hevene 50

Be lokyng moost, til hyt fil, on a tyde,
That by her bothe assent was set a stevene,
That Mars shal entre, as fast as he may glyde,

Into hir nexte paleys, and ther abyde, Walkyng hys cours, til she had him atake, 55
And he preiede her to haste her for his sake

Then seyde he thus "Myn hertes lady swete,

Ye knowe wel my myschef in that place,
For sikerly, til that I with yow mete,
My lyf stant ther in aventure and grace, 60
But when I se the beaute of your face, Ther ys no drede of deth may do me
smerte,

For al your lust is ese to myn herte '

She hath so gret compassioun of her
knyght,

That dwelleth in solitude til she come —
For hyt stod so that thulke tyme no
wight 66

Counseyled hym ther, ne seyde to hym welcome —

That nygh her wit for wo was overcome,
Wherfore she sped her as faste in her weye
Almost in oo day as he dyde in tweye 70

The grete joye that was betwix hem two,
When they be mette, ther may no tunge
telle

Ther is no more, but unto bed thei go,
And thus in joy and blysse I lete hem duelle

This worthy Mars, that is of knyghthod
welle, 75

The flour of feyrnesse lappeth in his armes,

And Venus kysseth Mars, the god of armes

Sojourned hath this Mars, of which I rede,
In chambre amynd the paleys prively
A certeyn tyme, til him fel a drede, 80
Throgh Phebus, that was comen hastely
Within the paleys yates sturdely,
With torche in honde, of which the stremes
bryghte

On Venus chambre knockeden ful lyghte

The chambre, ther as ley this fresshe
quene, 85

Depeynted was with white boles grete,
And by the lyght she knew, that shon so shene,

That Phebus cam to brenne hem with his hete

This sely Venus nygh dreynt in teres
wete,

Enbraceth Mars, and seyde, "Alas, I dye!
The torche is come, that al this world wol wrie" 91

Up sterte Mars, hym liste not to slepe,
When he his lady herde so compleyne,
But, for his nature was not for to wepe,
In stede of teres, from his eyen tweyne 95
The firi sparkes brosten out for payne,
And hente his hauberk, that ley hym besyde

Fle wolde he not, ne myghte himselven hide

He throweth on his helm of huge wyghte,
And girt him with his swerd, and in his hond 100

His myghty spere, as he was wont to fyghte,

He shaketh so that almost hit towond
Ful hevy was he to walken over lond,
He may not holde with Venus companye,
But bad her fleen, lest Phebus her espye

O woful Mars! alas! what maist thou
seyn, 108

That in the paleys of thy disturbaunce
Art left byhynde, in peril to be sleyn?
And yet therto ys double thy penaunce,
For she that hath thyn herte in govern-
aunce 110

Is passed half the stremes of thin yen,
That thou nere swift, wel maist thou wepe and crien

Now fleeth Venus unto Cilenos tour,
With voide cours, for fere of Phebus lyght
Alas! and ther ne hath she no socour, 115
For she ne found ne saugh no maner wyght,

And eke as ther she hath but litil myght, Wherfor, herselven for to hyde and save,
Within the gate she fledde into a cave

Derk was this cave, and smokyng as the
helle, 120

Not but two pas within the yate hit stod
A naturel day in derk I lete her duelle
Now wol I speke of Mars, furious and wod
For sorow he wolde have sen his herte blod, Sith that he myghte don her no companye,
He ne roghte not a myte for to dye 126

So feble he wex, for hete and for his wo,
That nygh he swelte, he myghte unnethe endure,

He passeth but o steyre in dayes two
But nathelesse, for al his hevy armure, 130
He foloweth her that is his lyves cure,
For whos departyng he tok gretter ire
Then for al his brennyng in the fire

After he walketh softly a paas,
Compleynnyng, that hyt pite was to here 135
He seyde, "O lady bryght, Venus, alas!
That evere so wyd a compas ys my spere!
Alas! when shal I mete yow, herte dere?
This twelfte daye of April I endure, Throgh jelous Phebus, this mysaventure "

Now God helpe sely Venus allone! 141
But, as God wolde, hyt happed for to be,
That, while that Venus weping made her
mone,

Cilenus, rydinge in his chevache,
Fro Venus valaunse myghte his paleys se,
And Venus he salueth and doth chere, 146
And her receyveth as his frend ful dere

Mars dwelleth forth in his adversyte, Compleynnyng ever on her departyng,
And what his compleynt was, remembreth
me, 150
And therefore, in this lusty morwenyng,
As I best can, I wol hit seyn and syng,
And after that I wol my leve take,
And God yeve every wyght joy of his make!

The Complaynt of Mars

The Proem

The ordre of compleynt requireth sky-fully 155

That yf a wight shal pleyne pitously, Ther mot be cause wherfore that men
pleyne,

Or men may deme he pleyneth folioly
And causeles, alas! that am not I!
Wherfore the ground and cause of al my
peyne, 160

So as my troubled wit may hit atteyne,
I wol reherse, not for to have redresse,
But to declare my ground of hevynesse

I

The firste tyme, alas! that I was wrought,
And for certeyn effectes hider brought 165
Be hum that lordeth ech intelligence,
I yaf my trewe servise and my thought For evermore — how dere I have hit bought! —

To her that is of so gret excellence That what wight that first sheweth his presence, 170

When she is wroth and taketh of hym no cure,

He may not longe in joye of love endure

This is no feyned mater that I telle,
My lady is the verrey sours and welle

Of beaute, lust, fredom, and gentilnesse, 175
 Or riche aray — how dere men hit selle! —
 Of al disport in which men frendly duelle, Of love and pley, and of benigne hum-blesse,

Of soun of instrumentes of al swetnesse,
 And therto so wel fortuneted and thewed 180
 That thorough the world her goodnesse is yshewed

What wonder ys it then, thogh I besette
 My servise on such on that may me knette
 To wele or wo, sith hit lyth in her myght?
 Therefore my herte forever I to her hette,
 Ne truly, for my deth, I shal not lette 186
 To ben her truest servaunt and her
 knyght

I flater nought, that may wete every wyght,
 For this day in her servise shal I dye
 But grace be, I se her never wyth ye 190

II

To whom shal I than pleyne of my distresse?

Who may me helpe? Who may my harm redresse?

Shal I compleyne unto my lady fre?
 Nay, certes, for she hath such hevynesse,
 For fere and eke for wo, that, as I gesse, 195
 In lytil tyme hit wol her bane be
 But were she sauf, hit were no fors of me
 Alas! that ever lovers mote endure,
 For love, so many a perilous aventure!

For thogh so be that lovers be as trewe 200
 As any metal that is forged newe,
 In many a cas hem tydeth ofte sorowe
 Somtyme her lady wil not on hem rewe, Somtyme, yf that jelosie hyt knewe, They myghten lyghtly leye her hed to
 borowe, 205

Somtyme envyous folk with tungen horowe Depraven hem, alas! whom may they plesse?

But he be fals, no lover hath his ese

But what availeth such a long sermoun
 Of adventures of love, up and down? 210
 I wol returne and speken of my peyne
 The poynt is this of my distrucoun
 My righte lady, my savaeyoun,
 Is in affray, and not to whom to pleyne.

O herte swete, O lady sovereyne! 215 For your disese wel oughte I swowne and swelte,
 Thogh I non other harm ne drede felte

III

To what fyn made the God that sit so hye, Benethen him, love other companye,
 And streyneth folk to love, malgre her hed? 220

And then her joy, for oght I can espye,
 Ne lasteth not the twynkelyng of an ye,
 And somme han never joy til they be ded
 What meneth this? What is this mystihed?
 Wherto constreyneth he his folk so faste 225
 Thing to desyre, but hit shulde laste?

And thogh he made a lover love a thing,
 And maketh hit seme stedfast and during,
 Yet putteth he in hyt such mysaventure
 That reste nys ther non in his yeving 230
 And that is wonder, that so juste a kyng
 Doth such hardnesse to his creature
 Thus, whether love breke or elles dure, Algates he that hath with love to done
 Hath offer wo then changed ys the mone

Hit semeth he hath to lovers enmyte, 236
 And lyk a fishser, as men alday may se,
 Barteth hys angle-hok with som plesaunce, Til many a fish ys wod til that he be Sessed therwith, and then at erst hath he 240
 Al his desir, and therwith al myschaunce,
 And thogh the lyne breke, he hath pena-
 aunce,

For with the hok he wounded is so sore
 That he his wages hath for evermore

IV

The broche of Thebes was of such a kynde,
 So ful of rubies and of stones of Ynde, 246
 That every wight, that sette on hit an ye,
 He wende anon to worthe out of his mynde,
 So sore the beaute wolde his herte bynde, Til he hit had, him thoughte he moste
 dye, 250

And whan that hit was his, then shulde he dye
 Such woo for drede, ay while that he hit
 hadde,
 That wel nygh for the fere he shulde madde

And when hit was fro his possessioun,
Then had he double wo and passioun 255
For he so feir a tresor had forgo,
But yet this broche, as in conclusioun,
Was not the cause of his confusioun,
But he that wroghte hit enfortuned hit so That every wight that had hit shulde have
wo, 260
And therfore in the worcher was the vice,
And in the covetour that was so nyce

So fareth hyt by lovers and by me,
For thogh my lady have so gret beaute
That I was mad til I had gete her grace, 265
She was not cause of myn aduersite,
But he that wroghte her, also mot I the,
That putte such a beaute in her face,
That made me coveyten and purchase
Myn oun deth, him wite I that I dye, 270
And myn unwit, that ever I clamb so hye

V

But to yow, hardy knyghtes of renoun,
Syn that ye be of my devisioun,
Al be I not worthy to so gret a name,
Yet, seyn these clerkes, I am your patroun,
Therefore ye oghte have som compassioun

Of my disease, and take hit not a-game 277
The proudest of yow may be mad ful
tame,
Wherfore I prey yow, of your gentillesse,
That ye compleyne for myn hevynesse 280

And ye, my ladyes, that ben true and
stable,
Be wey of kynde, ye oghten to be able To have pite of folk that be in peyne
Now have ye cause to clothe yow in sable, Sith that youre emperise, the honourable,
Is desolat, wel oghte ye to pleyne, 286
Now shulde your holy teres falle and reyne
Alas! your honour and your emperise, Negh ded for drede, ne can her not chevisse.

Compleyneth eke, ye lovers, al in-fere, 290
For her that with unfeyned humble chere
Was ever redy to do yow socour, Compleyneth her that evere nath had yow
dere,

Compleyneth beaute, fredom, and manere,
Compleyneth her that endeth your labour,
Compleyneth thilke ensample of al honour,
That never dide but al gentillesse, 297
Kytheth therfore on her sum kyndenesse

TO ROSEMOUNDE

A BALADE

MADAME, ye ben of al beauté shryne
As fer as cerclid is the mapemounde,
For as the cristal glorious ye shyne,
And lyke ruby ben your chekes rounde
Therwith ye ben so mery and so jocounde 5
That at a revel whan that I see you daunce,
It is an oynement unto my wounde,
Thogh ye to me ne do no dalaunce

For thogh I wepe of teres ful a tyme, Yet may that wo myn herte nat con-
founde, 10
Your seemly voys, that ye so smal out-twyne, Maketh my thought in joye and blis habounde

So curtaysly I go, with love bounde,
That to myself I sey, in my penaunce,
"Suffyseth me to love you, Rosemounde, 15
Thogh ye to me ne do no dalaunce "

Nas never pyk walwed in galauntyne
As I in love am walwed and ywounde,
For which ful ofte I of myself devyne
That I am trewe Tristram the secounde 20
My love may not refreyd be nor affounde,
I brenne ay in an amorous plesaunce Do what you lyst, I wyl your thral be
founde,
Thogh ye to me ne do no dalaunce

TREGENTIL

CHAUCER.

WOMANLY NOBLESSE

BALADE THAT CHAUCIER MADE

So hath myn herte caught in remem-
braunce

Your beaute hoole and stidefast govern-
aunce,

Your vertues alle and your hie noblesse,
That you to serve is set al my plesaunce

So wel me liketh your womanly conten-
aunce, 5

Your fresshe fetures and your comly-
nesse,

That whiles I live, myn herte to his maytresse

You hath ful chose in trewe perséveraunce
Never to change, for no maner distresse

And sith I shal do [you] this observaunce 10
Al my lif, withouten displesaunce,

You for to serve with al my besynesse,

And have me somewhat in your souven-
aunce

My woful herte suffreth greet duresse,

And [loke how humbly], with al sym-plesse, 15

My wyl I cónforme to your ordynaunce

As you best list, my peynes for to re-
dresse

Considryng eke how I hange in balaunce,
In your service, such, lo! is my chaunce, Abidyng grace, whan that your gentil-
nesse, 20

Of my grete wo listeth don alleggeaunce,
And wyth your pite me som wise avaunce,
In ful rebatyng of myn hevynesse,
And thynketh by resoun that wommanly
noblesse 24

Shulde nat desire for to do the outrance
Ther as she fyndeth non unbuxunnesse

Lenwoye

Auctour of norture, lady of plesaunce, Soveraigne of beautee, flour of womman-
hede,

Take ye non hede unto myn ignoraunce,
But this receyveth of your goodlihede, 30 Thynkyng that I have caught in remem-
braunce,

Your beaute hole, your stidefast govern-
aunce

CHAUCERS WORDES UNTO ADAM, HIS OWNE SCRIVEYN

ADAM scriveyn, if ever it thee bifalle
Boece or Troylus for to wryten newe, Under thy long lokkes thou most have the scalle,
But after my makyng thou wryte more
trewe,

So ofte a-daye I mot thy werk renewe, 5
It to correcte and eek to rubbe and scrape,
And al is thorough thy negligence and rape

THE FORMER AGE

A BLISFUL lyf, a paisible and a swete, Leden the peples in the former age They helde hem payed of the frutes that they ete,

Which that the felde yave hem by usage,

They ne were nat forpampred with outrage 5

Unknowen was the quern and eek the melle,

They eten mast, hawes, and swich poun-
age,

And dronken water of the colde welle

Yit nas the ground nat wounded with the plough,

But corn up-sprong, unsowe of mannes
hond, 10

The which they gnodded, and eete nat half ynough

No man yit knew the forwes of his lond,
No man the fyr out of the flint yit fond,

Unkorven and ungrobbed lay the vyne,
No man yit in the mortar spyces grond 15

To clarre, ne to sause of galantyne

No mader, welde, or wood no litestere

Ne knew, the flees was of his former hewe,
No flesh ne wiste offence of egge or spere,

No coyn ne knew man which was fals or
trewe, 20

No ship yit karf the wawes grene and blewe,

No marchaunt yit ne fette outlandish ware,

No trompes for the werres folk ne knewe, Ne toures heye and walles rounde or square

What sholde it han avayled to werreye? 25

Ther lay no profit, ther was no richesse,
But cursed was the tyme, I dar wel seye,

That men first dide hir swety bysnesse

To grobbe up metal, lurking in derknesse,
And in the riveres first gemmes soghte 30
Allas! than sprong up al the cursednesse
Of covetyse, that first our sorwe broghte!

These tyraunts putte hem gladly nat in pres
No wuidnesse ne no bussches for to winne

Ther poverte is, as seith Diogenes, 35
Ther as vitaile is eek so skars and thinne

That nocht but mast or apples is therinne
But, ther as bagges been and fat vitaile,

Ther wol they gon, and spare for no sanne
With al hir ost the cite for t'assalle 40

Yit were no paleis-chambres, ne non halles,

In caves and [in] wodes softe and swete
Slepten thus blissed folk withoute walles,

On gras or leves in parfyt quiete
No doun of fetheres, ne no bleched shete 45

Was kid to hem, but in seurttee they slepte
Hir hertes were al oon, withoute galles,

Everich of hem his feith to other kepte

Unforged was the hauberk and the plate,
The lambish peple, voyd of alle vyce, 50

Hadden no fantasye to debate,
But ech of hem wolde other wel cheryce,

No pryde, non envye, non avaryce,
No lord, no tavlage by no tyrannye,

Humbleesse and pees, good feith, the emperce, 55

Yit was not Jupiter the likerous,
That first was fader of delicacye,

Come in this world, ne Nembrot, desirous
To regne, had nat maad his toures hye

Allas, allas! now may men wepe and crye!
For in oure dayes nis but covetyse, 61

Doublenesse, and tresoun, and envye, Poyson, manslaughtre, and mordre in sondry wyse

FORTUNE

BALADES DE VISAGE SANZ PEINTURE

I Le Pleintif countre Fortune

THIS wrecched worldes transmutacioun,
 As wele or wo, now povre and now honour,
 Withouten ordre or wys discrecioun
 Governed is by Fortunes errour
 But natheles, the lak of hir favour 5
 Ne may nat don me singen, though I dye,
 "Jay tout perdu mon temps et mon labour,"
 For fynally, Fortune, I thee defye!

Yit is me left the light of my resoun,
 To knowen frend fro fo in thy mirour 10
 So muchel hath yit thy whirling up and down

Ytaught me for to knowen in an hour
 But trewely, no force of thy reddour
 To him that over himself hath the maystrye!

My suffisaunce shal be my socour, 15
 For fynally, Fortune, I thee defye!

O Socrates, thou stidfast champioun,
 She never mighte be thy tormentour,
 Thou never dreddest hir oppressioun,
 Ne in hir chere founde thou no savour 20
 Thou knewe wel the decert of hir colour,
 And that hir moste worshipe is to lye
 I knowe hir eek a fals dissimulour,
 For fynally, Fortune, I thee defye!

II La respounse de Fortune au Pleintif

No man is wrecched, but himself it wene, 25
 And he that hath himself hath suffisaunce
 Why seyestow thanne I am to thee so kene,
 That hast thyself out of my governaunce?
 Sey thus "Graunt mercy of thyn haboundaunce That thou hast lent or this" Why wolt thou stryve? 30
 What wostow yit how I thee wol avaunce?
 And eek thou hast thy beste frend alyve

I have thee taught divisoun bitwene
 Frend of effect, and frend of countenance,

Thee nedeth nat the galle of noon hyene, 35
 That cureth eyen derked for penaunce,
 Now seestow cleer, that were in ignoraunce

Yit halt thyn ancre, and yit thou mayst arryve

Ther bountee berth the keye of my substaunce,

And eek thou hast thy beste frend alyve 40

How many have I refused to sustene,
 Sin I thee fostred have in thy plesaunce!
 Woltow than make a statut on thy quene
 That I shal been ay at thyn ordinaunce?
 Thou born art in my regne of variaunce, 45 Aboute the wheel with other most thou
 dryve

My lore is bet than wakke is thy grevaunce,
 And eek thou hast thy beste frend alyve

III La respounse du Pleintif countre Fortune

Thy lore I dampne, it is adversitee
 My frend maystow nat reven, blind goddesse! 50

That I thy frendes knowe, I thanke hit thee

Tak hem agayn, lat hem go lye on presse!
 The negardye in keping hir richesse
 Prenostak is thou wolt hir tour assayle, Wikke appetyt comth ay before syknesse 55

In general, this reule may nat fayle

La respounse de Fortune countre le Pleintif

Thou pinchest at my mutabilitee,
 For I thee lente a drope of my richesse,
 And now me lyketh to withdrawe me
 Why sholdestow my realtee oppresse? 60
 The see may ebbe and flowen more or lesse,

The welkne hath might to shyne, reyne, or hayle,

Right so mot I kythen my brotelnesse

In general, this reule may nat fayle

Lo, th'execucion of the majestee 65
That al purveyeth of his rightwysnesse, That same thing "Fortune" clepen ye,
Ye blinde bestes, ful of lewednesse!
The hevене hath propretee of sikernesse,
This world hath ever resteles travayle, 70
Thy laste day is ende of myn intresse
In general, this reule may nat fayle

Lenvoy de Fortune

Princes, I prey you, of your gentillesse, Lat nat this man on me thus crye and
pleyne,
And I shal quyte you your businesse 75
At my requeste, as three of you or tweyne,
And, but you list releve him of his peyne,
Preyeth his beste frend, of his noblesse,
That to som beter estat he may atteyne

Explicit

TRUTH

BALADE DE BON CONSEYL

FLEE fro the prees, and dwelle with soth-fastnesse, Suffyce unto thy good, though it be smal,
For hord hath hate, and climbing tikel-
nesse,
Prees hath envye, and wele blent overal,
Savour no more than thee bihove shal, 5 Reule wel thyself, that other folk canst
rede,
And trouthe thee shal delivere, it is no
drede

Tempest thee noght al croke to redresse,
In trust of hur that turneth as a bal
Gret reste stant in litel besnesse, 10
Be war also to sporne ayeyns an al, Stryve not, as doth the crokke with the wal
Daunte thyself, that dauntest others dece,
And trouthe thee shal delivere, it is no
drede

That thee is sent, receyve in buxumnesse, 15
The wrastling for this world axeth a fal
Her is non hoom, her nis but wildernesse Forth, pilgrim, forth! Forth, beste, out of thy stal!
Know thy contree, look up, thank God of al,
Hold the heye wey, and lat thy gost thee lede, 20
And trouthe thee shal delivere, it is no
drede

Envoy

Therefore, thou Vache, leve thyn old wrecchednesse
Unto the world, leve now to be thral, Crye him mercy, that of his hy goodnesse
Made thee of noght, and in especial 25
Draw unto him, and pray in general
For thee, and eek for other, hevenlich mede,
And trouthe thee shal delivere, it is no
drede

Explicit Le bon conseil de G Chaucer

GENTILESSE

MORAL BALADE OF CHAUCIER

THE firste stok, fader of gentilesse —
 What man that claymeth gentil for to be Must folowe his trace, and alle his wittes
 dresse

Vertu to sewe, and vyces for to flee
 For unto vertu longeth dignitee, 5
 And nocht the revers, sauffy dar I deme,
 Al were he mytre, croune, or diademe

This firste stok was ful of rightwisnesse, Trewe of his word, sobre, pitous, and
 free,
 Clene of his gost, and loved besnesse, 10

Ayeinst the vyce of slouthe, in honestee,
 And, but his heir love vertu, as dide he,
 He is nocht gentil, thogh he riche seme,
 Al were he mytre, croune, or diademe

Vyce may wel be heir to old richesse, 15
 But ther may no man, as men may wel see,
 Bequethe his heir his vertuos noblesse,
 That is appropred unto no degree,
 But to the firste fader in magestee,
 That maketh his heir him that can him queme, 20
 Al were he mytre, croune, or diademe

LAK OF STEDFASTNESSE

BALADE

SOMTYME this world was so stedfast and
 stable

That mannes word was obligacioun,
 And now it is so fals and decervable
 That word and deed, as in conclusioun,
 Ben nothing lyk, for turned up-so-down 5
 Is al this world for mede and wilful-
 nesse,

That al is lost for lak of stedfastnesse

What maketh this world to be so variable
 But lust that folk have in dissensioun?
 For among us now a man is holde unable, 10

But if he can, by som collusioun,
 Don his neighbour wrong or oppressioun
 What causeth this but wilful wrecched-
 nesse,

That al is lost for lak of stedfastnesse?

Trouthe is put down, resoun is holden fable,
 Vertu hath now no dominacioun, 16
 Pitee exyled, no man is merciabe,
 Through covetyse is blent discrecioun
 The world hath mad a permutacioun Fro right to wrong, fro trouthe to fikel-
 nesse, 20
 That al is lost for lak of stedfastnesse

Lenwye to King Richard

O prince, desyre to be honourable,
 Cherish thy folk and hate extorcioun!
 Suffre nothing that may be reprevable
 To thyn estat don in thy regioun 25
 Shew forth thy swerd of castigacioun, Dred God, do law, love trouthe and worth-
 nesse,
 And wed thy folk agem to stedfastnesse

Explicit

THE COMPLAINT OF VENUS

I

THEE nys so high comfort to my plesaunce,
 When that I am in any hevynesse,
 As for to have leyser of remembraunce
 Upon the manhod and the worthynesse,
 Upon the trouthe and on the stidfastnesse 5
 Of him whos I am al, while I may dure
 Ther oghte blame me no creature,
 For every wight preiseth his gentillesse

In him is bounte, wysdom, governaunce,
 Wel more then any mannes wit can gesse,
 For grace hath wold so ferforth hym avauunce 11

That of knyghthod he is parfit richesse
 Honour honoureth him for his noblesse, Therto so wel hath furmed him Nature
 That I am his for ever, I him assure, 15
 For every wight preyseth his gentillesse

And notwithstanding al his suffisaunce,
 His gentil herte is of so gret humblesse
 To me in word, in werk, in contenaunce,
 And me to serve is al his besynesse, 20
 That I am set in verrey sikernesse
 Thus oghte I blesse wel myn aventure, Sith that him list me serve and honoure,
 For every wight preiseth his gentillesse

II

Now certis, Love, hit is right covenable 25
 That men ful dere abyte thy nobil thing,
 As wake abedde, and fasten at the table, Wepinge to laughe, and singe in compleyn-
 yng,

And doun to caste visage and loking,
 Often to chaunge hewe and contenaunce, 30 Pleyne in slepyng, and dremen at the daunce,

Al the revers of any glad felyng

Jelosie be hanged be a cable!
 She wolde al knowe thurgh her espyng
 Ther doth no wyght nothing so resonable,
 That al nys harm in her ymagenyng 35
 Thus dere abought is Love in yevyng, Which ofte he yiveth withouten ordyn-
 aunce,

As sorwe ynogh, and litel of plesaunce,
 Al the revers of any glad felyng 40

A lytel tyme his yift ys agreable,
 But ful encomberous is the usyng,
 For subtil Jelosie, the deceyvable,
 Ful often tyme causeth desturbyng
 Thus be we ever in drede and sufferyng, 45
 In nouncerteyn we languishe in penaunce, And han ful often many an hard mis-
 chaunce,
 Al the revers of any glad felyng

III

But certes, Love, I sey not in such wise
 That for t'escape out of youre las I mente,
 For I so longe have ben in your servise 51
 That for to lete of wil I never assente,
 No fors thogh Jelosye me turmente!
 Sufficeth me to sen hym when I may,
 And therefore certes, to myn endyng day, 55
 To love hym best ne shal I never repente

And certis, Love, when I me wel avise
 On any estat that man may represente, Then have ye maked me, thurgh your fraunchise,
 Chese the best that ever on erthe wente 60 Now love wel, herte, and lok thou never
 stente,

And let the jelous putte it in assay
 That, for no payne, wol I not sey nay,
 To love him best ne shal I never repente

Herte, to the hit oughte ynogh suffice 65
 That Love so high a grace to the sente,
 To chese the worthieste in alle wise
 And most agreable unto myn entente
 Seche no farther, neythir wey ne wente,
 Sith I have suffisaunce unto my pay 70
 Thus wol I ende this compleynt or this lay
 To love hym best ne shal I never repente

Lenwoy

Princesse, receyveth this compleynt in gre,
 Unto your excelent benignite
 Direct after my litel suffisaunce 75

For elde, that in my spirit dulleth me,
Hath of endyng al the subtilte
Wel nygh bereft out of my remembraunce,
And eke to me it ys a gret penaunce,

Syth rym in Englishsh hath such skarsete, so
To folowe word by word the curiosite Of Graunson, flour of hem that make in Fraunce

Here endith the Complaynt of Venus

LENVOY DE CHAUCER A SCOGAN

Tobroken been the statutz hye in hevene
That creat were eternally to dure, Syth that I see the bryghte goddis sevene Mowe wepe and wayle, and passion endure,

As may in erthe a mortal creature 5
Allas, fro whennes may thys thing procede?

Of which errour I deye almost for drede

By word eterne whilom was yshape
That fro the fyfte sercle, in no manere,
Ne myghte a drope of teeres doun escape
But now so wepith Venus in hir spere 11
That with hir teeres she wol drenche us
here

Allas! Scogan, this is for thyn offence,
Thow causest this diluge of pestilence

Hastow not seyde, in blasphemie of the goddes, 15

Thurgh pride, or through thy grete rekelle-
nesse,

Swich thing as in the lawe of love forbode
is,

That, for thy lady sawgh nat thy distresse, Therefore thow yave hir up at Michelmesse?

Allas! Scogan, of olde folk ne yonge 20
Was never erst Scogan blamed for his tonge

Thow drowe in skorn Cupide eke to record
Of thilke rebel word that thou hast spoken,
For which he wol no lenger be thy lord

And, Scogan, though his bowe be nat broken, 25

He wol nat with his arwes been ywroken
On the, ne me, ne noon of oure figure,
We shul of him have neyther hurt ne cure

Now certes, frend, I dreede of thyn unhap, Lest for thy gilt the wreche of Love pro-cede 30

On alle hem that ben hoor and rounde of shap,

That ben so lykly folk in love to spede
Than shal we for oure labour han no mede,
But wel I wot, thow wolt answeere and saye
"Lo, olde Grisel lyst to ryme and playe!"

Nay, Scogan, say not so, for I m'excuse — 35
God helpe me so! — in no rym, dowteles,
Ne thynke I never of slep to wake my muse,
That rusteth in my shethe stille in pees
While I was yong, I put hir forth in prees,
But al shal passe that men prose or ryme, 41
Take every man hys turn, as for his tyme

Envoy

Scogan, that knelest at the stremes hed
Of grace, of alle honour and worthynesse, In th'ende of which strem I am dul as ded, 45

Forgete in solytarie wildernesse, — Yet, Scogan, thanke on Tullius kynde-
nesse,

Mynne thy frend, there it may fructifye!
Far-wel, and loke thow never eft Love dyfye

LENVOY DE CHAUCER A BUKTON

My maister Bukton, whan of Crist our
kyng
Was axed what is trouthe or sothfastnesse,
He nat a word answerde to that axung,
As who saith, "No man is al trewe," I gesse
And therefore, though I highte to expresse 5
The sorwe and wo that is in mariage,
I dar not writen of it no wkkednesse,
Lest I myself falle eft in swich dotage

I wol nat seyn how that yt is the cheyne
Of Sathanas, on which he gnaweth evere, 10
But I dar seyn, were he out of his payne,
As by his wille he wolde be bounde nevere
But thulke doted fool that eft hath levere Ycheyned be than out of prison crepe,
God lete him never from his wo dissevere, 15
Ne no man him bewayle, though he wepe!

But yet, lest thow do worse, take a wyf,

Bet ys to wedde than brenne in worse wise
But thow shal have sorwe on thy flessch, thy lyf,
And ben thy wives thral, as seyn these wise, 20
And yf that hooly writ may nat suffyse,
Experience shal the teche, so may happe,
That the were lever to be take in Frise
Than eft to falle of weddyng in the trappe

Envoy

This lytel writ, proverbes, or figure 25
I sende yow, take kepe of yt, I rede, Unwys is he that kan no wele endure
If thow be siker, put the nat in drede
The Wyf of Bathe I pray yow that ye rede
Of this matere that we have on honde 30
God graunte yow your lyf frely to lede
In fredam, for ful hard is to be bonde

Explicit

THE COMPLAINT OF CHAUCER TO HIS PURSE

To yow, my purse, and to noon other
wight

Complayne I, for ye be my lady dere!
I am so sory, now that ye been lyght,
For certes, but ye make me hevychere,
Me were as leef be layd upon my bere, 5
For which unto your mercy thus I crye
Beth hevychere ageyn, or elles mot I dye!

Now voucheth sauf this day, or yt be
nyght,

That I of yow the blisful soun may here,
Or see your colour lyk the sonne bryght, 10
That of yelownesse hadde never pere
Ye be my lyf, ye be myn hertes stere, Queene of comfort and of good companye
Beth hevychere ageyn, or elles moote I dye!

Now purse, that ben to me my lyves lyght
And saveour, as down in this world here, 15 Out of this tounne helpe me thurgh your
myght,

Syn that ye wole nat ben my tresorere,
For I am shave as nye as any frere
But yet I pray unto your curtesye 20
Beth hevychere agen, or elles moote I dye!

Lenvoy de Chaucer

O conquerour of Brutes Albyon,
Which that by lyne and free eleccion
Been verray kyng, this song to yow I sende,
And ye, that mowen alle oure harmes
amende, 25
Have mynde upon my supplicacion!

POEMS OF DOUBTFUL AUTHORSHIP

AGAINST WOMEN UNCONSTANT

BALADE

MADAME, for your newefangelnesse,
Many a servaunt have ye put out of grace
I take my leve of your unstedfastnesse,
For wel I wot, whyl ye have lyves space,
Ye can not love ful half yeer in a place, 5
To newe thing your lust is ay so kene,
In stede of blew, thus may ye were al grene

Right as a mirour nothing may enpresse,
But, lightly as it cometh, so mot it pace,
So fareth your love, your werkes bereth witness 10
Ther is no feith that may your herte en-brace,

But, as a wedercock, that turneth his face
With every wind, ye fare, and that is sene,
In stede of blew, thus may ye were al grene

Ye might be shryned, for your brotelnesse,
Bet than Dalyda, Creseyde or Candace, 16
For ever in chaunging stant your siker-
nesse,
That tache may no wight fro your herte arace
If ye lese oon, ye can wel tweyn purchase, Al light for somer, ye woot wel what I mene, 20
In stede of blew, thus may ye were al grene

Explicit

COMPLAYNT D'AMOURS

AN AMOROUS COMPLAINT, MADE AT WINDSOR

I, WHICH that am the sorwefulleste man
That in this world was ever yit livinge,
And leest recoverer of himselven can,
Begunne right thus my deedly compleynge On hur, that may to lyf and deeth me brunge, 5
Which hath on me no mercy ne no rewthe
That love hur best, but sleeth me for my trewthe

Can I nought doon ne seye that may yow lyke?
Nay, certes! Now, allas! allas, the whyle!
Your plessaunce is to laughen whan I syke, 10
And thus ye me from al my blisse exyle
Ye han me cast in thilke spitous yle
Ther never man on lyve mighte asterte, Thus have I for I love you best, swete
herte!

Sooth is, that wel I woot, by lyknesse, 15
If that it were a thing possible to do For to acompte youre beautee and good
nesse,
I have no wonder thogh ye do me wo,
Sith I, th'unworthiest that may ryde or go,
Durste ever thinken in so hy a place, 20
What wonder is, thogh ye do me no grace?

Allas! thus is my lyf brought to an ende,
My deeth, I see, is my conclusioun
I may wel singe, "in sory tyme I spende
My lyf," that song may have confusioun!
For mercy, pitee, and deep affeccioun, 26
I sey for me, for al my deedly chere,
Alle these diden, in that, me love yow dere

And in this wyse and in dispayr I live
In love, nay, but in dispayr I dye! 30
But shal I thus yow my deeth foryive,

That causeles doth me this sorwe drye?
 Ye, certes, I! For she of my folye Hath nought to done, although she do me sterve,
 Hit is nat with hir wil that I hir serve! 35

Than sithen I am of my sorwe the cause,
 And sithen I have this, withoute hir reed,
 Than may I seyn, right shortly in a clause,
 It is no blame unto hir womanheed Though swich a wrecche as I be for hir deed 40

Yet alwey two thinges doon me dye,
 That is to seyn, hir beautee and myn ye,

So that, algates, she is verray rote
 Of my disese, and of my deth also,
 For with oon word she mighte be my
 bote, 45

If that she vouched sauf for to do so
 But than is hir gladnesse at my wo?
 It is hir wone plesaunce for to take,
 To seen hir servaunts dyen for hir sake!

But certes, than is al my wonderinge, 50
 Sithen she is the fayrest creature
 As to my doom, that ever was livinge,
 The benignest and beste eek that Nature Hath wrought or shal, whyl that the wor'd may dure,

Why that she lefte pite so behinde? 55
 It was, ywis, a greet defaute in Kinde

Yit is al this no lak to hir, pardee,
 But God or Nature sore wolde I blame
 For, though she shewe no pite unto me,
 Sithen that she doth othere men the same,
 I ne oughte to despyse my ladyes game, 61
 It is hir pley to laughen whan men syketh,
 And I assente, al that hir list and lyketh!

Yet wolde I, as I dar, with sorwful herte Buseche unto your meke womanhede 65
 That I now dorste my sharpe sorwes
 smerte

Shewe by word, that ye wolde ones rede
 The compleynte of me, which ful sore I
 drede

That I have seid here, through myn unkonninge,

In any word to your displesinge 70

Lothest of anything that ever was loth
 Were me, as wisly God my soule save!
 To seyn a thing through which ye might be
 wroth,

And, to that day that I be leyd in grave,
 A trewer servaunt shulle ye never have, 75
 And, though that I have pleyned unto you
 here,

Foryiveth it me, myn owne lady dere!

Ever have I been, and shal, how-so I wende, Outher to live or dye, your humble trewe,
 Ye been to me my ginning and myn ende Sonne of the sterre bright and clere of hewe, 81

Alwey in oon to love 3 ow freshly newe, By God and by my trouthe, is myn en-
 tente,

To live or dye, I wol it never repente!

This compleynte on sent Valentynes day, Whan every foughel chesen shal his make,
 To hir, whos I am hool, and shal alwey, 87
 This woful song and this compleynte I
 make,

That never yit wolde me to mercy take,
 And yit wol I evermore her serve 90
 And love hir best, although she do me sterve

Explicit.

MERCILES BEAUTE

A TRIPLE ROUNDEL

YOUR yen two wol slee me sodenly,
I may the beautee of hem not sustene,
So woundeth hit thourghout my herte kene

And but your word wol helen hastily
My hertes wounde, while that hit is grene,
Your yen two wol slee me sodenly, 6
I may the beautee of hem not sustene

Upon my trouthe I sey you feithfully
That ye ben of my lyf and deeth the quene, For with my deeth the trouthe shal be
sene 10

Your yen two wol slee me sodenly,
I may the beautee of hem not sustene,
So woundeth it thourghout my herte
kene

II

So hath your beautee fro your herte chaced
Pitee, that me ne availeth not to pleyne, 15
For Daunger halt your mercy in his cheyne

Giltles my deeth thus han ye me purchaced,
I sey you sooth, me nedeth not to feyne,
So hath your beautee fro your herte
chaced

Pitee, that me ne availeth not to
pleyne 20

Allas! that Nature hath in you compassed
So greet beautee, that no man may atteyne
To mercy, though he sterve for the peyne
So hath your beautee fro your herte
chaced

Pitee, that me ne availeth not to
pleyne, 25
For Daunger halt your mercy in his cheyne

III

Sin I fro Love escaped am so fat,
I never think to ben in his prison lene,
Sin I am free, I counte him not a bene

He may answere, and seye this and that, 30
I do no fors, I speke right as I mene
Sin I fro Love escaped am so fat,
I never think to ben in his prison lene

Love hath my name ystrike out of his sclat,
And he is strike out of my bokes clene 35
For evermo, [ther] is non other mene
Sin I fro Love escaped am so fat,
I never think to ben in his prison lene,
Sin I am free, I counte him not a bene

Explicit

A BALADE OF COMPLAINT

COMPLEYNE ne koude, ne might myn herte never
My peynes halve, ne what torment I have,
Though that I sholde in your presence ben ever,
Myn hertes lady, as wisly he me save That bountee made, and beautee list to grave 5
In your persone, and bad hem bothe in-fere

Ever t'awayte, and ay be wher ye were

As wisly he gye alle my joyes here
As I am youres, and to yow sad and
trewe,
And ye, my lyf and cause of my gode
chere, 10
And deeth also, whan ye my peynes newe, My worldes joye, whom I wol serve and sewe,

Myn heven hool, and al my suffisaunce,
Whom for to serve is set al my plesaunce

Beseching yow in my most humble wyse 15

T'accepte in worth this litel pore dyte,

And for my trouthe my servyce not despyse,

Myn observaunce eke have not in despyte,
Ne yit to longe to suffren in this plyte,

I yow beseche, myn hertes lady, here, 20
Sith I yow serve, and so wil yeer by yere

 PROVERBS

WHAT shul these clothes thus manyfold,

Lo! this hote somers day? —

After greet hete cometh cold,

No man caste his pilche away

II

Of al this world the large compas 5

Hit wol not in myn armes tweyne, —

Whoso mochel wol embrace,

Litel therof he shal distreyne

A TREATISE ON THE ASTROLABE

It is no longer customary, as it was in the days of Leland and Speght, to speak of "learned Chaucer." Recent critics, on the contrary, have often concerned themselves with pointing out the limitations of his scholarship — his occasional mistranslations and other inaccuracies, his use of French and Italian versions of Latin texts, or even his tendency to show familiarity with the beginnings of works which he may not have read to the end. And it is true that Chaucer's attitude toward books and learning was that of the man of letters rather than of the professional scholar. Nevertheless the range of his knowledge and the quality of his intelligence were such that the old epithet, "learned," is not without justification. His wide reading of literature, in classical and mediæval Latin, French, and Italian as well as in English, is apparent everywhere in his writings. Though he nowhere finds occasion for extended discourse on legal science, his various references to the subject tend to confirm the tradition that he had some professional training in law. His knowledge of philosophy may have been mostly derived from Boethius, but his serious interest in its problems is shown by frequent discussions in his poetry as well as by his translation of the De Consolatione. And he had considerable acquaintance with the natural science of his age. His familiarity with the processes of alchemy may have been acquired, as some suppose, at the cost of unhappy personal experience. But he shows also some knowledge of the literature of the subject, which was not merely a pseudo-science. In the House of Fame he discusses problems of the science which we should now call physics. Throughout his works he makes free use of medical lore, and though his discussions cannot usually be traced to particular authorities they have been shown to conform very well to the teachings of the treatises on medicine and physiognomy. And finally, his references to astronomy and astrology are so numerous and important that their elucidation has been a principal part of the work of his commentators.

It is not surprising, in view of all his knowledge and intellectual curiosity, that Chaucer should have left a specimen of scientific writing. His interest in science was probably not exceptional among educated men of his time, though his reading in this as in other fields was extraordinary, and he certainly would not himself have claimed to be an authority in any of the sciences. The Treatise on the Astrolabe, in particular, is not so much an evidence of Chaucer's attainments in astronomy as of his opinion of its importance in education. For he describes himself modestly as an "unlearned compiler of the labors of old astrologians," and the treatise itself, so far as completed, is a very elementary work, translated for a little boy not yet able to use Latin. The later, unwritten sections, though they were to deal in part with more advanced problems of astronomy and astrology, were apparently also to be adapted to the intelligence of a child. It is not clear whether the title Bread and Milk for Children, which the work bears in some manuscripts, was due to Chaucer or to the scribes.

The two parts of the treatise which were completed contain a description of the astrolabe and a series of simple "conclusions," or problems, which can be solved with its aid. Nearly all the material is translated or adapted from the Compositio et Operatio Astrolabii of Messahala, an Arabian astronomer of the eighth century, whose work was of course accessible to Chaucer in Latin. But a few definitions and explanations correspond in substance to passages in the De Sphaera of John de Sacrobosco, and several sections have not been traced to any source. It is not unlikely that among the numerous unpublished astronomical treatises in mediæval manuscripts may be found the exact compilation, based upon Messahala, that Chaucer used.

The boy for whom the English translation was made is addressed in the beginning as "little Lewis, my son," and it has usually been inferred that Chaucer had a son by that name. In the absence of positive information on the subject Professor Kittredge has suggested that the person referred to may be Lewis Clifford, the younger, the son of Chaucer's friend Sir Lewis Clifford and possibly a godson of the poet. The younger Clifford is known to have died in October, 1391, the year in which the treatise was apparently compiled, and the death of the boy might well explain the unfinished state of the work. But Professor Manly has recently found a record which includes the name of Lewis Chaucer in association with that of Thomas Chaucer, and the latter is probably Geoffrey's son. So the old opinion again gains likelihood that Chaucer translated the Astrolabe for his own child.

The treatise, simple as it is, has some interest for students of the history of English science. According to Mr R. T. Gunther, the author of Early Science at Oxford, it is 'the oldest work written in English upon an elaborate scientific instrument.' And there must have been very few comparable textbooks of any sort in the language in an age when Latin was the usual medium of higher instruction. For students of Chaucer's poetry the Astrolabe has of course the interest that attaches to any piece of his workmanship. Occasionally it helps explain technical passages in his literary writings. What is more important it reveals in some measure the mind and spirit of the man, his modesty and his painstaking seriousness in intellectual work. The introduction deserves special notice as being the only piece of Chaucer's prose, of any length, that is not rather close translation. It is a short specimen, but it indicates that if Chaucer had written any considerable amount of freely composed prose it would have been superior in form to the Boece and the Melibeus.

A TREATISE ON THE ASTROLABE

Lyte Lowys my sone, I aperceyve wel by certeyne evidences thyn abilitie to lerne sciences touching nombres and proportions, and as wel conside I thy besy praiser in special to lerne the tretys of the Astrelabie. Than for as mochel as a filosofre saith, "he wrappith him in his frend, that condescendith to the rightfulle prayers of his frend," therefore have I yeven the a suffisant Astrolabie as 10 for oure orizonte, compowned after the latitude of Oxenforde, upon which, by mediacion of this litel tretys, I purpose to teche the a certain nombre of conclusions aperteynyng to the same instrument. I seeie a certain of conclusions, for thre causes. The first cause is this truste wel that alle the conclusions that han be founde, or ellys possibly might be founde in so noble an instrument as is an Astrelabie 20 men unknowe parfitylly to eny mortal man in this regoun, as I suppose. Another cause is this, that sothly in any tretys of the Astrelabie that I have seyn there be somme conclusions that wol not in alle thinges parformen her bihestes, and somme of hem ben to harde to thy tendir age of ten year to conceyve.

This tretis, divided in 5 parties, wol I shewe the under full light reules 30 and naked wordes in Englissh, for Latyn ne canst thou yit but small, my litel sone. But natheles suffice to the these trewe conclusions in Englissh as wel as suffieth to these noble clerkes Grekes these same conclusions in Grek, and to Arabiens in Arabik, and to Jewes in Ebrew, and to the Latyn folk in Latyn, whiche Latyn folk had hem first out of othere diverse langages, and writen hem in 40 her owne tunge, that is to seyn, in Latyn. And God woot that in alle these langages and in many moo han these conclusions ben suffisantly lerned and taught, and yit by diverse reules, right as diverse pathes leden diverse folk the righte way to Rome. Now wol I preie mekely every discret persone that redith or herith this littel tretys to have my rude endityng for excusid, and my superflute of 50 wordes, for two causes The first cause is for that curious endityng and hard sentence is ful hevvy at onys for such a child to lerne And the secunde cause is this, that sothly me semith better to writen unto a child twyes a god sentence, than he forge- gete it onys

And Lowys, yf so be that I shewe the in my light Englishsh as trewe conclu- sions touching this mater, and not 60 onoly as trewe but as many and as subtil conclusions, as ben shewid in Latyn in eny commune tretys of the Astrelabie, konne me the more thank And preie God save the king, that is lord of this langage, and alle that him feith berth and obeie- th, everich in his degre, the more and the lasse But conside wel that I ne usurpe not to have founden this werk of my labour or of myn engyn I n'am but a lewd 70 compiler of the labour of olde astro- logiens, and have it translatid in myn Eng- lishsh onoly for thy doctrine And with this swerd shal I sleen envie

Prima pars — The firste partie of this tretys shal rehearse the figures and the membres of thyn Astrelabie by cause that thou shalt have the gretter knowing of thyn owne instrument

Secunda pars — The secunde partie 80 shal techen the worken the verrey practik of the forseide conclusions, as fer- forth and as narwe as may be shewed in so small an instrument portatif aboute For wel woot every astrologien that smallest fraccions ne wol not be shewid in so small an instrument as in subtil tables calculated for a cause

Tertia pars — The thirde partie shal contene diverse tables of longi- 90 tudes and latitudes of sterres fixe for the Astrelabie, and tables of the declina- cions of the sonne, and tables of longitudes of citees and townes, and tables as well for the governaunce of a clokke, as for to fynde the altitude meridian, and many an- othir notable conclusionis after the kalen- ders of the reverent clerkes, Frere J Some- and Frere N Lenne

Quarta pars — The fourthe partie 100 shal ben a theorie to declare the moevyng of the celestiall bodies with the causes The whiche fourthe partie in speciall shal shewen a table of the verrey moevyng of the mone from houre to houre every day and in every signe after thyn almenak Upon which table there folewith a canoun suffisant to teche as wel the manere of the worchyng of the same conclusionis as to knowe in oure ori- 110 zonte with which degre of the zodiak that the mone arisith in any latitude, and the arisyng of any planete after his latitude fro the ecliptik lyne

Quinta pars — The fifthe partie shal be an introductorie, after the statutes of oure doctours, in which thou maist lerne a gret part of the generall rewles of theorik in astrologie In which fifthe partie shalt thou fynden tables of equacions 120 of houses after the latitude of Oxen- forde, and tables of dignitees of planetes, and othere notefull thinges, yf God wol vouche saaf and his Moder the Maide, moo then I behete

PART I

Here begynneth the descripcion of thyn Astralabie

1 Thyn Astrolabie hath a ring to putten on the thombe of thy right hond in taking the height of thinges And tak kep, for from henes forthward I wol clepen the heighte of any thing that is taken by the rewle "the altitude," withoute moo wordes

2 Thus ryng renneth in a maner toret fast to the moder of thyn Astrelabie in so rowm a space that it distourbith not the instrument to hangen after his right centre

3 The moder of thyn Astrelabye is thickest plate, perced with a large hool, that receiveth in hir wombe the thynne plates compowned for diverse clymates, and thy reet shapen in manere of a nett or of a webbe of a loppe

4 This moder is dividid on the bak half with a lyne that cometh descending from the ring down to the netherist bordure The whiche lyne, fro the forseide ring unto the centre of the large hool amide, is clepid the south lyne, or ellis the lyne meridional And the remenaunt of this lyne down to the bordure is clepid the north lyne, or ellis the lyne of midnyght

5 Overtward this forseide longe lyne ther crossith him another lyne of the same lengthe from east to west Of the whiche lyne, from a litel cros (+) in the bordure unto the centre of the large hool, is clepid the est lyne, or ellis the lyne orientale And the remenaunt of this lyne, fro the forseide centre unto the bordure, is clepid the west lyne, or ellis the lyne occidentale Now hast thou here the foure quarters 10 of thyn Astrolabie divided after the foure principales plages or quarters of the firmament

6 The est syde of thyn Astrolabie is clepid the right syde, and the west syde is clepid the left syde Forget not thys, litel Lowys Put the ryng of thyn Astrolabie upon the thombe of thi right hond, and than wol his right side be toward thi left side, and his left side wol be toward thy right side Tak this rewle generall, as wel on the bak as on the wombe syde Upon the ende of this est lyne, as I 10 first seide, is marked a litel cros (+), where as evere moo generally is considered the entring of the first degre in which the sonne arisith

7 Fro this litel cros (+) up to the ende of the lyne meridionall, under the ryng, shall thou fynden the bordure divided with 90 degrees, and by that same proportion is every quarter of thyn Astrolabie divided Over the whiche degrees there ben nombres of augrym that dividen thilke same degres fro 5 to 5, as shewith by

longe strikes bitwene Of whiche longe strikes the space bitwene 10 tenth a myle wey, and every degre of the bordure conteneth 4 minutes, this is to seien, mynutes of an houre

8 Under the compas of thilke degrees ben writen the names of the Twelve Signes as Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricornus, Aquarius, Pisces And the nombre of the degrees of thoo signes be writen in augrym above, and with longe divisious fro 5 to 5, dyvidid from the tyme that the signe entrith unto the last ende But understond wel that these degres 10 of signes ben everich of hem considred of 60 mynutes, and every mynute of 60 secondes, and so furth into smale fraccions infinite, as saith Alkabucius And therefore knowe wel that a degre of the bordure contenith 4 minutes, and a degre of a signe conteneth 60 minutes, and have this in mynde

9 Next this folewith the cercle of the daies, that ben figured in manere of degres, that contenen in nombre 365, dividid also with longe strikes fro 5 to 5, and the nombre in augrym writen under that cercle

10 Next the cercle of the daies folewith the cercle of the names of the monthes, that is to say, Januarius, Februarius, Marcus, Aprilis, Maius, Junius, Julius, Augustus, September, October, November, December The names of these monthes were clepid thus, somme for her propirtees and somme by statutes of lordes Arabiens, somme by othre lordes of Rome Eke of these monthes, as liked to 10 Julius Cesar and to Cesar Augustus, somme were compounded of diverse nombres of daies, as Julie and August Than hath Januarie 31 daies, Februarie 28, March 31, April 30, May 31, Junius 30, Julius 31, Augustus 31, September 30, October 31, November 30, December 31 Natheles, all though that Julius Cesar toke 2 daies out of Feverer and putte hem in his month of Juyll, and Augustus 20 Cesar clepid the month of August after his name and ordeined it of 31 daies, yit truste wel that the sonne dwellith therefore nevere the more ne lasse in oon signe than in another

11 Than folewen the names of the holy daies in the Kalender, and next hem the lettres of the A B C on whiche thei fallen

12 Next the forseide cerle of the A B C, under the cross lyne, is marked the skale in manere of 2 squyres, or ellis in manere of laddres, that serveth by his 12 pointes and his dyvisiouns of ful many a subtil conclusioun Of this forseide skale fro the cross lyne unto the verrey angle is clepid Umbra Versa, and the nethur partie is clepid Umbra Recta, or ellis Umbra Extensa 10

13 Than hast thou a brod reule, that hath on either ende a square plate perced with certein holes, somme more and somme lasse, to receyve the stremes of the sonne by day, and eke by mediacioun of thin eye to knowe the altitude of sterres by night

14 Than is there a large pyn in manere of an extre, that goth thorough the hole that halt the tables of the clymates and the riet in the wombe of the moder, thorough which pyn ther goth a litel wegge, which that is clepid the hors, that streymth all these parties to-hepe Thys forseide grete pyn in manere of an extre is ymagyned to be the Pool Artik in thyn Astralabie

15 The wombe syde of thyn Astrelabie is also divided with a longe croys in 4 quarters from est to west, fro southe to northe, fro right syde to left side, as is the bakside

16 The bordure of which wombe side is divided fro the point of the est lyne unto the point of the south lyne under the ring, in 90 degrees, and by that same proporcioun is every quarter divided, as is the bakside That amountith 360 degrees And understand wel that degres of this bordure ben aunsweryng and consentrike to the degres of the equinoxiall, that is dividid in the same nombre as every 10 othr cerle is in the highe hevene This same bordure is divided also with 23 lettres capitals and a small crosse (+) above the south lyne, that shewith the 24 heures equals of the klokke And, as I have seid, 5 of these degres maken a myle

wey, and 3 milewei maken an heure And every degre of thys bordure contenith 4 minutes, and every minute 60 secundes Now have I told the 20 twyes

17 The plate under the riet is discribed with 3 principal cerles, of whiche the leest is clepid the cerle of Cancre by cause that the heved of Cancre turnith evermo consentrik upon the same cerle In this heved of Cancer is the grettist declinacioun northward of the sonne, and therefore is he clepid solsticium of somer, which declinacioun, after Piholome, is 23 degrees and 50 minutes as wel in Cancer as in 10 Capricorn This signe of Cancer is clepid the tropik of somer, of tropos, that is to seien "ageynward" For than begunneth the sonne to passen from us-ward

The myddel cerle in wydensse, of these 3, is clepid the cerle equinoxiall, upon which turnith evermo the hevedes of Aries and Libra And understand wel that evermo thys cerle equinoxiall turnith justly from verrey est to verrey west 20 as I have shewed the in the speer solide This same cerle is clepid also Equator, that is the weyer of the day, for whan the sonne is in the hevedes of Aries and Libra, than ben the dayes and the nightes ylike of lengthe in all the world And therefore ben these 2 signes called the equinoxus And all that moeveth withinne the hevedes of these Aries and Libra, his moevyng is clepid north- 30 ward, and all that moevith withoute these hevedes, his moevyng is clepid southward, as fro the equinoxiall Tak kep of these latitudes north and south, and forget it nat By this cerle equinoxiall ben considered the 24 heures of the klokke, for evermo the arisyng of 15 degrees of the equinoxiall makith an heure equal of the klokke This equinoxiall is clepid the gurdel of the first moevyng, or 40 ellis of the first moevable And note that the first moevyng is clepid moevyng of the first moevable of the 8 speer, which moevyng is from est into west, and eft ageyn into est Also it is clepid gurdel of the first moevyng for it departith the first moevable, that is to seyn the spere in two like partyes evene distantz fro the poles of this world

The widest of these 3 principale 50 cercles is clepid the cercle of Capricorne, by cause that the heved of Capricorne turneth evermo consentrik upon the same cercle In the heved of this forseid Capricorne is the grettist declina-cion southward of the sonne, and therefore it is clepid the solsticium of wynter This signe of Capricorne is also clepid the tropic of wynter, for than begyn-neth the sonne to come ageyn to us- 60 ward

18 Upon this forseide plate ben compassed certeyn cercles that highten almykanteras, of whiche somme of hem semen parfit cercles and somme semen imparfit The centre that stonddith amyddes the narwest cercle is clepid the cenyth And the netherist cercle, or the first cercle, is clepid the orizonte, that is to seyn, the cercle that divideth the two emy-speries, that is, the partie of the 10 hevене above the erthe and the partie byneth These almykanteras ben com-powned by 2 and 2, all be it so that on diverse Astrelabies somme almykanteras ben divided by oon, and somme by two, and somme by thre, after the quantite of the Astrelabie This forseide cenyth is ymagined to ben the verrey point over the crowne of thyn heved And also this cenyth is the verrey pool of the ori- 20 zonte in every regioun

19 From this cenyth, as it semeth, there comen a maner croked strikes like to the clawes of a loppe, or elles like the werk of a wommans calle, in keryng overthwart the almykanteras And these same strikes or divisious ben clepid azymutz, and thei dividen the orisounte of thyn Astrelabie in 24 divisious And these azymutz serven to knowe the costes of the firmament, and to othre conclusions, as for to 10 knowe the cenyth of the sonne and of every sterre

20 Next these azymutz, under the cercle of Cancer, ben there 12 divisious embelf, muche like to the shap of the azemutz, that shewen the spaces of the heures of planetes

21 The riet of thyn Astrelabie with thy zodiak, shapen in manere of a net or of a lopwebbe after the olde descripcion, which thou maist turnen up and down as thuseif liketh, contenith certain nombre of sterres fixes, with her longitudes and lati-tudes determinat, yf so be that the maker have not errid The names of the sterres ben writen in the margyn of the riet there as thei sitte, of whiche sterres 10 the smale point is clepid the centre And understand also that alle the sterres sitting within the zodiak of thyn Astrelabie ben clepid sterres of the north, for thei arise by northe the est lyne And all the remenaunt fixed oute of the zodiak ben clepid sterres of the south But I seee not that thei arisen alle by southe the est lyne, witnesse on Aldeberan and Algo-meysse Generally understand this 20 rewle, that thilke sterres that ben clepid sterres of the north arisen rather than the degre of her longitude, and alle the sterres of the south arisen after the degre of her longitude — this is to seyn, sterres fixed in thyn Astrelabie The mesure of the longitude of sterres is taken in the lyne ecliptik of hevене, under which lyne, whan that the sonne and the mone be lyne-right, or ellis in the 30 superficie of this lyne, than is the eclipse of the sonne or of the mone, as I shal declare, and eke the cause why But sothly the ecliptik lyne of thy zodiak is the utterist bordure of thy zodiak there the degrees be marked

Thy zodiak of thyn Astrelabie is shapen as a compas which that contenith a large brede as after the quantite of thyn Astrelabie, in ensample that the 40 zodiak in hevене is ymagined to ben a superfice contenyng a latitude of 12 degrees, whereas alle the remenaunt of cercles in the hevене ben ymagined verrey lynes withoute eny latitude Amiddes this celestial zodiak is ymagined a lyne which that is clepid the ecliptik lyne, under which lyne is evermo the wey of the sonne Thus ben there 6 degrees of the zodiak on that oo syde of the lyne and 6 50 degrees on that othr This zodiak is dividid in 12 principale divisious that departen the 12 signes, and, for the streitnesse of thin Astrolabie, than is every smal divisoun in a signe departed by two degrees and two, I mene degrees contenyng 60 mynutes And this forseide hevenysse zodiak is clepid the cercle of the signes, or the cercle of the bestes, for "zodia" in langage of Grek sowneth "bestes" 60 in Latyn tunge And in the zodiak ben the 12 signes that han names of bestes, or ellis for whan the sonne entrith into eny of tho signes he takith the propirte of suche bestes, or ellis that for the sterres that ben ther fixed ben disposid in signes of bestes or shape like bestes, or elles whan the planetes ben under thilke signes thei causen us by her influence operaciouns and effectes like to the operaciouns of bestes 70

And understand also that whan an hot planete cometh into an hot signe, than encresith his hete, and yf a planete be cold, than amenusith his coldnesse by cause of the hooete sygne And by thys conclusioun maist thou take ensample in alle the signes, be thei moist or drie, or moeble or fixe, reknyng the qualite of the planete as I first seide And everich of these 12 signes hath respect to a 80 certeyn parcel of the body of a man, and hath it in governaunce, as Aries hath thin heved, and Taurus thy nekke and thy throthe, Gemini thin armholes and thin armes, and so furth, as shall be shewid more pleyne in the 5 partie of this tretas

This zodiak, which that is part of the 8 spear, over-kervith the equinoxial, and he over-kervith him ageyn in evene parties, and that oo half declineth 90 southward, and that othr northward, as plemly declarith the Tretys of the Speer

Than hast thou a label that is shapen like a reule, save that it is streat and hath no plates on either ende with holes But with the smale point of the forseide label shalt thou calcule thin equaciouns in the bordure of thin Astralabie, as by thin almury 100

Thin almury is clepid the denticle of Capricorne, or ellis the calculer This same almury sitt fix in the heved of Capricorne, and it serveth of many a necessarie conclusioun in equacions of thinges as shal be shewid

Here endith the descripcrion of the Astrelabre and here begynne the conclusions of the Astrelabre

PART II

1 To fynde the degre in which the sonne is day by day, after his cours aboute

Rekne and knowe which is the day of thy month, and ley thy rewle up that same day, and than wol the verrey poynt of thy rewle sitten in the bordure upon the degre of thy sonne

Ensamble as thus — The yeer of oure Lord 1391, the 12 day of March at midday, I wolde knowe the degre of the sonne I soughte in the bakhalf of myn Astrelabre and fond the cercle of the daes, 10 the whiche I knowe by the names of the monthes written under the same cercle

Tho leyde I my reule over this forseide day, and fond the point of my reule in the bordure upon the firste degre of Aries, a litel within the degre And thus knowe I this conclusioun

Anothr day I wolde knowen the degre of my sonne, and thus was at midday in the 13 day of December I fond 20 the day of the month in manere as I seide, tho leyde I my rewle upon this forseide 13 day, and fond the point of my rewle in the bordure upon the firste degre of Capricorne a lite within the degre And than had I of this conclusioun the ful experience

2 To knowe the altitude of the sonne or of othre celestiall bodnes

Put the ryng of thyn Astrelabie upon thy right thombe, and turne thi lift syde ageyn the light of the sonne, and remewe thy rewle up and down til that the stremes of the sonne shine thorough bothe holes of thi rewle. Loke than how many degrees thy rule is areised fro the litel crois upon thin est lyne, and tak there the altitude of thi sonne. And in this same wise maist thow knowe by night the alti- 10 tude of the mone or of brighte sterres

This chapitre is so generall evere in oon that there nedth no more declaracioun, but forget it not

3 To knowe every tyme of the day by light of the sonne, and every tyme of the nyght by the sterres fixe, and eke to knowe by nyght or by day the degre of eny signe that ascendith on the est orisonte, which that is clepid comounly the ascendent, or ellas horoscopum

Tak the altitude of the sonne whan the list, as I have seid, and set the degre of the sonne, in caas that it be beforen the myddel of the day, among thyn almykanteras on the est syde of thin Astrelabie, and if it be after the myddel of the day, set the degre of thy sonne upon the west syde. Take this manere of setting for a general rule, ones for evere. And whan thou hast set the degre of thy sonne upon as 10 many almykanteras of height as was the altitude of the sonne taken by thy rule, ley over thi label upon the degre of the sonne, and than wol the point of thi label sitte in the bordure upon the verrey tyde of the day

Ensamble as thus — The yeer of oure lord 1391, the 12 day of March, I wolde knowe the tyde of the day. I tok the altitude of my sonne, and fond that 20 it was 25 degrees and 30 of minutes of height in the bordure on the bak side. Tho turned I myn Astrelabye, and by cause that it was beforen mydday, I turned my net and sette the degre of the sonne, that is to seyn the first degre of Aries, on the right side of myn Astrelabye upon 25 degrees and 30 mynutes of height among myn almykanteras. Tho leide I my label upon the degre of my sonne, and 30 fond the point of my label in the bordure upon a capital lettre that is clepid an X. Tho rekned I alle the capitale lettres fro the lyne of myndnight unto this forseide lettre X, and fond that it was 9 of the klokke of the day. Tho loked I down upon the est orizonte, and fond there the 20 degre of Geminus ascendyng, which that I tok for myn ascendent. And in this wise had I the experience for evermo 40 in which manere I shulde knowe the tyde of the day and eke myn ascendent

Tho wolde I wite the same nyght folew- yng the houre of the nyght, and wroughte in this wise — Among an heep of sterres fixe it liked me for to take the altitude of the faire white sterre that is clepid Alha- bor, and fond hir sitting on the west side of the lyne of midday, 12 degrees of heighte taken by my rewle on the 50 bak side. Tho sette I the centre of this Alhabor upon 12 degrees among myn almykanteras upon the west side, by cause that she was founde on the west side. Tho leyde I my label over the degre of the sonne, that was descendid under the west orisounte, and rekned all the lettres capitals fro the lyne of midday unto the point of my label in the bordure, and fond that it was passed 9 of the 60 klokke the space of 10 degrees. Tho lokid I down upon myn est orisounte, and fond there 10 degrees of Scorpius ascend- yng, whom I tok for myn ascendent. And thus lerned I to knowe onys for evere in which manere I shuld come to the houre of the nyght, and to myn ascendent, as verrey as may be taken by so smal an instrument

But natheles this rule in generall 70 wol I warne the for evere — Ne make the nevere bold to have take a just ascendent by thin Astrelabie, or elles to have set justly a klokke, whan eny celestial body by which that thou wenyst governe thilke thinges be nigh the south lyne. For trust wel, whan the sonne is nygh the meridional lyne, the degre of the sonne renneth so longe consentrik upon the almykante- 80 ras that sothly thou shalt erre fro the just ascendent The same conclusion sey I by the centre of eny sterre fix by nyght And more over, by experience I wot wel that in our orisounte, from xi of the klokke unto oon of the klokke, in taking of a just ascendent in a portatif Astrelabie it is to hard to knowe — I mene from xi of the klokke before the houre of noon til oon of the klokke next folewyng

4 A special declaracioun of the ascendent

The ascendent sothly, as wel in alle nativites as in questions and elecciions of tymes, is a thing which that these astrologiens gretly obseruen Wherefore me semeth convenyent, syth that I speke of the ascendent, to make of it special declaracioun

The ascendent sothly, to take it at the largest, is thilke degre that ascendith at eny of these forseide tymes upon 10 the est orisounte And therefore, yf that eny planete ascende at thatt same tyme in thilke forseide degre, than hath he no latitude fro the ecliptik lyne, but he is than in the degre of the ecliptik which that is the degre of his longitude Men sayn that thilke planete is in horoscopo

But sothly the hous of the ascendent, that is to seyn, the first hous or the est angle, is a thing more brod and large 20 For, after the statutes of astrologiens, what celestial body that is 5 degrees above thilke degre that ascendith, or withunne that nombre, that is to seyn neer the degre that ascendith, yit rekne they thilke planete in the ascendent And what planete that is under thilke degre that ascendith the space of 25 degrees, yit seyn thei that thilke planete is "like to him that is the hous of the ascendent" But 30 sothly, if he passe the boundes of these forseide spaces, above or bynethe, thei seyn that the planete is "fallyng fro the ascendent" Yit saien these astrologiens that the ascendent and eke the lord of the ascendent may be shapen for to be fortunat or infortunat, as thus — A "fortunat ascendent" clepen they whan that no wicked planete, as Saturne or Mars or elles the Tayl of the Dragoun, is in 40

the hous of the ascendent, ne that no wicked planete have noon aspect of enemyte upon the ascendent But thei wol caste that thei have a fortunat planete in hir ascendent, and yit in his felicite, and than sey thei that it is wel Further over thei seyn that the infortunyng of an ascendent is the contrarie of these forseide thinges The lord of the ascendent, sey thei that he is fortunat whan he is 50 in god place fro the ascendent, as in an angle, or in a succident where as he is in hys dignite and comfortid with frendly aspectes of planetes and wel resceyved, and eke that he may seen the ascendent, and that he be not retrograd, ne combust, ne joynd with no shrewe in the same signe, ne that he be not in his descencioun, ne joynd with no planete in his descencioun, ne have upon him noon aspect 60 infortunat, and than sey thei that he is wel

Natheles these ben observaunces of judicial matere and rytes of payens, in whiche my sprit hath no feith, ne knowing of her horoscopus For they seyn that every signe is departid in thre evene parties by 10 degrees, and thilke porcioun they clepe a face And although that a planete have a latitude fro the 70 ecliptik, yit sey somme folk, so that the planete arise in that same signe with eny degre of the forseide face in which his longitude is rekned, that yit is the planete in horoscopo, be it in nativyte or in eleccion, etc

5 To knowe the verrey equacioun of the degre of the sonne yf so be that it falle bitwene two almykanteras

For as muche as the almykanteras in thun Astrelabie ben compowned by two and two, where as somme almykanteras in sondry astrelabies be compowned by 1 and 1, or elles by 3 and 3, it is necessarie to thy lernyng to teche the first to knowe and worke with thun owne instrument Wherefore whan that the degre of thi sonne fallith bytwixe 2 almykanteras, or ellis yf thun almykanteras ben graven with 10 over-gret a poynt of a compas (for bothe these thinges may causen errorr as wel in knowing of the tide of the day, as of the verrey ascendent), thou must worken in this wise —

Set the degre of thy sonne upon the hyer almykanteras of bothe, and wayte wel where as thū almyry touchith the bordure and set there a pricke of ynke Sett doun agayn the degre of the sunne 20 upon the nether almykanteras of bothe, and sett there another pricke Remeve than thū almyry in the bordure evene amiddes bothe prickes, and thus wol lede justly the degre of thi sonne to sitte atwixe bothe almykanteras in his right place Ley than thy label over the degre of thi sonne, and fynd in the bordure the verrey tyde of the day, or of the night And as verrailly shalt thou fynde 30 upon thū est orisonte thū ascendent

6 To knowe the spryng of the dawenyng and the ende of the evenyng, the whiche ben called the two crepuscules

Set the nadir of thy sonne upon 18 degrees of height among thyn almykanteras on the west syde, and ley thy label on the degre of thy sonne, and than shal the point of thy label shewen the spryng of the day Also set the nader of thy sonne upon 18 degrees of height among thū almykanteras on the est side, and ley over thy label upon the degre of the sonne, and with the point of thy label fynd in the bordure 10 the ende of the evenyng, that is verrey nyght

The nader of the sonne is thilke degre that is opposyt to the degre of the sonne, in the 7 signe, as thus — every degre of Aries by ordir is nadir to every degre of Labra by ordre, and Taurus to Scorpioun, Gemini to Sagittarie, Cancer to Capricorne, Leo to Aquare, Virgo to Pisces And if eny degre in thy zodiak be derk, his 20 nadir shal declare hym

7 To knowe the arch of the day, that some folk callen the day artificiall, fro sonne arisyng tyl it go to reste

Set the degre of thi sonne upon thū est orisonte, and ley thy label on the degre of the sonne, and at the point of thy label in the bordure set a pricke Turne than thy riet aboute tyl the degre of thy sonne sitte upon the west orisonte, and ley thy label upon the same degre of the sonne, and at the poynt of thy label set there another pricke Rekne than the quantite of tyme in the bordure bitwixe bothe 10 prickes, and tak there thyn arch of the day The remenaunt of the bordure under the orisonte is the arch of the nyght Thus maist thou rekne bothe arches, or every porcioun, of whether that the liketh And by this manere of worching maist thou se how longe that eny sterre fix dwelleth above the erthe, fro tyme that he riseth til he go to reste But the day natural, that is to seyn 24 houres, is the revoluciou of the equinoxial with as muche partie of the zodiak as the sonne of his propre moevyng passith in the mene while

8 To turne the houres inequales in houres equales

Know the nombre of the degrees in the houres inequales, and depart hem by 15, and tak there thū houres equales

9 To knowe the quantite of the day vulgar, that is to seyn fro spryng of the day unto verrey nyght

Know the quantite of thy crepuscles, as I have taught in the 2 chapitre bifore, and adde hem to the arch of thy day artificial, and tak there the space of all the hool day vulgar unto verrey night The same manere maist thou worche to knowe the quantite of the vulgar nyght

10 To knowe the quantite of houres inequales by day

Understond wel that these houres inequales ben clepid houres of planetes. And understond wel that som tyme ben thei lenger by day than by night, and som tyme the contrarie But understond wel that evermo generally the houre inequal of the day with the houre inequal of the night contenen 30 degrees of the bordure, which bordure is evermo answeyryng to the degrees of the equinoxial Wherefore 10

departe the arch of the day artificial in 12, and tak there the quantite of the houre mequale by day And if thou abate the quantite of the houre mequale by day out of 30, than shal the remenaunt that levith performe the houre mequale by night

11 To knowe the quantite of houres equales

The quantite of houres equales, that is to seyn the houres of the klokke, ben departid by 15 degrees already in the bordure of thin Astrelaby, as wel by night as by day, generally for evere What nedith more declaracioun?

Wherefore whan the list to knowe how many houres of the klokke ben passed, or eny part of eny of these houres that ben passed, or ellis how many houres or parties of houres ben to come fro such a tyme to such a tyme by day or by night, know the degre of thy sonne, and ley thy label on it Turne thy ryet aboute joyntly with thy label, and with the poynt of it rekne in the bordure fro the sonne ariste unto that same place there thou desirist, by day as by nyght This conclusioun wol I declare in the last chapitre of the 4 partie of this tretys so openly that ther shal lakke no word that nedith to the declaracioun

12 Special declaracioun of the houres of planetes

Understond wel that evermo, fro the arisyng of the sonne til it go to reste, the nadir of the sonne shal shewe the houre of the planete, and fro that tyme forward al the night til the sonne arise, than shal the verrey degre of the sonne shewe the houre of the planete

Ensampl as thus — The xij day of March fyl upon a Saturday, peraventure, and atte risyng of the sonne I fond the secunde degre of Aries sittyng upon myn est orisonte, all be it that it was but litel Than fond I the 2 degre of Libra, nadir of my sonne, discending on my west orisonte, upon which west orisonte every day generally, atte sonne arist, entith the houre of every planete, after which planete the day berith his name, and endith in the next strike of the plate under the forseide west orisonte And evere as the sonne clymbith upper and upper, so goth his nadir downer and downer, teching by suche strikes the houres of planetes by ordir as they sitten in the hevene The firste houre inequal of every Saturday is to Saturne, and the seconde to Jupiter, the thirde to Mars, the fourthe to the sonne, the fite to Venus, the sixte to Mercurius, the seventh to the mone And then ageyn the 8 houre is to Saturne, the 9 is to Jupiter, the 10 to Mars, the 11 to the sonne, the 12 to Venus And now is my sonne gon to reste as for that Saturday Than shewith the verrey degre of the sonne the houre of Mercurie entring under my west orisonte at eve, and next him succedith the mone, and so furth by ordir, planete after planete in houre after houre, all the nyght longe til the sonne arise Now risith the sonne that Sunday the morwe, and the nadir of the sonne upon the west orisonte shewith me the entring of the houre of the forseide sonne And in this manere succedith planete under planete fro Saturne unto the mone, and fro the mone up ageyn to Saturne, houre after houre generally And thus have I this conclusioun

13 To knowe the altitude of the sonne in myddes of the day that is clepid the altitude meridian

Set the degre of the sonne upon the lyne meridional, and rekne how many degrees of almykanteras ben bitwyxe thin est orisonte and the degre of thy sonne, and tak there thin altitude meridian, this to seyn, the highest of the sonne as for that day So maist thou knowe in the same lyne the highest cours that eny sterre fix clymbeth by night This is to seyn that whan eny sterre fix is passid the lyne meridional, than begynneth it to descende, and so doth the sonne

14 To knowe the degre of the sonne by thy ryet, for a maner curiosite

Sek besily with thy rule the highest of the sonne in mydde of the day Turne than thyn Astrelabie, and with a pricke of ynke marke the nombre of that same altitude in the lyne meridional, turne than thy ryet aboute tyl thou fynde a degre of thy zodiak accordyng with the pricke, this is to seyn, sitting on the pricke And in soth thou shalt finde but 2 degrees in all the zodiak of that condicioun, and yit 10 thulke 2 degrees ben in diverse signes Than maist thou lightly, by the sesoun of the yere, knowe the signe in which that is the sonne

15 To knowe which day is lyk to which day as of lengthe

Loke whiche degrees ben ylike fer fro the hevedes of Cancer and Capricorne, and loke when the sonne is in eny of thulke degrees, than ben the dayes ylike of lengthe This is to seyn that as longe is that day in that month, as was such a day in such a month, there varieth but litel

Also, yf thou take 2 dayes naturales in the yere ylike fer fro either point of the equinoxiall in the opposyt parties, than 10 as longe is the day artificiall of that oon day as is the night of that othr, and the contrarie

16 This chapitre is a maner declaracioun to conclusiouns that folewen

Understond wel that thy zodiak is departed in two halve circles, as fro the heved of Capricorne unto the heved of Cancer, and ageynward fro the heved of Cancer unto the heved of Capricorne The heved of Capricorne is the lowest point where as the sonne goth in wynter, and the heved of Cancer is the heighest point in which the sonne goth in somer And therefore understond wel that eny two degrees 10 that ben ylike fer fro eny of these two hevedes, truste wel that thulke two degrees ben of ilke declinacioun, be it southward or northward, and the daes of hem ben ilke of lengthe and the nyghtes also, and the shadewes ilyke, and the altitudes ylike atte middy for evere

17 To knowe the verrey degre of eny maner sterre, straunge or unstraunge, after his longitude, though he be undeterminat in thyn Astralabye, soihly to the trouthe thus he shal be knowe

Tak the altitude of this sterre whan he is on the est syde of the lyne meridional, as neigh as thou mayst gesse, and tak an ascendent anon right by som manere sterre fix which that thou knowist, and forget not the altitude of the firste sterre ne thyn ascendent And whan that this is don, aspeye diligently whan this same firste sterre passith eny thyng the south westward, and cacche him anon right 10 in the same nombre of altitude on the west syde of this lyne meridional, as he was kaught on the est syde, and tak a newe ascendent anon-ryght by som manere sterre fix which that thou knowist, and forget not this secunde ascendent And whan that this is don, rekne than how many degrees ben bitwixe the first ascendent and the secunde ascendent, and rekne wel the myddel degre bitwene bothe 20 ascendentes, and set thulke myddel degre upon thyn est orizonte, and wayte than what degre that sitte upon the lyne meridional, and tak there the verrey degre of the ecliptuk in which the sterre stondith for the tyme For in the ecliptuk is the longitude of a celestiall body rekned, evene fro the heved of Aries unto the ende of Pisces, and his latitude is rekned after the quantite of his declynacioun north 30 or south toward the polys of this world

As thus — Yf it be of the sonne or of eny fix sterre, rekne hys latitude or his declinacioun fro the equinoxiall cerle, and if it be of a planete, rekne than the quantite of his latitude fro the ecliptuk lyne, all be it so that fro the equinoxiall may the declinacioun or the latitude of eny body celestiall be rekned after the site north 40 or south and after the quantite of his declinacioun And right so may the latitude or the declinacioun of eny body celestiall, save oonly of the sonne, after hys site north or south and after the quantite of his declinacioun, be rekned fro the echptik lyne, fro which lyne alle planetes som tyme declinen north or south save oonly the forseide sonne

18 To knowe the degrees of longitudes of fixe sterres after that they be determynat in thyn Astrelabye, yf so be that thei be trewly sette

Set the centre of the sterre upon the lyne meridionall, and tak kep of thy zodiak, and loke what degre of eny signe that sitte upon the same lyne meridionall at that same tyme, and tak there the degre in which the sterre stondith, and with that same degre cometh that same sterre unto that same lyne fro the orisonte

19 To knowe with which degre of the zodiak eny sterre fix in thyn Astrelabe arisith upon the est orisonte, all though has dwellyng be in another signe

Set the centre of the sterre upon the est orisonte, and loke what degre of eny signe that sitt upon the same orisonte at that same tyme And understond wel that with that same degre arisith that same sterre

And thys merveyulous arisyng with a straunge degre in another signe is by cause that the latitude of the sterre fix is either north or south fro the equinoxiall But sothly the latitudes of planetes be comounly rekened fro the echlyptik, by cause that noon of hem declyneth but fewe degrees out fro the brede of the zodiak And tak god kep of this chapitre of arisyng of celestiale bodies, for truste wel that neyther mone ne sterre, as in our embelif orisonte, arisith with that same degre of his longitude save in oocas, and that is whan they have no latitude fro the echlyptik lyne But natheles som tyme is everich of these planetes under the same lyne

20 To knowe the declinacoun of eny degre in the zodiak fro the equinoxiall cercle

Set the degre of eny signe upon the lyne meridionall, and rekne hys altitude in the almykanteras fro the est orisonte up to the same degre set in the forseide lyne, and set

there a prikke, turne up than thy riet, and set the heved of Aries or Libra in the same meridionall lyne, and set there a nother prikke And whan that this is don, consider the altitudes of hem bothe, for sothly the difference of thilke altitudes is the declinacoun of thilke degre fro the equinoxiall And yf it so be that thilke degre be northward fro the equinoxiall, than is his declinacoun north, yf it be southward, than is it south

21 To knowe for what latitude in eny regoun the almykanteras of eny table ben compowmed

Rekene how many degrees of almykanteras in the meridionall lyne ben fro the cercle equinoxiall unto the cenyth, or elles from the pool artyk unto the north orisonte, and for so gret a latitude, or for so smal a latitude, is the table compowmed

22 To know in specuall the latitude of oure cowntre, I mene after the latitude of Oxenford, and the height of oure pool

Understond wel that as fer is the heved of Aries or Libra in the equinoxiall fro oure orisonte as is the cenyth fro the pool artik, and as high is the pool artik fro the orisonte as the equinoxiall is fer fro the cenyth I prove it thus by the latitude of Oxenford understond wel that the height of oure pool artik fro oure north orisonte is 51 degrees and 50 mynutes, than is the cenyth fro oure pool artik 38 degrees and 10 mynutes, than is the equinoxiall from oure cenyth 51 degrees and 50 mynutes, than is oure south orisonte from oure equinoxiall 38 degres and 10 mynutes Understond wel this rekenyng Also forget not that the cenyth is 90 degrees of height from oure orisonte, and oure equinoxiall is 90 degres from oure pool artik Also this shorte rule is soth, that the latitude of eny place in a regoun is the distaunce fro the cenyth unto the equinoxiall

23 To prove evidently the latitude of eny place in a regoun by the prove of the height of the pool artik in that same place

In som wynters nyght whan the firmament is cler and thikke sterred, wayte a tyme til that eny sterre fix sitte lyne-right perpendicular over the pool artik, and clepe that sterre A, and wayte another sterre that sitte lyne right under A, and under the pool, and clepe that sterre F. And understand wel that F is not considrid but only to declare that A sitte evene over the pool. Tak than anon-right 10 the altitude of A from the orisonte, and forget it not, let A and F goo fare wel tyl ageynst the dawenyng a gret while, and com than ageyn, and abid til that A is evene under the pool, and under F, for sothly than wol F sitte over the pool, and A wol sitte under the pool. Tak than eftsonys the altitude of A from the orisonte, and note as wel his secunde altitude as hys first altitude. And whan that this 20 is doon, rekene how many degrees that the first altitude of A exceedith his secunde altitude, and tak half thilke porcioun that is exceedid and adde it to his secunde altitude, and tak there the elevacioun of thy pool, and eke the latitude of thy region, for these two ben of oo nombre, this is to seyn, as many degres as thy pool is elevat, so muche is the latitude of the region.

Ensample as thus — peraventure 30 the altitude of A in the evenyng is 56 degrees of height, than wol his secunde altitude or the dawenyng be 48 degres, that is 8 degres lasse than 56, that was his first altitude att even. Tak than the half of 8 and adde it to 48 that was his secunde altitude, and than hast thou 52. Now hast thou the height of thy pool and the latitude of the region. But 40 understand wel that to prove this conclusioun and many another faire conclusioun, thou must have a plomet hanging on a lyne, heygher than thn heved, on a perche, and thilke lyne must hange evene perpendicular bytwix the pool and thm eye, and than shalt thou seen yf A sitte evene over the pool, and over F atte evene, and also yf F sitte evene over the pool and over A or day.

24 Another conclusioun to prove the height of the pool artik fro the orisonte

Tak eny sterre fix that never descendith under the orisonte in thilke region, and conside his heighest altitude and his lowist altitude fro the orisonte, and make a nombre of bothe these altitudes, tak than and abate half that nombre, and tak there the elevacioun of the pool artik in that same region.

25 Another conclusioun to prove the latitude of the region

Understand wel that the latitude of eny place in a region is verrey the space bytwexe the cenyth of hem that dwellen there and the equinoxiall cerde north or south, takyng the mesure in the meridional lyne, as shewith in the almykanteras of thm Astrelabye. And thilke space is as much as the pool artik is high in that same place fro the orisonte. And than is the depressioun of the pool antartik, 10 that is to seyn, than is the pool antartik, bynethe the orisonte the same quantite of space neither more ne lasse.

Than if thou desire to knowe this latitude of the region, tak the altitude of the sonne in the myddel of the day, whan the sonne is in the hevedes of Aries or of Libra, for than moeveth the sonne in the lyne equinoxiall, and abate the nombre of that same sonnes altitude out of 90 20 degrees, and than is the remenaunt of the nombre that leveth the latitude of that region. As thus — I suppose that the sonne is thilke day at noon 38 degrees of height, abate than 38 oute of 90, so leveth there 52, than is 52 degres the latitude. I say not this but for ensample, for wel I wot the latitude of Oxenford is certeyn minutes lasse, as thow might preve.

Now yf so be that the semeth to 30 longe a tarieng to abide til that the sonne be in the hevedes of Aries or of Libra, than wayte whan the sonne is in eny othr degre of the zodiak, and conside the degre of his declinacioun fro the equinoxiall lyne, and if it so be that the sonnes declinacioun be northward fro the equinoxiall, abate than fro the sonnes altitude at non the nombre of his declinacioun, and than hast thou the height of the hevedes 40 of Aries and Libra As thus — My sonne is peraventure in the first degre of Leoun, 58 degrees and 10 minutes of height at non, and his declinacioun is almost 20 degrees northward fro the equinoxiall, abate than thilke 20 degrees of declinacioun out of the altitude at non, than leveth there 38 degrees and odde minutes Lo there the heved of Aries or Libra and thin equinoxiall in that regioun Also 50 if so be that the sonnes declinacioun be southward fro the equinoxiall, adde than thilke declinacioun to the altitude of the sonne at noon, and tak there the hevedes of Aries and Libra and thin equinoxiall, abate than the height of the equinoxiall out of 90 degrees, than leveth there the distance of the pool of that regioun fro the equinoxiall Or elles, if the list, tak the highest altitude fro the equinoxiall 60 of eny sterre fix that thou knowist, and tak the netherest elongacioun (lengthing) fro the same equinoxiall lyne, and work in the manere forseid

26 Declaracioun of the ascensioun of signes

The excellence of the spere solide, amonges othir noble conclusiouns, shewith manifest the diverse ascenciouns of signes in diverse places, as wel in the right cercle as in the embelif cercle These auctours writen that thilke signe is cleped of right ascensioun with which more part of the cercle equinoxiall and lasse part of the zodiak ascendith, and thilke signe ascendith embelif with which lasse 10 part of the equinoxiall and more part of the zodiak ascendith Ferther-over, they seyn that in thilke cuntrey where as the senith of hem that dwellen there is in the equinoxiall lyne, and her orisonte passyng by the two poles of this world, thilke folk han this right cercle and the right orisonte, and evermore the arch of the day and the arch of the night is there like longe, and the sonne twies every yer 20 passing thourgh the cenith of hir heed, and two someres and two wynters in a yer han these forseide peple And the almycanteras in her Astrelabyes ben straight as a lyne, so as it shewith in the figure

The utilite to knowe the ascensiouns of signes in the right cercle is this — Truste wel that by mediacioun of thilke ascensiouns these astrologiens, by her tables and her instruments, knowen verreyly 30 the ascensioun of every degre and minute in all the zodiak in the embelif cercle, as shal be shewed And nota that this forseide right orisonte, that is cleped Orison Rectum, dividith the equinoxiall into right angles, and the embelif orisonte, where as the pool is enhanced upon the orisonte, overkerwith the equinoxiall in embelif angles, as shewith in the figure 40

27 This is the conclusioun to knowe the ascensiouns of signes in the right cercle, that is circulus directus

Set the heved of what signe the lyst to knowe his ascendyng in the right cercle upon the lyne meridionall, and wayte where thyn almury touchith the bordure, and set there a prikke, turne than thy riet westward til that the ende of the forseide signe sitte upon the meridional lyne and eftsonys wayte where thin almury touchith the bordure, and set there another pricke Rekene than the nombre of 10 degrees in the bordure bitwixe bothe prikkes, and tak the ascensioun of the signe in the right cercle And thus maist thou werke with every porcioun of thy zodiak

28 To knowe the ascensiouns of signes in the embelif cercle in every regioun, I mene, in circulo obliquo

Set the heved of the signe which as the list to knowe his ascensioun upon the est orisonte, and wayte where thin almury touchith the bordure, and there set a prikke Turne than thy riet upward til that the ende of the same signe sitte upon the est orisonte, and wayte eftsonys where as thin almury touchith the bordure, and set there a nother prikke Rekene than the nombre of degrees in the 10

bordure bitwyxe bothe prikkes and tak there the ascensiou of the signe in the embelif cercle And understond wel that alle the signes in thy zodiak, fro the heved of Aries unto the ende of Virgo, ben clepid signes of the north fro the equinoxiall And these signes arisen bitwyxe the verrey est and the verrey north in oure orisonte generally for evere And alle the signes fro the heved of Libra unto the ende of Pisces ben clepid signes of the south fro the equinoxial, and these signes arisen evermore bitwexe the verrey est and the verrey south in oure orisonte Also every signe bitwixe the heved of Capricorne unto the ende of Geminus arisith on oure orisonte in lasse than 2 houres equales And these same signes fro the heved of Capricorne unto the ende of Geminus ben cleped tortuose signes, or croked signes, for thei arise embelyf on oure orisonte And these croked signes ben obedient to the signes that ben of right ascensiou The signes of right ascensiou ben fro the heved of Cancer unto the ende of Sagittarie, and these signes arisen more upright, and thei ben called eke sovereyn signes and everich of hem arisith in more space than in 2 houres Of whiche signes Gemini obereth to Cancer, and Taurus to Leo, Aries to Virgo, Pisces to Libra, Aquarius to Scorpioun, and Capricorne to Sagittarie And thus evermore 2 signes that ben like fer fro the heved of Capricorne obeyen everich of hem til othir

29 To knowe justly the 4 quarters of the world, as Est, West, North, and South

Tak the altitude of thy sonne when the list, and note wel the quarter of the world in which the sonne is for the tyme by the azymutz Turne than thin Astrelabie, and set the degre of the sonne in the almykanteras of his altitude on thilke syde that the sonne stant, as is the manere in takyng of houres, and ley thy label on the degre of the sonne, and rekene how many degrees of the bordure ben bitwixe the lyne meridional and the point of thy label, and note wel that nombre Turne than ageyn thin Astrelabie, and set the point of thy gret rule there thou takist thin altitudes upon as many degrees in his bordure fro his meridional as was the point of thy label fro the lyne meridional on the wombe side Take than thin Astrelabie with bothe hondes sadly and shgly, and lat the sonne shyne thorough bothe holes of thy rule, and shgly in thilke shynyng lat thin Astrelabie kouche adoun evene upon a smothe ground, and than wol the verrey lyne meridional of thin Astrelabie lye evene south, and the est lyne wol lye est, and the west lyne west, and the north lyne north, so that thou worke softly and avysely in the kouching And thus hast thou the 4 quarters of the firmament

30 To knowe the altitude of planetes fro the wey of the sonne, whether so they be north or south fro the forseide wey

Loke whan that a planete is in the lyne meridional, yf that hir altitude be of the same height that is the degre of the sonne for that day, and than is the planete in the verrey wey of the sonne and hath no latitude And if the altitude of the planete be heigher than the degre of the sonne, than is the planete north fro the wey of the sonne such a quantite of latitude as shewith by thin almykanteras And if the altitude of the planete be lasse than the degre of the sonne, than is the planete south fro the wey of the sonne such a quantite of latitude as shewith by thin almykanteras This is to seyn, fro the wey where as the sonne went thilke day but not fro the wey of the sonne in every place of the zodiak

31 To knowe the cerynth of the arising of the sonne, this is to seyn, the partie of the orisonte in which that the sonne arisith

Thou must first considere that the sonne arisith not alwey verrey est, but somtyme by northe the est and somtyme by south the est Sothly the sonne arisith nevere moo verrey est in oure orisonte, but he be in the heved of Aries or Libra Now is thin orisonte departed in 24 parties by thin azi-

mutēs in significacioun of 24 parties of the world, al be it so that shipmen rekene thilke parties in 32 Than is there no 10 more but wayte in which azymut that thy sonne entrith at his arisyng, and take there the cenith of the arisyng of the sonne

The manere of the divisoun of thin Astrelabie is this, I mene as in this cas — First it is divided in 4 plages principalis with the lyne that goth from est to west, and than with another lyne that goth fro south to north, than is it divided in smale parties of azymutz, as est, and 20 est by south, where as is the first azymut above the est lyne, and so furth fro partie to partie til that thou come ageyn unto the est lyne Thus maist thou understonde also the cenyth of eny sterre, in which partie he riseth

32 To knowe in which partie of the firmament is the conjunccyoun

Considerē the tyme of the conjunccyoun by the kalender, as thus — Loke hou many houres thilke conjunccyoun is fro the midday of the day precedent, as shewith by the canon of thy kalender Rekene than thilke nombre of houres in the bordure of thin Astrelabie, as thou art wont to do in knowyng of the houres of the day or of the nyght, and ley thy label over the degre of the sonne, and than wol the point of 10 thy label sitte upon the houre of the conjunccyoun Loke than in which azymut the degre of thy sonne sittith, and in that partie of the firmament is the conjunccyoun

33 To knowe the cenyth of the altitude of the sonne

This is no more to seyn but eny tyme of the day tak the altitude of the sonne, and by the azymut in which he stonddith maist thou seen in which partie of the firmament he is And in the same wise maist thou seen by nyght, of eny sterre, whether the sterre sitte est or west, or north or south, or eny partie bitwene, after the name of the azymut in which the sterre stonddith

34 To knowe sothly the degre of the longi- tude of the mone, or of eny planete that hath no latitude for the tyme fro the ecliptik lyne

Tak the altitude of the mone, and rekene thy altitude up among thyn almykanteras on which syde that the mone stonddith, and set there a prikke Tak than anon-right upon the mones syde the altitude of eny sterre fix which that thou knowist, and set his centre upon his altitude among thyn almykanteras there the sterre is founde Wayte than which degre of the zodiak touchith the prykke of the 10 altitude of the mone, and tak there the degre in which the mone stonddith This conclusioun is verrey soth, yf the sterres in thin Astrelabie stonden after the trouthe Comoun tretes of the Astrelabie ne maken non excepcioun whether the mone have latitude or noon, ne on wheyther syde of the mone the altitude of the sterre fixe be taken

And nota that yf the mone shewe 20 himself by light of day, than maist thou worche this same conclusioun by the sonne, as wel as by the fixe sterre

35 This is the worchyng of the conclusioun to knowe yf that eny planete be direct or retrograd

Tak the altitude of any sterre that is clepid a planete, and note it wel, and tak eke anon the altitude of any sterre fix that thou knowist, and note it wel also Com than ageyn the thridde or the fourthe nyght next folewing, for than shalt thou perceyve wel the moeving of a planete, whether so he moeve forward or bakward Awayte wel than whan that thy sterre fixe is in the same altitude that she was whan 10 thou toke hir firste altitude And tak than eft-sones the altitude of the forseide planete and note it wel, for truste wel yf so be that the planete be on the right syde of the meridional lyne, so that his secunde altitude be lasse than hys first altitude was, than is the planete direct, and yf he be on the west syde in that condicioun, than is he retrograd And yf so be that this planete be upon the est side 20 whan his altitude is ytaken, so that his secunde altitude be more than his first altitude, than is he retrograd And if he be on the west syde, than is he direct But the contrarie of these parties is of the cours of the mone, for certis the mone moeveth the contrarie from othre planetes as in hir epicicle, but in noon othr manere

36 The conclusioun of equaciouns of houses after the Astrelabre

Set the begynnynge of the degre that ascendith upon the ende of the 8 houre unequal, than wol the begynnynge of the 2 hous sitte upon the lyne of mydnight Remeve than the degre that ascendith, and set him on the ende of the 10 houre unequal, and than wol the begynnynge of the 3 hous sitte up on the mydnight lyne Bring up ageyn the same degre that ascended first, and set him upon the 10 est orisonte, and than wol the begynnynge of the 4 hous sitte upon the lyne of mydnight Tak than the nader of the degre that first ascendid, and set him in the ende of the 2 houre unequal, and than wol the begynnynge of the 5 hous sitte upon the lyne of mydnight Set than the nader of the ascendent in the ende of the 4 houre unequal, and than wol the begynnynge of the 6 hous sitte on the mydnight 20 lyne The begynnynge of the 7 hous is nader of the ascendent, and the begynnynge of the 8 hous is nader of the 2 hous, and the begynnynge of the 9 hous is nader of the 3, and the begynnynge of the 10 hous is nader of the 4, and the begynnynge of the 11 hous is nader of the 5, and the begynnynge of the 12 hous is nader of the 6

37 Another maner of equaciouns of houses by the Astrelabre

Tak thin ascendent, and than hast thou thy 4 angles, for wel thou wost that the opposit of thin ascendent, that is to seyn, the begynnynge of the 7 hous, sitt upon the west orisonte, and the begynnynge of the 10 hous sitt upon the lyne meridional, and his opposyt upon the lyne of mydnight Than ley thy label over the degre that ascendith, and rekne from the point of thy label alle the degrees in the bordure tyl 10 thou come to the meridional lyne, and departe alle thilke degrees in 3 evene parties, and take there the evene equacions of 3 houses, for ley thy label over everich of these 3 parties, and than maist thou se by thy label, lith in the zodiak, the begynnynge of everich of these same houses fro the ascendent, that is to seyn the begynnynge of the 12 hous next above thin ascendent, the begynnynge of the 20 11 hous, and than the 10 upon the meridional lyne, as I first seide The same wise worch thou fro the ascendent down to the lyne of mydnyght, and thus hast thou othre 3 houses, that is to seyn, the begynnynge of the 2, and the 3, and the 4 hous Than is the nader of these 3 houses the begynnynge of the 3 houses that folewen

38 To fynde the lyne meridional to dwelle fix in eny certeyn place

Tak a round plate of metal, for werpyng, the brodder the better, and make there upon a just compas a lite within the bordure And ley this rounde plate upon an evene ground, or on an evene ston, or on an evene stok fix in the ground, and ley it evene by a level And in the centre of the compas styke an evene pyn, or a wyr, upright, the smaller the better, set thy pyn by a plom-rule evene upright, and 10 let this pyn be no lenger than a quarter of the dyametre of thy compas, fro the centre amiddes And wayte bisely aboute 10 or 11 of the klokke, whan the sonne shyneth, whan the shadewe of the pyn entrith enythyng within the cercle of thy compas an heer-mele, and marke there a pricke with ynke Abid than stille waiting on the sonne til after 1 of the klokke, til that the shadwe of the wyr, 20 or of the pyn, passe enything out of the cercle of the compas, be it nevere so lyte, and set there another pricke of ynke Tak than a compas, and mesure evene the myddel bitwixe bothe prickes, and set there a pricke Tak me than a rule and draw a strike evene a-lyne, fro the pyn unto the middel pricke, and tak there thi lyne meridional for evermore, as in that same place And yif thou drawe 30 a cross-lyne overthwart the compas justly over the lyne meridional, than hast thou est and west and south, and par consequens, than, the nader of the south lyne is the north lyne

39 The description of the meridional lyne, of longitudes and latitudes of cteees and townes, as wel as of climates

This lyne meridional is but a maner descripcioun, or lyne ymaged, that passith upon the poles of this world and by the cenyth of oure heved And it is cleped the lyne meridional, for in what place that eny man ys at any tyme of the yer, whan that the sonne, by mevyng of the firmament, cometh to his verrey meridian place, than is it verrey mydday, that we clepen oure non, as to thilke man And therefore is it clepid the lyne of mydday And nota that evermore of eny 2 cytes or 2 townes, of which that oo town approachith more toward the est than doth that othr town, truste wel that thilke townes han diverse meridians Nota also that the arch of the equinoxial that is contened or bownded bitwixe the 2 meridians is clepid the longitude of the toun And yf so be that two townes 20 have ilike meridian or oon meridian, than is the distaunce of hem both ilike fer fro the est, and the contrarie, and in this manere thei change not her meridian But sotlyly thei chaungen her almykanteras, for the enhaunsyng of the pool and the distance of the sonne

The longitude of a climat is a lyne ymaged fro est to west ilike distant fro the equinoxial And the latitude 30 of a climat may be cleped the space of the erthe fro the begynnyng of the first climat unto the verrey ende of the same clymat evene direct ageyns the pool artyke Thus sayn somme auctours, and somme of hem sayn that yf men clepe the latitude of a cuntrey the arch meridian that is contened or intercept bitwix the cenyth and the equinoxial, than say they that the distance fro the equinoxial unto the 40 ende of a climat evene ageynst the pool artik is the latitude of a clymat forsoothe

40 To knowe with which degre of the zodiak that eny planete ascendith on the orrisonste, whether so that his latitude be north or south

Know by thin almenak the degre of the ecliptik of eny signe in which that the planete is rekned for to be, and that is clepid the degre of his longitude And know also the degre of his latitude fro the ecliptik north or south And by these ensamples folewyng in special maist thou worche forsothe in every signe of the zodiak —

The degre of the longitude per- 10 aventure of Venus or of another planete was 6 of Capricorne, and the latitude of hir was northward 2 degrees fro the ecliptik lyne Than tok I a subtil compas, and clepid that oo point of my compas A,
and that other point F Than tok I the point of A and sette it in the ecliptik lyne in my zodiak in the degre of the longitude of Venus, that is to seyn, in the 6 degre of Capricorne, and than sette 20
I the point of F upward in the same signe by cause that latitude was north upon the latitude of Venus, that is to seyn, in the 6 degre fro the heved of Capricorne; and thus have I 2 degrees bitwixe my two prickes Than leide I down sotlyly my compas, and sette the degre of the longitude upon the orisonste, tho tok I and waxed my label in manere of a peire tables to receyve distinctly the 30 prickes of my compas Tho tok I thys forseide label, and leyde it fix over the degre of my longitude, tho tok I up my compas and sette the point of A in the wax on my label, as evene as I koude gesse, over the ecliptik lyne in the ende of the longitude, and sette the point of F endelong in my label upon the space of the latitude, inward and over the zodiak, that is to seyn northward fro the ecliptik 40 Than leide I doun my compas, and loked wel in the wey upon the prickes of A and of F, tho turned I my ryet til that the pricke of F satt upon the orisonste, than saw I wel that the body of Venus in hir latitude of 2 degrees septemtrionals ascendd, in the ende of the 6 degre, in the heved of Capricorne

And nota that in this manere maist thou worche with any latitude septentrional in alle signes But sothly the latitude meridional of a planete in Capricorne ne may not be take by cause of the litel space bitwixe the ecliptyk and the bordure of the Astrelabie, but sothely in all othre signes it may

2 pars hujus conclusio

Also the degre peraventure of Jupiter, or of another planete, was in the first degre of Piscis in longitude, and his latitude was 2 degres meridional, tho tok I the point of A and sette it in the first degre of Piscis on the ecliptik, and than sette I the point of F downward in the same signe by cause that the latitude was south 2 degres, that is to seyn, fro the heved of Piscis, and thus have 2 degres bitwexe bothe prikkes Than sette I the degre of the longitude upon the orisonte, tho tok I my label, and leide it fix upon the degre of the longitude, tho sette I the point of A on my label evene over the ecliptik lyne in the ende of the degre of the longitude, and sette the point of F endlong in my label the space of 2 degres of the latitude outward fro the zodiak (this is to seyn southward fro the ecliptik toward the bordure), and turned my net til that the pricke of F saat upon the orisonte Than say I wel that the body of Jupiter in his latitude of 2 degres meridional ascendid with 8 degres of Piscis in horoscopo And in this manere maist thou worche with any latitude meridional, as I first seide, save in Capricorne And yf thou wilt pleye this craft with the arisyng of the mone, loke thou rekne wel hir cours houre by houre, for she ne dwellith not in a degre of hir longitude but litel while, as thow wel knowist But natheles yf thou rekne hir verrey moevyng by thy tables houre after houre, [thou shalt do wel ynow]

SUPPLEMENTARY PROPOSITIONS

41 Umbra Recta

Yf it so be that thou wilt werke by umbra recta, and thou may come to the bas of the tour, in this maner thou shalt werke Tak the altitude of the tour by bothe holes, so that thy rewle ligge even in a poynt Ensample as thus I see him thorw at the poynt of 4, than mete I the space between me and the tour, and I finde it 20 feet, than beholde I how 4 is to 12, right so is the space betwixe thee and the tour to the altitude of the tour For 4 is the thridde part of 12, so is the space between thee and the tour the thridde part of the altitude of the tour, than thryes 20 feet is the heyghte of the tour, with adding of thyn owne persone to thyn eye And thus rewle is so general in umbra recta, fro the poynt of oon to 12 And yf thy rewle falle upon 5, than is 5 12-partyes of the heygthe the space between thee and the tour, with adding or thyn owne heyghte

42 Umbra Versa

Another maner of werkinge, by umbra versa Yf so be that thou may nat come to the bas of the tour, I see him thorw the nombre of 1, I sette ther a prikke at my fot, than go I neer to the tour, and I see him thorw at the poynt of 2, and there I sette another prikke, and I beholde how I hath him to 12, and ther finde I that it hath him twelfe sythes, than beholde I how 2 hath him to 12, and thou shalt finde it 10 sexe sythes, than thou shalt finde that as 12 above 6 is the nombre of 6, right so is the space between thy two prikkes the space of 6 tymes thyn altitude And note, that at the ferste altitude of 1, thou settest a prikke, and afterward, whan thou seest him at 2, ther thou settest another prikke, than thou findest between two prikkys 60 feet, than thou shalt finde that 10 is the 6-party of 60 And then 20 is 10 feet the altitude of the tour For other poyntis, yf it fille in umbra versa, as

thus I sette caas it fill upon 2, and at the secunde upon 3, than schalt thou finde that 2 is 6 partyes of 12, and 3 is 4 partyes of 12, than passeth 6 4, by nombre of 2, so is the space between two prikkes twyes the heyghte of the tour And yf the differens were thryes, than shulde it be three tymes, and thus mayst thou werke 30 fro 2 to 12, and yif it be 4, 4 tymes, or 5, 5 tymes, et sic de ceteris

43 Umbra Recta

Another maner of wyrling, by umbra recta Yif it so be that thou mayst nat come to the baas of the tour, in this maner thou schalt werke Set thy rewle upon 1 till thou see the altitude, and set at thy foot a prikke Than set thy rewle upon 2, and behold what is the difference between 1 and 2, and thou shalt finde that it is 1 Than mete the space between two prikkes, and that is the 12 partie of 10 the altitude of the tour And yif ther were 2, it were the 6 partye, and yif ther were 3, the 4 partye, et sic deinceps And note, yif it were 5, it were the 5 party of 12, and 7, 7 party of 12, and note, at the altitude of thy conclusioun, adde the stature of thyn heyghte to thyn eye

* * * * *

44 Another maner conclusion, to knowe the mene mote and the argumentis of any planete To knowe the mene mote and the argumentis of every planete fro yere to yere, from day to day, from houre to houre, and from smale fraccionis infinite

In this maner shalt thou worche, consider thy rote first, the whiche is made the beginning of the tables for the yer of oure Lord 1397, and enter hit into thy slate for the laste merdie of December, and than consider the yer of oure Lord, what is the date, and behold whether thy date be more or lasse than the yer 1397 And yf hit so be that hit be more, loke how many yeres hit passeth, and with so 10 many enter into thy tables in the first lyne theras is written anni collecti et expansi And loke where the same planet is written in the hed of thy table, and than loke what thou findest in direct of the same yer of oure Lord which is passid, be hit 8, or 9, or 10, or what nombre that evere it be, til the tyme that thou come to 20, or 40, or 60 And that thou findest in direct wryt in thy slate under thy rote, and adde hit 20 together, and that is thy mene mote, for the laste meridian of the December, for the same yer which that thou hast purposed And if hit so be that hit passe 20, consider wel that fro 1 to 20 ben anni expansi, and fro 20 to 3000 ben anni collecti, and if thy nombre passe 20, than tak that thou findest in direct of 20, and if hit be more, as 6 or 18, than tak that thou findest in direct thereof, that is to 30 sayen, signes, degrees, minutes, and secondes, and adde togedere unto thy rote, and thus to make rotes And note, that if hit so be that the yer of oure Lord be lasse than the rote, which is the yer of oure Lord 1397, than shalt thou wryte in the same wyse furst thy rote in thy slate, and after enter into thy table in the same yer that be lasse, as I taught before, and than consider how many signes, de- 4 grees, minutes, and secondes thyn entringe conteyneth And so be that ther be 2 entrees, than adde hem togeder, and after withdraw hem from the rote, the yer of oure Lord 1397, and the residue that leveh is thy mene mote for the laste merdie of December, the whiche thou hast purposed, and if hit so be that thou wolt weten thy mene mote for any day, or for any fraccioun of day, in this maner 50 thou shalt worche Make thy rote fro the laste day of December in the maner as I have taught, and afterward behold how many monethes, dayes, and houres ben passid from the merdie of December, and with that enter with the laste moneth that is ful passed, and take that thou findest in direct of him, and wryt hit in thy slate, and enter with as mony dayes as be more, and wryt that thou 60 findest in direct of the same planete that thou worchest for, and in the same wyse in the table of houres, for houres that ben passed, and adde alle these to thy rote, and the residue is the mene mote for the same day and the same houre

45 Another manere to knowe the mene mote

Whan thou wolt make the mene mote of any planete to be by Arsechieles tables, tak thy rote, the whiche is for the yer of oure Lord 1397, and if so be that thy yer be passid the date, wryt that date, and than wryt the number of the yeres Than withdraw the yeres out of the yeres that ben passed that rote Ensampul as thus the yer of oure Lord 1400, I wolde witen, precise, my rote, than wroot I 10 furst 1400 And under that number I wrot a 1397, than withdraw I the laste number out of that, and than fond I the residue was 3 yer, I wiste that 3 yer was passed for the rote, the whiche was written in my tables Than afterward soghte I in my tables the annus collectus et expansus, and among myn expanse yeres fond I 3 yeer Than tok I alle the signes, degrees, and minutes, that I fond direct 20 under the same planete that I wroghte for, and wroot so many signes, degrees, and minutes in my slate, and afterward added I to signes, degrees, minutes, and secondes, the whiche I fond in my rote the yer of oure Lord 1397, and kepte the residue, and than had I the mene mote for the laste day of December And if thou woldest wete the mene mote of any planete in March, April, or May, other in any other 30 tyme or moneth of the yer, loke how many monethes and dayes ben passed from the laste day of December, the yer of oure Lord 1400, and so with monethes and dayes enter into thy table ther thou findest thy mene mote ywriten in monethes and dayes, and tak alle the signes, degrees, minutes, and secondes that thou findest ywrite in direct of thy monethes, and adde to signes, degrees, minutes, and 40 secondes that thou findest with thy rote the yer of oure Lord 1400, and the residue that leveth is the mene mote for that same day And note, if hit so be that thou woldest wete the mene mote in any yer that is lasse than thy rote, withdraw the number of so many yeres as hit is lasse than the yer of oure Lord a 1397, and keep the residue, and so many yeres, monethes, and dayes enter into thy 50 tabels of thy mene mote And tak alle the signes, degrees, and minutes, and secondes, that thou findest in direct of alle the yeres, monethes, and dayes, and wryt hem in thy slate, and above thilke number wryt the signes, degrees, minutes, and secondes, the whiche thou findest with thy rote the yer of oure Lord a 1397, and withdraw alle the nethere signes and degrees fro the signes and de- 60 grees, minutes, and secondes of other signes with thy rote, and thy residue that leveth is thy mene mote for that day

46 For to knowe at what houre of the day, or of the night, shal be fiod or ebbe

First wite thou certainly, how that haven stondesth, that thou list to werke for, that is to say in which place of the firmament the mone being, maketh full see Than awayte thou redily in what degree of the zodiak that the mone at that tyme is inne Bring furth than the label, and set the point therof in that same cost that the mone maketh fiod, and set thou there the degree of the mone according with 10 the edge of the label Than afterward awayte where is than the degree of the sonne, at that tyme Remeve thou than the label fro the mone, and bring and set it justly upon the degree of the sonne And the point of the label shal than declare to thee, at what houre of the day or of the night shal be fiod And there also maist thou wite by the same point of the label, whether it be, at that same tyme, 20 fiod or ebbe, or half fiod, or quarter fiod, or ebbe, or half or quarter ebbe, or ellis at what houre it was last, or shal be next by night or by day, thou than shalt esely knowe, &c Furthermore, if it so be that thou hadde to werke for this matere aboute the tyme of the conjunccioun, bring furth the degree of the mone with the label to that coste as it is before seyd But than thou shalt under- 30 stonde that thou may not bringe furth the label fro the degree of the mone as thou dide before, for-why the sonne is than in the same degree with the mone And so thou may at that tyme by the point of the label unremeved knowe the houre of the flod or of the ebbe, as it is before seyde, &c And evermore as thou findest the mone passe fro the sonne, so remeve thou the label than fro the degree of the 40 mone, and bring it to the degree of the sonne And work thou than as thou dide before, &c Or elles know thou what houre it is that thou art inne, by thyn instrument Than bring thou furth fro thennes the label and ley it upon the degree of the mone, and therby may thou wite also whan it was flod, or whan it wol be next, be it night or day, &c

THE ROMAUNT OF THE ROSE

THE older editions of Chaucer included many works now held to be of other or doubtful authorship. Of the more important pieces which make up this body of Chaucerian apocrypha the Romaunt of the Rose alone continues to be printed with the acknowledged writings of the poet, and for excellent reasons. We have Chaucer's own testimony in the Legend of Good Women that he made a translation of the French poem. Although the greater part of the English version can hardly be by him, there is nothing in the style or dialect of another portion to make his authorship impossible, and the whole work, if not Chaucer's, is conspicuously Chaucerian. The original Roman, moreover, of which about one third is represented in the English translation, probably exerted on Chaucer a more lasting and more important influence than any other work in the vernacular literature of either France or England.

This last fact is not surprising in view of the position which the Roman de la Rose held in French literature for some two hundred years. It was begun, probably about 1237, by Guillaume de Lorris, and the part that he wrote (ending at l. 4432 of the English translation) set the fashion for numberless allegorical love-visions. Guillaume was a young poet and wrote in honor, or, as he would have said in the "service," of a lady. Whatever the facts of his personal experiences, in his writing he adhered to the conventions of courtly love. He relates how, in his twentieth year, he had a vision of a beautiful garden, where the God of Love and all his train were making merry. Among the flowers he was shown a Rosebud (the symbol of his lady), and wounded by Cupid's arrows he was overcome by the desire to possess it. His suit was opposed by Chastity, Danger, Shame, and Wicked Tongue, and helped by Franchise, Pity, and Belacueil (Fair-Welcoming). Once, through the interposition of Venus herself, Belacueil allowed him to kiss the Bud. But Belacueil was punished by imprisonment, and the lover banished from the garden.

In this situation, before the lover gains his object, Guillaume's fragment comes to an end. His work was cut short, probably by death, when he had brought the slender plot of his poem almost to its termination. Forty years later the Roman was continued by a different poet in a totally different spirit. Jean de Meun, apparently in mature age, a scholar, philosopher, and moralist — the translator of Vegetius, Boethius, Giraldu Cambrensis, and Ailred of Rievaulx — delayed the conclusion of the story till he had added about eighteen thousand lines, and made Guillaume's simple framework the vehicle of an elaborate treatise on the life and thought of the age. Science, theology, social philosophy, satire all find their place in his voluminous, but entertaining discourse. Love still remains the central subject. But it is no longer discussed in the courtly spirit of Guillaume. It is rather analyzed rationalistically as a feeling implanted by Nature to ensure the propagation of the race. And woman, idealized by Guillaume as an object of worship, becomes, along with friars, knights, lawyers, and doctors, the subject of Jean de Meun's most biting satire. The story, to be sure, is brought to a happy termination. The lover finally gains possession of the Rosebud. But the interest of Jean de Meun, like that of his readers, lay less in finishing the tale than in expounding the philosophy which has gained him the name, not without appropriateness, of "the Voltaire of the thirteenth century."

The later reputation and influence of the Roman was chiefly determined by Jean de Meun's continuation. His free-thinking criticism precipitated a long controversy known to historians of French literature as the "querelle du Roman de la Rose." In particular his attacks upon women were taken up in a debate between feminists and anti-feminists which was at its height in the time of Christine de Pisan, at the end of the fourteenth century So to Chaucer and his contemporaries the Roman was a book of heresy against the God of Love, and Chaucer's translation of it, according to the delightful fiction of the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women, was one of the sins for which he had to do penance by composing a book of the lives of Cupid's saints

The English Romaunt, strangely enough, contains very little to justify this accusation against Chaucer The second fragment alone (ll 1705-5810), which includes Jean de Meun's discussion of the nature of love, might conceivably fall under the reprehension of Cupid Fragment A (ll 1-1704) stops in the middle of Guillaume de Lorris's portion of the Roman, and fragment C, which is mainly concerned with the sin of Hypocrisy, as represented in the figure of False-Semblant, has very little bearing on women and the affairs of love Jean de Meun's really abusive satire on women and his cynical exposition of the art of love, on which Chaucer drew freely in the Wife of Bath's Prologue, are now here included in the translation And of the three fragments only the first and most inoffensive can with any probability be ascribed to Chaucer Fragment C, though accepted as authentic by some scholars, departs considerably from his usage, and fragment B seems to have been the work of a follower and imitator of Chaucer who wrote under the influence of the Northern dialect

THE ROMAUNT OF THE ROSE

Fragment A

Many men sayn that in sweveninges
 Ther nys but fables and lesynges,
 But men may some swevenes sen
 Whiche hardely that false ne ben,
 But afterward ben apparaunt
 This may I drawe to warraunt
 An outhour that hight Macrobes,
 That halt nat dremes false ne lees,
 But undoth us the avysioun
 That whilom mette kyng Ciprioun
 And whoso saith or weneth it be A jape, or elles nycete,
 To wene that dremes after falle,
 Let whoso lyste a fol me calle
 For this trowe I, and say for me,
 That dremes signifaunce be
 Of good and harm to many wightes,
 That dremen in her slep a-nyghtes
 Ful many thynges covertly,
 That fallen after al openly
 Within my twenty yer of age,
 Whan that Love taketh his cariage
 Of yonge folk, I wente soone
 To bedde, as I was wont to done,
 And faste I slepte, and in slepyng
 Me mette such a swevenyng
 That lyked me wonders wel
 But in that sweven is never a del

That it nys afterward befallē,
 Ryght as this drem wol tel us alle
 Now this drem wol I ryyme aright
 To make your hertes gaye and lyght, For Love it prayeth, and also Commaundeth me that it be so
 And if there any aske me, Whether that it be he or she,
 How this book, [the] which is here
 Shal hatte, that I rede you here,
 It is the Romance of the Rose,
 In which al the art of love I close
 The mater fayre is of to make,
 God graunt me in gree that she it take
 For whom that it begonnen is!
 And that is she that hath, ywis,
 So mochel pris, and therto she
 So worthy is biloved to be,
 That she wel ought, of pris and ryght,
 Be cleped Rose of every wight
 That it was May me thoughte tho —
 It is fyve yer or more ago —
 That it was May, thus dremed me,
 In tyme of love and jolite,
 That al thing gynneth waxen gay,
 For ther is neither busk nor hay
 In May, that it nyl shrouded ben,
 And it with newe leves wren
 These wodes eek reoveren grene,
 That drie in wynter ben to sene,

And the erthe wexith proud withalle,		That I herd renne faste by,
For swote dewes that on it falle,	60	For fairer playng non saugh I
And the pore estat forget		Than playen me by that ryver
In which that wynter had it set		For from an hill that stood ther ner,
And than bycometh the ground so proud		Cam down the strem ful stif and bold	115
That it wole have a newe shroud,		Cleer was the water, and as cold
And makith so queynt his robe and faire		As any welle is, soth to seyne,
That it hath hewen an hundred payre	66	And somdel lasse it was than Seyne,
Of gras and flours, ynde and pers,		But it was straghter wel away
And many hewes ful dyvers		And never saugh I, er that day,	120
That is the robe I mene, iwis,		The watr that so wel lyked me,
Through which the ground to preisen is	70	And wondir glad was I to se
The byrdes that han left her song,		That lusty place and that ryver
While thei suffride cold so strong,		And with that watr, that ran so cler,
In wedres gryl and derk to sighte,		My face I wyssh Tho saugh I well	127
Ben in May, for the sonne brighte,		The botme paved everydell
So glade that they shewe m syngyng	75	With gravel, ful of stones shene
That in her hertis is sich lykynge		The medewe softe, swote and grene,
That they mote syngen and be light		Beet right on the watr syde
Than doth the nyghtyngale hir myght		Ful cler was than the morowtyde,	130
To make noyse and syngen blythe		And ful attempre, out of drede
Than is blisful many sithe	80	Tho gan I walke thorough the mede,
The chelaundre and papyngay		Downward ay in my pleiyng,
Than yonge folk emenden ay		The ryver syde costeyng
Forto ben gay and amorous,		And whan I had a while goon,	135
The tyme is than so saverous		I saugh a gardyn right anoon,
Hard is the hert that loveth nought	85	Ful long and brood, and everydell
In May, whan al this mirth is wrought,		Enclosed was, and walled well
Whan he may on these braunches here		With highe walles enbatailled,
The smale briddes syngen clere		Portraied without and wel entailed	140
Her blisful swete song pitous		With many riche portraitures
And in this sesoun delytous,	90	And bothe the ymages and peyntures
Whan love affraeth alle thing,		Gan I biholde bysyly,
Me thought a-nyght, in my sleping,		And I wole telle you redyly
Right in my bed, ful redily,		Of thilk ymages the semblaunce,	145
That it was by the morowe erly,		As fer as I have in remembraunce
And up I roos, and gan me clothe	95	Amydde saugh I Hate stonde,
Anoon I wissch myn hondis bothe,		That for hir wrathe, yre, and onde,
A sylvre nedle forth y drough		Semed to ben a moveresse,
Out of an aguler queynt ynough,		An angry wight, a chideresse,	150
And gan this nedle threde anon,		And ful of gyle and fel corage,
For out of toun me list to gon	100	By semblaunt, was that ilk ymage
The song of briddes forto here,		And she was nothyng wel arraied,
That in these buskes syngen clere		But lyk a wod womman afraied
And in the swete seson that leef is,		Yfrounced foule was hir visage,	155
With a thred bastyng my slevis,		And grennyng for dispitous rage,
Alone I wente in my playng,	105	Hir nose snorted up for tene
The smale foules song harknyng,		Ful hidous was she for to sene,
That peyned hem, ful many peyre,		Ful foul and rusty was she, this
To syng on bowes blosmed feyre		Hir heed ywrithen was, ywis,	160
Jolif and gay, ful of gladnesse,		Ful grymly with a greet towayle
Toward a ryver gan I me dresse,	110	An ymage of another entayle

A lyft half was hir faste by		She was lyk thyng for hungre deed,	21b
Hir name above hir heed saugh I,		That ladde hir lyf only by breed
And she was called Felonye	165	Kneden with eisel strong and egre,
Another ymage, that Vilanye		And therto she was lene and megre
Yclepid was, saugh I and fond		And she was clad ful porely
Upon the wal on hir right hond		Al in an old torn courtepy	22c
Vilany was lyk somdell		As she were al with doggis torn,
That other ymage, and, trustith wel,	170	And bothe bihynde and eke biforn
She semede a wikked creature		Clouted was she beggarly
By countenance, in portrayture,		A mantyl heng hir faste by,
She semed be ful dispitous,		Upon a perche, weak and small,	225
And eek ful proud and outrageous		A burnet cote heng therwithall
Wel coude he peynte, I undirtake,	175	Furred with no menyver
That sich ymage coude make,		But with a furre rough of her,
Ful foul and cherlyssh semed she,		Of lambe-skyennes hevny and blake,
And eek vylayneus for to be,		It was ful old, I undirtake	230
And litel coude of norture,		For Avarice to clothe hir well
To worshupe any creature	180	Ne hastith hir never a dell,
And next was peynted Covertise,		For certeynly it were hir loth
That eggith folk, in many gise,		To weren ofte that ilke cloth,
To take and yeve right nought ageyn,		And if it were forwered, she	235
And gret tresouris up to leyn		Wolde have ful gret necessite
And that is she that for usure	185	Of clothyng, er she bought hir newe,
Leneth to many a creature		Al were it bad of woll and hewe
The lasse for the more wynnynng,		This Avarice huld in hir hand
So covertous is her brennyng		A purs that heng [doun] by a band	240
And that is she, for penyes fele,		And that she hidde and bond so stronge,
That techith for to robbe and stele	190	Men must abyde wondir longe
These theves and these smale harlotes,		Out of that purs er the come ought
And that is routh, for by her throtes		For that ne cometh not in hir thought,
Ful many oon hangith at the laste		It was not, certem, hir entente	245
She makith folk compasse and caste		That fro that purs a peny wente
To taken other folkus thyng	195	And by that ymage, nygh ynough,
Thorough robberie or myscounting		Was peynted Envye, that never lough,
And that is she that makith trechoures,		Nor never wel in hir herte ferde,
And she makith false pleadoures,		But if she outhur saugh or herde	250
That with hir termes and hir domes		Som gret myschaunce or gret disese
Doon maydens, children, and eek gromes		Nothyng may so moch hir please
Her heritage to forgo	201	As myschef and mysaventure,
Ful croked were hir hondis two,		Or whan she seeth discomfiture
For covertise is evere wod		Upon any worthy man falle,	255
To gripen other folkis god		Than likith hir wel withalle
Covertise, for hir wynnynng,	205	She is ful glad in hir corage,
Ful leef hath other mennes thing		If she se any gret lynage
Another ymage set saugh I		Be brought to nought in shamful wise
Next Covertise faste by,		And if a man in honour rise,	260
And she was clepid Avarice		Or by his wit or by his prowesse,
Ful foul in peynting was that vice,	210	Of that hath she gret hevynesse
Ful fade and caytif was she eek,		For, trustith wel, she goth nygh wod
And also grene as ony leek		Whan any chaunce happith god
So yvel hewed was hir colour,		Envie is of such crueltee	265
Hir semed to have lyved in langour		That feith ne trouthe holdith she

To freend ne felawe, bad or good		So depe was hir wo bigonnen,
Ne she hath kyn noon of hir blood,		And eek hir hert in angre ronnen	320
That she nys ful her enemy,		A sorowful thyng wel semed she,
She nolde, I dar seyn hardely,	270	Nor she hadde nothyng slowe be
Hir owne fadir ferde wel		For to forcracchen al hir face,
And sore abieth she everydell		And for to rent in many place
Hir malice and hir malalent,		Hir clothis, and for to tere hir swire,	325
For she is in so gret turment,		As she that was fulfilled of ire,
And hath such [wo,] whan folk doth good,		And al totorn lay eek hir her
That nygh she meltith for pure wood	276	Aboute hir shuldris here and ther,
Hir herte kervyth and so brekith,		As she that hadde it al torent
That God the puple wel awrekith		For angre and for malalent	330
Envie, iwys, shal nevere lette		And eek I telle you certeynly
Som blame upon the folk to sette	280	How that she wep ful tendurly
I trowe that if Envie, iwys,		In world nys wight so hard of herte
Knewe the beste man that is		That hadde sen her sorowes smerte,
On this side or byonde the see,		That nolde have had of her pyte,	335
Yit somewhat lakken hym wolde she,		So wo-begon a thyng was she
And if he were so hende and wis	285	She al todassht herself for woo,
That she ne myght al abate his pris,		And smot togyder her hondes two
Yit wolde she blame his worthynesse,		To sorowe was she ful ententyf,
Or by hir wordis make it lesse		That woful recheles caytyf,	340
I saugh Envie, in that peynting,		Her roughte lytel of playing,
Hadde a wonderful lokyng,	290	Or of clypping or kysying,
For she ne lokide but awry		For whoso sorouful is in herte,
Or overthwart, all baggyngly		Him luste not to play ne sterte,
And she hadde a foul usage,		Ne for to dauncen, ne to synge,	345
She myght loke in no visage		Ne may his herte in temper bringe
Of man or womman forth-right pleyn,	295	To make joye on even or morowe,
But shette hir oon eie for disdeyn,		For joy is contrarie unto sorowe
So for envie brenned she		Elde was paynted after this,
Whan she myght any man se		That shorter was a foot, iwys,	350
That fair or worthi were, or wis,		Than she was wont in her yonghede
Or elles stod in folkis prys	300	Unneth herself she mighte fede, Sorowe was peynted next Envie		So feble and eke so old was she
Upon that wall of masonrye		That faded was al her beaute
But wel was seyn in hir colour		Ful salowe was waxen her colour,	355
That she hadde lyved in langour,		Her heed, for hor, was whyt as flour
Hir semede to have the jaunyce	305	Iwys, great qualm ne were it non,
Nought half so pale was Avarice,		Ne synne, although her lyf were gon
Nor nothyng lyk of lenesse,		Al woxen was her body unwelde,
For sorowe, thought, and gret distresse		And drie and dwyned al for elde	360
That she hadde suffred day and nyght,		A foul, forwelked thyng was she,
Made hir ful yelow, and nothyng bright,		That whylom round and softe had be
Ful fade, pale, and megre also	311	Her eeres shoken faste withalle,
Was never wight yit half so wo		As from her heed they wolde falle,
As that hir semede for to be,		Her face frounced and forpynd,	365
Nor so fulfilled of ire as she	314	And bothe her hondes lorne, fordwyned
I trowe that no wight myght hir please		So old she was that she ne wente
Nor do that thyng that myght hir ease,		A foot, but it were by potente
Nor she ne wolde hir sorowe slake,		The tyme, that passeth nyght and day,
Nor comfort noon unto hir take,		And resteles travayleth ay,	370

And steleth from us so prively		That she ne thenkith in hir corage
That to us semeth sykerly		Ful lyk to hir was that ymage,
That it in oon poynt dwelleth ever,		That makid was lyk hir semblaunce	425
And certes, it ne resteth never,		She was ful symple of countenance,
But goth so faste, and passeth ay,	375	And she was clothed and eke shod,
That ther nys man that thynke may		As she were, for the love of God,
What tyme that now present is		Yolden to relygioun,
(Asketh at these clerkes this),		Sich semede hir devocioun	430
For [er] men thynke it, redily		A sauter held she fast in honde,
Thre tymes ben passed by —	380	And bisily she gan to fonde
The tyme, that may not sojourne,		To make many a feynt praere
But goth, and may never retourne,		To God, and to his seyntis dere
As watir that doun renneth ay,		Ne she was gay, fresh, ne jolyf,	435
But never drope retourne may,		But semede to be ful ententyf
Ther may nothing as tyme endure,	385	To gode werkis and to faire,
Metall, nor erthely creature,		And therto she had on an haire
For alle thing it fret and shall,		Ne, certis, she was fatt nothing,
The tyme eke, that chaungith all,		But semed very for fasting,	440
And all doth waxe and fostred be,		Of colour pale and deed was she
And alle thing distroieth he,	390	From hir the gate ay werned be
The tyme, that eldith our uncessours,		Of paradys, that blisful place,
And eldith kynges and emperours,		For sich folk maketh lene her face,
And that us alle shal overcomen,		As Crist seith in his evangile,	445
Er that deth us shal have nomen,		To gete hem prys in toun a while,
The tyme, that hath al in welde	395	And for a litel glorie veine,
To elden folk, had maad hir elde		They lesen God and eke his reigne
So only that, to my witing,		And alderlast of everychon
She myghte helpe hirsif nothing,		Was peynted Pover al aloon,	450
But turned ageyn unto childhede		That not a peny hadde in wolde,
She had nothing hirsif to lede,	400	All though she hir clothis solde,
Ne wit ne pithe in hir hold,		And though she shulde anhonged be,
More than a child of two yeer old		For nakid as a worm was she
But natheles, I trowe that she		And if the wedr stormy were,	455
Was fair sumtyme, and fresh to se,		For cold she shulde have deyed there
Whan she was in hir rightful age,	405	She nadde on but a streit old sak,
But she was past al that passage,		And many a clout on it ther stak,
And was a doted thing bicomen		This was hir cote and hir mantell,
A furred cope on had she nomen,		No more was there, never a dell,	460
Wel had she clad hirsif and warm,		To clothe hir with, I undirtake,
For cold myght elles don hir harm	410	Gret leysyer hadde she to quake
These olde folk have alwey cold,		And she was putt, that I of talke,
Her kynde is sich, when they ben old		Fer fro these other, up in an halke
Another thing was don there write,		There lurked and there coured she,	465
That semede lyk an ipocrite,		For pover thing, whereso it be,
And it was clepid Poope-Holy	415	Is shamefast and dispised ay
That ilk is she that pryvely		Acursed may wel be that day
Ne spareth never a wikked dede,		That povere man conceyved is,
Whan men of hir taken noon hede,		For, God wot, al to selde, iwys,	470
And maketh hir outward precious,		Is ony povere man wel yfed,
With pale visage and pitous,	420	Or wel araied or wel cled,
And semeth a simple creature,		Or wel biloved, in sich wise
But ther nys no mysaventure		In honour that he may arise.

Alle these thingis, well avised,	475	The closing of the square wall,
As I have you er thus devysed,		Tyl that I fond a wiket small
With gold and asure over all,		So shett, that I ne myght in gon,
Depeynted were upon the wall		And other entre was ther noon	530
Square was the wall, and high sumdell,		Upon this dore I gan to smyte,
Enclosed and ybarred well,	480	That was fetys and so lite,
In stede of hegge, was that gardyn,		For other wey coude I not seke
Com nevere shepherde theryn		Ful long I shof, and knokkide eke,
Into that gardyn, wel [y]wrought,		And stood ful long and oft herknyng,	535
Whoso that me coude have brought,		If that I herde ony wight comyng,
By laddre, or elles by degre,	485	Til that the dore of thilk entre
It wolde wel have liked me		A mayden curteys openyde me
For sich solas, sich joie, and play,		Hir heer was as yelowe of hewe
I trowe that nevere man ne say,		As ony basyn scoured newe,	540
As was in that place delytous		Hir flesh [as] tendre as is a chuke,
The gardeyn was not dangerous	490	With bente browis smothe and slyke,
To heberwe briddes many oon		And by mesure large were
So riche a yerd was never noon		The openyng of hir yen clere,
Of briddes song, and braunches grene,		Hir nose of good proporcioun,	545
Therynne were briddes mo, I wene,		Hir yen grey as is a faucoun,
Than ben in all the rewme of Fraunce	495	With swete breth and wel savoured,
Ful blisful was the accordaunce		Hir face wht and wel coloured,
Of swete and pitous song thei made,		With litel mouth and round to see,
For all this world it owghte glade		A clove chynne eke hadde she	550
And I myself so mery ferde,		Hir nekke was of good fasoun
Whan I her blisful songes herde,	500	In lengthe and gretnesse, by resoun,
That for an hundred pound nolde I,		Withoute bleyne, scabbe, or royne,
If that the passage openly		Fro Jerusalem unto Burgoyne
Hadde be unto me free,		Ther nys a fairer nekke, iwys,	555
That I nolde entren for to se		To fele how smothe and softe it is,
Th'assemble — God kepe it fro care! —	505	Hir throte, also wht of hewe
Of briddis, whiche therynne ware,		As snowe on braunche snowed newe
That songen thorough her mery throtes		Of body ful wel wrought was she,
Daunces of love and mery notes		Men neded not in no cuntre	560
Whan I thus herde foules synge,		A fairer body for to seke
I fel fast in a weymentyng,	510	And of fyn orfrays hadde she eke
By which art, or by what engyn,		A chapelet, so semly con
I myght come into that gardyn,		Ne werede never mayde upon
But way I couthe fynde noon		And faire above that chapelet	565
Into that gardyn for to goon		A rose gerland had she sett
Ne nought wist I if that ther were	515	She hadde [in honde] a gay mirroure,
Eyther hole or place [o-] where,		And with a riche gold tressour
By which I myght have entre,		Hir heed was tressed queyntely,
Ne ther was noon to teche me		Hir sleeves sewid fetisly	570
For I was al alone, iwys,		And for to kepe hir hondis faire
Ful wo and angwishus of this,	520	Of gloves white she had a paire
Til atte last bithought I me		And she hadde on a cote of grene
That by no weye ne myght it be		Of cloth of Gaunt, withouten wene,
That ther nas laddre, or wey to passe,		Wel semyde by hir apparayle	575
Or hole, into so faire a place		She was not wont to gret travayle
Tho gan I go a full gret pas	525	For whan she kempt was fetisly,
Envyronyng evene in compas		And wel arayed and richely,

Thanne had she don al hir journe,
 For merye and wel bigoon was she 580
 She ladde a lusty lyf in May
 She hadde no thought, by nyght ne day,
 Of nothyng, but if it were oonly
 To graythe hir wel and uncouthly

Whan that this dore hadde opened me
 This mayde semely for to see, 586
 I thanked hir as I best myghte,
 And axide hir how that she highte,
 And what she was, I axide eke
 And she to me was nought unmeke, 590

Ne of hir answer daungerous,
 But faire answerde, and seide thus
 "Lo, sir, my name is Ydelnesse,
 So clepe men me, more and lesse
 Ful myghty and ful riche am I, 595
 And that of oon thyng namely,
 For I entende to nothyng

But to my joye and my pleyng,
 And for to kembe and tresse me
 Aqueynted am I and pryve 600
 With Myrthe, lord of this gardyn,
 That fro the land Alexandryn
 Made the trees hidre be fet,
 That in this gardyn ben yset 604

And whan the trees were woxen on highte,
 This wall, that stant here in thū sighte, Dide Myrthe enclosen al aboute,
 And these ymages, al withoute,
 He dide hem bothe entale and peynte,
 That nerthir ben jolyf ne queynte, 610

But they ben ful of sorowe and woo,
 As thou hast seen a while agoo
 And ofte tyme, hym to solace,
 Sir Myrthe cometh into this place,
 And eke with hym cometh his meynne,
 That lyven in lust and jolite 616

And now is Myrthe therynne to here
 The briddis, how they syngen clere,
 The mavys and the nyghtyngale,
 And other joly briddis smale 620
 And thus he walketh to solace
 Hym and his folk, for swetter place
 To pleyen ynne he may not fynde,
 Although he sought oon in-tyl Ynde

The alther-fairest folk to see 625
 That in this world may founde be Hath Mirthe with hym in his route,
 That folowen hym always aboute "

Whan Ydelnesse had told al this,
 And I hadde herkned wel, ywys, 630

Thanne seide I to dame Ydelnesse
 "Now, also wisly God me blesse, Sith Myrthe, that is so faire and fre,
 Is in this yerde with his meyne,
 Fro thilk assemble, if I may, 635
 Shal no man werne me to-day,
 That I this nyght ne mote it see For wel wene I there with hym be A fair and joly companye Fulfilled of alle curtesie " 640

And forth, withoute wordis mo,
 In at the wiket went I tho,
 That Ydelnesse hadde opened me,
 Into that gardyn fair to see
 And whan I was inne, iwys, 645
 Myn herte was ful glad of this,
 For wel wende I ful sikerly
 Have ben in paradys erthly
 So fair it was that, trusteth wel,
 It semede a place espirituel 650
 For certys, as at my devys,
 Ther is no place in paradys
 So good inne for to dwelle or be
 As in that gardyn, thoughte me
 For there was many a bridd syngyng, 655
 Thoroughout the yerd al thringyng,
 In many places were nyghtyngales, Alpes, fynches, and wodewales,
 That in her swete song deliten
 In thulke places as they habiten 660

There myghte men see many flokkes
 Of turtles and laverokkes Chalaundres fele sawe I there,
 That wery, nygh forsongen were,
 And thrustles, terns, and mavys, 665
 That songen for to wynne hem prys,
 And eke to sormounte in her song
 That other briddes hem among
 By note made fair servyse
 These briddes, that I you devise, 670
 They songe her song as faire and wel
 As angels don espirituel
 And trusteth wel, whan I hem herde, Ful lustly and wel I ferde,
 For never ytt sich melodye 675
 Was herd of man that myghte dye Sich swete song was hem among That me thought it no briddis song,
 But it was wondir lyk to be
 Song of mermaydens of the see, 680
 That, for her syngyng is so clere,
 Though we mermaydens clepe hem here

In English, as is oure usaunce, Men clepe hem sereyns in Fraunce		There as he was, hym to solace	785
Ententif weren for to synge	685	And with hym in that lusty place
These briddis, that nought unkunnyng		So fair folk and so fresh had he
Were of her craft, and apprentys, But of song sotil and wys		That whan I saw, I wondred me
And certis, whan I herde her song, And saw the grene place among,	690	Fro whennes sicke folk myght come, So fare they weren, alle and some,	740
In herte I wex so wondr gay That I was never erst, er that day, So jolyf, nor so wel bigoo, Ne merye in herte, as I was thoo		For they were lyk, as to my sighte, To angels that ben fethered brighte
And than wist I, and saw ful well,	695	This folk, of which I telle you soo, Upon a karole wenten thoo
That Ydelnesse me served well, That me putte in sich jolite		A lady karoledede hem that hyghte	745
Hir freend wel ought I for to be, Sith she the dore of that gardyn		Gladnesse, [the] blisfull and the lighte, Wel coude she synge and lustyly, —
Hadde opened, and me leten in	700	Noon half so wel and semely, — And make in song sich refreyntyng,
From hennes forth hou that I wroughte, I shal you tellen, as me thoughte		It sat hir wondr wel to synge	750
First, wherof Myrthe served there, And eke what folk there with hym were,		Hir vois ful clere was and ful swete
Withoute fable I wol discryve	705	She was nought rude ne unmete But couthe ynow of sich doying
And of that gardyn eke as blyve I wole you tellen aftir this		As longeth unto karolyng, For she was wont in every place	755
The faire fasoun all, ywys, That wel wrought was for the nones		To syngen first, folk to solace
I may not telle you all at ones, But, as I may and can, I shall	710	For syngyng moost she gaf hir to, No craft had she so leef to do
By ordre tellen you it all Ful fair servise and eke ful swete		Tho myghtist thou karoles sen, And folk daunce and mery ben,	760
These briddis maden as they sete Layes of love, ful wel sownyng,		And made many a fair tournyng
They songen in hir jargonyng, Summe high and summe eke lowe songe		Upon the grene gras springyng
Upon the branches grene yspronge The swetnesse of her melodye		There myghtist thou see these flowtours, Mynstrales, and eke jogelours,
Made al myn herte in reverdye	720	That wel to synge dide her peyne	765
And whan that I hadde herd, I trowe, These briddis syngyng on a rowe, Than myght I not withholde me		Somme songe songes of Loreyne, For in Loreyn her notes bee
That I ne wente inne for to see Sir Myrthe, for my desuryng	725	Full swetter than in this contre There was many a tymbestere,
Was hym to seen, over alle thyng, His countenance and his manere, That sighte was to me ful dere		And sailouris, that I dar wel swere	770
Tho wente I forth on my right hond Doun by a lytel path I fond	730	Couthe her craft ful parflyly The tymbres up ful sotilly
Of mentes full, and fenell grene, And faste by, without wene, Sir Myrthe I fond, and right anoon		They caste and hente full ofte Upon a fynger fair and softe,
Urto Sir Myrthe gan I goon,		That they failde never mo	775
		Ful fetys damyseles two, Ryght yonge, and full of semelyhede,
		In kurtles, and noon other wede, And faire tressed every tresse,
		Hadde Myrthe doon, for his noblesse,	780
		Amydde the karole for to daunce, But herof leith no remembrance, Hou that they daunced queyntely That oon wolde come all pryvvely
		Agayn that other, and whan they were Togidre almost, they threwe yfere	785

Her mouthis so, that thorough her play
 It semed as they kiste alway
 To dauncen well koude they the gise,
 What shulde I more to you devyse? 790
 Ne hede I never thennes go,
 Whiles that I saw hem daunce so
 Upon the karoll wonder faste
 I gan biholde, til atte laste
 A lady gan me for to espie, 795
 And she was cleped Curtesie,
 The worshipfull, the debonaire,
 I pray to God evere falle hir faure!
 Ful curteisly she called me,
 "What do ye there, beau ser?" quod she,
 "Come, and if it lyke yow 801
 To dauncen, daunceth with us now"
 And I, withoute tariyng,
 Wente into the karolyng
 I was abashed never a dell, 805
 But it to me liked right well
 That Curtesie me cleped so,
 And bad me on the daunce go
 For if I hadde durst, certeyn
 I wolde have karoled right fayn, 810
 As man that was to daunce right blithe Thanne gan I loken ofte sithe
 The shap, the bodies, and the cheres,
 The countenance and the maneres
 Of all the folk that daunced there, 815
 And I shal telle what they were Ful fair was Myrthe, ful long and high,
 A fairer man I nevere sigh
 As round as appli was his face,
 Ful rody and whit in every place 820
 Fetys he was and wel beseye,
 With metely mouth and yen greye,
 His nose by mesure wrought ful right,
 Crisp was his heer, and eek ful bright,
 His shuldris of a large brede, 825
 And smalsh in the گردلstede
 He semed lyk a portreture,
 So noble he was of his stature,
 So fair, so joly, and so fetys,
 With lymes wrought at poynt devys, 830
 Delyver, smert and of gret myght,
 Ne sawe thou nevere man so lyght
 Of berd unnethe hadde he nothyng,
 For it was in the firste spryng
 Ful yong he was, and mery of thought,
 And in samet, with briddis wrought, 836
 And with gold beten ful fetysly,
 His body was clad ful richely

Wrought was his robe in straunge gise,
 And al toslytered for queyntise 840
 In many a place, lowe and hie
 And shod he was with gret maistrie,
 With shoon decoped, and with laas
 By druery and by solas,
 His leef a rosyn chapelet 845
 Hadde mad, and on his heed it set
 And wite ye who was his leef?
 Dame Gladnesse there was hym so leef,
 That syngith so wel with glad courage,
 That from she was twelve yeer of age, 850
 She of hir love graunt hym made
 Sir Murthe hir by the fynger hadde Daunsyng, and she hym also,
 Gret love was atwixe hem two Bothe were they faire and bright of hewe,
 She semede lyk a rose newe 856
 Of colour, and hir flesh so tendre,
 That with a brere smale and slendre
 Men myght it cleve, I dar wel seyn Hir forheed frounceles al pleyne, 860
 Bente were hir browis two,
 Hir yen greye, and glad also,
 That laugheden ay in hir semblaunt,
 First or the mouth, by covenannt
 I not what of hir nose descryve, 865
 So fair hath no womman alyve Hir heer was yelowe, and clere shynyng,
 I wot no lady so likyng
 Of orfrays fresh was hir gerland,
 I, which seyen have a thousand, 870
 Saugh never, ywys, no gerlond ytt
 So wel wrought of silk as it
 And in an overgilt samit
 Clad she was, by gret delit,
 Of which hir leef a robe werde, 875
 The myrrier she in hir herte ferde
 And next hir wente, on hir other side,
 The God of Love, that can devyde Love, and as hym likith it be
 But he can cherles daunten, he, 880
 And maken folkis pride fallen,
 And he can wel these lordis thrallen,
 And ladyes putt at lowe degre, Whan he may hem to proude see
 This God of Love of his fasoun 885
 Was lyk no knave, ne quystroun,
 His beaute gretly was to pryse
 But of his robe to devise
 I drede encombred for to be,
 For nought yelad in silk was he, 896

But all in floures and in florettes, Ypaynted al with amorettes, And with losenges, and scochouns, With briddes, lvbardes, and lyouns, And other beestus wrought ful well	895	Nokked and fethered aright, And all they were with gold bygoon, And stronge poynted everychoon, And sharpe for to kerven well	945
His garnement was everydell Yportreied and ywrought with floures, By dyvers medlyng of coloures Floures there were of many gise Ysett by compas in assise	900	But uren was ther noon ne steell, For al was gold, men myght it see, Out-take the fethers and the tree The swiftest of these arowis fyve Out of a bowe for to dryve,	950
Ther lakkeid no flour, to my dom, Ne nought so mych as flour of brom, Ne violete, ne eke pervynke, Ne flour noon that man can on thynke, And many a rose-leef ful long	905	And best fethered for to flee, And fairest eke, was clepid Beaute That other arowe, that hurteth lesse, Was clepid, as I trowe, Symplesse The thridde cleped was Fraunchise,	955
Was entermedled theramong And also on his heed was set Of roses reed a chapelett But nyghtyngales, a full gret route, That flyen over his heed aboute,	910	That fethred was in noble wise With valour and with curtesye The fourthe was cleped Compaignye, That hevvy for to sheten ys But whoso shetith right, ywys,	960
The leeves felden as they flyen, And he was all with briddes wryen, With popynjay, with nyghtyngale, With chalaundre, and with wodewale, With fynch, with lark, and with arch- aungell	915	May therwith doon gret harm and wo The fifte of these, and laste also, Faire-Semblaunt men that arowe calle, The leeste grevous of hem alle Yit can it make a ful gret wounde,	965
He semede as he were an aungell That doun were comen fro hevvene cler Love hadde with hym a bachelor, That he made alweyes with hym be, Swete-Lokyng cleped was he	920	But he may hope his soris sounde, That hurt is with that arowe, ywys, His wo the bet bistowed is For he may sonner have gladnesse, His langour oughte be the lesse	970
This bachelor stod biholdyng The daunce, and in his hond holdyng, Turke bowes two had he That oon of hem was of a tree That bereth a fruyt of savour wykke,	925	Five arowis were of other gise, That ben ful foule to devyse, For shaft and ende, soth for to telle, Were also blak as fend in helle The first of hem is called Pride	975
Ful crokid was that foule stikke, And knotty here and there also, And blak as bery or ony slo That other bowe was of a plante Withoute wem, I dar warante,	930	That other arowe next hym biside, It was cleped Vylanye, That arowe was al with felonye Envenymed, and with spitous blame The thridde of hem was cleped Shame, The fourthe Wanhope cleped is,	981
Ful evene and by proporcioun, Treitys and long, of ful good fasoun, And it was peynted wel and thwyten, And overal diapred and wrien With ladyes and with bachelers,	935	The fifte, the Newe-Thought, ywys These arowis that I speke of heere, Were alle fyve on oon maneere, And alle were they resemblable To hem was wel sittyng and able The foule croked bowe hidous, That knotty was, and al roynous	985
Full lyghtsom and glad of cheris These bowes two held Swete-Lokyng, That semede lyk no gadelyng And ten brode arowis hild he there, Of which fyve in his right hond were	940	But though I telle not as biyve Of her power, ne of her myght,	990
But they were shaven wel and dight,

Hereafter shal I tellen right		For that they wolde hir love deserve
The soothe, and eke signyfiaunce,	995	They cleped hir lady, gret and small,
As fer as I have remembraunce		This wide world hir dredith all,
All shal be seid, I undirtake,		This world is all in hir daunger
Er of this book an ende I make		Hir court hath many a losenger,	1050
Now come I to my tale ageyn		And many a traytour envyous,
But aldirfirst I wol you seyn	1000	That ben ful besy and curyous
The fasoun and the countenaunces		For to dispresen and to blame
Of all the folk that on the daunce is		That best deserven love and name
The God of Love, jolyf and lyght,		Bifore the folk, hem to bigilen,	1055
Ladde on his hond a lady bright,		These losengenis hem preyse, and smylen,
Of high prys and of gret degre	1005	And thus the world with word anoynten,
This lady called was Beaute,		And afterward they prikke and poynten
As an arowe, of which I tolde		The folk right to the bare boon,
Ful wel thewed was she holde,		Bihynde her bak whan they ben goon,
Ne she was derk ne broun, but bright,		And foule abate the folkis prys	1061
And clere as the mone lyght,	1010	Ful many a worthy man and wys
Ageyn whom all the sterres semen		Han hyndrid and ydon to dye
But smale candels, as we demen		These losengers thorough flaterye,
Hir flesh was tendre as dew of flour,		And make folk ful straunge be,	1065
Hir chere was symple as byrde in bour,		There hem oughte be pryve
As whyt as lylve or rose in rys,	1015	Wel yvel mote they thryve and thee,
Hir face gentyl and tretys		And yvel aryved mote they be,
Fetys she was, and smal to se,		These losengers, ful of envye!
No wyndred browis hadde she,		No good man loveth her companye	1070
Ne popped hir, for it neded nought	1019	Richesse a robe of purpur on hadde, —
To wyndre hir, or to peynte hir ought		Ne trowe not that I lye or madde, —
Hir tresses yelowe, and longe straughten,		For in this world is noon it liche,
Unto hir helys doun they raughten,		Ne by a thousand deell so riche,
Hir nose, hir mouth, and eye, and cheke		Ne noon so fair, for it ful well	1075
Wel wrought, and all the remenaunt eke		With orfrays leyd was everydeell,
A ful gret savour and a swote	1025	And portraied in the ribanynges
Me toucheth in myn herte rote,		Of dukes storyes, and of kynges,
As helpe me God, whan I remembre		And with a bend of gold tasseled,
Of the fasoun of every membre		And knoppis fyne of gold ameled	1080
In world is noon so fair a wight,		Aboute hir nekke ef gentyl entayle
For yong she was, and hewed bright,	1030	Was shet the riche chevesaile,
Sore plesaunt, and fetys withall,		In which ther was full gret plente
Gente, and in hir myddill small		Of stones clere and bright to see
Buide Beaute yede Richesse,		Richesse a grdel hadde upon,	1085
An high lady of gret noblesse,		The bokel of it was of a stoon
And gret of prys in every place	1035	Of vertu gret and mochel of myght,
But whoso durste to hir trespace,		For whoso bar the stoon so bright,
Or til hir folk, in word or dede,		Of venym durst hym nothing doute,
He were full hardy, out of drede		While he the stoon hadde hym aboute
For bothe she helpe and hyndre may,		That stoon was gretly for to love,	1091
And that is nought of ysterday	1040	And tyl a riche mannes byhove
That riche folk have full gret myght		Worth all the gold in Rome and Frise
To helpe, and eke to greve a wyght		The mourdaunt wrought in noble wise
The leste and the grettest of valour		Was of a stoon full precious,	1095
Diden Rychesse ful gret honour,		That was so fyn and vertuous
And besy weren hir to serve,	1045	That hol a man it koude make

Of palasie and of toth-ake		Largesse, that sette al hir entente	1150
And yit the stoon hadde such a grace		For to be honourable and free
That he was siker in every place,	1100	Of Alexandres kyn was she,
All thilke day, not bynd to ben,		Hir most joye was, ywys,
That fastyng myghte that stoon seen		Whan that she yaf, and seide, "Have this "
The barres were of gold ful fyn,		Not Avarice, the foule caytyf,	1155
Upon a tyssu of satyn,		Was half to gripe so ententyf,
Full hevy, gret, and nothyng lyght,	1105	As Largesse is to yeve and sende,
In everich was a besaunt wight		And God ynough alwey hir sende,
Upon the tresses of Richesse		So that the more she yaf away
Was sette a cercle, for noblesse,		The more, ywys, she hadde alwey	1160
Of brennd gold, that full lyghte shoon,		Gret loos hath Largesse and gret pris,
So far, trowe I, was never noon	1110	For bothe wys folk and unwys
But he were kunnyng for the nonys,		Were hooly to hir baundon brought,
That koude devyse all the stonys		So wel with yiftes hath she wrought
That in that cercle shewen clere		And if she hadde an enemy,	1165
It is a wondir thing to here,		I trowe that she coude craftely
For no man koude preyse or gesse	1115	Make hym full soone hir freend to be,
Of hem the valewe or richesse		So large of yift and free was she
Rubyes there were, saphures, jagounces,		Therefore she stod in love and grace
And emeraudes, more than two ounces,		Of riche and pover in every place	1170
But all byfore, ful sotilly,		A full gret fool is he, ywys,
A fyn charboncle set saugh I	1120	That bothe riche and nygard is
The stoon so clere was and so bright		A lord may have no maner vice
That, also soone as it was nyght,		That greveth more than avarice	1174
Men myghte seen to go, for nede,		For nygart never with strengthe of hond
A myle or two in lengthe and brede		May wyne him gret lordship or lond,
Sich lyght sprang out of the ston	1125	For freendis all to fewe hath he
That Richesse wondir brighte shon,		To doon his will performed be
Bothe hir heed and all hir face,		And whoso wole have freendis heere,
And eke aboute hir al the place		He may not holde his tresour deere	1180
Dame Richesse on hir hond gan lede		For by ensample I telle this,
A yong man full of semelyhede,	1130	Right as an adamaunt, iwys,
That she best loved of ony thing		Can drawn to hym sotilly
His lust was moch in housholding		The iren that is leid therby,
In clothyng was he ful fetys,		So drawth folkes hertis, ywys,	1185
And loved well to have hors of prys		Silver and gold that yeven is
He wende to have reprovéd be	1135	Largesse hadde on a robe fresh
Of theft or moordre, if that he		Of riche purpur Sarsynesh
Hadde in his stable on hakeney		Wel fourmed was hir face and cleer,
And therfore he desred ay		And opened hadde she hir coler,	1190
To be aqueynted with Richesse,		For she right there hadde in present
For all his purpos, as I gesse,	1140	Unto a lady maad present
Was forto make gret dispense,		Of a gold broche, ful wel wrought
Withoute werynyng or diffense		And certys, it myssat hir nought,
And Richesse myght it wel sustene,		For thorough hir smokke, wrought with
And hir dispence well mayntene,		silk,	1195
And hym alwey sich plente sende	1145	The flesh was seen as whit as mylk
Of gold and silver for to spende		Largesse, that worthy was and wys,
Withoute lakking or daunger,		Hild by the hond a knyght of prys,
As it were poured in a garner		Was sib to Artour of Brtaigne,
And after on the daunce wente		And that was he that bar the ensaigne

Of worship and the gounfanoun	1201	For neither proud ne fool was she
And yit he is of sich renoun		She for to daunce called me,
That men of hym seye fare thynges		(I pray God yeve hir right good grace!)
Byfore barouns, erles, and kynges		Whanne I com first into the place	1256
This knyght was comen all newly	1205	She was not nyce, ne outrageous,
Fro tourneyng faste by,		But wys, and war, and vertuous,
There hadde he don gret chyvalrie		Of fair speche, and of fair answer, e,
Thorough his vertu and his maistrie,		Was never wight mysseid of here,	1260
And for the love of his lemman		She bar no rancour to no wight
He caste doun many a doughty man	1210	Clere broun she was, and therto bright
And next hym daunced dame Fraunchise,		Of face, of body avenaunt,
Arayed in full noble gyse		I wot no lady so plesaunt
She was not broun ne dun of hewe,		She were worthy for to bene	1265
But wht as snow yfallen newe		An emperesse or crowned quene
Hir nose was wrought at poynt devys,		And by hir wente a knyght dauncyng,
For it was gentyl and tretys,	1216	That worthy was and wel spekyng,
With eyen gladde, and browes bente,		And ful wel koude he don honour
Hir heer doun to hir helis wente		The knyght was fair and styf in stour,
And she was symple as dowve on tree,		And in armure a semely man,	1271
Ful debonaire of herte was she	1220	And wel biloved of his lemman
She durste never seyn ne do		Faire Idhnesse thanne saugh I,
But that that hir longed to,		That alwey was me faste by
And if a man were in distresse,		Of hir have I, withoute fayle,	1275
And for hir love in hevynesse,		Told yow the shap and apparayle,
Hir herte wolde have full gret pte,	1225	For (as I seide) loo, that was she
She was so amiable and free		That dide to me so gret bounte
For were a man for hir bistad,		That she the gate of the gardyn
She wolde ben right sore adrad		Undide, and let me passen in	1280
That she dide over-gret outrage,		And after daunced, as I gesse,
But she hym holpe his harm to aswage,		[Youthe], fulfilled of lustynesse,
Hir thought it elles a vylanye	1231	That nas not yit twelve yeer of age,
And she hadde on a sukkenye,		With herte wyld, and thought volage
That not of hempene heerdus was,		Nyce she was, but she ne mente	1285
So fair was noon in all Arras		Noon harm ne slight in hur entente,
Lord, it was ridled fetysly!	1235	But oonly lust and jolyte,
Ther nas nat a poynt, trewely,		For yonge folk, wel witen ye,
That it nas in his right assise		Have lytel thought but on her play
Full wel yclothed was Fraunchise,		Hir lemman was biside alway	1290
For ther is no cloth sittath bet		In sich a gise that he hir kyste
On damysell, than doth roket	1240	At alle tymes that hym lyste,
A womman wel more fetys is		That all the daunce myght it see
In roket than in cote, ywis		They make no force of pryvete,
The whyte roket, rydded faire,		For who spake of hem yvel or well,	1295
Bitokeneth that full debonaire		They were ashamed never a dell,
And swete was she that it ber	1245	But men myght seen hem kisse there,
Bi hir daunced a bacheler,		As it two yonge dowwes were
I can not telle you what he highte,		For yong was thilke bacheler,
But fair he was and of good highte,		Of beaute wot I noon his per,	1300
All hadde he be, I sey no more,		And he was right of sich an age
The lordis sone of Wyndesore	1250	As Youthe his leef, and sich corage
And next that daunced Curtesye,		The lusty folk thus daunced there,
That preised was of lowe and hye;		And also other that with hem were,

That weren alle of her meyne,	1305	That is a fruyt full well to lyke,
Ful hende folk and wys and free,		Namely to folk whanne they ben sike
And folk of faire port, truely,		And trees there were, gret fousoun,
There weren alle comunly		That baren notes in her sesoun,	1360
Whanne I hadde seen the countenaunces		Such as men notemygges calle,
Of hem that ladden thus these daunces,		That swote of savour ben withalle
Thanne hadde I will to gon and see	1311	And alemandres gret plente,
The gardyn that so lyked me,		Fyges, and many a date-tree
And loken on these faire loreres,		There wexen, if men hadde nede,	1365
On pyntrees, cedres, and olmers		Thorough the gardyn in length and brede
The daunces thanne eended were,	1315	Ther was eke wexyng many a spice,
For many of them that daunced there		As clowe-gelofre, and lycorice,
Were with her loves went away		Gyngevre, and greyn de parys,
Undir the trees to have her pley		Canell, and setewale of prys,	1370
A! Lord, they lyved lustyly!		And many a spice delitable
A gret fool were he, sikirly,	1320	To eten whan men rise fro table
That nolde, his thankes, such lyf lede!		And many homly trees ther were
For this dar I seyn, oute of drede,		That peches, coynes, and apples beere,
That whoso myghte so wel fare,		Medlers, plowmes, perys, chesteynes,	1375
For better lyf durst hym not care,		Cherys, of which many oon fayn is,
For ther nys so good paradys	1325	Notes, aleys, and bolas,
As to have a love at his devys		That for to seen it was solas
Oute of that place wente I thoo,		With many high lorer and pyn
And in that gardyn gan I goo,		Was renged cleue all that gardyn,	1380
Pleyyng along full meryly		With cypres and with olyveres,
The God of Love full hastily	1330	Of which that nygh no plente heere is Unto hym Swete-Lokyng clepte,		There were elmes grete and stronge,
No longer wolde he that he kepte		Maples, assh, ok, asp, planes longe,
His bowe of gold, that shoon so bright		Fyn ew, popler, and lyndes faire,	1385
He had hym bende [it] anoon ryght,		And othere trees full many a payre
And he full soone [it] sette an-ende,	1335	What shulde I tel you more of it?
And at a braid he gan it bende,		There were so many trees yit,
And tok hym of his arowes fyve,		That I shulde al encombred be
Full sharp and redy for to dryve		Er I had rekened every tree	1390
Now God, that sittith in mageste,		These trees were set, that I devyse,
Fro deedly woundes he kepe me,	1340	Oon from another, in assyze,
If so be that he hadde me shettel!		Fyve fadome or sixe, I trowe so,
For if I with his arowe mette,		But they were hye and great also,
It hadde me greved sore, iwys		And for to kepe out wel the sonne,	1395
But I, that nothyng wist of this,		The croppes were so thicke yronne,
Wente up and doun full many a wey,	1345	And every braunche in other knet,
And he me folwed fast alwey,		And ful of grene leves set,
But nowhere wold I reste me,		That sonne myght there non discence,
Till I hadde in all the gardyn be		Lest [it] the tender grasses shende	1400
The gardyn was, by mesuryng,		There myght men does and roes ye,
Right evene and square in compassing,		And of squyrels ful great plente
It as long was as it was large	1351	From bowe to bowe alwey lepyng
Of fruyt hadde every tree his charge,		Cones there were also playnge,
But it were any hidous tree,		That comyn out of her clapers,	1405
Of which ther were two or three		Of sondrie colours and maners,
There were, and that wot I full well,	1355	And maden many a tourneyng
Of pome-garnettys a full gret doll,		Upon the fresshe grass spryngyng

- In places saw I welles there,
 In whiche there no frogges were, 1410
 And fayr in shadowe was every welle
 But I ne can the nombre telle
 Of stremys smal that by devys
 Myrthe had don come through condys,
 Of whiche the water, in rennyng, 1415
 Gan make a noyse ful lykyng
 About the brinkes of these welles,
 And by the stremes overal elles,
 Sprang up the grass, as thicke yset
 And softe as any veluet, 1420
 On which men myght his lemman leye,
 As on a fetherbed, to pleye,
 For the erthe was ful softe and swete
 Through moisture of the welle wete
 Sprong up the sote grene gras 1425
 As fayre, as thicke, as myster was But moche amended it the place,
 That th'erthe was of such a grace
 That it of floures hath plente,
 That bothe in somer and wynter be 1430
 There sprang the vyolet al newe,
 And fressh pervynke, riche of hewe,
 And floures yelow, white, and rede,
 Such plente grew there never in mede
 Ful gay was al the ground, and queynt,
 And poudred, as men had it peynt, 1436
 With many a fressh and sondri flour,
 That casten up ful good savour
 I wol nat longe holde you in fable
 Of al this garden dilectable 1440
 I mot my tonge stynten nede,
 For I ne may, withouten drede,
 Naught tellen you the beaute al,
 Ne half the bounte therewithal
 I went on right hond and on left 1445
 About the place, it was nat left,
 Tyl I had [in] al the garden ben,
 In the estres that men myghte sen
 And thus while I wente in my play,
 The God of Love me folowed ay, 1450
 Right as an hunter can abyde
 The beest, tyl he seeth his tyde
 To shoten at good mes to the der,
 Whan that hym nedeth go no ner
 And so befyl, I rested me 1455
 Besydes a wel, under a tree,
 Which tree in Fraunce men cal a pyn
 But sithe the tyme of kyng Pepyn, Ne grew there tree in mannes syghte
 So fayr, ne so wel woze in lighte, 1460
- In al that yard so hugh was non
 And springyng in a marble ston
 Had Nature set, the sothe to telle,
 Under that pyn-tree a welle
 And on the border, al withoute, 1465
 Was written in the ston aboute, Letters smal, that sayden thus,
 "Here starf the fayre Narcisus" Narcisus was a bachelor,
 That Love had caught in his danger, 1470
 And in his net gan hym so strayne,
 And dyd him so to wepe and playne,
 That nede him must his lyf forgo
 For a fayr lady, that hight Echo,
 Him loved over any creature, 1475
 And gan for hym such payne endure
 That on a tyme she him tolde
 That if he her loven nolde,
 That her behoved nedes dye,
 There laye non other remedye 1480
 But natheles, for his beaute,
 So feirs and daungerous was he,
 That he nolde graunten hir askyng,
 For wepyng ne for fair praying,
 And whanne she herde hym werne her soo,
 She hadde in herte so gret woo, 1486
 And took it in so gret dispit,
 That she, withoute more respit,
 Was deed anon But er she deide,
 Full pitously to God she preide 1490
 That proude-hertid Narcisus,
 That was in love so daungerous, Myght on a day ben hampred so
 For love, and ben so hoot for woo,
 That never he myght to joye atteyne,
 Than shulde he feele in every veyne 1496
 What sorowe trewe lovers maken,
 That ben so vilaynsly forsaken
 This prayer was but resonable,
 Therefore God held it ferme and stable 1500
 For Narcisus, shortly to telle,
 By aventure com to that welle
 To reste hym in the shadowyng
 A day whanne he com fro huntynge
 This Narcisus hadde suffred paynes 1505
 For rennyng alday in the playnes,
 And was for thurst in gret distresse
 Of heet, and of his werynesse
 That hadde his breth almost bynomen Whanne he was to that welle ycomen, 1510
 That shadowid was with branches grene,

He thoughte of thilke water shene
 To drynke, and fresshe hym wel withalle,
 And doun on knees he gan to falle,
 And forth his heed and necke out-straughte
 To drynken of that welle a draughte 1516
 And in the water anon was seene
 His nose, his mouth, his yen sheene,
 And he therof was all abasheded,
 His owne shadowe had hym bytrashed
 For well wende he the forme see 1521
 Of a child of gret beaute
 Well kouthe Love hym wreke thoo
 Of daunger and of pride also,
 That Narcisus somtyme hym beer 1525
 He quytte hym well his guerdoun ther,
 He he musede so in the welle
 That, shortly all the sothe to telle,
 He lovede his owne shadowe soo,
 That atte laste he starf for woo 1530
 For whanne he saugh that he his wille
 Myght in no maner wey fulfille,
 And that he was so faste caught
 That he hym kouthe comfort nought,
 He loste his wit right in that place, 1535
 And diede withynne a lytel space
 And thus his warisoun he took
 For the lady that he forsook
 Ladies, I preye ensample takith,
 Ye that ageyns youre love mustakith, 1540
 For if her deth be yow to wite,
 God kan ful well youre while quyte Whanne that this lettre, of which I telle, Hadde taught me that it was the welle
 Of Narcisus in his beaute, 1545
 I gan anon withdrawe me,
 Whanne it fel in my remembraunce
 That hym bitidde such myschaunce
 But at the laste thanne thought I
 That scatheles, full sykerly, 1550
 I myght unto the welle goo Wherof shulde I abasshen soo?
 Unto the welle than wente I me,
 And doun I loutede for to see
 The clere water in the stoon, 1555
 And eke the gravell, which that shoon
 Down in the botme as silver fyn,
 For of the well this is the fyn,
 In world is noon so cler of hewe
 The water is evere fresh and newe, 1560
 That welmeth up with wavis brighte
 The mounce of two fynger highte
 Abouten it is gras spryngyng,

For moiste so thukke and wel likyng,
 That it ne may in wynter dye, 1565
 No more than may the see be drye Down at the botme set saw I
 Two cristall stonys craftely
 In thilke fresse and faire welle
 But o thng sothly dar I telle, 1570
 That ye wole holde a gret mervayle
 Whanne it is told, withouten fayle
 For whanne the sonne, cler in sighte,
 Cast in that well his bemys brighte,
 And that the heete descendid is, 1575
 Thanne taketh the cristall stoon, ywis, Agayn the sonne an hundrid hewis, Blew, yellow, and red, that fresh and newe
 is Yitt hath the mervelous cristall
 Such strengthe that the place overall, 1580
 Bothe flour, and tree, and leves grene,
 And all the yerd in it is seene
 And for to don you to undirstonde,
 To make ensample wole I fonde
 Ryght as a myrrour openly 1585
 Shewith all thing that stonidith therby,
 As well the colour as the figure,
 Withouten ony coverture,
 Right so the cristall stoon, shynyng,
 Withouten ony disseyvng, 1590
 The estrees of the yerd accusith
 To hym that in the water mustith
 For evere, in which half that he be,
 He may well half the gardyn se,
 And if he turne, he may right well 1595
 Sen the remenaunt everydell
 For ther is noon so ltil thyng
 So hid, ne closid with shuttyng,
 That it ne is sene, as though it were Peyntid in the cristall there 1600
 This is the mirrour perlious,
 In which the proude Narcisus
 Saw all his face far and bright,
 That made hym sithe to ligge upright
 For whose loketh in that mirroure, 1605
 Ther may nothyng ben his scour
 That he ne shall there sen somthyng
 That shal hym lede into lovyng
 Full many a worthy man hath it
 Yblent, for folk of grettist wit 1610
 Ben soone caught heere and awayted, Withouten respit ben they bated
 Heere comth to folk of newe rage,
 Heere chaungth many wight corage,

- Heere lith no red ne wit therto, 1615
 For Venus sone, daun Cupido,
 Hath sowne there of love the seed,
 That help ne lith there noon, ne red,
 So cerclith it the welle aboute
 His gynnes hath he sette withoute, 1620
 Ryght for to cacche in his panteres
 These damoyseles and bachelers
 Love will noon other briddes cacche,
 Though he sette oither net or lacche, 1624
 And for the seed that heere was sowne,
 This welle is clepid, as well is knowen,
 The Welle of Love, of verray right,
 Of which ther hath ful many a wight Spoken in bookis dyversely
 But they shull never so verily 1630
 Descripcioun of the welle heere,
 Ne eke the sothe of this matere,
 As ye shull, whanne I have undo
 The craft that hir bilongth too
 Allway me liked for to dwelle, 1635
 To sen the cristall in the welle,
 That shewide me full openly
 A thousand thinges faste by
 But I may say, in sory houre
 Stode I to loken or to poure, 1640
 For sithen [have] I sore siked,
 That mirroure hath me now entriked
 But hadde I first knowen in my wit
 The vertu and [the] strengthe of it,
 I nolde not have mused there 1645
 Me hadde bet ben elliswhere,
 For in the snare I fell anon,
 That hath bitrashed many oon
 In thilke mirroure saw I tho,
 Among a thousand thinges mo, 1650
 A roser chargid full of rosis,
 That with an hegge aboute enclos is Tho had I sich lust and envie,
 That for Parys ne for Pavie
 Nolde I have left to goon and see 1655
 There grettist hep of roses be Whanne I was with this rage hent,
 That caught hath many a man and shent,
 Toward the roser gan I go,
 And whanne I was not fer therfro, 1660
 The savour of the roses swote
 Me smot right to the herte-rote,
 As I hadde all enbawmed be
 And if I ne hadde endouted me
 To have ben hatid or assailed, 1665
 My thankis, wolde I not have failed
- To pulle a rose of all that route
 To beren in myn hond aboute,
 And smellen to it where I wente,
 But ever I dredde me to repente, 1670
 And lest it grevede or forthoughte
 The lord that thilke gardyn wroughte
 Of roses ther were gret won,
 So faire waxe never in ron
 Of knoppes clos some sawe I there, 1675
 And some wel beter woxen were,
 And some ther ben of other moysoun,
 That drowe nygh to her sesoun,
 And spedde hem faste for to sprede
 I love well sich roses rede, 1680
 For brode roses and open also Ben passed in a day or two,
 But knoppes wille [al] freshe be Two dayes, atte leest, or thre
 The knoppes gretly liked me, 1685
 For fairer may ther no man se
 Whoso myght have oon of alle,
 It ought hym ben full lief withalle
 Might I [a] gerlond of hem geten,
 For no richesse I wolde it ieten 1690
 Among the knoppes I ches oon
 So fair, that of the remenaunt noon
 So preise I half so well as it,
 Whanne I avise it in my wit
 For it so well was enlumyned 1695
 With colour reed, [and] as well fyned
 As nature couthe it make faire
 And it hath leves wel foure paire,
 That Kynde hath sett, thorough his know-
 yng,
 Aboute the rede Rose spryngyng 1700
 The stalke was as rishe right,
 And theron stod the knoppe upright,
 That it ne bowide upon no side
 The swote smelle sprong so wide
 That it dide all the place aboute — 1705
- Fragment B
- Whanne I hadde smelled the savour swote,
 No will hadde I fro thens yit goo,
 Bot somdell neer it wente I thoo,
 To take it, but myn hond, for drede,
 Ne dorste I to the Rose bede, 1710
 For thesteles sharpe, of many maneres, Netles, thornes, and hokede breres,
 For mych they distourbled me
 For sore I dradde to harmed be

- The God of Love, with bowe bent, 1715
 That all day set hadde his talent
 To pursuen and to spien me,
 Was stondyng by a fige-tree
 And whanne he saw hou that I Hadde chosen so ententify 1720
 The botoun, more unto my pay
 Than any other that I say,
 He tok an arowe full sharply whet,
 And in his bowe whanne it was set,
 He streight up to his ere drough 1725
 The stronge bowe, that was so tough,
 And shet att me so wondir smerte
 That thorough myn ye unto myn herte
 The takel smot, and depe it wente
 And therwithall such cold me hente 1730
 That, under clothes warme and softe, Sithen that day I have chevered ofte
 Whanne I was hurt thus, in [a] stounde
 I felle doun plat unto the grounde 1735
 Myn herte failed and feynted ay,
 And longe tyme a-swoone I lay
 But whanne I come out of swonyng,
 And hadde witt, and my felyng,
 I was all maat, and wende full well
 Of blood have loren a full gret dell 1740
 But certes, the arowe that in me stod
 Of me ne drew no drope of blod,
 For-why I found my wounde all dreie Thanne tok I with myn hondis tweie
 The arowe, and ful fast out it plighte,
 And in the pulling sore I sighte 1746
 So at the last the shaft of tree
 I drough out with the fethers thre
 But yet the hokede heed, ywis,
 The which [that] beaute callid is, 1750
 Gan so depe in myn herte passe,
 That I it myghte nought arace,
 But in myn herte still it stod,
 Ai bledde I not a drope of blod
 I was bothe anguyssous and trouble 1755
 For the perill that I saw double
 I nyste what to seye or do, Ne gete a leche my wounds to,
 For neithur thurgh gras ne rote
 Ne hadde I help of hope ne bote 1760
 But to the botoun evermo
 Myn herte drew, for all my wo,
 My thought was in noon other thing
 For hadde it ben in my keypyng,
 It wolde have brought my lyf agayn 1765
 For certeynly, I dar wel seyn,
- The sight oonly and the savour
 Aledged mych of my langour Thanne gan I for to drawe me
 Toward the botoun fare to se, 1770
 And Love hadde gete hym, in a throwe,
 Another arowe into his bowe,
 And for to shete gan hym dresse,
 The arowis name was Symplesse
 And whanne that Love gan nygh me nere,
 He drew it up, withouten were, 1776
 And shet at me with all his myght,
 So that this arowe anon-right
 Thourhout [myn] eigh, as it was founde,
 Into myn herte hath maad a wounde 1780
 Thanne I anon dide al my craft
 For to drawen out the shaft,
 And therwithall I sighed eft
 But in myn herte the heed was left,
 Which ay encreside my desir 1785
 Unto the botoun drawe ner,
 And evermo that me was woo,
 The more desir hadde I to goo Unto the roser, where that grew
 The freysshie botoun so bright of hew Betir me were to have laten be, 1791
 But it bihovede nedes me
 To don right as myn herte bad
 For evere the body must be lad
 Aftir the herte, in wele and woo, 1796
 Of force togidre they must goo
 But never this archer wolde fyne
 To shete at me with all his pyne
 And for to make me to hym mete,
 The thridde arowe he gan to shete, 1800
 Whanne best his tyme he myght espie,
 The which was named Curtesie,
 Into myn herte it dide avale
 A-swoone I fell bothe deed and pale,
 Long tyme I lay and stured nought, 1806
 Till I abraude out of my thought
 And faste thanne I avysede me
 To drawe out the shaft of tree,
 But evere the heed was left bihynde, 1810
 For ought I couthe pulle or wynde
 So sore it stikid whanne I was hit,
 That by no craft I myght it fit,
 But anguyssous and full of thought,
 I felte such woo my wounde ay wrought,
 That somonede me alway to goo 1815
 Toward the Rose that plesede me soo
 But I ne durste in no manner,
 Because the archer was so ner,

- "For evermore gladly," as I rede,
 "Brent child of fir hath myche drede"
 And, certis yit, for al my peyne, 1821
 Though that I sigh yit arwis reyne,
 And grounde quarels sharpe of steell,
 Ne for no payne that I myght feelle, Yit myght I not mysself wtholde 1825
 The faire roser to biholde,
 For Love me yaf sich hardement
 For to fulfillle his comaundement Upon my fete I ros up than,
 Feble as a forwoundid man, 1830
 And forth to gon [my] myght I sette,
 And for the archer nolde I lette
 Toward the roser fast I drow,
 But thornes sharpe mo than ynow
 Ther were, and also thisteles thikke, 1835
 And breses, brymme for to prikke,
 That I ne myghte gete grace
 The rowe thornes for to passe,
 To sen the roses fresshe of hewe
 I must abide, though it me rewe, 1840
 The hegge aboute so thikke was,
 That closide the roses in compas
 But o thing lyked me right well,
 I was so nygh, I myghte fel
 Of the botoun the swote odour, 1845
 And also se the fresshe colour,
 And that right gretly liked me,
 That I so near myghte it se Sich joie anon therof hadde I
 That I forgat my malady 1850
 To sen I hadde sich delit,
 Of sorwe and angre I was al quyt,
 And of my woundes that I hadde thore,
 For nothing liken me myght more,
 Than dwellen by the roser ay, 1855
 And thennes never to passe away
 But whanne a while I hadde be thar,
 The God of Love, which al toshar
 Myn herte with his arwis kene,
 Cast hym to yeve me woundis grene 1860
 He shet at me full hastily
 An arwe named Company,
 The whiche takell is full able To make these ladies merciable
 Thanne I anon gan chaungen hewe 1865
 For grevaunce of my wounde newe,
 That I agayn fell in swonyng,
 And sighede sore in compleynyng
 Soore I compleyned that my sore
 On me gan greven more and more 1870
- I hadde noon hope of allegeaunce,
 So nygh I drow to desperaunce,
 I roughte of deth ne of lyf,
 Wheder that Love wolde me dryf
 Yf me a martir wolde he make, 1875
 I myght his power nought forsake
 And while for anger thus I wok,
 The God of Love an arowe tok,
 Ful sharp it was and pugnaunt,
 And it was callid Faire-Semblaunt, 1880
 The which in no wise wole consente
 That ony lover hym repente
 To serve his love with herte and alle,
 For ony perill that may bifalle
 But though this arwe was kene grounde
 As ony rasour that is founde, 1886
 To kutte and kerve, at the poynt
 The God of Love it hadde anoynt
 With a precious oynement,
 Somdell to yeve aleggement 1890
 Upon the woundes that he had Through the body in myn herte maad,
 To helpe her sores, and to cure,
 And that they may the bet endure
 But yit this arwe, withoute more, 1895
 Made in myn herte a large sore,
 That in full gret peyne I abod
 But ay the oynement wente abrod,
 Throughout my woundes large and wide
 It spredde aboute in every side, 1900
 Thorough whos vertu and whos myght
 Myn herte joyfull was and light
 I hadde ben deed and al toshent,
 But for the precious oynement
 The shaft I drow out of the arwe, 1905
 Rokyng for wo right wondir narwe,
 But the heed, which made me smerte,
 Lefte bihynde in myn herte
 With other foure, I dar wel say,
 That never wole be take away, 1910
 But the oynement halp me wel
 And yit sich sorwe dide I fel
 Of my woundes fresshe and newe
 That al day I chaunged hewe
 As men myght se in my visage 1915
 The arwis were so full of rage,
 So variaunt of diversitee,
 That men in everich myghte se
 Bothe gret anoy, and eke swetnesse
 And joie meynt with bittirnesse 1920
 Now were they esy, now were they wod,
 In hem I felte bothe harm and good,

Now sore without aleggement,		For to fulfille youre lykynge,	1975
Now softenyng with oynement,		And repente for nothyng,
It softenede heere and prikkith there	1925	Hopyng to have yit in som tide
Thus ese and anger togidre were		Mercy, of that I abide "
The God of Love delyverly		And with that covenaut yelde I me
Com lepande to me hastily,		Anoon, down knelyng upon my kne,	1980
And seide to me in gret rape,		Proferynge for to kisse his feet,
"Yeld thee, for thou may not escape!		But for nothyng he wolde me let,
May no defence availe thee heer,	1981	And seide, "I love thee bothe and preise,
Thefore I rede make no daunger		Sen that thyn aunswar doth me ease,
If thou wolt yelde thee hastily,		For thou answerid so curteisly	1985
Thou shalt rather have mercy		For now I wot wel uttrly,
He is a fool in sikernesse,	1935	That thou art gentyll by thi speche
That with daunger or stoutnesse		For though a man fer wolde seche,
Rebellith there that he shulde plesse,		He shulde not fynden, in certeyn,
In sich folye is litel ese		No sich answer of no vileyn,	1990
Be meke, where thou must nedis bow,		For sich a word ne myghte nought
To stryve ageyn is nought thi prow	1940	Isse out of a vlayns thought
Com at oones, and have ydoo,		Thou shalt not lesen of thi speche,
For I wol that it be soo		For [to] thy helpynge wole I eche,
Thanne yeld thee heere debonairly "		And eke encesen that I may	1995
And I answerid ful hombly,		But first I wole that thou obay
"Gladly, sir, at youre biddinge,	1945	Fully, for thyn avauntage,
I wole me yelde in alle thyng		Anoon to do me heere homage
To youre servyse I wol me take,		And sithe kisse thou shalt my mouth,
For God defende that I shulde make		Which to no vlayn was never couth	2000
Ageyn youre biddinge resistence,		For to aproche it, ne for to touche,
I wole not don so gret offence,	1950	For sauff of cherlis I ne vouche,
For if I dide, it were no skile		That they shull never neigh it ner
Ye may do with me what ye wile,		For curteis, and of faire maner,
Save or spille, and also sloo		Well taught, and full of gentilnesse	2005
Fro you in no wise may I goo		He muste ben that shal me kysse,
My lyf, my deth is in youre hond,	1955	And also of full high fraunchise,
I may not laste out of youre bond		That shal atteyne to that emprise
Pleyn at youre lyst I yelde me,		And first of o thung warne I thee,
Hopyng in herte that sumtyme ye		That payne and gret adversite	2010
Comfort and ese shull me sende,		He mot endure, and eke travaile,
Or ellis, shortly, this is the eende,	1960	That shal me serve, withouten faile
Withouten helthe I mot ay dure,		But ther-ageyns, thee to comforte,
But if ye take me to youre cure		And with thi servise to desporte,
Comfort or helthe how shuld I have,		Thou mayst full glad and joyfull be	2015
Sith ye me hurt, but ye me save?		So good a maister to have as me,
The helthe of love mot be founde	1965	And lord of so high renoun
Where as they taken first her wounde		I bere of love the gonfanoun,
And if ye lyst of me to make		Of curtesie the banere,
Your prisoner, I wol it take		For I am of the sulf manere,	2020
Of herte and will, fully at gree		Gentil, curteys, meke, and fre,
Hoolly and pleyn Y yelde me,	1970	That who ever ententyf be
Withoute feynynge or feyntise,		Me to honoure, doute, and serve,
To be governed by youre emprise		And also that he hym observe
Of you I here so myche pris,		Fro trespas and and fro vilanye,	2025
I wole ben hool at youre devis,		And hym governe in curtesie

With will and with entencioun
 For whanne he first in my prisoun
 Is caught, thanne must he uttirly Fro thennes forth full busly 2030 Caste hym gentyll for to bee, if he desure helþ of me "

Anoon withouten more delay,
 Withouten daunger or affray,

I bicom his man anoon, 2035

And gaf hym thankes many a oon,
 And knehde doun, with hondis joynt,
 And made it in my port full queynt,
 The joye wente to myn herte rote Whanne I hadde kissed his mouth so swote, 2040

I hadde sich myrthe and sich lkyng,
 It cured me of langwisshing

He askide of me thanne hostages —

"I have," he seide, "taken fele homages

Of oon and other, where I have ben 2045

Disceyved ofte, withouten wen

These felouns, full of talste,

Have many sithes biguyled me,

And thorough falsched her lust achieved,

Wherof I repente and am agreved 2050

And I hem gete in my daunger,

Her falschede shull they bie full der

But for I love thee, I see thee pleyn,

I wol of thee be more certeyn,

For thee so sore I wole now bynde 2055

That thou away ne shalt not wynde

For to denyen the covenant,

Or don that is not avenaunt

That thou were fals it were gret reuthe,

Sith thou semest so full of treuthe " 2060

"Sire, if thee lyst to undrstande,

I merveile the asking this demande

For why or wherfore shulde ye

Ostages or borwis aske of me,

Or any other sikrnesse, 2065

Sith ye wot, in sothfastnesse,

That ye have me susprised so,

And hol myn herte taken me fro,

That it wole do for me nothing,

But if it be at youre bidding? 2070

Myn herte is youre, and myn right
 nought,

As it bihoveth, in dede and thought,

Redy in all to worche youre will,

Whether so turne to good or ill,

So sore it lustith you to plesse, 2075

No man therof may you disseise

Ye have theron sette sich justice,
 That it is werreid in many wise,
 And if ye doute it nolde obeye,
 Ye may therof do make a keye, 2080
 And holde it with you for ostage "

"Now, certis, this is noon outrage," Quod Love, "and fully I acord
 For of the body he is full lord
 That hath the herte in his tresor, 2085
 Outrage it were to asken more "

Thanne of his awmener he drough
 A litell keye, fetys ynowgh,
 Which was of gold polissched clere,
 And seide to me, "With this keye heere
 Thyn herte to me now wole I shette 2091

For all my jowelles, loke and knette,
 I bynde undir this litel keye,

That no wight may carie aweye

This keye is full of gret poeste " 2095

With which anoon he touchide me

Undir the side full sofyde,

That he myn herte sofeonly

Withouten anoy hadde spered, 2099

That yit right nought it hath me dered

Whanne he hadde don his will al oute,

And I hadde putte hym out of doute,

"Sire," I seide, "I have right gret wille

Youre lust and plessaunce to fulfillle

Loke ye my servise take at gree, 2105

By thilke feith ye owe to me

I seye nought for recreaundise,

For I nought doute of youre servise

But the servaunt travelleth in vayne,

That for to serven doth his payne 2110

Unto that lord, which in no wise

Kan hym no thank for his servyse "

Love seide, "Dismaie thee nought

Syn thou for sokour hast me sought,

In thank thi servise wol I take, 2115

And high of degre I wol thee make,

If wikkidnesse ne hyndre thee,

But, as I hope, it shal nought be

To worshupe no wight by aventure

May come, but if he peyne endure 2120

Abid and suffre thy distresse,

That hurtith now, it shal be lesse

I wot mysilf what may thee save,

What medicyne thou woldist have

And if thi trouthe to me thou kepe, 2125

I shal unto thy helpyng eke,

To cure thy woundes and make hem clene,

Where so they be olde or grene,

Thou shalt be holpen, at wordis fewe
 For certeynly thou shalt well shewe 2130
 Wher that thou servest with good wille
 For to complýsshén and fulfillé
 My comaundementis, day and nyght, Whiche I to lovers yeve of right "

"A sîre, for Goddis love," seide I, 2135

"Er ye passe hens ententyfly Youre comaundementis to me ye say,
 And I shall kepe hem, if I may,
 For hem to kepen is all my thought
 And if so be I wot hem nought, 2140
 Thanne may I [erre] unwityngly Wherfore I pray you enterely,
 With all myn herte, me to lere,
 That I trespasse in no manere "

The God of Love thanne chargide me
 Anoon, as ye shall here and see, 2146

Word by word, by right emprise,
 So as the Romance shall devise

The maister lesith his tyme to lere, Whanne the disciple wol not here 2150

It is but veyn on hym to swynke,
 That on his leryng wol not thunke
 Whoso luste love, lat hym entende, For now the Romance bigynneth to
 amende

Now is good to here, in fay, 2155
 If ony be that can it say,
 And poynte it as the resoun is Set, for other-gate, ywys,

 It shall nought well in alle thyng

Be brought to good undirstondyng 2160
 For a reder that poyntith ille

A good sentence, may ofte spille
 The book is good at the eendyng,

Vaad of newe and lusty thyng,
 Fo whoso wol the eendyng here, 2165

The craft of love he shall mowe lere,
 If that he wol so long abide,

Tyl I this Romance may unhide,
 And undo the signifiante

Of this drem into Romance 2170
 The sothfastnesse that now is hid,

Without coverture shall be kid
 Whanne I undon have this dremyng,

Wherynne no word is of lesyng
 "Vilanye, at the bigynnyng, 2175

I wole," sayde Love, "over alle thyng, Thou leve if thou wolt [not] be

Fals, and trespasse ageynes me
 I curse and blame generaly

All hem that loven vilany, 2180

For vilanye makith vilayn,
 And by his dedis a cherl is seyn

These vilayns arn withouten pitee, Frenndshipe, love, and all bounte

I nyl ressey ve unto my servise 2185
 Hem that ben vilayns of emprise

But undirstonde in thyn entent
 That this is not myn entendemant,

To clepe no wight in noo ages
 Only gentil for his lynages 2190

But whoso is vertuous,
 And in his port nought outrageous,

Whanne sich oon thou seest thee biforn,
 Though he be not gentil born,

Thou maist well seyn, this is in soth, 2195
 That he is gentil by cause he doth

As longeth to a gentilman,
 Of hem noon other deme I can

For certeynly, withouten drede,
 A cherl is demed by his dede, 2200

Of he or lowe, as ye may see,
 Or of what kynrede that he bee

Ne say nought, for noon yvel wille,
 Thyng that is to holden stille,

It is no worshipe to myseye 2205
 Thou maist ensample take of Key,

That was somtyme, for myseyyng,
 Hated bothe of olde and ying

As fer as Gaweyn, the worthy,
 Was praised for his curtesy, 2210

Kay was hated, for he was fell,
 Of word dispitous and cruell

Wherfore be wise and aqueyntable,
 Goodly of word, and resonable

Bothe to lesse and eke to mare 2215
 And whanne thou comest there men are,

Loke that thou have in custome ay
 First to salue hem, if thou may,

And if it fall that of hem som
 Salue thee first, be not domm, 2220

But quyte hem curteisly anoon,
 Without abidyng, er they goon

For nothyng eke thy tunge applye
 To speke wordis of rebaudrye

To vilayn speche in no degre 2225
 Lat never thi lippe unbounden be

For I nought holde hym, in good feith, Curteys, that foule wordis seith

And alle wymmen serve and preise,
 And to thy power her honour reise, 2230
 And if that ony myssaiaere

Dispise wymmen, that thou maist here, Blame hym, and bidde hym holde hym stille

And set thy myght and all thy wille
Wymmen and ladies for to please, 2235
And to do thyng that may hem ese,
That they ever speke good of thee,
For so thou maist best preised be

Loke fro pride thou kepe thee wel,
For thou maist bothe perceyve and fel
That pride is bothe foly and synne, 2241
And he that pride hath hym withynne

Ne may his herte in no wise
Meken ne souplen to ervyse
For pride is founde in every part 2245
Contrarie unto loves art

And he that loveth, trewely, Shulde hym contene jolly
Withouten pride in sondry wise,
And hym disgysen in queyntise 2250

For queynt array, withouten drede,
Is nothyng proud, who takith hede,
For fresh array, as men may see,
Withouten pride may ofte be

Mayntene thysalf aftur thi rent, 2255
Of robe and eke of garnement,
For many sithe the fair clothyng
A man amendith in myche thyng

And loke alwey that they be shape, What garnement that thou shalt make,
Of hym that kan best do, 2261
With all that perteyneth therto

Poyntis and sleeves be well sittand,
Right and streight on the hand,
Of shon and bootes, newe and faire, 2265
Loke at the leest thou have a paire,

And that they sitte so fetisly
That these rude may uttirly Merveyle, sith that they sitte so pleyn,
How they come on or off ageyn 2270

Were streite gloves, with awmenere
Of silk, and alwey with good chere
Thou yeve, if thou have richesse,
And if thou have nought, spende the lesse

Alwey be mery, if thou may, 2275
But waste not thi good alwey
Have hat of floures as fresh as May,
Chapelett of roses of Whitsunday,
For sich array ne costeth but lite

Thyn hondis wassh, thy teeth make white,
And let no filthe upon thee bee 2281
Thy nailes blak if thou maist see,

Voide it away delyverly,
And kembe thyn heed right jolly
Fard not thi visage in no wise, 2285
For that of love is not th' emprise,

For love doth haten, as I fynde,
A beaute that cometh not of kynde Alwey in herte I rede thee
Glad and mery for to be, 2290

And be as joyfull as thou can,
Love hath no joye of sorowful man
That yvell is full of curtesie
That laughith in his maladie,

For ever of love the siknesse 2295
Is meynd with swete and bitternesse
The sore of love is mervelous,
For now the lover [is] joyous,

Now can he pleyne, now can he grone,
Now can he syngen, now maken mone
To-day he pleyneth for hevynesse, 2301
To-morowe he playeth for jolynesse

The lyf of love is full contrarie,
Which stoundemele can ofte varie
But if thou canst murthis make, 2305
That men in gre wole gladly take,

Do it goodly, I comaunde thee,
For men shulde, whersoever they be,
Do thyng that hem sittynge is,
For therof cometh good loos and pris 2310

Whereof that thou be vertuous,
Ne be not straunge ne dangerous
For if that thou good ridere be,
Prike gladly, that men may se

In armes also if thou konne, 2315
Pursue til thou a name hast wonne
And if thi voice be faire and cler,
Thou shalt maken [no] gret daunger

Whanne to synge they goodly preye,
It is thi worship for t' obeye 2320
Also to you it longith ay

To harpe and gutterne, daunce and play,
For if he can wel foote and daunce,
It may hym greetly do avaunce
Among eke, for thy lady sake, 2325

Songes and complayntes that thou make,
For that wole meven in hur herte,
Whanne they reden of thy smerte
Loke that no man for scarce thee holde,

For that may greve thee many folde 2330 Resoun wole that a lover be
In his yiftes more large and fre
Than cheres that can not of lovyng

For who therof can any thyng,

He shal be leef ay for to yeve,	2335	That man yeveth maugre his
In Loves lore whoso wolde leve,		Whanne thou hast yeven thyn herte, as I
For he that, thorough a sodeyn sight,		Have seid thee heere openly,
Or for a kyssyng, anonright		Thanne aventures shull thee falle,
Yaff hool his herte in will and thought,		Which harde and hevyn ben withalle	2390
And to hymself kepith right nought,	2340	For ofte whan thou bithenkist thee
Aftur swich gift it is good resoun		Of thy lovyng, whereso thou be,
He yeve his good in abandoun		Fro folk thou must departe in hie,
Now wol I shortly heere reherce,		That noon perceyve thi maladie	2394
Of that I have seid in verce,		But hyde thyne harm thou must alone,
All the sentence by and by,	2345	And go forth sool, and make thy mone
In wordis fewe compendiously,		Thou shalt no whyle be in o stat,
That thou the better mayst on hem		But whylom cold and whilom hat,
thynke,		Now reed as rose, now yelowe and fade
Whether so it be thou wake or wynke		Such sorowe, I trowe, thou never hade,	2400
For the wordis litel greve		Cotidien, ne quarteyne,
A man to kepe, whanne it is breve	2350	It is nat so ful of peyne
Whoso with Love wole goon or ride,		For often tymes it shal falle
He mot be curteis, and voide of pride,		In love, among thy paynes alle,
Mery, and full of jolite,		That thou thyself al holly	2405
And of largesse alosed be	2354	Foryeten shalt so utterly
First I joyne thee, heere in penaunce,		That many tymes thou shalt be
That evere, withoute repentaunce,		Styl as an ymage of tree,
Thou sette thy thought in thy lovyng,		Domme as a ston, without steryng
To laste withoute repentyng,		Of fot or hond, without spekyng	2410
And thanke upon thi myrthus swete,		Than, soone after al thy payn,
That shall folowe aftur, whan ye mete	2360	To memorye shalt thou come agayn,
And for thou trewe to love shalt be,		As man abashed wonder sore,
I wole, and comaunde thee,		And after syghen more and more
That in oo place thou sette, all hool,		For wyt thou wel, withouten wen,	2415
Thyn herte, withoute halven dool		In such estat ful ofte have ben
Of trecherie and sikernesse,	2365	That have the yvel of love assayd
For I lovede nevere doublenesse		Wherthrough thou art so dismayd
To many his herte that wole depart,		After, a thought shal take the so,
Everich shal have but litel part,		That thy love is to fer the fro	2420
But of hym drede I me right nought,		Thou shalt saye, 'God' what may this be,
That in oo place settith his thought	2370	That I ne may my lady se?
Therefore in oo place it sette,		Myn herte alone is to her go,
And lat it nevere thannys flette		And I abyde al sol in wo,
For if thou yevest it in lenyng,		Departed fro myn owne thought,	2425
I holde it but a wrecchid thyng,		And with myne eyen se right nought
Therefore yeve it hool and quyit,	2375	Alas! myne eyen sende I ne may
And thou shalt have the more merit		My careful herte to convey!
If it be lent, than aftur soon,		Myn hertes gyde but they be,
The bounte and the thank is doon,		I prayse nothyng, whatever they se	2430
But, in love, fre yeven thing		Shul they abyde thanne? nay,
Requyrith a gret guerdonyng	2380	But gon and visyten without delay
Yeve it in yift al quyit fully,		That myn herte desyareth so
And make thi yift debonairly,		For certainly, but if they go,
For men that yift holde more dere,		A fool myself I may wel holde,	2435
That yeven is with gladsom chere		Whan I ne se what myn herte wolde
That yift nought to preisen us,	2385	Wherfore I wol gon her to sen,

Or eased shal I never ben,
 But I have som tokenyng,
 Than gost thou forth without dwellyng, 2440
 But ofte thou faylest of thy desyr,
 Er thou mayst come her any ner,
 And wastest in vayn thi passage
 Thanne fallest thou in a newe rage,
 For want of sight thou gynnest morne, 2445
 And homward pensyf thou dost retorne
 In greet myscheef thanne shalt thou bee,
 For thanne agayn shall come to thee
 Sighes and pleyntes, with newe woo,
 That no ychying prikkeeth soo 2450
 Who wot it nought, he may go lere
 Of hem that bien love so dere Nothyng thyn herte appesen may,
 That ofte thou wolt goon and assay
 If thou maist seen, by aventure, 2455
 Thi lyves joy, thin hertis cure,
 So that, bi grace, if thou myght Atteyne of hire to have a sight,
 Thanne shalt thou don noon other dede,
 But with that sight thyne eyen fede 2460
 That fare fresh whanne thou maist see,
 Thyne herte shall so ravysshed be
 That nevere thou woldest, thi thankis, Iete,
 Ne remove, for to see that swete
 The more thou seest in sothfastnesse, 2465
 The more thou coveytest of that swetnesse,
 The more thin herte brenneth in fir
 The more thin herte is in desir
 For who considreth everydeell,
 It may be likned wondir well, 2470
 The peyne of love, unto a fer,
 For evermore thou neighest ner,
 Thou, or whooso that it bee,
 For verray sothe I tell it thee,
 The hatter evere shall thou brenne, 2475
 As experience shall thee kenne Whereso [thou] comest in ony coost,
 Who is next fyr, he brenneth moost
 And yitt forsothe, for all thin hete,
 Though thou for love swelte and swete,
 Ne for nothyng thou felen may, 2481
 Thou shalt not willen to passen away
 And though thou go, yitt must thee nede
 Thenke all day on hir fairhede
 Whom thou biheelde with so good will, 2485
 And holde thisif biguyled ill,
 That thou ne haddest noon hardement
 To shewe hir ought of thyn entent

Thyn herte full sore thou wolt dispise,
 And eke repreve of cowardise, 2490
 That thou, so dul in every thing
 Were domm for drede, withoute spekyng
 Thou shalt eke thanke thou didest foly,
 That thou were hir so faste by,
 And durst not aunte thee to saye 2495
 Somthyng, er thou cam awaye,
 For thou haddist no more wonne,
 To speke of hir whanne thou bigonne
 But yif she wolde, for thy sake,
 In armes goodly thee have take, 2500
 It shulde have be more worth to thee
 Than of tresour gret plente
 Thus shalt thou morne and eke compleyn,
 And gete enchesoun to goon ageyn
 Unto thi walk, or to thi place, 2505
 Where thou biheelde hir fleshly face
 And never, for fals susseccioun, Thou woldest fynde occasioun
 For to gon unto hire hous
 So art thou thanne desirous 2510
 A sight of hir for to have,
 If thou thin honour myghtist save,
 Or ony erande myghtist make Thider, for thi loves sake,
 Full fayn thou woldist, but for drede 2515
 Thou gost not, lest that men take hede
 Wherefore I rede, in thi goyng,
 And also in thyn ageyn-comyng,
 Thou be well war that men ne wit
 Feyne thee other cause than it 2520
 To go that weye, or faste by,
 To hele wel is no foly
 And if so be it happe thee
 That thou thi love there maist see,
 In siker wise thou hir salewe, 2525
 Wherewith thi colour wole transmewe,
 And eke thy blod shal al toquake,
 Thyn hewe eke chaungen for hir sake
 But word and wit, with chere full pale,
 Shull wante for to tell thy tale 2530
 And if thou maist so fer forth wyne
 That thou [thy] resoun durst bigynne,
 And woldist seyn thre things or mo,
 Thou shalt full scarsly seyn the two Though thou bitenke thee never so well,
 Thou shalt foryete yit somdell, 2535
 But if thou dele with trecherie
 For fals lovers mowe all folye
 Seyn, what hem lust, withouten drede,
 They be so double in her falshede, 2540

For they in herte cunne thenke o thyng,
 And seyn another in her spekyng
 And whanne thi speche is eendid all Ryght thus to thee it shall byfall
 If ony word thanne come to mynde, 2545
 That thou to seye hast left bihynde, Thanne thou shalt brenne in gret martir,
 For thou shalt brenne as ony fir
 This is the stryf, and eke the affray,
 And the batell that lastith ay 2550
 This bargeyn eende may never take,
 But if that she thi pees will make
 And whanne the nyght is comen, anon
 A thousand angres shall come uppon
 To bedde as fast thou wolt thee dight, 2555
 Where thou shalt have but smal dehit,
 For whanne thou wenest for to slepe,
 So full of peyne shalt thou crepe,
 Sterte in thi bed aboute full wide,
 And turne full ofte on every side, 2560
 Now downward groff, and now upright,
 And walowe in woo the longe nyght,
 Thune armys shalt thou sprede a-bred,
 As man in werre were forwerreyd
 Thanne shall thee come a remembraunce
 Of hir shap and hir semblaunce, 2566
 Whereto non other may be pere
 And wite thou wel, withoute were,
 That thee shal seme, somtyme that nyght,
 That thou hast hir, that is so bright, 2570
 Naked bitwene thyne armes there,
 All sothfastnesse as though it were Thou shalt make castels thanne in Spayne,
 And dreme of joye, all but in vayne,
 And thee deliten of right nought, 2575
 While thou so slombrest in that thought,
 That is so swete and delitable,
 The which, in soth, nys but a fable,
 For it ne shall no while laste 2579
 Thanne shalt thou sighe and wepe faste,
 And say, 'Dere God, what thing is this?
 My drem is turned all amys,
 Which was full swete and apparent,
 But now I wake, it is al shent!
 Now yede this mery thought away! 2585
 Twenty tymes upon a day
 I wolde this thought wolde come ageyn,
 For it aleggith well my peyn
 It makith me full of joyfull thought,
 It sleth me, that it lastith noght 2590
 A, Lord! why nyl ye me socoure?
 Fro joye I trowe that I langoure

The deth I wolde me shulde sloo,
 While I lye in hur armes twoo
 Myn harm is hard, withouten wene, 2595
 My gret unese full ofte I meene
 But wolde Love do so I myght
 Have fully joye of hir so bright,
 My peyne were quyrt me rychely
 Allas, to gret a thing aske I! 2600
 Hit is but foly and wrong wenyng,
 To aske so outrageous a thyng,
 And whoso askith folily,
 He mot be warned hastily
 And I ne wot what I may say, 2605
 I am so fer out of the way,
 For I wolde have full gret lykng,
 And full gret joye of lasse thing
 For wolde she, of hir gentylnesse, Withouten more, me oonys kesse, 2610
 It were to me a gret guerdoun,
 Reles of all my passioun
 But it is hard to come therto,
 All is but folye that I do,
 So high I have myn herte set, 2615
 Where I may no comfort get
 I not wher I seye well or nought,
 But this I wot wel in my thought,
 That it were better of hir alioone,
 For to stynte my woo and moone, 2620
 A lok of hir yeast goodly,
 Than for to have al utterly
 Of an other all hool the pley
 A, Lord! wher I shall byde the day
 That evere she shall my lady be? 2625
 He is full cured that may hir see
 A, God! whanne shal the dawnyng spring?
 To ligen thus is an angry thyng,
 I have no joye thus heere to ly,
 Whanne that my love is not me by 2630
 A man to lyen hath gret disese,
 Which may not slepe ne neste in ese
 I wolde it dawed and were now day,
 And that the nyght were went away,
 For were it day, I wolde uprise 2635
 A, slowe sonne! shewe thun enprise!
 Sped thee to sprede thy beemys bright,
 And chace the derknese of the nyght,
 To putte away the stoundes stronge,
 Whiche in me lasten all to longe? 2640
 The nyght shalt thou contene soo,
 Withoute rest, in peyne and woo
 If evere thou knewe of love distresse,
 Thou shalt mowe lerne in that siknesse,

- And thus enduring shalt thou ly, 2645
 And ryse on morwe up erly
 Out of thy bedde, and harneyse thee,
 Er evere dawning thou maist see
 All pryvly thanne shalt thou goon,
 What weder it be, thisilf alloon, 2650
 For reyn or hayl, for snow, for slet, Thuder she dwellith that is so swet,
 The which may fall a-slepe be,
 And thenkth but lytel upon thee
 Thanne shalt thou goon, ful foule afeered, Loke if the gate be unspersed, 2655
 And waite without, in woo and peyn,
 Full yvel a-coold, in wynd and reyn
 Thanne shal thou go the dore bifore,
 If thou maist fynde ony score, 2660
 Or hool, or reef, whatever it were,
 Thanne shalt thou stoupe, and lay to ere,
 If they withynne a-slepe be, —
 I mene, all save thy lady free,
 Whom wakyng if thou maist asprie, 2665
 Go putte thisilf in jupartie,
 To aske grace, and thee bimene,
 That she may wite, withouten wene,
 That thou [a-] nyght no rest hast had,
 So sore for hir thou were bystad 2670 Wommen wel ought pite to take
 Of hem that sorwen for her sake
 And loke, for love of that relyk,
 That thou thenke noon other lyk,
 For whom thou hast so gret annoy 2675
 Shall kysse thee, er thou go away,
 And holde that in full gret deynte
 And for that no man shal thee see Bifore the hous, ne in the way,
 Loke thou be goon ageyn er day 2680
 Such comyng, and such goyng,
 Such hevynesse, and such wakyng,
 Makth lovers, withouten ony wene,
 Under her clothes pale and lene
 For Love leveth colour ne cleernesse, 2685
 Who loveth trewe hath no fatnesse Thou shalt wel by thysilf see That thou must nedis assayed be
 For men that shape hem other wey
 Falsly her ladyes for to bitray, 2690
 It is no wonder though they be fatt,
 With false othes her loves they gatt
 For oft I see suche losengours
 Fatter than abbatis or priours
 Yit with o thing I thee charge, 2695
 That is to seye, that thou be large
- Unto the mayde that hir doth serve,
 So best hir thank thou shalt deserve
 Yeve hir yiftes, and get hir grace,
 For so thou may thank purchase, 2700
 That she thee worthy holde and free,
 Thi lady, and all that may thee see
 Also hir servauntes worshipe ay,
 And please as mychel as thou may,
 Gret good thorough hem may come to thee, 2705
 Bicause with hir they ben pryve
 They shal hir telle hou they thee fand Curties, and wys, and well doand,
 And she shall preise well the mare
 Loke oute of londe thou be not fare, 2710
 And if such cause thou have that thee
 Bihoveth to gon out of contree, Leve hool thin herte in hostage,
 Till thou ageyn make thi passage
 Think long to see the swete thyng 2715
 That hath thin herte in hir kepyng
 Now have I told thee in what wise
 A lover shall do me servise
 Do it thanne, if thou wolt have The meede that thou aftir crave ” 2720
 Whanne Love all this hadde boden me, I seide hym “Sire, how may it be
 That lovers may in such manere
 Endure the peyne ye have seid heere?
 I merveyle me wonder faste 2725
 How ony man may lyve or laste
 In such peyne and such brennyng,
 In sorwe, and thought, and such sighng, Ay unrelased woo to make,
 Whether so it be they slepe or wake, 2730
 In such annoy contynuely, —
 As helpe me God, this merveile I
 How man, but he were maad of stele, Myght lyve a month, such peynes to fele ”
 The God of Love thanne seide me 2735 “Freend, by the feith I owe to thee, May no man have good, but he it by A man loveth more tendurly
 The thyng that he hath bought most
 dere
 For wite thou well, withouten were, 2740
 In thank that thyng is taken more,
 For which a man hath suffred sore
 Certis, no wo ne may atteyne Unto the sore of loves peyne,
 Noon yvel therto ne may amounte, 2745
 No more than a man [may] counte

The dropes that of the water be
 For drye as well the greet see Thou myghtist, as the harmes telle
 Of hem that with love dwelle 2750
 In servyse, for peyne hem sleeth,
 And yet ech man wolde fle the deeth
 And trowe thei shulde nevere escape, Nere that hope couthe hem make Glad, as man in prisoun sett, 2755
 And may not geten for to et
 But barly breed, and watir pure,
 And lyeth in vermyn and in ordure,
 With all this yitt can he lyve, 2759
 Good hope such comfort hath hym yive, Which maketh wene that he shall be Delyvered, and come to libertie
 In fortune is [his] fulle trust,
 Though he lye in strawe or dust,
 In hoope is all his susteynyng 2765
 And so for lovers, in her wenyng, Whiche Love hath shut in his prisoun,
 Good hope is her salvacioun
 Good hope, how sore that they smerte, Yeveth hem bothe wll and herte 2770
 To profre her body to martire,
 For hope so sore doth hem desire
 To suffre ech harm that men devise,
 For joye that afturward shall aryse
 Hope in desir caccheth victorie, 2775
 In hope of love is all the glorie,
 For hope is all that love may yive,
 Nere hope, ther shulde no lover lyve
 Blessid be hope, which with desir
 Avaunceth lovers in such maner¹ 2780
 Good hope is curteis for to please,
 To kepe lovers from all disese
 Hope kepith his bond, and wole abide,
 For ony perill that may betyde,
 For hope to lovers, as most chief, 2785
 Doth hem endure all myscheef, Hope is her helpe, whanne myster is
 And I shall yeve thee eke, iwys,
 Three other thingis that gret solas
 Doth to hem that be in my las 2790
 The firste good that may be founde
 To hem that in my las be bounde,
 Is Swete-Thought, for to recorde
 Thing wherwith thou canst accorde
 Best in thyn herte, where she be 2795
 Thenkyng in absence is good to thee
 Whanne ony lover doth compleyne,
 And lyveth in distresse and in peyne,

Thanne Swete-Thought shal come, as
 blyve,
 Awey his angre for to dryve 2800
 It makith lovers to have remembraunce
 Of comfort, and of high plesaunce,
 That Hope hath hight hym for to wynne
 For Thought anon thanne shall bygynne
 As fer, God wot, as he can fynde, 2805
 To make a mirroure of his mynde,
 For to biholde he wole not lette
 Hir persone he shall afore hym sette, Hir laughing eyen, persault and clere,
 Hir shape, hir forme, hir goodly chere, 2810
 Hir mouth, that is so gracious,
 So swete, and eke so saverous,
 Of all hir fetures he shall take heede,
 His eyen with all hir lymes fede
 Thus Swete-Thenkyng shall aswage 2815
 The peyne of lovers and her rage
 Thi joye shall double, withoute gesse, Whanne thou thenkist on hir semlynesse,
 Or of hir laughing, or of hir chere,
 That to thee made thi lady dere 2820
 This comfort wole I that thou take,
 And if the next thou wolt forsake,
 Which is not lesse saverous,
 Thou shuldist ben to daungerous
 The seconde shal be Swete-Speche, 2825
 That hath to many oon be leche,
 To bringe hem out of woo and wer,
 And holpe many a bachiler,
 And many a lady sent socour,
 That have loved paramour, 2830 Thorough spekyng whanne they myghte
 heere
 Of her lovers, to hem so dere
 To [hem] it voidith all her smerte,
 The which is closed in her herte
 In herte it makith hem glad and hight, 2835
 Speche, whanne they [ne] mowe have sight
 And therefore now it cometh to mynde,
 In olde dawes, as I fynde,
 That clerkis writen that hir knewe,
 Ther was a lady fresh of hewe, 2840
 Which of hir love made a song
 On hym for to remembre among,
 In which she seyde, 'Whanne that I here
 Speken of hym that is so dere,
 To me it voidith all [my] smert, 2845
 Iwys, he sittith so ner myn hert
 To speke of hym, at eve or morwe,
 It cureth me of all my sorwe

To me is noon so high plesaunce		For it is thyng most amerous,
As of his persone dalyaunce	2850	Most delytable and saverous,
She wist full well that Swete-Spekyng		For to aswage a mannes sorowe,
Comfortith in full myche thyng		For to sen his lady by the morwe
Hir love she hadde full well assayed,		For it is a full noble thing,	2905
Of him she was full well apaed,		Whanne thyne eyen have metyng
To speke of hym hir joye was sett	2855	With that relike precious,
Therefore I rede thee that thou gett		Wherof they be so desirous
A felowe that can well concele,		But al day after, soth it is,
And kepe thi counsell, and well hele,		They have no drede to faren amys,	2910
To whom go shewe hoolly thine herte,		They dreden neither wynd ne reyn,
Bothe wele and woo, joye and smerte,	2860	Ne noon other maner peyn
To gete comfort to hym thou goo,		For whanne thyne eyen were thus in blis,
And pryvly, bitwene yow twoo,		Yit of hir curtesie, ywys,
Yee shall speke of that goodly thyng		Alloone they can not have her joye,	2915
That hath thyn herte in hir kepyng,		But to the herte they [it] convoye,
Of hir beaute, and hir semblaunce,	2865	Part of her blisse to hym they sende,
And of hir goodly countenaunce		Of all this harm to make an ende
Of all thi stat thou shalt hym sey,		The eye is a good messanger,
And aske hym counsell how thou may		Which can to the herte in such maner,	2920
Do ony thyng that may hir please,		Tidyngs sende that [he] hath sen,
For it to thee shall do gret ese,	2870	To voide hym of his yernes clen
That he may wite thou trust hym soo,		Wherof the herte rejoiset soo,
Bothe of thi wele and of thi woo		That a gret party of his woo
And if his herte to love be sett,		Is voided, and put away to flight	2925
His companie is myche the bett		Right as the derknesse of the nyght
For resoun wole, he shewe to thee	2875	Is chased with clernesse of the mone,
All uttirly his pryvyte,		Right so is al his woo full soone
And what she is he loveth so,		Devoided clene, whanne that the sight
To thee pleynly he shal undo,		Biholden may that freshe wight	2930
Withoute drede of ony shame,		That the herte desureth soo,
Bothe tell hir renoun and hir name	2880	That al his derknesse is agoo
Thanne shall he farther, fer and ner,		For thanne the herte is all at ese,
And namely to thi lady der,		Whanne the eyen sen that may hem please
In syker wise, yee, every other		Now have I declared thee all oute,	2935
Shall helpen as his owne brother,		Of that thou were in drede and doute,
In trouthe, withoute doublenesse,	2885	For I have told thee feithfully
And kepen cloos in sikernesse		What thee may curen utterly,
For it is noble thing, in fay,		And alle lovers that wole be
To have a man thou darst say		Ferthfull and full of stabilite	2940
Thy pryve counsell every deell,		Good-Hope alwey kep bi thi side,
For that wole comforte thee right well,	2890	And Swete-Thought make eke abide,
And thou shalt holde thee well apayed,		Swete-Lokyng and Swete-Speche,
Whanne such a freend thou hast assayed		Of all thyne harmes thei shall be leche
The thridde good of gret comfort,		Of every thou shalt have gret plesaunce,
That yeveth to lovers most disport,		If thou canst bide in sufferaunce,	2945
Comyth of sight and biholdyng,	2895	And serve wel withoute feyntise
That clepid is Swete-Lokyng,		Thou shalt be quyrt of thyn emprise
The whiche may noon ese do,		With more guerdoun, if that thou lyve,
Whanne thou art fer thy lady fro,		But at this tyme thus I thee yive "	2950
Wherefore thou prese alwey to be		The God of Love whanne al the day
In place where thou maist hir see	2900	Had taught me, as ye have herd say,

And enfourmed compendiously,
 He vanyshe away all sodeynly,
 And I alloone lefte, all sool, 2955
 So full of compleynt and of dool,
 For I saw no man there me by My woundes me greved wondirly,
 Me for to curen nothyng I knew,
 Save the botoun bright of hew, 2960
 Wheron was sett hoolly my thought
 Of other comfort knew I nought,
 But it were thourgh the God of Love,
 I knew not elles to my bihove
 That myght me ease or comfort gete, 2965
 But if he wolde hym entermete
 The roser was, withoute doute,
 Closed with an hegge withoute,
 As ye toform have herd me seyn,
 And fast I bisiede, and wolde fayn 2970
 Have passed the hay, if I myghte
 Have gotten ynne by ony sighte Unto the botoun so faire to see
 But evere I dradde blamed to be,
 If men wolde have suspeccioun 2975
 That I wolde of entencioun Have stole the roses that there were,
 Therefore to entre I was in fere
 But at the last, as I bithought
 Whether I shulde passe or nought, 2980
 I saw come with a glad cher
 To me, a lusty bachelor,
 Of good stature and of good highte,
 And Bialacoil forsothe he highte
 Sone he was to Curtesy, 2985
 And he me grauntide full gladly
 The passage of the outter hay,
 And seide "Sir, how that yee may Passe, if youre wille be
 The freshe roser for to see, 2990
 And yee the swete savour fele Yourre warrant may [I be] right wele,
 So thou thee kepe fro folye,
 Shall no man do thee vylanye
 If I may helpe you in ought, 2995
 I shall not bounde, dredeth nought,
 For I am bounde to youre servise, Fully devoide of feyntise," Thanne unto Bialacoil saide I,
 "I thanke you, sir, full hertely, 3000
 And youre biheeste take at gre,
 That ye so goodly profer me
 To you it cometh of gret fraunchise,
 That ye me profer youre servise"

Thanne aftur, full delyverly, 3005
 Thorough the breres anon wente I,
 Wherof encombred was the hay
 I was wel plesed, the soth to say,
 To se the botoun faire and swote
 So freshe spronge out of the rote 3010
 And Bialacoil me served well,
 Whanne I so nygh me myghte fel
 Of the botoun the swete odour,
 And so lusty hewed of colour
 But thanne a cher! (foule hym bityde!) 3015
 Biside the roses gan hym hyde,
 To kepe the roses of that roser,
 Of whom the name was Daunger
 This cherl was hid there in the greves, Kovered with gras and with leves, 3020
 To spie and take whom that he fond Unto that roser putte an hond
 He was not sool, for ther was moo,
 For with hym were other twoo
 Of wikkid maners and yvel fame 3025
 That oon was clepid, by his name, Wykked-Tonge, God yeve hym sorwe!
 For neither at eve ne at morwe,
 He can of no man [no] good speke
 On many a just man doth he wreke 3030
 Ther was a womman eke that hight
 Shame, that, who can reken right, Trespas was hir fadir name,
 Hir moder Resoun, and thus was Shame
 Brought of these ilke twoo 3035
 And yitt hadde Trespas never adoo With Resoun, ne never lev hir by,
 He was so hidous and so ugly,
 I mene, this that Trespas highte,
 But Resoun conceived of a sighte 3040
 Shame, of that I spak afor
 And whanne that Shame was thus born,
 It was ordeyned that Chastite Shulde of the roser lady be,
 Which, of the botouns more and las, 3045
 With sondry folk assailed was,
 That she ne wiste what to doo
 For Venus hir assailith soo,
 That nyght and day from hir she stal
 Botouns and roses overal 3050
 To Resoun thanne praieeth Chastite, Whom Venus hath flemed over the see,
 That she hir doughter wolde hir lene,
 To kepe the roser fresh and grene
 Anoon Resoun to Chastite 3055
 Is fully assented that it be,

And grauntide hir, at hir request, That Shame, by cause she is honest, Shall keper of the roser be		But ye the botoun graunte me, Which is moost passaunt of beaute,	3110
And thus to kepe it ther were three,	3060	My lyf, my deth, and my marture, And tresour that I moost desire "
That noon shulde hardy be ne bold, Were he yong or were he old, Ageyn hir will awaye to bere		Thanne Bialacoil, affrayed all, Seyde, "Sir, it may not fall, That ye desire, it may not arise	3115
Botouns ne roses that there were I hadde wel sped, hadde I not ben	3065	What? Wolde ye shende me in this wise? A mochel fool thanne I were, If I suffride you awaye to bere
Awayted with these three and sen For Bialacoil, that was so fair, So gracious, and debonair,		The fresh botoun so faire of sight For it were neither skule ne right,	3120
Quytt hym to me full curteisly, And, me to plesse, bad that I	3070	Or take the Rose aforn his kynde Ye are not curteys to aske it Late it still on the roser sitt,
Shulde drawe me to the botoun ner, Prese in, to touche the roser		And growe til it amended be, And parfytly come to beaute	3125
Which bar the roses, he yaf me leve, This graunt ne myght but lytel greve And for he saw it liked me,	3075	I nolde not that it pulled were Fro the roser that it bere, To me it is so leef and deer "	3129
Ryght nygh the botoun pullede he A leef all grene, and yaff me that, The whiche full nygh the botoun sat		With that sterte oute anon Daunger, Out of the place were he was hid His malice in his chere was kid,
I made [me] of that leef full queynt, And whanne I felte I was aqueynt	3080	Full gret he was and blak of hewe, Sturdy and hidous, whoso hym knewe,	3134
With Bialacoil, and so pryve, I wende all at my will hadde be Thanne wax I hardy for to tel		Like sharp urchouns his her was growe, His eyes reed sparcling as the fyr glowe, His nose frounced, full kirked stood
To Bialacoil hou me bifel Of Love, that tok and wounded me,	3085	He com criand as he were wood, And seide, "Bialacoil, telle me why Thou bryngest hider so booldely	3140
And seide, "Sir, so mote I thee, I may no joye have in no wise, Uppon no side, but it rise		Hym that so nygh [is] the roser? Thou worchust in a wrong maner He thinkth to dishonoure thee,
For sithe (if I shall not feyne) In herte I have had so gret payne,	3090	Thou art wel worthy to have maugree To late hym of the roser wit	3145
So gret annoy, and such affray, That I ne wot what I shall say, I drede youre wrath to disserve		Who serveth a feloun is yvel quit Thou woldist have doon gret bounte, And he with shame wolde quyte thee
Lever me were that knyves kerve My body shulde in pecys smale,	3095	Fle hennes, felowe! I rede thee goo! It wanteth litel I wole thee sloo	3150
Than in any wise it shulde falle, That ye wratted shulde ben with me "		For Bialacoil ne knew thee nought, Whanne thee to serve he sette his thought, For thou wolt shame hym, if thou myght,
"Sey boldly thi will," quod he, "I nyl be wroth, if that I may, For nought that thou shalt to me say "	3100	Bothe ageyns resoun and right I wole no more in thee affye,	3155
Thanne seide I, "Ser, not you displease To knowen of my gret unese, In which oonly Love hath me brought,		That comest so slyghly for t'espye, For it preveth wonder well, Thy slight and tresoun, every deell "
For peynes gret, disese, and thought, Fro day to day he doth me drye,	3105	I durst no more there make abod For the cherl, he was so wod,	3160
Supposeth not, sir, that I lye In me fyve woundes dide he make, The soore of whiche shall nevere slake,

So gan he threte and manace,
 And thurgh the haye he dide me chace
 For feer of hym I trembylde and quok,
 So cherlishly hus heed he shok,
 And seide, if eft he myght me take, 3165
 I shulde not from his hondis scape
 Thanne Bialacoil is fled and mat,
 And I, all sool, disconsolat,
 Was left aloone in peyne and thought,
 For shame to deth I was nygh brought Thanne thought I on myn high foly, 3171
 How that my body utterly
 Was yeve to peyne and to marture,
 And therto hadde I so gret ire,
 That I ne durst the haye passe 3175
 There was noon hope, there was no grace
 I trowe nevere man wiste of peyne,
 But he were laced in loves cheyne, Ne no man [wot], and sooth it is,
 But if he love, what anger is 3180
 Love holdith his heest to me right wel, Whanne peyne he seide I shulde fel
 Noon herte may thenke, ne tunge seyn,
 A quarter of my woo and peyn
 I myght not with the anger laste, 3185
 Myn herte in poynt was for to braste, Whanne I thought on the Rose, that soo
 Was thurgh Daunger cast me froo
 A long while stod I in that stat, Til that me saugh so mad and mat 3190
 The lady of the highe ward,
 Which from hir tour lokide thiderward Resoun men clepe that lady,
 Which from hir tour delyverly
 Com down to me, withouten mor 3195
 But she was neither yong ne hoor,
 Ne high ne lowe, ne fat ne lene,
 But best, as it were in a mene
 Hir eyen twoo were cleer and light
 As any candell that brenneth bright, 3200
 And on hir heed she hadde a crowne
 Hir semede wel an high persounne,
 For round enviroon, hir crownet
 Was full of riche stonys frett Hir goodly semblaunt, by devys, 3205
 I trowe were maad in parady's,
 For Nature hadde nevere such a gras,
 To forge a werk of such compas
 For certeyn, but if the letter ly,
 God hymself, that is so high, 3210
 Made hir aftir his ymage,
 And yaff hir sith sich avauntage

That she hath myght and seignorie
 To kepe men from all folye, Whoso wole trowe hur lore, 3215
 Ne may offenden nevermore
 And while I stod thus derk and pale,
 Resoun bigan to me hir tale
 She seide, "Al hayl, my swete freend!
 Foly and childhood wol thee sheend, 3220
 Which the have putt in gret affray
 Thou hast bought deere the tyme of May,
 That made thyn herte mery to be In yvell tyme thou wentist to see
 The gardyn, wherof Ydilnesse 3225
 Bar the keye, and was maistresse, Whanne thou yedest in the daunce
 With hir, and haddest aqueyntaunce
 Hir aqueyntaunce is perloous,
 First softe, and aftir noious, 3230
 She hath [thee] trashed, withoute wen
 The God of Love hadde the not sen, Ne hadde Ydilnesse thee conveyed
 In the verger, where Myrthe hym played
 If Foly have supprised thee, 3235
 Do so that it recovered be,
 And be wel ware to take nomore
 Counsel, that greveth aftir sore
 He is wis, that wol hymself chastise
 And though a yong man in ony wise 3240
 Trespace among, and do foly,
 Late hym not tarye, but hastily
 Late hym amende what so be mys
 And eke I counsele thee, rwy's,
 The God of Love hoolly foryet, 3245
 That hath thee in sich peyne set,
 And thee in herte tourmented soo
 I can nat sen how thou maist goo
 Other weyes to garisoun,
 For Daunger, that is so feloun, 3250
 Felly purposith thee to werreye,
 Which is ful cruel, the soth to seye
 And yitt of Daunger cometh no blame,
 In reward of my daughter Shame,
 Which hath the roses in hir ward, 3255
 As she that may be no musard
 And Wikked-Tunge is with these two,
 That suffrith no man thider goo,
 For er a thing be do, he shall,
 Where that he cometh, overall, 3260
 In fourty places, if it be sought, Seye thyng that nevere was don ne
 wrought,
 So moche tresoun is in his male

Of falsnesse, for to seyne a tale		For whanne he first arestide me,
Thou delest with angry folk, ywis,	3265	He took myn herte so hool hym till,
Wherfore to thee bettir is		That it is nothyng at my wyl,
From these folk away to fare,		He taught it so hym for to obeye,
For they wole make thee lyve in care		That he it sparrede with a keye	3320
This is the yvell that love they call,		I pray yow, late me be all stille
Wherynne ther is but foly al,	3270	For ye may well, if that ye wille,
For love is foly everydell		Youre wordis waste in idilnesse,
Who loveth in no wise may do well,		For utterly, withouten gesse,
Ne sette his thought on no good werk		All that ye seyn is but in veyne	3325
His scole he lesith, if he be a clerk,		Me were lever dye in the peyne,
Of other craft eke if he be,	3275	Than Love to me-ward shulde arette
He shal not thryve therynne, for he		Falsheed, or tresoun on me sette
In love shal have more passoun		I wole me gete prys or blame,
Than monk, hermyte, or chanoun		And love trewe, to save my name	3330
The peyne is hard, out of mesure,		Who that me chastisith, I hym hate "
The joye may eke no while endure,	3280	With that word Resoun wente hir
And in the possessioun		gate,
Is myche tribulacioun		Whanne she saugh for no sermonyng
The joye it is so short lastyng,		She myght me fro my foly bryng
And but in hap is the getyng,		Thanne dismaied, I lefte all sool,	3335
For I see there many in travaille,	3285	Forwery, forwardred, as a fool,
That atte laste foule fayle		For I ne knew no chevisaunce
I was nothyng thi counseler,		Thanne fell into my remembraunce
Whanne thou were maad the omager		How Love bad me to purveye
Of God of Love to hastily,		A felowe, to whom I myghte seye	3340
Ther was no wisdom, but foly	3290	My counsell and my pryvete, Thyn herte was joly, but not sage,		For that shulde moche availe me
Whanne thou were brought in sich a rage,		With that bithought I me that I
To yelde thee so redily,		Hadde a felowe faste by,
And to leve of is gret maistry		Trewe and siker, curteys and hend,	3345
I rede thee Love away to dryve,	3295	And he was called by name a Frend,
That makith thee recche not of thi lyve		A trewer felowe was nowher noon
The foly more fro day to day		In haste to hym I wente anon,
Shal growe, but thou it putte away		And to hym all my woo I tolde,
Tak with thy teeth the bridel faste,	3299	Fro hym right nought I wold witholde	3350
To daunte thyn herte, and eke thee caste,		I tolde hym all, withoute wer,
If that thou maist, to gete thee defence		And made my compleynt on Daunger,
For to redresse thi first offence		How for to see he was hidous,
Whoso his herte alwey wol leve,		And to me-ward contrarious,
Shal fynde among that shal hym greve "		The whiche thurgh his cruelte	3355
Whanne I hir herd thus me chastise,	3305	Was in poynt to have meymed me
I answerd in ful angry wise		With Bialacoil whanne he me sey
I prayed hir ceessen of hir speche,		Withynne the gardeyn walke and pley,
Outher to chastise me or teche,		Fro me he made hym for to go,
To bidde me my thought refreyne,		And I blefte aloone in woo,	3360
Which Love hath caught in his demeyne		I durst no lenger with hym speke,
"What? wene ye Love wol consent,	3311	For Daunger seide he wolde be wreke,
That me assalith with bowe bent,		Whanne that he saw how I wente
To drawe myn herte out of his hond,		The freshe botoun for to hente,
Which is so qwikly in his bond?		If I were hardy to come near	3365
That ye counseyle may nevere be,	3315	Bitwene the hay and the roset

This freend, whanne he wiste of my thought, He discomforted me right nought, But seide, "Felowe, be not so mad, Ne so abaysshed nor bystad 3370 Mysilf I knowe full well Daunger, And how he is feers of his cheer, At pryme temps, Love to manace, Ful ofte I have ben in his caas A feloun first though that he be, 3375 Aftur thou shalt hym souple se Of longe passed I knew hym well, Ungoodly first though men hym feel, He wol meke aftur, in his beryng, Been, for service and obeyssyng 3380 I shal thee telle what thou shalt doo Mekely I rede thou go hym to, Of herte pray hym specialy Of thy trespas to have mercy, And hote wel, hym here to plese, 3385 That thou shalt nevermore him displese Who can best serve of flatery, Shall please Daunger most uttirly "  Mi freend hath seid to me so wel That he me esid hath somdell, 3390 And eke allegged of my torment, For thurgh hym had I hardement Agayn to Daunger for to go, To preve if I myght meke hym soo To Daunger came I all ashamed, 3395 The which aform me hadde blamed, Desuryng for to pese my woo, But over hegge durst I not goo, For he forbed me the passage I fond hym cruel in his rage, 3400 And in his hord a gret burdoun To hym I knehide lowe adoun, Ful meke of port, and symple of chere, And seide, "Sir, I am comen heere Oonly to aske of you mercy 3405 That greveth me full gretly That evere my lyf I wratthed you, But for to amenden I am come now, With all my myght, bothe loude and stille, To doon right at youre owne wille 3410 For Love made me for to doo That I have trespassed hidirto, Fro whom I ne may withdrawe myn hert Yit shall I never, for joy ne smert, What so bifalle, good or ill, 3415 Offende more ageyn youre will Lever I have endure disese,	Than do that shulde you displese I you require and pray that ye Of me have mercy and pitee, 3420 To stynte your ire that greveth soo, That I wol swere for ever mo To be redressid at youre likyng, If I trespasse in ony thyng, Save that I pray thee graunte me 3425 A thyng that may not warned be, That I may love, all oonly, Noon other thyng of you aske I I shall doon [al your wyl], iwys, If of youre grace ye graunte me this 3430 And ye may not letten me, For wel wot ye that love is free, And I shall loven, sith that I will, Who ever like it well or ill, And yit ne wold I, for all Fraunce, 3435 Do thyng to do you displeasaunce "  Thanne Daunger fil in his entent For to foryewe his maitalent, But all his wratthe yit at laste He hath releesed, I preyde so faste 3440 Shortly he seide, "Thy request Is not to mochel dishonest, Ne I wole not werne it thee, For yit nothyng engreveth me For though thou love thus evermor, 3445 To me is neither softe ne soor Love where that the list, what recchith me, So [thou] fer fro my roses be? Trust not on me, for noon assay, If ony tyme thou passe the hay " 3450  Thus hath he graunted my praere Thanne wente I forth, withouten were, Unto my freend, and tolde hym all, Which was right joyful of my tall He seide, "Now goth wel thyn affaere He shall to thee be debonaire, 3455 Though he aform was dispitous, He shall heere aftur be gracious If he were touchid on som good veyne, He shuld yit rewen on thi payne 3460 Suffre, I rede, and no boost make, Till thou at good mes maist hym take By sufferaunce and wordis softe A man may overcome ofte Hym that aform he hadde in drede, 3465 In bookis sothly as I rede "  Thus hath my freend with gret comfort Avaunced me with high disport, Which wolde me good as mych as I
--	--

And thanne anon full sodeynly	3470	That he have power to repente,
I tok my leve, and streight I went		For though that quyk ye wolde hym sloo,
Unto the hay, for gret talent		Fro love his herte may not goo
I hadde to sen the fresh botoun		Now, swete sir, is it youre ese
Wherynne lay my salvacioun,		Hym for to angre or disese?
And Daunger tok kep if that I	3475	Allas! what may it you avaunce
Kepe hym covenant trewely		To don to hym so gret grevaunce?
So sore I dradde his manasyng,		What worship is it agayn hym take,
I durst not breke his biddyng,		Or on youre man a werre make,
For, lest that I were of hym shent,		Sith he so lowly, every wise,
I brak not his comaundement,	3480	Is redy, as ye lust devise?
For to purchase his good wil		If Love hath caught hym in his las,
It was [nat] for to come ther-til,		You for t'obeye in every caas,
His mercy was to fer bihynde		And ben youre suget at youre will,
I wepte for I ne myght it fynde		Shuld ye therfore willen hym ill?
I compleyned and sighed sore,	3485	Ye shulde hym spare more, all out,
And langwished evermore,		Than hym that is bothe proud and stout
For I durst not over goo		Curtesie wol that ye socoure
Unto the Rose I loved soo		Hem that ben meke undir youre cure
Thurghout my demyng outerly		His herte is hard that wole not meke,
Than he had knowege certanly	3490	Whanne men of mekenesse hym biseke "
That Love me ladde in sich a wise		"That is certeyn," seide Pite,
That in me ther was no feyntise,		"We se ofte that humilite
Falsheed, ne no trecherie		Bothe ire, and also felonye,
And yet he, full of vylanye,		Venquyssheth, and also malencolye
Of disdeyn, and cruelte,	3495	To stonde forth in such duresse,
On me ne wolde have pite,		This cruelte and wikkidnesse
His cruel will for to refreyne,		Wherfore I pray you, sir Daunger,
Though I wepe alwey, and me compleyne		For to mayntene no lenger heer
And while I was in this torment,		Such cruel werre agayn youre man,
Were come of grace, by God sent,	3500	As hoolly youre as ever he can,
Fraunchise, and with hir Pite		Nor that ye worchen no more woo
Fulfuld the bothen of bounte,		Upon this caytif, that langwischith soo,
They go to Daunger anon-right		Which wole no more to you trespasse,
To forther me with all her myght,		But putte hym hoolly in youre grace
And helpe in worde and in dede,	3505	His offense ne was but lite,
For well they saugh that it was nede		The God of Love it was to wite,
First, of hir grace, dame Fraunchise		That he youre thrall so gretly is,
Hath taken [word] of this emprise		And if ye harme hym, ye don amys
She seide, "Daunger, gret wrong ye do,		For he hath had full hard penaunce,
To worche this man so myche woo,	3510	Sith that ye refte hym th'aqueyntaunce
Or pynen hym so angerly,		Of Bialacoll, his moste joye,
It is to you gret villany		Which alle his peynes myght acoye
I can not see why, ne how,		He was biforn anoyed sore,
That he hath trespassed ageyn you,		But thanne ye doubled hym well more,
Save that he loveth, wherfore ye shulde		For he of blis hath ben full bare,
The more in cherete of hym holde	3516	Sith Bialacoll was fro hym fare
The force of love makith hym do this,		Love hath to hym do gret distresse,
Who wolde hym blame he dide amys?		He hath no nede of more duresse
He leseth more than ye may do,		Voideth from hym youre ire, I rede,
His peyne is hard, ye may see, lo!	3520	Ye may not wynnen in this dede
And Love in no wise wolde consente		Makth Bialacoll repaire ageyn,

And haveth pite upon his peyn,
 For Fraunchise wole, and I, Pite, 3575
 That mercyful to hym ye be,
 And sith that she and I accorde,
 Have upon hym misericorde
 For I you pray and eke moneste
 Nought to refusenoure requeste, 3580
 For he is hard and fell of thought,
 That for us twoo wole do right nought " Daunger ne myght no more endure,
 He mekede hym unto mesure
 "I wole in no wise," seith Daunger, 3585
 Denye that ye have asked heer,
 It were to gret uncurtesie
 I wole ye have the companye
 Of Bialacoil, as ye devise,
 I wole hym lette in no wise " 3590
 To Bialacoil thanne wente in hy Fraunchise, and seide full curteisly
 "Ye have to longe be deignous Unto this lover, and daungerous,
 Fro him to withdrawe your presence, 3595
 Which hath do to him great offence,
 That ye not wolde upon him se,
 Wherefore a sorouful man is he Shape ye to paye him, and to please,
 Of my love if ye wol have ease 3600
 Fulfyl his wyl, sith that ye knowe Daunger is daunted and brought lowe
 Through help of me and of Pyte You dar no more afered be "
 "I shal do right as ye wyl," 3605 Saith Bialacoil, "for it is skyl, Sithe Daunger wol that it so be "
 Than Fraunchise hath him sent to me
 Byalacoil at the begynnyng
 Salued me in his commyng 3610
 No straungenesse was in him sen,
 No more than he ne had wrathed ben
 As fayr semblaunt than shewed he me,
 And goodly, as aforon dyd he,
 And by the hond, withouten doute, 3615
 Within the haye, right al aboute
 He ladde me, with right good cher,
 Al envyron the verger,
 That Daunger hadde me chased fro
 Now have I leave overal to go, 3620
 Now am I rayed, at my devys,
 Fro helle unto paradys
 Thus Bialacoil, of gentylnesse,
 With al his payne and besynesse,
 Hath shewed me, only of gace, 3625

The estres of the swote place
 I saw the Rose, when I was nygh,
 Was greater woxen and more high,
 Fressh, roddy, and fayr of hewe,
 Of colour ever yliche newe 3630
 And whan I hadde it longe sen,
 I saw that through the leves gren
 The Rose spredde to spaunysshing,
 To sene it was a goodly thyng
 But it ne was so spred on bred 3635
 That men withun myght knowe the sed,
 For it covert was and close,
 Bothe with the leves and with the rose
 The stalke was even and grene upright,
 It was theron a goodly syght, 3640
 And wel the better, withoute wene,
 For the seed was nat sene
 Ful fayre it spradde (God it blesse!),
 For such another, as I gesse,
 Aforon ne was, ne more vermayle 3645
 I was abawed for marveyle,
 For ever the fayrer that it was,
 The more I am bounden in Loves laas Longe I abod there, soth to saye, Tyl Bialacoil I gan to praye, 3650
 Whan that I saw him in no wyse
 To me warnen his servyse,
 That he me wolde graunt a thyng,
 Which to remembre is wel syttyng,
 This is to sayn, that of his grace 3655
 He wolde me yeve leysar and space,
 To me that was so desyrous,
 To have a kyssyng precieus
 Of the goodly fresshe Rose,
 That so swetely smelleth in my nose 3660
 "For if it you displeased nought,
 I wolde gladly, as I have sought,
 Have a cos therof freely,
 Of your yefte, for certainly,
 I wol non have but by your leve, 3665
 So loth me were you for to greve "
 He sayde, "Frend, so God me spede,
 Of Chastite I have such drede,
 Thou shuldest nat warned be for me,
 But I dar nat, for Chastyte 3670
 Agayn her dar I nat mysdo,
 For alway byddeth she me so
 To yeve no lover leave to kys,
 For who therto may wynnyn, ywis,
 He of the surplus of the pray 3675
 May lyve in hoope to gete som day
 For whoso kyssyng may attayne,

Of loves payne hath (soth to sayne)		To warne it hym ye don amys	3730
The beste and most avenaunt,		Sith well ye wote, how that he
And earnest of the remenaunt "	3680	Is Loves servaunt, as ye may see,
Of his answer I sighed sore,		And hath beaute, wherthrough [he] is
I durst assaye him tho no more,		Worthy of love to have the blis
I hadde such drede to greve him ay		How he is semely, biholde and see,	3735
A man shulde nat to moche assay		How he is fair, how he is free,
To chafe hys frend out of measure,	3685	How he is swoote and debonair,
Nor putte his lyf in aventure,		Of age yong, lusty, and fair
For no man at the firste strok		Ther is no lady so hawteyn,
Ne may nat felle down an ok,		Duchesse, ne countesse, ne chasteleyn,
Nor of the reysyns have the wyn,		That I nolde holde hir ungoodly	3741
Tyl grapes be rype, and wel afyn	3690	For to refuse hym outterly
Be sore empressid, I you ensure,		His breth is also good and swete,
And drawn out of the pressure		And eke his lippis rody, and mete
But I, forpeyned wonder stronge,		Oonly to pleyen and to kesse	3745
Thought that I abood right longe		Graunte hym a kis, of gentilnesse!
Aftir the kis, in peyne and woo,	3695	His teth arn also white and clene,
Sith I to kis desired soo,		Me thinkith wrong, withouten wene,
Till that, rewyng on my distresse,		If ye now warne hym, trustith me,
Ther to me Venus the goddesse,		To graunte that a kis have he	3750
Which ay werreyeth Chastite,		The lasse to helpe hym that ye haste,
Cam of hir grace to socoure me,	3700	The more tyme shul ye waste "
Whos myght is knowe fer and wide,		Whanne the flawme of the verry brond
For she is modir of Cupide,		That Venus brought in hir right hond,
The God of Love, blynde as stoon,		Hadde Bialacoil with hete smete,	3755
That helpith lovers many oon		Anoon he bad, withouten lette,
This lady brought in hir right hond	3705	Graunte to me the Rose kisse
Ot brennyng fyr a blasyng brond,		Thanne of my peyne I gan to lyses,
Wherof the flawme and hote fir		And to the Rose anoon wente I,
Hath many a lady in desir		And kyside it full feithfully	3760
Of love brought, and sore het,		Thar no man aske if I was blithe,
And in hir servise her hertes set	3710	Whanne the savour soft and lythe
This lady was of good entaile,		Strok to myn herte withoute more,
Right wonderfull of apparayle		And me alegged of my sore,
Bi hir atyr so bryght and shen		So was I full of joye and blusse	3765
Men myght perceyve well and sen		It is fair sich a flour to kisse,
She was not of religioun	3715	It was so swoote and saverous
Nor I neil make mencoun		I myght not be so angwissous
Nor of robe, nor of tresour,		That I [ne] mote glad and joly be,
Of broche, neithir of hir riche attour,		Whanne that I remembre me	3770
Ne of hir gardill aboute hir side,		Yit ever among, sothly to seyne,
For that I nyll not longe abide	3720	I suffre noy and moche peyne
But knowith wel that certeynly		The see may never be so stille
She was araied richely		That with a litel wynde it nulle
Devoyd of pryde certeyn she was,		Overwhelme and turne also,	3775
To Bialacoil she wente apas,		As it were wood, in waws goo
And to hym shortly, in a clause,	3725	Aftir the calm the trouble sone
She seide, "Sir, what is the cause		Mot folowe and chauge as the moone
Ye ben of port so daungerous		Right so farth Love, that selde in oon
Unto this lover and deynous,		Holdith his anker, for right anoon	3780
To graunte hym nothyng but a kis?		Whanne they in ese wene best to lyve,

- They ben with tempest all fordryve
 Who serveth Love, can telle of woo,
 The stoundemele joie mot overgoo
 Now he hurteth, and now he cureth, 3785
 For selde in oo poynt Love endureth
 Now is it right me to procede,
 How Shame gan medle and take hede Thugh whom fele angres I have had,
 And how the stronge wall was maad, 3790
 And the castell of brede and lengthe,
 That God of Love wan with his strengthe
 All this in romance will I sette,
 And for nothyng ne will I lette, 3795
 So that it lykynge to hir be,
 That is the flour of beaute,
 For she may best my labour quyte,
 That I for hir love shal endrite
 Wikkid-Tunge, that the covyne
 Of every lover can devyne 3800
 Worst, and addith more somdell,
 (For Wikkid-Tunge seith never well)
 To me-ward bar he right gret hate,
 Espyng me erly and late,
 Till he hath sen the grete chere 3805
 Of Bialacoil and me ifeere
 He myghte not his tunge withstond Worse to reporte than he fond,
 He was so full of cursed rage
 It sat hym well of his lynage, 3810
 For hym an Irish womman bar,
 His tunge was fyled sharp and squar, Pognaunt, and right kervyng,
 And wonder bitter in spekyng
 For whanne that he me gan espie, 3815
 He swoor, affermyng sikirlye, Bitwene Bialacoil and me
 Was yvel aquayntaunce and pryve
 He spak therof so folly
 That he awakide Jelousy, 3820
 Which, all afrayed in his risyng, Whanne that he herde janglyng,
 He ran anon, as he were wood,
 To Bialacoil, there that he stod,
 Which hadde lever in this caas 3825
 Have ben at Reynes or Amyas,
 For foot-hoot, in his felonye,
 To hym thus seide Jelousie
 "Why hast thou ben so necligent
 To kepen, whanne I was absent, 3830
 This verger heere left in thi ward?
 To me thou haddist no reward,
 To truste (to thy confusoun!)
- Hym thus, to whom suspeccioun
 I have right gret, for it is nede, 3835
 It is well shewed by the dede
 Gret faute in thee now have I founde
 By God, anon thou shalt be bounde,
 And faste loken in a tour,
 Withoute refuyt or socour 3840
 For Shame to longe hath be thee froo,
 Over-soone she was agoo Whanne thou hast lost bothe drede and feere,
 It semede wel she was not heere
 She was busy in no wyse 3845
 To kepe thee and [to] chastise,
 And for to helpen Chastite
 To kepe the roser, as thenkrith me
 For thanne this boy-knave so booldely
 Ne shulde not have be hardy, 3850
 In this verger hadde such game,
 Which now me turneth to gret shame"
 Bialacoil nyste what to sey,
 Full fayn he wolde have fled away,
 For feere han hid, nere that he 3855
 All sodeynly tok hym with me
 And whanne I saugh he hadde soo,
 Thus Jelousie, take us twoo,
 I was astoned, and knew no red,
 But fledde away for verrey dred 3860
 Thanne Shame cam forth full symple (She wende have trespaced full gretly), Humble of hir port, and made it symple,
 Weryng a vayle in stide of wymple,
 As nonnys don in her abbey 3865
 By cause hir herte was in affray,
 She gan to speke withynne a throwe
 To Jelousie right wonder lowe
 First of his grace she bysought,
 And seide, "Sire ne leveth nought 3870
 Wikkid-Tunge, that false espie,
 Which is so glad to feyne and lye
 He hath you maad, thugh flateryng,
 On Bialacoil a fals lesyng
 His falsnesse is not now a-new, 3875
 It is to long that he hym knew
 This is not the firste day,
 For Wikkid-Tunge hath custome ay
 Yonge folkis to bewreye,
 And false lesynges on hem leye 3880
 Yit nevertheles I see among,
 That the loigne it is so long,
 Of Bialacoil, hertis to lure,
 In Loves servyse for to endure,

Drawing suche folk hym to,	3885	Fro hem that wole the Rose espie,
That he hath nothyng with to doo		And come to wayte me vylonye,
But in sothnesse I trowe nought		For, in good ferth and in trouthe,
That Bialacoil hadde ever in thought		I wole not lette, for no slouth,	3940
To do trespas or vylonye,		To lyve the more in sikirnesse,
But, for his modur Curtesie	3890	To make anon a forteresse,
Hath taught hym ever to be		T'enclose the roses of good savour
Good of aqueyntaunce and pryve		In myddis shall I make a tour
For he loveth noon hevynesse,		To putte Bialacoil in prisoun,	3945
But mirthe, and pley, and all gladnesse,		For evere I drede me of tresoun
He hateth alle trecherous,	3895	I trowe I shal hym kepe soo
Soleyn folk, and envyous,		That he shal have no myght to goo
For ye witen how that he		Aboute to make companye
Wol ever glad and joyfull be		To hem that thenke of vylanye,	3950
Honestly with folk to pley		Ne to no such as hath ben heere
I have be negligent, in good fey,	3900	Aforn, and founde in hym good chere
To chastise hym, therefore now I		Which han assailed hym to shende,
Of herte crye you heere mercy,		And with her trowandyse to blende
That I have been so recheles		A fool is eythe to bigyle,	3955
To tamen hym, withouten lees		But may I lyve a litel while,
Of my foly I me repente,	3905	He shal forthenke his fair semblaunt "
Now wole I hool sette myn entente		And with that word came Drede avaunt,
To kepe, bothe lowde and stille,		Which was abashed, and in gret fere,
Bialacoil to do youre wille "		Whanne he wiste Jelousie was there	3960
"Shame, shame," seyde Jelousy,		He was for drede in sich affray
"To be bytrashed gret drede have I	3910	That not a word durste he say,
Leccherie hath clombe so hye		But quakyng stod full still aloon,
That almost bled is myn ye,		Til Jelousie his weye was gon,
No wonder is, if that drede have I		Save Shame, that him not forsok	3965
Overall regnyth Lecchery,		Bothe Drede and she ful sore quok,
Whos myght growith nyght and day	3915	That atte laste Drede abreyde,
Bothe in cloistre and in abbey		And to his cosyn Shame seide
Chastite is werreyed overall		"Shame," he seide, "in sothfastnesse,
Therefore I wole with siker wall		To me it is gret hevynesse	3970
Close bothe roses and roser		That the noyse so fer is go,
I have to longe in this maner	3920	And the sclandre of us twoo
Left hem unclousid wilfully,		But sithe that it is byfalle,
Wherefore I am right inwardly		We may it not ageyn calle,
Sorowfull, and repente me		Whanne onys sprongen is a fame	3975
But now they shall no lenger be		For many a yeer withouten blame
Unclousid, and yit I drede sore,	3925	We han ben, and many a day,
I shall repente ferthermore,		For many an Aprill and many a May
For the game goth all amys		We han passed, not ashamed,
Counsell I must newe, ywys		Till Jelousie hath us blamed	3980
I have to longe trusted thee,		Of mystrust and suspicioun,
But now it shal no lenger be,	3930	Causeles, withoute enchesoun
For he may best, in every cost,		Go we to Daunger hastily,
Disceyve, that men tristen most		And late us shewe hym openly
I see wel that I am nygh shent,		That he hath not aright wrought,	3985
But if I sette my full entent		Whanne that he sette nought his thought
Remedye to purveye	3935	To kepe better the purposse,
Therefore close I shall the weye		In his doying he is not wise

He hath to us do gret wrong, That hath suffred now so long	3990	Let thi werkis fer and ner Be like thi name, which is Daunger "	4040
Bialacoil to have his wille, All his lustes to fulfillle He must amende it utterly, Or ellys shall he vlaynesly Exiled be out of this lond,	3995	Thanne, all abawid in shewing, Anoon spak Drede, right thus seying, And seide, "Daunger, I drede me That thou ne wolt busy be To kepe that thou hast to kepe,	4045
For he the werre may not withstond Of Jelousie, nor the greef, Sith Bialacoil is at myscheef "		Whanne thou shuldist wake, thou art aslepe Thou shalt be greved, certeynly, If the asprie Jelousy, Or if he fynde thee in blame He hath to-day assailed Shame,	4050
To Daunger, Shame and Drede anoon The righte weye ben [a]-lgoon	4000	And chased away with gret manace Bialacoil out of this place, And swereth shortly that he shall Enclose hym in a sturdy wall, And all is for thi wikkednesse,	4055
The cherl thei founden hem afor, Liggyng undr an hawethorn, Undr his heed no pilowe was, But in the stede a trusse of gras He slombred, and a nappe he tok,	4005	For that thee faleth straungenesse Thyn herte, I trowe, be failed all, Thou shalt repente in speciall, If Jelousie the soothe knewe, Thou shalt forthenke and sore rewe "	4060
Tyl Shame pitously hym shok, And grete manace on hym gan make "Why slepist thou, whanne thou shulde wake?"		With that the cherl his clubbe gan shake, Frounyng his eyen gan to make, And hidous chere, as man in rage For ire he brente in his visage Whanne that he herd hym blamed soo, He seide, "Out of my wit I goo!"	4065
Quod Shame, "thou doist us vylanye! Who tristith thee, he doth folye,	4010	To be discomfyt I have gret wrong Certis, I have now lyved to long, Sith I may not thus closer kepe All quyk I wolde be dolven deepe,	4070
To kepe roses or botouns, Whanne thei ben faire in her sesouns Thou art woxe to familiere, Where thou shulde be straunge of chere, Stout of thi port, redy to greve	4015	If any man shal more repera Into this gardyn, for foule or faire Myn herte for ire goth a-fere, That I let any entre heere I have do folie, now I see,	4075
Thou doist gret folye for to leve Bialacoil hereinne to calle The yonder man to shenden us alle Though that thou slepe, we may here Of Jelousie gret noyse heere	4020	But now it shall amended bee Who settith foot heere ony more, Truly he shall repente it sore, For no man moo into this place Of me to entre shal have grace	4080
Art thou now late? Rus up in hy, And stop sone and delyverly All the gappis of the haye Do no favour, I thee praye It fallith nothyng to thy name	4025	Lever I hadde with swerdus tweyne Thurghoute myn herte, in every veyne, Perced to be, with many a wounde, Thanne slouthe shulde in me be founde From hennes forth, by nyght or day,	4085
To make faire semblaunt, where thou mast blame Yf Bialacoil be sweete and free, Dogged and fell thou shuldist be, Froward and outrageous, ywis, A cherl chaungeth that curteis is	4030	I shall defende it, if I may, Withouten ony excepcioun Of ech maner condicioun,
This have I herd ofte in seying, That man[ne] may, for no dauntyng, Make a sperhawk of a bosard Alle men wole holde thee for musard, That debonair have founden thee,	4035
It sittith thee nought curteis to be To do men plesaunce or servise, In thee it is recreaundise

And if I it eny man graunt, Holdeth me for recreaunt "	4090	And Wikkid-Tunge, thurgh his falshede, Causeth all my woo and drede
Thanne Daunger on his feet gan stond, And hente a burdoun in his hond Wroth in his ire, ne lefte he nought, But thurgh the verger he hath sought If he myght fynde hole or trace,	4095	On me he leaeth a pitous charge, Bicause his tunge was to large Now it is tyme, shortly that I Telle you som thyng of Jelousy,	4143
Wherethurgh that me mot forth-by pace, Or ony gappe, he dide it close, That no man myghte touche a rose Of the roser all aboute He shitteth every man withoute	4100	That was in gret suspicioun Aboute hym lefte he no masoun, That stoon coude leye, ne querroure, He hirede hem to make a tour And first, the roses for to kep, Aboute hem made he a diche deep, Right wondir large, and also brood, Upon the whiche also stod	4150
Thus day by day Daunger is wers, More wonderful and more dyvers, And feller eke than evere he was For hym full ofte I synge "allas!", For I ne may nought, thurgh his ire,	4105	And right gret thikkenesse eke it bar Aboute, it was founded squar, An hundred fademe on every sid, It was all liche longe and wid Lest ony tyme it were assayled, Ful wel aboute it was batayled, And rounde envroun eke were set Ful many a riche and fair touret	4155
Recovere that I moost desire Myn herte, allas, wole brest a-twoo, For Bialacoul I wratthed soo For certeynly, in every membre I quake, whanne I me remembre	4110	At every corner of this wall Was set a tour full pryncipall, And everich hadde, withoute fable, A porte-colys defensable To kepe of enemyes, and to greve, That there her force wolde preve	4165
Of the botoun, which I wolde Full ofte a day sen and biholde And whanne I thenke upon the kiss, And how myche joye and bliss I hadde thurgh the savour swete,	4115	And eke amydde this purprise Was maad a tour of gret maistrise, A fairer saugh no man with sight, Large and wid, and of gret myght They [ne] dredde noon assaut	4170
For want of it I grone and grete Me thenkith I fele yit in my nose The swete savour of the Rose, And now I woot that I mot goo So fer the freshe floures froo,	4120	The temperure of the mortar Was maad of lycour wonder der, Of quykke lym, persant and egre, The which was tempred with vynegre The stoon was hard, of ademant,	4181
To me full welcome were the deth Absens therof, allas! me sleeth For whilom with this Rose, allas! I touched nose, mouth, and face, But now the deth I must abide	4125	Wherof they made the fundament The tour was round, maad in compas, In all this world no riccher was, Ne better ordeigned therwithall Aboute the tour was maad a wall, So that bitwixt that and the tour Rosers were sette of swete savour, With many roses that thei bere,	4185
But Love consente another tyde That onys I touche may and kisse, I trowe my peyne shal nevere lisse, Theron is all my covetise, Which brent myn herte in many wise		And eke withynne the castell were Spryngoldes, gunnes, bows, and archers, And eke above, atte corners,	4194
Now shal repaire agayn sighinge, Long wacche on nyghtis, and no slepinge, Thought in wissingh, torment and woo, With many a turning to and froo, That half my peyne I can not telle	4131
For I am fallen into helle From paradys, and wel the more My turment greveth, more and more Anoeth now the bittrnesse, That I toforen have felt swetnesse	4135
	4140

Men seyn over the wall stonde
 Grete engynes, who were nygh honde
 And in the kernels, heere and there, 4195
 Of arblasters gret plente were,
 Noon armure myght her strok withstonde,
 It were foly to prece to honde
 Withoute the diche were lystes maad,
 With wall batayled large and brad, 4200
 For men and hors shulde not atteyne
 To neigh the dyche, over the pleyne
 Thus Jelousie hath enviroun
 Set aboute his garnysoun
 With walles rounde and diche dep, 4205
 Only the roser for to kep
 And Daunger, erly and late,
 The keyes kepte of the utter gate,
 The which openeth toward the eest
 And he hadde with hym atte leest 4210
 Thurtty servautes, echon by name
 That other gate kepte Shame,
 Which openede, as it was couth,
 Toward the partie of the south
 Sergeautes assigned were hir to 4215
 Ful many, hir wille for to doo Thanne Drede hadde in hir baille
 The keyyng of the constablerye Toward the north, I undirstond,
 That openyde upon the lyft hond, 4220
 The which for nothyng may be sure,
 But if she do busy cure,
 Erly on morowe and also late,
 Strongly to shette and barre the gate
 Of every thing that she may see 4225 Drede is aferd, wherso she be,
 For with a puff of litell wynd
 Drede is astonyed in hir mynd
 Therefore, for stelyng of the Rose,
 I rede hir nought the yate unclose 4230
 A foulis flight wol make hir flee,
 And eke a shadowe, if she it see Thanne Wikked-Tunge, full of envye,
 With soudiours of Normandye,
 As he that causeth all the bate, 4235
 Was keper of the fourthe gate,
 And also to the tother three
 He wente full ofte, for to see Whanne his lot was to wake anyght,
 His instrumētis wolde he dight, 4240
 For to blowe and make sown
 Ofte thanne he hath enchesoun,
 And walken oft upon the wall,
 Corners and wikettis overall

Full narwe serchen and espie, 4245
 Though he nought fond, yit wolde he Iye
 Discordaunt ever fro armonye,
 And distoned from melodie, Controve he wolde, and foule fayle,
 With hornepipes of Cornewaile 4250
 In floytes made he discordaunce,
 And in his musyk, with myschaunce!
 He wolde seyn, with notes newe,
 That he fond no womman trewe,
 Ne that he saugh never in his lyf 4255
 Unto hir husbonde a trewe wyf,
 Ne noon so ful of honeste
 That she nyl laughe and mery be,
 Whanne that she hereth, or may espie,
 A man speken of lecherie 4260 Everich of hem hath som vice Oon is dishonest, another is nyce,
 If oon be full of vylanye,
 Another hath a likerous ye,
 If oon be full of wantonesse, 4265
 Another is a chideresse Thus Wikked-Tunge — God yeve him
 shame! —
 Can putt hem everychon in blame,
 Withoute desert and causeles,
 He heth, though they ben gutles 4270
 I have pite to sen the sorwe
 That waketh bothe eve and morwe,
 To innocentis doith such grevaunce
 I pray God yeve him evel chaunce,
 That he ever so busy is 4275
 Of ony womman to seyn amys!
 Eke Jelousie God confound,
 That hath maad a tour so round,
 And made aboute a garisoun,
 To sette Bealacoil in prisoun, 4280
 The which is shet there in the tour,
 Ful longe to holde there sojour,
 There for to lyve in penaunce
 And for to do hym more grevaunce,
 Ther hath ordeyned Jelousie 4285
 An olde vekke, for to espie
 The maner of his gouvernaunce,
 The whiche devel, in hir enfaunce,
 Hadde lerned of loves art,
 And of his pleyes tok hir part, 4290
 She was expert in his servise
 She knew ech wrench and every gise
 Of love, and every wile,
 It was [the] harder hir to gle

- | | | | |
|--|------|---|------|
| Of Bealacoil she tok ay hede, | 4295 | To Bialacoil all for to tel, | |
| That evere he lyveth in woo and drede | | Whom I ne fond froward ne fel, | |
| He kepte hym koy and eke pryve, | | But tok a-gree all hool my play | |
| Lest in hym she hadde see | | But Love is of so hard assay, | 4350 |
| Ony foly countenance, | | That all at onys he reved me, | |
| For she knew all the olde daunce | 4300 | Whanne I wende best aboven to have be | |
| And aftir this, whanne Jelousie | | It is of Love, as of Fortune, | |
| Hadde Bealacoil in his baillie, | | That chaungeth ofte, and nyl contune, | |
| And shette hym up that was so fre, | | Which whilom wol on folk smyle, | 4355 |
| For seur of hym he wolde be, | | And glowmbe on hem another while, | |
| He trusteth sore in his castell, | 4305 | Now freend, now foo, [thow] shalt hir | |
| The stronge werk hym liketh well | | feel | |
| He dradde not that no glotouns | | For [in] a twynklyng turneth hir wheel, | |
| Shulde stele his roses or botouns | | She can writhe hir heed away, | |
| The roses weren assured all, | | This is the concours of hir play | 4360 |
| Defenced with the stronge wall | 4310 | She can areise that doth morne, | |
| Now Jelousie full well may be | | And whurle adown, and overturne | |
| Of drede devoid in liberte, | | Who sittith hiest, but as hir lust | |
| Whether that he slepe or wake, | | A fool is he that wole hir trust, | |
| For of his roses may noon be take | | For it is I that am come down, | 4365 |
| But I, allas' now morne shall, | 4315 | Thurgh change and revolucioun' | |
| Bicause I was withoute the wall, | | Sith Bealacoil mot fro me twynne, | |
| Full moche dool and moone I made | | Shet in the prisoun yond withynne, | |
| Who hadde wist what woo I hadde, | | His absence at myn herte I fele, | |
| I trowe he wolde have had pite | | For all my joye and all myn hele | 4370 |
| Love to deere hadde sold to me | 4320 | Was in hym and in the Rose, | |
| The good that of his love hadde I | | That but yon wal, which hym doth close, | |
| I wende a bought it all queyntly, | | Opene that I may hym see, | |
| But now, thurgh doublyng of my peyn, | | Love nyl not that I cured be | |
| I see he wolde it selle ageyn, | | Of the peynes that I endure, | 4375 |
| And me a newe bargeyn leere, | 4325 | Nor of my cruel aventure | |
| The which all-oute the more is deere, | | A, Bialacoil, myn owne deer' | |
| For the solas that I have lorn, | | Though thou be now a prisoner, | |
| Thanne I hadde it never aforn | | Kep atte leste thyn herte to me, | |
| Certayn, I am ful lik in deed | | And suffre not that it daunted be, | 4380 |
| To hym that cast in erthe his seed, | 4330 | Ne lat not Jelousie, in his rage, | |
| And hath joi of the newe spryng, | | Putten thyn herte in no servage | |
| Whanne it greneth in the gynnyng, | | Although he chastice thee withoute, | |
| And is also fair and fresh of flour, | | And make thy body unto hym loute, | |
| Lusty to seen, swoote of odour, | | Have herte as hard as dyamaunt, | 4385 |
| But er he it in sheves shere, | 4335 | Stedefast, and nought plaunt | |
| May falle a weder that shal it dere, | | In prisoun though thi body be, | |
| And make it to fade and falle, | | At large kep thyn herte free, | |
| The stalke, the greyn, and floures alle, | | A trewe herte wole not plie | |
| That to the tylyer is fordon | | For no manace that it may drye | 4390 |
| The hope that he hadde to soon | 4340 | If Jelousie doth thee payn, | |
| I drede, certeyn, that so fare I, | | Quyte hym his while thus agayn, | |
| For hope and travaile sikerly | | To venge thee, atte leest in thought, | |
| Ben me byraft all with a storm, | | If other way thou maist nought, | |
| The flour nyl seeden of my corn | | And in this wise sotilly | 4395 |
| For Love hath so avaunced me, | 4345 | Worche, and wyne the maistry | |
| Whanne I bigan my pryvite | | But yit I am in gret affray, | |

Lest thou do not as I say		For many a lover, in lovyng,	4450
I drede thou canst me gret maugre,		Hangeth upon hir, and trusteth faste,
That thou enprisoned art for me,	4400	Whiche leese her travel at the laste
But that [is] not for my trespas,		Of thyng to comen she woot right nought,
For thurgh me never discovred was		Therefore, if it be wysely sought,
Yit thyng that oughte be secree		Hir counseill foly is to take	4455
Wel more any is in me,		For many tymes, whanne she wole make
Than is in thee, of this myschaunce,	4405	A full good silogisme, I dreede
For I endure more hard penaunce,		That afturward ther shal in deede
Then ony can seyn or thynke,		Folwe an evell conclusioun
That for the sorwe almost I synke		This put me in confusioun,	4460
Whanne I remembre me of my woo,		For many tymes I have it seen,
Full nygh out of my witt I goo	4410	That many have bigyled been
Inward myn herte I feele blede,		For trust that they have set in Hope,
For comfortles the deth I drede		Which fell hem afturward a-slope	4464
Owe I not wel to have distresse,		But nevertheles, yit gladly she wolde
Whanne false, thurgh hir wikkednesse,		That he, that wole hym with hir holde,
And traitours, that arn envyous,	4415	Hadde alle tymes his purpos cler,
To noyen me be so corajous?		Withoute deceyte or ony wer
A, Bialacoul, full wel I see		That she desireth sikirly,
That they hem shape to disceyve thee,		Whanne I hir blamed, I dide foly	4470
To make thee buxom to her lawe,		But what avayleth hir good wille,
And with her corde thee to drawe,	4420	Whanne she ne may staunche my stounde
Where so hem lust, right at her will		ille?
I drede they have thee brought thertill		That helpith litel, that she may doo,
Withoute comfort, thought me sleeth,		Out-take biheest unto my woo
This game wole bryngge me to my deeth		And heeste certeyn, in no wise,	4475
For if youre goode wille I leese,	4425	Withoute yift, is not to prise
I mot be deed, I may not chese		Whanne heest and deede asunder variee,
And if that thou foryete me,		They doon [me have] a gret contrarie
Myn herte shal nevere in likyng be,		Thus am I possed up and down
Nor elleswhere fynde solas,		With dool, thought, and confusioun,	4480
If I be putt out of youre gras,	4430	Of my disese ther is no noumbre
As it shal never been, I hope,		Daunger and Shame me encumbre,
Thanne schulde I falle in wanhope		Drede also, and Jelousie,
Allas, in wanhope? nay, pardee!		And Wikked-Tunge, full of envie,
For I wole never dispered be		Of whiche the sharpe and cruel ire	4485
If hope me faile, thanne am I	4435	Full ofte me putte in gret martire
Ungracious and unworthy		They han my joye fully let
In hope I wole comforted be,		Sith Bialacoul they have bishet
For Love, whanne he bitaught hir me,		Fro me in prisoun wikkidly,
Seide that Hope, whereso I goo,		Whom I love so enterly	4490
Shulde ay be relees to my woo	4440	That it wole my bane bee
But what and she my baalis beete,		But I the sonner may hym see
And be to me curteis and sweete?		And yit moreover, wurst of alle,
She is in nothyng full certeyn		Ther is set to kepe, foule hir bifalle!
Lovers she putt in full gret peyn,		A rympled vekke, fer ronne in age,	4495
And makith hem with woo to deele	4445	Frowning and yelowe in hur visage,
Hir faire biheeste disceyveth feele,		Which in awayt lyth day and nyght,
For she wole byhote, sikirly,		That noon of him may have a sight
And failen aftir outrelly		Now mote my sorwe enforced be,
A! that is a full noyous thyng!		Full soth it is that Love yaf me	4500

Three wonder yiftes of his grace,
 Whiche I have lorn now in this place,
 Sith they ne may, withoute drede,
 Helpen but lytel, who taketh heede
 For here availeth no Swete-Thought, 4505
 And Sweete-Speche helpith right nought
 The thridde was called Swete-Lokyng,
 That now is lorn, without lesyng

Yiftes were faire, but not forthy
 They helpe me but symply, 4510
 But Bialacoil loosed be,

To gon at large and to be free
 For hym my lyf lyth all in doute,
 But if he come the rather oute
 Allas! I trowe it wole not ben! 4515

For how shuld I evermore hym sen?
 He may not out, and that is wrong,
 By cause the tour is so strong
 How shulde he out? by whos prowesse,
 Out of so strong a forteresse? 4520

By me, certeyn, it nyl be doo,
 God woot, I have no witt therto!
 But, wel I woot, I was in rage,
 Whonne I to Love dide homage
 Who was in cause, in sothfastnesse, 4525

But hurslf, Dame Idelnesse,
 Which me conveied, thurgh my praier,
 To entre into that faire verger
 She was to blame me to leve,
 The which now doth me soore greve 4530

A foolis word is nought to trowe,
 Ne worth an appel for to lowe,
 Men shulde hym snybbe bitirly,
 At pryme temps of his foly
 I was a fool, and she me leeved, 4535

Thurgh whom I am right nought releeved
 She accomplishid all my will,
 That now me greveth wondur ill
 Resoun me seide what shulde falle
 A fool myslyf I may well calle, 4540

That love asyde I had nat leyd,
 And trowed that Dame Resoun seid
 Resoun hadde bothe skile and ryght, Whanne she me blamed, with all hir myght,
 To medle of love, that hath me shent, 4545
 But certeyn, now I wole repent

And shulde I repente? Nay, parde!
 A fals traitour thanne shulde I be
 The develes engynnes wolde me take,
 If I my lord wolde forsake, 4550
 Or Bialacoil falsly bitraye

Shulde I at myscheef hate hym? Nay,

Sith he now, for his curtesie,
 Is in prisoun of Jelousie
 Curtesie certeyn dide he me, 4555

So mych that may not yolden be,
 Whanne he the hay passen me let,
 To kisse the Rose, faire and swet Shulde I therfore kunne hym mawgre?

Nay, certeynly, it shal not be, 4560
 For Love shall nevere, yif God wille,
 Here of me, thurgh word or wille,
 Offence or complaynt, more or lesse,
 Nerther of Hope nor Idilnesse

For certis, it were wrong that I 4565
 Hated hem for her curtesy

Ther is not ellys but suffre and thynke,
 And waken whanne I shulde wynke,
 Abide in hope, til Love, thurgh chaunce,
 Sende me socour or allegeaunce, 4570

Expectant ay till I may mete
 To geten mercy of that swete

Whilom I thenke how Love to me
 Seide he wolde take att gree

My servise, if unpaceience 4575
 Caused me to don offence

He seide, "In thank I shal it take,
 And high maister eke thee make,
 If wikkednesse ne reve it thee,
 But sone, I trowe, that shall not be" 4580

These were his wordis, by and by,
 It semede he lovede me trewely
 Now is ther not but serve hym wel,
 If that I thenke his thank to fel

My good, myn harm lyth hool in me, 4585
 In Love may no defaute be

For trewe Love ne failde never man, Sothly the faute mot nedys than —

As God forbede! — be founde in me,
 And how it cometh, I can not see 4590

Now late it goon as it may goo,
 Whether Love wole socoure me or sloo,

He may do hool on me his will I am so sore bounde hym till,

From his servise I may not fleen, 4595
 For lyf and deth, withouten wen,

Is in his hand, I may not chese,
 He may me doo bothe wyne and leese

And sith so sore he doth me greve, Yit, if my lust he wolde acheve, 4600

To Bialacoil goodly to be,
 I yeve no force what felle on me

For though I dye, as I mot nede,
 I praye Love, of his goodlyhede,

To Bialacoul do gentylnesse, 4605
 For whom I lyve in such distresse,
 That I mot deyen for penaunce
 But first, withoute repentaunce,
 I wole me confesse in good entent,
 And make in haste my testament, 4610
 As lovers doon that feelen smert
 To Bialacoul leve I myn hert
 All hool, withoute departyng,
 Or doublenesse of repentyng

Coment Raisoun vent a l'amant

Thus, as I made my passage 4615
 In compleynt and in cruel rage,
 And I not where to fynde a leche
 That couthe unto myn helpyng eche, Sodeynly agayn comen doun
 Out of hir tour I saugh Resoun, 4620
 Discret and wis and full plesaunt,
 And of hir port full avenaunt
 The righte weye she took to me,
 Which stod in gret perplexite,
 That was possed in every side, 4625
 That I nyst where I myght abide,
 Till she, demurely sad of cher, Seide to me, as she com ner —
 "Myn owne freend, art thou yit greved?
 How is this quarell yit acheved 4630
 Of Loves side? anoon me telle
 Hast thou not yit of love thi fille?
 Art thou not wery of thy servise,
 That the hath [greved] in sich wise?
 What joye hast thou in thy lovyng? 4635
 Is it swete or bitter thyng?
 Canst thou yit chese, lat me see,
 What best thi socour myghte be?
 Thou servest a full noble lord,
 That maketh thee thrall for thi reward,
 Which ay reneweth thy turment, 4641
 With foly so he hath thee blent
 Thou fell in myscheef thilke day
 Whanne thou didist, the sothe to say,
 Obeysaunce and eke homage 4645
 Thou wroughtest nothyng as the sage,
 Whanne thou bicam his liege man,
 Thou didist a gret foly than,
 Thou wistest not what fell therto,
 With what lord thou haddist to do 4650
 If thou haddist hym wel knowe,
 Thou haddist nought be brought so lowe,

For if thou wistest what it wer,
 Thou noldist serve hym half a yeer,
 Not a weke, nor half a day, 4655
 Ne yit an hour, withoute delay,
 Ne never yloved paramours,
 His lordshipp is so full of shours Knowest hym ought?"

L'amant "Ye, dame, parde!"

Raisoun "Nay, nay"

L'amant "Yis, I"

Raisoun "Wherof? late se" 4660

L'amant "Of that he seide I shulde
 be

Glad to have sich lord as he,
 And maister of sich seignorie"

Raisoun "Knowist hym no more?"

L'amant "Nay, certis, I,
 Save that he yaf me rewles there, 4665
 And wente his wey, I nyste where,
 And I abood, bounde in balaunce"

Raisoun "Lo, there a noble consaunce!
 But I wille that thou knowe hym now,
 Gynnyng and eende, sith that thou 4670
 Art so angussshous and mat,
 Disfigured out of astat,

Ther may no wreche have more of woo,
 Ne caytyf noon enduren soo
 It were to every man sityng 4675
 Of his lord have knowleching,
 For if thou knewe hym, out of doute,
 Lightly thou shulde escapen oute
 Of the prisoun that marreth thee"

L'amant "Ye, dame, sith my lord is he,
 And I his man, maad with myn hond, 4681
 I wolde right fayn undrstonde
 To knowe of what kynde he be,
 If any wolde enforme me"

Raisoun "I wolde," seide Resoun, "thee ler, 4685
 Sith thou to lerne hast sich desir,
 And shewe thee, withouten fable,
 A thyng that is not demonstrable
 Thou shalt [wite], withouten science,
 And knowe withouten experience, 4691
 The thyng that may not knowen be,
 Ne wist, ne shewid, in no degre
 Thou maist the sothe of it not witen,
 Though in thee it were witen
 Thou shalt not knowe therof more, 4697
 While thou art reuled by his lore,
 But unto hym that love wole flee,
 The knotte may unclosed bec,

Which hath to thee, as it is founde,		And newe fruyt, fillid with wynter tene
So long be knet and not unbounde	4700	It is a slowe, may not forbere	4751
Now set wel thyn entencioun,		Raggis, ribaned with gold, to were,
To here of love discripcioun		For also wel wol love be set
Love, it is an hatefull pees,		Under raggis, as riche rochet,
A free acquaintance, withoute relees,		And eke as wel be amourettes	4755
A trouthe, fret full of falsheede,	4705	In mourning blak, as bright burnettes
A sikernesse all set in drede		For noon is of so mochel pris,
In herte is a disperying hope,		Ne no man founden so wys,
And full of hope, it is wanhope,		Ne noon so high is of parage,
Wis woodnesse, and wod resoun,		Ne no man founde of wit so sage,	4760
A swete perell, in to droun,	4710	No man so hardy ne so wight,
An hevvy burthen, lyght to bere,		Ne no man of so mochel myght,
A wikked wawe, away to were		Noon so fulfilled of bounte,
It is Caribdis perilous,		That he with love may daunted be
Disagreable and gracious		All the world holdith this wey,	4765
It is discordaunce that can accorde,	4715	Love makith all to goon myswey,
And accordaunce to discorde		But it be they of yvel lyf,
It is kunnyng withoute science,		Whom Genus cursith, man and wyf,
Wisdom withoute sapience,		That wrongly werke ageyn nature
Wit withoute discrecioun,		Noon such I love, ne have no cure	4770
Havour withoute possessioun	4720	Of sich as Loves servautes ben,
It is sike hele and hool seknesse,		And wole not by my counsel fien
A thirst drowned in dronkenesse,		For I ne preise that lovyng
And helthe full of maladie,		Wherthurgh men, at the laste eendying,
And charite full of envie,		Shall calle hem wrecchus full of woo,	4775
And hunger full of habundaunce,	4725	Love greveth hem and shendith soo,
And a gredy suffisaunce,		But if thou wolt wel Love eschewe,
Delit right full of hevynesse,		For to escape out of his mewe,
And drierhed full of gladnesse,		And make al hool thi sorwe to slake,
Bitter swetnesse and swete errour,		No bettur counsel maist thou take	4780
Right evell savoured good savour,	4730	Than thynke to fleen wel, iwis,
Sin that pardoun hath withynne,		May nought helpe elles, for wite thou this,
And pardoun spotted withoute [with]		If thou fle it, it shal flee thee,
synne		Folowe it, and folowen shal it thee "
A peyne also it is joious,		L'amant Whanne I hadde herde all
And felonye right pitous,		Resoun seyn,	4785
Also pley that selde is stable,	4735	Which hadde spilt hir speche in veyn,
And stedefast [stat], right mevable,		"Dame," seide I, "I dar wel sey,
A strengthe, weyked to stonde upright,		Of this avaunt me wel I may
And feblenesse full of myght,		That from youre scole so devyaunt
Wit unavisid, sage fohe,		I am, that never the more avaunt	4790
And joie full of turmentre,	4740	Right nought am I thurgh youre doctrine
A laughter it is, weping ay,		I dulle under youre discipline,
Reste, that traveyleth nyght and day,		I wot no more than [I] wist er,
Also a swete helle it is,		To me so contrarie and so fer
And a soroufull paradys,		Is every thing that ye me ler,	4795
A plesaunt gayl, and esy prisoun,	4745	And yit I can it all par cuer
And, full of froste, somer sesoun,		Myn herte foryetith therof right nought,
Pryme temps full of frostes whit,		It is so writen in my thought,
And May devoide of al delit,		And depe greven it is so tendr
With seer branches, blossoms ungrene,		That all by herte I can it rendre,	4800

And rede it over comunely, But to mysif lewedist am I But sith ye love discreven so, And lak and preise it, bothe twoo, Defyneth it into this letter, 4805 That I may thenke on it the better, For I herde never diffyne it er, And wilfully I wolde it ler " Raisoun "If love be serched wel and sought, It is a syknesse of the thought 4810 Annexed and knet bitwixe tweyne, Which male and female, with oo cheyne, So frely byndith that they nyll twynne, Whether so therof they leese or wynne The roote springith, thurgh hoot brennyng Into disordinat desiryng 4816 For to kissen and embrace, And at her lust them to solace Of other thyng love recchith nought, But setteth her herte and all her thought More for delectacioun 4821 Than ony procreacioun Of other fruyt by engendring, Which love to God is not plesyng, For of her body fruyt to get 4825 They yeve no force, they are so set Upon deht to pley in-feere And somme have also this manere, To feynen hem for love sek, Sich love I preise not at a lek 4830 For paramours they do but feyne, To love truly they disdeyne They falsen ladies traitoursly, And swern hem othes utterly, With many a lesyng and many a fable, And all they fynden deceyvable 4836 And whanne they han her lust geten, The hoothe ernes they al foryeten Wymmen, the harm they bien full sore, But men thus thenken evermore, 4840 That lasse harm is, so mote I the, Deceyve them than deceyved be, And namely, where they ne may Fynde non other mene way For I wot wel, in sothfastnesse, 4845 [What man] doth now his bisynesse With ony womman for to dele, For ony lust that he may fele, But if it be for engendrure, He doth trespas, I you ensure 4850 For he shulde setten all his wil	To geten a likly thyng hym til, And to sustene, if he myght, And kepe forth, by kyndes right, His owne lyknesse and semblable, 4855 For bycause al is corrumpable, And faile shulde successioun, Ne were ther generacioun Oure sectas stren for to save Whanne fader or moder am in grave, 4860 Her children shulde, whanne they ben deede, Full diligent ben, in her steede, To use that werk on such a wise That oon may thurgh another rise Therefore sette Kynde therynne delit, 4865 For men therynne shulde hem delit, And of that deede be not erk, But ofte sithes haunt that werk For noon wolde drawe therof a draught, Ne were delit, which bath hym kaught Thus hath sotlled dame Nature, 4871 For noon goth right, I thee ensure, Ne hath entent hool ne parfit, For her desir is for delyt, The which forteneed crece and eke 4875 The pley of love for-ofte seke, And thrall hemsif, they be so nyce, Unto the prince of every vice For of ech synne it is the rote, Unleful lust, though it be sote, 4880 And of all yvell the racyne, As Tulus can determyne, Which in his tyme was full sage, In a bok he made 'Of Age,' Where that more he preyseth eelde, 4885 Though he be croked and unweelde, And more of commendacioun Than youthe in his discrepcioun For youthe set bothe man and wyf In all perell of soule and lyf, 4890 And perell is, but men have grace, The tyme of youthe for to pace Withoute ony deth or distresse, It is so full of wyldenesse, So ofte it doth shame or damage 4895 To hym or to his lynage It ledith man now up, now down, In mochel dissolucioun, And makith hym love yvell company, And lede his lyf disrewilly, 4900 And halt hym payed with noon estat Withynne hymself is such debat,
---	--

He chaungith purpos and entent, And yalt [him] into som covent, To lyven aftir her emprise, 4905 And lesith fredom and fraunchuse, That Nature in hym hadde set, The which ageyn he may not get, If he there make his mansioun, For to abide professioun 4910 Though for a tyme his herte absente, It may not fayle, he shal repente, And eke abide thilke day To leve his abit, and gon his way, And lesith his worshupp and his name, And dar not come ageyn for shame, 4916 But al his lyf he doth so mourne, By cause he dar not hom retourne Freedom of kynde so lost hath he That never may recured be, 4920 But if that God hym graunte grace That he may, er he hennes pace, Conteyne undir obedience Thurgh the vertu of pacience For Youthe sett man in all folye, 4925 In unthrift and ribaudie, In leccherie and in outrage, So ofte it chaungith of corage Youthe gynneth ofte sich bargeyn, That may not eende withouten peyn 4930 In gret perell is sett youthede, Delit so doth his bridil leede Delit thus hangith, dred thee nought, Bothe mannys body and his thought, Only thurgh Youthe, his chaumberere, 4935 That to don yvell is customere, And of nought elles taketh hede But onoly folkes for to lede Into disport and wyldenesse, So is [she] froward from sadnesse 4940 But Eelde drawith hem therfro, Who wot it nought, he may wel goo Demande of hem that now arn olde, That whilom Youthe hadde in holde, 4945 Which yit remembre of tendir age, Hou it hem brought in many a rage, And many a foly therynne wrought But now that Eelde hath hem thourgh- sought, They repente hem of her folye, That Youthe hem putte in iupardye, 4950 In perell, and in myche woo, And made hem ofte amys to do, And suen yvell companye,	Riote and avouterie But Eelde can ageyn restreyne 4955 From sich foly, and refreyne, And sette men by her ordinaunce In good reule and in governaunce But yvell she spendith hir servise, For no man wole hir love neither prise, She is hated, this wot I wel 4961 Hir acqueyntaunce wolde noman fel, Ne han of Elde companye, Men hate to be of hir alye For no man wolde bicomen old, 4965 Ne dye, whanne he is yong and bold And Eelde marvelth right gretly, Whanne thei remembre hem inwardly Of many a perelous emprise, 4969 Which that they wrought in sondry wise, Houevere they myght, withoute blame, Escape away withoute shame, In youthe, withoute damage Or reproof of her lynage, Loss of membre, shedyng of blod, 4975 Perell of deth, or los of good Wost thou nought where Youthe abit, That men so preisen in her wit? With Delit she halt sojour, For bothe they dwellen in oo tour 4980 As longe as Youthe is in sesoun, They dwellen in oon mansioun Delit of Youthe wole have servise To do what so he wole devise, And Youthe is redy evermore 4985 For to obey, for smert of sore, Unto Delit, and hym to yve Hir servise, while that she may lyve Where Elde abit, I wol thee telle Shortly, and no while dwelle, 4990 For thidir byhoveth thee to goo If Deth in youthe thee not sloo, Of this journey thou maist not faile With hir Labour and Travaile Logged ben, with Sorwe and Woo, 4995 That never out of hir court goo Peyne and Distresse, Syknesse and Ire, And Malencoly, that angry sere, Ben of hir paleys senatours, Gronyng and Gruochyng, hir herberjours, The day and nyght, hir to turmente, 5001 With cruell Deth they hir presente, And tellen hir, erliche and late, That Deth stont armed at hir gate Thanne brynge they to her remembraunce
--	---

- The foly dedis of hir infaunce, 5006
 Whiche causen hir to mourne in woo
 That Youthe hath hir bigiled so,
 Which sodeynly away is hasted
 She wepeth the tyme that she hath wasted, Compleynyng of the preterit, 5011
 And the present, that not abit,
 And of hir olde vanite,
 That, but aforn hir she may see
 In the future som socour, 5015
 To leggen h.r of hir dolour,
 To graunte hir tyme of repentaunce,
 For her synnes to do penaunce,
 And at the laste so hir governe
 To wynde the joy that is eterne, 5020
 Fro which go bakward Youthe hir made,
 In vanite to droune and wade
 For present tyme abidith nought,
 It is more swift than any thought
 So litel while it doth endure 5025
 That ther nys compte ne mesure
 But hou that evere the game go,
 Who list to have joi and mirth also
 Of love, be it he or she,
 High or lowe, who it be, 5030
 In fruyt they shulde hem delyte,
 Her part they may not elles quyte,
 To save hemsif in honeste
 And yt full many on I se
 Of wymmen, sothly for to seyn, 5035
 That desire and wolde fayn
 The pley of love, they be so wilde,
 And not covete to go with childe
 And if with childe they be, perchaunce,
 They wole it holde a gret myschaunce,
 But whatsomever woo they fele, 5041
 They wole not pleyne, but concele,
 But if it be ony fool or nyce,
 In whom that Shame hath no justice
 For to delyt echon they drawe, 5045 That haunte this werk, bothe high and lawe,
 Save sich that arn worth right nought,
 That for money wole be bought
 Such love I preise in no wise,
 Whanne it is goven for covertise 5050
 I preise no womman, though she be wood,
 That yeveth hirsif for ony good
 For litel shulde a man telle
 Of hir, that wole hir body selle,
 Be she mayde, be she wyf, 5055
 That quyk wole selle hir, bi hir lif
- Hou faire chere that evere she make,
 He is a wrecche, I undirtake,
 That loveth such on, for swete or sour,
 Though she hym calle hir paramour, 5060
 And laugheth on hym, and makith hym feeste
 For certeynly no such beeste
 To be loved is not worthy,
 Or bere the name of druery
 Noon shulde hir please, but he were wood,
 That wole dispoile hym of his good 5066
 Yit nevertheles, I wol not sey
 But she, for solas and for pley,
 May a jewel or other thyng
 Take of her loves fre yevyng, 5070
 But that she aske it in no wise,
 For drede of shame of covertise
 And she of hirs may hym, certeyn, Withoute sclandre yeven ageyn,
 And joyne her hertes togidre so 5075
 In love, and take and yeve also Trowe not that I wolde hem twynne, Whanne in her love ther is no synne,
 I wol that they togedre go,
 And don al that they han ado, 5080
 As curteis shulde and debonaire,
 And in her love beren hem faire, Withoute vice, bothe he and she,
 So that alwey, in honeste,
 Fro foly love they kepe hem cler, 5085
 That brenneth hertis with his fer,
 And that her love, in ony wise,
 Be devoide of covertise
 Good love shulde engendrid be
 Of trewe herte, just, and secre, 5090
 And not of such as sette her thought
 To have her lust and ellis nought, So are they caught in Loves las,
 Truly, for bodily solas
 Fleshly delit is so present 5095
 With thee, that sette all thyn entent Withoute more (what shulde I glose?)
 For to gete and have the Rose,
 Which makith thee so mat and wood
 That thou desirest noon other good 5100
 But thou art not an inche the nerre,
 But evere abidist in sorwe and werre,
 As in thi face it is sene,
 It makith thee bothe pale and lene,
 Thy myght, thi vertu goth away 5105
 A sory gest, in goode fay,
 Thou herberedest than in thyn inn,

The God of Love whanne thou let inn'
 Wherefore I rede, thou shette hym oute,
 Or he shall greve thee, out of doute, 5110
 For to thi profit it wol turne,
 If he nomore with thee sojourne
 In gret myscheef and sorwe sonken
 Ben hertis, that of love arn drunken,
 As thou peraventure knowen shall, 5115
 Whanne thou hast lost thy tyme all,
 And spent thy youthe in ydilnesse,
 In waste, and wofull lustynesse
 If thou maist lyve the tyme to se
 Of love for to delyvered be, 5120
 Thy tyme thou shalt biwepe sore,
 The whiche never thou maist restore,
 For tyme lost, as men may see,
 For nothyng may recovered be
 And if thou scape yit, atte laste, 5125
 Fro Love, that hath thee so faste Knytt and bounden in his las,
 Certeyn I holde it but a gras
 For many oon, as it is seyn,
 Have lost and spent also in veyn, 5130
 In his servise, withoute socour,
 Body and soule, good and tresour,
 Wit, and strengthe, and eke richesse,
 Of which they hadde never redresse"
 Thus taught and preched hath Resoun,
 But Love spLite hir sermoun, 5136
 That was so ymped in my thought,
 That hir doctrine I sette at nought
 And yitt ne seide she never a del
 That I ne undirstod it wel, 5140
 Word by word, the mater all,
 But unto Love I was so thrall,
 Which callith overall his pray,
 He chasith so my thought alway,
 And holdith myn herte undir his sel 5145
 As trust and trew as ony stel,
 So that no devocioun
 Ne hadde I in the sermoun
 Of dame Resoun, ne of hir red,
 It tok no sojour in myn hed 5150
 For all yede out at oon ere
 That in that other she dide lere
 Fully on me she lost hir lore,
 Hir speche me greved wondir sore
 Than unto hir for ire I seide, 5155
 For anger, as I dide abraide
 "Dame, and is it youre wille algate
 That I not love, but that I hate Alle men, as ye me teche?

For if I do aftir youre speche, 5160
 Sith that ye seyn love is not good,
 Thanne must I nedis say with mood,
 If I it leve, in hatrede ay
 Lyven, and voide love away
 From me, [and ben] a synfull wrecche 5165
 Hated of all [that love] that tecche
 I may not go noon other gate,
 For other must I love or hate
 And if I hate men of-newe
 More than love, it wol me rewe, 5170
 As by youre preching semeth me,
 For Love nothing ne preisth thee
 Ye yeve good counsel, sikurly,
 That prechith me alday that I
 Shulde not Loves lore alowe 5175
 He were a fool, wolde you not trowe!
 In speche also ye han me taught
 Another love, that knowen is naught,
 Which I have herd you not repreve,
 To love ech other, by youre leve, 5180
 If ye wolde diffyne it me,
 I wolde gladly here, to se,
 At the leest, if I may lere
 Of sondry loves the manere"

Rarsoun "Certis, freend, a fool art thou, 5185

Whan that thou nothyng wolt allow
 That I for thi profit say
 Yit wole I sey thee more in fay,
 For I am redy, at the leste,
 To accomplishe thi requeste, 5190
 But I not where it wole awayle,
 In veyn, perautre, I shal travayle Love ther is in sondry wise,
 As I shal thee heere devise
 For som love leful is and good, 5195
 I mene not that which makith thee wood,
 And bringith thee in many a fit,
 And ravysshith fro thee al thi wit,
 It is so merveilous and queynt,
 With such love be no more aqueynt 5200

*Comment Rarsoun
 diffinist amiste*

Love of freendshipp also ther is,
 Which makith no man don amys,
 Of wille knytt bitwixe two,
 That wole not breke for wele ne woo,
 Which long is likly to contune, 5205

Whanne wille and goodis ben in comune, Grounded by Goddis ordinaunce, Hool, withoute discordeance, With hem holdyng comune Of all her good in charite, 5210 That ther be noon excepcioun Thurgh chaungyng of entencioun, That ech helpe oter at her neede, And wisely hele bothe word and dede, Trewe of menyng, devoide of slouthe, 5215 For witt is nought withoute trouthe, So that the ton dar all his thought Seyn to his freend, and spare nought, As to hymself, without dredyng To be discovered by wreyng 5220 For glad is that conjuncioun, Whanne ther is noon suspecioun [Ne lak in hem], whom they wolde prove That trewe and parfit weren in love For no man may be amyable, 5225 But if he be so ferme and stable That fortune chaunge hym not, ne blynde, But that his freend allwey hym fynde, Bothe pore and riche, in oo stat For if his freend, thurgh ony gat, 5230 Wole compleyne of his poverte, He shulde not bide so long til he Of his helpyng hym requere, For good dede, don thurgh praere, Is sold and bought to deere, iwys, 5235 To hert that of gret valour is For hert fulfilled of gentilnesse Can yvel demene his distresse, And man that worthy is of name To asken often hath gret shame 5240 A good man brenneth in his thought For shame, whanne he axeth ought He hath gret thought and dredeth ay For his disese, whanne he shal pray His freend, lest that he warned be, 5245 Til that he preve his stabilte But whanne that he hath founden oon That trusty is and trewe as ston, And assaed hym at all, And founde hym stedefast as a wall 5250 And of his freendshipp be certeyn He shal hym shewe bothe joye and peyn, And all that [he] dar thynke or sey, Withoute shame, as he wel may For how shulde he ashamed be 5255 Of such on as I tolde thee? For whanne he woot his secre thought,	The thridde shal knowe therof right nought, For tweyne of noumbre is bet than thre In every counsell and secre 5260 Repreve he dredeth never a deel, Who that bisett his wordis wel, For every wis man, out of drede, Can kepe his tunge til he se nede, And foolcs can not holde her tunge, 5265 A foolcs belle is soone runge Yit shal a trewe freend do more To helpe his felowe of his sore, And socoure hym, whanne he hath neede, In all that he may don in deede, 5270 And gladder [be] that he hym plesith, Than his felowe that he esith And if he do not his requeste, He shal as mochel hym moleste As his fellow, for that he 5275 May not fulfill his volunte Fully, as he hath requered If bothe the hertis Love hath fered, Joy and woo they shull depart, And take evenly ech his part 5280 Half his anoy he shal have ay, And comfort [him] what that he may, And of his blisse parte shal he, If love wel departed be And whilom of this amyte 5285 Spak Tullius in a ditee, 'Man shulde maken his request Unto his freend, that is honest, And he goodly shulde it fulfillle, But it the more were out of skile, 5290 And otherwise not graunte therto, Except oonly in causes twoo If men his freend to deth wolde drive, Lat hym be busy to save his lyve, Also if men wolen hym assayle, 5295 Of his wurshipp to make hym faile, And hyndren hym of his renoun, Lat hym, with full entencioun, His dever don in ech degre That his freend ne shamed be, 5300 In thise two caas with his myght, Taking no kep to skile nor right, As fer as love may hym excuse, This oughte no man to refuse This love that I have told to thee 5305 Is nothing contrarie to me, This wole I that thou folowe wel, And leve the tother everydel
---	---

This love to vertu all entendith, The tothr fooles blent and shendith	5310	And as she groweth, so groweth it Of this love — here what I sey! — The riche men are loved ay, And namely tho that sparand ben, That wole not wasshe her hertes clen Of the filthe nor of the vice	5360 5365
Another love also there is, That is contrarie unto this, Which desir is so constreynd That [it] is but wille feyned		Of gredy brennyng avarice The riche man full fonned is, ywys, That weneth that he loved is If that his herte it undirstod, It is not he, it is his good,
Away fro trouthe it doth so varie That to good love it is contrarie, For it maymeth, in many wise, Sike hertis with coveitise All in wynnyng and in profit Sich love settith his delit	5315 5320	He may wel witen in his thought, His good is loved, and he right nought For if he be a nygard ek, Men wole not sette by hym a lek, But haten hym, this is the soth	5370 5375
This love so hangeth in balaunce That, if it lese his hope, perchaunce, Of lucre, that he is sett upon, [It] wole faile and quenche anon, For no man may be amerous, Ne in his lyvying vertuous,	5325 5330	Lo, what profit his catell doth! Of every man that may hym see It geteth hym nought but enmyte But he amende hym of that vice, And knowe hymself, he is not wys	5380
But he love more, in mood, Men for hemself than for her good For love that profit doth abide Is fals, and bit not in no tyde	5330 5335	Certys, he shulde ay freendly be, To gete hym love also ben free, Or ellis he is not wise ne sage Nomore than is a goot ramage That he not loveth, his dede proveth,	5385
[This] love cometh of dame Fortune, That litel while wol contune, For it shal chaungen wonder soone, And take eclips, right as the moone, Whanne she is from us lett	5335 5340	Whan he his richesse so wel loveth That he wole hide it ay and spare, His pore freendis sen forfare, To kepen ay his purpos, Til for drede his yen clos,	5390
And hir hornes to shewe derke, That part where she hath lost hir lyght Of Phebus fully, and the sight, Til, whanne the shadowe is overpast, She is enlumyned ageyn as fast, Thurgh the brightnesse of the sonne	5340 5345	How shulde love withynne hym be, Whanne in his herte is no pite? That he trespasseth, wel I wat, For ech man knowith his estat,	5395 5400
bemes, That yeveth to hir ageyn hir lemes That love is right of sich nature, Now is faire, and now obscure, Now bright, now clipsi of manere, And whilom dym, and whilom clere	5345 5350	For wel hym ought to be reproved That loveth nought, ne is not loved But sithe we arn to Fortune comen, And han oure kermoun of hir nomen, A wondr will y telle thee now,	5405
As soone as Poverte gynneth take, With mantel and wedis blake Hidith of love the light away, That into nyght it turneth day It may not see richesse shyne Till the blake shadowes fyne	5350 5355	Thou herdust never sich oon, I trow I not where thou me leven shall, Though sothfastnesse it be all, As it is writen, and is soth, That unto men more profit doth	5410
For, whanne Richesse shyneth bright, Love recovereth ageyn his light, And whanne it fairth he wol flit,		The froward Fortune and contrarie,

Than the swote and debonaire And if thee thynke it is doutable, It is thurgh argument provable, For the debonaire and softe	5415	With men whanne hir lust to dwelle, Makith hem to leese her consaunce, And nonrshith hem in ignoraunce	5465
Falsith and biglith ofte, For lyche a moder she can cherish, And mylken as doth a norys, And of hir goode to hem deles,	5420	But froward Fortune and pervers, Whanne high estatis she doth revers, And maketh hem to tumble down Of hir whel, with sodeyn tourn,	5470
And yeveth hem part of her joweles, With gret riches and dignite, And hem she hoteth stablute In a stat that is not stable,	5425	And from her riches doth hem fle, And plongeth hem in poverte, As a stepmoder envyous, And leith a plastre dolorous	5475
But chaungyng ay and variable, And fedith hem with glorie veyn, And worldly blisse noncerteyn Whanne she hem settith on hir whel,	5430	Unto her hertis, wounded egre, Which is not tempered with vynegre, But with poverte and indigence, For to shewe, by experience,	5480
Thanne wene they to be right wel, And in so stable stat withalle, That never they wene for to falle And whanne they sette so highe be,	5435	In whom no man shulde affy, Nor in hir yeftis have faunce, She is so full of variaunce — Thus kan she maken high and lowe,	5485
They wene to have in certeynte Of hertly freendis so gret noumbre, That nothyng myght her stat encombre They trust hem so on every side,	5440	Whanne they from riches arn throwe, Fully to knowen, withoute were, Freend of effect and freend of chere, And which in love weren trewe and stable,	5490
Wenyng with hem they wolde abide In every perell and myschaunce, Withoute chaunge or variaunce, Bothe of catell and of good,	5445	And whiche also weren variable, After Fortune, her goddesse, In poverte, outhur in richesse For all she yeveth here, out of drede,	5495
And also for to spende her blood, And all her membrs for to spille, Oonly to fulfille her wille They maken it hool in many wise,	5450	Unhapp bereveth it in dede, For Infortune lat not oon Of freendis, whanne Fortune is gon, I mene tho freendis that wole fle	5500
And hoten hem her full servise, How sore that it do hem smerte, Into her very naked sherte! Herte and all so hool they yive,	5455	Anoon as entreth poverte And yit they wole not leve hem so, But in ech place where they go They calle hem 'wrecche,' scorne, and blame,	5505
For the tyme that they may lyve, So that with her flaterie They maken foolis glorifie Of her wordis spekyng,	5460	And of her myshappe hem diffame, And namely siche as in richesse Pretendid moost of stablenesse, Whanne that they sawe hym sett on lofte,	5510
And han therof a rejoyсыng, And trowe hem as the Evangile, And it is all falsheede and gile, As they shal afturwardes se,	5465	And weren of hym socoured ofte, And most yholpe in all her neede, But now they take no maner heede, But seyn in voice of flaterie,	5515
Whanne they arn falle in poverte, And ben of good and catell bare, Thanne shulde they sen who freendis ware For of an hundred, certeynly,	5470	That now apperith her folye, Overall where so they fare, And syngre, 'Go, farewel, feldefare' All suche freendis I beshrewe,	5520
Nor of a thousand full scarsly, Ne shal they fynde unnethis oon, Whanne poverte is comen upon For this Fortune that I of telle,	5475	For of trewe ther be to fewe But sothfast freendis, what so bitide, In every fortune wolen abide,	5525

Ther han her hertis in such noblesse	5515	Offrid hym in many wise
That they nyl love for no richesse,		Hert, and body, and servise
Nor for that Fortune may hem sende		What wolde he thanne ha yove to ha
Ther wolen hem socoure and defende,		bought
And change for softe ne for sore,		To knowen openly her thought,	5570
For who is freend, loveth evermore	5520	That he now hath so clerly seen?
Though men drawe swerd his freend to slo,		The lasse bigled he shulde have ben,
He may not hewe her love a-two		And he hadde thanne perceyved it,
But, in cas that I shall sey,		But richesse nold not late hym wit
For pride and ire lese it he may,		Wel more avauntage doth hym than,
And for reprove by nycete,	5525	Sith that it makith hym a wise man,	5576
And discovering of privitye,		The gret myscheef that he receyveth,
With tonge woundyng, as feloun,		Than doth richesse that hym deceyveth
Thurgh venemous detraccioun		Richesse riche ne makith nought
Frend in this cas wole gon his way,		Hym that on tresour set his thought,	5580
For nothyng greve hym more ne may,	5530	For richesse stont in suffisaunce
And for nought ellis wole he fie,		And nothyng in habundaunce,
If that he love in stabilite		For suffisaunce all oonly
And certeyn, he is wel bigon,		Makith men to lyve richely
Among a thousand that fyndith oon		For he that at myches tweyne	5583
For ther may be no richesse	5535	Ne valued is in his demeigne,
Ageyns frendshipp, of worthynesse,		Lyveth more at ese, and more is riche,
For it ne may so high atteigne		Than doth he that is chuche,
As may the valour, soth to seyne,		And in his berne hath, soth to seyn,
Of hym that loveth trew and well		An hundred mowis of whete greyn,	5590
Frendshipp is more than is catell	5540	Though he be chapman or marchaunt,
For freend in court ay better is		And have of gold many besaunt
Than peny in purs, certis,		For in the getyng he hath such woo,
And Fortune myshappyng		And in the keypyng drede also,
Whanne upon men she is fallyng,		And set evermore his busynesse	5595
Thurgh mysturnyng of hir chauce,	5545	For to encrease, and not to lesse,
And casteth hem out of balaunce,		For to aument and multiply
She makith, thurgh hir adversite,		And though on hepis it lye hym by,
Men full clerly for to se		Yit never shal make his Richesse
Hym that is freend in existence		Asseth unto his gredynesse	5600
From hym that is by apparence	5550	But the povre that rechith nought,
For Ynfortune makith anon		Save of his lyffode, in his thought,
To knowe thy freendis fro thy foon,		Which that he getith with his travaile,
By experience, right as it is		He dredith nought that it shall faile,
The which is more to prease, ywis,		Though he have lytel worldis good,	5605
Than is myche richesse and tresour	5555	Mete, and drynke, and esy food,
For more doth profit and valour		Upon his travel and lyvvyng,
Poverte and such adversite		And also suffisaunt clothyng
Bifore, than doth prosperite,		Or if in syknesse that he falle,
For the toon yeveth conysaunce,		And lothe mete and drynke withalle,	5610
And the tother ignoraunce	5560	Though he have nought his mete to by,
And thus in poverte is in dede		He shal bithynke hym hastily,
Trouthe declared fro falsheede,		To putte hym oute of all daunger,
For feynte frendis it wole declare,		That he of mete hath no myster,
And trewe also, what wey they fare		Or that he may with lytel ek	5615
For whanne he was in his richesse,	5565	Be founden, while that he is sek,
These freendis, ful of doublenesse,		Or that men shull hym beren in hast

To lyve til his syknesse be past,
 To som maysondew biside,
 He cast nought what shal hym bitide 5620
 He thenkth nought that evere he shall Into ony syknesse fall

And though it falle, as it may be,
 That all betyme spare shall he
 As mochel as shal to hym suffice, 5625

While he is sik in ony wise,
 He doth [it] for that he wole be Content with his poverté
 Withoute nede of ony man

So myche in litel have he can, 5630
 He is apared with his fortune,
 And for he nyl be importune
 Unto no wight, ne onerous,
 Nor of her goodes covetous,
 Therefore he spareth, it may wel ben, 5635
 His pore estat for to susten

Or if hym lust not for to spare,
 But suffrith forth, as noght ne ware,
 Atte last it hapneth, as it may,
 Right unto his laste day, 5640

And taketh the world as it wolde be,
 For evere in herte thenkth he,
 The sonner that deth hym slo,
 To paradys the sonner go

He shal, there for to lyve in blisse, 5645
 Where that he shal noo good misse Thider he hopith God shal hym sende
 Aftir his wrechchid lyves ende

Pictagoras hymself rehersed
 In a book that 'The Golden Verses' 5650
 Is clepid, for the nobilite
 Of the honourable ditee —

'Thanne, whanne thou gost thy body
 fro,

Fre in the air thou shalt up go,
 And leven al humanite, 5655
 And purely lyve in deite'

He is a fool, withouten were,
 That trowith have his cowntre heere
 'In erthe is not oure cowntre,'
 That may these clerkis seyn and see 5660

In Boece of Consolacioun,
 Where it is maked menciou
 Of oure contre pleyn at the ye,
 By teching of philosophie,

Where lewid men myght lere wit, 5665
 Whoso that wolde translaten it
 If he be sich that can wel lyve Aftir his rente may hym yive,

And not desireth more to have Than may fro poverté hym save, 5670

A wise man seide, as we may seen,
 Is no man wrecched, but he it wen,
 Be he kyng, knyght, or ribaud
 And many a ribaud is mery and baud,

That swynkith, and berith, bothe day and
 nyght, 5675

Many a burthen of gret myght,
 The whiche doth hym lasse offense
 For he suffrith in pacience

They laugh and daunce, trippe and synge,
 And ley not up for her lyvyng, 5680
 But in the taverné all dispendith

The wynnynng that God hem sendith Thanne goth he, fardeles for to ber,
 With as good chere as he dide er,

To swynke and traveile he not feynith,
 For for to robben he disdeynith, 5685

But right anoon aftir his swynk
 He goth to taverné for to drynk
 All these ar riche in abundaunce,

That can thus have suffisaunce 5690
 Wel more than can an usurere, As God wel knowith, withoute were.

For an usurer, so God me se, Shal nevere for richesse riche be,
 But evermore pore and indigent, 5695
 Scarce and gredy in his entent

For soth it is, whom it displese,
 Ther may no marchaunt lyve at ese,
 His herte in sich a waite is sett

That it quyk brenneth [more] to get, 5700
 Ne never shal ynogh have geten,
 Though he have gold in gerneris yeten,

For to be nedey he dredith sore
 Wherefore to geten more and more
 He set his herte and his desir, 5705

So hote he brennyth in the fir
 Of covetise, that makith hym wood
 To purchace other mennes good

He undirtakith a gret peyne,
 That undirtakith to drynke up Seyne,
 For the more he drynkith, ay 5711
 The more he leveth, the soth to say

Thus is thurst of fals getyng,
 That last ever in coveryng,
 And the angwisshe and distresse 5715

With the fir of gredynesse
 She fightith with hym ay, and stryvethe,
 That his herte asondre ryvethe,
 Such gredynesse hym assaylith

- That whanne he most hath, most he failth Physiens and advocates 5721
 Gon right by the same yates,
 They selle her science for wynnyng,
 And haunte her craft for gret getyng
 Her wynnyng is of such swetnesse 5725
 That if a man falle in siknesse,
 They are full glad, for her ences,
 For by her wille, withoute lees,
 Everich man shulde be sek,
 And though they die, they sette not a lek
 After, whanne they the gold have take,
 Full litel care for hem they make 5732
 They wolde that fourty were seke at onys, Ye, two hundred, in flesh and bonys,
 And yet two thousand, as I gesse, 5735
 For to encrecen her richesse
 They wole not worchen, in no wise,
 But for lucre and covetise,
 For fysic gynneth first by fy,
 The physicien also sothely, 5740
 And sithen it goth fro fy to sy
 To truste on hem, it is foly,
 For they nyl, in no maner gre,
 Do right nought for charite
 Eke in the same secte ar sett 5745
 All tho that prechen for to get Worshipes, honour, and richesse
 Her hertis arn in gret distresse,
 That folk lyve not holly
 But aboven all, specialy, 5750
 Sich as prechen [for] veynglorie,
 And toward God have no memorie,
 But forth as ypocrites trace,
 And to her soules deth purchase,
 And outward shewen holynesse, 5755
 Though they be full of cursidnesse
 Not liche to the apostles twelve,
 They deceyve other and hemselfe, Bigled is the giler than
 For prechyng of a cursed man, 5760
 Though [it] to other may profite, Hymself it avaletth not a myte,
 For ofte good predicacioun
 Cometh of evel entencioun
 To hym not valith his preching, 5765
 All helpe he other with his teching,
 For where they good ensauple take,
 There is he with veynglorie shake
 But late us leven these prechoures,
 And speke of hem that in her toures 5770
 Hepe up hir gold, and faste shette,
- And sore theron her herte sette
 They neither love God ne drede,
 They kepe more than it is nede,
 And in her bagges sore it bynde, 5775
 Out of the sonne and of the wynde,
 They putte up more than nede ware,
 Whanne they seen pore folk forfare,
 For hunger die, and for cold quake,
 God can wel vengeaunce therof take! 5780
 Three gret myscheves hem assailith,
 And thus in gadring ay travaylith,
 With mvche peyne they wyne richesse,
 And drede hem holdith in distresse,
 To kepe that they gadre faste, 5785
 With sorwe they leve it at the laste,
 With sorwe they bothe dye and lyve,
 That unto richesse her hertis yive,
 And in defaute of love it is
 As it shewith ful wel, iwys 5790
 For if these gredy, the sothe to seyn, Loveden and were loved ageyn,
 And good love regned overall,
 Such wikkidnesse ne shulde fall,
 But he shulde yeve that most good had To hem that weren in nede bustad, 5796
 And lyve withoute false usure,
 For charite full clene and pure
 If they hem yeve to goodness,
 Defenyng hem from ydelnesse, 5800
 In all this world thanne pore noon
 We shulde fynde, I trowe, not oon
 But chaunged is this world unstable,
 For love is overall vendable
 We se that no man loveth now, 5805
 But for wynnyng and for prow,
 And love is thralled in servage,
 Whanne it is sold for avauntage
 Yit wommen wole her bodyes selle, Suche soules gcth to the devel of helle!

Fragment C

- Whanne Love hadde told hem his entente, 5811
 The baronage to councel wente
 In many sentences they fille,
 And dyversely they seide hir wille,
 But aftir discord they accorded, 5815
 And her accord to Love recorded
 "Sir," seiden they, "we ben at on,
 Bi evene accord of everichon,
 Out-take Richesse al oonly,

- That sworn hath ful hauteynly, 5820
 That she the castel nyf not assaile,
 Ne smyte a strok in this bataile,
 With darte, ne mace, spere, ne knyf,
 For man that spekith or berith the lyf,
 And blameth youre emprise, iwys, 5825
 And from oure hoost departed is,
 Atte leste wey, as in this plyt,
 So hath she this man in dispit
 For she seith he ne loved hir never,
 And therefore she wole hate hym evere 5830
 For he wole gadre no tresor,
 He hath hir wrath for evermor
 He agylte hir never in other caas,
 Lo, heere all hoodly his trespas'
 She seith wel that this other day 5835
 He axide hir leve to gon the way
 That is clepid To-Moche-Yevyng,
 And spak full faire in his prayng,
 But whanne he praiede hir, pore was he,
 Therefore she warned hym the entre 5840
 Ne yit is he not thryven so
 That he hath geten a peny or two,
 That quytyly is his owne in hold
 Thus hath Richesse us alle told,
 And whanne Richesse us this recorded,
 Withouten hir we ben accorded 5845
 And we fynde in oure accordaunce
 That Fals-Semblant and Abstaunce,
 With all the folk of her bataille,
 Shull at the hyndre gate assayle, 5850
 That Wikkid-Tunge hath in keypyng,
 With his Normans, full of janglyng
 And with hem Curtesie and Largesse,
 That shull shewe her hardynesse
 To the olde wyf that kepte so harde 5855
 Fair-Welcomyng withynne her warde
 Thanne shal Delit and Wel-Heelynge
 Fonde Shame adown to brynge,
 With all her oost, erly and late,
 They shull assaillen that ilke gate 5860
 Agaynes Drede shall Hardynesse
 Assayle, and also Sikernesse,
 With all the folk of her ledyng,
 That never wist what was fleyng
 Fraunchise shall fight, and eke Pite, 5865
 With Daunger, full of cruelte
 Thus is youre hoost ordeyned wel Doun shall the castell every del,
 If everich do his entent,
 So that Venus be present, 5870
 Youre modir, full of vasselage,
- That can ynough of such usage
 Withouten hir may no wight spede
 This werk, neithur for word ne deede,
 Therefore is good ye for hir sende, 5875
 For thurgh hir may this werk amende"
 "Lordynges, my modir, the goddesse,
 That is my lady and my maistresse,
 Nis not [at] all at my willyng,
 Ne doth not all my desuryng 5880
 Yit can she som tyme don labour,
 Whanne that hir lust, in my socour,
 Al my nedes for to acheve,
 But now I thenke hir not to greve
 My modir is she, and of childhede 5885
 I bothe worshipe hir, and eke drede,
 For who that dredith sire ne dame,
 Shal it abyen in body or name
 And, natheles, yit kunne we Sende aftir hir, if nede be, 5890
 And were she nygh, she comen wolde,
 I trowe that nothyng myght hir holde
 Mi modir is of gret prowesse,
 She hath tan many a forteresse,
 That cost hath many a pound, er thus,
 There I nas not present, ywis 5895
 And yit men seide it was my dede,
 But I com never in that stede, Ne me ne likith, so mote I the,
 That such toures ben take withoute
 me 5900
 For-why me thenkith that, in no wise,
 It may ben clepid but marchandise
 Go bye a courser, blak or whit,
 And pay therefore, than art thou quyrt
 The marchaunt owth thee right nought, Ne thou hym, whanne thou [hast] it bought 5905
 I wole not sellyng clepe yevyng,
 For sellyng axeth no guerdonyng
 Here lith no thank ne no merit,
 That oon goth from that other al quyrt 5910
 But this sellyng is not semblable,
 For whanne his hors is in the stable,
 He may it selle ageyn, parde,
 And wynnen on it, such hap may be,
 All may the man not leese, iwys, 5915
 For at the leest the skyn is hus
 Or ellis, if it so butide
 That he wole kepe his hors to ride,
 Yit is he lord ay of his hors
 But thilke chaffare is wel wors, 5920
 There Venus entremetith ough

For whoso such chaffare hath bought, He shal not worchen so wisely That he ne shal leese al outerly Bothe his money and his chaffare,	5925	But I wole never be forsworn Syth Richesse hath me failed heere, She shal abyte that trespas ful dere, Atte leeste wey, but [she] hir arme With swerd, or sparth, or gysarme For certis, sith she loveth not me, Fro thulke tyme that she may se The castell and the tour toshake,	5975
But the seller of the ware The prys and profit have shall Certeyn, the bier shal leese all, For he ne can so dere it bye To have lordship and full maistrie,	5930	In sory tyme she shal awake If I may grype a riche man, I shal so pulle hym, if I can, That he shal in a fewe stoundes Lese all his markis and his poundis	5980
Ne have power to make lettyng, Neithir for yift ne for prechyng, That of his chaffare, maugre his, Another shal have as moche, iwis, If he wol yeve as myche as he,	5935	I shal hym make his pens outslynge, But they in his gerner sprynge, Oure maydens shal eke pluk hym so That hym shal neden fetheres mo, And make hym selle his lond to spende, But he the bet kunne hym defende	5985
Or for right nought, so happe may, If he can flater hir to hir pay Ben thanne sicke marchauntz wise? No, but fooles in every wise,	5940	Pore men han maad her lord of me, Although they not so myghty be That they may fede me in delit, I wol not have hem in despit No good man hateth hem, as I gesse, For chynche and feloun is Richesse, That so can chase hem and dispise, And hem defoule in sondry wise	5990
Whanne they bye such thyng wilfully, There as they leese her good fully But natheles, this dar I saye, My modir is not wont to paye, For she is neither so fool ne nyce	5945	They loven full bet, so God me spede, Than doth the riche, chynchy gnede, And ben, in good feith, more stable And trewer and more serviable, And therefore it suffisith me Her goode herte and her leaute They han on me set all her thought, And therefore I forgete hem nought	5995
To entremete hir of sich vice But truste wel, he shal pay all, That repent of his bargeyn shall, Whanne poverte putte hym in distresse, All were he scolar to Richesse,	5950	Than doth the riche, chynchy gnede, And ben, in good feith, more stable And trewer and more serviable, And therefore it suffisith me Her goode herte and her leaute They han on me set all her thought, And therefore I forgete hem nought I wolde hem bringe in gret noblesse, If that I were god of richesse, As I am god of love sothly, Sich routhe upon her pleynt have I Therefor I must his socour be, That peyneth hym to serven me, For if he deide for love of this, Thanne semeth in me no love ther is "	6000
That is for me in gret yernyng, Whanne she assentith to my willyng But [by] my modir, sent Venus, And by hir fader Saturnus, That hir engendride by his lyf —	5955	That ye reherce, and we wote wel Thilk oth to holde is resonable, For it is good and covenantable That ye on riche men han sworn For, sir, this wote we wel biforn If riche men don you homage, That is as fooles don outrage, But ye shull not forsworn be,	6005
But not upon his weddid wyf! — Yit wole I more unto you swer, To make this thyng the sikerer, Now by that feith and that leaute That I owe to all my brithren frene,	5960
Of which ther nys wight undir heven That kan her fadris names nevern, So dyverse and so many ther be That with my modir have be prive! Yit wolde I swere, for sikirnesse,	5965
The pol of helle to my witnessse, Now drynke I not this yeer clarre, If that I lye or forsworn be! (For of the goddes the usage is That whoso hym forswereth amys Shal that yeer drynke no clarre)	5970
Now have I sworn ynough, pardee, If I forswere me, thanne am I lorn,			6025

Ne lette therfore to drynke clarre,
 Or pyment makid fresh and newe
 Ladies shull hem such pepir brewre,
 If that they fall into her laas,
 That they for woo mowe seyn 'allas!' 6030 Ladies shullen evere so curteis be
 That they shal quyte youre oth all free
 Ne sekith never othir vicare,
 For they shal speke with hem so faire
 That ye shal holde you pained full wel, 6035
 Though ye you medle never a del
 Late ladies worche with her thyngis,
 They shal hem telle so fele tidynges,
 And moeve hem eke so many requestis
 Bi flateri, that not honest is, 6040
 And therto yeve hem such thankynges,
 What with kysyng, and with talkynges,
 That, certis, if they trowed be,
 Shal never leve hem lond ne fee
 That it nyl as the moeble fare, 6045
 Of which they first delyverid are Now may ye telle us all youre wille,
 And we youre heestes shal fulfille
 But Fals-Semblant dar not, for drede
 Of you, sir, medle hym of this dede, 6050
 For he seith that ye ben his foo,
 He not if ye wole worche hym woo
 Wherefore we pray you alle, beau sire,
 That ye forgyve hym now your ire, 6054
 And that he may dwelle, as your man,
 With Abstynence, his dere lemman, Thisoure accord and oure wille now "
 "Parfay," seide Love, I graunte it yow
 I wole wel holde hym for my man, 6059
 Now late hym come" — and he forth ran
 "Fals-Semblant," quod Love, "in this wise
 I take thee heere to my servise,
 That thou oure freendis helpe alway,
 And hyndre hem neithir nyght ne day,
 But do thy myght hem to releve, 6065
 And eke oure enemyes that thou greve
 Thyn be this myght, I graunte it thee,
 My kyng of harlotes shalt thou be,
 We wole that thou have such honour
 Certeyn, thou art a fals traitour, 6070
 And eke a thief, sith thou were born,
 A thousand tyme thou art forsworn
 But natheles, in oure heryng,
 To putte oure folk out of doutyng,
 I bidde thee teche hem, wostow how, 6075
 Bi som general signe now,
 In what place thou shalt founden be,

If that men had myster of thee,
 And how men shal thee best espye,
 For thee to knowe is gret maistrise 6080 Telle in what place is thyn hauntyng "
 "Sir, I have fele dyvers wonyng,
 That I kepe not rehersed be,
 So that ye wolde respiten me
 For if that I telle you the sothe, 6085
 I may have harm and shame bothe
 If that my felowes wisten it,
 My talis shulden me be quytt,
 For certeyn, they wolde hate me,
 If ever I knewe her cruelte 6090
 For they wolde overall holde hem stille
 Of trouthe that is ageyne her wille,
 Suche tales kepen they not here
 I myght eftsoone bye it full deere,
 If I seide of hem ony thing 6095
 That ought displeisith to her heryng
 For what word that hem prikke or biteth,
 In that word noon of hem delteth,
 Al were it gospel, the evangile,
 That wolde reprove hem of her gile, 6100
 For they are cruel and hauteyn
 And this thyng wot I well, certeyn,
 If I speke ought to peure her loos,
 Your court shal not so well be cloos
 That they ne shall wite it atte last 6105
 Of good men am I nought agast,
 For they wole taken on hem nothyng,
 Whanne that they knowe al my menyng,
 But he that wole it on hym take,
 He wole hymself suspicious make, 6110
 That he his lyf let covertly
 In Gile and in Ipocrisy
 That me engendred and yaf fostryng "
 "They made a full good engendryng," Quod Love, "for whoso sothly telle, 6115
 They engendred the devel of helle!
 But nedely, howsoevere it be," Quod Love, "I wole and charge thee
 To telle anon thy wonyng places, Heryng ech wight that in this place is,
 And what lyf that thou lyvest also, 6121
 Hide it no lenger now, wherto?
 Thou most discovere all thi wurchyng,
 How thou servest, and of what thyng, Though that thou shuldist for thi sothsawe 6125
 Ben al tobeten and todrawe,
 And yt art thou not wont, pardee
 But natheles, though thou beten be,

- Thou shalt not be the first that so Hath for sothsawe suffred woo " 6130
"Sir, sith that it may liken you,
Though that I shulde be slayn right now,
I shal don youre comaundement,
For therto have I gret talent "
- Withouten wordis mo, right than, 6135
Fals-Semblant his sermon bigan,
And seide hem thus in audience
"Barouns, take heede of my sentence!
That wight that list to have knowing
Of Fals-Semblant, full of flatering, 6140
He must in worldly folk hym seke,
And, certes, in the cloistres eke
I wone nowhere but in hem tweye,
But not lyk even, soth to seye,
Shortly, I wole herberwe me 6145
There I hope best to huldrest be,
And certeynly, sikerest hidyng
Is undrnethe humblest clothing
Religiose folk ben full covert,
Seculer folk ben more appert 6150
But natheles, I wole not blame
Religious folk, ne hem diffame,
In what habit that ever they go Religoun umble, and trewe also,
Wole I not blame ne dispise, 6155
But I nyl love it, in no wise
I mene of fals religious,
That stoute ben and malicious,
That wolen in an abit goo,
And setten not her herte therto 6160
Religious folk ben al pitous,
Thou shalt not seen oon dispitous
They loven no pride ne no strif,
But humbly they wole lede her lyf,
With swich folk wole I never be, 6165
And if I dwelle, I feyne me
I may wel in her abit go,
But me were lever my nekke a-two,
Than lete a purpos that I take,
What covenaunt that ever I make 6170
I dwelle with hem that proude be,
And full of wiles and subtilte,
That worship of this world coveten,
And grete nedes kunnen espleiten,
And gon and gadren gret pitaunces, 6175
And purchase hem the acqueyntaunces
Of men that myghty lyf may leden,
And feyne hem pore, and hemself feden
With gode morcels delicious,
And drinken good wyn precious, 6180
- And preche us povert and distresse,
And fisshen hemsilf gret richesse
With wily nettis that they caste
It wole come foule out at the laste
They ben fro clene religoun went, 6185
They make the world an argument
That hath a foul conclusioun
'I have a robe of religoun, Thanne am I all religious '
This argument is all roignous, 6190
It is not worth a croked brere Abut ne makith neithir monk ne frere,
But clene lyf and devocioun
Makith gode men of religoun
Natheles, ther kan noon answeere, 6195
How high that evere his heed he shere
With rasour whetted never so kene,
That Gile in braunches kut thrittene,
Ther can no wight distincte it so,
That he dar sey a word therto 6200
But what herberwe that ever I take,
Or what semblant that evere I make,
I mene but gile, and folowe that,
For right no mo than Gibbe oure cat,
That awayteth mys and rattes to kyllen,
Ne entende I but to bigilen 6205
Ne no wight may by my clothing
Wite with what folk is my dwellyng,
Ne by my wordis yit, parde,
So softe and so plesaunt they be 6210
Bihold the dedus that I do,
But thou be blynd, thou oughtest so,
For, varie her wordis fro her deede,
They thanke on gile withoute dreede,
What maner clothing that they were, 6215
Or what estat that evere they bere, Lered or lewd, lord or lady, Knyght, squyer, burgeis, or bayly "
- Right thus while Fals-Semblant sermon-
eth,
Eftsones Love hym aresoneth, 6220
And brak his tale in his spekyng,
As though he had hym told lesyng,
And seide, "What, devel, is that I here?
What folk hast thou us nempned heere?
May men fynde religoun 6225
In worldly habitacioun?"
"Ye, sir, it folowith not that they Shulde lede a wikked lyf, parfey,
Ne not therfore her soules leese,
That hem to worldly clothes chese, 6230
For, certas, it were gret pitee

Men may in secular clothes see Florishen hooly religioun
 Full many a seynt in feild and toun,
 With many a virgine glorious, 6235
 Devout, and full religious,
 Han deied, that comun cloth ay beeren,
 Yit seyntes nevere the lesse they weren
 I cowde reken you many a ten,
 Ye, wel nygh, al these hooly wymmen,
 That men in churchis herie and seke, 6241
 Bothe maydens and these wyves eke,
 That baren full many a fair child heere, Wered alwey clothis seculere,
 And in the same dieden they, 6245
 That seyntes weren, and ben alwey
 The eleven thousand maydens deere
 That beren in heven hir ciergis clere,
 Of whiche men rede in churche and syngre,
 Were take in secular clothunge, 6250
 Whanne they resseyved martirdom,
 And wonnen hevene unto her hom
 Good herte makith the goode thought,
 The clothing yeveth ne reveth nought
 The goode thought and the working, 6255
 That makith the religioun flowryng, Ther lyth the good religioun,
 Aftir the right entencioun
 Whoso took a wethers skyn,
 And wrapped a gredy wolf theryn, 6260
 For he shulde go with lambis whyte, Wenest thou not he wolde hem bite?
 Yis, neverthelasse, as he were wood,
 He wolde hem wery and drinke the blood,
 And wel the rather hem disceyve, 6265
 For, sith they cowde not perceyve
 His treget and his cruelte,
 They wolde hym folowe, al wolde he fle
 If ther be wolves of sich hewe
 Amonges these apostis newe, 6270
 Thou hooly churche, thou maist be wailed!
 Sith that thy citee is assayled
 Though knyghtis of thyn owne table,
 God wot thi lordship is doutable!
 If ther enforce [hem] it to wynne, 6275
 That shulde defende it fro withynne, Who myght defense ayens hem make?
 Withoute strok it mot be take
 Of trepeget or mangonel,
 Without displaying of pensel 6280
 And if God nyl don it socour,
 But lat [hem] renne in this colour,
 Thou most thyn heestis laten be

Thanne is ther nought but yelde thee,
 Or yeve hem tribut, doutelees, 6285
 And holde it of hem to have pees,
 But gretter harm bitide thee,
 That they al maister of it be Wel konne they scorne thee withal,
 By day stuffen they the wall, 6290
 And al the nyght they mynen there Nay, thou planten most elleswhere Thyn ympes, if thou wolt fruyt have,
 Abid not there, thusilf to save
 But now pees! heere I turne ageyn 6295
 I wole nomore of this thing seyn,
 If I may passen me herby,
 I myghte maken you wery
 But I wole heten you alway
 To helpe youre freendis what I may, 6300
 So they wollen my company,
 For they be shent al outerly,
 But if so falle that I be Ofte with hem, and they with me
 And eke my lemman mote they serve,
 Or they shull not my love deserve 6305
 Forsothe, I am a fals traitour,
 God jugged me for a thief trichour Forsworn I am, but wel nygh non Wot of my gle, til it be don 6310 Though me hath many oon deth res-seyved,
 That my treget nevere aperceyved,
 And yit resseyveth, and shal resseyve,
 That my falsnesse shal nevere aperceyve
 But whoso doth, if he wis be, 6315
 Hym is right good be war of me,
 But so slugh is the deceyvyng
 [That to hard is the aperceyvyng,]
 For Protheus, that cowde hym change
 In every shap, homly and straunge, 6320
 Cowde nevere sich gle ne tresoun
 As I, for I com never in toun
 There as I myghte knowen be,
 Though men me bothe myght here and see Full wel I can my clothis chaunge, 6325
 Take oon, and make another straunge
 Now am I knyght, now chasteleyn,
 Now prelat, and now chapeleyn,
 Now prest, now clerk, and now forster,
 Now am I maister, now scoler, 6330
 Now monk, now chanoun, now baily, Whatever myster man am I Now am I prince, now am I page,
 And kan by herte every langage

Som tyme am I hor and old,	6335	Thanne have I pryvylegs large,
Now am I yong, stout, and bold,		That may of myche thung discharge
Now am I Robert, now Robyn,		For he may seie right thus, parde
Now Frere Menour, now Jacobyn,		'Sir preest, in shrift I telle it thee,	6390
And with me folwith my loteby,		That he, to whom that I am shryven,
To don me solas and company,	6340	Hath me assoled, and me yiven
That hight Dame Abstynence-Streyned,		Penaunce, sothly, for my synne,
In many a queynte array feyned		Which that I fond me guilty yane,
Ryght as it cometh to hir lykynge,		Ne I ne have nevere entencioun	6395
I fulfille al hir desyryng		To make double confessioun,
Somtyme a wommans cloth take I,	6345	Ne reherce eft my shrift to thee,
Now am I a mayde, now lady		O shrift is right ynough to me,
Somtyme I am religioun,		This oughte thee suffice wel,
Now lyk an anker in an hous		Ne be not rebel never a del	6400
Somtyme am I prioresse,		For certus, though thou haddist it sworn,
And now a nonne, and now abbesse,	6350	I wot no prest ne prelat born,
And go thurgh alle regiouns,		That may to shrift eft me constreyne,
Sekyng alle religiouns		And if they don, I wole me pleyne,
But to what ordre that I am sworn,		For I wot where to pleyne wel	6405
I take the strawe, and lete the corn		Thou shalt not streyne me a del,
To [blynde] folk [ther] I enhabit,	6355	Ne enforce me, ne not me trouble,
I axe nomore but her abit		To make my confessioun double
What wole ye more in every wise?		Ne I have non affeccioun
Right as me lyst, I me disgise		To have double absolucioun	6410
Wel can I wre me undr wede,		The firste is right ynough to me,
Unlyk is my word to my dede	6360	This latter assoulyng quyte I thee
Thus make I into my trappis falle,		I am unbounde, what maist thou fynde
Thurgh my pryveleges, alle		More of my synnes me to unbynde?
That ben in Cristendom alyve		For he, that myght hath in his hond,	6415
I may assoule, and I may shryve,		Of all my synnes me unbond
That no prelat may lette me,	6365	And if thou wolt me thus constreyne,
All folk, where evere thei founde be		That me mot nedis on thee pleyne,
I not no prelat may don so,		There shall no juggle imperial,
But it the pope be, and no mo,		Ne bisshop, ne official,	6420
That made thilk establisshing		Don jugement on me, for I
Now is not this a propre thing?	6370	Shal gon and pleyne me openly
But, were my sleightis aperceyved		Unto my shrifte-fadur newe,
[Ne shulde I more ben receyved,]		(That hight not Frere Wolf untrewel)
As I was wont, and wostow why?		And he shal cheveys hym for me,	6425
For I dide hem a tregetry		For I trowe he can hampre thee
But therof yeve I lytel tale,	6375	But, Lord! he wolde be wrooth withalle,
I have the silver and the male		If men hym wolde Frere Wolf calle!
So have I prechid, and eke shriven,		For he wolde have no pacience,
So have I take, so have me yiven,		But don al cruel vengeaunce	6430
Thurgh her foly, husbonde and wyf,		He wolde his myght don at the leeste,
That I lede right a joly lyf,	6380	Nothing spare for Goddis heeste
Thurgh symplesse of the prelaceye,		And, God so wys be my socour,
They knowe not al my gettetrie		But thou yeve me my Savyour
But forasmoche as man and wyf		At Ester, whanne it likith me,	6435
Shulde shewe her paroch-prest her lyf,		Withoute presyng more on thee,
Onys a yeer, as seith the book,	6385	I wole forth, and to hym gon,
Er ony wight his housel took,		And he shal housel me anon

For I am out of thi grucching, I kepe not dele with thee nothing ' 6440 Thus may he shryve hym, that forsaketh His paroch-prest, and to me taketh And if the prest wole hym refuse, I am full redy hym to accuse, And hym punysshē and hampre so 6445 That he his churche shal forgo But whoso hath in his felyng The consequence of such shryvyng, Shal sen that prest may never have myght To knowe the conscience aright 6450 Of hym that is undr his cure And this ageyns holy scripture, That biddith every heerde honest Have very knowing of his beest But pore folk that gone by strete, 6455 That have no gold, ne sommes grete, Hem wolde I lete to her prelates, Or lete her prestis knowe her states, For to me right nought yeve they " "And why?" "It is for they ne may, 6460 They ben so bare, I take no kep, But I wole have the fatte sheep, Lat parish prestas have the lene I yeve not of her harm a bene! And if that prelates grucchen it, 6465 That ougthen wroth be in her wit, To leese her fatte beestes so, I shal yeve hem a strok or two, That they shal leesen with force, Ye, bothe her mytre and her croce 6470 Thus jape I hem, and have do longe, My pryveleges ben so stronge " Fals-Semblant wolde have stynted heere, But Love ne made hym no such cheere That he was wery of his sawe, 6475 But for to make hym glad and fawe, He seide, "Telle on more specially Hou that thou servest untrewly Telle forth, and shame thee never a del, For, as thyn abit shewith wel, 6480 Thou semest an hooly heremyte " "Soth is, but I am an ypocrite " "Thou gost and prechest poverte " "Ye, sir, but richesse hath pouste " "Thou prechest abstinence also " 6485 "Sir, I wole fillen, so mote I go, My paunche of good mete and wyn, As shulde a maister of dyvyn, For how that I me pover feyne,	Yit alle pore folk I disdeyne 6490 I love bettir th'acqueyntaunce, Ten tymes, of the kyng of Fraunce Than of a pore man of mylde mod, Though that his soule be also god For whanne I see beggers quaelyng, 6495 Naked on myxnēs al stynkyng, For hungre crie, and eke for care, I entremete not of her fare They ben so pore and ful of pyne, They myght not oonys yeve me dyne, For they have nothing but her lyf 6501 What shulde he yeve that likketh his knyf? It is but foly to entremete, To seke in houndes nest fat mete Lete bere hem to the spitel anon, 6505 But, for me, comfort gete they noon But a riche sik usurer Wolde I visite and drawe ner, Hym wole I comferte and rehetē, For I hope of his gold to gete 6510 And if that wakkid deth hym have, I wole go with hym to his grave And if ther ony reprove me, Why that I lete the pore be, Wostow how I mot ascape? 6515 I sey, and swere hym ful rape, That riche men han more tecches Of synne than han pore wrecches, And han of counsel more mister, And therfore I wole drawe hem ner 6520 But as gret hurt, it may so be, Hath a soule in right gret poverte As soule in gret richesse, forsothe, Al be it that they hurten bothe For richesse and mendicitees 6525 Ben clepid two extremytees, The mene is cleped suffisaunce, Ther lyth of vertu the aboundaunce For Salamon, full wel I wot, In his Parablis us wrot, 6530 As it is knowe to many a wight, In his thrittethe chapitre right, 'God thou me kepe, for the pouste, Fro richesse and mendicite, For if a riche man hym dresse 6535 To thenke to myche on richesse, His herte on that so fer is set That he his creatour foryet, And hym that beggng wole ay greve, How shulde I bi his word hym leve? 6540 Unnethe that he nys a mycher
---	--

Forsworn, or ellis God is lyer '
 Thus seith Salamones sawes
 Ne we fynde writen in no lawis,
 And namely in oure Cristen lay, 6545
 (Whoso seith 'ye,' I dar sey 'nay')
 That Crist, ne his apostis dere,
 While that they walkide in erthe heere,
 Were never seen her bred beggyng,
 For they nolden beggen for nothing 6550
 And right thus were men wont to teche,
 And in this wise wolde it preche
 The maistres of divinite
 Somtyme in Parys the citee
 And if men wolde ther-geyn appose 6555
 The nakid text, and lete the glose,
 It myghte soone assoiled be,
 For men may wel the sothe see,
 That, parde, they myght aske a thing
 Pleylny forth, without begging 6560
 For they weren Goddis herdis deere,
 And cure of soules hadden heere,
 They nolde nothing begge her fode,
 For aftir Crist was don on rode,
 With her propre hondis they wrought, 6566
 And with travel, and ellis nought,
 They wonnen all her sustenaunce,
 And lyveden forth in her penaunce,
 And the remenaunt yave away
 To other pore folkis alway 6570
 They neither bilden tour ne halle,
 But ley in houses smale withalle
 A myghty man, that can and may,
 Shulde with his hond and body alway
 Wynne hym his fode in laboring, 6575
 If he ne have rent or sich a thing,
 Although he be religious,
 And God to serven curious
 Thus mot he don, or do trespas,
 But if it be in certeyn cas, 6580
 That I can reherce, if myster be,
 Right wel, whanne the tyme I se
 Sek the book of seynt Austyn,
 Be it in papir or perchemyn,
 There as he writ of these worchynges, 6585
 Thou shalt seen that noon excusynges
 A parfit man ne shulde seke
 Bi wordis ne bi dedis eke,
 Although he be religious,
 And God to serven curious, 6590
 That he ne shal, so mote I go,
 With propre hondis and body also,
 Gete his fode in laboring,

If he ne have proprete of thing
 Yit shulde he selle all his substaunce, 6595
 And with his swynk have sustenaunce,
 If he be parfit in bounte
 Thus han tho bookes told me
 For he that wole gon ydilly,
 And usith it ay besily 6600
 To haunten other mennes table,
 He is a trechour, ful of fable,
 Ne he ne may, by god resoun,
 Excuse hym by his orisoun
 For men bihoveth, in som gise, 6605
 Blynnne somtyme in Goddis servise
 To gon and purchasen her nede
 Men mote eten, that is no drede,
 And slepe, and eke do other thing,
 So longe may they leve prayng 6610
 So may they eke her praier blynnne,
 While that they werke, her mete to wyne Seynt Austyn wole therto accorde,
 In thilke book that I recorde
 Justman eke, that made lawes, 6615
 Hath thus forboden, by olde dawes
 'No man, up peyne to be ded, Mighty of body, to begge his bred,
 If he may swynke it for to gete,
 Men shulde hym rather mayme or bete,
 Or don of hym apert justice, 6621
 Than suffren hym in such malice '
 They don not wel, so mote I go,
 That taken such almesse so,
 But if they have som pryvelege, 6625
 That of the peyne hem wole allege
 But how that is, can I not see,
 But if the prince disseyved be,
 Ne I ne wene not, sikerly,
 That they may have it rightfully 6630
 But I wole not determine
 Of prynces power, ne defyne,
 Ne by my word comprende, iwys,
 If it so fer may strecche in this
 I wole not entremete a del, 6635
 But I trowe that the book seith wel,
 Who that takith almessis, that be Dewe to folk that men may se
 Lame, feble, wery, and bare, 6640
 Pore, or in such maner care, —
 That konne wynne hem never mo,
 For they have no power therto, —
 He eitth his owne dampnyng,
 But if he lye, that made al thing
 And if ye such a truaunt fynde, 6645

Chastise hym wel, if ye be kynde
 But they wolde hate you, percas,
 And, if ye fillen in her laas,
 They wolde eftsoonyis do you scathe,
 If that they myghte, late or rathe, 6650
 For they be not full pacient,
 That han the world thus foule blent
 And wiveth wel that [ther] God bad
 The good-man selle al that he had,
 And folowe hym, and to pore it yive, 6655
 He wolde not therfore that he lyve
 To serven hym in mendience,
 For it was nevere his sentence,
 But he bad wirken whanne that neede is,
 And folwe hym in goode dedis 6660
 Seynt Poul, that loved al hooly churche,
 He bad th'appostles for to wirche,
 And wynnyn her lyfode in that wise,
 And hem defendid truandise, 6664
 And seide, 'Wirkeith with youre honden'
 Thus shulde the thing be undirstonden
 He nolde, iwys, have bidde hem begging,
 Ne sellen gospel, ne prechyng,
 Lest they berafte, with her askyng,
 Folk of her catel or of her thing 6670
 For in this world is many a man
 That yeveth his good, for he ne can Werne it for shame, or ellis he Wolde of the asker delyvered be,
 And, for he hym encombrith so, 6675
 He yeveth hym good to late hym go
 But it can hem nothyng profite,
 They lese the yift and the meryte
 The goode folk, that Poul to preched, Profred hym ofte, whan he hem teched,
 Som of her good in charite 6681
 But therof right nothing tok he,
 But of his hondwerk wolde he gete, Clothes to wryen hym, and his mete" "Telle me thanne how a man may lyven,
 That al his good to pore hath yiven, 6686
 And wole but only bidde his bedis
 And never with hondes labour his nedes May he do so?"
 "Ye, sir"
 "And how?"
 "Sir, I wole gladly telle yow 6690
 Seynt Austyn seith a man may be
 In houses that han proprete,
 As Templers and Hospitelers,
 And as these Chanounys Regulars,
 Or White Monkes, or these Blake — 6695

I wole no mo ensamplis make —
 And take therof hus sustenyng,
 For therynne lyth no begging,
 But other weyes not, ywys,
 Yif Austyn gabbith not of this 6700
 And yit full many a monk laboureth,
 That God in hooly churche honoureth,
 For whanne her swynkyng is agon,
 They rede and synge in churche anon
 And for ther hath ben gret discord, 6705
 As many a wight may bere record,
 For the estat of mendience,
 I wole shortly, in youre presence,
 Telle how a man may begge at nede,
 That hath not wherwith hym to fede, 6710
 Mauge his felones jangelyngis,
 For sothfastnesse wole none hidyngis
 And yit, percas, I may abeye
 That I to yow sothly thus seye
 Lo, heere the caas especial 6715
 If a man be so bestial
 That he of no craft hath science,
 And nought desireth ignorence, Thanne may he go a-begging yerne,
 Til he som maner craft kan lerne, 6720
 Thurgh which withoute trauandyng,
 He may in trouthe have his lyvyng
 Or if he may don no labour,
 For elde, or syknesse, or langour,
 Or for his tendre age also, 6725
 Thanne may he yit a-begging go
 Or if he have, peraventure, Thurgh usage of his noriture,
 Lyved over deliciously,
 Thanne oughten good folk comunly 6730
 Han of his myscheef som pitee,
 And suffren hym also that he May gon aboute and begge his breed,
 That he be not for hungur deed
 Or if he have of craft kunnyng, 6735
 And strengthe also, and desuryng
 To wirken, as he hadde what,
 But he fynde neithur this ne that,
 Thanne may he begge til that he
 Have geten his necessite 6740
 Or if his wynnyng be so lite
 That his labour wole not acouyte Sufficiently al his lyvyng,
 Yit may he go his breed begging,
 Fro dore to dore he may go trace, 6745
 Til he the remenaunt may purchace
 Or if a man wolde undirtake

Ony emprise for to make
 In the rescous of oure lay,
 And it defenden as he may, 6750
 Be it with armes or lettrure,
 Or other covenable cure,
 If it be so he pore be,
 Thanne may he begge til that he
 May fynde in trouthe for to swynke, 6755
 And gete hym clothes, mete, and drynke, Swynke he with hondis corporell,
 And not with hondis esprituell
 In al thise caas, and in semblables,
 If that ther ben mo resonables, 6760
 He may begge, as I telle you heere,
 And ellis nought, in no manere,
 As William Seynt Amour wolde preche,
 And ofte wolde dispute and teche
 Of this mater all openly 6765
 At Parys full solempnely
 And, also God my soule blesse,
 As he had, in this steadfastnesse,
 The accord of the universite
 And of the puple, as semeth me 6770
 No good man oughte it to refuse,
 Ne ought hym therof to excuse,
 Be wroth or blithe whoso be,
 For I wole speke, and telle it thee,
 Al shulde I dye, and be putt down, 6775
 As was Seynt Poul, in derk prisoun,
 Or be eviled in this caas
 With wrong, as maister William was,
 That my moder, Ypocrysie,
 Banysshed for hir gret envye 6780
 Mi modir flemed hym Seynt Amour,
 The noble dide such labour
 To susteyne evere the loyalte,
 That he to moche agilte me
 He made a book, and lete it write, 6785
 Wherein his lyf he dide al write,
 And wolde ich reneyed begging,
 And lyved by my traveylyng,
 If I ne had rent ne other good
 What? Wened he that I were wood? 6790
 For labour myght me never plesse
 I have more wille to ben at ese,
 And have wel lever, soth to seye, Bifore the puple patre and preye,
 And wrie me in my foxerie 6795
 Under a cope of papelardie” Quod Love, “What devel is this that I
 heere?
 What wordis tellest thou me heere?”

“What, sir?”
 “Falsnesse, that apert is, Thanne dredist thou not God?”
 “No, certis, 6800
 For selde in gret thing shal he spede
 In this world, that God wole drede
 For folk that hem to vertu yiven,
 And truly on her owne lyven,
 And hem in goodnesse ay contene, 6805
 On hem is lytel thrift ysene
 Such folk drinken gret mysese,
 That lyf may me never plesse
 But se what gold han usurers,
 And silver eke in [hir] garners, 6810
 Taylagiers, and thes monyours, Bailifs, bedels, provost, countours,
 These lyven wel nygh by ravyne
 The smale puple hem mote enclyne,
 And they as wolves wole hem eten 6815
 Upon the pore folk they geten
 Full moche of that they spende or kepe
 Nis non of hem that he nyl strepe
 And wrien humsif wel atte fulle, Withoute scaldyng they hem pulle 6820
 The stronge the feble overgoth,
 But I, that were my symple cloth,
 Robbe bothe robbed and robbours
 And gile gled and glours
 By my tregret I gadre and threste 6825
 The gret tresour into my cheste,
 That lyth with me so faste bounde Myn highe paleys do I founde,
 And my delites I fulfille
 With wyn at feestes at my wille, 6830
 And tables full of entremees
 I wole no lyf but ese and pees,
 And wyne gold to spende also
 For whanne the grete bagge is go,
 It cometh right with my japes 6835
 Make I not wel tumble myn apes?
 To wynnen is alway myn entente,
 My purchace is bettir than my rente
 For though I shulde beten be,
 Overal I entremete me, 6840
 Withoute me may no wight dure
 I walke soules for to cure
 Of al the world [the] cure have I
 In brede and lengthe, boldly
 I wole bothe preche and eke counceilen,
 With hondis wille I not traveilen, 6845
 For of the Pope I have the bulle,
 I ne holde not my wittes dulle

I wole not stytten, in my lyve,
 These emperoures for to shryve, 6850
 Or kyngis, dukis, and lordis grete,
 But pore folk al quyte I lete
 I love no such shryvyng, parde,
 But it for other cause be
 I rekke not of pore men — 6855
 Her astat is not worth an hen
 Where fyndest thou a swynker of labour
 Have me unto his confessour?
 But emperesses and duchesses,
 These queenes, and eke countesses, 6860
 These abbessis, and eke bygyns,
 These grete ladyes palasyns,
 These joly knyghtis and baillyves,
 These nonnes, and these burgeis wyves,
 That riche ben and eke plesyngs, 6865
 And these maidens welfaryng, Wherso they clad or naked be,
 Uncounceled goth ther noon fro me
 And, for her soules savete,
 At lord and lady, and her meyne, 6870
 I axe, whanne thei hem to me shryve,
 The proprete of al her lyve,
 And make hem trowe, bothe meest and leest,
 Hir paroch-prest nys but a beest
 Ayens me and my companye, 6875
 That shrewis ben as gret as I,
 Fro whiche I wole not hide in hold
 No pryvete that me is told,
 That I by word or signe, ywis,
 Nil make hem knowe what it is, 6880
 And they wolen also tellen me,
 They hele fro me no pryvete
 And for to make yow hem perceyven,
 That usen folk thus to disceyven,
 I wole you seyn, withouten drede, 6885
 What men may in the gospel rede
 Of seynt Mathew, the gospelere,
 That seith, as I shal you sey heere ‘Upon the chaire of Moyses’ —
 Thus is it glosed, douteles, 6890
 That is the Olde Testament,
 For therby is the chaire ment —
 ‘Sitte Scribes and Pharisen,’
 That is to seyn, the cursid men
 Whiche that we ypocrits calle 6895
 ‘Doth that they preche, I rede you alle,
 But doth not as they don a del,
 That ben not wery to seye wel,
 But to do wel no will have they

And they wolde bynde on folk alwey, 6900
 That ben to be begiled able,
 Burdons that ben importable,
 On folkes shuldris thinges they couchen,
 That they nyl with her fyngris touchen ’ ’
 “And why wole they not touche it?”
 “Why?” 6905
 For hem ne lyst not, sikurly,
 For sadde burdons that men taken
 Make folkes shuldris aken
 And if they do ought that good be,
 That is for folk it shulde se 6910
 Her bordurs larger maken they,
 And make her hemmes wide alwey,
 And loven setes at the table,
 The firste and most honourable,
 And for to han the first chaisis 6915
 In synagogis, to hem full deere is,
 And willen that folk hem loute and grete,
 Whanne that they passen thurgh the strete,
 And wolen be cleped ‘maister’ also
 But they ne shulde not willen so, 6920
 The gospel is ther-ageyns, I gesse,
 That shewith wel her wikkidnesse Another custome use we
 Of hem that wole ayens us be,
 We hate hem deedly everchon, 6925
 And we wole werrey hem, as oon Hym that oon hatith, hate we alle,
 And congecte hou to don hym falle
 And if we seen hym wyne honour,
 Richesse, or preis, thurgh his valour, 6930
 Provende, rent, or dignyte, Full fast, iwys compassen we Bi what ladder he is clomben so,
 And for to maken hym doun to go,
 With trausoun we wole hym defame, 6935
 And don hym leese his goode name
 Thus from his ladder we hym take,
 And thus his freendis foes we make,
 But word ne wite shal he noon,
 Till alle his freendis ben his foon 6940
 For if we dide it openly,
 We myght have blame redily,
 For hadde he wist of oure malice,
 He hadde hym kept, but he were nyce
 Another is this, that if so falle 6945
 That ther be oon amonge us alle
 That doth a good turn, out of drede,
 We seyn it is oure alder deede
 Ye, sikurly, though he it feyned,
 Or that hym list, or that hym deyned 6950

A man thurgh hym avauanced be, Therof all parseners be we, And tellen folk, whereso we go, That man thurgh us is sprongen so And for to have of men preysyng, We purchace, thurgh oure flateryng, Of riche men of gret pouste Lettres to witnesse oure bounte, So that man weneth, that may us see, That alle vertu in us be And alwey pore we us feyne, But how so that we begge or pleyne, We ben the folk, without lesyng, That all thing have without havyng Thus be we dred of the puple, iwis And gladly my purpos is thus I dele with no wight, but he Have gold and tresour gret plente, Her acqueyntaunce wel love I, This is moche my desir, shortly I entremete me of brokages, I make pees and mariages, I am gladly executour, And many tymes procuratour, I am somtyme messenger, That fallth not to my myster, And many tymes I make enquestes — For me that office not honest is To dele with other mennes thing, That is to me a gret lykynge And if that ye have ought to do In place that I repeare to, I shal it speden, thurgh my witt, As soone as ye have told me it So that ye serve me to pay, My servyse shal be youre alway But whoso wole chastise me, Anoon my love lost hath he For I love no man, in no gise, That wole me repreve or chastise But I wolde al folk undirtake, And of no wight no teching take, For I, that other folk chastie, Wole not be taught fro my folie I love noon hermitage more, All desertes and holtes hore, And grete wodes everichon, I lete hem to the Baptist John I quethe hym quyt and hym relese Of Egpt all the wildirnesse To fer were alle my mansiounes Fro alle citees and goode tounes	6955 6960 6965 6970 6975 6980 6985 6990 6995 7000	My paleis and myn hous make I There men may renne ynne openly, And sey that I the world forsake, But al amydde I bulde and make My hous, and swimme and pley therynne, Bet than a fish doth with his fynne Of Antecristes men am I, Of whiche that Crist seith openly, They have abit of hoolynesse, And lyven in such wikkednesse Outward, lambren semen we, Fulle of goodnesse and of pitee, And inward we, withouten fable, Ben gredey wolves ravysable We enviroune bothe lond and se, With all the world werreyen we, We wole ordeyne of alle thing, Of folkis good, and her lyvyng If ther be castel or citee, Wherynne that ony bouger be, Although that they of Milayn were (For therof ben they blamed there), Or if a wight out of mesure Wolde lene his gold, and take usure, For that he is so covetous, Or if he be to leccherous, Or theef [or] haunte symonye, Or provost full of trecherie, Or prelat lyvyng jolly, Or prest that halt his quene hym by, Or olde hors hostilers, Or other bawdes or bordillers, Or elles blamed of ony vice Of which men shulden don justice Bi all the seyntes that me pray, But they defende them with lamprey, With luce, with elys, with samons, With tendre gees and with capons, With tartes, or with cheses fat, With deynte flawnes brode and flat, With caleweis, or with pullaylle, With conynges, or with fyn vitaille, That we, undr our clothes wide, Maken thourgh oure golet ghde, Or but he wole do come in haste Roo-venysoun, bake in paste, Whether so that he loure or groyne, He shal have of a corde a loigne, With whiche men shal hym bynde and lede, To brenne hym for his synful deede, That men shall here hym crie and rore A myle-wey aboute, and more,	7005 7010 7015 7020 7025 7030 7035 7040 7045 7050
---	--	---	--

Or ellis he shal in prisoun dye,	7055	Ther nas no wight in all Parys,
But if he wole oure frendship bye,		Biforne Oure Lady, at parvys,
Or smerten that that he hath do,		That he ne myghte bye the book,
More than his gilt amounteth to		To copy if hym talent tok	7110
But, and he couthe thurgh his sleght,		There myght he se, by gret tresoun,
Do maken up a tour of height,	7060	Full many fals comparisoun
Nought rought I whethur of ston, or tree,		' As moche as, thurgh his grete myght,
Or erthe, or turves though it be,		Be it of hete or of lyght,
Though it were of no vounde ston,		The sonne sourmounteth the mone,	7115
Wrought with squyre and scantilon,		That troublere is, and chaungth soone,
So that the tour were stuffed well	7065	And the note-kernell the shelle
With alle richesse temporell,		(I scorn not that I yow telle),
And thanne that he wolde updresse		Right so, withouten ony gile,
Engyns, bothe more and lesse,		Sourmounteth this noble evangile	7120
To cast at us by every side,		The word of ony evangelist '
To bere his goode name wide,	7070	And to her tite they token Crist,
Such sleghtes [as] I shal yow nevene,		And many a such comparisoun,
Barells of wyn, by sixe or sevene,		Of which I make no menciou,
Or gold in sakis gret plente,		Mighte men in that book fynde,	7125
He shulde soone delyvered be		Whoso coude of hem have mynde
And if he have noon such pitaunces,	7075	The universite, that tho was aslep,
Late hym study in equipolences,		Gan for to braide, and taken kep,
And late lyes and fallaces,		And at the noys the heed upcaste,
If that he wolde deserve oure graces,		Ne never sithen slept it faste,	7130
Or we shal bere hym such wisesse		But up it stert, and armes tok
Of synne and of his wrechidnesse,	7080	Ayens this fals horrible bok,
And don his loos so wide renne,		Al redy batel for to make,
That al quyk we shulden hym brenne,		And to the juge the bok to take
Or ellis yeve hym such penaunce,		But they that broughten the bok there
That is wel wors than the pitaunce		Hent it anoon away, for fere,	7136
For thou shalt never, for nothing,	7085	They nolde shewe it nevere a del,
Kon known aright by her clothing		But thenne it kept, and kepen will,
The traitours fulle of trecherie,		Til such a tyme that they may see
But thou her werkis can asprie		That they so stronge woxen be	7140
And ne hadde the goode keypyng be		That no wyght may hem wel withstonde,
Wholom of the unversite,	7090	For by that book they durst not stonde
That kepeth the key of Cristendom,		Away they gonne it for to bere,
We had ben turmented al and som		For they ne durste not answere
Suche ben the stynkyng prophetis,		By expositioun ne glose	7145
Nys non of hem that good prophete is,		To that that clerkis wole appose
For they thurgh wikked entencioun,	7095	Ayens the cursednesse, iwys,
The yeer of the Incarnacioun,		That in that book writen is
A thousand and two hundred yeer,		Now wot I not, ne I can not see
Fyve and fifty, ferther [ne neer],		What maner eende that there shal be	7150
Broughten a book, with sory grace,		Of al this [bok] that they hyde,
To yeven ensample in comune place,	7100	But yit algate they shal abide
That seide thus, though it were fable		Til that they may it bet defende
' This is the gospel perdurable,		Thus, trowe I best, wol be her ende
That fro the Holy Goost is sent '		Thus, Antecrist abiden we,	7155
Wel were it worth to ben brent!		For we ben alle of his meyne,
Entitled was in such manere	7105	And what man that wole not be so,
This book, of which I telle heere		Right soone he shal his lyf forgo

We wole a puple upon hym areyse,
 And thurghoure gile don hym seise, 7160
 And hym on sharpe speris ryve,
 Or other weyes brynge hym fro lyve,
 But if that he wole folowe, 1w1s,
 That in oure book written is Thus mych wole oure book signifie, 7165
 That while Petre hath maistrise,
 May never John shewe well his myght
 Now have I you declared right
 The menyng of the bark and rynde,
 That maketh the entenciouns blynde, 7170
 But now at erst I wole bigynne
 To expowne you the pith withynne —
 * * * * *

And the seculers comprehendre,
 That Cristes lawe wole defende,
 And shulde it kepen and mayntenen 7175
 Ayenes hem that all sustenen,
 And falsly to the puple techen
 [And] John bitokeneth hem [that] prechen
 That ther nys lawe covenable
 But thilke gospel perdurable, 7180
 That fro the Holy Gost was sent To turne folk that ben mysweent

The strengthe of John they undirstonde
 The grace, in which they seie they stonde,
 That doth the synfull folk converte, 7185
 And hem to Jesus Crist reverte Full many another orribilite
 May men in that book se,
 That ben comaunded, douteles,
 Ayens the lawe of Rome expres, 7190
 And all with Antecrist they holden,
 As men may in the book biholden
 And thanne comaunden they to sleen Alle tho that with Petre been,
 But they shal nevere have that myght,
 And, God toforn, for strif to fight, 7195
 That they ne shal ynowe fynde
 That Petres lawe shal have in mynde,
 And evere holde, and so mayntene,
 That at the last it shal be sene 7200
 That they shal alle come therto,
 For ought that they can speke or do
 And thilke lawe shal not stonde,
 That they by John have undirstonde,
 But, maugre hem, it shal adown, 7205
 And ben brought to confusioun
 But I wole stynt of this matere,
 For it is wonder longe to here,
 But hadde that ilke book endured,

Of better estat I were ensured, 7210
 And freendis have I yit, pardee,
 That han me sett in gret degre
 Of all this world is emperour
 Gyle my fadir, the trechour,
 And emperisse my moder is, 7215
 Maugre the Holy Gost, 1w1s
 Oure myghty lynage and oure rowte Regneth in every regne aboute,
 And well is worthy we maistres be,
 For all this world governe we, 7220
 And can the folk so wel disceyve
 That noon oure gile can perceyve,
 And though they don, they dar not seye,
 The sothe dar no wight bywreie
 But he in Cristis wrath hym ledith, 7225
 That more than Crist my britheren dredith

He nys no full good champioun,
 That dredith such simulacioun,
 Nor that for peyne wole refusen
 Us to correcte and accusen 7230
 He wole not entremete by right,
 Ne have God in his eye-sight,
 And therefore God shal hym punyshe
 But me ne rekketh of no vice,
 Sithen men us loven comunably, 7235
 And holden us for so worthy
 That we may folk repreve eechoon,
 And we nyl have repref of noon
 Whom shulden folk worshipen so
 But us, that stynten never mo 7240
 To patren while that folk may us see,
 Though it not so bihynde hem be

And where is more wod folye,
 Than to enhance chyvalrie,
 And love noble men and gay, 7245
 That joly clothis weren alway?
 If they be sich folk as they semen,
 So clene, as men her clothis demen,
 And that her wordis folowe her dede,
 It is gret pite, out of drede, 7250
 For they wole be noon ypoocritis!
 Of hem, me thynketh, gret spit is,
 I can not love hem on no side
 But beggers with these hodes wide,
 With sleighe and pale faces lene, 7255
 And greye clothis not full clene,
 But fretted full of tatarwaggis,
 And highe shoos, knopped with dagges,
 That frouncen lyke a quale pipe,
 Or botis rivelyng as a gype, 7260

- To such folk as I you dyvyse Shulde princes, and these lordis wise,
 Take all her londis and her thingis,
 Bothe werre and pees, in governyngis,
 To such folk shulde a prince hym yve,
 That wolde his lyf in honour lyve 7266
 And if they be not as they seme,
 That serven thus the world to queme,
 There wolde I dwelle, to disceyve
 The folk, for they shal not perceyve 7270
 But I ne speke in no such wise,
 That men shulde humble abyt dispise,
 So that no pride ther-undir be No man shulde hate, as thynkith me,
 The pore man in sich clothyng 7275
 But God ne preisith hym nothing,
 That seith he hath the world forsake,
 And hath to worldly glorie hym take,
 And wole of sicke delices use
 Who may that begger wel excuse, 7280
 That papelard, that hym yeldith so,
 And wole to worldly ese go,
 And seith that he the world hath left,
 And gredily it grypeth eft?
 He is the hound, shame is to seyn, 7285
 That to his castyng goth ageyn
 But unto you dar I not lye,
 But myght I felen or asprie
 That ye perceyved it no thyng,
 Ye shulde have a stark lesyng 7290
 Right in youre honde thus, to bigynne,
 I nolde it lette for no synne "
 The god lough at the wondr tho,
 And every wight gan laugh also,
 And seide, "Lo, heere a man aright 7295
 For to be trusty to every wight!"
 "Fals-Semblant," quod Love, "sey to
 me,
 Sith I thus have avauced thee,
 That in my court is thi dwellyng,
 And of ribawdis shalt be my kyng, 7300
 Wolt thou wel holden my forwardis?"
 "Ye, sir, from hennes forwardis, Hadde never youre fadir heere-biforn Servaunt so trewe, sith he was born "
 "That is ayenes all nature " 7305
 "Sir, putte you in that aventure
 For though ye borowes take of me,
 The sikerer shal ye never be
 For ostages, ne sikurnesse,
 Or chartres, for to here witnesse 7310
 I take youreself to recorde beere,
- That men ne may in no manere Teren the wolf out of his hude,
 Til he be flayn, bak and side,
 Though men hym bete and al defile 7315
 What! wene ye that I nil bigle
 For I am clothed mekely?
 Ther-undir is all my trechery,
 Myn herte chaungith never the mo
 For noon abit in which I go 7320
 Though I have chere of symplenesse,
 I am not wery of shrewidnesse
 My lemman, Streyned-Abstynance, Hath myster of my purveance,
 She hadde ful longe ago be deed, 7325
 Nere my counsel and my red Lete hir alone, and you and me "
 And Love answerde, "I truste thee Withoute borowe, for I wole noon "
 And Fals-Semblant, the theef, anon, 7330
 Ryght in that ilke same place,
 That hadde of tresoun al his face
 Ryght blak withynne and whit withoute, Thankyng hym, gan on his knees loute Thanne was ther nought but, "Every man 7335
 Now to assaut, that sailen can,"
 Quod Love, "and that full hardyly "
 Thanne armed they hem comunly
 Of sich armour as to hem fel 7339
 Whanne they were armed, fers and fel,
 They wente hem forth, alle in a route,
 And set the castel al aboute
 They will nought away, for no drede,
 Till it so be that they ben dede,
 Or till they have the castel take 7345
 And foure batels they gan make,
 And parted hem in foure anon,
 And toke her way, and forth they gon,
 The foure gates for to assaile,
 Of whiche the keepers wole not faile, 7350
 For they ben neithur sike ne dede,
 But hardy folk, and stronge in dede
 Now wole I seyn the countynance
 Of Fals-Semblant and Abstynance,
 That ben to Wikkid-Tonge went 7355
 But first they heelde her parlement, Whether it to done were
 To maken hem be knowne there,
 Or elles walken forth disguised
 But at the laste, they devysed 7360
 That they wolde gon in tapynage,
 As it were in a pilgrimage,

Lyke good and hooly folk unfeyned		He had of Treason a potente,	7415
And Dame Abstinence-Streynd		As he were feble, his way he wente
Tok on a robe of kamelyne,	7365	But in his sleve he gan to thringe
And gan hir graithe as a Bygyne		A rasour sharp and wel bytynge,
A large coverchief of thred		That was forged in a forge,
She wrapped all aboute hir heed,		Which that men clepen Coupe-Gorge	7420
But she forgat not hir sawter,		So longe forth her way they nomen,
A peire of bedis eke she ber	7370	Tyl they to Wicked-Tonge comen,
Upon a las, all of whit thred,		That at his gate was syttyng
On which that she hir bedes bed		And saw folk in the way passyng
But she ne bought hem never a del,		The pilgrymes saw he faste by,	7425
For they were geven her, I wot wel,		That beren hem ful mekely,
Got wot, of a full hooly frere,	7375	And humbly they with him mette
That seide he was hir fadir dere,		Dame Abstynence first him grette,
To whom she hadde often went		And sythe him Fals-Semblant salued,
Than ony frere of his covent		And he hem, but he not remued,	7430
And he visited hir also,		For he ne dredde hem not a del
And many a sermoun seide hir to,	7380	For whan he saw her faces wel,
He nolde lette, for man on lyve,		Always in herte him thoughte so,
That he ne wolde hir ofte shryve		He schulde knowe hem bothe two,
And with so great devocion		For wel he knew Dame Abstynance,	7435
They made her confession,		But he ne knew not Constreynance
That they had ofte, for the nones,	7385	He knew nat that she was constrayned,
Two heedes in oon hood at ones		Ne of her theves lyve fayned,
Of fayre shap I devyysed her the,		But wende she com of wyl al free,
But pale of face soumye was she,		But she com in another degree,	7440
That false traytoursse untrewe		And if of good wyl she began,
Was lyk that salowe hors of hewe,	7390	That wyl was fayled her than
That in the Apocalips is shewed,		And Fals-Semblant had he sayn als,
That signifyeth tho folk beshrewed,		But he knew nat that he was fals
That ben al ful of trecherye,		Yet fals was he, but his falsnesse	7445
And pale, through hypocrysy,		Ne coude he nat espye nor gesse,
For on that hors no colour is,	7395	For Semblant was so slye wrought,
But only deed and pale, ywis		That falsnesse he ne espied nought
Of such a colour enlougoured		But haddest thou knowen hym befor,
Was Abstynence, iwys, coloured,		Thou woldest on a bok have sworn,	7450
Of her estat she her repented,		Whan thou him saugh in thylke aray,
As her visage represented	7400	That he, that whilom was so gay,
She had a burdoun al of Thefte,		And of the daunce joly Robyn,
That Gyle had yeve her of his yefte,		Was tho become a Jacobyn
And a skryppe of Faynt Distresse,		But sothly, what so men hym calle,	7455
That ful was of elengenesse,		Freres preachers ben good men alle,
And forth she walked sobrelly	7405	Her order wickedly they beren,
And Fals-Semblant saynt, je vous die ,		Suche mynstrelles if they weren
[Had], as it were for such mister,		So ben Augustyns and Cordyleres,
Don on the cope of a frer,		And Carnes, and eke Sacked Freeres,	7460
With chere symple and ful pytous,		And alle freres, shodde and bare
Hys lokyng was not disceynous,	7410	(Though some of hem ben great and square)
Ne proud, but meke and ful pesyble		Ful hooly men as I hem deme,
About his necke he bar a byble,		Everych of hem wolde good man seme
And squerly forth gan he gon,		But shalt thou never of apparence	7465
And, for to rest his lymmes upon,		Sen conclude good consequence

In non argument, ywis,		Of a young man that here repayred,
If existens al fayled is		And never yet this place apayred	7520
For men may fynde alway sophyme		Thou saydest he awayted nothyng
The consequence to envenyme,	7470	But to disceyve Fayr-Welcomyng, Whoso that hath the subtelte		Ye sayde nothyng soth of that,
The double sentence for to se		But, sir, ye lye, I tel you plat
Whan the pylgrymes commen were		He ne cometh no more, ne goth, parde!
To Wicked-Tonge, that dwelled there,		I trowe ye shal him never se	7526
Her harneys nygh hem was algate,	7475	Fayr-Welcomyng in prison is,
By Wicked-Tonge adown they sate,		That ofte hath played with you, er this,
That bad hem ner hum for to come,		The fayrest games that he coude,
And of tidynges telle him some,		Withoute fylthe, styll or loude	7530
And sayd hem "What cas maketh you		Now dar he nat himself solace,
To come into this place now?"	7480	Ye han also the man do chace,
"Sir," sayde Strayned-Abstynauce,		That he dar neyther come ne go
"We, for to drye our penaunce,		What meveth you to hate him so,
With hertes pytous and devoute		But properly your wicked thought,	7535
Are commen, as pylgrimes gon aboute		That many a fals leasyng hath thought?
Wel nygh on fote alwey we go,	7485	That meveth your foole eloquence,
Ful dusty ben our heeles two,		That jangleth ever in audyence,
And thus bothe we ben sent		And on the folk areyseth blame,
Throughout this world, that is miswent,		And doth hem dishonour and shame,	7540
To yeve ensample, and preche also		For thyng that may have no prevyng,
To fysshyn synful men we go,	7490	But lyklynesse, and contryvyng
For other fysshynge ne fysshe we		For I dar sayn that Reason demeth
And, sir, for that charyte,		It is nat al soth thyng that semeth,
As we were wonte, herborowe we crave,		And it is synne to controve	7545
Your lyf to amende, Christ it save!		Thyng that is to reprove,
And, so it shulde you nat displease,	7495	This wote ye wel, and sir, therefore
We wolden, if it were youre ease,		Ye arn to blame the more
A short sermon unto you sayn "		And nathelesse, he recketh lyte,
And Wicked-Tonge answered agayn		He yeveth nat now therof a myte	7550
"The hous," quod he, "such as ye se,		For if he thoughte harm, parfay,
Shal nat be warned you for me	7500	He wolde come and gon al day,
Say what you lyst, and I wol here "		He coude himselfe nat abstene
"Graunt mercy, swete sire dere!"		Now cometh he nat, and that is sene,
Quod alderfirst Dame Abstynence,		For he ne taketh of it no cure,	7555
And thus began she her sentence		But if it be through aventure,
"Sir, the firste vertu, certayn,	7505	And lasse than other folk, algate
The greatest and moste soverayn		And thou her watchest at the gate,
That may be founde in any man,		With speare in thyn arest alway,
For havynge, or for wyt he can,		There muse, musard, al the day	7560
That is his tonge to refrayne,		Thou wakest night and day for thought,
Therto ought every wight him payne	7510	Iwis, thy traveyle is for nought,
For it is better styll be		And Jelousye, withouten fayle,
Than for to speken harm, parde!		Shal never quyte the thy traveyle
And he that herkeneth it gladly,		And skathe is that Fayr-Welcomyng,	7565
He is no good man, sykerly		Withouten any trespassyng,
And, sir, aboven al other synne,	7515	Shal wrongfully in prison be,
In that art thou most gylyt inne		There wepeth and languyssheth he
Thou spake a jape not longe ago,		And though thou never yet, ywis,
(And, sir, that was ryght yvel do)		Agyltest man no more but this,	7570

(Take nat a-gref) it were worthy To putte the out of this bayly, And afterward in prison lye, And fette the tyl that thou dye, For thou shalt for this synne dwelle	7575	And this man makith you good chere, And everywhere that [he] you meteth, He yow saloweth, and he you greteth He preseth not so ofte that ye	7625
Right in the devels ers of helle, But if that thou repente thee " "Ma fay, thou liest falsly!" quod he "What" welcome with myschaunce now!	7580	Ught of his come encombred be, Ther presen other folk on yow Full ofter than he doth now And if his herte hym streyned so	7630
Have I therefore herbered yow, To seye me shame, and eke reprove? With sory hap, to youre bihove, Am I to day youre herberger!	7585	Unto the Rose for to go, Ye shulde hym sen so ofte nede, That ye shulde take hym with the dede He cowde his comyng not forbere, Though me hym thrilled with a spere,	7635
Go herber yow elleswhere than heer, That han a lyer called me!	7590	But trustith wel, I swere it yow, That it is clene out of his thought Sir, certis, he ne thenkith it nought, No more ne doth Fair-Welcomyng, That sore abieth al this thing	7640
Two tregetours art thou and he, That in myn hous do me this shame, And for my soth-sawe ye me blame, Is this the sermoun that ye make?	7595	And if they were of oon assent, Full soone were the Rose hent, The maugre youres wolde be And sir, of o thung herkeneth me, Sith ye this man that loveth yow	7645
To all the develles I me take, Or elles, God, thou me confounde, But, er men diden this castel founde, It passid not ten daies or twelve, But it was told right to myselve, And as they seide, right so tolde I,	7600	Han seid such harm and shame now, Witeth wel, if he gessed it, Ye may wel demen in youre wit He nolde nothyng love you so, Ne callen you his freend also,	7650
He kyst the Rose pryvly! Thus seide I now, and have seid yore, I not wher he dide ony more Why shulde men sey me such a thyng, If it hadde ben gabbyng?	7605	But nyght and day he wolde wake The castell to destroie and take, If it were soth as ye devise, Or som man in som maner wise Might it warne hym everydel,	7655
Ryght so seide I, and wol seye yit, I trowe, I lied not of it And with my bemes I wole blowe To alle neighboris a-rowe, How he hath bothe comen and gon "	7610	Or by hymself perceyven wel For sith he myght not come and gon, As he was whilom wont to don, He myght it some wite and see, But now all other wise doth he	7660
Tho spak Fals-Semblant right anon "All is not gospel, out of doute, That men seyn in the town aboute Ley no deaf ere to my spekyng, I swere yow, sir, it is gabbyng!"	7615	Thanne have [ye] sir, al outerly, Deserved helle, and jolyly The deth of helle, douteles, That thrallen folk so gilteles "	7665
I trowe ye wote wel, certeynly, That no man loveth hym tenderly That seith hym harm, if he wot it, All he be never so pore of wit And soth is also, sikerly,	7620	Fals-Semblant proveth so this thung That he can noon answeryng,	7670
(This knowe ye, sir, as wel as I) That lovers gladly wole visiten The places there her loves habiten This man yow loveth and eke honour- eth,	7625	And seth alwey such apparaunce That nygh he fel in repentaunce, And seide hym — "Sir, it may wel be Semblant, a good man semen ye, And, Abstynence, full wise ye seme	7675
This man to serve you laboureth, And clepeth you his freend so deere	7630	Of o talent you bothe I deme What counceal wole ye to me yiven?"

“Ryght heere anon thou shalt be shryven, And sey thy synne withoute more, 7675 Of this shalt thou repente sore For I am prest and have pouste To shryve folk of most dignyte That ben, as wide as world may dure Of all this world I have the cure, 7680 And that hadde never yit persoun, Ne vicarie of no maner toun And, God wot, I have of thee A thousand tymes more pitee	Than hath thi preest parochial, 7685 Though he thy freend be special I have avauntage, in o wise, That youre prelatis ben not so wise Ne half so lettred as am I I am licenced boldely 7690 In divynite for to rede, And to confessen, out of drede If ye wol you now confesse, And leave your synnes, more and lesse, Without abod, knele down anon, 7695 And you shal have absolucion ”
--	--

Explicit

BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ABBREVIATIONS

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GENERAL REFERENCES

THE general bibliography given here and the more specific references in the notes that follow are to be understood everywhere to be selected and not exhaustive lists. It is impossible to give complete bibliographical information within the limits of a library edition of Chaucer, and the attempt would be the more unnecessary in view of the existence of Miss E P Hammond's admirable Chaucer, a Bibliographical Manual, New York 1908, now undergoing revision for a second edition. For the period since the publication of Miss Hammond's work, the following bibliographies very well cover the field:

- J E Wells, A Manual of the Writings in Middle English, New Haven, 1916, Supplements, 1919, 1923, 1926, 1929
Martha H Shackford, Chaucer, Selected References, Wellesley, Mass, 1918
D D Griffith, A Bibliography of Chaucer, Seattle, 1926

Annual lists of publications relating to Chaucer are included also in the Jahresbericht der Germanischen Philologie, the annual bibliography of the Modern Humanities Research Association, and that of the Modern Language Association of America. The publications of the Chaucer Society, to which frequent reference is made in the notes, are listed by Miss Hammond, pp 523-41.

For an excellent brief introduction to the study of Chaucer, with selected bibliography, reference may be made to R D French, A Chaucer Handbook, New York, 1927.

LIFE OF CHAUCER

Early biographies are noted and described by Miss Hammond, pp 1-39. The first work of critical value is that of Sir Harris Nicolas, The Life of Chaucer, prefixed to the Aldine Chaucer, London, 1845. There is a good survey and discussion in T R Lounsbury's Studies in Chaucer 3 v, New York, 1892 (ch 1, The Life of Chaucer, ch 2, The Chaucer Legend). Other lives of recent date are:

- W W Skeat's biographical introduction in the Oxford Chaucer, I, ix-lxi
J W Hales, Chaucer, Dictionary of National Biography, 1887
A W Pollard, Chaucer, Encyclopædia Britannica, 11th ed, 1910 et seq
A W Ward, Chaucer, English Men of Letters, London, 1879
G H Cowling, Chaucer, London, 1927

Biographical sketches are prefixed to many editions of selected works, the most valuable being that in J M Manly's selections from the Canterbury Tales, New York, 1928. There is also a good brief outline in French's Chaucer Handbook, ch 2.

The following studies of special topics are important:

- A A Kern, The Ancestry of Chaucer, Baltimore, 1906
J R Hulbert, Chaucer's Official Life, Menasha, Wisc, 1912
M B Ruud, Thomas Chaucer, Univ of Minn Studies in Lang and Lit, no 9, Minneapolis, 1926
Edith Rickert, Was Chaucer a Student at the Inner Temple?, Manly Anniversary Studies, Chicago, 1923
Russell Krauss, Chaucerian Problems Especially The Petherton Forestership and The Question of Thomas Chaucer, in Three Chaucer Studies, New York, 1932 (This study was published too late to be fully utilized by the present editor.)

The documents themselves relating to Chaucer were nearly all made accessible in Life-Records of Chaucer, published in four parts by the Chaucer Society, 1875-1900. There is a useful index by E P Kuhl in MP, X (1912-13), 527 ff.

A number of additional records have been found in recent years. See the bibliographies of Wells and Griffith, also Manly's sketch, where account was taken of such new data. A selection of the life-records relating to Thomas Chaucer, collected but not printed by R E G and E F Kirk, with additional items, has been published by A C Baugh in PMLA, XLVII (1932), 461 ff. Cf also Krauss's study, cited above.

On the portraits of Chaucer there is a special study by M H Spielmann, Chaucer Society, 1900. See also Miss Hammond's Manual, p 49, and her English Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, Durham, N C, 1927, p 408, Manly, pp 37-39, A Brunsdorf, The Chaucer Tradition, London, 1925, pp 13-27.

EDITIONS

The early editions of Chaucer are listed and described by Miss Hammond, pp 114 ff, 202 ff, 350, 395. Of modern editions, that of Thomas Tyrwhitt (Canterbury Tales, 5 v, London, 1775-78) is still interesting for its introduction and commentary. Knowledge of Middle English grammar had not advanced far enough in Tyrwhitt's time to make possible the establishment of a correct text. Only two of the complete editions before the present one represent at all closely Chaucer's linguistic usage, that of Skeat and that of the Globe editors

W W Skeat, Oxford Chaucer, 6 v and Supplement, Oxford, 1894-97, The Student's Chaucer, Oxford, 1895

The Globe Chaucer, London, 1898 Canterbury Tales and Legend of Good Women, ed A W Pollard, Minor Poems, ed H F Heath, Boece, Astrolabe, and Romaunt, ed M H Laddell, Troilus, ed W S McCormick

There have been various reprints of Skeat's text in whole or in part, most notably that of the Kelmescott Press, ed T S Ellis, 1896

References to important editions of selected works, and also to investigations of the MSS will be given in the Textual Notes

CANON AND CHRONOLOGY

Studies of the authenticity and date of the various works will be taken up at appropriate places in the notes General references on the subject are given by Miss Hammond, pp 51-72 The following treatments of the subject are of special importance

John Koch, The Chronology of Chaucer's Writings, Chaucer Society, 1890

W W Skeat, The Chaucer Canon, Oxford, 1900

J S P Tatlock, The Development and Chronology of Chaucer's Works, Chaucer Society, 1907

Aage Brusendorff, The Chaucer Tradition, London, 1924

The following studies of special topics may also be noted here because of their bearing on general problems

J L Lowes, The Prologue to the "Legend of Good Women" as Related to the French "Marguerite" Poems and the "Filostrato," PMLA, XIX (1904), 593 ff, The Prologue to the "Legend of Good Women" Considered in its Chronological Relations, PMLA, XX (1905), 749 ff

G L Kittredge, The Date of Chaucer's Troilus, Chaucer Society, 1909

No such convenient chronological test has been found for Chaucer's writings as the familiar classification of Shakespeare's plays by end-stopped and run-on lines But a certain regularity of change in Chaucer's practice with regard to the apocope of final -e was pointed out by Charlotte F Babcock in A Study of the Metrical Use of the Inflectional -e in Middle English, an unpublished Radcliffe dissertation, 1912, results summarized in PMLA, XXIX (1914), 59 ff Mr G H Cowling (in Rev of Engl Stud, II (1926), 311 ff, and again in his Chaucer, London, 1927, pp 67 ff) tried to find a criterion of date in the place of the pause, or volta, in the Chaucerian stanza But his results are very uncertain

LITERARY SOURCES

Detailed facts with regard to the sources of Chaucer's writings are given in the various introductions and notes Passages cited by reference will often be found quoted at length in Skeat's notes A convenient general list of the writings used by Chaucer is given by Miss Hammond, pp 73-105, and Lounsbury's chapter on "The Learning of Chaucer" (Studies, ch 5) gives an excellent survey of the subject But recent investigations have brought to light information not included in either of these works The following studies of Chaucer's relations to special authors or writings may be noted

Vulgate Grace W Landrum, Chaucer's Use of the Vulgate, unpublished Radcliffe dissertation, 1921, results summarized in PMLA, XXXIX (1924), 75 ff

Latin Poets E F Shannon, Chaucer and the Roman Poets, Cambridge, Mass, 1929

John Koch, Chaucers Belesenheit in den Romischen Klassikern, Est, LVII (1923), 8 ff

Status B A Wise, The Influence of Status upon Chaucer, Baltimore, 1911

Boethius B L Jefferson, Chaucer and the Consolation of Philosophy of Boethius, Princeton, 1917

Dante J L Lowes, Chaucer and Dante's Convivio, MP, XIII (1915-16), 19 ff, Chaucer and Dante, MP, XIV (1916-17), 705 ff

C Looten, Chaucer et Dante, Rev de Lit Comp, V (1925) 545 ff

J P Bethel, The Influence of Dante on Chaucer's Thought and Expression unpublished Harvard dissertation, 1927

Boccaccio H M Cummings, The Indebtedness of Chaucer's Works to the Italian Works of Boccaccio, Univ of Cincinnati Studies, X, 1916

Roman de la Rose Lisu Cipriani, Studies in the Influence of the Romance of the Rose on Chaucer, PMLA, XXII (1907), 552 ff

D S Fansler, Chaucer and the Roman de la Rose, New York, 1914

Machaut G L Kittredge, Guillaume de Machaut and the Book of the Duchess, PMLA, XXX (1915), 1 ff

Deschamps J L Lowes, Chaucer and the Miroir de Marriage, MP, VIII (1910-11), 165 ff, 305 ff, Illustrations of Chaucer, drawn chiefly from Deschamps, Rom Rev, II (1911), 113 ff

Proverbs Wilh Haeckel, Das Sprichwort bei Chaucer, Erlanger Beitrage, II, viii, 1890

W W Skeat, Early English Proverbs, Oxford, 1910

B J Whitng, Studies in the Middle

English Proverb, unpublished Harvard dissertation, 1932

MEDÆVAL HISTORY, LIFE, AND THOUGHT

- Charles Gross, Sources and Literature of English History, 2d ed., London, 1915
- The Political History of England, general editors, W Hunt and R L Poole, vol III, by T F Tout, London 1905, Vol IV, by C Oman, London, 1906
- G M Trevelyan, England in the Age of Wycliffe, 4th ed., London, 1909
- W W Capes, The English Church in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries, London, 1900
- H W C Davis, Medæval England, Oxford, 1924
- J W Thompson, The Middle Ages, 300-1500, New York, 1931, Reference Studies in Medæval History, rev ed., Chicago, 1923
- L Thorndike, A History of Magic and Experimental Science during the First Thirteen Centuries of our Era, New York, 1923
- W C Curry, Chaucer and the Medæval Sciences, New York, 1926
- T O Wedel, The Medæval Attitude toward Astrology, New Haven, 1920
- J J Jusserand, English Wayfaring Life in the Middle Ages (XIVth Century), rev ed., London 1925
- G G Coulton Chaucer and his England, 3d ed., London, 1921, Social Life in Britain from the Conquest to the Reformation, Cambridge Univ Press, 1918
- H S Ward, The Canterbury Pilgrimages, London 1904
- Francis Watt, Canterbury Pilgrims and their Ways, London, 1917

HISTORY OF MIDDLE ENGLISH LITERATURE

- B ten Brink, Geschichte der Englischen Litteratur, 2 v., 2d ed., Strassburg, 1899-1912, 1st ed tr., History of English Literature 2 v in 3, New York, 1883-96
- Cambridge History of English Literature*, II, Cambridge, 1908
- W H Schofield English Literature from the Norman Conquest to Chaucer, London, 1906
- J J Jusserand, Histoire Littéraire du Peuple Anglais, des Origines à la Renaissance, Paris, 1894, tr., A Literary History of the English People, I, 3d ed., London, 1925

GENERAL CRITICISM

- J R Lowell, Chaucer, North American Rev., CXI (1870), 155 ff., reprinted in My Study Windows, Boston, 1871

- B ten Brink, Chaucer Studien, Munster, 1870
- T R Lounsbury, Studies in Chaucer, 3 v., New York, 1892
- George Saintsbury, CHEL, II, ch 7 (1908)
- R K Root, The Poetry of Chaucer, rev ed., Boston, 1922
- G L Kittredge, Chaucer and his Poetry, Cambridge, Mass., 1915
- Émile Legouis, Geoffroy Chaucer, Paris, 1910, tr., London 1913
- Aage Brusendorff, The Chaucer Tradition, London, 1925
- J M Manly, Some New Light on Chaucer, New York, 1926
- J L Lowes, The Art of Geoffrey Chaucer, London, 1930
- C F E Spurgeon, Five Hundred Years of Chaucer Criticism and Allusion, 1357-1900, Chaucer Society, 7 parts 1914-24, also 3 v., Cambridge, 1925, Supplement, Additional Entries, 1868-1900, London, 1920, Chaucer devant la Critique en Angleterre et en France depuis son temps jusqu'à nos jours, Paris, 1911

LANGUAGE AND METER

The foundations of a scientific knowledge of Chaucer's grammar were laid in the memorable essay of Francis James Child, Observations on the Language of Chaucer (Memoirs of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, new ser., VIII (1861-63), 445 ff.) Child's study was based upon Wright's printed text of the Canterbury Tales (Percy Society, 3 v., 1847-51). After many years the same method was extended by Professor Kittredge to the Troilus (Observations on the Language of Chaucer's Troilus, Chaucer Society, 1894), and by Professor Manly to that of the Legend of Good Women (Harv J Stud and Notes in Phil and Lit, II (1893), 1 ff.) A similar study of the Ellesmere text of the Canterbury Tales by A C Garrett (Harvard dissertation, 1892) was never published. The results of Child's investigation were used in A J Ellis's Early English Pronunciation, Chaucer Society, 5 v., 1869-89.

The earliest authoritative treatment of Chaucer's language in the form of a systematic grammar is B ten Brink's Chaucers Sprache und Verskunst, Leipzig, 1884, 3d ed., Leipzig, 1920. Schematic summaries of the grammar have been given in most of the modern editions of Chaucer's works, the most useful being those in Skeat's Oxford Chaucer, in Liddell's edition of the General Prologue, etc., London, 1901 and in Manly's selections from the Canterbury Tales. For a valuable study of the linguistic usage in Chaucerian MSS, see Friedrich Wild, Die Sprachlichen Eigentümlichkeiten der Wichtigeren Chaucer-handschriften und die Sprache Chaucers, Wiener Beiträge, XLIV, 1915

The following grammars are standard authorities for Middle English

- Lorenz Morsbach, Mittelenglische Grammatik, Halle, 1896
 Max Kaluza, Historische Grammatik der Englischen Sprache, 2 v., Berlin, 1900-01
 Joseph Wright, An Elementary Middle English Grammar, 2d ed., Oxford, 1928
 Richard Jordan, Handbuch der Mittelenglischen Grammatik, Heidelberg, 1925
 Karl Luick, Historische Grammatik der Englischen Sprache, Leipzig, 1914-29

There is a convenient summary by Samuel Moore, Historical Outlines of English Phonology and Morphology, Ann Arbor, Mich., 1925. The older grammars of E. Matzner (1880-85) and C. F. Koch (2d ed., 1882-91) are still valuable to consult chiefly for their illustrations of syntax and usage.

The study of Chaucer's meter has been closely associated with that of his grammar, and many observations will be found in the works of Child, Kittredge, and Ten Brink, cited above. Systematic treatment of the subject appears in most modern editions, as in those, for example, of Skeat, Liddell, and Manly. The metrical forms employed by Chaucer are of course treated in the standard works on English versification. General reference may be made to the following:

- Jakob Schipper, Englische Metrik in Historischer und Systematischer Entwicklung Dargestellt, 2 pts. in 3 v., Bonn, 1881-88, also his account of "Fremde Metra" in Paul's Grundriss der Germanischen Philologie, II, n, 7, 2d ed., Strassburg, 1905, pp. 181 ff.

- G. Saintsbury, A History of English Prosody from the Twelfth Century to the Present Day, 3 v., London, 1906-10 (particularly Vol. I, pp. 43 ff.)

There is a good brief discussion of the sources of Chaucer's decasyllabic verse-forms in R. M. Alden's English Verse, New York, 1903, pp. 177 ff. Interesting observations on Chaucer's artistic methods and effects are made by Miss Hammond, English Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, pp. 17 ff.

DICTIONARIES

Many editions of Chaucer are provided with glossaries. The most extensive of these is that of Skeat, in his Oxford Chaucer, Vol. VI. There is also a Chaucer concordance, John S. P. Tatlock and Arthur G. Kennedy, A Concordance to the Complete Works of Geoffrey Chaucer and the Romaunt of the Rose, Washington, 1927.

For Middle English in general the existing lexicons are very inadequate. The most important are:

A Middle-English Dictionary, by Francis Henry Stratmann, revised by Henry Bradley, Oxford, 1891.

E. Mätzner, Altenglische Sprachproben nebst einem Wörterbuche, Berlin 1878—(More extensive than Bradley-Stratmann, but incomplete. Continuations cease with the letter M.)

There are many citations from Middle English in the Oxford Dictionary (NED). But neither the vocabulary of the period nor the occurrence of words is fully registered.

ABBREVIATIONS

I CHAUCER'S WORKS

Adam	Adam Scryevyn
Anel	Anelida and Arcute
Astr	A Treatise on the Astrolabe
Bal Compl	A Balade of Complaint
BD	The Book of the Duchesse
Bo	Boece
Buk	Lenvoy de Chaucer a Bukton
ChT	The Cook's Tale
CUT	The Clerk's Tale
Compl d'Am	Complaynt d'Amours
CT	The Canterbury Tales
CYT	The Canon's Yeoman's Tale
Form Age	The Former Age
Fort	Fortune
FranklT	The Franklin's Tale
FrT	The Frar's Tale
Gen. Prolog	The General Prologue
Gent	Gentillesse
HF	The House of Fame
KnT	The Knight's Tale

Lady	A Complaynt to his Lady
LGW	The Legend of Good Women
MancT	The Manciple's Tale
Mars	The Complaynt of Mars
Mel	The Tale of Melibee
MerCB	Merciles Beaute
MerchT	The Merchant's Tale
MiltT	The Miller's Tale
MkT	The Monk's Tale
MLT	The Man of Law's Tale
NPT	The Nun's Priest's Tale
PardT	The Pardoner's Tale
ParstT	The Parson's Tale
PF	The Parliament of Fowls
PhysT	The Physician's Tale
Pty	The Complaynt unto Pty
PrT	The Prioress's Tale
Purse	The Complaynt of Chaucer to his Purse
Rom	The Romaunt of the Rose
RtT	The Reeve's Tale
Scog	Lenvoy de Chaucer a Scogan

SecNT	The Second Nun's Tale
ShpT	The Shipman's Tale
SqT	The Squire's Tale
Sied	Lak of Stedfastnesse
SumT	The Summoner's Tale
Thop	Svr Thopas
Tr	Troilus and Criseyde
Ven	The Complaint of Venus
WBT	The Wife of Bath's Tale
Wom Nob	Womanly Noblesse
Wom Unc	Against Women Unconstant

II EDITIONS OF CHAUCER (TEXT AND NOTES)

Bell	Works, 8 v., London, 1854-56
Gt., Globe	Globe Chaucer, London, 1898
Koch	Canterbury Tales , Heidelberg, 1915, Kleinere Dichtungen, Heidelberg 1928
Manly	Canterbury Tales [selections], New York, 1928
Morris	Works, rev. ed., 6 v., London, 1872 (Aldine Poets)
Root	Troilus and Criseyde , Princeton, 1926
Sk., Skeat	Oxford Chaucer, 6 v. and Supplement, Oxford, 1894-97
Th., Thynne	Works, London, 1532
Tyrwhitt	Canterbury Tales , 5 v., London, 1775-78
Urry	Works, London, 1721

III JOURNALS, PUBLICATIONS, STUDIES, AND TEXTS

Acad	The Academy, London
Angl	Anglia, Zeitschrift für Englische Philologie
Angl Beibl	Beiblatt zur Anglia
Athen	The Athenæum, London
Boethius	De Consolatione Philosophiae, ed R. Peiper, Leipzig 1871
Brusendorff	The Chaucer Tradition, London, 1925
CHEL	Cambridge History of English Literature
Ch Soc	Publications of the Chaucer Society
Curry	Chaucer and the Mediaeval Sciences, New York, 1926
CZ	Zeitschrift für Celtische Philologie
DNB	Dictionary of National Biography
EETS	Publications of the Early English Text Society

Est	Englische Studien
Fansler	Chaucer and the Roman de la Rose, New York, 1914
FF Com	Folklore Fellows Communications
Fil	Boccaccio, Il Filostrato, ed Moutier, Opere Volgari, XIII, Florence, 1831
Haeckel	Das Sprichwort bei Chaucer, Erlanger Beiträge, II, viii, 1890
Hammond	Chaucer, a Bibliographical Manual, New York, 1908
Herrig's Arch	Archiv für das Studium der Neueren Sprachen und Literaturen
Hinckley	Notes on Chaucer, Northampton, Mass., 1907
JEGP	Journal of English and Germanic Philology
Latblt	Literaturblatt für Germanische und Romanische Philologie
MLN	Modern Language Notes
MLQ	Modern Language Quarterly
MLR	Modern Language Review
MP	Modern Philology
N & Q	Notes and Queries
NED	New English Dictionary
PMLA	Publications of the Modern Language Association of America
PQ	Philological Quarterly
QF	Quellen und Forschungen zur Sprach- und Culturgeschichte der Germanischen Völker
Rev Celt	Revue Celtique
Rom	Romania
Rom Rev	Romanic Review
RR	Roman de la Rose, ed Langlois, 5 v., SATF, 1914-24
SATF	Publications de la Société des Anciens Textes Français
Stud Phil	Studies in Philology
Tes	Boccaccio, Teseide ed Moutier, Opere Volgari, IX, Florence, 1831
Theb	Status, Thebaid
TLS	London Times Literary Supplement
Vulg	Vulgate Bible
Wells	A Manual of the Writings in Middle English, New Haven, 1916, Supplements, 1919, 1923, 1926, 1929
ZRPh	Zeitschrift für Romanische Philologie

EXPLANATORY NOTES

EXPLANATORY NOTES

THE CANTERBURY TALES

REFERENCES to publications on the sources, literary relations, and date of composition of the various parts of the Canterbury Tales are given in the notes to the General Prologue and to the separate tales

The reason for Chaucer's choice of a pilgrimage as a setting for his stories is unknown. It has been commonly held that he described, at least in part a pilgrimage on which he himself was present, perhaps in 1387, and Skeat has shown (Oxford Chaucer, III, 373 f) that the dates mentioned in the narrative would fit well enough with the calendar of that year. Mr Walter Rye has argued that Chaucer got the idea from Lynn pilgrimages to the shrine of St Thomas. See TLS, 1927, p 126

On the route, time, and other arrangements of actual pilgrimages to Canterbury see, besides the books of Ward and Watt mentioned above, H Littlehales, Some Notes on the Road from London to Canterbury in the Middle Ages, Ch Soc, 1898 J S P Tatlock, PMLA, XXI, 478 ff. On mediæval pilgrimages in general there is interesting material in Jusserand's English Wayfaring Life (cited above). See also S H Heath, Pilgrim Life in the Middle Ages, London, 1911, and an article dealing primarily with Celtic Britain by G Hartwell Jones, Y Cymmrodor, XXIII

Various literary parallels have been pointed out which may have afforded Chaucer suggestions for the general plan of the Tales. It has been commonly held that the Decameron of Boccaccio in particular furnished a model. Parallel passages in that work have been pointed out by R K Root (EST, XLIV, 1 ff), W E Farnham (MLN, XXXIII, 193 ff), and Miss H Korten (Chaucers Literarische Beziehungen zu Boccaccio, Rostock, 1920). But Chaucer's knowledge and use of the Decameron have not been placed beyond a doubt. See the observations of Karl Young (Kittredge Anniv Papers, Boston, 1913, p 405), W E Farnham (PMLA, XXXIX, 123 ff), and J W Spargo (FF Com No 91, 11 ff). On the possibility that Chaucer was influenced by other works of Boccaccio see J S P Tatlock, in Angl, XXXVII, 69 ff

An especially interesting analogue to the Canterbury Tales, because it is another collection of stories told on a pilgrimage, and because it may have been known to Chaucer, is furnished by the Novelle di Giovanni Sercambi. See H B Hinckley, Notes on Chaucer, Northampton, Mass, 1907, pp 2 f, and Young, Kittredge Anniv Papers, pp 406 ff

Attempts have been made, especially by Professor Frederick Tupper, to find an underlying unity in the subject-matter of the Canterbury Tales. In a communication to the [New York] Nation (XCVII, 354 ff) Mr Tupper argued that the central principle was to be found in the celebration or service of Venus, the dominating influence of the pilgrimage. But this statement, while recognizing the obvious importance of love as a motif in the secular tales, does not take sufficient account of the tales of religious, even of ascetic, spirit. In a later and more elaborate study, Mr Tupper tried to show that the tales were intended to treat in a systematic way the Seven Deadly Sins. According to Chaucer's scheme, as he interpreted it, each pilgrim represents in his person a sin which he condemns in his tale. This holds true without doubt, for the Pardoner and perhaps for some of the other pilgrims. But the system breaks down when applied to the whole series of tales. Mr Tupper's extended exposition of it will be found in PMLA, XXIX, 93 ff, for special observations see also his articles in JEGP, XIII, 553 ff, XIV, 256 ff, XV, 56 ff. The arguments against this interpretation were very fully presented by Professor Lowes in PMLA, XXX, 237 ff

FRAGMENT I

The General Prologue

The composition of the Prologue is generally put in or about 1387. If it refers to an actual pilgrimage the few data that are given would fit well enough the calendar of that year (See the various calculations recorded by Miss Hammond, pp 265-67, and Skeat Oxford Chaucer, III, 373 ff). In any case Chaucer probably began work on the Canterbury series at about that date, and the Prologue was presumably written before the main body of the tales. Of course Chaucer may have returned to it from time to time to make additions and revisions. For the theory that several characters (specifically the Reeve, the Miller, the Summoner, the Pardoner, and the Manciple) were added after the first draught, see Miss Hammond, p 254. She further suggests that the description of the Wife of Bath was probably not composed in its present form until after the Wife's special Prologue was written Mr C Camden, Jr, in PQ, VII, 314 ff, argues that the group of Guildsmen may have been a late addition.

The antecedents of the Prologue as a literary type have been discussed in the introductory note, pp 2 ff, above. For further illustration see H R Patch, MLN, XL, 1 ff, Frederick Tupper, Types of Society in Medieval Literature, New York 1926, pp 32 ff (with special reference to the figures described in the chess-book of Jacobus de Cessolis), and Manly, Warton Lecture (No XVII) on Chaucer and the Rhetoricians, Proceedings of the British Acad, 1926, and cf Tr, v, 799 ff, n.

For the interpretation of the text of the Canterbury Tales as a whole the present editor would acknowledge his indebtedness to Skeat's notes in the Oxford Chaucer, Mr H B Hinckley's Notes, Professor Koch's Anmerkungen in his edition of Hertzberg's translation (Berlin, 1925), and to Professor Manly's Selections. Manly's material on the Prologue, both in his notes and in his New Light, is especially full and valuable. He emphasizes the individuality of the portraits and suggests historical counterparts. Typical features, on the other hand, are pointed out by W C Curry, Chaucer and the Medieval Sciences, and F Tupper, Types of Society. There is an excellent commentary in Mr Pollard's separate edition London, 1903. Valuable illustrative material was collected also by E Flugel in Angl, XXIII, 225 ff. For articles on special passages, see Wells, pp 876-77, 1030, 1146-47, 1237-38, 1326. The Ellesmere MS contains miniature representations of those pilgrims who tell tales, which are photographically reproduced in the Chaucer Society reprint of MS El and again (more accurately) in the facsimile of the Ellesmere Chaucer (Manchester, 1911), drawings based on the miniatures are given in color in the Six-Text print, and uncolored in the separate prints of the MSS. See also, for detailed descriptions and discussion, E F Piper, PQ, III, 241 ff, E Markert, Chaucer's Canterbury-Pilger und ihre Tracht, Würzburg diss., 1911, p 3.

1 ff Several passages have been pointed out as possible sources of the introductory lines on spring. Cf especially Guido delle Colonne, Historia Trojana, fol b 4 recto (Strassburg, 1489), Boccaccio's Ameto, pp 23-24, his Filocolo, Bk v, pp 238-39, his Teseide, m, st 6, 7, Petrarch's Sonnet 9, In Vita di Madonna Laura, Boethius, i, m 5 and n, m 3, and Virgil's Georgics, n, 323 ff. From any of these places Chaucer may have received suggestions. Taken together they show that he was dealing with a conventional theme, in the treatment of which commonplace features inevitably reappeared. Such descriptions were especially frequent at the beginning of poems, not only of romances such as the Fulk Fitz Warne, but also in a chronicle such as Creton's account of the fall of Richard II (Histoire du Roy d'Angleterre Richard, ed and tr in Archæologia, XX, 1 ff.) Of the passages cited above that in the Filocolo offers, perhaps, the closest verbal resemblances to the Prologue, and this work was almost certainly familiar to Chaucer. He also knew the Teseide and the Historia Trojana. It is not so clear that he had read the Ameto or the Georgics. (For a full discussion of the parallels, with references to other articles, see A S Cook, Trans Conn Acad of Arts and Sciences, XXIII, 1 ff, and of Cummings, MLN, XXXVII, 86.)

1 The final e in Aprille, if intended by the Ellesmere writing of ll joined by a ligature, may be merely scribal. It is not etymologically justified, and there is no evidence that it was pronounced.

3 veyne, probably "vessels of sap," rather than "veins of the earth."

6 Inspired, either "breathed upon" the tender twigs, or "quicken'd" them, made them grow. The former meaning is more usual, but the latter is equally natural here.

7 the yonge sonne, the sun in the early part of its annual course, just emerging from Aries, the first sign of the zodiac. Cf SqT, V, 385.

8 This might refer, if taken by itself, to the beginning of April. But in ML Prol, II, 5-6, April 18th is explicitly named, probably as the second day of the pilgrimage. To fit that date the halve cours in the Ram must be interpreted as the second half. The sun entered Aries on March 12 (Astr, n, 1, and see Est, XXXI, 288), and the first half course would be completed toward the end of the month. By April 18th the sun would have travelled a number of degrees in Taurus, the second sign.

Chaucer shows considerable fondness for definitions of time in terms of astronomy or mythology. For other examples in the Canterbury Tales of MerchT, IV, 1795, 1885 ff, 2219 ff, SqT, V, 48 ff, 263 ff, 385 ff, 671 ff, FrankIT, V, 1245 ff, ParsProl, X, 2 ff, and note particularly the humorous turn in FrankIT, V, 1018 (and Tr, n, 904-05). The device is employed frequently in the Troilus. Chaucer was perhaps influenced by the Teseide, which in turn imitated similar figures in the Thebad of Status. The example of Dante, with whom the practice was common, doubtless also had its effect upon both Boccaccio and Chaucer. (See Harv Stud in Class Phil, XXVIII, 118-20).

10 For this striking line no parallel before Chaucer has been suggested. The idea is found later in the romance of the Sowdone of Babilone, ed Hausknecht (EETS, 1881), ll 45-46. Manly notes that the birds were probably nightingales, and cites the Book of the Knight of La Tour Landry (EETS, 1868), p 156, and Pliny, Hist Nat, x, 43.

17 Thomas a Becket was murdered in 1170 and canonized three years later. The scene of his martyrdom was the object of many pilgrimages for centuries

17-18 "Identical rime," as in seke seeke, was permitted, or even sought, in Old French and Middle English 20 the Tabard The sign of the inn was a tabard, or short sleeveless coat, embroidered with armorial bearings. The word came also to be applied to the laborer's blouse or smock. There was an actual hostelry of the name in Southwark in Chaucer's time. It became the property of Hyde Abbey, near Westminster, in 1306, and was surrendered by the Abbot of Hyde at the dissolution of the monasteries in 1548. Details about its history, from a cartulary of the Abbey lands (MS Harl 1761 of the British Museum), are to be published by Professor Manly, see also his note on the present passage. For a general account of the inn see the Surrey Archaeological Society, Collections, XIII, London, 1897, pp 28 ff., also the Victoria County History of Surrey, IV, London, 1912 p 127, and for Southwark hostels in general, W Rendle and P Norman, The Inns of Old Southwark, London, 1888. The original building was burned in 1676. It was afterwards rebuilt, and the name was corrupted to the Talbot. This survived until 1875-76. At present a part of the site is occupied by a small public house called by the old name.

33 The subject of made is we implied in l 32. In Middle English the pronominal subject of a verb is frequently omitted if indirectly expressed in the context. Cf., for other examples, Gen Prol, I, 529, 786, 810, Knt I, 1642, 1755, 2433.

37 resoun, here probably in the sense of "order," "suitable arrangement." On its use as a technical term in rhetoric see MLR, XXI, 13-18.

The Knight

For full discussion of the historical background of the description see J M Manly in Trans of the Am Phil Association, 1907, pp 89 ff., and A S Cook, Trans of the Conn Acad of Arts and Sciences, XX, 165 ff.

It is not likely that any single historical figure is represented by Chaucer's Knight. But the career which is sketched is typical, and the events referred to might all have been witnessed by a contemporary of the poet. Besides fighting in the King's service (in his lordes werre, l 47), the Knight might have gone to Granada (Gernade) with Henry, Earl of Derby, in 1343, remaining till the capture of Algezur in 1344. About the same time he could have seen fighting in Belmarie (i.e., Benmarin, Morocco) and Tramysene (i.e., Tlemoen, Western Algeria) in Northern Africa, but there were also campaigns in those regions in the sixties and the eighties. Between 1345 and 1360 the wars with France might well have kept the Knight occupied nearer home. But after the Peace of Breigny, in 1360 he would have been free for the campaigns of Pierre de Lusignan (King Peter of Cyprus), one of the most brilliant leaders of chivalric warfare in the fourteenth century. King Peter made a tour through Lourepe, during which he visited the English court, in 1362-63. He captured Satalye (the ancient Attala, on the southern coast of Asia Minor) in 1361, conquered Alexandria (Ahsavndre) in 1365, and partially reduced Lyeys (Lyas, Ayas, in Armenia) in 1367. He was assassinated at Rome in 1369. (See Chaucer's stanza on his death in Mkt, VII, 2391 ff.) The reference to the Knight's service with the lord of Palatye (probably Turkish Balat, on the site of the ancient Miletus) is not definite. But since, according to Strambaldi (ed Rene de Mas Latrie, Paris, 1893, p 66, in Collection de Doc Inédits, Premiere Serie) the lord of Palatye, in 1365, was a heathen bound in friendly treaty to King Peter, the episode should probably be brought into connection with the campaigns of the sixties. To a later period may be assigned the Knight's campaigns in Lithuania and Russia, in the service of the Teutonic Order (l 52 ff.). Professor Manly, whose reconstruction of the Knight's career is here followed, remarks that in 1386 the Lithuanians turned Christians, and that the Knight may have been conceived as making the Canterbury pilgrimage immediately upon his return to England from Lithuania. Professor Cook, on the other hand argues that Chaucer had in mind an expedition of the earl of Derby (afterwards Henry IV), who took part in the siege of Vilna in 1390-91. He even suggests that it was from Henry of Derby, after his return to England in July, 1393, that Chaucer learned about the institution of the "table of honor." But the theory which thus connects the description of the Knight with the Earl of Derby implies a later date for the Prologue than seems probable on other grounds.

Professor Manly argues, quite reasonably, that the Knight's career is not merely typical. From the very specific details he infers that Chaucer may have had in mind some contemporary knight or more probably several. And he points out that three members of the Scrope family — Sir William, Sir Stephen, and Sir Geoffrey — took part in campaigns mentioned in the description of the Knight. Chaucer's acquaintance with the Scropes is well attested.

Efforts have been made to find literary as well as historical counterparts for the Knight, but Chaucer's description of the character, if not of the career, is simple and typical, and he can hardly be shown to have followed any model. Professor Schofield pointed out to the editor that a good illustrative parallel is afforded by the characterization of the brave knight in a dit (Du Preu Chevalier) of Watrinquet (ed Scheler, Bruxelles, 1868, pp 187 ff) See also Professor Tupper's observations, Types of Society, pp 30 ff

It is worthy of note that Chaucer presents in the Knight a completely ideal figure. Although chivalry in the fourteenth century was in its decline and had a very sordid side, Chaucer has wholly refrained from satirizing the institution. It has been suggested, indeed, that in this very ideal presentation the keenest satire was concealed. But it may be doubted if such was Chaucer's intention.

52 he hadde the bord bygonne, he had sat at the head of the table. The reference need not be particularly to the 'table of honor,' which was held only on stated occasions by the Teutonic Knights. For a list of recorded instances of this celebration see Cook's article, Trans Conn Acad, XX, 209-12.

59 the Grete See, the Mediterranean.

60 armee, armed expedition, armada (Lat. 'armata'). The reading aryve (MSS Hg, Ha, Gg, Ent) "arrival or disembarkation" is more difficult since the word is not found elsewhere in English.

68 "Though he was brave, he was prudent." Tupper (Types, p 34 f) quotes de Cessols to prove that "sapientia" in a knight means skill and prudence. The contrast here, he argues, is between "fortitudo" or 'audacia' and "sapientia" ("ars et prudentia").

The subjunctive (were) implies no doubt of the Knight's worthiness. It is the mood commonly employed by Chaucer in simple concession.

72 "A true and perfect gentle knyght." Manly notes that Chaucer apparently never uses "very" (verray) as an intensive adverb.

The Squire

On the training and duties of squires of John Saunders, Cabinet Pictures of English Life Chaucer, Lond., 1845, pp 70 ff. Chaucer's description exhibits the qualities and accomplishments that were regularly expected of a young courtly lover. Much stress was laid on the virtue of "joy." The whole passage is well illustrated by RR, 2175-2210. It is possible, as several scholars have suggested, that in making the portrait Chaucer had in mind his own youth. See E Legouis, Chaucer, Paris, 1910, p 5, and O F Emerson, Rom Rev, III, 321-61. Chaucer had been trained as a page in the household of Prince Lionel. He had even taken part himself, in 1369, in a campaign in Artois and Picardy. But in the case of the Squire the reference is doubtless to the so-called crusade of Henry Le Despenser, Bishop of Norwich, in 1383.

80 lovyere, Southern dialect for the more usual lovere. Bachelor, a probationer for the honor of knighthood. Cf the academic use of the title for the first degree in arts.

88 In the Ellesmere miniature of the Squire his coat and cap are both much decorated with embroidery. Cf also the garment of the God of Love in Rom, II 896-98 (RR, 876 ff). But it is possible that Chaucer's line refers to the pink and white of the Squire's complexion.

91 floytyng, either "whistling" or "playing the flute." See Flugel, JEGP, I, 125. Manly suggests that the Bohemian flute may have become fashionable in Queen Anne's time.

95 songes make, i.e., the music, endite meant "compose the words."

97-8 For the belief that during the mating season nightingales sing all night see, besides the references given in the note on l 10, above, Flugel, JEGP, I, 122. The comparison between them and the lover is closely paralleled in a couplet of the Welsh poet Dafydd Nanmor (ed Roberts and Williams, London, 1923 p 88) "Ni chysgaf tra vo haf hir Mwy nog eos vain gywir."

100 Carving was a regular duty of a squire in his lord's house. Cf SumT, III, 2243-44, MerchT, IV, 1772-73.

The Yeoman

A Yeoman ranked in service next above a "garson" or groom. The term was later loosely applied to small landholders, some of whom had considerable substance. The Ellesmere MS has no picture of the Yeoman since he tells no tale. It is conjectured that Chaucer intended to rewrite for him the Tale of Gamelyn, found in a number of MSS of the Canterbury Tales.

101 he, namely, the Knight, who was accompanied by the Yeoman as well as the Squire.

104 For references to the use of peacock-feathered arrows see, besides Skeat's note, E S Krappe in MLN, XLIII, 176.

107 On drooping feathers Manly refers to Ascham's Toxophilus, ed Arber, London, 1868, 128-33.

115 Small images of the saints were worn as talismans, and Christopher was the patron saint of foresters.

The Prioress

For general comment on the Prioress see particularly J L Lowes in Angl, XXXIII, 440 ff. A somewhat different interpretation of her character is given by Sister Madeleva, Chaucer's Nuns and Other Essays, New York, 1925. On the convent of St Leonard's see Manly, New Light, pp 202 ff., and the notes in his edition, also E P Kuhl, PQ, II, 306 ff. There is a good general account of the life and discipline of such institutions in Eileen Power's Medieval English Nunneries, Cambridge (Eng.), 1922, see also her Medieval People, Boston, 1924, pp 59 ff.

Chaucer's characterization of the Prioress is extremely subtle, and his satire — if it can be called satire at all — is of the gentlest and most sympathetic sort. The closing remark about her brooch and motto has often been misunderstood, and the whole spirit of the passage consequently misrepresented. The inscription Amor vincit omnia (Love overcometh all things) was applicable alike to religious and to romantic love, and carries no implication that the Prioress was "acquainted with the gallantries of her age." She is treated, throughout the Canterbury Tales, with the utmost respect. Yet the ambiguity of the motto suggests, in Professor Lowes's phrase, the "delightfully imperfect submergence of the woman in the nun," and the same implication appears in many other elements of the description. The very adjectives symple and coy, at the beginning, are part of the regular vocabulary of romantic poetry, the name Madame Eglentyne has similar associations, the description of the Prioress's personal beauty is quite in the style of the romances, and the account of her dainty manners at table is based upon a passage in the Roman de la Rose which was meant as a kind of prescription for young ladies of fashion. Throughout the whole description there is a curious mingling of love celestial and chiere of court.

But if Chaucer did not mean to disparage the character of the Prioress, there are certain laxities in conduct — matters of discipline rather than morals — which he does imply in her case as well as in that of other ecclesiastical figures among the pilgrims. Perhaps the brooch was objectionable as a bit of worldly vanity. The wimple, possibly, should not have been fluted, and the broad forehead should have been veiled. The pet dogs were clearly against the rules. The very presence of the Prioress on a pilgrimage was a violation of orders promulgated at various times (791, 1195, 1318), though it does not appear that this regulation was consistently enforced. For specific references on these matters see E. Power, as cited above, also E. P. Kuhl, PQ, II, 305 f. Sister Madeleva — who takes issue not only with the critics who have seen moral disparagement in Chaucer's portrayal of the Prioress, but even with Professor Lowes in his more sympathetic interpretation of the character — tries to explain away these various breaches of discipline. She holds the Prioress to have been an elderly sister, perhaps a woman of fifty. Her interpretation is not convincing, though her knowledge of the life of a religious makes it worth consideration.

119 coy, "quiet" without the modern implication of coquetry.

120 seinte, MS Pt, the rest, seint. The meter calls for a dissyllable, and seinte is more probable than seint. The weak form of adjectives is not infrequently found with proper names. See the Introduction, above.

The reason for the selection of St. Loy (Eloi, Eligius) here has been much discussed. The rhyme with coy doubtless had something to do with it, and the ladylike sound of the oath may have confirmed the choice. But there were probably other reasons. Mr. J. W. Hales, Poeta Literaria, New York, 1893, pp. 102 ff., on the basis of a story that Eloi once refused to take an oath proposed to interpret Chaucer's line as meaning that the Prioress swore after the same manner, that is, that she never swore at all. But this explanation is altogether far-fetched. Miss Hammond's suggestion (MLN, XXII, 51), that the saint was invoked as a patron of journeys, lacks good support, and besides gives the line too restricted an application. Professor Lowes (Rom. Rev., V, 368 ff.) has shown that the character and person of St. Loy were such as might naturally have appealed to the Prioress. Beginning life as a goldsmith's apprentice, Eligius rose, by reason of his integrity and the excellence of his work, to become the intimate counsellor of King Dagobert, and after important service in government and diplomacy he was finally made Bishop of Noyon. He was famed for his personal beauty and courtesy as well as for his craftsmanship, and his whole character is delightfully consonant with that of the Prioress herself.

Professor Manly notes that there may have been a special cult of St. Loy at the English court at this time. The Countess of Pembroke gave an image of him to the high altar of the Grey Friars. Moreover Queen Philippa came from a district where he was especially popular.

For the association of St. Eligius with horses and carters, on the basis of an episode in his legend, see FrT, III, 1564, n.

121 madame Eglentyne. This romantic sounding name ("Lady Sweetbriar") has a curious resemblance, as Professor Manly has noted, to that of Madame Argentine ("Domina Argentyn"), a nun known to have been at Stratford in 1375. But the identification is improbable, as Mr. Manly also grants, because the prioress when Chaucer wrote was Mary Syward (or Suhard). See TLS, 1927, p. 817.

123 Entuned in her nose. This mode of nasal intonation is traditional with the recitative portions of the church service. Sister Madeleva observes that the Prioress would have intoned the office only in the convent, not on a journey. So the passage implies that Chaucer, perhaps through ties of kinship, was familiar with her community.

125 The traditional interpretation of the reference to Stratford atte Bowe appears to be the right one. The Prioress's French was only such as she could have heard in an English nunnery. The comparison with the Frensch of Parys is disparaging, for the latter was the standard and had long been recognized as such. Chaucer can hardly mean that she spoke a dialect that was just as good. (For a defense of the contrary opinion see Skeat's note on the passage.) Evidence that the French spoken in England was regarded as inferior to "French of Paris" is cited by Hinkley pp 10-11, and in Manly's note See also J E Matzke, MP, III, 47 ff But it is possible, as Manly remarks, that the French of Stratford is disparaged because it was the dialect of Hainaut, introduced there by the sister of Queen Philippa, and incidentally, Chaucer's wife came from Hainaut!

By Stratford atte Bowe is undoubtedly meant the Benedictine nunnery of St Leonard's, at Bromley, Middlesex adjoining Stratford-Bow It was founded in the time of William the Conqueror Elizabeth of Hainaut sister of Queen Philippa, was a nun there for many years and died there in 1375 Elizabeth, countess of Ulster, visited it in 1356 when Chaucer was in her train St Leonard's was never rich, like the house of the same order at Barking, and its occupants were on the whole of lower station Elizabeth Chaucy supposed to be Chaucer's sister or daughter became a nun at Barking in 1381 Professor Kuhl (PQ, II, 308 f) raises the question whether the slur on the Prioress's French was partly a reflection on the inferior convent, and whether in counterfeiting cheers of court the Stratford nuns were aping Windsor or their more aristocratic neighbors at Barking

127-36 Cf RR, 13408-32

137 The Prioress's elegant manners like her French, are gently satirized But countrefete means simply "imitate," without the implication of dishonesty

142, 150 conscience, "tender feeling," "sensitiveness," rather than "moral conscience"

146 Of smale houndes, an old partitive construction For evidence that nuns were forbidden to keep dogs see E Power, Med Eng Nunneries p 305 ff Dugdale, Monasticon, London, 1846, II, 619, no x, Kuhl, PQ, II, 303 f

147 wastel breed Though the word wastel is of the same origin as the Fr "gâteau," wastel breed seems to have been rather a fine white wheat bread than what would now be called cake The Liber Albus (1419) describes four grades of bread, first "deme" ("panis dominicus"), the lord's bread, doubtless the payndemayn of Thop, VII, 725, second wastel breed third a light bread, also called "Fraunceis" and "pouf", and fourth "tourte," perhaps identical with "bis" bread or brown Exact references on the subject are given by Professor E P Kuhl, PQ II 302 f He finds no evidence that wastel bread was sweetened

149 men, probably not plural, but the weakened form of man, used in the indefinite sense Cf men seyth (German, "man sagt")

151 According to Mr G G Coulton (in a letter to the editor) the wimple should have been plain, not fluted But Sister Madeleva (Chaucer's Nuns, pp 16 f) explains it as a

Benedictine collar accordeon-plated in concentric circles

152 greye as glas, the color that would now be called blue

154 For evidence that the fair forehead should not have been exposed Mr Coulton (in the letter referred to above) cites Alnwich's Visitations Lincoln Record Soc, XIV, 3, 118 130 f, 176, also Olivier Maillard, Quadragesimal, Serm xlv (Petit, Paris, 1512, fol 114a) On the admiration of high and broad foreheads in Chaucer's age see Manly's note Mr T B Clark (PQ, IX 312 ff) brings evidence from the physiognomists that an extremely broad forehead was sometimes regarded as a sign of stupidity and folly But he observes that, in view of l 156, the Prioress's forehead was probably proportionate to her height Both characteristics are so individualizing as to suggest strongly that Chaucer had in mind an actual person

159 peure of bedes, a rosary The "gauds," or large beads for the Paternosters, were of green

161 On the crowned A, apparently a capital A surmounted by a crown, see Miss Hammond, in Angl, XXVII, 393 and XXX, 320

162 Proverbial of Haecckel, p 2, no 6

164 chapeleyme, "capellana," a kind of secretary and personal assistant to the Prioress For references to the office in English records see M Forster, Herrig's Archiv CXXXII, 399 ff, Kuhl, PQ, II, 304, and Manly's note

The three priests have been the subject of much discussion They would bring the total number of pilgrims up to thirty-one, instead of twenty-nine, as given in l 24 This discrepancy in itself need disturb no one, in view of other inconsistencies that were allowed to stand in the uncompleted Canterbury Tales But there is every reason to doubt the presence of more than one priest with the Prioress Only one is mentioned later It is altogether improbable that she would have been attended by three Moreover, the confessor of the convent would have been the priest of the parish Chaucer very likely started to describe the Second Nun and stopped with the word chapeleyme then somebody else completed the line Emendation seems unnecessary For various proposals, none of which is satisfactory, see O F Emerson, PQ II, 89 ff Professor Emerson's own suggestion that Chaucer meant at first to include the Monk and the Friar in a "church group" with the Prioress and her priest, is improbable

The Monk

The character of the hunting monk is well illustrated in the articles of the Visitation of Selborne Abbey held by William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester, in 1387 (See the appendix to Gilbert White's Natural History and Antiquities of Selborne, ed Buckland, London 1875 p 512) Not only the hunting, but also the love of fine horses and dogs and rich food and clothing, is there condemned It should be added that the secular clergy as well as the regulars were blamed by the reforming party for such luxurious living Cf Wychif, English Works ed F D Matthew, EETS, 1880, pp 149, 151, 212-13, 434, and Select English Works, ed Arnold, Oxford, 1869-71, III, 519 f

165 pour la maistrre (Fr "pour la maistrre") surpassing all others, hence an adverbial phrase meaning "extremely"

166 outrudere, a monk whose duty it was to look after the estates of the monastery Cf ShpT, VII, 65 f

170 Skeat's note cites a number of passages to show that it was fashionable to have bells on the bridles and harness of horses See also Child's note on Thomas Rymer, Engl and Scot Pop Ball, Boston, 1882-98, I, 320

172 celle, a subordinate monastery

173 St Benedict, the father of western monasticism, established his central monastery at Monte Cassino in 529 St Maurus was his disciple

175 To avoid the anacoluthon here Professor Liddell made olde thynges pace parenthetical, and took reule to be the object of leet But the resulting construction, though logical, is unnatural

176 Skeat interpreted heeld the space, "held his course", but this use of space seems to be unknown It is safer (with Professor Manly) to take the space adverbially, in the sense of "meanwhile, for the time"

177 The text referred to may be the following canon recorded in the Decretum of Gratian (I, 86, Lyons, 1560, col 411), and based on the Breviarium in Psalmo attributed to St Jerome "Esau venator erat quoniam peccator erat et penitus non invenimus in Scripturis sanctis sanctorum aliqueum venatorem Piscatores invenimus sanctos" (Psalm xc, Migne, Pat Lat., XXVI, 1097) For further discussion see O F Emerson, MP, I, 105 ff Professor S J Crawford (TLS, 1930, p 942) quotes a passage in condemnation of Nimrod from St Augustine, De Civ Dei (xvi, 4) But it is by no means clear that Chaucer had this in mind

A pulled hen, and an oystre, I 182, are examples of the numerous comparisons to denote worthlessness with which the language swarmed in the Middle English period They were often homely or vivid, and were commonly used to enforce a simple negation — "not a nut, a straw, a button" etc For discussion of their vogue see Dreyling, in Ausgaben und Abhandlungen, LXXXII, J Hen, Angl., XV, 41 ff, 396 ff F H Sykes, The French Elements in Middle English, Oxford, 1899, pp 24 ff Other examples in Chaucer are collected by Haeckel, pp 60 ff

179 Various emendations (resteeles, revie- lees, cloysterles — the last from MS Harl, 7334) have been proposed for reccheles, but no change is necessary The word means "reckless," "careless," here "neglectful of duty and discipline," and is more particularly explained by I 181 (See Emerson MP, I, 110 ff) A second text from Gratian's Decretum (u, 16, I, Lyons, 1560 col 1076) is probably referred to in the passage "Sicut piscis sine aqua caret vita ita sine monasterio monachus" The comparison was a commonplace Skeat notes several examples, the earliest being from the Life of St Anthony, attributed to St Athanasius

181-82 The language and rime here are closely similar to the Testament of Jean de Meun, II 1064-67 (ed Meon, Le Roman de la Rose 1814, IV, p 60), though the sense is reversed

184 What, why

187 St Augustine was the reputed author of a famous monastic rule, which was in reality deduced from one of his letters (Epist 211, Migne, Pat Lat., XXXIII, 958 ff) and certain sermons on his community in Hippo (Serm 355, 356, De vita et moribus clericorum suorum, Migne, XXXIX, 1568 ff For the text of the rule, see Dugdale, Monasticon, London, 1846, VI, 42 ff) His teachings on monastic labor were set forth in his treatise De Opere Monachorum (Migne, XL, 547 ff), written for Aurelius, bishop of Carthage It was a regular charge of the Lollard reformers against the "possessors" that they avoided hard work See H B Workman, John Wychif, Oxford, 1926, II, 94

But, contr of biddeth

The question How shal the world be served? has reference to the fact that many secular positions of trust were held by the clergy Cf Gower's Mirour de l'Omme, 20245 ff Chaucer ironically asks how these valuable services are to be rendered if the clergy confine themselves to their religious duties and manual labor

191 pryking "the tracking of a hare by its pricks or footprints" (NED, s v pryking, 2)

201 stepe, "large, prominent" (rather than "bright," as sometimes explained)

202 His eyes gleamed like a furnace under a cauldron

The Friar

With the description of the Friar here should be compared the story of another friar told by the Summoner (SumT, III, 1709 ff) Both characters are made to represent the corrupt condition of the mendicant orders which in Chaucer's time had departed from the ideals of their founders

Though there are a number of individualizing traits in the Friar's portrait, no model has been identified Professor Manly notes that Huberd (I 269) is an uncommon name in English records of the fourteenth century

208 wantowne, gay, cf wantownesse, l 264, used of an attractive mannerism Chaucer's description clearly implies that the Friar was "wanton" also in the modern sense

The final -e on wantowne, unpronounced in any case before and, may be merely a scribal error But it is possibly to be regarded as the ending of the weak adjective, standing without a noun

209 lymytoure, see ll 252 a-b solempne, in this context, apparently, "festive" It ranges in meaning from this sense to those of "grand, imposing, pompous solemn"

210 The four orders were Dominicans, Franciscans, Carmelites, and Augustinians

212-13 He found husbands and perhaps dowries, for women whom he had himself seduced Flugel's explanation (JEGP, I, 133 ff.), that the Friar married runaway couples free of charge, misses or avoids an innuendo which Chaucer surely intended

214 Cf the phrase, "a pillar of the church"

216 On franklins see ll 331 ff., which explains sufficiently why the Friar liked to frequent their houses Their scale of living is further illustrated by the rymed bill of fare, entitled "A fest for a franken," in John Russell's Book of Nurture (The Babees Book, ed F J Furnivall, EETS, 1868, pp 170-71)

218 ff He had received from his order a license to hear confessions The Franciscans and other friars had privileges which enabled them to confess the members of a parish without leave of the local ordinaries, and to give absolution for more serious offenses than they could deal with The rivalry between friars and parish priests turned largely upon this practice The friars were often charged with laxity in the imposition of penance For illustrations from contemporary literature and ecclesiastical documents see E Flugel, Angl., XXIII, 225 ff, F Tupper, JEGP, XIV, 258 f, H B Workman, John Wyclif, II, 106-07

227 f "For if a man gave, the Friar dared to assert he knew the man was repentant"

241 f In tappestere and probably in beggester the suffix -stere (AS "-estre") has its proper feminine signification, as in the Mod Eng "spinster", so also doubtless in hoppesteres (KnT, I, 2017), chudestere MerchT, IV, 1535), and tombesteres and frutesteres (ParDT, VI 477 f) But the distinction of gender was often lost in early English

243 ff With his avoidance of paraille cf Wyclif, Eng Works, ed Matthew, EETS, 1880, pp 15, 17 Select Eng Works, ed Arnold, 3 v, Oxford, 1869-71, III, 374, also RR, 11366 ff (Rom, 6491 ff) The character of Fals-Semblant is reproduced partly in the Friar and partly in the Pardoner

252 a-b This couplet, which is found in only a few MSS, is probably genuine, though it may have been deliberately canceled

(See the Textual Notes) The ferme was rent paid by the friar for the privilege of begging within assigned limits

254 In principio, from John 1, 1 The opening words of St John's Gospel (vv 1-14) were regarded with peculiar reverence and even held to have a magical virtue Cf Tyndale's reference to the "limiter's saying of 'In principio erat verbum' from house to house" (Answer to More, ed H Walter, Parker Soc, 1850, p 62) On the superstitious uses of the passage see E G C F Atchley, Trans of the St Paul's Ecclesiastical Soc, IV, 161 ff, J S P Tatlock, MLN, XXIX, 141 f, R A Law, PMLA, XXXVII, 208 ff, and (for the same practice in Wales) J Jenkins, Trans of the Soc of Cymmrodorion, 1919-20, p 111 Professor Reisner has called the editor's attention to a similar custom among the Soudanese Mohammedans who give bread to a man for reciting the Surah el-Ihläs (No 112) of the Koran

256 What he picked up amounted to more than his income Sometimes interpreted the proceeds of his begging were greater than the rent or ferme which he turned in to his convent (See Flugel in Angl., XXIII, 233 ff) But the phrase was proverbial in the other sense Cf the FrT, III, 1451, and RR, 11566, and other references in MLN, XXIII, 144, 200 The word purchas was commonly applied to illegal gains

258 love-dayes, days appointed for settling disputes by arbitration The clergy took active part in such proceedings

261 The Master's degree was one of considerable dignity and was obtained only after lavish expenditure of money

263 presse, probably the mould of the bell, rather than the clothes-press Cf the Old French phrase "a fons de cuve," i e, "en forme de cuve renversée (de cloche)," and for examples of its use see Ste Palaye, Dict Historique, Paris, 1877, s v "cuve," and a note by Lowes, Rom Rev., II, 118

The Merchant

The character of the Merchant is admirably illustrated from contemporary documents by T Knott, PQ, I, 1 ff See also Manly, New Light, pp 181 ff, and his notes

It has generally been held by scholars, including Mr Knott, that the Merchant is to be regarded as one of the merchants of the Staple, whose business was primarily the export of wool, woollens, and skins But since Chaucer makes no mention of wool Professor Manly argues that he may have had in mind rather one of the Merchant Adventurers They were originally organized in the thirteenth century for trade with the Low Countries They were especially concerned with the importation of English cloth into the foreign cities where they were established The fact that they were known as "The Fraternity of St Thomas of Canterbury" may be a reason for the presence of the Merchant on the pilgrimage. Whether an Adventurer or a Stapler, he represented a class that was very rich and powerful in England in the fourteenth century. The merchants traded most successfully on the necessities of Edward III and Richard II, and from the secretiveness of Chaucer's Merchant Mr Knott infers that he was involved in the national finances. The description sounds very personal, and the subject of the sketch, if there was one, may have been easily recognized. Mr Knott suggests that it was some merchant of Ipswich, of which Orwell was the seaport, and Professor Manly adds the reminder that Chaucer's father was born in the town and owned property there.

271 mottelee, motly, cloth woven with a figured design, often parti-colored. Liveries of such material were in regular use for members of various guilds and companies, and there is evidence that the Merchants of the Staple wore a distinctive dress.

hye on horse, seated in a very high saddle.

274 resons, opinions, remarks.

solempnely, impressively, pompously.

275 Sownynge, proclaiming, making known, probably not equivalent to Sownynge vn [to], l 307.

276-77 "He wished the sea to be guarded at all hazards, between Middelburgh and Orwell." With regard to the keeping of the sea, to protect foreign trade, see Manly's note on the passage.

Orwelle, the old port of Orwell, close by Harwich. Since Harwich is not known to have been a wool port, whereas Ipswich is repeatedly named as a staple in fourteenth century records, Mr Knott holds the Merchant to have belonged to Ipswich. This would also be likely enough if he was a Merchant Adventurer. Middelburgh, a port on the island of Walcheren on the Dutch coast, nearly opposite Orwell. The wool-staple was at Middelburg instead of at Calais from 1384 till 1388, whence it has been inferred that Chaucer must have written these lines between those years. (See J W Hales, Folia Litterana, New York, 1893, pp 100 f.) But it is certainly not impossible that, writing a few years later, he could have recalled the circumstances. Oddly enough, the date also fits if the reference is to the Merchant Adventurers, who appear to have been established in Middelburg in 1384, and for some time after.

278 By selling French sheeldes ("ecus") at a profit the Merchant was breaking the statute which forbade anyone except the royal money changers to make a profit on exchange (25 Edw III, Stat 5, ch 12 Ruffhead, Statutes at Large, Lond., 1763, I, 265). Possibly Chaucer means further to imply that the merchant took usury under color of exchange. For illustrations of both fraudulent money-changing and the concealment of debts — which were perhaps stock charges against the merchants — see also Tupper, Types, pp 43 ff.

282 chevysaunce, which properly referred to borrowing and lending, or dealing for profit, was constantly used (like the word bargayn) for dishonest practices. It was sometimes a term for usury, and this implication may be intended here. Or the Merchant may have been a farmer of the revenue who failed to make honest returns to the Exchequer, or again, he may have bargained unscrupulously with the King's creditors. Mr Knott (pp 10 ff.) shows that Richard Lyons, a London merchant of the time was charged with buying the King's obligations at a discount and then obtaining full payment of them. The same man was also prosecuted for making profits on foreign exchange.

284 The last line has been held to convey contempt for the merchant class, or at least the condescension of a court poet writing for persons of higher station. But it may well be that Chaucer merely wishes to disavow any such personal identification of the Merchant as his readers might be led to make.

The Clerk

The term "clerk" was applied to any ecclesiastical student as well as to a man in holy orders. Chaucer's Clerk, though he had long since proceeded to logic (l 286), was still pursuing his studies, perhaps in preparation for the Master's degree. On the curriculum and related matters see Jones, PMLA, XXVII, 106 ff. In the prologue to his own tale of Griselda the Clerk represents himself as having been at Padua, then the seat of a famous university.

Professor Manly is surely right in rejecting the supposition that Chaucer meant to describe his own education in that of the Clerk. Neither here nor in the Clerk's own prologue, where he speaks of his meeting with Petrarch, is there reason for supposing that his experiences represent those of the poet.

For the suggestion that the Clerk is to be identified with Walter Dissy (or Disse), mentioned in the will of William Mowbray (d 1391) as "jadys clerk de Oxenford" see M E Richardson, TLS 1932, pp 331, 390, and comments by R B Turton, p 368. To prove Chaucer's acquaintance with Disse, it is pointed out that Disse was a confessor of John of Gaunt from 1375 till 1386, also that Mowbray's daughter married Thomas Ingleby, and that the Inglebys probably knew Chaucer. But the grounds for the identification are very slight. Disse's relation to John of Gaunt really counts against it.

292 to have office, to accept secular employment. This was a common practice with men of clerical training. Cf the reference to it in the account of the Monk (note to l 187 above).

294 Twenty bookes Twenty is here o.

course a round number, and it is not to be supposed that Chaucer had in mind literally twenty volumes of Aristotle, though the works of the philosopher accessible in Latin to Englishmen of that generation might have filled a score of manuscripts, not to speak of the numerous mediæval commentaries from Boethius down. But private libraries of that size were very uncommon at the time, and if the Clerk had bought one it is not strange that he had no money left for food or clothing.

297 Puns are unusual in Chaucer, and it is not always easy to determine whether they are intentional. But there is here an unquestionable play on the word philosophe in its ordinary meaning and in the cant sense of "alchemist." Other more or less clear cases of word-play are found in l 514, below, SumT, III, 1916 f., 1934, WB Prol, III, 837-38 SqT, V, 105-06, CYT, VIII, 730, Tr, 1 71, and Purse, 3-4. For discussion of these and other instances see J S P Tatlock, in the Flugel Memorial Volume, Palo Alto, Cal., 1916, pp. 228-32.

299 The beggar student, or at least the student who was aided by contributions from friends and others, was a familiar figure in mediæval England. For references on the subject, and data with regard to the expenses of life at the universities, see H S V Jones, PMLA, XXVII, 106 ff., also Manly's note.

305 "With due formality and respect"

307 Sownynge vn, tending towards, consonant with Med Lat "sonare in" or "ad". Cf PhysT, VI, 54, Mk Prol, VII, 1967, Tr, III, 1414, IV, 1676, SqT, V, 517, and see NED, s v "sound," v¹ 5.

The Sergeant of the Law

On the rank and status of sergeants of the law and the possible identification of Chaucer's Man of Law see Manly, New Light, pp. 131 ff., and his notes on the passage.

The Sergeants-at-Law ("servientes ad legem") were the King's legal servants, selected from barristers of sixteen years' standing. From their number were chosen the judges of the King's courts and the chief baron of the Exchequer. Those who were not regular judges sometimes went on circuit as "justices in assize" (l 314). They were few in number — about twenty when Chaucer wrote — and the most eminent members of the profession. They were addressed in the King's writ by the respectful plural "vos," and had the privilege of wearing their head-covering, the coif, in the royal presence. Professor Manly cites from Fortescue and Dugdale accounts of the elaborate ceremonies and feasts connected with their creation.

Among the lawyers known to have held the rank of sergeant in Chaucer's time Professor Manly finds only one — Thomas Pynchbek — who seems to fit the portrait of the Man of Law. He was admitted sergeant as early as 1376, and often served as justice in assize between 1376 and 1388. April 24, 1388, he was appointed chief baron of the Exchequer, from which office he was removed in 1389. From 1391 to 1396 he was justice of Common Pleas. He died by 1397. He was of a new, landless family, and appears in the records as acquiring land. His village was near the chief manor of Katherine Swynford. He and Chaucer were apparently on opposite sides politically, and Pynchbek offended Chaucer's friend Sir William Beauchamp by denying his claim to the Pembroke estates. One of the writs to arrest Chaucer for a small debt, in 1388, was signed by Pynchbek as chief baron of the Exchequer. So Chaucer might have had some personal motive for his satire. Finally, there is a possible pun on Pynchbek's name in l 326.

The characterization of the lawyer is of especial interest in view of the probability recently established that Chaucer himself had a legal education. See the biographical introduction, above.

310 at the Parrys. Hitherto explained as the porch of St Paul's, where lawyers met their clients for consultation. But Professor Manly questions whether this custom goes back to the fourteenth century. He suggests that the parrys was either a "paradisus" at Westminster, used (according to later records, to be sure) for the court of the Exchequer, or an afternoon exercise or moot of the students at the Inns of Court. The last explanation is that of John Selden, in his Notes on Fortescue's De Laudibus Legum Anglæ, London, 1672, p. 50 (see also NED, s v Parrys, 2). But Fortescue's own text, it may be observed, rather supports the traditional interpretation of Chaucer's line. He says of the suitors ("Placitantes") that in the afternoon, when the courts are closed, they resort "ad pervisum, & alibi, consulentes cum servientibus ad legem & alius consiliariis suis" (p. 124). For further evidence in support of this explanation see G L Frost, MLN, XLIV, 496 ff.

315 By patente, by the King's letters patent making the appointment as judge, pleyn commissioun, a letter addressed to the appointee giving him jurisdiction over all kinds of cases.

317 The fees and robes were gifts of clients.

318 purchasour, rather a buyer of land for himself than a conveyancer. He wished to become himself a landed gentleman. Moreover, he always succeeded in getting unrestricted possession (see symple). Cf Gower's Mirour de l'Homme, 24541 ff., and Wyclif's Thre Things (Eng Works, ed Matthew, EETS, 1880, pp. 180 ff.).

323 He knew accurately all the cases and judgments since the Conquest. He was versed in the common law and decisions of the courts as well as in the statutes (see l 327).

328 medlee, medley, cloth of mixed weave sometimes parti-colored. The official robe of the Sergeant-at-Law were of brown and green stripes

The Franklin

On the status and character of the Franklin see G. H. Gerould, PMLA, XLI, 262 ff. A possible identification is proposed by Manly, New Light, pp. 159 ff.

The word "franklin" sometimes designates a mere "free man" ("libertinus"), sometimes, as here, a landholder of free out not of noble birth. The exact social status of franklins is a matter of dispute. According to Henry Bradley (NED, s. v.), they ranked below the gentry, and Chaucer's Franklin has been taken by some commentators to be a kind of parvenu, with an excessive interest in gentillesse and an uncomfortable consciousness of his inferiority to the gentle members of the party. But Professor Gerould has collected considerable evidence that franklins were not merely men of substance, but were regarded as gentlemen, with a social position similar to that of knights, esquires, and sergeants of the law. Certainly Chaucer's Franklin is described as a person of wealth and dignity, his traveling companion is the Sergeant, a figure of consequence, and he held offices to which a man below the rank of gentleman was not ordinarily eligible. He corresponds in general to the country squire of a later period. His remarks about gentillesse may have been prompted not by a sense of social inferiority, but the knowledge that he had less experience of courtly society than some of his fellow-pilgrims from the city.

Professor Manly suggests that the subject of the sketch was Pynchbek's neighbor Sir John Bussy of Kesteven in Lincolnshire. The identifying traits are perhaps not so striking as those which Pynchbek shares with the Man of Law. But Bussy was sheriff of Lincolnshire in 1384 and 1385, he was repeatedly knight of the shire, and he often sat on commissions of the peace, sometimes with Pynchbek. The fact that he was knighted as early as 1384 would not exclude him, Professor Manly argues, for he was not a knight banneret, the probable rank of Chaucer's Knight.

333 complexioun, doubtless used here in its older sense of "temperament," "combination of humours." A ruddy face was only one of the signs of a "complexioun" in which blood predominated. The other "complexions" commonly mentioned were the choleric, melancholy, and phlegmatic, characterized respectively by the predominance of choler, black bile, and phlegm.

336 ff. He was, as we should say, an epicure. The philosophy of Epicurus was associated (somewhat unjustly) then as now with luxurious living. With the present passage of Bo, m, pr. 2, 88 ff., and MerchT, IV, 2021 ff.

340 St. Julian, the patron of hospitality, was a figure more legendary than historical, said to have died about 313 A. D.

341 after oon, according to one standard, uniformly good.

353 table dormant, a table fixed in its place, as distinguished from a movable one. The Franklin was always ready for company.

355 He presided over the sessions of the Justices of the Peace.

356 knyght of the shire, member of Parliament for his county.

359 As sheriff he was the King's administrative officer in his county and ranked next to the Lord Lieutenant. Countour, a term of various applications. Selden, Titles of Honour (Works, London, 1726, III, 1027) defines it as "a sergeant at law," and Professor Manly cites evidence that it was used also of non-professional pleaders in court. But it may also mean "accountant," and refer to the Franklin's services as auditor in the shire.

360 vasour, usually explained as a "vassal's vassal" (from "vassus vassorum"), that is, a tenant who did not hold directly from the King. But both the etymology and the theory of tenure have been called in question. See Pollock and Matland, History of Engl. Law, 2d ed., Cambridge (Eng.), 1898, I, 546, n. 1. The term was loosely used in both France and England for substantial landholders, below the rank of barons. Professor Manly notes that the term was not in common use in southern England in the fourteenth century. In fact, he argues in support of his identification of Bussy, it appears to have been especially frequent in Lincolnshire.

The Five Guildsmen

On the mediæval English guilds see Charles Gross, The Guild Merchant, Oxford, 1890, and Westlake, Parish Guilds, New York, 1919.

For an account of the companies here represented and for notes on Chaucer's text, see E. P. Kuhl, Trans. Wisconsin Acad. of Sciences, XVIII, 652 ff. Professor Kuhl suggests that Chaucer had reasons of policy for the selection of these five. They all belonged to the non-victualing trades, which were under the protection of John of Gaunt. But these particular companies were neutral on the whole in the struggle between victualers and non-victualers for the control of the city. They did not join in the denunciation of Mayor Breme in the Parliament of 1386. Mr. C. Camden, Jr. (PQ, VII, 314 ff.), draws from these facts the bold inference that the Guildsmen were added to the Prologue late, after the political strife had subsided. In Chaucer's original draught, he thinks, the Cook belonged with the Man of Law and the Franklin.

364 Since the five pilgrims belonged to different trades, the fraternity of which they all wore the livery must have been a social and religious guild. Professor Manly notes (New Light, p. 259) that St. Thomas of Canterbury was the patron saint of the Mercers, a craft closely related to the Weavers, Dyers, and Tapers

369-70 "Each of them seemed a good burghess to sit on the raised platform in a guild-hall" The mayor and aldermen sat on the dais, the common councilors on the floor The reference here and in l 372 (alderman) seems to be rather to the municipal magistrates than to officers of the guilds

373 To become an alderman a burghess was required by law to have a certain amount of property

375 to blame, "deserving of blame" In modern English the phrase "to blame" usually fixes responsibility on a person, here it rather defines the character of the act

377 vigilias, celebrations held the evening before the guild festival The term was also used for services on the vigils of saints' days On such occasions the wives of the aldermen would have precedence For lists of actual precedences in the livery companies see W Herbert, The History of The Twelve Great Livery Companies, London, 1834, I, 100 f

The Cook

For further information about this character see the introduction to his tale

379 for the nones, probably "for the occasion," to cook their meals on the pilgrimage But the phrase might mean "especially skilful" (of the cook) See the Glossary

384 mortreux It is hard to be sure of the early English pronunciation of the -x in certain words where it represents etymologically an -s or -us In the case of mortreux spellings like mortrels, mortrewes, point to a final -s In Burdeux (see l 397) the same pronunciation is probable and is supported by the spelling "Burdios" in fifteenth-century Welsh But the sound of -x is indicated as occurring at least sporadically, by recorded English spellings like "Burdeukes" Lybeux (Thop, VII, 900), Fr "li biaux," doubtless also had an -s For Amphorax (WB Prol, III, 741, Anel, 57, Tr, II, 105, v, 1500) Chaucer must have been familiar with the Latin form "Ampharaus," though there may have been a corrupt English pronunciation in -x

386 a mormal (Lat "male mortuum"), a species of dry-scabbed ulcer For medical theories on the subject see Curry, pp 47 ff There is a contemporary account of the treatment of an ulcerated leg in John Arderne's Treatises, ed Power, EETS, 1910, pp 52-54 (printed also by A S Cook, Trans Conn Acad, XXIII, 27 ff)

The Shipman

On the Shipman see P Q Karkeek, in Essays on Chaucer (Ch Soc., 1884), Part V, no 15, Manly, New Light, pp 169 ff Dr Karkeek long ago pointed out that a vessel named the "Magdaleyne," from Dartmouth, paid customs duties in 1379 and 1391 In the former year the master was named George Cowntree, in the latter, Peter Russhenden Scholars have recognized the possibility that one of these men was the original of the Shipman, and Professor Manly has produced new arguments which make probable the identification with Russhenden He notes a number of records of cases between 1385 and 1389, where Dartmouth ships were charged with unlawfully attacking others at sea John Hawley, the chief spowner of Dartmouth (also mayor of the city and collector of customs for Devon and Cornwall) is mentioned in several such prosecutions (The records of one case are summarized and several documents translated, by Florence E White, MP, XXVI, 249 ff, 379 ff, XXVII, 123 ff) In 1386 Piers Russelden (apparently the same man as Russhenden) commanded a Dartmouth balinge that joined a barge of Hawley's in the capture of three Breton crayers

390 It is hard to decide whether rouney here means a poor hackney, a nag (as usually assumed), or a great, strong horse Mr Hinckley, who argues for the latter interpretation, gives evidence of both meanings of the term

As he kouthe implies that the Shipman's riding was poor

395 a good felawe, often used with an implication of rascality For examples see Manly's note on l 649

396 f The Shipman stole wine which he was carrying for a merchant (chapman) from Bordeaux Brusendorff's interpretation (pp 481 f) that the Shipman captured many a cargo (draughte), is less probable With Fro Burdeux-ward of To Canterbury-ward, l 793 below, To Thebes-ward, KnT, I, 967 On the pronunciation of Burdeux see the note on mortreux, l 384 above

398 conscience, tender feeling, sympathy, cf l 142, 150, above

400 He drowned his prisoners — apparently not an unusual practice at the time Instances in 1350, in the battle of L'Espagnols sur mer, and in 1403 are cited in Mr Pollard's note

404 Cartage, probably one of the Spanish ports Cartagena, or Cartaya, rather than the ancient Carthage

408 Goollond, probably the island of Gotland, off the coast of Sweden Wisby, its capital, was a very important trading town For the opinion that the spelling with long o (Goollond) points rather to Jutland, see K Malone, MLR, XX, 6

409 Britangne, Brittany

The Doctor of Physic

On the character of the Physician see E E Morris in An English Miscellany (Furnivall), Oxford, 1901, pp 338 ff, Curry, pp 3 ff (a revision of PQ, IV, 1 ff), F Tupper, Types of Society, pp 45 ff, H H Bashford, Nineteenth Cent and After, CIV, 237 ff (with especial reference to Bernard, Gilbert, and Gaddesden) For further treatment of physiological and medical science in Chaucer's age reference may be made to Sir Robert Steele, Mediæval Lore, London, 1893, P A Robin, The Old Physiology in English Literature, London, 1911, L Thorndike, History of Magic and Experimental Science, N Y, 1923, II, Gunther, Early Science in Oxford, III, Oxford, 1925 Some illustration of Chaucer's own acquaintance with the subject is given by Lowes, MP, XI, 491 ff

Chaucer gives here an admirable account of the mediæval practice of medicine, as he did earlier of the practice of law Some traits in the description seem to be individual, but no model is known The old supposition that Chaucer had especially in mind John Gaddesden (Gatesden), who died in 1361, is improbable

413 To speke of, having regard to (that is, on the author's part) Professor Curry is surely mistaken in taking the line to imply that the Physician's superiority consisted only in his ability to talk about his profession

414 astronomye, rather what would now be called astrology Its importance to medical science appears in the lines that follow See also Astr., I, 21, 79 ff The Physician watched (kept) his patient and chose the astrological hours which would be most favorable to the treatment, he was skillful in taking the advantageous time for making talismanic figures Cf HF, 1265 ff

The images referred to may have been either representations of the patient, like the wax figures made by sorcerers with maleficent purpose, or talismans representing the constellations or signs of the zodiac, or symbolically associated with them That both sorts were used by physicians is made clear in Professor Kittredge's discussion of image magic, Witchcraft in Old and New England, Cambridge, Mass., 1929, pp 73 ff Their virtue depended upon the aspects of the planets at the time when they were made The supposed relations between planetary influences and disease, and the whole procedure of the manufacture and use of images, are illustrated at length in Professor Curry's chapter (cited above) See also Thorndike, History of Magic, I, 672 ff

416 magyk natureel "Natural magic," which was regarded as legitimate science (and indeed still had that application in Bacon's Advancement of Learning), must always be distinguished from "black magic" or necromancy

417 fortunem, find or place in a favorable position (Lat "fortunare") This involved much more than merely selecting a favorable ascendant The planet known as the lord of the ascending sign, and also the Moon, must be favorably situated, and the malefic planets must be in positions where their influence would be slight. See the elaborate directions quoted by Curry (p 21) from Thebit ibn Corat

420 The four elementary qualities or contraries, which by combination in pairs produced the four elements — earth (cold and dry), air (hot and moist), water (cold and moist), fire (hot and dry) Similarly the fundamental contraries were held to combine in the four humours blood (hot and moist), phlegm (cold and moist), yellow bile (hot and dry), black bile (cold and dry) See Galen, De Placitis Hippocratis et Platonis, Bk viii, ed I, Muller, Leipzig, 1874, pp 867 ff

425 With this familiar fmg at doctors and druggists of Gower, Mirour de l'Omme 25621 ff Professor Curry (pp 31 ff) cites evidence from the seventeenth century of collusion between men of the two callings Druggists are charged with fostering incompetent practitioners ("apothecaries' physicians") upon patients, and doctors with causing patients to be imposed upon by their particular druggists ("covenant apothecaries") There were doubtless similar practices in the fourteenth century But Chaucer's repetition of a current joke on the medical profession hardly justifies Professor Curry in setting down the Doctor among apothecaries' quacks

429 The names which Chaucer here parades are those of eminent authorities in medicine Five of them appear in a similar, but shorter list in R.R., 15959 ff Aesculapius, the legendary father of medicine, was supposed to be the author of works current in the Middle Ages Dioscorides, a Greek writer on the materna medica, flourished about 50 A D Rufus of Ephesus lived in the second century Hippocrates (Olde Ypocras), the founder of Greek medical science was born at Cos about 460 B C Haly is probably the Persian Hali ibn el Abbas (d 994), an eminent physician of the Eastern Caliphate but the name might also refer to Hali filius Rodbon (born c 980) Galen (commonly spelled Galyen) was the famous authority of the second century The name Serapion was borne by three medical writers, an Alexandrian Greek, probably of the second century B C, a Christian physician of Damascus probably of the ninth century, and an Arabian of the eleventh or twelfth Probably the last of these, author of the Liber de Medicamentis Simplicibus, is referred to Rhazes (Razs) of Baghdad lived in the ninth and tenth centuries Avicenna and Averroes were famous Arabian philosophers, as well as medical authorities, of the eleventh and twelfth centuries respectively Chaucer refers to the Canon of Avicenna in PardT, VI, 839-90 Damascen is of less certain identification St John of Damascus (676-754) was concerned rather with philosophy and theology than with medicine, but the name Johannes (or Jannus) Damascenus was also attached to the writings of two ninth-century medical authorities, Mesué (Yuhannâ ibn Māsawah) and the elder Serapion Constantinus Afer (Constantyn), a monk of Carthage, brought Arabian learning to Salerno in the eleventh century. He is the dawn Constantyn of Merch T, IV, 1810. The three who end the list, all of British origin, wrote medical compendiums of wide influence. Bernard Gordon, a Scot, was professor of medicine at Montpellier about 1300. John of Gaddesden (or Gatesden), of Merton College, Oxford, died in 1361. His reputation for thrift was such that Chaucer has been supposed to refer to him in ll 441 ff. Gilbertus Anglicus (Gilbertyn) lived in the latter part of the thirteenth century.

438 For the implication of irreligion in this line comparison has often been made with the proverb, "Ubi tres medici, duo atheri." There is plenty of evidence that doctors were commonly regarded as skeptical especially if they were avowed followers of the Arabian or Averroist school. See Tupper, Types pp 47 ff. Cf also Curry, pp 29 ff, citing John of Salisbury's condemnation of physicians who "attribute too much to Nature, cast aside the Author of Nature" (Polycratius, II, 29).

441 esy of dispence, slow to spend money

443-44 He loved gold, Chaucer observes ironically, because "aurum potabile" was so good a remedy. Professor Curry (pp 34 f) finds in the sentence the further suggestion that the Doctor put "aurum potabile" into his medicines to raise their price.

The Wife of Bath

On the Wife of Bath see especially W E Mead, PMLA, XVI, 388 ff, Curry, pp 91 ff, Manly, New Light, pp 225 ff.

The portrait of the Wife given here is supplemented by her own account of herself in the Prologue to her tale. For the latter work Chaucer drew freely on the satirical anti-feminist literature of his age. See the notes to WB Prol, pp 801 ff below. Whether the brief description in the General Prologue was written early, or added (or revised) later when Chaucer's conception of the Wife had been fully worked out, is uncertain. Cf Miss Hammond, pp 296-97.

Various opinions have been advanced as to the origin of the conception. Literary imitation of the description of La Vieille in the Roman de la Rose (ll 12761 ff) is apparent, but this is not enough to account for the character. Professor Curry, whose study has reference particularly to the Wife's Prologue, has shown that many of her characteristics are such as were regularly associated with a person born when Taurus is in the ascendant and Mars and Venus are in conjunction in that sign (WB Prol, III, 605 ff). But he admits that the figure is no mere abstract construction and may have been drawn from life. Professor Manly, without attempting an identification, argues strongly that the wife is an individual. He points out as traits that are rather personal than typical her love of travel, her rather unfashionable dress and equipment, and the fact that she was deaf and gat-toothed. Her name Alouson (WB Prol, III, 804) would of course prove nothing. But Mr Manly notes that it is of frequent occurrence in the records of Bath in the fourteenth century. Moreover, Chaucer gives a singularly precise statement as to the locality from which she came. Byside Bathe doubtless refers to the parish of "St Michael's juxta Bathon," a suburb of the town largely given over to weaving. Chaucer would have had occasion, perhaps frequently, to pass through St Michael's on his journeys to North Petherton where he was forester in 1391 and the following years.

446 For the occasion of the Wife's deafness see her Prol, III, 668.

448 Ypres and Ghent were important seats of the Flemish wool trade, and Flemish weavers emigrated to England in large numbers in the fourteenth century. The line which Professor Kittredge has paraphrased "She beat the Dutch" (Chaucer and his Poetry, Cambridge, Mass., 1915, p 32) is perhaps to be taken ironically, for the reputation of the cloth made in Bath was not of the best. See Manly, New Light, pp 225 ff (quoting Alton and Holland, The King's Costumes).

449-52 The people went up in order of precedence when they made their offerings. Cf Deschamps, Miroir de Mariage, 3376-81. If Chaucer used that work here, the passage was probably written late. But strife over precedence at the offering was apparently a stock illustration of the sin of pride. See Pars T, X, 407, and cf Le Fèvre, Lamentations de Matheolus (ed Van Hamel, I, Paris, 1892), II, 1430 ff.

453 Professor Manly (New Light, pp 230 f) notes that the kerchief had not been in style since the middle of the century. For illustrations of heavy head-dress he refers to Fairholt, Costume in England, ed Dillon, London, 1885, I, figs 125, 129, 130, 151.

459 The form lyve is exceptional in the accusative, which would be the natural case in this construction. The final -e is probably due to the influence of the "petrified" dative (on-lyve, by-lyve, etc).

460 The celebration of marriage at churche dore was usual in Western Christendom from the 10th till the 16th century. The service was in two parts—the marriage proper, conducted "ante ostium ecclesiae," and the nuptial mass, celebrated afterward at the altar. It is a matter of dispute whether the first part was a survival of the Roman "sponsalia" or of the Germanic "gifta." On this whole matter see G E Howard, A History of Matrimonial Institutions, I, Chicago, 1904, 291-363.

461 Besides, not to speak of, other company in youth. This interpretation is supported by the description of La Vieille (RR, 12731)

462 as nowthe, as now, for the present As was commonly used in such phrases (as now, as then, as in my luf, etc), where it would now be regarded as pleonastic. "As yet" is still sometimes heard. In such combinations as had a restrictive sense, 'having regard only to the time or circumstances mentioned'. For another kind of "pleonastic as" see KnT, I, 2302, n

463 Jerusalem, probably to be pronounced Jersalem, as it was sometimes spelled

465 Bolougne, probably Boulogne-sur-mer, where a fragmentary image of the Blessed Virgin is still venerated. Galice (Galicia) refers to the shrine of St James at Compostella. At Cologne was the shrine of the Three Kings. All these places were much resorted to by pilgrims. The long pilgrimages of the Wife, it should be remembered, would have been by no means unusual, nor were they in any way inconsistent with her character. Her motives, as she intimated in her Prologue (III, 551 ff.), were not entirely religious. In fact, the pilgrimage in Chaucer's day was a favorite form of traveling for pleasure. Such provision was made for the safety and comfort of the pilgrims that it corresponded, in a way, to the modern personally conducted party. It even fell under condemnation as offering occasion for temptation to vice. Evidence of this might be multiplied indefinitely. Cf., for illustrative examples, H B Workman, John Wyclif, II, 18, C Langlois, La Vie en France au Moyen Age, II (D'Après des moralistes du temps), Paris, 1925, p 259, Heath, Pilgrim Life in the Middle Ages, London, 1911, pp 33 f., Van Hamel's note to Le Fèvre's Lamentations de Matheolus (n, 947 ff.), II, Paris, 1905, p 166, Lowes (citing Deschamps), Rom Rev, II, 120, Crescim, Atta del R Istit Veneto, LX, 455

468 Gap-toothed, with teeth set wide apart (gap-toothed or gate-toothed). Skeat notes that this has been regarded as a sign a person will be "lucky and travel". But the Wife herself, in her Prologue, seems to connect the feature with her amorous nature (III, 603), and Professor Curry has shown that the physiognomists regarded it as a sign of boldness, falsehood, gluttony, and lasciviousness (see PMLA, XXXVII, 45). To accord with this interpretation the unlikely etymology, "goat-toothed" has been proposed.

472 A foot-mantel, which ordinarily meant "saddle-cloth," here seems to be an outer skirt. In the Ellesmere miniature the Wife is represented as riding astride. The custom of sitting sideways is said to have been introduced by Queen Anne.

475 remedies of love, cures of love, with an allusion to Ovid's Remedia Amoris.

476 the olde dance, she knew all the rules of the game. Cf PhysT, VI, 79, and for a vivid application of the figure, Tr, III, 694-95. Chaucer perhaps got the phrase from the Roman de la Rose. But it was a current figure in French, meaning "to be artful, knowing," and not restricted to the affairs of love. See RR, 3936, and Langlois's note.

The Parson

The sketch of the Parson is an ideal portrait of a good parish priest. It should not be taken to represent Wyclif or one of his followers. To be sure, it praises the virtues and condemns certain abuses which they were always attacking. The Parson, too, is contemptuously addressed as a Lollard in the Man of Law's Epilogue (II, 1173). Probably Chaucer would not have described him in just the terms he uses if reform had not been in the air. The poet himself was in intimate relations, it should also be remembered, with some of the most influential patrons of the Lollards. But the Parson is not represented as holding some of the most distinguishing beliefs of the Lollard party. Moreover Wyclif, who died in 1384, presumably three or four years before the Prologue was written, was repudiated as a heretic in his last days. On the whole question see Lounsbury, Studies, II, 459 ff., and Tatlock, MP, XIV, 257 ff., also the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Parson.

478 f Cf Prov XIII, 7

466 The penalty of excommunication was often imposed for the non-payment of tithes. The Parson himself of course could not pronounce the greater excommunication, but he could report the offense, exclude the offender from the sacraments, and declare him liable to the excommunication, which would be actually pronounced by the bishop. In the implied condemnation of this method of enforcing payment there is very likely an echo of Wyclif's protests against the abuse of the power of the keys. See his Eng Works, ed Matthew, EETS, 1880, pp 36, 146, 150, 277. Cf also l 661 below, and n.

493-95 With this description of the Parson's visits Mayor and Lumby, in their notes on Bede's Ecl Hist III, 5 (Cambridge, Eng, 1881, p 227) compare Bede's account of Aidan.

494 muche and lite, high and low, cf note to l 534 below.

497 f The primary allusion here is to Matt v, 19. For the idea Mayor and Lumby again quote Bede, III, 5 "Non aliter quam vivebat cum suis ipse docebat" (p 226). Cf also Gower, Conf Am, v, 1325, and for other parallels see Cook, Trans Conn Acad, XXIII, 29.

500 For the figures of gold and iron, and the shuten shepherde and the clene sheep of the Roman de Carté, of the Renoué de Moillens (late twelfth century), which also offers other less striking parallels to Chaucer's sketch.

See particularly A G Van Hamel's edition, Paris, 1885, stanzas 56, 58, 62, 69, 71. Chaucer may have followed the Roman, or both may be indebted to a common source or to ideas generally current. The figure of rusted gold was often used by Biblical commentators. See Kittredge, MLN, XII, 113, and Flugel, Angl., XXIV, 500 and n.

507 On absenteeism see H B Workman, John Wych, II, 110 ff. "Some livings rarely saw a resident rector."

510 A chanterie was a provision for a priest to sing mass daily for the repose of a soul. The usual remuneration about 1380 was seven marks a year. According to Dugdale (History of St Paul's Cathedral, Lond., 1818, p. 29) there were thirty-five chantries at St Paul's. In 1391 these were restricted to the minor canons of the Cathedral.

511 Or to be retained, engaged for service (withholde), by a guild (bretherhed) to act as their chaplain. For illustration of the practice see Tatlock, MLN, XXXI, 139 ff.

514 Cf John x, 12. There is perhaps further reference to the title "chappelan mercenaire" which was applied to priests who made their living entirely by saying mass.

517 dangerous, severe, arrogant, dygne, haughty. Dawnger (from Fr "danger," LL "dominarium") meant originally "dominion," "power," "control." Cf l. 663 below. Dawngerous, in Chaucer, has the related senses of "arrogant," "severe," "difficult," "fastidious," and very commonly meant "difficile," "offish," in the affairs of love.

523 f The rime of two words with one (nonys noon ys), which is a characteristic freedom of comic verse in Mod Eng., was regularly admissible in serious passages in Mid Eng. For other Chaucerian examples see ll. 671 f below (Rome to me), KnT, I, 1323 f (dyvynys pyme ys), SqT, V, 675 f (yowthe allow the), Tr, I, 2, 4, 5 (Troye jone fro ye), v, 1374, 1376, 1377 (welles helles is ellis).

525 He demanded no reverence.

526 spced, seasoned, hence highly refined, over-scrupulous, possibly with the suggestion that he was not sophisticated, versed in anise and cummin, and negligent of weightier matters. Hinckley's interpretation, "unctuous, over complaisant" seems less appropriate. The Parson was reasonable and not too fastidious in his dealings with his flock. The phrase occurs again in WB Prol, III, 435. Skeat's derivation of spced from Fr "espices," fees or dues paid to a judge, is improbable.

The Plowman

The Plowman was apparently a small tenant farmer or a holder of Lammas lands ("village lands let out from year to year"). Like his brother, the Parson, he is represented as an ideal Christian. Professor Tupper (Types, pp. 40 ff.) notes the occurrence of the same convention in the Chess-Book. But on the whole the treatment of the peasant in mediæval literature was more likely to be satirical or contemptuous. See P Meissner, Der Bauer in der Eng Lit, Bonner Studien, 1922, G M Vogt, The Peasant in Mid Eng Lit, unpublished Harvard dissertation, 1923. On Chaucer's attitude toward the common people there is a brief, but admirably judicial discussion by H R Patch in JEGP XXIX, 376 ff.

529 In Mid Eng the relative pronoun was frequently omitted when subject, as well as when object, of a verb. Cf., for examples, Cl Prol, IV, 3, ShpT, VII, 105, Mel, VII, 1593, NPT, VII, 2849, 2900, 3175, Tr, I, 203, LGW, 704.

533 Cf Matt xxii, 37-39.

534 though hum gamed or smerte, in pleasure or pain, one of a number of phrases current in early English to denote "under all circumstances," "in all respects." Cf in heigh and lough, l. 817, below, in (for) earnest nor (ne) in (for) game, ClT, IV, 609, 733, For foul ne fair, MLT, II, 525, for hef ne looth, ShpT, VII, 132.

541 The mare was a humble mount.

The Miller

On the Miller see Curry, pp. 71 ff. (materials published earlier in PMLA, XXXV, 189 ff.), Manly, New Light, pp. 94 ff., Tupper, Types, pp. 52 ff.

To the description in the Prologue may be added the later reference to the Miller's powerful voice (Mill Prol, I, 3124). It is likely, too, that the account of Simkin, in the Reeve's Tale, contained hits on the fellow-pilgrim at whose story the Reeve had taken offense.

The Miller's physical characteristics are such as were regularly associated by the physiognomists with men of his nature. His short-shouldered, stocky figure, his fat face with red bushy beard, his flat nose with a wart on top—these variously denoted a shameless, loquacious, quarrelsome, and lecherous fellow. Many curious observations on the subject, drawn from such works as the pseudo-Aristotelian Secreta Secretorum and the treatise of Rhazes, De Re Medecina, are brought together by Professor Curry. The influence of similar ideas is apparent in the description of the Reeve, the Pardoner, the Summoner, and the Wife of Bath. But whether Chaucer went directly to the learned treatises on the subject (as Dr Curry implies), or simply made use of familiar current notions it is hard to say.

545 for the nones, here apparently in the intensive sense.

548 Cf Thop, VII, 740 f.

560 gohardys, coarse buffoon. In its origin the word is related to the so-called "gohardic" poetry, satirical and convivial verse, chiefly in Latin, composed by vagabond clerics in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries For illustrations of this literature see Latin Poems commonly attributed to Walter Mapes, ed T Wright, London, 1841 (Camden Soc), and the Carmina Burana, ed J A Schmeller, Breslau, 1894, J A Symonds, Wine, Women, and Song, London, 1925, cf also J H Hanford Spectulum, I, 38 f Gohardic lost its literary association and came to be applied, as in the case of the Miller, to tellers of coarse tales and jests Cf Piers Plowman, B-Prologue 139 "a gohardys, a gлотoun of wordes" (which illustrates another association of the term with "gula," gluttony, etc) The origin of the word, in relation to "Gohas," on the one hand and "gula" on the other, is uncertain For two theories see Manly, M.P., V, 201-09, and J W Thompson, Stud. Phil., XX, 83-98

563 He was honest, as millers go The reference is to the proverb, "An honest miller hath a golden thumb"

The Manciple

A manciple was a servant who purchased provisions for a college or an inn of court The temple referred to would have been the Inner or Middle Temple near the Strand, both of which were occupied in Chaucer's time by societies of lawyers

The inclusion in the company of so inconspicuous a character as the Manciple tends to support the theory that Chaucer had been educated in the Inns of Court

570 by talle, on credit The "tally" was a stick on which the amount of a debt was recorded by notches Cf Jenkinson, Archæologia, LXXIV, 289 ff

579 On the steward's office see the note on the Reeve, below

581 To make him live on his income

586 sette hir aller cappe, make fools of them all Aller (alder) is the old genitive plural (AS "ealra") Cf II 710, 799, below, and see the Introduction on Language and Meter

The Reeve

There is some uncertainty as to the exact office of the Reeve The chief manager of an estate, under the lord of the manor, was the steward (or seneschal) Subordinate to him was the bailiff, and below the bailiff was the provost, who was elected by the peasants and had immediate care of the stock and grain Normally the reeve was subordinate to the bailiff, but many manors did not have a full complement of officers, and titles were more or less interchanged Chaucer's Reeve was apparently superior to a bailiff, and even exercised some of the functions of a steward He is represented as dealing directly with his lord, ruling under-bailiffs and hands, outwitting auditors, and accumulating property On these officials see F Tupper, JEGP, XIV, 265, who follows the Anglo-French Sen-

schauce in Miss Lamond's edition of Walter of Henley's Husbandry (London, 1890, pp 83 ff), F H Crapps-Day, The Manor Farm, London, 1931, pp 56 ff, 71, 86 ff, 96 f, H Y Moffett, PQ, IV, 208 ff, also the accounts of Robert Oldman, bailiff of Cuxham, in Roger's History of Agriculture and Prices in England, I, Oxford, 1866, pp 506 ff

With the personal description of the Reeve should be compared that given in his own Prologue (I, 3855 ff) On his physical characteristics, which were regularly associated by the physiognomists with the choleric complexion and denoted sharpness of wit, irascibility, and wantonness, see Curry, pp 71 ff (the chapter already cited for the Miller)

Though the personal appearance of the Reeve is in some respects typical, several details of the description suggest that Chaucer had in mind an actual official, whose dwelling he had seen and whose character might be recognized Professor Manly (New Light, pp 84 ff) shows reason for suspecting that the portrait applied to a Norfolk reeve, probably the manager of some of the estates of John Hastings, second earl of Pembroke Baldeswelle (1620, the modern Bawdswell, in the northern part of Norfolk) was the property of the Pembroke Hastings came of age in 1368, and was abroad nearly all the time till his death in 1375 When, in 1378, the custody of his estates in Kent was granted to his cousin, Sir William de Beauchamp, Chaucer was one of Beauchamp's man-pennors There is evidence that some of the Pembroke estates were mismanaged, and Sir William de Beauchamp's management had to be officially investigated in 1386-87 Professor Manly concedes that he has found no evidence of maladministration of the Norfolk properties, which were in the custody of the Countess of Pembroke But he suggests that Chaucer may have served as a deputy to view the waste of the Pembroke lands, and may have thus learned about the rascally Norfolk Reeve For objections to some of Mr Manly's inferences, including his low estimate of the Reeve's character, see E B Powley, TLS, 1932, p 516 Mr Powley would explain Chaucer's acquaintance with Baldeswelle on the ground that it was part of the Manor of Clare, which belonged in 1360 to Prince Lionel Chaucer had entered service with Lionel's wife, Elizabeth de Burgh, in 1357 But these associations were remote at the probable time of the writing of the Prologue Moreover, as Miss L V Redstone has shown in TLS, 1932, pp 789-90, the interest of the lords of Clare in Baldeswelle was very indirect She argues in support of Professor Manly's application of the description to the Pembroke estate She suggests that Chaucer may have known Baldeswelle through Sir Richard Burley, who married, in or about 1385, Beatrice, the widow of Thomas Lord Roos and the holder of the manor of Whitewell The Burleys were large landowners in Kent and Chaucer is known to have sat on the bench with Sir Simon Burley, Richard's brother

A further bit of possible evidence that Chaucer had connections with Baldeswelle is furnished by the fact that one of his manpernors in the great customs of 1382 was Richard Baldewell, perhaps from that locality See TLS, 1928, p 684

589 His close-cropped hair was a sign of his servile station

594 The bailiff was required to make a careful accounting to his auditors

605 the death, probably "death," in general, rather than "the death, the pestilence" The definite article was occasionally used in Middle English in constructions similar to French, "la mort" Cf the seere, FranklT, V, 893

606 ff A dwelling at the cost of the lord and a robe (cf the cote and hood below) were apparently regular perquisites of the bailiff, in addition to his salary Miss Redstone, in the communication cited above, notes that there is still a heath at Bawdswell shadowed by the trees of Bylaugh wood It appears to have belonged in Pembroke's manor of Foxby

611 He could please his lord by lending him some of his (the lord's) own possessions, and thus obtain thanks and a reward besides

613-14 Professor Tupper (Types, pp 54 f) suggests that Chaucer introduced the couplet on the Reeve's trade to provide a motive for his later quarrel with the Miller

616 Scot, still a common name of horses in Norfolk, according to Bell's note Professor Manly refers to its occurrence in John de Berington's inventory (1389)

621 Tukked, having his long coat hitched up and held by a girdle

622 Whether the Reeve rode last out of cowardice or out of instinctive craftiness, he at any rate chose the place farthest away from the Miller with whom he had an altercation early in the journey The quarrel between the two may even have been conceived as having begun before they met on the pilgrimage On the traditional enmity of millers and reeves see Tupper, Types, pp 52 ff

The Summoner

The Summoner (or Apparitor) was an officer who cited delinquents to appear before the ecclesiastical court The abuses practiced by such officials are further illustrated in the FrT, III, 1299 ff The Archdeacon is also represented here as not above bribes

For an account of the Summoner's disease see Curry, pp 37 ff It was technically known as "alopicia," a form of leprosy The causes mentioned by Chaucer, and the remedies, correspond closely to those named in the medical treatises Professor Curry cites Lanfranc, Science of Chirurgie (EETS, 1894, pp 193 ff) and Guy de Chauliac, La Grand Chirurgie, ed Nicaise, Paris, 1890, p 413

624 The cherubim were usually depicted with faces as red as fire The form cherubym or cherubim, though properly corresponding to the Hebrew plural, has been occasionally used as singular both in early and in modern English

626 The sparrow called Venus sone in PF, 351, was traditionally associated with lecherousness, of Phny, Hist Nat, x, 36, Juvenal, Sat, ix, 54 ff

627 puled, scaly, with hair falling out Cf RvT, I, 3935, n Manly cites Lanfranc's Chirurgie to show that this was regarded as a symptom of "allopix"

637-38 Cf the proverbial couplet
Post sumptum vinum loquitur mea lingua Latinum

Et bibo cum bis ter, sum qualibet arte magister

For other references to the idea see Manly's note and H B Hunckley, MP, XIV, 317 Perhaps its origin is to be found in the Biblical account of the gift of tongues (Acts ii, 1 ff)

642 Jays were taught to cry "Watte" (Walter) as parrots now call "Poll"

644-45 If anyone should question him, test him further, then his philosophy was all spent Cf SumT, III, 1816 f

646 "The question is, what portion of the law (applies)"

650 good felawre, here used in the colloquial sense of "rascal" The reference is probably to priests who lived with concubines

652 This line, commonly misinterpreted, refers to the Summoner's own indulgences in the same sin for which he is said just before to have excused others See Kittredge, MP, VII, 475 ff

656 f A recurring fling at the venality of the ecclesiastical courts Cf, for example, Gower, Mirour de l'Omme, 20193 f, and Vox Clamantis, iii, 3, 189 ff

661 assoulyng, either canonical absolution, i e, the removal of the sentence of excommunication, or the ordinary sacramental absolution Whichever is meant, the passage implies an unmistakable doubt of its efficacy — a hint which perhaps comes as near to downright heresy as anything in Chaucer In fact, Lounsbury (Studies, II, 517 ff) took the remark as evidence that Chaucer was a kind of agnostic — an extreme and unwarranted inference Professor T-block, MP, XIV, 266, argues, more reasonably, that the Summoner's scoff at excommunication perhaps reflects the influence of Wyclif's teachings concerning the "power of the keys" But the doubt is so guardedly expressed that it would hardly amount to heresy, and it need imply no more than a condemnation of the abuses of an avaricious clergy Cf the note on l 486 above

662 "Significavit nobis venerabilis pater" were the opening words of a writ remanding to prison an excommunicated person Mr H B Workman (John Wyclif, II, 26) notes that some ten thousand of these writs are preserved in the Public Record Office. A few deal with heresy, but most of them with tithes and other money matters.

663 daunger, "control." He had the young men and women at his mercy. Gurles applied to both sexes.

The Pardoner

Pardoners (or quaestors) were sellers of papal indulgences. Many were forbidden to preach and some were even laymen. Many who travelled as pardoners were wholly unauthorized, and the tricks and abuses they practiced were condemned by ecclesiastical authority. The noble ecclesiast of the Prologue seems to have been at least in minor orders. But his conduct as a pardoner, by his own showing, was fraudulent, and his pardons are very likely to be regarded as spurious. On the class as a whole see J. J. Jusserand, Chaucer's Pardoner and the Pope's Pardoners, in Chaucer Society Essays, Part v, no. 13, and Manly, New Light, pp. 122 ff.

The personal description of the Pardoner in the Prologue is supplemented by the remarkable confession with which he introduces his Tale (VI, 329 ff.). For general discussion of his character and behavior see Kittredge, Atlantic Monthly, LXXII, 829 ff.; Chaucer and his Poetry, pp. 211 ff., and Curry, pp. 54 ff. (earlier in JEGP, XVIII, pp. 593 ff.). Professor Kittredge's essay will receive further notice in the notes on the Pardoner's Tale. Professor Curry shows that the physical and moral type of the Pardoner was well recognized in the mediæval treatises on physiognomy. As a parallel he cites especially the account of Favorinus of Arles by Polemon Laodicensis.

The character of Fals-Semblant in RR doubtless furnished Chaucer with suggestions for the Pardoner's confession. See D. S. Fansler, Chaucer and the Roman de la Rose, New York, 1914, p. 162.

670 Rounevale, the hospital of the Blessed Mary of Rounevalle, near Charing Cross. This was a cell of the convent of Nuestra Señora de Roncesvalles in Navarre, and was founded by William Marshall, Earl of Pembroke, at Charing in 1229. John of Gaunt was one of its patrons. A number of incidents in the history of the house are noted by Professor Manly, New Light, pp. 122 ff., with references to Sir James Galloway, The Story of St. Mary Roncevall, and Canon Westlake, History of Parish Guilds. See also S. Moore, in MP, XXV, 59 ff.

Pardoners of Rounevalle were commonly satirized. There is evidence that in 1382, and again in 1387, unauthorized sales of pardons were made by persons professing to collect for the hospital. It is possible that Chaucer had in mind some definite Pardoner whose portrait he expected his readers to recognize.

Professor Tatlock (Flugel Memorial Vol- ume, Palo Alto, Calif., 1916, p. 232, n. 15) has suggested, hesitatingly, that a pun is intended on "rouneival," a mannish woman, or "rouncy," a riding-horse. Even if this were involved, which is unlikely, the primary reference would still be to the hospital of that name.

671 This, at least, would have been the Pardoner's claim.

672 The first line or the refrain of some popular song. Professor Gollancz has compared the Pearl II 763-64 (stanza 64) "Cum hyder to me, my lemman swete, For mote ne spot is non in the," for which he suggests the Song of Solomon IV, 7-8, as a source. (See his second edition of the Pearl, p. 154.) But Chaucer's line is dissimilar in rhyme and movement, and such invitations are very common in love poetry.

On the rhyme Rome to me see the note to I 523 above.

673 burdoun, ground melody. See E. P. M. Dieckmann, MP, XXVI, 279 ff.

685 verrycle (diminutive of "veronica"), a small copy of the handkerchief of St. Veronica, which she is said to have lent Christ as he was bearing his cross to Calvary. According to the tradition, it received the imprint of his face.

692 fro Berwyk unto Ware, apparently, from the north of England to the South. The choice of Ware (in Hertfordshire) as the southern limit is strange. It was perhaps mentioned as the first town of importance north of London. Possibly Wareham, in the south of Dorsetshire is intended. Or Berwyk might conceivably stand for Barwick in Somerset, which is on the other side of London in relation to Ware. But many passages in mediæval poetry suggest that in such phrases place-names were chosen mainly for the convenience of the rhyme. Cf. Le Vair Palefroi, ed. Långfors, Paris, 1912, II 658, 660, 1020.

696 Cf. Matt xiv, 29.

706 "He made fools of the parson and the people", cf. Milt, I, 3389, Intr to Prt, VII, 440, CYT, VIII, 1813, Haeckel, p. 40, no. 136.

709 f. The lessoun was the prescribed portion of the Scripture, the "lectio" of the Canonical Office. Storie, probably the liturgical "historia," a series of lessons covering parts of the Bible or the life of a saint. Offertorie, the "offertorium" of the Mass, said or sung after the Creed. The Pardoner's sermon apparently followed the offertory, and was followed in turn by the contributions of the people. In the Sarum use the offertory was sung during the collection, and was preceded by the sermon.

710 alderbest, best of all. See I 586, n.

714 murrerly. This formation in which the adverbial -ly is added to the comparative ending, is very unusual. For a few parallels see Maetzner's English Grammar, tr. C. J. Greece, I, London, 1874, p. 398. I:

is more likely to be due to Chaucer than to a scribe For variant readings see the Textual Notes

719 the Belle A Southwark inn of uncertain identification References to nine taverns of the name (not necessarily all different inns) are given by Rendle and Norman (The Inns of Old Southwark, London, 1888, Index, p 420) They take Chaucer's Bell to have been situated on Borough High Street, on the opposite side from the Tabard The existence of such a tavern seems to be inferred from the Bell Yard, which appears on an eighteenth-century map But there is no evidence of its presence before 1600 Professor Baum, who has listed and discussed the various Bells in MLN, XXXVI, 307 ff, suggests that Chaucer had in mind one of the "allowed stewhouses" mentioned by Stow, Survey of London (ed Kingsford, Oxford, 1908, II, 54 f), whose licenses dated back to Edward III's reign

725 ff The excuse here is similar to those offered by Jean de Meun, RR, 15159 ff, and by Boccaccio in the "Conclusione dell'Autore" of the Decameron For a second apology, which relates to subject matter and not merely to language see Mull Prol, I, 3167 ff See also RR, 7108 ff

742 The reference is to the Timaeus 29 B, Chaucer's knowledge of the passage may have come from Boethius, m, pr 12, or from RR, 7099 ff, 15190 ff, Cf Manct, IX, 208, Haecckel, p 15, no 47

The Host

Of all the Canterbury pilgrims the Host is the one who can be identified with most assurance In the Cook's Prologue (I, 4358) he is addressed as Herry Bailly, and there is clear evidence of the existence of an innkeeper of that name in Southwark in 1380-81 In the Subsidy Rolls for Southwark for that year stands the entry "Henri Bayliff ostylere Christian uxorerus—ijs" It further appears from the rolls that Balif was himself one of the four controllers of the subsidy for Southwark Several other records referring to Henry Bailly, very probably the same person, have been discovered They show that he represented Southwark in Parliament in 1376-77 and 1378-79, that he witnessed a deed of gift at Lesnes, near Greenwich, in 1387, and that he served repeatedly as tax collector, assessor, or coroner between 1377 and 1394 In a Custom House memorandum of 1384 he is recorded as carrying money from the Custom House to the Treasurer of the Household In an Issue Roll of the same period he is entered as carrying money from the Exchequer to the Keeper of the Wardrobe In a roll of the Clerk of the Market for 1375-76 he is fined for violating the assize of ale and bread For exact references see Manly, New Light, pp 77 ff, and TLS, 1928, p 707

754 The Chepe, Cheapside, one of the principal London streets

785 to make it wys, to make it a matter of wisdom, to hold off and deliberate For similar idioms of make it tough, Tr, u, 1025 and n, queynt, Rom, 2038, tough ne queynte, BD, 531, strange, RvT, I, 3980, FranklT, V, 1223, symple, Rom, 3863 They perhaps had their origin in the imitation of Fr constructions with "faire"

791 "With which to shorten our journey" ("to shorten our journey with") The order, with the preposition immediately after the verb instead of at the end of the phrase, is regular in Mid Eng Cf Mull Prol I, 3119, Pard Prol, VI, 345, ShpT, VII, 273, CYT, VIII, 1055

792 This program, which calls for four tales from each pilgrim, was never carried out Chaucer did not actually get round the circle once Evidence that he modified his original plan is furnished by the Pars Prol (X, 16 ff), and the Retractation (X, 1081 ff)

810-11 we must be supplied as the subject of preyden, and possibly of swore in l 810, though that is more probably a past participle See the note to l 33, above

817 In heigh and lough, in all respects The phrase translates the Latin legal formula "in alto et basso" See PMLA, XLVI, 98 f On other similar expressions, cf l 534, and n

819 For the custom of drinking a cup of wine before retiring of Tr, u, 671 ff

826 the watering of Seint Thomas, according to Nares' Glossary (s v Watering) a brook at the second milestone on the Kent road

829 "I recall it to you" or (if I is omitted, as in some of the best MSS) "you recall it" (with reflex pron)

830 The expression is apparently proverbial and means "if you feel in the morning as you did the night before"

835 ff The imperatives in -eth (draweth, cometh, studueth) were the full plural forms, used in courteous address Contrast the more peremptory ley hond to, every man in l 841

844 No very definite distinction was probably meant in the use of aventure, sort, and cas For similar balancing of alternatives see CIT, IV, 812, MerchT, IV, 1967, Tr, I, 568 Chaucer's use of such formulas has been attributed to the influence of Dante Cf Inf xv, 46, xx, 82, xxxii, 76

854 a Goddes name, in God's name

The Knight's Tale

The Knight's Tale is a free adaptation of the Teseide of Boccaccio A reference in the Prologue of the Legend of Good Women (G, 408) to the love of Palamon and Arcite shows that Chaucer had made a version of Boccaccio's poem, in some form, before the Canterbury period But the exact relation of this to the existing tale is unknown The opinion, supported by Ten Brink, Koch, and Skeat, that the Palamon was in seven-line stanzas has been questioned by several recent critics and was opposed in a detailed argument by Professor Tatlock, Dev and Chron, pp 45 ff (Cf also Langhans, Angl XLIV, 226 ff, and for further references see Miss Hammond, pp 271-72, Wells, pp 692, 877, for Koch's reassertion of the theory see Angl Beibl, XX, 133 ff.) The stanzaic hypothesis is, to say the least, unnecessary, and there is no strong reason for holding that the Knighit's Tale is essentially different in form or substance from Chaucer's first version. Some revision was doubtless necessary to fit the Palamon for its place in the Canterbury collection. But in one passage at least (But of that storne hst me nat to write, l 1201) even this slight adaptation seems to have been neglected.

The stanzaic Palamon, by those who have believed in it, has usually been dated early in Chaucer's Italian period (between 1372 and 1376). But if the first redaction of the poem was practically identical with the Knighit's Tale, a later date is more probable, and there are reasons for putting the completed text not earlier than 1382. In l 884 there is perhaps a complimentary allusion to the landing in England of Anne of Bohemia, and several passages in the account of the marriage of Palamon and Emelye have been plausibly interpreted as referring to the marriage of Richard and Anne and the Bohemian alliance. It is even possible that the poem was written, or adapted, to celebrate the royal wedding. In that case it probably preceded the Troilus, which there are reasons for dating about 1386. It is natural to suppose that Chaucer had in hand the two great Italian poems at about the same time. But no decisive evidence has yet been found in the works themselves to show which was the earlier. (On the date of the Troilus see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes to that poem. On the references to Anne and the Bohemian alliance see Lowes, MLN, XIX, 240 ff, O F Emerson, Studies in Lang and Lit in Celebration of the Seventieth Birthday of James Morgan Hart, N Y, 1910, pp 203 ff.)

On the assumption that the indications of date in ll 1462 ff would correspond to the actual calendar of the year of composition, Skeat showed that the tale (that is, the revised Knighit's Tale) might be assigned to 1387. In that year May 5 fell on Sunday (See Oxf Chau, V, 70, 75-76.) Professor Mather, applying the same argument to the original Palamon, preferred the year 1381 (Furnivall Miscellany, pp 308-10.) Professor Manly, taking the date of the duel to have been Saturday, May 4, would put the assembly on Sunday, May 4, of the following year. This would point to 1382, a reasonable date for the poem. But in none of these cases is the inference secure. See the note to l 1462, below, and for further discussion of Tatlock, Dev and Chron, pp 70 ff

For a theory which would imply for part of the story a date as late as 1393 see the note on the portrait of Emetreus, l 2155

Chaucer's main source was the Teseide of Boccaccio (Opere Volgari, ed Moutier, IX, Florence, 1831). The sources of the Teseide have never been fully determined. According to an early theory, now generally abandoned, Boccaccio followed a lost Greek romance. In the opinion of recent authorities he made an independent compilation from various sources. He certainly used Statius freely, and perhaps also some version of the Roman de Thebes. But neither of these works supplied him with his central plot of the rival lovers. See G Koerting, Boccaccio's Leben und Werke, in Geschichte der Litteratur Italiens im Zeitalter der Renaissance, II, Leipzig, 1880, pp 620 ff (supporting the theory of the Greek romance), V Crescini, Contributo agli Studi sul Boccaccio, Turin, 1887, pp 220 ff, and Atti del Reale Istituto Veneto, LX, 449 ff, J Schmitt, La Théséide de Boccace et la Théséide Grecque, in Études de Philologie Néo-Grecque, ed J Psichari, Bibl de l'École des Hautes Études, 1892, pp 279 ff, P Savj-Lopez, Giornale Storico della Lat Ital, XXXVI, 57 ff

The Teseide is a long poem in twelve books. For the nearly ten thousand lines of the Italian Chaucer has but 2250 lines, of which only about 700 correspond, even loosely, to Boccaccio's. The relation of the two was indicated by H L Ward by marginal marks in the Six-Text edition, also used in Pollard's edition of the Canterbury Tales. The main correspondences are shown by the following table, based upon one drawn up by Skeat. Arabic numerals in the case of the Teseide refer to stanzas

Knighit's Tale	Teseide
865-883	i, n
893-1027	ii, 2-5, 25-95
1030-1274	iii, 1-11, 14-20, 47, 51-54, 75
1361-1448	iv, 26-29, 59
1451-1479	v, 1-3, 24-27, 33
1545-1565	iv, 13, 14, 31, 85, 84, 17, 82
1638-1641	vii, 106, 119
1668-1739	v, 77-91
1812-1860	v, 92-98
1887-2022	vii, 108-110, 50-64, 29-37
2102-2206	vi, 71, 14-22, 65-70, 8
2222-2593	vii, 43-49, 68-93, 23-41, 67, 95-99, 7-13, 131, 132, 14, 100-102, 113-118, 19
2275-2360	vii, 71-92
2600-2683	viii, 2-131
2684-2734	ix, 4-61
2735-2739	xii, 80, 83
2743-2808	x, 12-112
2809-2962	xi, 1-67
2967-3102	xii, 3-19, 69-83

For general comparisons of the two narratives see F J Mather's edition of the Gen Prolog, KnT, and NPT, Boston, 1899, pp 121 ff, and H M Cummings, The Indebtedness of Chaucer's Works to the Italian Works of Boccaccio, Univ of Cincinnati Studies, X, Pt 2, 1916, pp 123 ff Of Chaucer's additions and modifications the more significant will be pointed out in the notes Attention will also be called to his literary sources outside of the Teseide He apparently had direct recourse to Status, and perhaps to the Roman de Thèbes (here cited by references to the edition of Constans, 5:ATF, 1890) See Wise, The Influence of Status Upon Chaucer, Baltimore, 1911, pp 46 ff, 78 ff, 129 ff Chaucer also made important use of the Consolation of Boethius

On Chaucer's adaptation of the story to contemporary customs, see Dr Stuart Robertson, JEGP, XIV, 226 ff, and on his striking use of astrology, see Curry, ch vi Mr H N Fairchild, in JEGP, XXVI, 285 ff, has suggested the interpretation of Arcite and Palamon as types, respectively, of the active and the contemplative life But the allegory is somewhat forced Professor J R Hulbert (Stud Phil, XXVI, 375 ff) argues that the real purpose of the tale was to set forth a typical "question of love" as to "which of two young men, of equal worth and with almost equal claims, shall (or should) win the lady" This problem is doubtless involved in the story, and would have been more apparent in the Middle Ages than it is today But the Knights Tale would never have engaged, as it does, the sympathy of the reader if it had been written primarily as a discussion of such an academic problem And the Teseide, we are assured, grew out of Boccaccio's own emotional experience

Explanatory notes of value, besides those of Skeat, are to be found in the editions of Pollard, Mather, Liddell, and Manly, and in Mr Hinckley's Notes on Chaucer, to all of which the following brief commentary is indebted

The Motto, "Iamque domos" is from Status, Theb, xi, 519 f The whole introduction, ll 859-1004, draws upon the Thebaïd as well as the Teseide From the former comes apparently the mention of the night march of Theseus (l 970), of the Minotaur (l 980), and, perhaps, of Fortune (l 915)

860 Theseus was, properly speaking, King of Athens, though here called "duke," by a characteristic anachronism On the existence of the title "Duke of Athens" in Chaucer's time see Liebermann, Herrig's Arch, CXLV, 101 f See also Patch, Est, LXV, 354, n

877 Femeyne, the land of the Amazons

884 In this rapid summary of Boccaccio's first book and part of his second, Chaucer has found room for one additional incident There is no mention in the Teseide of a tempest at the home-coming of Theseus and Hippolyte Professor Curry (MLN XXXVI, 272 ff) has suggested that Chaucer's line refers only to the popular excitement on the arrival of the royal bride But this is an unnatural interpretation of tempest It is far more likely, as Professor Lowes has argued (MLN, XLIX, 240 ff), that Chaucer introduced this line as a complimentary allusion to the arrival of Queen Anne in England On that occasion, according to Walsingham's Historia Anglicana (ed Riley, London 1863-64), II, 46, there was a great commotion of the sea which destroyed the vessel in which she had come

It should be added that the rhetorical figure here employed—the refusal to describe or narrate, technically known as "omniscipio"—is very common with Chaucer In the present tale it usually indicates that he is actually omitting materials in his source, as is the case in what is one of the most protracted examples anywhere to be found, namely, the account of Arcite's funeral in ll 2919 ff Elsewhere the figure is sometimes merely a rhetorical device for speeding up the narrative Examples of its occurrence are numerous, and only a few need be cited Cf KnT, I, 2197 ff, MLT, II, 701 ff, SqT, V, 34 ff, 63 ff, 283 ff

890 aboute, in turn

894 According to both Boccaccio and Status the temple of Clemence was in the city

908 Probably "that (ye)," with omission of pronominal subject, rather than "who"

925-26 The general idea and the figure of the wheel are both common Cf Bo, n, pr 2, and see H R Patch, The Goddess Fortuna in Medieval Literature, Cambridge, 1927, Index, s v "wheel"

932 Capaneus, one of the "Seven against Thebes" He was killed by Zeus with a thunderbolt See Tr, v, 1501 ff, and n

938 The adjective old is applied to Creon as a kind of fixed epithet in the Rom de Thèbes "Creon li vieuz," ll 5190, 5799, 8341, 10008, etc

949 ff Here again a few details may come from the Rom de Thèbes, for example, the riding of Theseus on a horse instead of in a chariot Cf with KnT, I, 949, Thebes, 9944 ff, with KnT, I, 950, Thebes, 9994, with KnT, I, 952, Thebes, 9946, with KnT, I, 957, Thebes, 9997 ff

977 feeldes, rather the lands over which they marched than the "grounds" of their banners (as understood by Skeat) Cf Theb, xi, 656 ff, Thebes, 9914 ff, and, for illustrative parallels, Hinckley, p 58, and Kittredge, MLN, XXV, 28

979 ybete, which might mean "hammered," seems here, as in Tr, n, 1229, and Rom, 836 ff, to mean "embroidered" See Emerson, PQ, II 85, and of the notes of Hinckley and Manly on this passage

980 The Minotaur was the Cretan monster which Theseus had slain

983 ff In Boccaccio's account of the victory of Theseus (Tes., II, 53-73) the Theban forces flee to the woods and mountains, and the Athenians enter the city unopposed Chaucer, in representing Thebes as won by assault, substitutes a familiar feature of mediæval warfare See S Robertson, JEGP, XIV, 227 ff Of numerous instances in Froissart, Dr Robertson cites particularly the battle of Cadsant, Bk 1, ch 31 (tr Johnes, London, 1839, I, 44) and the capture of Limoges, Bk 1, ch 290 (I, 453-54)

989 For the destruction of the city of Rom de Thebes, 10073 ff (where it is said to have taken place before Creon's death)

1007 According to Boccaccio (II, 84) Theseus sent out men to care for the dead and wounded and to bring in the spoils for proper distribution Chaucer refers only to pillagers (pillours)

1010 Almost identical with Tr, IV, 627

1011 by and by, side by side

1012 in oon armes, in one kind of arms, that is bearing the same heraldic device

1013 The names Arcita and Palamon are from Boccaccio Where he found them is unknown Palamon occurs in Statius and in the Rom de Thebes as the name of a Theban warrior Mr Hinckley suggests that Boccaccio had in mind the Greek philosopher Polemon, and, for Arcite, the Archytas of Cicero's De Senectute But this seems unlikely

1024 The mention of ransom here, as also in II 1032, 1176, 1205, and 1849, is not paralleled in Boccaccio Dr Robertson (p 229) notes it as another bit of mediæval realism introduced by Chaucer

1033 ff Chaucer's account of the lovers' first sight of Emily differs considerably from Boccaccio's The dialogue, which corresponds in part to the later debate in the Teseide, where Palamon and Arcite meet in the grove, is far more vivacious than in the Italian, and lays more stress upon the rivalry of the lovers It is possible, as Professor Kirtledge has suggested, that Chaucer's modification of the narrative was due to his memory of the rival lovers in the Parliament of Fowls, whose arguments are in part similar to those of Palamon and Arcite

1035 Cf LGW, 2425 To sene, the inflected infinitive, see the Introduction on Language and Meter

1047 On May-day observances see, besides Skeat's note, Hazlitt, Faiths and Folklore, London, 1905, II, 397, Chambers, Book of Days, Edinburgh, 1863-64, I, 570 ff, W Hone, Every-day Book, London, 1826-27, I, 543 ff, II, 570 ff Table Book, London, 1827, I, 541, 557, 628 f, Year Book, London, 1832, 521 ff

1072 His words, in direct quotation, were "Alas that I was born"

1084 "That art so pale and deathly to behold"

1088 On Saturn as a planet of evil influence of II 2453 ff below, and Astr, II, 4, 37 ff

Constellacroun, disposition or arrangement of heavenly bodies Cf SqT, V, 129 FranklT, V 781

1089 "Although we had sworn to the contrary" Cf CIT, IV, 403, SqT, V, 325, Tr, IV, 976 In this idiom the negative idea is usually implied rather than expressed But see II 1666 f below

1091 thus us, monosyllabic, as often elsewhere, sometimes written simply thus (as in I 2761)

Playn, either "plain" or "full", in this formula, probably "plain," "clear"

1096 Cf I 1567, also MercB, I ff, and Compl d'Am, 41 ff The idea that a lover is wounded or slain by his lady's eyes is so familiar that illustrations need not be multiplied They could be collected in endless number from both European and Oriental literature Boccaccio uses the figure in the Filocolo (Opere Volgari, VII, 6) and the Fiametta (Opere, VI, 10) For examples in Old French see J L Lowes, MLR, V, 34 ff, and for further discussion, Miss M V Young, MLN, XXII, 232, and H R Patch, EST, LXV, 352 The ancient Greeks had the same conception Cf Sophocles, Antigone, 795, with Jebb's references, including Plato's Phædrus, 251 B (καλλους απορροη) The idea, indeed, was not merely a conceit of the poets, but may fairly be called an old scientific hypothesis According to the regular explanation, an effluence, sometimes figured as a spear or arrow, passed from the lady's eyes through those of the lover into his heart A similar theory has been held about the "ejaculation" from the evil eye See Bacon's essay Of Envy

1101 With the expression of uncertainty whether Emily is a woman or a goddess of Tr 1, 425 (Fl, I, 38) and Aen, I, 327

Wher, whether, a common contraction

1108 shapen, shaped, determined, frequently used in early English with reference to destiny

1122 "I am not but (no better than) dead" Cf the Northern English "nobbut"

1127 "So help me God, I have little desire to jest"

1132 Palamon and Arcite were not only cousins, but also "sworn brothers" The institution here referred to has been of almost world-wide diffusion See Hamilton-Grierson's article on Brotherhood (Artificial) in Hastings's Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, and, for special consideration of the early Teutons and Celts, J C Hodges, MP, XIX, 384 ff, and Rev Celt, XLIV, 109 ff (with many references) Ancient examples of sworn brothers are Theseus and Pirithous (see II 1191 ff below), Achilles and Patroclus, Orestes and Pylades, Nysus and Euryalus Among savage or semi-civilized peoples the union is accompanied by various formalities, often the drinking or mingling of blood In the English romances and ballads, where frequent reference is made to the custom, the usual ceremony is simply an oath. For instances in Chaucer see ShpT, VII, 40-42, Par&T, VI, 697 f, and FrT, III, 1405 ff. Good examples are also furnished by the romances of Athelston and Amis and Amiloun.

1133 for to dyen in the peyne, though we had to die by torture. The use of for with an infinitive in a concessive sense was common in Middle English. Cf CIT, IV, 364, Tr, I, 674. The construction was perhaps modeled upon French, of "pur murir," Chanson de Roland (ed T Muller, Gottingen, 1878), l. 1048. On the torture known as the "peine forte et dure" see Hinckley, pp 64 f.

1155 Paramour, lit "by love, in the way of love." The phrase was regularly applied to romantic or passionate love. Cf l. 2112, below. Arcate bases his claim to priority on the distinction between human passion and religious adoration (affeccoun of hoolynesse).

1162 I pose, I suppose, grant for the sake of argument.

1164 From Boethius, III, m. 12, 47 (Bo, III, m. 12, 58 f). Cf also Tr, IV, 618, and Rom, 3432 ff.

1167 postif lawe, a technical term "Lex postiva," as opposed to natural law, is that which rests solely upon man's decree. Gower, Mirour de l'Omme, 18469 ff., applies the term to the ecclesiastical restriction on marriage which Chaucer perhaps had in mind. In that case in ech degre may refer to degrees of kinship, otherwise it means simply "in every rank." (See MLR, IV, 17.)

1177 The fable is practically the same as that of Aesop on The Lion and the Bear (no. 247 in Halm's edition, Leipzig, 1854, Croxall's translation, London, 1792, p. 238, no. 141). Cf also La Fontaine, "Les Voleurs et l'Ane" (Book 1, Fable 13, ed Robert, Paris, 1825, I, 66). The source of Chaucer's version is unknown.

1182 Proverbial. Cf "A la cort le roi chascuns i est por soi," Morawski, Proverbes Français, Paris, 1925, p. 2, no. 45. See also Skeat, EE Prov, pp 89 f, no. 213.

1194 On the visit of Pirithous to Athens see also Tes, III, 47-51.

1196 Cf LGW, 2282.

1198 Chaucer's reference is probably to RR, 8148 ff. The account there corresponds to his statement. Strictly speaking, Theseus accompanied Pirithous on his search for Proserpina. See Plutarch's Theseus, c. xxx.

1201 Probably an unaltered line of the original Palamon, inappropriate to the Knight as teller of the story.

1210 hym Arcate. Though Arcate is grammatically in apposition with hym, the modern punctuation with commas misrepresents the Mid Eng idiom, in which the personal pronoun has the effect of a demonstrative (Lat "ille," "iste"). For other examples see MLT, II, 940, MerchT, IV, 1734, M&T, VII, 2673. Mr H B Hinckley (MP, XVI, 43) compares similar constructions in the Scandinavian languages and Middle Welsh. For further discussion see H R Patch, Est, LXV, 355.

1212 oo stownde, a single hour, has the support of only one of the published MSS. But the alternative reading, or stownde, somewhat desperately rendered "or at any hour," seems hardly possible.

1218 to wedde, for a pledge, hence, in jeopardy.

1223 Cf LGW, 658.

1238 The figure from dice was commonly applied to the vicissitudes of Fortune. Cf M&T, VII, 2661, and Tr, II, 1347, and see Patch, The Goddess Fortuna, p. 81.

1242 Proverbial, see Haeckel, p. 5, no. 16.

1247 On the four elements see Gen Prol, I, 420, n.

1251 ff In these reflections on the vanity of human wishes Chaucer followed Boethius, III, pr. 2, cf also Dante, Inf VII, 87 ff.

1260 Cf Romans, VII, 26.

1261 dronke is as a mous, a common comparison in older English. Cf WB Prol, III, 246, Skeat, EE Prov, p. 90, no. 214, Haeckel, p. 60.

1262 f The illustration is from a gloss to the passage in Boethius. See Bo, III, pr. 2, 98 f. But l. 1264 is apparently Chaucer's own.

1279 pure, very, cf BD, 583. Grete, perhaps to be taken with fettes. The fetters seem to be added in Chaucer's account.

1303-12 Cf Boethius, I, m. 5, Ecl, III, 18 ff. (quoted in Innocent, De Contemptu Mundi, I, 2, Migne, Pat Lat CCXVII, 703).

1315-21 For the familiar idea that brutes are happier than men Mr Hinckley cites the Dialogus inter Corpus et Animum, II, 227-30 (Lat Poems attrib to W Mapes, ed Wright, Camden Soc., 1841, p. 103).

1317 to letten of his wille, to refrain from his desire.

1329 The anger of Juno against Thebes was caused by Jupiter's relations with Semele and Alcmena. It is repeatedly referred to by Boccaccio and Statius, see Tes, III, I, IV, 14, v, 56, ix, 44, x, 39, and Theb, I, 12, 250, x, 74, 126, 162, 282. Cf also Ovid, Met, III, 253 ff., IV, 416, and (for phraseology) Dante, Inf, xxx, I f, 22 f.

1331 Cf Theb, XII, 704.

1344 upon his heed, on pain of losing his head (OF "sur sa teste").

1347 This is a typical love-problem ("demande d'amour" or "questione d'amore"), such as were familiar in French, Provençal, and Italian. Other examples from the Canterbury Tales are found in WBT, III, 905, 1219 ff, and FranklT, V, 1621 ff., to which may be added the whole underlying conception of the so-called Marriage Group of Tales. For numerous parallels from European and Oriental literature see Rajna, Rom, XXXI, 28 ff., and of Manly, Morsbach Festschrift, Halle, 1913, pp 282 ff. A series of similar questions, in most cases attached to an illustrative story, were propounded in Boccaccio's Filocolo (Opere Volgari, VIII, 27 ff.)

1369 On the various kinds of spirits recognized by the old physiology see the note to l 2749 below

1372-76 The name Hereos, for the "lover's malady" has a long and curious history, as Professor Lowes has shown (MP, XI, 491 ff.) Derived ultimately from eros, the word became distorted in Latin into various forms such as ereos, "hereos," "heroys" and "hercos", and from these were made the adjectival derivatives "hereosus," "herosus," "hereseus," "heresius," and "heroius." Numerous examples of the use of the term from the Vitaeum of Constantinus Africanus (11th century) down to Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, are cited by Mr Lowes. As a result of the change of form in Latin hereos came to be sometimes associated with "herus" ("erus") and sometimes with "heros" (ηραος), and was defined accordingly. But it usually refers to the mania or mad desire of a lover for the object of his affection. The disease was discussed by a long series of mediæval physicians, and into their treatment of it entered various conceptions derived from the Arabic "al-ishq." The symptoms described by Chaucer — sleeplessness, lack of appetite, loss of flesh and color, weeping and wailing, and aversion to music — can all be paralleled in the medical treatises. Indeed it is hard to determine how far the whole conception of love-sickness, so common in mediæval saga and romance, was of scientific origin, and how far it was due merely to the naïve observation of the extravagances of lovers.

1374 According to both Bernard Gordon and Arnaldus (quoted by Lowes, p 526), unless hereos is cured, the sufferers fall into mania or die.

1376 This has reference to the old division of the brain into three cells, the front one commonly assigned to fantasy, the middle one to reason, and the back one to memory. Mania was described as an affection of the first. Cf the Collectio Salernitana (ed De Renzi, Naples, 1852-59, II, 124) cited by Lowes (p 527, note 6) "Mania est infectio anterioris cellulæ capitis cum privatione imaginatonis. Melancholia est infectio mediæ cellulæ capitis cum privatione rationis." The reading of l 1376 is doubtful. The best MSS, including Ellesmere, have Byforn his (owene) celle fantastik. MS Ha⁴ reads Byforn in his selle fantastyk. The former is defended by Professor Manly on the ground that, according to Bernard, fantasy is seated in the hinder part of the first cell. But Chaucer — like Arnaldus, in a passage quoted by Lowes (p 527) — apparently referred to the entire front cell as the celle fantastik. Mania was localized in this cell, and not before it. So the Ha⁴ reading, adopted by Skeat, corresponds more accurately to the authorities. Professor Lowes would omit the comma after byforn, apparently on the ground that the disease affected the front part of the cell. But this is not clear from the text he cites.

1385 ff Skeat suggested as a source of this passage Claudian, De Raptu Proserpine, l. 78 but the description of Mercury in Ovid's Met, l. 671-72, is also similar and is followed a little later by an account of Argus. The sleepy yerde ("somniaferam virgam") was the caduceus of Mercury.

1390 Argus, Argus of the hundred eyes. For the story how Mercury put him to sleep before slaying him see Ovid, Met, l. 714 ff.

1401 Cf Tr, iv, 864 f.

1409 In Tes (iv, 22) the disguise is that of a poor valet ("in maniera di pover valetto").

1422 A biblical phrase, of Jos ix, 21.

1426-43 In making Arcite first a page of the chambre of a lady and then a squier of the duke's chamber, Chaucer adds details, possibly autobiographical, not found in Boccaccio. (See Lowes, MP, XV, 692, n.)

1428 In the Tes the name assumed by Arcite is Penteo, Chaucer took Philostrate from Boccaccio's "Filostrato," the title of the poem which was the primary source of the Troilus. From its Greek derivation Filosttrato ought properly to mean "army-lover" but Boccaccio connected the second element with the Latin "stratus," and understood it to mean, "vanquished by love," in which sense it is admirably appropriate to Arcite. Two other proper names in Boccaccio are based upon a similar misunderstanding of φίλος as a noun meaning "love," — Filocolo, which, through confusion of χολος and κοπος, he interprets as "fatica d'amore" (Opere Volgari, VII, 354), and Filostropo (in his fifteenth eclogue), which he explains as coming from "phylos, quod est amor, et tropos, quod est conversio." See Epist xxiii, A. Fra Martino da Signa, Opere Latine Minori, ed Massera, Bari, 1928, p 220.

1439 neer, usually comparative in Chaucer, is here positive, as in Modern English.

1444 honestly and slyly, suitably and prudently. Both words have changed their meaning in modern English.

1462 ff The indications of date here given are entirely independent of Boccaccio, and it is not clear how Chaucer came to insert them. Palamon, according to the usual understanding of the passage, escaped from prison on the night of May 3, discovered Arcite on the 4th, and on the 5th fought the duel which Theseus interrupted. The assembly for the tournament, if held exactly a year later, was consequently also on May 5, and it is distinctly said (l 2188) to have taken place on a Sunday. Now in 1387 May 5 actually fell on Sunday, and Skeat found in the fact an argument for dating the Knights' Tale in that year. But, as Mr Mather argued, the dates also fitted in 1381, the year to which he assigned the original Palamon and Arcote If, as Professor Manly holds, the thrydde nyght (l 1463) refers to the night preceding May 3, then the date of the duel would have been Saturday, May 4, and the assembly would have fallen on Sunday, May 4, of the following year This would point to 1382 But it may be doubted whether there is any significance in these correspondences of calendar For further references on the matter see Manly's note to l 1850 and the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the KnT

The reason is not certain for the selection of May 3 as a starting point The day of the month is not an essential part of the astrological scheme which follows (ll 2217 ff) Curiously enough the same date is given in NPT (VII, 3187 ff) for the tragic seizure of Chanticleer, and in Tr (II, 55 ff) it is the day on which Pandarus suffers from a misfortune (teene) in love Again in The Cuckoo and the Nightingale (l 55, Oxf Chau, VII, 349), where there may of course be a reminiscence of Chaucer, it is associated with a lover's ill success Various reasons have been suggested for Chaucer's repeated mention of the date Miss Hammond (English Verse between Chaucer and Surrey Durham, N C, 1927, p 472) notes that May 1-3 were the regular days of the Maytime festival But that would hardly account for the association of May 3 with tragic occurrences, nor (as Mr Root observes) is it explained by the fact that in the ecclesiastical calendar May 3 is the feast of the Invention of the Holy Cross Both Mr Root, in his note on Tr, II, 56, and Mr Manly, in his discussion of the KnT, I, 1850, point out that May 3 was recognized as one of the "dismal" or unlucky days of the year There is also a reference to the dismal in BD, 1206, in explanation of misfortunes Mr Manly prints two lists of such dates, and May 3 appears in both In one of them are also included May 6 and June 8, the dates, respectively, of Dorigen's promise to Aurelius in the FranklT (V, 906), and of the assignation in the garden in the MerchT (IV, 2132 f) It may be that Chaucer had only this reason for the selection of all three dates But since there were numerous days of ill omen in the calendar, and many of them are designated as "very unlucky," whereas May 3 is simply "unlucky," one cannot help wondering whether Chaucer had some personal reason, not yet discovered, for his repeated references to that day

1455 Cf Gen Prol, I, 844, and n

1456 Proverbial, see Skeat, EE Prov, p 90, no 215

1471 claree, a mixed drink of wine, honey, and spices Directions for making it are quoted in Skeat's note

1472 The reference is to Egyptian Thebes For its association with opium see the references collected by Professor Emerson MP, XVII, 287 ff He notes that drugs and narcotics were a recognized remedy for the

"lover's malady of hereos," a fact which makes Palamon's possession of them plausible In Boccaccio the wine is not definitely said to be drugged

1477 nedes cost, of necessity, lit in the way of necessity (AS "cost" ON "kostr," distinct from the Mod Eng "cost," OF "cost")

1479 drededful, full of fear Stalketh, walks stealthily, cf CUT, IV, 525, LGW, 1781, Tr II, 519

1494 From Dante, Purg, I, 20

1495 grees, probably "bushes" here and in l 1641, in l 1507 it means "branches," "boughs,"

1502 Cf LGW, 1204

1509 Cf Tr II, 920

1512 Professor Manly sees here an allusion to the controversy of "the flower and the leaf" See LGW Prol F, 72 ff, and n

1522 The proverb also occurs in the Latin form "Campus habet lumen, et habet nemus auris acumen" Cf further Skeat, EE Prov, pp 90 f, no 216, Haeckel, p 22, no 71, and Morawski, Proverbes Français, Paris, 1925, p 81, no 2236

1524 Also a proverb, cf Sir Eglamour, l 1282 f (Thornton Romances, Camden Soc, 1844, p 174), and Skeat, EE Prov, p 91, no 217 The form men, as in men seyth (Ger "man sagt"), is probably the singular man, in the indefinite sense Cf Gen Prol, I, 149, and n

1531 thuse loveres, lovers (in general) For the use of thuse in a generalizing sense cf RvT, I 4100, MkT, VII, 2121, WBT, III, 1004, Astr, II, 26

1533 For the proverbial figure of the bucket see Patch, The Goddess Fortuna, pp 53 f, and Est, LXV, 352 f, Skeat, EE Prov, pp 91 f, no 218

1539 This saying still current in various forms, means that Friday is an off-day, different from the rest of the week Skeat quotes a Devonshire version, "Fridays in the week are never aleek" Cf also the Transactions of the National Eisteddfod of Wales, 1895, p 332, and (for a mediæval explanation of the belief) Alexander Neckam, De Naturis Rerum, I, 7 (Rolls Series, p 42) See further Lowes, MLR, IX, 94, Koch, Angl Beibl, XXV, 337, Haeckel, p 34, no 115

1566 Cf Tr, III, 733 f, IV, 1208, 1546, v, 3-7, LGW, 2629 f Miss Hibbard (Mrs Laura Hibbard Loomis) suggested that the figure has reference to a "transcendental garment, symbolic of life and destiny," and cites instances of such magic shirts (PQ, I, 222) But Chaucer does not represent the shirt as made by the Parcae His meaning seems to be simply that a man's fate is determined before his first garment is made for him in infancy

With the use of erst, superlative, where the comparative would be more natural in Mod Eng, cf NPT, VII, 3281, CUT, IV, 336

1587 be deed, die The phrase is frequently so used in early English Cf Par3T, VI, 710, CIT, IV, 364

1604 "I disavow the assurance and the bond"

1606 Proverbial, cf Tr, iv, 618, Haeckel, pp 1 f, nos 3-5

1609 to darreyne hure, to decide the right to her (OF "deraisnier," Lat "derationare") Cf l 1853, in l 2097 the phrase is, The bataille to darreyne

1622 to borwe, for a pledge, cf to wedde, I 1218

1624 Cf Theb, i, 127 f

1625 From Tes, v, 13 "signoria nē amore sta bene in compagna" Skeat cites RR, 8451 ff, and Ovid, Met, ii, 846 f, which Chaucer may have had in mind, though both passages say that Love and Lordship cannot dwell together, whereas he seems to mean that neither of them will endure any rival or partner A closer parallel is furnished by Ovid's Ars Amat, iii, 564 cited by Matthieu de Vendôme, Ars Versificatoria, iii, 10 (E. Faral, Les Arts Poétiques du XII^e et du XIII^e Siècle, Paris, 1924, p 170), cf also Seneca, Agamemnon, 259, Skeat, EE Prov, pp 92 f, n 220, Haeckel, p 2, n 7

1626 his thankes, willingly, adv gen of thank, in the primary sense of "thought," hence "will," "wish" Cf ll 2107, 2114 below, Rom, 2463

1636 ff The single combat of Palamon and Arcite is conducted quite differently in Boccaccio In his account Palamon unhorses Arcite with a blow on the head which makes him unconscious When Palamon recovers he demands that the fight proceed, but it is almost immediately interrupted by Theseus Chaucer's version, as Mr Robertson has noted (JEGP, XIV, 232), in which the combatants begin fighting with the spear and turn later to the sword, corresponds to the usual procedure in Froissart

1638 Cf Tes, vii, 106, 119, Theb, iv, 494 ff

1660 With the exaggeration here (which is, after all, characteristic of saga and romance) editors have compared the Rom de Troie, 24372 f, Richard Cœur-de-Lion, 5856 ff, Havelok, 2684 ff, and the Icelandic saga of Gunnlaugr Ormstunga See also, for the simile of wild boars, Theb, xi, 530 ff

1663 ff Destiny, like the pagan goddess Fortuna, was adopted into the system of Christian philosophy and poetry, and was conceived as the executor of the will of God Cf Tr, iii, 617 ff On the development of the idea, especially by Boethius and Dante, see Patch, The Goddess Fortuna, pp 17 ff, and MLR XXII, 377 ff The locus classicus for the conception is Dante, Inf, vii, 73 ff, which Chaucer may have recalled here

1666-67 Cf l 1089 above, and n

1668 From Tes, v, 77, but also proverbial Cf "Ç'avient en un jour que n'avient en cent ans" (Morawski, p 12, n 315), and for further parallels see Cook, MLN, XXII, 207 Skeat, EE Prov, p 93, n 221

1675, 1681 the grete hert, a great hart and old, worthy game for the hunt The term occurs frequently in books on hunting See O F Emerson, Rom Rev, XIII, 140

1678 hunte, huntsman (AS "hunta")

1697 Under the sonne Theseus looked under a low-lying sun, perhaps (as Professor Child used to suggest) shielding his eyes as he swept the field in his observation See J S P Tatlock, MLN, XXXVII, 377, and S B Hustvedt, MLN, XLIV, 182 The same phrase occurs in Flemish, apparently in a similar sense, in a ballad cited by G L van Roosbroeck, MLN XXXVIII, 59, cf also the Flemish Remaert de Vos, 759 (See MP, XIV, 318) The interpretation "all about" "in every direction," supported in MLN, XXXVII, 120 and 376, is less probable

1702 With the intervention of the duke of that of Adrastus in the fight between Tydeus and Polynices, Theb, i, 438 ff In the Tes, Palamon and Arcite are first discovered by Emly, who sends word of them to Theseus

1710 what myster men, what kind of men (OF "mester," Mod Fr "metier," properly, "business, calling")

1721 The form seinte (with final -e) in this phrase, might be explained as a case of inflected adjective with a proper name or as a dative, or as a French feminine On these inflections see the Introduction on Language and Meter

1736 ut am I, the usual Middle English idiom Cf the German, "Ich bin es"

1746 to pyne you with the corde, i.e., "to force confession by torture"

1747 The epithet red, as applied to Mars, may have been particularly suggested to Chaucer by the third stanza of the Tes ("Marte rubicondo") It was also familiar, however, in the Latin poets Cf Aen, xii, 332 ("sanguineus"), Ovid, Rem Amoris, 153 ("sanguinei"), Theb, viii, 231 ("cruenti")

1748 Boccaccio does not mention the intercession of the queen Possibly Chaucer had in mind the release by Edward III of six citizens of Calais at the treaty of Queen Philippa This incident, related by Froissart (Bk i, ch 145, tr Johnes, London, 1839, I, 188) has been questioned by historians, and Professor Manly suggests that Chaucer is more likely to have been thinking of various occasions of intercession by Queen Anne He refers especially to her plea for all offenders in 1382 (Knighton, Chronicon, ed Lumby, London, 1889-95, II, 151)

1761 This line, which is not in Boccaccio, is repeated in almost identical form in Mercht, IV, 1986, in SgT, V, 479, and in LGW Prol F, 503, and the idea recurs in MLT, II, 660 It expresses a favorite sentiment of Chaucer's, which recalls the familiar doctrine of the poets of the "dolce stil nuovo" that Love repairs to the gentle heart. See especially Dante, Inf, v, 100, Vita Nuova, xx (Sonetto x), Guido Guinicelli's famous canzone "Al core gentile ripara sempre Amore" (ed D'Ancona, Bologna, 1877, p 6), and cf Tr, iii, 5 It should be observed, however, that the association of pity with nobility is also Ovidian See Tristia, iii, 5, 31-32

1781 after oon, alike, according to one standard

1785 ff The Duke's speech is almost wholly Chaucer's invention In Boccaccio, Theseus refers to the madness ('gran follia,' v, 91) of the lovers, and admits that he himself has been foolish because of love ("per amor folleggiar," v, 92) But the humor, even flippancy of tone, is Chaucer's It has been suggested that he intended a serious attack on courtly love But this is making "earnest of game" For the commonplace sentiment of the opening lines of Rom 878 ff Theseus' speech was apparently influenced by RR, 4229 ff Such mockery of love is common in Old French poetry See, for example, the poems "Contre l'Amour" collected by Jeanroy and Langfors in Chansons Satiriques et Bachiques du xiii^e Siècle (Paris, 1921), pp 20 ff, and particularly the couplet,

"Biaus sres Deus, un pou me dout Cil ne soit fous qui Amors croit (p 35)

Benedicite, a common exclamation, often in a deprecatory use Cf "Bless me!", "God save the mark," etc For other examples in Chaucer, see KnT, I, 2115, and n, PrT, III, 1456, 1584, Thop, VII, 784, Tr, I, 780 Benedicite here has its full five syllables In most of the other cases the verse shows the pronunciation to have been trisyllabic — always, Professor Manly thinks, when the expression was used to ward off evil

1799 "Who can be a fool unless he is in love?" Love is the one royal road to folly The reading of some editions, Who may (nat) be a fool, if that he love has poor authority, and is really less emphatic For the sentiment the editors compare Publilius Syrus, Sententiae (ed Meyer, Leipzig, 1880), no 22 "Amare et sapere vix deo conceditur" It is really proverbial See Haeckel p 3, no 11

1808 Kan hem thank, thanks them, owns an obligation, lit "knows thanks" Thank is a substantive, as in "danksagen"

1810 Both reading and interpretation are doubtful MSS El Hg Cp read of, and there may have been a proverb to the effect that the cuckoo knows little of the hare But of, as Mr Manly remarks, may be a mistake for or, which has the support of good MSS

1814 servant, lover Cf I 2787, below According to the courtly code the lover was a servant of the lady, and also of the god of Love

1817 Cf I 1951, below, LGW 600, RR, 15108 f

1835 The argument is in Tes (v, 95), but the tone is different 1838 "He may as well go whistle (for consolation)" Cf Tr, v, 1433 (with Root's parallels), also blow the bukkes horn, MLT I, 3387, and "go blow one's flute" (proverbial) See also Skeat, EE Prov, p 85, no 204, Haeckel, p 49, no 169

1850 fer ne ner, farther nor nearer, an exact year is probably intended ("un anno intero," Tes, v, 98) With regard to the dates see the note to l 1462 above

1877 namely, especially, cf "namentlich"

1884 The rules for the construction of lists, as laid down by Thomas, Earl of Gloucester, uncle of Richard II, are quoted by Skeat from Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, London, 1801, Bk iii, ch 1, § 23

1910 With this use of coral of the romance of Guy of Warwick, 15th cent version, ed Zupitza, EETS, II 11399 ff, also the Land of Cookaygne (in Matzner, Altenglische Sprachproben, Berlin, 1867, I, 150, ll 67-70, Heuser, Die Kildare-Gedichte, Bonn, 1904, p 146) For the suggestion that the material referred to was really red porphyry see Hinkley, p 78

1912 Dyane of chastitee, the chaste Diana The phrase with of is equivalent to an adjective, as frequently in Shakespeare Cf MLT, VII, 2137, also the similar use of the bare genitive in lypes creature, l 2395 below, shames death, MLT, II, 819, LGW, 2064

1913 Doon wrought, caused (to be) made The causative don is ordinarily used with the infinitive, but for parallels to this construction with the participle see MLT, II, 171, CIT, IV, 1098, HF, 155

1918 ff The account of the temple of Venus is a condensed version, with a few additions, of Tes, vii, 53 ff A closer imitation of the same passage was made by Chaucer in PF 183-294 and there is a third (brief) description of the temple in HF, 119-39 For a comparison of the passages in KnT and PF see Skeat, Oxf Chau, III, 390 A classical model for the whole account of the pictures in the temple is of course furnished by Virgil's description of the temple of Juno, Aen, I, 446 ff

1929 goildes, marngolds Cf the description of jealousy in RR, 21772-73 With the color symbolism here (yellow for jealousy) of the use of red for anger, l 1997, below, blue for fidelity SqT, V, 644, Anel, 330 (asure), green for disloyalty, SqT, V, 646, and white for virtue, SecNT, VIII, 115, Tr, ii, 1062, 887

1936-37 The error by which Chaucer confuses the island Cythera with the mountain Cithaeron, not properly associated with Venus, is found also in the "Cytheron" of RR, 15663 and in the "Citerea" of Boccaccio's Ameto (Opere Volgari, XV, 133) It may be partly due to Aen, x 51 or 86

1940 In making Idleness the porter of the garden of Love Chaucer follows RR, 515-82 (Rom, 528 ff) Cf SecN Prol, VIII, 2 f, ParsT, X, 714

1941 On Narcissus see Ovid, Met, iii,

407 ff, on the folye of Salamon, I Kings xi, 1 ff

1944 Possibly a reminiscence of RR, 14404-06, where Medea and Circe are mentioned successively

1945 On Turnus see Virgil, Aen, viii, 1 and passim, on Croesus, Mkt, VII, 2727 ff, and n

1952 Cf Rom, 6030, though no source need be sought for such a formula

1953-54 Cf II 2039-40, below, see also RR, 13263-64, 16689-90

1955 With the description of Venus of that of Albricus Philosophus, De Deorum Imaginibus, ch v (Mythographi Latini, Amsterdam, 1681, II, 304 ff) Chaucer probably drew upon some such mythological treatise here and in the description of Mars see the note to I 2041 below Professor Patch has reminded the editor that there is a description of a "simulacrum" of Venus in Boccaccio's De Gen Deor, iii, ch 23

1967-2050 The account of the temple of Mars mainly follows Boccaccio (Tes, vi, 29-37), though an occasional detail appears to go back to his source in Theb, vi, 34-73 Some lines (for example, the vivid description of treachery, I 1999) are additions or variations of Chaucer's

1979 f Cf Dante, Inf, ix, 64-70

1982 armypotent, from Boccaccio's "armypotent" (Tes, vi, 32)

1985 veze, rush, blast, glossed "impetus" in some MSS, doubtless with reference to Theb, vi, 47 ("Impetus amens")

1987 The northern lyght, probably suggested by Theb, vi, 45 ("aduersum Phoebi rubar") The reference would then not be to the Aurora Borealis

1990 adamant, properly speaking an indestructible substance (from a privative, and δαμαω), finally applied to the diamond It was also used of the loadstone and incorrectly associated with the Latin "ad-amare" See PF 148

1991 overthwart and enālong, crosswise and lengthwise

1995 saugh I This formula, which recurs seven or eight times in the description of the temples, is not appropriate to the Knight and may have been carried over from the original version of the Palamon But it was hardly more appropriate to Chaucer there In the Tesede, where the personified prayers of Palamon, Arcite, and Emelye are represented as describing the temples, similar expressions are used with dramatic propriety Chaucer (as Mr Manly suggests) probably allowed them to stand, like the direct address in I 1918, as mere devices for vividness of expression

1999 Possibly influenced by RR, 12093-94 (Rom, 7419-20)

2001 Perhaps a reference to the story of Hypermnestra See LGW, 2562 ff

2002 Cf Tes, vi, st 35

2004 For the meaning of charkyng cf Bo, m 6, 10, where it translates "stridens"

2007 Doubtless an allusion to Judges iv, 17 ff

2014 Those who died of pestilence (qualm) were subject to the influence of Saturn See I 2469 below

2017 the shippes hoppesteres, the dancing ships (AS "hoppestre," dancing girl, on the suffix -estre see Gen Prol, I 241, n) Boccaccio has "navi bellatrici" (Tes, vi, 37), and Statius "bellatricesque carmae" (Theb, vii, 57) Chaucer apparently translated "ballatrici" or "ballatrices" For the association of the burning of the ships with the evil influence of Mars, Skeat compares Ptolemy's Centum Dieta 55

2020 ff The catastrophes here mentioned, some of them scarcely of epic dignity, were such as were attributed to the influence of Mars Wright and Skeat quote illustrative passages from the Compost of Ptolemy and another astrological treatise See also Cornelius Agrippa, De Occulta Philosophia, Bk 1, cap 22 It is not necessary to assume, with Tyrwhitt, that Chaucer meant the passage to be satirical

2021 by, with reference to

2025 Tyrwhitt (having in mind considerations of decorum) adopted the emendation th' armerer, and the bouyer for the barbour, and the bocher But barbers and butchers belonged properly to "Mars' division"

2028 ff The figure of the sword of Damocles was probably suggested to Chaucer by Boethius, iii, p 5, where it is also brought into connection with conquest

2031-34 Cf the lines of Bernard Sylvester's Megacasmus cited in the note to MLT, II, 197

2035 by figure, perhaps a technical reference to the horoscope

2039 oon ensample The reference is inexact Three examples are cited in II 2031 ff

2041 The figure of Mars, like that of Venus above, seems to have been influenced by some mythological treatise Skeat quotes a passage from Albricus Philosphus, De Deorum Imaginibus, ch iii (Amsterdam, 1681, II, 302), which derives the name Mavors (Mars) from "mares vorans" (devouring males) It is altogether likely that this etymology underlies the picture of the wolf devouring a man

2045 Puella and Rubeus are figures in geomancy On this method of divination see L Thorndike, History of Magic, II 110 ff, and Speculum, II, 326 ff Cf also Cornelius Agrippa, De Occulta Philosophia ii, cap 48 The process is essentially as follows Four rows of dots are hurriedly made, without regard to their number Then they are counted If a row is of an odd number a single dot is set down, if even, two dots, and the results are arranged in a perpendicular column Sixteen possible figures may thus be formed, of which the following three are concerned in the present passage

1 2 3

Puella Rubeus Puer

Authorities differ as to both the forms and the assignment of Puer and Puella. According to Cornelius Agrippa Puella (fig 1, above) was dedicated to Venus, and Puer (fig 3) and Rubeus to Mars. Skeat inferred that Chaucer had confused Puer and Puella. But Mr Manly has found contemporary authority in which the names of figs 1 and 3 are interchanged, with the consequent assignment of Puella to Mars. He cites particularly a treatise in MS Bodley 581, which was prepared for Richard II. For a photograph of a page of the MS, and for further references on the whole matter, see Manly's note on l 2045.

2049 soutil, subtitle, perhaps suggested by "sottil" (Tes, vii, 38).

2053 ff The temple of Diana is not described by Boccaccio.

2056 ff Calistopee, Callisto. There seems to be confusion in regard to both her name and her story. The form Calistopee may be due to association with Calliope. According to the usual account (Ovid, Fasti, ii, 153 ff), Callisto was transformed into Arcotus, the Great Bear, and her son, Arcas, into the constellation Boötes. Indeed the gloss "Ursa Major" appears in several MSS, at the present passage. But the loode-sterre, or Polestar, is in Ursa Minor. Chaucer appears to have known a different version of the story, such as that cited by Mr Manly from Boccaccio's De Gen Deor (v, 49) "Calisto autem ursa minor dicta est, ubi major vocatus est Arcas." But in either account Arcas is rather a constellation than a sterre.

2062 On the transformation of Daphne see Ovid, Met., i, 548 ff. With the form Dane, cf Lat "Dana" for "Daphne" which occurs in a poem published in the Neues Archiv, XV, 401, l 9.

2063 With the Knight's insistence on being correctly understood of the Pardoner's careful distinction between Samuel and Lemuel (PardT, VI, 585). See also MLT, II, 261, n., on the use of I mene, I seye, etc.

2065 Attheon, Actaeon, see Met., ii, 138 ff for his story. Cf also, for the phraseology, R de Thèbes, MSS B and C, 9127 ff (ed Constans, SATF, 1890, II, 78-79).

2070 Athalamie, Atalanta, see Met., x, 560 ff.

2071 Meleagre, Meleager, see Met., viii, 298 ff.

2075 seet, an unusual form for the third singular (sat), probably due to the analogy of the plural seeten.

2086 Lucyna, Lucina, a title given to Juno and Diana in their character as god-esses of child-birth. There are frequent references to Lucina in Ovid, cf Fasti, ii, 449, iii, 255, Her, vi, 122, xi, 55, Ars Amat, iii, 785, Met, v, 304, ix, 294 f, 698, x, 507.

2086 thou mayst best, thou art best able, hast most power.

2087 Cf RR, 163 f (Rom, 175 f).

2095 ff In the description of the opposing companies Chaucer has departed from Boccaccio. The entire sixth book of the Tes is taken up with the accounts of the individual knights. But Chaucer has concentrated his attention upon the figures of Lagurge and Emetreus. The descriptions are full of medieval realism, as has been shown in detail by Professor Cook, see the note to ll 2155-86.

2100 at alle rightes, completely, in all respects. The phrase, of obscure origin, also occurs in the forms to alle rightes, at here right, and at right(s).

2103 of hir hond, of the deeds of their hand, so, of valor or prowess, more commonly plural (handes) in later use. Cf Merry Wives of Windsor, i, 4, 27.

2115 benedictee, here, as usually, trisyllabic (ben-cite or berdaste). In l 1785, above, it has its full five syllables. See further the note to that line.

2119 Som, one (singular). Cf ll 2187, 2761.

2125 "There is no new fashion that has not been old", cf Skeat, EE Prov, p 93, no 222.

2129 Lagurge, "re Licurgo" Tes, vi, 14, Lycurgus, father of Opheltes, called "ductor Nemeae" in Theb., v, 733. In making him king of Thrace Chaucer apparently confused him with another Lycurgus, mentioned in Theb., iv, 386, vii, 180. The description of him resembles in part Boccaccio's descriptions of Agamemnon and Evandro (Tes, vi, 21 ff, 35 ff).

2141 This refers to the ancient practice of gilding an animal's claws when its hide was worn as a cloak. Cf Tes, vi, 36. Chaucer may also have had in mind the description of a tiger's skin in Theb., vi, 722 ff.

2142-44 for old and for blak, usually printed with hyphens as compound adjectives, are probably to be taken as phrases, meaning "because of age, blackness." This construction is well attested for Chaucer and his period. Cf for wood, HF, 1747, for pure wood, Rom, 276, for syk, WB Prol, III, 394, for bright, Tr, ii, 864, for pure ashamed, Tr, ii, 656, For wo and wery, Tr, iv, 707, and the instances from other Mid Eng writers listed by Kittredge, [Harv] Stud and Notes, I, 16, by Zupitza, ed of Lydgate's Fabula Duorum Mercatorum, l 532, n (QF, LXXXIII, 56), and by Macaulay, Works of Gower, Oxford, 1899-1902, II, 505 f. The sense of for varies somewhat in the different examples, which might easily be multiplied. But for as a prefix of emphasis in adjectives, though not common, is also found in English and Scandinavian. Anglo-Saxon shows the formation in a number of intensive adjectives and adverbs. Some of them are not quite parallel to Chaucer's forms, because the accent appears from metrical evidence to have fallen on the prefix (as in the case of the related prefix fore-, which occasionally alternates with for- in the same compound). But others (like the adverbs fornean, forswithe, forwel) are shown by occurrences in verse to have had unaccented for-. And the NED cites from Middle and early Modern English what appear to be clear cases of the intensive formation in the adjectives "foreold," "forget," "forwery," "fordead," and "fordull." The use of for as a prefix must therefore be regarded as possible in for old and for black, though the other idiom seems more probable. Strangely enough several passages in Chaucer present the same difficulty of choice between the two constructions. Cf for hor, Rom, 356, for very, PF, 93, for drye, SqT, V, 409, forwaked, MLT, II, 596, and for drunken, Mill Proib, I, 3120 (where the sense seems to favor the preposition, though the verbal prefix for- would be very natural with the participle).

2143 The alcant was a tall, heavy hunting dog. For a full account see Cook, Trans Conn Acad, XXI, 128, XXIII, 30.

2155-86 Emetreus is not mentioned by either Boccaccio or Statius. The name may have been derived by some misunderstanding from Demetrius. Professor Manly remarks that the description is somewhat suggestive of Richard II. Professor Cook (Trans Conn Acad, XX, 166 ff.) argued that the real original of the portrait was the Earl of Derby on the occasion of his return to London from the continent on July 5, 1393. He showed that the description was not inapplicable to Henry personally and that many of the trappings and treasures mentioned are known to have been such as he possessed at one time or another. There is even evidence that Henry brought home a leopard from the East. But many of the features of the description emphasized by Cook do not seem particularly significant, and in other cases (as where he would explain frakenes by "pock-marks") his argument is forced. On the whole the identification seems not to be justified. Moreover, it would imply for the passage in question a date much later than it is probably to be assigned to the Knigh's Tale.

Professor Curry (pp 130 ff.) offers an entirely different explanation of Lycurgus and Emetreus. He holds them to be types, respectively, of the Saturnalian and Martian figure, appropriately introduced here since Arcite was under the protection of Mars and Saturn had taken up the cause of Palamon. Although the descriptions of the Martian and the Saturnalian man, cited by Mr Curry from the astrological authorities, are not altogether consistent, the correspondences between them and Chaucer's figures are striking enough. Even the yellow eyes are noted by Alchabitrus ("croceos"), and the freckles by Albohazen Haly. In this passage, just as in some of the descriptions of the pilgrims in the General Prologue, it is hard to judge how definitely Chaucer had such scientific lore in mind. But in view of the conspicuous use of astrology throughout the Knigh's Tale, Mr Curry's theory deserves serious consideration.

2160 clooth of Tars, a rich stuff, apparently of silk. The word is of uncertain origin. The NED identifies Tars with Mandeville's mythical Tarsia or Tharsia, in the borders of China. Mr Hinckley (MP, XIV, 318) argued for the derivation from Tarsus.

2178 Since white eagles are unknown, probably a falcon is here meant. Cf

Chaucer's uses of the term eagle in PF, 332 ff. 2187 alle and some, all and each, one and all. Cf l 2761 thus all and som, this is the whole and every particular. Som is the indefinite pronoun. The phrase was common. See FranklT, V, 1606, Tr, iv, 1198, 1274.

2200 Not in Boccaccio. Dr Robertson (JEGP, XIV, 235) shows that it is a madæval touch.

2217 And in hwr houre. The astrological system of the hours of the planets is explained at length in the Astrolabe, II, § 12. Each day is divided into twelve hours, reckoned from sunrise to sunset, and twelve more, reckoned from sunset to sunrise. The first hour from sunrise belongs to the planet for which the day is named, and subsequent hours, throughout the twenty-four, are assigned according to the following series: Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Sun, Venus, Mercury, Moon. Thus on Sunday the hour after sunrise was dedicated to the Sun, the second to Venus, and the twenty-third (when Palamon rose) also to Venus. The twenty-fourth was Mercury's, and the first hour of Monday, when Emily rose and went to Diana's temple (l 2278), belonged to the Moon. The nexte houre of Mars folwynge thus (l 2367) was the fourth after sunrise, and it was then that Arcite offered his sacrifice.

2221-60 The prayer of Palamon corresponds closely to that in Tes (vii, 43-49).

2224 On Venus and Adonis cf Ovid, Met, x, 519 ff.

2236 Cf R.R., 21096.

2238 "I care not to boast of arms"

2239 Ne I ne are, to be read "N'In'axe"

2262 wher I ride or go, whether I ride or walk.

2271 The thridde houre unequal. Since the day and the night were each divided into twelve planetary hours, the hours of the day and those of the night were unequal except just at the equinoxes.

2275-2360 Cf Tes, vii, 71-92.

2281 Smokyng the temple. Boccaccio (Tes, vii, 72) reads, "Fu mondo il tempio," the temple was clean. But Chaucer apparently translated "Fumando il tempio."

2288 Either "it is well for a man to be unhampered in his story," or "it is well for a man to preserve his freedom (to keep out of prison)." The purport of the whole passage is doubtful. The Knight may mean that he is restrained by modesty from continuing the description. Yet what he actually omits of Boccaccio's text is the detailed account of the rites after washing. Professor Child used to suggest that the Knight thought it best not to seem to know too much about heathen religion. This was one of the charges brought against the Templars in the prosecution of the order at the beginning of Chaucer's century.

2293-94 Of course Emilia's sacrifice is described by Boccaccio (Tes, vii, 76 ff), and not by Statius. But Boccaccio's model was doubtless the account in Theb, iv, 455 ff, of the rites performed by Theresias and his daughter Manto. Chaucer's citation of Statius here may be an acknowledgment of that ultimate source, or it may be merely a claim of ancient authority for his story, even where such authority was really lacking.

2298 sene, the adjective (AS "gesene"), not the participle. It consequently takes the preposition "to," instead of "by."

2302 As heep, of As sende, l 2317 As is freely employed in Mid Eng, in a sense which now seems pleonastic, with the imperative or subjunctive in commands, entreaties, or exhortations. Cf as beith of beitre cheere, Ci Proh, IV, 7. The construction apparently developed out of the strictly logical use of as in adjurations "as help me God," etc. For another type of "pleonastic as" see Gen Proh, I, 462, n.

2313 The three forms are those of Luna, in heaven, Diana, on earth, and Proserpina, in the lower world.

2340 The conception of the bleeding twigs (Tes, vii, 92) doubtless goes back ultimately to the Polydorus episode in the Aeneid (ii, 19 ff). Cf also Ovid, Met, ii, 325 ff, especially 360, Dante, Inf, xii, 31-34.

2356 Shulle thee declaren. The declaration has already been made in ll 2331 ff. In the Teseide the omen follows Diana's speech.

2365 the nexte weye, the nearest way.

2373 ff. With Arcte's prayer of Tes, vii, 24-28.

2388-90 Boccaccio's reference to Mars and Venus is somewhat expanded by Chaucer, who may have recalled Ovid (Ars Amat, ii, 561-600, Met, iv, 171 ff) or RR, 13833 ff, 14157 ff, 18061 ff.

2395 lyves creature, living creature. See the note to l 1912 above.

2397 Cf Aneid, 182, and Lady, 52.

2399 in the place, in the lists.

2410-17 The vows of Arcte (which Chaucer got from the Teseide) have several parallels also in Statius, of Theb, ii, 732 ff, vi, 193 ff, 607, viii, 491. The dedication of hair and beard was an actual custom in antiquity. On its significance see Sir J G Frazer, Golden Bough, 3d ed., London, 1911, I, 25, 28, Farnell, Greek Hero Cults, Oxford, 1921, pp 64 ff.

2413 fynde, provide.

2432 ff. For murmuryng Ful love and dym, Tes (vii, 40, 6) has "con dulce romore," and Professor Lowes (MP, XV, 708 f) has suggested that Chaucer's paraphrase was due to the recollection of "un tacito mormorio" in Filocolo (Opere, VII, 208) where Florio and Ascalone visit the temple of Mars.

2433 "And (the voice) said" For the omission of the subject of the Gen Proh, I, 33, and n.

2437 With this proverbial expression of Shipt, VII, 51, and CYT, VIII, 1342, also Tr, v, 425, Rom, 74 f. See Skeat, EE Prov, p 94 no 223, Haecckel, p 50, no 178.

2443 In astrology the aspect of Saturn was cold. Cf Ptolemy, De Judicis, Lib ii (ed Basel, 1551, p 399) "Saturnus, ubi solus dominationem fuerit sortitus, corruptum generaliter fingore."

2447-48 Cf RR, 12818 ff.

2449 Proverbial "Men may the old out-run but not outwit" Dryden, Palamon and Arcte, iii, 387 f misinterpreted at-ede as "outside" In Tr, iv, 1456, the same proverb is applied to the wise. See further Skeat, EE Prov, p 81, no 195, Haecckel, p 21, nos 66, 67.

2452 In making Venus daughter of Saturn Chaucer was very likely following RR, 5541, 10827 ff. In l 2222 above she is called Doughter to Jove.

2454 My cours, the course or orbit of the planet Saturn. This was the largest known orbit before the discovery of Neptune and Uranus. For a similar list of calamities ascribed to the influence of Saturn see Ptolemy, De Judicis, Lib ii (ed Basel, 1551, p 399). But the distinction between the infortune of Mars and that of Saturn was not very consistently maintained, and in the same chapter Mars is associated with "tumultibus plebeis."

2456 The disasters mentioned are such as were regularly ascribed to Saturn by astrology.

The adjective wan is applicable either to the sea or to the drowned body.

2459 cherles rebellynge, doubtless an allusion to the Peasant's Revolt of 1381. For an explicit reference to that occurrence see NPT, VII, 3393, and cf also CIT, IV, 995 ff, and Tr, iv, 183 f.

2362 According to a paraphrase of the Tetrabiblos of Ptolemy, quoted by Professor Liddell (note to l 2456), it was especially when in the signs of the quadrupeds (hence, when in Leo) that Saturn caused destruction by falling buildings ("necem ex ruina"). See also Hinckley, pp 101 f.

2466 Probably to be read as a headless line. The participle in -unge very seldom keeps its final -e within the verse, and the initial accent on I suits the sense.

2467 colde perhaps here in the sense of

"destructive" See NPT, VII, 3256, and n 2475 complexcoun, temperament, constitution The reference is primarily to the mixture of the humors See Gen Prol, I, 420 and n

2491 ff The description of the royal entrance and the fight is largely Chaucer's The rules for the tournament differ somewhat from those in the Teseide (where, for example, the use of the lance is forbidden) Nearly all the details can be paralleled in Froissart Dr Robertson (JEGP, XIV, 239 ff) draws illustrations especially from a tournament held by Richard II in 1390 See Froissart's account, Bk iv, ch 22-23 (tr Johnes, London, 1839, II, 474 ff) Such group-combats were of frequent occurrence the number of contestants, in those mentioned by Froissart, varying from three on a side to forty or sixty Sometimes they were fought "in the gyse of mortal bataille," as in the case of the famous contest, in 1361, between thirty Bretons and thirty Englishmen (See Dom P H Morice, Hist de Bretagne, Paris, 1750, I, 230, A de la Borderie, Hist de Bretagne, III, Rennes, 1899, pp 510 ff) In other instances, as in the Knight's Tale, provision was made to avoid the loss of life To the combats discussed or mentioned by Dr Robertson may be added the fight of thirty on a side at Perth in 1396 (R C MacLagan, The Perth Incident of 1396, etc, Edinburgh, 1905) A tournament of twenty against twenty was also proposed, but never held, by Eustace de Rentz in his challenge to John, Lord Wells, in 1333 (See Speculum, II, 107 ff) General information about the regulations of such contests is given in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, Bk iii, ch. I, §§ 16 ff For further comment on the realism of Chaucer's description see W H Schofield, Chivalry in English Literature, Cambridge, 1912, pp 38 ff

2503 Naikyng the speres, fastening the heads to the shafts

2504 Gaggyng, fitting the shields with straps (OF "guge")

2511 nakers, probably kettledrums, though the rest of the list are wind instruments Arabic has two words, "naqqarah," drum, and "naqir," also "naqir," horn, trumpet, but the English naker seems always to mean a kind of drum

2519 he and he He, this man and that, etc For the indefinite use of the pronoun of ll 2614 ff

2546 bitynge, piercing (without the modern figurative reference to the bite of a tooth)

2563-64 These lines, which correspond very closely to Boccaccio, Dr Robertson (p 236-37) holds to be out of keeping with the actual sentiment of the crowds at medieval tournaments

2568 For the contrast between sarge and more precious cloth of Chrétaen de Troyes, Erec (ed Foerster, Halle, 1909, p 185), 6667 ff, and the Roman de Fauvel by Gervais de Bus, ll 1923 ff (ed Långfors, SATF, 1914-19, p 72)

2601 ff This passage and the description of the battle of Actaun in LGW, 635 ff, may be compared for the striking use of alliteration with the combat in the romance of Ywain and Gawain, ll 3525 ff (ed Seiche, Oppeln, 1887, pp 89 ff) The device was doubtless suggested to both poets by the English alliterative poetry which flourished, particularly in the West Midland dialect, in the fourteenth century Chaucer skillfully suggests the effect of the meter, without reproducing its structure or conforming strictly to the rules of alliteration Good fourteenth-century examples of the verse-form are the romance of Gawain and the Green Knight, and Piers Plowman On metrical details see J Schipper, Hist of English Versification Oxf., 1910 ch iv Tennyson's use of the device in the Passing of Arthur was doubtless in imitation of Chaucer, though he had some acquaintance with the regular alliterative verse in early English

2602 "In go the spears full firmly into the rest", that is, they were couched for the attack

2621 dooth hem to reste, causes them to rest This is the usual meaning of the auxiliary do in Middle English

2624 and wrought his felawe wo, and done each other harm (lit and done his opponent harm) The construction is inconsequent

2626 Galgophey, probably the Vale of Gargaphia, where Actaeon was turned into a stag (Met, iii, 156)

2628 hunte, huntsman, as in 2018 above

2630 Belmarie, i e, Benmarin, Morocco, cf Gen Prol, I, 57, and the introductory note on the description of the Knight in Gen Prol

2636 Proverbial Cf l 3026 below, Tr, iii, 615, and n

2663-70 Not paralleled in the Teseide Mr Hinckley (p 109) suggests the influence of Aen, i, 223 ff

2675 Which a, what a, how great a Which commonly had the sense of "equals"

2681-82 These lines, which are omitted in the best MSS seem to be by Chaucer, though he may have intended to cancel them

2683 The reading and interpretation are both doubtful See Textual Notes Probably to be understood (with Skeat) "she was all his delight, as regarded his heart" Mr Liddell, reading in chiere, interprets "He saw no one else, just as he loved no one else" But the text is emended and the meaning seems forced

2685 The Fury here and in Tes (ix, 4) is borrowed from Statius (Theb, vi, 495 ff)

2689 Skeat cites from Walsingham's Historia Anglicana (ed Riley, London, 1863-64, II, 177) an account of an accident very similar to Arcete's, which occurred in Cambridge in 1388

2694 ff In the description of Arcete's death after his last interview with Emilia both Chaucer and Boccaccio may have had in mind Statius' account of the death of Atys in the presence of Ismene (Theb., viii, 636 ff.)

2710 That was thured his brest boon, whose breastbone was pierced. The use of a general relative "that," followed by a personal pronoun to define its exact relation (that his for whose, that him for whom, etc.), is still familiar in childish or illiterate speech. In Middle English the construction was regular. For other instances in Chaucer see MLT, II, 271 (with ellipsis of that), PrT, VII, 504, CLT, IV, 88 f., Tr, n, 318, HF, 76.

2712 charmes, incantations. These were regularly recognized among remedies in Chaucer's age.

2713 save, usually explained as "salvia," "sage" (so NED). But it was rather a decoction of herbs to be drunk. Skeat printed from MS Sloane 1314 a recipe for making it, and showed that the ingredients numbered from thirty to forty. He suggested further the derivation from Lat "sapa," defined by Ducange as "mustum coctum." See MLQ, II, 132-34, and cf. Schoffler, Beiträge zur Mittelleingischen Medizinliteratur, Sächsische Forschungsanstalt in Leipzig, III, 1, Halle, 1919, pp 104-08, Henslow, Medical Werkes of the 14th Century, London, 1899, pp 55, 126.

2731 leet crye, caused to be proclaimed. Leten, like don, was commonly used as a causative auxiliary.

2733 gree, rank, superiority (Lat "gradus")

2747 veyne-blood, drawing off the venous blood, venusynge, letting blood by means of a cupping glass. Mr Manly notes (ll 2743 ff.) that French physicians also use ventousing "to reduce congestion by setting up a counter-irritation, without blood-letting."

2749 ff. According to the old physiology there were three kinds of "virtues" (sometimes called "spirits") which controlled the processes of life: the natural, seated primarily in the liver, the vital, localized chiefly in the heart, and the animal, operating through the brain. The "virtus animalis," controlling the muscular motions, was the expulsive force, but in Arcite's case it was unable to expel the poison from (or for) the natural virtue. Professor Manly prefers the reading For, but Fro seems equally appropriate and has much better support in the printed MSS. In MS Gg, which has For, the whole line is corrupt.

On the doctrine of virtues see L. Thorndike, Hist. of Magic, New York, 1923, I 658. For a full discussion of the present passage, with citations from the medical authorities, see Curry, pp 139 ff. Mr Curry shows that astrology was also involved in that the "retentive virtue" which prevented the expulsion of the poison, was under the control of Saturn.

2759-60 Bohn (Hand-book of Proverbs London, 1882, p 124) cites as a proverb "If physic do not work, prepare for the kirk," but does not indicate how early it was current.

2761 See l 2187, n.

2775 In the Teseide (ix, 83) there is an actual marriage of Arcite to Emilia. But Chaucer's wyf may be merely a term of devotion.

2779 The phrase, which recurs in MLT, I, 3204, and Mel, VII, 1560, was a regular formula in both French and English. To the examples collected by Miss Hammond, English Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, p 471, may be added "soule sens compaignon," in the pastourelle of the Lamb and the Wolf (Bartsch, Altfr. Romanzen und Pastourelle, Leipzig, 1870, II, 122), "toz seus sanz compaignie," Gautier d'Aupais, ed E. Faraal, Paris, 1919, l 15, Jugement d'Amour, l 44, in Fabliaux et Contes, ed Barbazan et Meon, Paris, 1808, IV, 355.

2780 my swete foo, on the use of this and similar phrases in love-poetry see Tr, I, 411, n.

2801 And yet moreover, and still further. Tes, "ed ancor" (x, m) (Cf. Bo, u, pr 6, 85 ff., where moreover translates "ad haec," and Rom, 4493, where it corresponds to Fr "enseurquetout").

2803 The heart is represented as the seat of the intellect. This doctrine, taught by Empedocles, Aristotle, and others, was familiar but not undisputed. Galen, for example, assigned the rational faculty rather to the brain.

2805 ff. This observation on the destination of Arcite's soul replaces a rather long description by Boccaccio of its journey through the spheres (Tes, xi, 1 ff.). Chaucer used the Italian passage in his account of the death of Troilus (Tr, v, 1807-27). If the Troilus was written before the Knights Tale, the omission of the same description here would be easy to understand. It is quite possible, on the other hand, that the passage was rejected in the Knights Tale as unsuitable to the spirit of the poem, and was afterwards recalled by Chaucer and turned to account in the Troilus.

In any case, the flippancy of the remark about Arcite's soul should not be taken as evidence that Chaucer was doubtful either about human immortality in general or (as Dryden's rendering implies) about the destiny of virtuous pagans. It was characteristic of Chaucer, as of Horace, to seek in a jest relief from the strain of pathos.

2809 For the figure, which may be scriptural, Miss Landrum has cited II Cor v, 1.

2810 As I cam nevere, (there) where I never came. As is apparently not used by Chaucer in a causal sense.

2815 ther Mars his soule gye, "where (or there) may Mars guide his soul." For the use of ther as an expletive in optative clauses of blessing or cursing cf. FrT, III, 1561, MerchT, IV, 1308, Tr, iii, 947, 966, 1437, 1456.

v, 1787 The primary sense seems to have been "in that (or which) case," "under which circumstances," hence, "therewith," "wherewith," and perhaps "wherefore"

2835 A common sentiment in popular "keens" or laments Cf also Aen, ix, 481 ff., and see the comment of Professor F B Gummere, Beginnings of Poetry, New York, 1901, p 222, n 1

2837 Chaucer made a skillful shift of speeches at this point The Teseide says here simply that nobody could console Theseus or Egeus (xi, 9) Later on, when proposing the marriage of Palamon, Theseus expresses the commonplace sentiments attributed by Chaucer to Egeus (ll 2843-49). By transferring the remarks Chaucer created the character of the platitudinous Egeus Then, in their place, he gave Theseus, very appropriately, an elevated philosophical speech based upon Boethius (ll 2987 ff.)

2841 Cf l 3068 below, and for parallels see Haeckel, p 7, no 22, Skeat, EE Prov, p 95, no 225

2847 The familiar figure of the pilgrimage is perhaps scriptural See Heb xi, 13 f Cf also Truth, 20

2849 Professor Mather (edn., p 104) compares Seneca, Consolatio ad Marciam, 19, 5, but the sentiment is commonplace

2853-2962 The description of Arate's funeral is closely modelled upon Boccaccio, who followed in turn Statius's description of the funeral of Archemorus (Theb, vi) For an analysis of the two accounts see Wise, Influence of Statius on Chaucer, Baltimore, 1911, pp 107 ff It is not clear that Chaucer made much direct use here of Statius, but a few parallel passages are noted below

2858 There is a discrepancy between this statement and l 1862, where the theater is said to have been erected on the scene of the combat in the woods In the earlier passage Chaucer departed from Boccaccio Here, in the account of the pyre, he returned to his source

2863 ff With the tree-list here may be compared that given in PF, 176 ff See the note on that passage

2871 ff Professor Cook (Rom Rev IX 317) suggests that Boccaccio drew from observation in his description of the bier covered with the cloth of gold He compares the accounts of Petrarch's funeral (Rom Rev, VIII, 223)

2874 The white gloves were appropriate at the funeral of an unmarried person See Hazlitt, Fairies and Folklore, London, 1905 I, 249

2895 Turkish bows, also mentioned in Rom, 923 ff were regarded as especially good For mediæval references to them see the NED, s v Turkeys, and cf C M Webster, MLN, XLVII, 260

2902 manster strete, chief street. For this use of manster cf manster-tour, SqT, V, 226, mayster-toun, LGW, 1591, manster- temple, LGW, 1016, and the modern "master-key"

2921 Chaucer transfers to his account of the pyre the list of trees which Boccaccio gives, at greater length and with full characterization, in his description of the grove There is a similar list in Theb, vi, 98-106 For further examples see PF, 176, n

2925 ff There is perhaps an echo here of Theb, vi, 110 ff, as well as of the immediate source, Tes, xi, 25 Cf also Met, i, 192-93, 680-91

2933 Cf Theb, vi, 56 ff

2967 ff The account here differs from Boccaccio's in several details, notably in the reference to foreign alliances For the suggestion that Chaucer, in departing from his source, had in mind the marriage of Richard and Anne and the alliance of England with Bohemia and the Papal States, see Professor O F Emerson, Studies in Language and Literature in Celebration of the Seventieth Birthday of James Morgan Hart, N Y, 1910, pp 203 ff

2987 ff This passage, which replaces the speech transferred by Chaucer from Theseus to Egeus (ll 2843-49 ff), is based upon Boethius, i, m 8, iv, pr 6, m 6, and iii, pr 10 For the figure of the chain, or bond, cf also RR, 16785-88 It goes back ultimately to the story of Homer (Iiad, viii, 19)

3016 at ye, at a glance (lit "at eye")

3026 Cf l 2636, above, and n

3034 Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 44, no. 150

3041-42 This phrase, which occurs in Tes, xii, 11, was already proverbial Cf SqT, V, 593, and Tr, iv, 1586, also RR, 14015-16 It is as old as St Jerome, Adv Rufinum, iii, 2 (Migne, Pat Lat, XXIII, 458) See Haeckel, p 30, no 96, Skeat, EE Prov, pp 83 f, no 199

3084 kynges brother sone Professor Emerson, in the article just cited (p 248 f), argues that Chaucer used this term because of its applicability to Richard II

3089 "Mercy ought to prevail over justice" The lover is dependent upon the lady's grace, or unmerited favor Cf the similar phrase of Troilus to Criseyde (Tr, iii, 1282), also Haeckel, p 47, no 159, Skeat, EE Prov, p 77, no 184 The underlying idea is of course the Christian doctrine of grace In fact, the theology ritual, and polity of the Church were freely drawn upon in the mediæval literature of courtly love For general illustration of the tradition see W A Neilson, The Origins and Sources of the Court of Love, [Harv] Stud and Notes, 1899, pp 33 48, 137 220 ff Gower's Confessio Amantis is a manual of sins as expounded by the priest of Venus to a penitent lover Similarly Chaucer's Legend of Good Women is a legendary or martyrology of Cupid's Saints (The Servites Legende of Cupyde) For other instances of theological or ecclesiastical imagery in Chaucer see Tr, i, 15 ff, and n

The Miller's Prologue

The continuation of Fragment I from the Miller's Prologue through the Cook's fragment is a consecutive composition clearly written for the place it occupies after the Knights Tale. There is no definite evidence of its date, but it is probably not to be assigned to the beginning of the Canterbury period. The narrative skill of the Miller's Tale and the Reeve's Tale, their subject matter and tone, all point to the last decade of Chaucer's life. It has also been suggested that the Miller and the Reeve themselves, together with the rest of the group of pilgrims mentioned in the General Prologue (ll 542-44), were added to the company by way of afterthought and did not belong in the original scheme. But if the tales in question are not among the earliest there are also reasons for not putting them at the very end of Chaucer's activity. They seem to precede the so-called Marriage Group, and show little or no acquaintance with the literature which Chaucer there turned to account. And they must have been put in shape before the collection as a whole was arranged in very systematic order. For though the manuscripts show various stages of revision and rearrangement, Fragment I is found in all of them or at least in all the different classes. A reasonable conjecture for its date seems therefore to be the early nineties. See further the section on Chronology in the Introduction, and for detailed discussion, Miss Hammond, pp 254 ff.

3115 unbokede is the male, the bag is unbuckled, that is, the wares are displayed.

3119 "Something to match the Knights Tale with." On the order see Gen Prol, I, 791, n.

3120 for dronken, because of being drunken. See also l 4150. In both cases it is doubtful whether the reading should be for dronken or fordronken (AS "fordruncen"). Compare the similar question with regard to for old and for blak, KnT, I, 2142 ff, n.

3124 Palates toys, a voice like that of the ranting Pilate in the mystery plays.

3125 "By the arms, blood, and bones of Christ." See PardT, VI, 651, n.

3131 thraftyly, profitably. Cf thrafty tale, ML Headnote, II, 46, and ML Epil, II, 1165.

3134 a devel way, "originally an impatient strengthening of away — further intensified as a twenty devel way, etc. — In later times it appears to have been taken more vaguely, as an expression of impatience, and sometimes equals 'in the devil's name'" (NED, s v Devil). Here clearly imprecatory, cf also l 3713.

3139 mysspeke or seye. The prefix mys- goes in sense with both verbs. Cf the Mk Prol, VII, 1922.

3143 Cf Gen Prol, I, 586, also Rv Prol, I, 3911.

3152 The idea is proverbial. Cf also R.R., 9129 ff.

3154-56 Closely parallel to LGW Prol G, 276-78. It is uncertain which passage was written first. With both may be compared Deschamps, Miroir de Marriage 9097-9100.

3161 that I were con, i.e., a cuckold, or perhaps an ox (which, being horned, might stand for a cuckold).

3164 For the religious part of this counsel cf ll 3454, 3558 below.

3165 Goddess foysoun, God's plenty.

3170 M'athynketh, etc. "I regret that I must rehearse it here." Boccaccio makes a very similar apology for the Decamerone, in the Conclusione dell'Autore (ed Moutier, V, Florence, 1828, 148 f.). There also the author says he is not responsible, and the reader may skip. See R. K. Root, Engl Stud, XLIV, 1 ff., for a discussion of the passages. In spite of their close resemblance it seems unlikely that Chaucer knew the Decamerone. Cf the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the CT. For another parallel with that work see Rv Prol, I, 3878-79 and n.

3186 Proverbial, cf Haecel, p 36, no 122.

The Miller's Tale

On the date of the Miller's Tale see the introductory note on the Prologue just preceding.

The source is unknown. There are two episodes in the story that of the man who is made to fear a second flood, and that of the misdirected kiss. The second of these occurs separately in an Italian novel (no 29) of Masuccio (about 1470) and in several later versions, and the two are combined not only in tales of Hans Sachs and Schumann (sixteenth century) and other versions later than Chaucer, but also in a Middle Dutch "boerde" or jest of the fourteenth century. Chaucer doubtless found the combination in his source, which is likely to have been a French fabliau. The story is no 1361 in A. Aarne Types of the Folk-Tale, tr Stith Thompson (FF Com, no 74, Helsinki, 1928), pp 168-69. For discussion of the various analogues see especially Varnhagen, Angl, VII, Anz, 81 ff., Zupitza, Herrig's Arch, XCIV, 444-45 (with a genealogy of versions), Bolte, ed of Schumann's Nachtbuchlein, Stuttgart Lit Verein, CXCVII, Tübingen, 1893, p 384 f., and Barnouw, Zesde Nederlandsche Philologencongress (1910), 125 ff, and MLR, VII, 145 ff. Other references are given by Miss Hammond p 275, to which may be added Angl, XXVI, 273, Angl Beibl, XIII, 307, and XXVII, 61 f.

On the fabliau as a type see J. Bédier, Les Fabliaux, 4th ed., Paris, 1925. The two great French collections are those of Barbazan and Méon, 4 v., Paris, 1808, and Montaignon and Raynaud, 6 v., Paris, 1872-90. Chaucer's use of the genre is discussed by Professor W M Hart, PMLA, XXIII, 329 ff, and [Kittredge] Anniv Papers, Boston, 1913, pp 209 ff

3188 gnof, churl, fellow, a slang term of doubtful origin Skeat took it from Hebrew "ganav," thief (Ex xxii, 1), but the NED would connect it rather with the Germanic root represented by East Fris "knufe," lump, "gnuffig," coarse, rough, etc

3189 He is a carpenter like the Reeve on the pilgrimage, at whom the Müller's Tale is in a measure aimed 3193 a certeyn A certain number or quantity Cf Tr, iii, 596, CYT, VIII, 776 conclusiouns, propositions or problems Cf the Astrolabe, passim But here the reference is to astrological operations undertaken to obtain answers to horary questions In the course of the story Nicholas's skill is employed to predict a rain greater than "Noah's flood"

3199, 3272, 3356 ff The combination hende Nicholas is perhaps the nearest approach in Chaucer to the fixed epithet common in popular poetry and the classical epic The repetition of fals in ShpT (this false yuge) and Anel (fals Arcite) though similar, is not quite parallel

3204 Identical with KnT, I, 2779, and Mel, VII, 1560

3208 Almageste, Arabic "al majista," from Greek μεγιστη (for μεγιστη συνταξις, "greatest composition"), the name given to Ptolemy's astronomical treatise, and then applied loosely to works on astrology

3209 Hvs Astrolabe, see Chaucer's Treatise of the Astrolabe

3210 augrym stones, stones or counters marked with the numerals of algorism and intended for use upon an abacus "Algorism" (augrym) is derived from the name of Al-Khowārizmī, an Arab mathematician of the ninth century His treatise on numbers was translated into Latin, "De Numero Indorum," early in the twelfth century A second version was entitled "Liber Algorismi," and the name "algorism" came to be transferred to the science itself See MLN, XXVII, 206 ff, and for a full description of the counters and the method of their use see Florence A Yeldham, Story of Reckoning in the Middle Ages, London, 1926, pp 36 ff

3216 Angelus ad virginem, a hymn on the Annunciation beginning

Angelus ad virginem subintrans in con-claus,
Virginis formidinem demulcens inquit,
"Aue!"

It is printed in the Chaucer Society reprint of MS Harl, 7334, p 695 f

3217 the kynges note conjecturally identified by Ritson (Ancient Songs, London, 1829, I lx) with the song called "Kyng Villzamis Note" in the Complaint of Scotland (1549) by Edward Jones (Musical, Poetical, and Historical Relics of the Welsh Bards, London, 18-?, III, 1) with the Welsh air called Ton y

Brenhm, "The King's Tune" The music of the latter is published by Jones, who observes that the song known in the time of Henry VIII as "The King's Ballad" (printed in Chappell's Old English Popular Music, Woodrudge's revision, London 1893, I, 42-45) is entirely different from Ton y Brenhm Since "Pastame with good company" is mentioned in the Complaint of Scotland in the same list with "Kyng Villzamis Note," those two songs are not likely to have been identical, and there appears to be no evidence beyond the titles themselves for connecting either of them with Ton y Brenhm or with Chaucer

3225 The Oxford carpenter is an example of the familiar figure of the "senex amans" See the introductory note to the MerchT, Chaucer's most noteworthy treatment of the theme

3227 Catoun, Dionysius Cato, the supposed author of a collection of Latin maxims, usually called Disticha de Moribus ad Filium The collection was probably written in the third or fourth century and was widely current in the Middle Ages An English translation was published by Caxton For the original text see the edition of F Hauthal, Berlin 1869, Baehrens, Poetae Latini Minores, Leipzig, 1879, III, 205 ff, and G Nemethy, Budapest, 1895 The proverb here referred to is found, not in the Disticha proper, but in a supplement called Facetus It runs

Duc tibi prole parem morumque vigore venustam,

Si cum pace velis vitam deducere iustam
See C Schroeder, Der deutsche Facetus, Berlin, 1911 (Palaestra, LXXXVI), p 16

3235 barred, adorned with bars (cross stripes) Cf Gen Prol, I, 329

3248 pere-jonette, early-ripe pear Etymology uncertain, Skeat compared "gennritings" (jennetings) and suggested a connection with "Jean" because the fruit ripened about St John's Day, or with "jaune" because of its yellow color The former interpretation is supported by the French name "pomme de St Jean" See NED, s v Jenning

3251 perled with latoun, with pearls (knobs or buttons) made of the mixed metal called latoun

3256 The noble was a gold coin worth 6s 8d The principal London mint was in the Tower

3258 Cf Pard Prol, VI, 397

3261 bragot, bragget (Welsh "bragawd"), a drink made of ale and honey

3268 piggemye, pigsmie (lit "pig's eye"), the name of a flower, used as a term of endearment, as also in Elizabethan English In Essex it is applied to the cuckoo-flower, in some parts of America to trillium See Manly's note The form nye, neye for "eye" arose by false division of "an eye"

3274 There was an abbey of Augustinian canons at Oseney, near Oxford

3291 St Thomas à Becket

3299 "A clerk would have employed his time ill"

3318 The leather of his shoes was cut with designs resembling the windows in St Paul's. Such shoes were called in Latin "calcei fenestrati" (see Du Cange, s v calceus). For illustrations see F W Fairholt's Costume in England, 3d ed., London, 1885, II, 64 f

3322 poynets, tagged laces

3329 Cf Gen ProI, I, 125, and n. It is not clear that the reference to Oxford dancing, like that to Stratford French, is to be taken satirically

3332 On the quynnyble, a very high voice, an octave above the treble, see W Chappell, N & Q, Ser 4, VI, 117

3338 dangerous, fastidious? or sparing (Skeat)? Cf Gen ProI, I, 517, and n

3332 Some MSS have the marginal note "Unde Ovidius Ictibus agrestis." But the quotation has not been identified. Professor Lowes suggests (orally) that Jerome against Jovinian was really in Chaucer's mind

3334 He took the part of Herod in a mystery play

3337 Cf the phrase "to pipe in an ivy-leaf." See KnT, I, 1838, and n

3389 Cf Gen ProI, I, 706, and n

3392 f Gower's version, Conf Am, III, 1899 ff., is similar. Cf also the modern "Out of sight, out of mind", Skeat, EE Prov, p 95, no 226, Haecckel, p 48, no 166

3396 The figure is also proverbial

3427 "God forbid that he should die suddenly!"

3430 That hym, whom Cf KnT, I, 2710, and n

3441 It was apparently customary in Chaucer's time, as later, to leave an opening for the cat. See Angl Beibl, XXVII, 62, XIII, 307

3449 There was a priory of St Frideswide at Oxford

3451 The corrupt form astromye for astronomye is supported by the meter here and in l 3457. It was doubtless intended as a specimen of the carpenter's speech. Cf Novels flood, l 3818, also procutour, FrT, III, 1596 (not so clearly an error), perhaps cardynacle, Words of Host, VI, 313, and certainly the Host's Latin

3456 "That knows nothing but his creed"

3457 A familiar fable, related by Plato of Thales in the Theaetetus, 174 A, also in Diogenes Laertius, I, 34. Cf Aesop's Fables, ed James, Philadelphia, 1851, no 193, also Cento Novelle Antiche, no 38

3480-86 The nyght-spel, which is rough in meter and not wholly clear in sense, is based upon an actual popular charm. It refers to a prayer familiarly known as the White Paternoster. A French prose version (Petite Patenôtre Blanche) is quoted in the (apocryphal) Enchiridion Leonis Papae (Rome, 1660, p 145 f), and similar prayers have been collected in various languages

See besides Skeat's note, W J Thoms in the Folk Lore Record, I, 145 ff., E Carrington, ibid, II, 127 ff., D Hyde, Religious Songs of Connacht, London, 1906, I, 362 ff., and Rois in Ogan, Duanaire Gaedhlice Dublin 1921, pp 84, 115. The child's hymns

Matthew, Mark, Luke and John

Bless the bed that I lie on, and

Now I lay me down to sleep belong to the same general tradition

The significance of "St Peter's sister" is uncertain. In one of the English charms cited by Skeat the White Paternoster is associated with St Peter's brother. Skeat says that the person originally intended was St Peter's daughter, i e, St Petronilla, who was invoked to cure the quartan ague. But it looks as if the White Paternoster was itself personified as St Peter's brother or sister, perhaps because of its supposed power to admit the petitioner to heaven. For the personification of the regular Paternoster see the Anglo-Saxon Salomon and Saturnus, ed Kemble, London, 1848, p 136

With the use of "white" of the remarks on "White things" in Pater's Marius the Epicurean, ch n (London, 1897, pp 9 ff.) The "white Mass" was celebrated by candidates for the priesthood with an unconsecrated host, by way of rehearsal. Cf further F B Gummere, On the Symbolic Use of the Colors Black and White, Haverford Coll Stud no 1, 1889

On the form sewite see Gen ProI, I, 120, n

3485 veye, interpreted by Skeat as "evil spirits" (AS "wergum"). Thoms suggested a connection with "Wera, Werre," the name of an old witch or sorceress, the devil's grandam, and cited Kuhn and Schwartz, Norddeutsche Sagen, Marchen, und Gebrauche (see p 508). But all this is entirely uncertain. The reading mare, of Tyrwhitt and the early editors, has very little support

3507 "If you betray me, you shall go mad"

3512 hym, Christ. The Harrowing of Hell was one of the most familiar episodes in the Christian literature of the Middle Ages. On the source of the story, the apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus, see R P Wulcker, Das Evangelium Nicodem in der Abendlandischen Literatur, Paderborn, 1872, and of Wells, pp 326, 814, 1014, 1118, 1268, 1308. For a version contemporary with Chaucer, see Piers Plowman, C, xxi, 338 ff (B, xvii, 313 ff)

3515 On prognostication by the moon, or "the days of the moon," see W Farnham in Stud Phil, XX, 70 ff. Cf also MLT, II, 306 ff., and Tr, II, 74, and n. Sometimes recourse was had to astronomical calculations as to the position of the moon. Sometimes the mere day of the moon was considered as being favorable or unfavorable for certain undertakings. On mediæval moon-books, or lunaria, cf Thorndike, Magic and Exp

Science, I, 680 ff A rhymed guide to popular beliefs on the subject, dating probably from the beginning of the fifteenth century, is printed by Mr Farnham (pp 73 ff)

3518 Noe, Noah, the Vulgate form

3530 See Ecclesi xxvii, 19 (attributed not to Solomon but to Jesus son of Sirach) Cf Me', VII, 1003, Mercht, IV, 1485 f, Haeckel, p 28, no 90

3539 The reference is to the comic accounts of Noah's wife in the mystery plays See L T Smith, York Plays, Oxford, 1885, pp 45 ff

3550 swymme, float

3554 pryme, 9 A M

3598 Apparently a proverb of similar sense to "A word to the wise," of Haeckel, p 49, no 172

3611 affeccrown, rather "feeling," "impression" (the state of being affected) than "affection" in the modern sense

3624 Hus owene hand, with his own hand For the idiom of Gower, Conf Am, iv, 2436, v, 5455, it is perhaps a survival of an original instrumental

3637 a furlong way, see MLT, II, 557 n

3638 "Now say a Paternoster, and then mum's the word!"

3645 corfew-tyme probably 8 P M

3655 laudes, the service that follows nocturns According to l 3731 the night was still pitch-dark, at cockes crowe, l 3675, then refers to the first cock's crow, also in the dead of night Skeat quotes Tusser's Husbandrie, sect 74 (EDS, 1878, p 165) for the statement that cocks crow "At midnight, at three, and an hower ere day"

3682 Divination from itching hands or face, or burning ears is an old and common popular practice Examples are collected in Angl Beibl, XXVII, 61 f

3692 trewe love, probably leaves of herb-paris, which grew in the form of a fourfold true-love knot

3699 With the rime cynamome to me of pa me blame just below, also Gen Prol, I, 672 n

3708 Jakke, Jack, here an epithet of contempt

3709 "com pa me," come-kiss-me, perhaps the name or refrain of a song

3713 Cf l 3134 and n

3725 Cf R.R., 3403 f (Rom, 3674 ff), Ovid, Ars Amat, i, 669

3728 "Have done, come off (desist)" Cf FrT, III, 1602, n

3756 Proverbial Cf Skeat, EE Prov, p 96, no 227

3762 For evidence that blacksmiths actually worked at night in Chaucer's London see E P Kuhl, MLN, XXIX, 156

3770 vrstoot, meaning unknown Skeat conjectures "upon the move," "astir," and suggests a connection with Fr "virer," turn, and "tout," all

3771 sewite Note, St Neot (9th cent) On the form sewite see Gen Prol, I, 120 and n

3774 "He had more business on hand," — a proverbial phrase Cf Skeat, EE Prov, p 96, no 228

3782 foo, probably for foot, an intentional substitution, such as is common in oaths Cf for substitutions of another sort Mane Prol, IX, 9, Pars Prol, X, 29

3785 stele, handle

3818 Novelns flood, a confusion of "Noe" and "Nowel," Christmas See the note to l 3451

3821 "He did not stop to trade on the way" — probably a current expression Cf the French fabliau of Aloul, in Barbazan's ed, III, p 344, l 591 f

3822 celle, sill, flooring, a Kentish form

3823 floor, earth, ground

The Reeve's Prologue

3857 A recurring formula Cf MLT, II, 211, Mercht, IV, 1469, SqT, V 202, and R.R., 10683 f Fansler (p 121) adds Dante, Par, ii, 139 f

3860 Professor Manly notes that Oswald appears to have been a rare name in Norfolk in the fourteenth century

3864 So thee'k, so may I prosper The Northern vk, which Chaucer makes the Reeve use several times, was appropriate to a Norfolk man

3865 "To blear the eye" meant to hoodwink, to delude Cf l 4049, below, also ManeT, IX, 252, CyT, VIII, 730

3868 "I have left the pasture for the stable"

3869 "My gray head declares my age"

3876 Cf Luke, vi, 32

3877 nayl, nail, here figuratively for a hindrance

3878 The comparison, which occurs also in the Decameron, Introduction to the Fourth Day (ed Moutier, II, 146), was doubtless proverbial Cf Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, iv, 1, and the note in Dyce's ed of Webster's Works, London, 1859, p 270

3881-82 Cf Alanus de Insulis, Parabolae, cap 1, ll 61-62 (Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 582)

3882 "Still, in our old ashes, is fire raked"

3883 ff For the figure of Jean de Meun, Testament, 1734 ff (in R.R., ed Méon, Paris, 1814, IV)

3888 Proverbial, cf WB Prol, III 602, Skeat, EE Prov, pp 96 f, no 229

3891 ff Cf again Jean de Meun, Testament, 165 (not so close)

3901 "What does all this wisdom amount to?"

3902 What shul, why must

3904 Cf "Ex sutore medicus," Phaedrus, Fables, i, 14

3906 Depeford, Deptford half-wey pryme, half-past seven o'clock

3907 There may be some special point in the fling at Greenwich Chaucer was probably living there when he wrote the passage

3911 Cf Gen ProI, I, 586

3912 "To shove off force by force", glossed in MS E, "vum vi repellere," a well-known legal maxim. See F Montgomery, PQ X, 404, where an illustrative passage is quoted from the Digesta of Justinian (Paulus, ix, 2, 45, 4, ed Mommsen, Berlin, 1870, I, 291). For other legal maxims of ll 4180 ff below, also Intro to MLT, II, 43 f

3919 stalle small piece of a stick Cf Matt vi, 3 (Vulg "festucam"), Haeckel, p 17, no 54

The Reeve's Tale

On the date of the Reeve's Tale see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Miller's Prologue. The story is of the same type as the Miller's, and is probably derived from a lost fabliau. Several analogues have been found, the closest being a French fabliau preserved in two versions A, in a Berne MS, printed in Wright's Anecdota Literaria, London, 1844, pp 15 ff, in the Chaucer Society's Originals and Analogues, pp 93 ff, and in the Recueil des Fabliaux of Montaignon and Raynaud, 6 v, Paris, 1872-90, V, 83 ff, and B, in a Berlin MS, printed by H Varnhagen, Est, IX, 240 ff. Varnhagen took A to be the better representative of Chaucer's source. But for an argument that that source must have contained some features of B, see G Dempster, JEGP, XXIX, 473 ff. The cradle-trick was a favorite subject of popular tales. See A Aarne's Types of the Folk-Tale, tr S Thompson (FF Com, no 74, Helsinki, 1928), p 169, no 1363. For further discussion of the group, see Ebeling, Tobler Festschrift, Halle, 1895, pp 335 ff, W Stehmann, Die Mittelhochdeutsche Novelle vom Studentenabenteuer, Palaestra, LXVII, Berlin, 1909. To the examples cited by them may be added an Irish analogue printed in CZ, II, 156 ff, and Mr Robin Flower informs the editor that he has found a variant in the Blasket Islands.

3921 ff The topographical details here are apparently accurate. Skeat notes that a mill once stood at the spot, near Trumpington, now marked "Old Mills" on the ordnance-map, and that there was an old bridge about a quarter of a mile below it. The fen, l 4065, he suggests may be either Lingay Fen or a field between the Old Mills and the road.

Professor Manly (New Light, pp 97 ff) speculates on the reasons for Chaucer's choice of the neighborhood of Trumpington. Sir Roger de Trumpington, he notes, was in the King's household, and his wife, like Chaucer's (as Skeat pointed out, Oxf Chau, V, 116), was a lady-in-waiting to Constance of Padua. So Chaucer would easily have known about the locality. But it may have been chosen merely because it was near Cambridge and fitted the story of the clerks. An Oxford clerk figures in the companion story of the Miller, and both university towns were of interest to court circles in 1388, when the King's Council met at Oxford and Parliament at Cambridge.

3925 ff The description corresponds in some details with that of the Miller in the company, whom the Reeve wished to annoy. See Gen ProI, I, 545 ff.

3928 turne coppes, make wooden cups in a turning-lathe.

3931 poppere, dagger (from "poppen," thrust).

3933 Sheffield was famous then as now for its cutlery.

3935 piled, probably "bald, scanty." Cf Gen ProI, I, 627, n, and see NED, s v Piled. Professor Curry (pp 82 f) would interpret it here rather as "thick, bristly" (NED, s v Piled, ppl a 3 "Covered with pile, hair, or fur").

3936 market-betere, a quarrelsome frequenter of markets.

3938 abegge, a Kentish form of abygge, abye, a-buy, pay for.

3941 Symkyn, diminutive of Simond. The word is perhaps trisyllabic (Symekyn) here and in l 3959, though the MSS favor Symkyn. Skeat's reading deynous (like seyn in Gen ProI, I, 120) is very hard. See O F Emerson, Rom Rev, VIII, 74 f.

3943 She was an illegitimate daughter of the parson, who consequently paid money for her marriage. For information on concubinage among priests in the fourteenth century, see H C Lea, History of Sacerdotal Celibacy, 3d ed, N Y, 1907, I, 418 ff, H B Workman, John Wyclif, Oxford, 1926, II, 116-17.

3954 gyle (Fr "gute"), of uncertain meaning. In Old French, according to Godefroy, it referred to head-dress, in English it seems rather to mean some kind of robe or gown.

3963 smoterlich, besmirched, probably an allusion to her illegitimacy.

3964 dygne, dignified, haughty. The comparison, "dygne as ditch-water," was proverbial. Cf the Plowman's Crede, ed Skeat, EETS, 1867, I, 375.

3966 spare, show her consideration.

3972 a propre page, a fine-looking baby.

3980 "And made difficulties about her marriage." With the idiom of Gen ProI, I, 785.

3990 Soler Halle, another name for King's Hall, founded by Edward III in 1337 and afterward merged in Trinity College. It was named from its "solers" or sun-chambers. Professor Kuhl (PMLA, XXXVIII, 123) has noted that Soler Hall came into "prominence in 1388 when the members of Parliament (which met at Barnwell Abbey) were entertained at the College."

3999 made fare, made a to-do.

4001 craketh boost, talks loudly.

4014 Strother seems to refer to the place, no longer existent, which gave its name to the famous Northumbrian family. Castle

Strother, the family seat, was apparently near Kirknewton, about five miles west of Wooler. Whether Chaucer, in using the name "Aleyn," meant to make a joking allusion to the important historic personage Aleyn (or Alan) de Strother Constable of Roxburgh, can be only a matter of conjecture. Aleyn de Strother died in 1381, and had a son John Professor Manly, in his note on this passage, mentions various possible points of contact between the family and Chaucer. Cf also Miss Rackert, in TLS, 1928 p 707. She suggests that Chaucer not only knew these Northumbrians but even "mimicked their speech for an audience who also knew them."

4022 The speech of the students is full of Northern forms, though not consistently transposed into that dialect. The most important features to be noted are a for Chaucer's usual o (as in gas, swa, ham), indicative present in -es or -s, s for sh (sal), the forms thaur, ih (for to), ymel, heythen (for hennes), guf (for if) pu (for put), and the words boes lathes, fonne, hething, taa.

4026 Cf "Necessity knows no law" See Skeat EE Prov, p 97, no 231, Haeckel, p 29, no 95

4027 boes, behooves (Northern bos or būs) Chaucer apparently has in mind a proverb (perhaps in Latin), cf Haeckel, p 53

4029 hope expect

4030 werkes, aches (lit "works")

4054 Proverbial, cf Skeat, EE Prov, p 98, no 233, Haeckel, p 20, no 64

4055 The mare told the wolf, who wanted to buy her foal, that the price was written on her hind foot. When he tried to read it she kicked him. See Willem's Remaert, n, 3994 ff (ed Marten, Paderborn, 1874, pp 215 ff), Caxton's Esope, v, 10 (ed J Jacobs, London, 1889, I, 254, II, 157). Versions of the story are numerous and the central motif, that of the kick, has been combined with different incidents. For full discussion see P F Baum, MLN, XXXVII, 350 ff, and cf Aarne's Types of Folk-Tales, tr S Thompson (FF Com, no 74, Helsinki, 1928), p 27, no 47B.

4096 "Make his beard," another phrase for cheating. Cf WB Prol, III, 361, HF, 689-91, Haeckel, pp 39 f, no 135

4101 jossa, down here, warderere, look out behind

4127 Cutberd, St Cuthbert, bishop of Lindisfarne (d 686)

4129 f "A man must take what he finds or what he brings." Apparently another proverb. See Skeat, EE Prov, p 98, no 234, Haeckel, p 53

4134 Also proverbial, repeated in WB Prol, III, 415. Cf RR, 7518-20, also John of Salisbury, Polcraticus, v, 10 (ed Webb, 2 v, Oxford, 1909, I, 565). See Skeat, EE Prov, p 98 f, no 235, Haeckel, pp 9 f, no 32

4140 chalons, blankets, named from Chalons, France, the place of manufacture

4155 This figure is still current and needs no illustration

4172 wide fyr, erysipelas Cf "maus feus," RR, 7400, 8279, 10724

4174 the flour of y ending, the best (i e, the worst) of a bad end

4181 In the margin of MS Ha is noted the legal maxim "Qui in uno gravatur in alio debet relevari"

4194 upright, supine, a common meaning in early English

4210 A proverb like "Nothing venture, nothing have" See Thop VII, 831, and n, also Tr, iv, 600 ff, Skeat, EE Prov, pp 78 f, no 189, Haeckel, p 5, no 18

4233 the thrudde cok, near dawn (about five o'clock) See I 3655, n

4264 Cf ShapT, VII, 227

4286 A supposed relic of the true cross, known as the Rood of Bromeholm, was brought from the East to Norfolk in 1223. See Skeat's note to Piers Plowman B, v, 231

4287 In manus tuas, the beginning of the common religious formula, "Into thy hands I commend my spirit" See Luke xxiii, 46

4320-21 It was a common rhetorical convention to end a tale with a proverb or general idea, and in particular with a moral application. Cf, for other examples, ShapT, and MancT. In the present ending two proverbs are combined. For the first, "He must not expect good who does evil" see PrT, VII 632, and n, Haeckel, p 40, nos 137, 138, Skeat, EE Prov, p 99, no 236. Hym thar is impersonal, lit "it needs him" (from AS "theart"). For the second proverb, which is current in many languages, see Skeat, ibid, no 237, and cf especially RR, 7342 f (Rom, 5759), 7387, 11551 f, and Gower, Conf Am, vi, 1379 ff

The Cook's Prologue

There is an apparent inconsistency between the Cook's Prologue and that of the Manciple (IX, 1 f) where the Host speaks to the Cook as if he were then first taking notice of him, and asks him for a tale. It may be that Chaucer had in mind in the later passage the plan that each pilgrim should tell two tales on the outward journey. But it is more probable that he meant to cancel the existing Cook's fragment and not to introduce the Cook until near the end of the series. Possibly, too, the Manciple's Prologue was written before the continuation of Fragment I and represents an earlier plan. For the discussion of the question see F Tupper, PMLA, XXIX, 113 f, R K Root, Poetry of Chaucer, Boston, 1922, p 179 f

4331 From Ecclesi xi, 29

4336 Hogge, Hodge, a nickname for Roger Ware, in Hertfordshire. It has long been suspected that Roger of Ware was a real person, and Miss Rackert has recently reported the discovery of several records which confirm the suspicion. In a plea of debt, of 1377, there appears, in a list of attorneys, "Roger Ware of London, Cook." He may be the same person as 'Roger Knight de Ware, Cook,' named in another plea of debt of the year 1384-85. There is also a record of a Roger Ware, who sold wood to the King's household, but he may have been a different person. For detailed references to these documents see T.L.S., 1932, p. 761.

4345 There is a hunt here, as Professor Tupper notes (JEGP, XIV, 263 f.) of a clash of trades between cooks and hostlers. Originally innkeepers were permitted to furnish only lodging for man and beast, without food and drink. But apparently this rule was not in force in Southwark, and the City Cook might well have felt hostility to the Southwark innkeeper.

The pilgrims expected to need the services of the Cook along the road.

4347 Jakke of Dovere, usually explained as a twice-cooked pie. Skeat cites "Jak of Paris" in this sense, from Thomas More, Works, London, 1557, p. 675 E, and the French "jaques," which is so defined in Roquefort's Glossaire de la Langue Romane (Paris, 1808), s.v. "Jaquet", also the use of "Jack of Dover" for an old story or jest. It is possible (as Professor Kittredge has suggested to the editor) that the name was applied, like 'Poor John,' "John Dory," etc., to some kind of fish. In any case the reference seems to be to warmed-over food. For evidence that in 1287-89 cooks and pasty-makers warmed up pies and meats on the second and third days see Tancock, in N & Q, Ser. 8, III, 366, quoting Hudson Leet Jurisdiction in Norwich (Selden Soc. no. 5, London, 1891, p. 13). Brusendorf's suggestion (p. 480) that Jakke of Dovere means 'fool' and that that in the following line means "what" ("that wench"), is altogether improbable.

4351 stubbell goos fatted goose, so called because fed on stubble.

4355 Proverbial, cf. Mk Prol, VII, 1964, Haeckel p. 86, nos. 120, 121, Skeat, EE Prov, p. 107, no. 253.

4357 "A true jest is a bad jest." Cf. "True jest is no jest," "Sooth boord is no boord," etc., Skeat, EE Prov, p. 100, no. 238, Haeckel, pp. 36 f., no. 123. Chaucer may have known the proverb in Flemish form. The adjective quaad corresponds to Flem. "quaad," Du. "kwaad," whereas the usual Middle English form was "cwed" (from AS "cwead"). But of quade year, Pr Prol, VII, 438. Another Flemish proverb is quoted in MancT, IX, 349-50. Not only were there many Flemings in London, from whom Chaucer could have learned their sayings, but his own wife was the daughter of a Flemish knight.

4358 The name of Herry Bally, the host, corresponds to that of an actual innkeeper of Southwark, referred to as "Henri Bayhff, Ostyler," in the Subsidy Rolls, 4 Rich. II (1380-81). For further information about him see Gen. Prol, I, 751 ff., n.

The Cook's Tale

The Cook's fragment is long enough to show that the tale was to be of the same general type as the Miller's and the Reeve's, but too short to disclose the plot or, consequently, the source. On certain spurious endings found in a few MSS and early editions see Miss Hammond pp. 276-77.

A number of MSS have inserted after the Cook's Tale the Tale of Gamelyn, also ascribed to the Cook. It is printed from six MSS by the Chaucer Society as an appendix to Group A (Fragment I) of the Six-Text Edition, and by Skeat, Oxf. Chau, IV, 645 ff. For references to other editions see Miss Hammond, pp. 425-26. The general plot is the "expulsion and return" story which underlies As You Like It. The piece is certainly not by Chaucer, though he may very well have intended to work it over for one of the pilgrims. If so, it would have been more appropriate to the Yeoman than to the Cook.

4363 Cf. Gen. Prol, I, 207.

4377 Chepe, Cheapside, which was a favorite scene of festivals and processions. For an account of "ridings" processions, see Wm. Kelly, Notices of Leicester, London, 1865, pp. 38 ff., V. Herbert, Hist. of the Twelve Great Livery Companies, London, 1834, I, 90 ff.

4383 setten sterene, made an appointment. Cf. KvT, I, 1524.

4397 "Reveling and honesty, in a man of low rank, are always angry with each other," i.e., incompatible.

4402 Disorderly persons, when carried off to prison, were preceded by minstrels, to proclaim their disgrace. See the Liber Albus, Munimenta Gildhallae Londinensis, Rolls Series, 1859-62, I, 459 f. (tr., III, 180 f.).

4404 his papyr, perhaps his account book.

4406 f. The idea is familiar. For various forms of the proverb of Hazlitt's Eng. Proverbs, London, 1907, p. 436, Düringsfeld, Sprichwörter, no. 354 (Leipzig, 1872-75, I, 178), Dan. Michel's Ayenbite of Inwyrt (ed. Morris EETS, 1866), p. 205, Haeckel, p. 23, no. 74.

4415 Proverbial, cf. Haeckel, p. 37, no. 105.

4417 brybe, to steal.

FRAGMENT II

The Introduction to the Man of Law's Tale

The Man of Law's Introduction and Tale regularly stand in the manuscripts after the unfinished Fragment I. The time, according to the Host's explicit statement, was ten o'clock on the morning of April 13, which is usually taken to be the second day of the pilgrimage. For the conjecture that it was the first day see Koch, The Chron of Chaucer's Writings, pp 56-57, and Miss Hammond, pp 258, 281 ff. Compare also the references on the length of the pilgrimage in the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Canterbury Tales. In view of the incomplete condition of the Canterbury Tales, the satisfactory settlement of such questions is hardly possible.

Several puzzling problems are raised by the Introduction.

It contains a list of the heroines celebrated in the Legend of Good Women. But eight of the women named are not actually treated in the Legend and two whose story is there told (Cleopatra and Phylomela) are not mentioned by the Man of Law. Various attempts have been made to construct from the passage, with the aid of the ballade in the Prologue to the Legend, Chaucer's complete plan for the work. See particularly Skeat's note, Oxf Chau, V, 137. The conclusions are doubtful, but one thing seems clear when Chaucer wrote the Man of Law's Introduction he planned to continue working on the Legend.

In lines 77 ff the Man of Law is made to condemn such tales of incest as those of Canace and Apollonius of Tyre. Both stories are told in the Confessio Amantis, and Chaucer very probably intended the passage as a fling at Gower. It has even been inferred that Gower took offense at the criticism, and consequently canceled a compliment to Chaucer which stood in the first recension of the Epilogue to the Confessio. But there is no positive evidence of this estrangement of the two poets. For a summary of opinions on the subject, with references, see Miss Hammond, pp 278 ff, and Miss M. Schlauch, Chaucer's Constance and Accused Queens, p 132. Cf also LGW Prol G, 315, n. If the passage in the Man of Law's Introduction is correctly interpreted as an allusion to Gower, it was probably not written much before 1390, generally accepted as the year of the publication of the Confessio. The date 1390 is not positive, however, for the "first edition" of the Confessio. See H. Spies, ESSt, XXXII, 259. Some allowance must also be made for the possibility that Chaucer had personal knowledge of Gower's work before it was put into general circulation.

The Man of Law's declaration, I speke in prose (l. 96), probably indicates that the Introduction was not written to precede the Tale of Constance. Skeat's explanation, that it means "I speak usually, customarily, in prose," is wholly unlikely. The statement is rather to be understood like the similar remarks in the Monk's Prologue, the Prologue to Melibee, and the Parson's Prologue, and was almost certainly intended to introduce a prose tale. Both the Melibee and the translation of Innocent's De Contemptu Mundi have been suggested as tales that might have been at one time meant for the Man of Law. See especially Lowes PMLA, XX, 795 f, Miss Hammond, p 280 (with further references), and in support of the assignment of the Constance to the Man of Law, Dr E. C. Knowlton, JEGP XXIII, 83 ff.

2 The artificial day is the time while the sun is above the horizon, as distinguished from the natural day of twenty-four hours. See the Astr, II, §7, where it is explained how "to know the arch of the day." In the present instance the reckoning is as follows. On April 18 the sun was in the 6th degree of Taurus, which crossed the horizon at 22° north of the east point, or 112° from the South. The middle of this distance is the 56th degree, over which the sun would seem to stand at twenty minutes past nine. The Host's second observation was that the sun's altitude was 45°, a point which it reached at exactly two minutes before ten. See Brae's calculations in his edition of the Astrolabe, London, 1870, pp 68 ff.

20 These observations on the passage of time, often with the comparison to the river, were commonplace or even proverbial. Cf CIT, IV, 118 f, also RR, 361 ff (Rom, 369 ff), Ovid, Met, xv, 179 ff, Ars Am, II, 62 ff, Seneca, Ep, I, 1, 1, XIX, viii, 32, and the Latin proverb, "Transit ut aqua fluens tempus et hora ruens."

25 ff The comparison with virginity was also familiar. See St. Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologica, III, 89, 3, 1 (Opera, Rome, 1882-1930, XII, 329). That it was still conventional in the seventeenth century appears from Francis Beaumont's Elegy on the Lady Markham, ll 1 ff (Chalmers' Eng Poets, London, 1810 VI, 183).

30 Malkyn, a wanton woman (proverbial).

37 Acquithen yow, acquit, absolve yourself. The Host speaks, and the Man of Law replies, in legal terms. While the slight use of technical language here would not constitute proof of Chaucer's legal knowledge, it is nevertheless interesting in view of the tradition, recently defended, that he studied at the Inns of Court. See the Biographical Introduction.

39 depardeuz, in God's name (Fr "de par," a double preposition).

41 Brehte is dette is proverbial in various languages. Cf O'Rahilly, Miscellany of Irish Proverbs, Dublin, 1922, p 81, H. E. Rollins, Paradise of Dainty Devices, Harv Univ Press, 1927, p 192, Skeat, EE Prov., p 101, no 241, Haecckel, p 15, no 48.

43 ff A legal maxim, which survives as a proverb in various languages. Cf "Patere legem quam ipse tulit." See also Haecckel, p 24, no 78, Skeat, EE Prov, pp 101 f, no 242. By oure text Chaucer appears to mean some actual textbook of the lawyers, and the Digesta of Justinian states the principle in words closely resembling his "Quod quisque iuris in alterum statuerit, ut ipse eodem iure utatur" (ii, 2, rubric, ed Mommsen, Berlin, 1870, I, 42)

46 thrifty, profitable Cf Mul Prol I, 3131, ML Epil, II, 1165, WB Prol, III 238, and for a different extension of the meaning, Tr 1, 275, and n

47 ff It has been suggested that these lines were written to occupy a place after Chaucer's failure in Sir Thopas. But, as Skeat notes, there are remarks in the same strain in Gen Prol, I, 746 and in HF, 621

49 Haih, Nath (or Bu for That in l 47) might be expected. But the illogical construction is probably to be regarded as an idiom of Tr, 1, 456 f, also Rom 3774, where the MS reads wylle, and Rom, 4764

54 made of mencoun, made mention of, cf Gen Prol, I, 791, and n

55 Epristeles, Ovid's Heroides

57 Cey and Alcion. The story of Cey and Alcion is told in the Book of the Duchess. From the form of the title here and in Lydgate's list in the Falls of Princes (1, 304) it has been inferred, though it does not necessarily follow, that the episode once constituted an independent poem

61 the Seintes Legende of Cupide, the Legend of Good Women, which was conceived as a legendary or martyrology of the saints of the God of Love. This is one of the numerous instances of the treatment of Love in theological or ecclesiastical terms. See KnT, I, 3089, n

63 Babilan Tesbee, Babylonian Thuseb

64 The swerd of Dido, the sword with which she killed herself. See LGW, 1351, and Aen, iv, 646

65 tree, either the tree on which Phyllis hanged herself, or that into which she was transformed. See LGW, 2485, Gower, Conf Am, iv, 856 ff, 866 f

66-67 The plerinte of Dianre, etc., the epistles of Deianira, Hermione, Aradne, and Hypsipyle, in Ovid's Heroides

68 The bareyne yle, said to have been Naxos on which Aradne was abandoned. See LGW, 2163, Her, x, 59

71 Braxseyde, Briseis (acc Briseida). Briseis was the heroine of the Troilus story in the Roman de Troie of Benoit de Ste Maure. Chaucer followed Boccaccio in making her Criseyde. The present passage shows that he had it in mind to tell the ancient story of Briseis in LGW

72-74 Possibly the idea that the children were hanged was derived by Chaucer from Jean de Meun's statement that Medea strangled them ("estragla," RR, 13259). No such incident is mentioned in the Legend of Medea (LGW, 1580 ff), which has consequently been dated by some scholars after the Man of Law's Introduction. See Lounsbury, Studies, I, 418, and Root, PMLA, XXIV, 124 ff, XXV, 228 ff. But the inference is by no means secure. See Kittredge, PMLA, XXIV, 343 ff

75 Alceste, Alcestis. Her story is not in the Heroides. Chaucer sketches it briefly in the Prologue to the LGW (G 499 ff, F 511 ff), and probably meant to devote to it a separate legend

78 Canace, Canace. See Heroides xi, and Conf Am, iii 143 ff. On the probable allusion to Gower, see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on Fragment II

81 Tyro Apollonius, Apollonius of Tyre (Apollonius de Tyro). See Conf Am, viii 271 ff, also Gesta Romanorum, no clui. The specific detail mentioned in l 85 does not appear in Gower, and the editor has not found it in any other version of the Apollonius. Professor Tatlock (Dev and Chron p 173 n) suggests that Chaucer may have had a confused recollection of a horrible touch in the original Latin version (ed Riese, Leipzig, 1871, pp 2-3) or of an episode in Gower's Canace story (Conf Am, iii, 307 ff). The former passage would sufficiently explain Chaucer's line. In fact it is used by E Klebs (Die Erzählung von Apollonius aus Tyrus, Berlin 1899, pp 471 f) as evidence that Chaucer referred definitely to the Latin version of the story

89 if that I may, so far as it is in my power, hence, if I can help it. Cf FranklT, V, 1418 Rom, 3099, also RR, 626 ("se je puis"), and for the same negative implication of Henry V, Prol (l 39) to Act ii, also the formula though we (men, etc) hadde us sworn, KnT, I, 1089, Tr, iv, 976. Other parallels are cited by Kittredge, [Hary] Stud and Notes, I, 20

92 Pierides, the Muses, so named from Pieria, their birthplace, or Pierus, their father. But Chaucer has in mind those other Pierides, daughters of King Pierus of Emathia, who contended with the Muses and were changed into magpies. See Ovid, Met, v, 302

93 Metamorphosios, genitive (Metamorphoseos), dependent upon Liber, Libri, in the full title. Strictly speaking, the form should be Metamorphoseon, plural, but the singular was in constant use. See E F Shannon, Chaucer and the Rom Poets Cambridge, Mass, 1929, pp 307 ff. For the use of the construction in citations of further Eneydos, NPT, VII 3359, Judicium, MkT, VII, 2046, Argonauticon, LGW, 1457

95 with havebake, with plain fare (lit "baked haw")

96 I speke in prose. See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on Fragment II

The Man of Law's Prologue

The Man of Law's Prologue, as far as line 121, is practically a paraphrase of Pope Innocent's De Contemptu Mundi, 1, 16 (Migne, Pat Lat, CXXVII, 708 f). Passages from the same work are used in the Man of Law's Tale, ll 421 ff, 771 ff, 925 ff, and 1132 ff. If, as seems probable, Chaucer made his translation from Innocent between 1386 and 1394 (1 e, between the two Prologues to the Legend), the use of material here would favor the assignment of the Man of Law's Prologue and Tale to the same interval

The connection between the end of the Prologue and the Tale is rather far-fetched, and looks like an afterthought. If the translation from Innocent (in prose?) was originally intended to be the Man of Law's Tale (as Lowes has argued, PMLA, XX, 794 ff.), the Poverty stanzas may have been written to introduce it and afterwards patched up to fit the tale of Constance. For the suggestion that the impatient Poverty of the Prologue was a vice especially associated with lawyers, see F. Tupper, PMLA, XXIX, 118, N.Y. Nation, XCIX, 41. Voluntary Poverty was differently regarded, and is praised at length in the Wife of Bath's Tale, III, 1177-1206. Mr. Tupper has also suggested that Chaucer intended the tale of Constance itself as an exposure of Detraction (Envy). See PMLA, XXIX, 110 ff., and of the comments on his general theory in the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Canterbury Tales.

The significance of the astrological element in the story is well set forth by Professor Curry (pp 164 ff.), though his detailed explanations are open to question.

99 poverté, pronounced poverté to rime with herte

103 For the rime of two words with one (woundid wounde had) cf. Gen. Prolog., I, 523, n.

114 From Jesus son of Sirach, Ecclesiasticus xl, 28, cf. Méi, VII, 1571 f., Haeckel, p. 44, nos 151, 152.

115 Prov. xiv, 20

118 Prov. xv, 15 (Vulg., "Omnes dies pauperum malum")

120 Cf. Prov. xix, 7, Ovid, Tristia, I, 9, 5, and for further parallels, Skeat, EE Prov., p. 102, no 243, Haeckel, p. 8, no 27.

123 as in this cas, in respect to this matter (a rime-tag)

124 f. ambes as, the double ace. The allusion is apparently to the game of hazard in which the double ace is always a losing cast and the sys cynk (a six and a five) often a winning one. Skeat briefly summarizes the rules of the game, as given in the English Cyclopædia, suppl. vol. div. Arts and Sciences. The caster "calls a main," or names one of the numbers five, six, seven, eight, or nine — most commonly seven. "If he then throws either seven or eleven (Chaucer's sys cynk) he wins, if he throws aces (Chaucer's ambes as), or deuce-ace (two and one), or double sixes, he loses. If he throws some other number, that number is called the caster's chawnce, and he goes on playing till either the main or the chance turns up. In the first case he loses, in the second he wins." This explains the technical meaning of chawnce in l. 125 and in PardT, VI, 653.

The Man of Law's Tale

In the opinion of Skeat and other commentators the tale of Constance was first written before the Canterbury period, and afterwards revised and adapted for its place in the series. The moral and philosophical comments, according to this view, were added in revision. But there is no real evidence that any part of the text was added or interpolated, and such positive clues as have been detected all point to a rather late date (about 1390) for the composition of the whole poem. The moralizing passages are largely based on the De Contemptu Mundi, with the translation of which Chaucer was probably occupied between 1386 and 1394. There are apparently allusions, in the Tale as well as in the Introduction, to Gower's Confessio Amantis, which was not published till 1390. And the fact that in the first Prologue to the Legend of Good Women, written in or about 1386, the tale of Constance is not mentioned among Chaucer's works in defense of women also implies — though the argument should not be pressed too seriously — that the story was not yet written. For a detailed discussion of the evidence see Tatlock, Dev and Chron., pp. 172 ff.

The primary source of the tale is in the Anglo-Norman Chronicle of Nicholas Trivet, written about 1335 (printed in the Originals and Analogues, Ch. Soc., 1872, pp. 2 ff.). This was also the source of Gower's version of the story in the Confessio Amantis, II, 587 ff. It seems probable, as noted above in the discussion of the date, that Chaucer made some use of Gower's tale. But on this point there is difference of opinion. See, besides Tatlock, cited above, Skeat, Oxf. Chaucer, III, 409 ff.; Lucke, Angl., XIV, 77 ff.; Macaulay, Works of Gower, Oxford, 1899-1902, II, 483, and M. Schlauch, Chaucer's Constance and Accused Queens, New York, 1927, pp. 132 ff. Aside from the three versions mentioned, which stand in close literary relation, there are numerous tales which deal with the same general situation. Of the Constance saga, so called, alone there have been collected many versions, popular or literary, and they constitute only one group in the larger cycle of stories of the calumniated wife. There is an excellent account of the general type in Miss Schlauch's work, cited above, see also O. Siefken, Das Geduldige Weib in der Englischen Literatur bis auf Shakspeare, Rathenow, 1903. For the Constance group in particular see H. Suchier, Œuvres de Philippe de Beaumanoir, Paris, 1884, I, xxii ff.; A. B. Gough, The Constance Saga, Palaestra, XXIII, Berlin, 1902; E. Rickert, MP, II, 355 ff. To the versions, over threescore in number, discussed by Suchier and Gough, many other analogues, complete or partial, have been added by H. Daumling, Studie über den Typus des "Madchens ohne Hände" innerhalb des Konstanzezyklus, München, 1912, and Bolte-Polivka, Anmerkungen zu den Kinder- u. Hausmärchen, I, Leipzig, 1913, No. 31. Das Mädchen ohne Hände. The distribution and ultimate origin of the saga is discussed by J Schick, Die Urquelle der Offa-Konstanze-Saga, in Britannica, Festschrift für Max Foerster, Leipzig, 1929, pp 31 ff Professor Schick concludes that the story certainly did not originate in England, as held by Gough and others, and probably not in India, as maintained by Clouston (Orig and Anal, p 414) and Cosquin (Contes populaires de Lorraine, Paris, 1886, II, 323 ff) He argues that it is closely related to the Crescentia saga, and that both cycles have their ultimate roots in the romantic part of the Clementine Recognitions Cf further S Teubert, Crescentia-Studien, Halle, 1916

134 Surrye, Syria, Serazine in Trivet
136 spicerye, spices, oriental goods Manly, p 632, notes that the term included foreign fruits, cloths, and other products

144 message, messenger (as often)

145 Here, and in l 255, we may read either this ende (contracting this is) or this is th' ende

151 Gower gives the emperor's name as Tiberius Constantine He was actually emperor at Constantinople, not Rome, in 578, and was succeeded, in 582, by Maurice of Cappadocia, to whom he gave his daughter Constantina in marriage Since Chaucer found the name Custance in his sources, it is not necessary to assume that he intended any special compliment to Constance of Padilla, the second wife of John of Gaunt

171 han donn fraught, have caused (to be) laden See KnT, I, 1913, n

181 leere, learn, properly leeren (AS "læran"), should mean "teach" and lernen (AS "leorman"), "learn," but the two words are freely confused in Middle English

185 cerously, minutely, in detail (one meaning of Low Latin "serose")

197 ff From the Megacosmos of Bernardus Sylvester (twelfth century) Four lines of the Latin are quoted in the margins of several MSS

201 On the death of Turnus see Aen, xii, 901 ff

211 Cf Rv Prol, I, 3857, and n

224 Mahom, Mahomet, called Makomete below Note also the common noun "maumet," idol, derived from the name Mahomet is not mentioned in Trivet, and his introduction by Chaucer (as Skeat notes) is an anachronism He was but twelve years old in 582

236 maumettre, very likely "idolatry" The medieval Christians held the Mahometans to be idolaters — quite unjustly, since the Koran expressly condemns the practice

243 founden, provided (pp)

261 On the use of I seye, I mene, and similar expressions in early English poetry, see Miss E P Hammond, Engl Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, Durham, N C, 1927, p 447 Sometimes they seem to serve merely for emphatic repetition, sometimes they are rather a kind of scholastic formula (like Dante's use of "dico" in Inf, iv, 66, and elsewhere)

271 "Whose character she does not know" The general relative that is omitted On the full construction see KnT, I, 2710, n

273-87 Not in Trivet

277 "Except Christ on high"

286 Cf Gen, m 16

289 Ihon, cf LGW, 936, n

295-315 Here, as in the Legend of Hypermetra (LGW, 2576 ff), Chaucer introduces an astrological explanation not taken from the source of his story In the margin of MS E, ll 295 ff, is a reference to Ptholomeus lib I, cap 8 (i e, the Almagest) But the ideas were of course familiar The passage perhaps contains reminiscences of Boethius, i, met 5, and iv, met 1 For extended accounts of the old astronomy see the articles "Astronomy, History of" and "Ptolemy" in the Encyclopædia Britannica, 11th ed (in the latter an analysis of the Almagest) There is also a good description of the Ptolemaic universe in Masson, Milton's Poetical Works, 3 v, London, 1874, I, 89 ff The earth was conceived as a fixed globe at the center of a series of concentric spheres The ninth, or outermost, sphere was called the Primum Mobile (first moving) Next within it came the sphere of the Fixed Stars, and within that successively those of the seven planets The Primum Mobile was held to have a swift diurnal motion from east to west, which accounted for the daily apparent revolution of the sun in a direction opposite to that of its "natural" motion along the zodiac The revolution of the Primum Mobile carried everything with it, and was thus responsible for the unfavorable position of Mars at the time of Constance's marriage

The astrological situation — if Chaucer himself had an exact one in mind — is not wholly clear It has even been discussed whether the calculation was intended as an election or a nativity But the general sense of the passage is plainly that the position of the stars was unfavorable to Constance's voyage and marriage If an election had been made by an astrologer, it would have revealed the conditions described, and of course an important element in the calculation would have been the position of the stars at the birth of Constance

Professor Curry (pp 172 ff), following Skeat's note, worked out a detailed explanation of the passage on the theory that the unfavorable astrological situation was due to the individual motions of the planets His main points are that the horoscope is in Aries, Mars is cadent in Scorpio, the eighth house, and hence an unfavorable sign succedent, Luna is also cadent, and in conjunction with Mars in Scorpio Then he shows by citation from numerous authorities that a nativity in Aries predestinates a "rather checkered and precarious life", that the presence of Scorpio in the eighth house is unfavorable, that the pos-

tion of the Moon in Scorpio, in conjunction with Mars, was peculiarly unfortunate for marriage or for a journey, and that the presence of Mars in his darker mansion, Scorpio, presaged definite misfortune.

Although Professor Curry has no difficulty in making his construction fit Constance's case, Mr Manly (in his notes) raises the valid objection that Chaucer explicitly attributes the astrological situation to the Primum Mobile. He argues, therefore, that the reference is to the "mundane houses" (fixed divisions of the firmament), and not to the "mansions" of the planets in the zodiacal signs. He concludes that Mars, the lord of the ascendant sign Aries, has been thrust from his angle, "probably the ascendant itself, into the darkest of the mundane houses, a cadent (perhaps the twelfth house, which adjoined the ascendant)." The Moon is also said to have been forced (weyved, l 308), apparently by the Primum Mobile, into a position where it is not "in reception" with a favorable planet, that is (as Mr Manly explains), "that none of the planets which have 'dignities' where she is situated are situated where she has any 'dignity'."

For further criticism of Mr Curry's theory see J T Curtiss, JEGP, XXVI, 24 ff.

In l 295 the punctuation (O firste moeynyng!) follows Manly, who is probably right in taking the phrase to be substantival (Primum Mobile) rather than adjectival.

302 toruous, a term applied to the six signs nearest the point of the vernal equinox, so called because they ascend more obliquely than the other signs. The reference here is probably to Aries, of which Mars was the "lord."

305 atazir, from Arabic "at-ta'thir" ("al ta'thir," influence, cf "athar," mark, trace), Sp, OF "atazir," commonly Latinized "athazir." In the astrological treatises the term is sometimes used to denote the process of calculating planetary positions and influences, sometimes for the influences, and sometimes, apparently, for the particular planet concerned. Chaucer seems to refer to Mars as atazir as in this cas. For citations from the authorities see Curry, pp 182 ff, and Manly's note.

312 eleccion, an astrological term, meaning the choice of a favorable time for an undertaking. Chaucer appears to have had in mind a particular work, the Liber Electionum of Zael, from which a quotation is copied in the margin of MSS El and Hg Zael, or Zael, Judeaus (Sahl ben Bishr ben Habib) was an astronomer in the service of the governor of Chorazân in the early ninth century. See H Suter, Die Mathematiker und Astronomen der Araber (Suppl to Zt für Math und Physik, Leipzig, XLV, 1900), pp 15 f.

314 route, the "epoch" from which a reckoning is made. The exact moment of the princess's birth being known, there was absolutely no excuse for the Emperor's negligence. 332 Alcaron, the Koran, formerly called in English "the Alcoran," with retention of the Arabic article "al."

352 Coold water, this contemptuous jest about baptism is not in Trivet.

358 Here and elsewhere in the Canterbury Tales is a marginal note auctor in many MSS. See, for example, ll 925 ff, below, and CIT, IV, 995 ff. This is not to be taken as indicating that Chaucer meant to intervene as author in the discourse of the Man of Law and other pilgrims. The note sometimes occurs against passages added by Chaucer to his primary sources. But it may be doubted whether the scribes, as has been supposed, meant to designate such additions. Their purpose seems rather to have been simply to call attention to sententious or otherwise noteworthy utterances — to such quotable texts as were regularly called auctoritates. See WB Prol, III, 1, and n.

358 f The comparison of the sowdanesse to Semiramis may be due (as Lowes has suggested, MP, XIV, 706 ff) to Dante's Inf, v, 58-60.

360 The serpent who tempted Eve in Eden is sometimes described as having a woman's head. See Comestor, Historia Scholastica, Liber Genesis, cap xxi (with a reference to Bede).

361 See also l 634, below. For the chaunting of the fallen angels there is scriptural authority in II Peter ii, 4, Jude 6, and Rev xx, 1-2. But the popular conception of the bound Satan was probably influenced rather by the apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus (See B H Cowper, Apocryphal Gospels, 5th ed., London, 1881, p 307). On the doctrine in general much information will be found in S Bugge's Studier over de Nordiske Gude-og Heltesagns Oprindelse, Christiania, 1881, I, 53 ff, and the review by George Stephens in Mémoires des Antiquaires du Nord, 1873-83, pp 331 ff, 1884, 1 ff. A few references to medieval treatments of the subject are given by T Spencer in Speculum, II, 187 f.

376 lay (Fr "lai") and laue (AS "lagu"), "law," were both used for "religion."

400 No such triumph is mentioned by Lucan, who laments that Caesar had none (Pharsalia, iii, 79). Professor Shannon (Chaucer and the Rom Poets, Cambridge, Mass, 1929, p 335) remarks that Chaucer may have got the hint from Pharsalia, iv, 358 ff, and v, 328 ff. Professor Lowes has suggested to the editor that he had in mind rather the French version of Lucan by Jehan de Tumi, in which triumphs are elaborately described at both the beginning and the end. See Li Hystore de Julius Cesar, ed F Settegast, Halle, 1881, pp 8 ff, 244 ff.

404 The scorpion was the symbol of treachery. Cf MerchT, IV, 2058 ff, also the Ayenbite of Inwytt (ed Morris, EETS, 1866, p 62) "the scorpion, that maketh uayr mid the heauede, and enueymeth mid the taylor "

Wikkid goost, evil spirit

421 ff From the De Contemptu Mundi, 1, 23 (Migne, Pat Lat., CCXVII, 713), which in turn embodies sentences from Boethius, II, pr 4, Prov XIV, 13, and Ecclesi XI, 25 For similar commonplaces see NPT, VII, 3205, Tr, IV, 836

422 spreynd, Boethius "respersa" (I 62, so rendered also in Bo, II, pr 4, 133)

438 The punishment of being cast adrift — twice visited on Custance and common in the related tales — is often referred to in mediæval texts as an actual legal penalty For examples from Irish and Icelandic, including cases of the exposure of wives charged with infidelity and of illegitimate children, see Miss M E Byrne, Eriu, XI, 97 ff Foot-hoot, hastily, so also "hot fot" Debate of Body and Soul (Emerson, Mid Eng Reader, New York, 1915, p 63, l 29, variant), and OF "chalt pas"

448 On the relation of fortune to divine Providence see KnT, I, 1663, n

449-462 Not in Trivet Skeat refers to similar addresses to the Cross in the hymn "Lustra sex qui iam peregit" of Venantius Fortunatus (Dreves, Analecta Hymnica, Leipzig, 1886-1922, II, 44 f), and in the Ancien Rowle, ed Morton, Camden Soc., 1853, p 34

451 cleere, probably "shunning" (Lat "clarus")

460 "Banisher of fiends from man and woman over whom thine arms faithfully extend" (i e., upon whom the sign of the cross has been made)

464 f the Strayte of Marrok, the strait of Gibraltar

470-504 Not in Trivet

480 The reference is probably to Boethius, IV, pr 6

486 Chaucer here substitutes Jonah for Trivet's reference to Noah

488 ff See Ex XIV, 21-31

491 ff See Rev VII, 1-3

500 St Mary of Egypt, after a youth of wantonness, lived for forty-seven years in the wilderness See the Legenda Aurea, cap lvi

502 ff See Matt XIV, 15 ff

508 Northhumberlonde, more definitely Yorkshire, since the French version mentions the Humber

510 of al a tyde, Skeat interprets, "for the whole of an hour" But a "tide" of the sea makes better sense For the exceptional use of of in the sense of "during" see NED, s v Of, 53

512 The constable is called Elda in Trivet and Gower

519 According to Trivet she spoke to Elda in Saxon ("en sessonays") Chaucer's maner Latyn corrupti has a curiously precise air, as if he were consciously characterizing late popular Latin Indeed the whole account of Roman Britain in the tale conforms to historic fact to a degree unusual in mediæval stories

532 Cf CIT, IV, 413

557 a furlong way, used as a measure of time, two and a half minutes, if Chaucer's reckoning in the Astrolabe (1, 16) — Thre mile-wei maken an houre — be followed exactly, cf MILT, I, 3637, RoT, I 4199, CIT, IV, 516, Anel, 328, Tr, IV, 1237, HF, 2064, LGW, 841

578 Alla, Aella, king of Deira (d 588)

609 Cf Tr, IV, 357

620 Berth here on hond, accuses her falsely Cf WB Prol, III, 393, ParsT, X, 505, Anel, 158, Bo, I, pr 4, 276 f In WB Prol, III, 232, 380, the phrase means rather to "persuade falsely" The source and original meaning of the idiom are uncertain The NED compares Fr "maintenir," which is not strictly parallel, nor is the phrase "prendre a main, prendre en main," discussed by Tobler in Herrg's Arch, CII, 176 More nearly equivalent is ON "bera á hendr," suggested as the source of the English idiom by A Trampe Bødtker, Videnskabs Selskabets Skrifter, Christiania, 1905, no 6, p 5

628 "Has caught a great idea, suggestion, from this witness"

631-58 Not in Trivet

631 One regular way of establishing the innocence of an accused woman would have been by ordeal of battle Cf the story of the Erl of Toulous, ed Ludtke, Berlin, 1881, also Child, Eng and Scott Ballads, the introduction to Sir Aldingar (Boston, 1882-98, II, 33 ff), and Siefen's general account of the Calumniated Wife, cited above

634 See the note to l 361, above

639 See the History of Susannah in the Apocrypha

641 On St Anne, the mother of the Virgin, see the apocryphal Gospel of James (B H Cowper, Apocryphal Gospels, 5th ed., London, 1881, p 4 ff) The rime with Hosanne, here and in SecN Prol, VIII, 69-70, may be a reminiscence of Dante's Paradiso, xxxii, 133-35

660 See KnT, I, 1761, and n

666 According to Trivet the witness was a Christian, hence the use of the British gospel book

676 In Trivet, "Hec fecisti et tacui" Skeat suggested the possible emendation held for holde

695 Donegild, the original form of the name is doubtful Gower has "Domilde", Trivet shows variants "Domulde," "Domylde," "Dommylde" namo, no other (lit "nomore"), cf CIT, IV 1039

701-02 Cf LGW Prol G, 311-12

729 to doom has advantage, to secure his own profit

736 lettres with the plural of the common use of Lat "literae"

754 elf, an evil spirit, strictly speaking, a fairy, a woman of the "other world" The union of mortal men with elf-women was a common episode in romance Cf especially the cycle of Melusine Tales, J Kohler, Ursprung der Melusinesage, Leipzig, 1895

770 to doone, an inflected infinitive See the Grammatical Introduction

771-77 Based upon the De Contemptu Mundi, II, 19 (which is quoted in the margin of several MSS, Migne, Pat Lat., CCXVII, 724) Ll 776 f are also proverbial, cf Mel, VII, 1194, Skeat, EE Prov, pp 102 f, no 244

784 There is very likely here a reminiscence of Dante's account of the punishment of traitors in Tolomea (Inf, xxxiii, 121 ff) See MLN, XXIX, 97 But the idea was familiar A similar conception underlies LGW, 2066 ff Cf further John of Salisbury, Pohoraticus, in, 8 (ed Webb, 2 v, Oxford, 1909, I, 190), A Graf, Miti, Leggende e Superstizioni del Medio Evo, Turin, 1892-93 II, 99 f, Lives of Saints from the Book of Lismore, ed W Stokes, Anecdota Oxoniensia, V, 1890, p 161, Caesarius Heisterbaensis, Dialogus Miraculorum, xii, 4, Cologne, 1851, II, 317 f, also the vision of the monk of Wenlock, related in a letter of Boniface, in Jaffé, Monumenta Moguntina, Berlin, 1866, pp 59 f Biblical authority was found in John xiii, 27, and Ps lv, 15

798 Here, as in l 510 the question arises whether tyde means "hour" (so Skeat) or the "tide" of the sea The latter seems more appropriate in both places

813-26 Not in Trivet With ll 813-16 of Boethius, I, m 5, 25 ff, Ps civ, 2 ff

819 shames death, with the construction of lyves creature, KnT, I, 2395, and n

833 steere, rudder So "remigium" is applied to the Virgin in the Analecta Hymnica, ed Dreves, Leipzig, 1886-1922, XXXI, 178

835-75 Almost wholly Chaucer's addition The description has been compared (of course with no suggestion of indebtedness) to Simonides' account of the exposure of Danae and the infant Perseus See Simonides, no 37, in Bergk's Anthologia Lyrica, Leipzig, 1868, p 444, Smyth's Melic Poets, London, 1900, pp 59 f

868 She blisseth here, probably "she makes the sign of the cross" Blessen and blissen were freely interchanged

885 The French text makes no mention of torture

894 The account is fuller in Trivet

896 with meschance, probably to be taken as an imprecation, like God yere hym meschance in l 914, below

905 Trivet says simply, "un chastel dun Admiral de paens"

925-31 From De Contemptu Mundi, II, 21 (Migne, Pat Lat., CCXVII, 725) On the marginal note Auctor, see the note to l 358, above

932-45 Not in Trivet

934 Gohas, Goliath of Gath, I Sam xvii,

940 See the Book of Judith in the Apocrypha, also MkT, VII, 2551 ff On the use of hym cf KnT, I, 1210, and n

947 Jubaltare, Gibraltar, Septe, Ceuta, on the African coast opposite

967 In Trivet the senator's name is Arsemus and his wife was Helen, daughter of Sallustius, the emperor's brother

981 avunte, really her cousin, as Trivet makes clear Chaucer may have misunderstood Fr "nece," used for cousin

982 she, Helen Constance, on the other hand, knew her, according to Trivet

988 King Alla's visit to Rome probably has reference to the practice of "reserving" certain sins to the Pope See Taunton, Law of the Church, London, 1906, s v Reserved Cases, and Catholic Encyclopædia, s v Censures, Ecclesiastical

1009 Som men wolde seyn Probably a reference to Gower, both here and in l 1086 Skeat notes that the matters in question are also treated by Trivet But there seems to be more point in an allusion to Gower, especially in view of the supposed fling at him in the Introduction In strict accuracy it should be observed, as Manly remarks, that Trivet and Gower "merely say that Constance instructed the child how he should act at the feast"

1038-71 Chaucer does not follow Trivet closely

1090 As he that, as one who, a common Middle English idiom, perhaps due to OF "com cil que"

1091 Sente, as to send ("as that he should send"), an unusual elipsis, but not unparalleled Cf Rom, 3850-53, Owl and Nightingale, ll 1093 ff Professor Kittredge has pointed out to the editor a somewhat similar construction in Shakespeare's King John, iv, 2, 241 ff

1121 The historic emperor Maurice of Cappadocia was not descended from Tiberius, whom he succeeded in 582

1126 olde Romayn geestes, apparently Roman history in general, as again in WE ProL, III, 642, where the same phrase is used of a story taken from Valerius Maximus Cf also MerchT, IV, 2284 The life of Mauricius is not in the Gesta Romanorum, or, to judge from Loesche's analysis, in the vast unpublished French compilation, La Fats des Romains, mentioned in Manly's notes See J Loesche, Die Abfassung der Faits des Romains, Halle 1907

1132-38 From the De Contemptu Mundi, I, 22 (Migne, Pat Lat., CCXVII, 713) Cf also Ecclus xviii, 26, Job xxi, 12 ff

1142 Proverbial, of ParsT, X, 762, Haekkel, p 45, nos 154, 155

1143 According to Trivet Aella died nine months later Then, after half a year, Constance returned to Rome Tiberius lived only thirteen days after her arrival, and a year later she herself died and was buried in St Peter's

The Man of Law's Epilogue

On the order of the tales at this point see the introduction to the Textual Notes on the Canterbury Tales. Most of the recent editions have adopted the arrangement of the Six-Text editor, who brought forward Fragment VII (ShpT to NPT, inclusive) from its regular position near the end of the series and attached it to the Man of Law's Epilogue, which immediately follows the Man of Law's Tale. But since the Six-Text order has really no MS support, it has seemed best to the present editor to return to the Ellesmere arrangement.

The Man of Law's Epilogue usually known as the Shipman's Prologue itself presents troublesome problems. The different arrangements and the more important variant readings are recorded in the Textual Notes. In many MSS the speech is assigned to the Squire and the Squire's tale follows the Man of Law's. Some MSS have this assignment and this order, but name the Summoner in the text (l 1179). In one copy there is no assignment, but the Summoner is named in the text, and the Wife's tale follows! In a single copy only (MS Arch Seld.) is the Shipman's Tale preceded by the so-called Shipman's Prologue, and in that case the Man of Law's Tale is brought down to join it, after the Squire's Tale. In the Ellesmere group of MSS, the most authoritative, the passage is omitted entirely. The explanation of these inconsistencies is altogether uncertain. But it is very probable that the Epilogue was written to follow the tale of the Man of Law. (Compare the repetition of thrifty in ll 46 and 1165.) The speech seems unsuited to the Squire, and may have been intended for either the Shipman or the Summoner. Skeat suggests that it was meant for the Shipman, but not to precede his present tale, which was probably written for the Wife of Bath. Then, he conjectures further, when Chaucer wrote a new tale for the Wife he handed over her first one, unrevised, to the Shipman and put it, late in the series, before the Prover's Tale. The old Prologue, thus rendered useless, he first transferred, and adjusted, to the Squire, and afterwards canceled altogether. Miss Hammond suggests rather that the passage was first written for the Summoner, who was meant to follow the Man of Law. But when Chaucer constructed Fragment III he shifted the Summoner and erased his name in the old Prologue. The assignments to the Squire and the Shipman in various MSS and the combination with the Shipman's Tale in MS Arch Seld. she takes to be purely scribal. The cancellation of the passage in the Ellesmere group she holds to represent Chaucer's final intention. Her theory has this advantage over Skeat's, that it does not assume Chaucer to have been responsible for the inappropriate assignment of the speech to the Squire. For full discussion see Miss Hammond, pp 277 f., Skeat in MLR, V, 430 ff., and Tatlock, Dev and Chron., p 218 n.

Professor Brusendorff has recently suggested (pp 70 ff.) that the ML Epil was intended by Chaucer for the Yeoman, marked Squire in the margin of the MS to indicate that the Squire's Yeoman and not the Canon's Yeoman was intended. Then, he conjectures, some scribe copied Squire into the body of the text. This theory also relieves Chaucer of any responsibility for the inappropriate assignment. But there seems to be no actual support for it in the MSS.

A new discussion of the Epilogue, with full information about the manuscripts, has just been published by Mr C R Kase. Observations on the Shifting Positions of Groups I and E in the Manuscripts of the Canterbury Tales (in Three Chaucer Studies, New York, 1932). It appeared too late to be fully utilized by the present editor. Mr Kase, it should be said, holds that Chaucer first intended the speech for the Squire and argues for its appropriateness.

Although the MSS strongly support the theory that Chaucer abandoned the Epilogue, there can be no doubt of its genuineness or of its interest to the reader of the Canterbury Tales. It is therefore included, but bracketed, in the present text.

On two spurious Pardoner-Shipman links see the Textual Notes on the PardT.

1165 Cf l 46, above. Professor Manly observes that the word thrifty is as appropriate to the Melbees, supposed by some to have been originally assigned to the Man of Law, as to the tale of Constance, and that ll 1188-89 describe the Melbees very well and are entirely unsuited to the Constance story.

1168 The reference here to learned men in lore has been taken as an indication that more than one professional man — perhaps, consequently, the Doctor and the Pardoner, as well as the Lawyer — had already told a tale. See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on Fragment VI.

1169 Can moche good, lit "know much good" a phrase of general application, meaning to be capable or competent, to know one's profit or advantage. Cf WB Prolog, III, 231, BD, 998, 1012, LGW, 1175. Essentially the same idiom occurs in English as early as the Beowulf (nát hé þéra góða, l 681).

1171 The condemnation of swearing is not particularly characteristic of Wyclif's writings. But it appears to have been a favorite issue with the Lollard group. See the Twenty-Five Points (1388-89), in Wyclif, Select English Works, ed Arnold, Oxford, 1869-71, III, 483.

1172 Jankun, a derivative name for a priest, often referred to as Sir John. See NF Prolog, VII, 2810.

1173 Lollere, a contemptuous term, like the more familiar "Lollard," for the followers of Wyclif. The corresponding Dutch form

"lollaerd," was used early in the fourteenth century for the members of the Alexian fraternity, who cared for the poor and the sick, and the name was also applied to other orders on the continent. The ultimate derivation is probably from "lollen" mutter, mumble. Skeat suggests that there is in the present passage a play upon a second word "loller," meaning lounge, loafer. However that may be, there is a clear allusion in l 1183, in connection with the parable of the tares (Matt xii 24-30), to a traditional pun on Lollard and the Latin "lol[li]um" (tares, cockle). Contemporary instances of the use of the same figure are given by H B Workman, John Wyclif, Oxford 1926, II, 162, 400 f. For early occurrences of the whole group of related words see also Workman, I, 327.

1180 glosen, interpret, expound Cf SumT, III, 1792 ff, for a hunt of the wide range of much of the preacher's comment.

1185 body, self, cf for the colorless use of the word, "nobody," "anybody."

1189 phisylas (so numerous MSS, variants, phisulas, phyllyas, fisleas, etc) is of uncertain explanation. Some late MSS read (of) physik, adopted by Globe. Skeat suggested that the original reading was physices a Greek genitive such as might be used in titles (Cf ML Intro, II, 93 n). The strange Greek form would explain the scribal corruptions, but it is unlikely that Chaucer would have put it into the mouth of the Shipman. Dr Shipley (MLN, X, 134 f) tried to support the MS reading by an Anglo-Saxon gloss "phisulos leceas" (i.e., leeches, physicians), but this would serve rather to illustrate the scribal corruption. Later proposals have been to connect the word with law instead of medicine. Mr R C Goffin (MLR, XVIII, 335 f) suggested that the original reading was "filas" (Anglo-Fr "filas," files or cases). Professor Manly thinks this was probably the underlying word, but that Chaucer intentionally represented the ignorant speaker as using a corrupted form like those he often ascribed to the Host.

FRAGMENT III

The Wife of Bath's Prologue

Fragment III begins abruptly with the Wife of Bath's Prologue, and has no link to attach it to a preceding tale. (For spurious links connecting it with the Merchant's Tale and the Squire's Tale see the Textual Notes on the Merch Epil and the SqT. It stands in various positions in the different MSS, see the introduction to the Textual Notes on the Canterbury Tales. But in the best copies it begins a sequence, III, IV, V, which clearly represents Chaucer's final arrangement. For the opinion that it is also sufficiently connected, as it stands, with the Num's Priest's Tale, see Kenyon, JEGP, XV, 282 ff.

The tales and the links in the sequence mentioned, from the Wife's Prologue through the Franklin's Tale are usually referred to as the Marriage Group. This name was given them by Professor Kittredge, who pointed out that, apart from certain dramatic interruptions, they deal continuously with the problem of conjugal relations presented at the outset by the Wife. It is true that love and marriage form the theme of other tales in the series, so much so that Professor Tupper has proposed to interpret the whole Canterbury collection as a systematic exposition of the subject. (See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Canterbury Tales.) The particular question of the wife's wisdom and proper authority is also broached outside this group, in the Melibee and the Num's Priest's Tale. But nowhere else is the subject clearly defined and discussed with so much coherence. Even if Professor Kittredge has been over-schematic in his interpretation of the Franklin's Tale, the fact remains that the Wife gives the keynote to the Clerk and the Merchant and that the Franklin clearly alludes to the matter at issue. On the general question see Kittredge, MP, IX 435 ff, W W Lawrence, MP, XI, 247 ff, Koch, EST, XLVI, 112 f, S B Hemingway, MLN, XXXI, 479 ff, H B Hinkley, PMLA, XXXII, 292 ff. (rejecting the classification entirely).

The date of the Marriage Group is most fully discussed by Professor Tatlock, Dev and Chron, pp 198 ff, 156 ff. Cf also Lowes, MP, VIII, 305 ff, and S Moore, MLN, XXVI, 172 ff. A reference to the Wife of Bath in the Envoy to Bukton fixes the composition of her Prologue, almost with certainty, before 1396. Beyond this, the evidences that have been noted are not precise, and serve to do little more than indicate the probable order of the related tales. By the influence of Deschamps's Mirour de Mariage and of Jerome's Epistola Adversus Jovinianum the Marriage Group is associated with the second (G) Prologue to the Legend, and a date about 1393-94 is made probable. Within the group it seems likely that the Wife's Prologue was composed first, and followed shortly by her own tale and that of the Merchant. The quarrel of the Summoner and the Friar was probably devised and worked out at about the same time. But there is little evidence to indicate the exact order of these and the related tales of the Clerk, Squire, and Franklin. Professors Tatlock and Lowes agree in putting the Melibee between the Wife's Prologue and the Merchant's Tale. It certainly preceded the latter, and probably without a long interval. But its relation to the Wife's Prologue is not so clear.

The Wife's Prologue is derived from no single source. Like the General Prologue and that of the Pardoner, it is highly original in its conception and structure. But it shows the influence of a whole series of satires against women. Whether, as Ten Brink suggests, the Wife of Bath was a proverbial character before Chaucer treated her, is not definitely known. Some elements in his description of her are undoubtedly derived from the account of La Vieille and from the speeches of the jealous husband, Le Jaloux, in the Roman de la Rose, and the influence of that work is apparent in many passages throughout her Prologue. Chaucer drew further, for the material of his discussion, upon the Miroir de Mariage of Eustache Deschamps, the Epistola Adversus Jovianum of St Jerome (Migne, Pat Lat., XXIII, 211 ff.), the Liber Aureolus de Nuptus of Theophrastus (which Jerome quotes, Adv Jov., 276), and the Epistola Valerii ad Rufinum de non Ducenda Uxore of Walter Map (De Nugis Curialium, iv, 3-5, ed. M. R. James, Anecdota Oxoniensia, XIV, 1914, pp. 143 ff., also in works falsely attributed to St Jerome Migne, XXX, 254 ff.). The three Latin treatises are all named in the text (ll. 671 ff.), together with other writings of which less use was made. Parallels from the works named, and from others, are cited in the notes below, but it is not to be assumed that they represent Chaucer's actual sources. Much of the Wife's discourse was common talk, and need not be traced to any literary origin. And in any case Chaucer had so thoroughly assimilated the anti-feminist literature of his age that it is impossible to identify his allusions. For fuller discussion and detailed references see especially Mead, PMLA, XVI, 391 ff., Lounsbury, Studies, II, 292, Lowes, MP, VIII, 305 ff. The Corbaccio of Boccaccio was suggested as a possible source of the Prologue by Rajna, Rom., XXXII, 248, cf., however, the opposing argument of H. M. Cummings, The Indebtedness of Chaucer to Boccaccio, Univ. of Cincinnati Stud., X, 43 ff. A number of parallels in the Lamentations of Matheolus (ed. Van Hamel, 2 v., Paris, 1892-1905) were noted years ago by the editor, and others are cited by Manly from the 14th-century French translation of Le Fevre (in Van Hamel). But it is not clear that Chaucer had read either of these works. For a general account of the satires on women in the earlier Middle Ages see A. Wulff, Die frauenfeindlichen Dichtungen in den romanschen Literaturen des Mittelalters bis zum ende des XIII. Jahrhunderts, Halle, 1914.

With those passages of the Prologue which deal with the personal description of the Wife should be compared the account of her in the General Prologue and the notes thereon. Special reference may be made again here to the discussion of Mr. W. C. Curry, PMLA, XXXVII, 30 ff.

In spite of all the literary influences which have been detected in the Prologue it is hard to believe that the Wife herself was not, at least in some measure, drawn from life.

1-2 Imitated from RR, 12802 ff.

auctoritate, authoritative text Cf III, 1278, below

6 Cf Gen. Prolog., I, 460. There is an apparent inconsistency between I, 461 ff., and the statement here that the Wife was married at twelve. See the comments of Professor Tatlock, Angl., XXXVII, 97, n.

7 That is, if so many marriages could really be valid.

11 John n, 1. The argument here is from St Jerome, Adv. Jov., i, 14 (Migne, Pat. Lat., XXIII, 233).

14 ff. John iv, 6 ff.

28 Gen. i, 28. This text and Matt. xix, 5 (quoted in ll. 30-31) are both used by St Jerome at the beginning of his letter (i, 3, Migne, 213, i, 5, Migne, 215).

33 Bigamy, according to the canonists, was applied to successive marriages. Octogamy, marriage with eight husbands, the word is taken from St Jerome, i, 15 (Migne, 234).

35 ff. Heere, glossed "audi," hear, in MS. El. Salomon, 1 Kings xi, 3.

44 a-f. These lines are certainly genuine, though Chaucer may have meant to cancel them. Cf MerchT., IV, 1427.

44 f. Scoleryng, probably "schooling," "training," Skeat reads scolerung and interprets, "young scholar."

46 I Cor. vii, 9. From St Jerome, i, 9 (Migne, 222), the succeeding Biblical allusions are also taken from him.

47 I Cor. vii, 39. St Jerome, i, 10 (Migne, 224), i, 14, (Migne, 232).

51 I Cor. vii, 28.

54 Cf Gen. iv, 19-23. St Jerome says "Primus Lamech sanguinarius et homicida, unam carnem in duas divisit uxores" (i, 14, Migne, 233). See also SqT. V, 550, Anel., 150.

61 Cf Jerome, i, 12 (Migne, 227).

65 I Cor. vii, 25.

71-72 For the serious use of this argument in defense of marriage cf Jerome, Ep. xxii, ad Eustochium, § 20, Migne, XXII, 406 (Laudo nuptas, sed quia mihi virgines generant).

75 The dart, apparently a prize in a running contest. It corresponds to "bravium" in St Jerome (i, 12, Migne, 228), which comes in turn from I Cor. ix, 24 (ἵσχυρον). Cf the use of spera in Lydgate's Falls of Princes, i, 5108 f.

77 Perhaps suggested by Matt. xix, 11 f.

81 I Cor. vii, 7.

84 I Cor. vii, 6.

84-86 "There is no sin in wedding me, not excepting that of bigamy."

87 I Cor. vii, 1.

89 Proverbial, see Skeat, EE Prov., pp. 110 f., no. 262, Haackel, p. 18, no. 57.

91 Again from St Jerome (ii, 22).

96 preferre, be preferable to.

101 Cf II Tim. ii, 20.

103 f. I Cor. vii, 7.

105 Cf Rev. xiv, 1-4, phrases from which are quoted in the margin of MS. El.

107 ff. Matt. xix, 21. The appeal to

Scripture is exactly paralleled by Faux-Semblant in RR, 11375 ff Cf also Jerome, 1, 34 (Migne 256) n, 6 (Migne, 294)

112 Almost identical in phrasing with Mel, VII, 1088 and Mercht, IV, 1456

115 ff With the argument here of St Jerome, 1, 36 (Migne, 260), also RR, 4401-24

130 I Cor vii, 3, cf also ParsT, X, 940, Mercht, IV, 2048

135 ff Cf Jerome, 1, 36 (Migne, 260)

145 Not Mark (vi, 38), but John vi, 9 The comparison is again from Jerome (i, 7, Migne, 219)

147 I Cor vii, 20

155 Cf Jerome, 1, 12 (Migne, 229)

156 I Cor vii, 28

158 I Cor vi, 4

161 Eph v, 25

164 ff With the Pardoner's remark here about marriage of Pard Prol VI, 416, n

168 to-yere, usually with the meaning "this year" But in the present passage, with the negative, it may have the sense "never," "not at all" See Gollancz, The Pearl, Lond, 1921, note to l 588

170 ff Probably, as Brusendorff suggests (p 484), a colloquial expression rather than a literary allusion to RR, 6813 ff, 10631 ff, or Boethius, ii, pr 2 He notes that it occurs again in LGW Prol G, 79 (F, 195), and remarks that a similar colloquialism is still current in Danish

180 The saying referred to is given in Latin in the margin of MS Dd "Qui per alios non corrigatur, alii per ipsum corrigatur" It is not in the Almagest, nor is the quotation in l 326 f below But both sayings have been found in a collection of apophthegms ascribed to Ptolemy, and published after his life in Gerard of Cremona's translation of the Almagest, Venice, 1515 See Flugel, Angl, XVIII, 133 ff Boll, Angl, XXI, 222 ff, shows that the author of the life was "Albugaefe" (i e, Emir abu 'l Wafā Mutaskshur ben Fatik, 12th century) On the Almagest see MullT, I, 3208, n Cf also Skeat EE Prov, p 111, n 263

197 Professor Tatlock (Angl, XXXVII, 97) remarks that the senile husband of the nymph Agapeo in Boccaccio's Ameto may have furnished a suggestion for the three old husbands here But the type has been common in literature See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Mercht

198-202 With these lines and ll 213-16, of the Miror de Marriage, 1576-84 (Deschamps, Oeuvres, IX, SATF)

204-06 For the idea of Mercht, IV, 1303-04

207-10 Cf RR, 13269-72

208 tolde no deymtee of, set no value on

213 At Dummow, near Chelmsford in Essex, a fitch of bacon was offered to any married couple who lived a year without quarrelling or repenting of their un on Tyrwhitt (III, 319) quotes Blount, Antient Tenures on Land, and Jocular Customs of

Some Mannors, London, 1679, p 162 f, and cites a similar institution in French Brittany, near Rennes See also Robt Chambers, Book of Days, Edinburgh, 1862-64, I, 748 ff, and of Piers Plowman, C, xi, 276 f, with Skeat's note

226 For the phrase to bera hem on honde cf ll 232, 380, below and see MLT, II, 620 n

227-28 Almost literally from RR, 18136 f

229 For the apologetic formula of RR, 9917, 11017 ff

231 if that she can hir good, if she knows what is best for her See MLT, II, 1169, n

232 "Will testify, or convince him, that the chough is mad" The allusion is to the bird that tells a jealous husband of his wife's misconduct with her lover The wife persuades him that the bird is lying See Chaucer's version of the story in the Mancreple's Tale, and cf Clouston's paper on the Tell-Tale Bird, Org and Anal, Ch Soc, pp 439 ff

233 For the collusion of the maid of Miror, 3634 f, 3644-55, also most versions of the story of the Tell-Tale Bird

235-47 This passage shows the influence of both the Liber de Nuptus (Migne, Pat Lat, XXIII, 276) and the Miror, 1589-1611 (very close) Cf also Matheolus Lamentations, ed Van Hamel, 2 v, Paris, 1892-1905, ll 1107 ff (tr Le Fèvre n, 1452 ff)

236 ff With these lines and ll 265-70 of CIT, IV, 1207-10

246 Cf KnT, I, 1261, n

248-75 Cf Liber de Nuptus (Migne, 277), apparently supplemented by the use of RR, 8579-8600 and Miror, 1625-48, 1732-41, 1755-59

257 ff Chaucer apparently misunderstood his Latin text ("aluis liberalitate sollicitat" etc, Migne, 277) and made richesse a ground of the lover's desires rather than a means of his wooing

265 foul, ugly

268 hure to chepe, to bargain, do business, with her (gerundive), or, for a trade for her (dative substantive)

269 f "Every Jack his Jill," apparently proverbial, cf Haecckel, p 31 f, no 104, Skeat, EE Prov, pp 111 f, no 264

272 his thanks, willingly See KnT, I, 2107, n

Helde, hold Chaucer regularly has holde

278 On this saying see Mel, VII, 1086, n 282-92 Cf Liber de Nuptus (Migne, 277), also Miror, 1538-75, and RR, 8667-82 The idea is also developed by Matheolus, 2425 ff (Le Fèvre, ii, 265), 800-11 (Le Fèvre, ii, 399-418)

293-302 Cf Liber de Nuptus (Migne, 277), apparently supplemented again by Miror, 1760-77

303-06 A marginal note in MS El ("et procurator calamistratus"), indicates that Chaucer was still following Theophrastus (Migne, 277)

308-10 Cf Mercht, IV, 1300

311 Cf the Miroir, 3225 Oure dame, the mistress, i.e., myself On the so-called domestic "our" see ShpT, VII, 69 n

312 On St James see Gen Prol, I, 465, n

316-22 Cf Miroir, 3520-25, 3871 ff

320 Abs, Alice

326 See the note to l 180 above In MS El, the saying is quoted in Latin "Intra omnes alcor existat, qui non curat in curus manu sit mundus" Cf Skeat, EE Prov, p 112, no 265, Haeckel, p 20, no 65

333-36 Cf BD 963 ff (from RR, 7410 ff) The idea, which became proverbial, occurs in Ennius (quoted by Cicero, De Officiis, I, 16) Cf also Ars Amat, II, 93 f

337-39 Cf Miroir, 1878-84, 8672-91

342 ff l Tim II, 9

348-56 Cf Miroir, 3207-15 Matheolus, 1939 ff (Le Fèvre, n, 3071 ff) also has the figure, for other parallels see Van Hamel's introduction to Matheolus, II, cxlv

354 caterwaued, "caterwauling" On the form see Pard Prol, VI, 406, n

357-61 From RR, 14381-84, 14393-94 Cf also Matheolus, 1880 f (Le Fèvre, n, 2979-80), and the proverb "Fous est cis qui feme veut gaitier," Morawski, Proverbes Français, Paris, 1925, p 28, no 769, and p 29, no 800

361 make his berd, outwit or delude him Cf RnT, I, 4096, and n

362-70 From St Jerome, Adv Jov, I, 28 (Migne, 250) The ultimate source is Prov xxx, 21-23

371 ff From St Jerome, I, 28 (Migne, 250) Cf Prov xxx, 16

373 wilde fyr, an inflammable preparation that could not be quenched by water

376 From St Jerome, I, 28 (Migne, 249) Cf Prov xxv, 20 (Vulg)

378 From St Jerome, I, 28 (Migne, 249)

386 Cf Anel, 157

387-92 Cf Miroir, 3600-08, 3620-22, 3629-32

389 Lat "Ante molam primus qui venit non molat mus" Cf "First come first served", and Skeat, EE Prov, p 112, no 266, and Haeckel, p 24, no 79

393 Cf RR, 13828-30, also Miroir, 3920 ff

401 MSS Cp Pw La have in the margin the Latin line, of unknown source "Fallere, flere, nere, dedit (Pt statut) deus in mulhere" See Skeat, EE Prov, p 113, no 267.

407-10 From RR, 9091-96

414 "Let him profit who may, for every-thing has its price", cf Haeckel, p 49, no 168

415 For this proverb see RnT, I, 4134, and n

416 For wynnung in the old sense of gaming money, making profit, see Gen Prol, I, 275

418 bacoun, old meat, and so here for old men

432 mekely is probably trisyllabic, otherwise oure must have two syllables, which is against Chaucer's usual practice

435 spiced conscience, scrupulous, fastidious conscience See Gen Prol, I, 526, and n

446 Peter, an oath by St Peter

450 to blame, to be blamed On its use see Gen Prol, I, 375, n

455-56 Cf MerchT, IV, 1847-48

460 From Valerius Maximus, vi, c 3, 9 (Pliny, Hist Nat, xiv, 13 also has the story) For further use of the same chapter see 642 647 below

464 ff Cf Ovid, Ars Amat, I, 229-44

466 Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 50, no 177

467-68 Cf RR, 13452-63 (closely similar), also Ars Amat, II, 765 ff

469-73 Cf RR, 12924-25, 12932 ff

483 Jocce, Judocus, a Breton saint But the reference is probably to the Testament of Jean de Meun, 161 ff (in RR, ed Meon, Paris 1814, IV)

487 The phrase "to fry in his own grease" or "to stew in his own juice" is still proverbial See Skeat, EE Prov, pp 113 f, no 269

489 For the figure of purgatory, as for many of the jibes against women and marriage no single source is probably to be sought But comparison may be made with the following lines from one of the Latin poems attributed to Walter Map (ed Wright, Camden Soc, London, 1841, p 84)

Quid dicam breviter esse coniugium?
Certe vult tartara, vel purgatorium

Perhaps the most striking use of the idea is found in the Lamentations of Matheolus (l 3024 ff), where God is represented as defending himself for having instituted matrimony as a purgatory on earth, because he desired not the death of the sinful

O peccatorum quia mortem nolo, redemptor
Et pugil ipsorum, cum res non debeat emptor Emptas tam care pessundare, jamque parere Iccurco volui sibi purgatoria plura,
Ut se purgarent, egros sanat data cura,
Inter que majus est coniugium

See also Le Fèvre, II, 1673 ff For a similar comparison with hell, instead of purgatory, see l 1067, and the references in Angl, XXXVII, 107, n Contrast the paradys terrestre, MerchT, IV, 1332 The figure of purgatory also recurs in that tale, IV, 1670, and Lydgate has it (very likely from Chaucer, in his Hertford Mummung, l 87 (Angl XXII, 369) In a Welsh poem of Tudur Aled (ed T Gwynn Jones, Cardiff, 1926, II, 475) the "Purgatory of Ovid" ("Dyn wyf ym mhurdan Ofydd") is applied, quite differently, to the pain of unrequited love

492 Cf, for the figure of the shoe, St Jerome, Adv Jovin, I, 48 (Migne, 279) It occurs again in MerchT, IV, 1553 See Skeat, EE Prov, pp 117 f, no 277, Haeckel, p. 6, no 20

495 See Gen Prol, I, 463

496 roode-beem, the beam, usually between the chancel and the nave, on which was placed a crucifix

498 On the use of hym, practically like a demonstrative, see RnT, I, 1210, n On the tomb of Darnus of Gualtier de Chatillon, Alexandreis, vi, 381 ff (ed Mueldener, Leipzig, 1863, summarized by Lounsbury, Studies II, 354)

503-14 Cf the experience of La Vieille, RR.

514 dangerous, offish, "difficile", so daunger, in l 521, means "holding off" to enhance the price Cf Gen Prol, I, 517, and n

516-24 Cf RR, 13697-708

517 Wayte what, whatever Cf Cook, MLN, XXXI, 442, and Derocquigny, MLR, III, 72

522 Proverbial Cf Haeckel, p 33, no 109

534 ff Cf RR, 16347-64, but the idea was a commonplace

552 There is a strikingly close parallel to this line, though probably not a source of it, in the rubric to chap xiii of the Mirour de Manage "Comment femmes procurent aler aux pardons, non pas pour devocion qu'elles aient, mais pour veoir et estre veues" See also RR, 9029-30 and Ovid, Ars Amat, I, 99

555-58 Cf RR, 13522-28, Matheolus, 988 ff (Le Fevre, u, 947 f)

557 Cf l 657 below The habit of making pilgrimages from other than religious motives is illustrated by Professor Lowes, Rom Rev, II, 120 f, by several citations from the Mirour See also Gen Prol, I, 465, n

559 For the peculiar use of upon without an object of ll 1018 (on), 1382 below Cf Mod Eng "What did she have on?" Gytes (apparently) gowns See RdT, I, 3954, and n

560 On the use of those in a generalizing sense (as also in l 1004, below) cf KnT, I 1531, n

572-74 The mouse with one hole is proverbial Cf Morawski, Proverbes Français, Paris, 1925, p 16, no 449, "Dahez ait la soriz qui ne set c'un pertus", and Skeat, EE Prov, p 114, no 270 Cf also RR, 13150 (with Langlois' note) As a possible literary source for Chaucer, Manly (Chaucer and the Rhetoricians, Brit Acad, 1926 p 12) cites Matthieu de Vendôme

575 For "enchanted" in this sense of RR, 13691

576, 583 My dame was identified by Koepel as La Vieille of the Roman de la Rose, but the chapters of the Mirour which contain the love of "la mère" seem more likely to have been in Chaucer's mind if there was any definite source for the phrase That it was proverbial and of general application is suggested by its use in the ParT, VI, 684 Cf also Matheolus, 1362 ff (Le Fevre, u, 1807-1992) Curry's interpretation of it (PMLA, XXXVII, 32, n) as a reference to Venus is hardly to be accepted

581 It was a regular doctrine that in the interpretation of dreams gold and blood are related, each signifying the other See Arnaldus de Villa Nova, Expositioes Visionum, etc., in Opera, Basel, 1524, I, 4, and n, 2 (cited by Curry, pp 212 and 265)

593-99, 627-31 With the account of the Wife's easy consolation of Mirour, 1966-77, also Ars Amat, in 431

602 Cf Rv Prol, I, 3888, n, and Mercht, E, 1847

603 On gat-toiled see Gen Prol, I, 468, and n

604 f seel, burthark She was subject to Venus and Mars (Veneren, l 609, Marciem, l 610) On the characteristics derived from these planets and, particularly on the bodily marks they produced, see Curry pp 104 ff

613 At the time of her birth Taurus the night-house of Venus, was ascendant, and Mars was in it In MS El there is a reference to the treatise called Almansoris Propositiones, which is printed in the volume entitled Astrologia Aphoristica Ptolomaei, Hermetas, Almansoris, &c, Ulm, 1641 (Skeat)

613 Cf RR, 13336, with Langlois' note

624 Cf RR, 8516

636 Cf Gen Prol, I 446

640 "Although he had sworn to the contrary" See KnT, I, 1089, n

642 Romayn geestes, stories of Roman history Cf MLT, II, 1126, n The incidents referred to here and in l 647 are in Valerius Maximus, vi, 3

647 another Romayn, P Sempronius Sophus, whose story is told in the same chapter of Valerius

651 ff Ecclus xxv, 25, cf Haeckel, p 49 no 170

655 ff Proverbial, see Skeat, EE Prov, pp 114 f, no 271, Haeckel, p 49, no 171

657 seken halwes, make pilgrimages to saints' shrines Cf Gen Prol, I, 14

659 With hawe as a symbol of worthlessness of pulled hen, oystre, Gen Prol, I, 177, n

662 Cf RR, 9980

670 ff The works first mentioned as contained in Jankin's volume are the three Latin treatises of which Chaucer has been shown to have made use in this Prologue the Epistola Valeri ad Rufinum de non Ducenda Uxore of Walter Map, the Liber de Nuptus of Theophrastus, and the Epistola Adversus Jovinianum of St Jerome Tertulan is interpreted as Tertullian, whose treatises De Exhortatione Castitatis, De Monogamia, and De Pudicitia may be referred to Chrysippus is probably the person mentioned by St Jerome (Adv Jov, I, 48, Migne, Pat Lat, XXIII, 280) in the statement "Rudicule Chrysippus ducendam uxorem sapientia praecipit ne Jovem Gamelum et Genethlum violet." The reference is unknown, and Chaucer may have had no further information (For the suggestion that he had in mind the discussion of the Stoic Chrysippus in Cicero's De Divinatione, see G L Hamilton, Chaucer's Indebtedness to Guido delle Colonne, New York, 1903, p 109, n)

Trotula is traditionally regarded as a distinguished female doctor of Salerno, who lived about the middle of the 11th century

She was credited with the authorship of a treatise on the diseases of women and the care of children (variously entitled Trotulae De Aegritudibus Muliebribus, De Passioibus Mulierum, etc., and known as Trotula Major and one on cosmetics (De Ornatu Mulierum, known as Trotula Minor). She has been conjecturally identified as of the family of Ruggieri, and as the wife of Johannes Platearius of Salerno, and the mother of Johannes Platearius the second and of Matthaeus Platearius. See Salvatore de Renzi, Collectio Salernitana, 5 v., Naples 1852-59, I, 149 ff., G L Hamilton, MP, IV, 377 ff. (using French and German translations of the Latin treatises and references to Trotula in Old French literature), P Meyer, Rom, XXXII, 87 ff. (part of the text of an Old French version). Recent investigators, however, have questioned not only Trotula's authorship of the Latin treatises, but also her standing as a medical authority. In one study (Charles and Dorothea Singer, in History, N S X, 244) doubt is even thrown upon her existence, and Trotula is explained as the title of the compilations of Trottus, a doctor of Salerno. A more reasonable suggestion, perhaps, is that of H R Spitzner (Die Salernitanische Gynakologie und Geburtshilfe unter dem Namen der Trotula, Leipzig diss 1921), that Trotula was a famous Salernitan midwife, whose name was given to the gynecological treatise.

Helovys is the famous Heloise, wife of Abelard. The reference may be due to the account of her in RR, 8760 ff.

688 an impossible, an impossibility Cf SumT, III, 2231

692 The allusion is to the Æsopic fable of the Man and the Lion. See Jacobs's ed., London, 1889, I, 251, II, 121.

696 the mark of Adam, the likeness of Adam, i.e., all males

697 The children of Mercurie and of Venus, men and women born under their domination

699 ff. According to the teachings of astrology the exaltation of one planet, the sign in which its influence is greatest, is the dejection (Lat. "casus") of another planet of contrary nature (of diverse dispositionum). Thus Aries is the exaltation of the Sun and the dejection of Saturn, Pisces the exaltation of Venus and the dejection of Mercury. Mercury, moreover, signifies science and philosophy, whereas Venus causes lively joys and whatever is agreeable to the body. The matter is explained in Almansoris Propositiones, § 2 (Skeat), to which there is a marginal reference in MS El.

713 sure, husband

715 ff. Most of the instances that follow are mentioned in the Epistola Valeri. Cf also RR, 9195 ff. (Dianyre), 9203 ff. (Sampson), and M&T, VII, 2015 ff. (Sampson), 2095 ff. (Hercules).

727-46 From Jerome, Adv Jov 1, 48

(Migne, 278 ff.), which preserves in part Seneca's De Matrimonio. Chaucer apparently added details from his general knowledge of the Theban story (perhaps derived from Status' Thebaid, iv).

732 Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 8, no 26

733 On Paspheae see Ovid, Ars Amat, 1, 295 ff.

741 Amphorax, Amphiarax. On the form in -z see Gen Prol, I, 384, n

747 Lyra and Lucye come from the Epistola Valeri (De Nugis Curialium, iv, 3, ed James, Anecdota Oxoniensia, XIV, 153). But the first (spelled Luna in the MS of the Epistola cited by Tyrwhitt) is a corruption of Livia, who poisoned Drusus, at the instigation of Sejanus, A D 23. Lucye is Lucilia, wife of the poet Lucretius. See Lounsbury, II, 369 f.

757 Doubtless from the Epistola Valeri (ed James, p 151) though the story, or one like it, is told in various places. Cf the Gesta Romanorum, cap 33, Cicero, De Oratore, ii, 69 (where only one wife is mentioned), Erasmus, Apophthegms, Paris, 1533, pp 157-58 (attributed to Diogenes). The origin of the name Latumysus is uncertain. It may be a corruption of Pacuvius, which is the form in the Epistola. In another text of Valerius, quoted by Tyrwhitt, the name is Pavorinus, and in the Gesta Romanorum, which refers to Valerius, it is Paletinus or Peratinus.

766 Skeat refers to the story of the Matron of Ephesus (in Petronius, Satyricon, cxi), which as he observes, is not quite parallel.

769 The allusion is probably to the story of Jael and Sisera, Judges iv, 21. Cf K&T, I, 2007.

770 The particular allusion, if one was intended, is again doubtful.

775 f. Eccles xxv, 16, cf Haeckel, p 51, no 183.

778 ff. Cf Prov xxi, 9-10, Haeckel, p 51, no 184.

782 f. From Jerome, Adv Jov, 1, 48 (Migne, 279 f.), ultimately from Herodotus, 1, 8, cf Haeckel, p 45, no 156.

784 f. Prov xi, 22, cf ParsT, X, 156, Haeckel, p 46, no 157.

800 ff. Mr Tatlock suggests (MLN, XXIX, 143) that Chaucer got the idea of these lines from a passage in Map's De Nugis Curialium (ii, 26, ed James, p 99), where a wounded man begs another to come and take a kiss to bear to his wife and children, and then, as the other is about to kiss him, stabs him in the belly. But the situation is rather different.

816 Dr Fansler (p 173) compares the lay of Gugemar, by Marie de France (ed Warnke, 3d ed., Halle, 1925), ll 234 ff., for "a rather curious literary precedent" to this passage.

835 f. Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 50, no 176.

847 Sdyngborne, Sittingbourne, about forty miles from London. It is nearer Canterbury than Rochester, which is mentioned in Mk Prolog, VII, 1926. The order of the best MSS, which puts Fragment III before Fragment VII, is thus unsatisfactory.

855 Ys, the emphatic form "yes, indeed," "by all means"

The Wife of Bath's Tale

On the date of the Wife of Bath's Tale see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on her Prologue

The exact source is unknown, but the theme of the Transformed Hag, or Loathly Lady, appears in numerous tales, both literary and popular. On their relations see W Stokes Acad, XLI 399, G H Maynadier, The Wife of Bath's Tale, Its Sources and Analogues, London, 1901, J W Beach, The Loathly Lady A Study in the Popular Elements of the Wife of Bath's Tale, an unpublished Harvard dissertation, 1907.

Dr Maynadier's volume deals fully with the literary versions. His results are supplemented, and in some details corrected, by Dr Beach's exhaustive study of the related folk-tales. For the theory that the story is based ultimately on a nature myth see H Kern, Verslagen d Konink Akad, Ser 4, IX, 346 ff. The most important analogues in English are Gower's tale of Florent (Conf Am, 1, 1407 ff), the romance, The Wedding of Sir Gawain and Dame Ragnell, and the ballads, The Marriage of Gawan, and King Henry (all in Orig and Anal, 483 ff). Gower's version and Chaucer's appear to be mutually independent, that of Gower being probably the earlier. It is also in some respects more primitive than that of Chaucer. The hag is represented as a victim of enchantment, and the choice offered to Florent, of having her fair by day and foul by night or foul by day and fair by night, is an old feature of popular tales. In both versions the transformation is conditioned on the submission of the husband. Each story is an exemplum in Gower, to illustrate obedience, in Chaucer to prove the Wife's doctrine of the sovereignty of women.

According to the theory suggested by Stokes and developed by Dr Maynadier, the tales of both Chaucer and Gower and some other analogues are indirectly derived from an Irish story, preserved in several forms and related of different heroes. In the oldest Irish version, recorded in a twelfth-century manuscript it is applied to Niall of the Nine Hostages. The hag is visited by several princes who are competing for the kingship, and the fulfilment of her request for a kiss becomes the test of their fitness for sovereignty, which only one (in this instance, Niall) successfully undergoes. In the Irish tale, as in Chaucer's, the hag appears to be acting independently and is not said to be the victim of enchantment. The emphasis, in both stories, on "sovereignty" is also cited as evidence that they are closely related. But, as Dr Beach pointed out, "sovereignty" in the Irish story means "royal rule," whereas in Chaucer it refers to domestic supremacy. At this point, then, the parallel is not very significant. The close connexion of Chaucer's tale with the Irish has hardly been proved, though a Celtic, and specifically Irish, derivation for the English group remains a reasonable theory. The possibility of a French intermediary — such as the lost French "lai breton" assumed long ago by Gaston Paris (Hist Litt, XXX, Paris, 1888, p 102) — must also still be recognized. Cf P Rajna, Rom, XXXII, 233, n.

857 The scene of Gower's story is not laid at King Arthur's court.

860 elf-queene, the fairy queen, cf Thop, VII, 788.

875 undermeles, afternoon. Usually in Chaucer undern refers to the morning.

876 Cf Shopt VII, 91.

881 The meaning apparently is The friar brought only dishonor upon a woman, the incubus always caused conception.

884 fro ryver, from hawking (or the hawking-ground) by the river. Cf Thop, VII, 737, n.

887 maugree hir heed, in spite of her head, in spite of her very life.

904 For parallels to the Sphinx motif, or the life-question, see Maynadier, pp 124 ff.

929-30 Cf RR, 9945 ff.

939 ff. The meaning is probably "There is no one of us that will not luck if anybody scratches us on a sore spot." Some MSS read like (or, corruptly, loke) for like, and the phrase to clawe on the galle might mean to stroke or rub the sore spot soothingly. But the other reading and interpretation better suits the context. Moreover, the phrase was clearly proverbial. Cf the Italian expression "Mi tocca dove mi prude" (of a keen thrust in argument).

950 From RR, 19220.

951 Cf Ovid, Met, xi 174 ff, where the story is told, however, of Midas' barber, not of his wife. Professor Shannon remarks (Chau and the Rom Poets, Cambridge, Mass, 1929, p 319) that the Wife probably got the perverted form of the tale from her fifth husband, and repeated it innocently! For Gower's version of the tale see Conf Am, v, 141 ff. On the Italian-looking form of the name, Myda, see MkT, VII, 2345, n.

961 Cf RR, 16521-30.

968 Cf RR, 16367-68.

990 The dancing ladies correspond to a typical "fairy-ring" such as is repeatedly described in Celtic folk-tales.

1004 Old folks know many things. The idea is proverbial, if not the exact language.

1009 The troth was plighted in this instance by joining hands.

1018 vereth on, wears upon (her). See the note to l 559 above.

1023 Bell noted that the assembly here, with the queen as presiding justice, resembles the courts of love actually held in the Middle Ages. On this institution see W. A. Neilson, Origins and Sources of the Court of Love, [Harv] Studies and Notes, VI. Of course the life penalty was not usually involved in its deliberations.

1067 With the antithesis here Professor Tatlock (Angl., XXXVII, 107 n.) compares Ameto, p. 61, and Il Corbaocio, p. 234, and for the same rhetorical device he notes (more remotely) Ameto, p. 30, and Decameron, vii, 1. Is not the figure equally characteristic of Dante? Cf. "Non donna di provincia, ma bordello" (Purg., vi, 78).

1068 nacroun, perhaps used here in the sense of naisance, birth.

1090 dangerous, fastidious, "difficile."

1109 ff. With this whole discussion of the ballade on Gentilesse Chaucer's treatment of the subject seems to have been influenced by Dante's Convivio, which affords a parallel not only to the recurring phrase old richesse ("antica ricchezza"), but also to the general development of the argument. The passages of the Convivio concerned are the canzone prefixed to the fourth Tractate and chaps. 3, 10, 14, and 15 of this Tractate. In ll. 1126 ff. Chaucer refers definitely to Purg., vii, 121 ff., and there can be little doubt that he also drew upon RR, 6579-92, 18607-896. See Lowes, MP, XIII, 19 ff. On the doctrine in general cf. Vcgt, JEGP, XXIV, 102 ff. It was a commonplace of Christian literature and in no sense an evidence of radical or advanced opinion on the part of Chaucer.

1113 Looke who, probably to be understood as equivalent to "whoever", cf. Looke what, FranklT, V, 992, Looke whan, PardT, VI, 826, Wayte what, I, 517, above.

1118-24 Cf. RR, 18620-34.

1133-38 Cf. particularly Convivio, iv, 15, 19-38, where Dante argues that mere lapse of time, or continuance of a single condition, cannot constitute nobility.

1139-45 This comparison with fire is made, in general terms, in Boethius, ii, pr. 4. It also occurs in Macrobius (Comm. in Somn. Scip., II, xvi, 6) and in Servius (Comm. in Vergili Carmina, ed. Thilo and Hagen, Leipzig, 1883-84, II, 101, ll. 15-21), and certain detailed correspondences make it appear probable that Chaucer used Servius, or perhaps his source (See Lowes, MP, XV, 199).

1140 the mount of Caucasous, perhaps from Boethius, ii, pr. 7, 30.

1142 lye, blaze.

1152-58 Cf. Dante's canzone (prefixed to Convivio, iv) ll. 34-37, and the prose comment in Convivio, iv, 7, 87-92.

1158 Cf. RR, 2083 (Rom, 2181 f.).

1162-63 Cf. Dante's canzone, 112-16 and the comment in Convivio, iv, 20, 24-28, 47-57.

1165 See Valerius Maximus, iii, c. 4.

1168 See Seneca, Epist. xlv.

1170 Cf. RR, 18802-05.

1178 f. Cf. II Cor. viii, 9.

1183 ff. Mainly from Seneca, Epist. xvii. See also Haecckel, p. 8, no. 28.

1187 Cf. RR, 18566.

1191-94 The quotation from Juvenal (Sat., x, 21) also occurs in Dante's discussion of "gentilesse" (Convivio, iv, 13, 101-10). Chaucer also alludes to it in Bo, ii, pr. 5, 198 ff., perhaps because of a gloss which he was using.

1195 The source is indicated in the margin of MS El — "Secundus philosophus Paulus pertas est odibile bonum, sanitas mater, curarum remocio, sapientie reparatrix, possessio sine calumpnia." This is from a collection of Gnomae, preserved in both Greek and Latin, and attributed to Secundus. See Fabricius, Bibl. Graeca, lib. vi, cap. x (XIII, Hamburg, 1726, p. 573). The passage quoted is in Vincent of Beauvais, Spec. Historiale, x, 71.

1200 The following marginal note in MS El (from Jerome, Adv. Jov., ii, 9, Migne, 298) probably indicates that Chaucer meant to add lines on Crates: "Unde et Crates ille Thebanus, projecto in mari non parvo aurum pondere, Abite inquit pessime male cupiditates ego vos mergam, ne ipse mergar a vobis."

1203 f. Cf. RR, 4953-56 (Rom, 5551 f.), also Bo, ii, pr. 8, 37 ff., and Fortune 9 f., 32, 34.

1208 auctoritee text. Cf. WB Prol, III, 1.

1210 Cf. PardT, VI, 743.

1245 to seeme, the so-called inflected infinitive. See the Grammatical Introduction.

1249 curtyn, curtain. Cf. MerchT, IV, 1817, Tr, iii, 674.

1258 ff. Cf. ShpT, VII, 175 ff.

The Friar's Prologue

The Friar's Prologue and Tale were probably written shortly after those of the Wife, with which they are brought into close connection. On the dates of the whole series see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Wife of Bath's Prologue (p. 801 above).

The quarrel between the Friar and the Summoner is probably to be understood as an old one, which began long before the pilgrimages. In fact, as Professor Tupper has remarked (Types, p. 56 f.), it reflects the traditional enmity of mendicants and possessors. For interesting speculation about the two pilgrims and the persons and localities in their stories see E. P. Kuhl, PMLA, XXXVIII, 123, and MLN, XL, 321 ff., and Manly, New Light, pp. 103 ff. The friar in the Summoner's Tale, Professor Manly reasons, was not a Cistercian but of the same order as the Canterbury Friar, who must have been a Franciscan on the evidence of the scurrilous anecdote in the Summoner's Prologue. The only Franciscan house was at Beverley, the seat of the archdeacon of the East Riding. Greyfriars of Beverley were actually collecting funds for a building when Chaucer was writing. The archdeacon in the Friar's Tale Mr Manly identifies conjecturally with Richard de Ravenser (or de Beverley), one of the canons of Beverley Minster and archdeacon of Lincoln (1368-1386). His name appears often in the Life Records of Chaucer. Mr Kuhl (MLN, XL, 325 ff) saw in the character rather a reference to Walter Skirlawe, archdeacon of Holderness. The claims of the two are compared by Mr Manly, pp 112 ff.

Both tales have a northern complexion. The Summoner's is definitely put at Holderness. The language in both, though not out-and-out dialect, as in the speech of the Cambridge students in the Reeve's Tale, points to a northerly locality. Mr Manly (New Light, p 106) cites, for example, Brock, Scot, hayt, tholed caples, thou last.

1276 auctoritees, texts, quotations, a reference to l 1208 above.

1284 mandementz, summonses to the archdeacon's court.

1295-96 In MS Ha these lines follow what is here printed as l 1308. Koch suggests that they should be canceled entirely (Est, XLVII, 366).

The Friar's Tale

No definite source of the Friar's Tale has been found, or is likely to be. The chief interest lies in Chaucer's vivid description and his brilliant presentation of character and situation. The story itself, told here at the expense of a summoner, is known in a number of versions, applied to various functionaries — a seneschal, a judge, a lawyer, and the like. The devil's trick turns, of course, on the popular belief that a curse is effective when it comes from the heart. Two versions of the tale from fifteenth-century collections are printed in the Originals and Analogues (Ch Soc), pp 103 ff. Another version, in Caesarius Heisterbacensis Lib VIII Miraculorum, Romische Quartalschrift Suppl XIII, Rome, 1901, pp 90 f., is cited by Forster in Herrig's Arch, CX, 427. For further information of J A Herbert, Ward's Catalogue of Romances, III, London, 1910, p 592, R Th Christensen, The Norwegian Fairytales, FF Com no 46, Helsinki, 1922, p 34, no 1185, A Taylor PMLA, XXXVI, 35 ff., Andrae, Angl Beibl, XXVII, 85 ff. References to a number of modern analogues are given in Koch's notes to Hertzberg's translation of the Canterbury Tales, Berlin, 1925, p 527.

1309 usure the taking of interest, which was forbidden by the Canon Law Symonye, the buying or selling of ecclesiastical preferment, so named from Simon, in Acts viii, 18 ff.

1314 Skeat interprets "No fine could save the accused from punishment." Probably it means rather "No fine ever escaped him," i e., he never failed to impose one. Cf Gen Prol, I, 658-58.

1317 The bishop's crosier is shaped at the end like a hook.

1322 On sly of KnT, I, 1444, n. Here it perhaps has its modern connotation.

1323 espaiville, set of spies (collective).

1327 Cf "as mad as a March hare." See Skeat, EE Prov p 115, no 272. Professor Tatlock (Flugel Memorial Volume, Stanford Univ, 1916, p 230) also discerns a pun on hare and harlotrye. But this is doubtful.

1329 The mendicant orders were not subject to the bishops.

1332 Peter, by Saint Peter Styves, houses of all-fame. These were licensed and exempted from ecclesiastical control.

1334 with myschance and with mysaventure, an imprecation. Cf MLT, II, 896, and n.

1340 Cf WB Prol, III, 415. The hure was a piece of leather furnished with feathers to resemble a small bird. It was used to recall the falcon which had flown at its prey.

1349 atte nale at the ale-house, for atten ale, with transposed n.

1350 f. John xii, 6.

1356 sur Robert and sur Hurwe were probably priests. See the note on Sir John, NP Prol, VII, 2810.

1365 "You need not take any more trouble in this case."

1369 dogge for the bowe, a dog to follow up a deer.

1373 "And because that was the substance of his income." Cf the contrast between fruit and chaff.

1377 ribbe, cf rebekke, l 1573. Both forms, meaning literally a fiddle, were used as cant terms for "old woman." Skeat suggests a pun on rebekke and Rebecca who is named in the marriage service. A further play on the Latin words "vetula" and "vidua" is probably also involved.

1380 ff. The description is strikingly like that of the Yeoman in the Gen Prol, I, 101 ff. It has been suggested that the green clothing of the Summoner's companion has a further significance here as revealing his supernatural, i e., devilish, origin. See Garrett, JEGP, XXIV, 129, with a reference to the Green Knight, whose color connects him with the Celtic underworld.

1413 In the mention of the north contree there is a veiled revelation of the Yeoman's character. For both in biblical tradition and in Germanic mythology the North is associated with the infernal regions. See Isaiah xiv, 13, 14, also Gregory's Commentary on Job, Bk xvii, c 24 (Migne, Pat Lat, LXXVI, 26). Cf further F B Gummere, Founders of England, New York, 1930, p 418, n., and Haverford College Studies, I (1889), 118 ff. Professor Manly cites also the proverb, "Ab Aquilone omne malum."

1436 Still proverbial, cf Skeat, EE Prov, pp 115 f., no 273.

1451 Cf Gen Prol, I, 256, and n.

1467 jogelour, originally "joculator," minstrel, here "juggler." The word degenerated in meaning

1475 Cf Ecdl m, 1, also Cl Prol, IV, 6, MerchT, IV, 1972, Tr, n, 989, m, 855, Haeckel, p 43, no 145

1491 Job 1, 12, n, 6

1502-03 The allusion to St Dunstan has not been explained. For the story of how he thrust burning tongs into the Devil's nose, see the metrical legend in Matzner's Altenglische Sprachproben I, Berlin, 1867, p 171 ff. Skeat refers also to the "Lay of St Dunstan" in the Ingoldsby Legends. For instances of fiends in the service of the apostles he cites the Lives of Saints ed Horstmann, EETS, 1887, pp 36, 368. Cf also Acts xix, 15

1510-11 Philonissa, the name commonly applied to the Witch of Endor. See I Chron x, 13 (Vulg) and cf "muher pythomem habens," I Sam xxviii, 7. According to a common theory the spirit of Samuel was not raised, but he was personated by the Devil. This was cited in discussion of witchcraft to prove that the Devil could represent a good man.

1518 The summoner, he declares, will be better fitted for a professional chair in the subject than such authorities on the lower world as Virgil and Dante

1528 Cf KnT, I, 1131 ff

1543 Hayt, a cry used by drivers to make their horses go. Skeat's note cites a number of instances. Brok (lit badger) was applied to gray horses. Scot is said to be still a common name for horses in East Anglia. Cf Gen Prol, I, 616

1553 Such appearances of the Devil to seize what has been assigned to him are not uncommon. Cf Child's English and Scottish Popular Ballads, I (Boston, 1882), 219 f, and for further references see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the PrT

1560 It is doubtful whether one should read to stoupe, with change of construction, or to stoupe, an emphatic compound. See the note on to swynke, ParAT, VI, 519

1561 With this use of ther as an expletive in clauses of blessing or cursing cf KnT, I, 2815, and n

1564 Sennie Loy, St Elmgus. Cf Gen Prol, I, 120, and n. Here St Loy is invoked as the patron of blacksmiths and carriers. On this aspect of his cult cf Lowes, Rom Rev, V, 382 ff. A story there cited is included, under the title "Christ and the Smith," in Aarne's Types of the Folk-Tale, tr S Thompson (FF Com, no 74, Helsinki, 1928), p 118, no 753. For further parallels see C Marstrand, in the Miscellany Presented to Kuno Meyer, Halle, 1912, pp 371 ff

1568 Cf RR, 10299 f

1570 upon carage by way of quitting any claim to his cart and team. Cf ParsT, X, 752, Bo, 1, pr 4, 79

1573 rebecke, old woman. See the note on 1377, above

1576 Twelve pence was equivalent to twenty-five shillings or more today

1582 vrytrate another contemptuous term for an old woman, perhaps related to "trot" or "trat," often used in the same sense

1595 a libel, a copy of the indictment

1602 Com of. The expression was probably first applied to calling off the dogs from game, cf Mill, I, 3728, PF, 494

1613 sennie Anne, the mother of the Blessed Virgin. See the Gospel of the Nativity of Mary (B H Cowper's Apocryphal Gospels, 5th ed, London, 1881, pp 85 ff) or Legenda Aurea (ed Graesse, 2d ed, Leipzig 1850) cap cccxxi, p 934

1630 stot, usually stallion or bullock, here a term of abuse for the old woman

1647 Paul, possibly to be read as a dissyllable, Powel. Otherwise the line is defective. The editors supply and

1652 For the somewhat unusual reference to hell as a houe, Mr Spencer (Speculum, II, 197 f) cites parallels in the Middle Engl Vision of St Paul (l 140, ed R Morris, An Old English Miscellany, EETS, 1872, p 227) and the romance of the Holy Grail (ed Furnivall, EETS, 1875, ch xxxiii, 108 ff). Cf also infernos domos, Boethius, m, n 12, and the Homeric Αιδος δομον (or δομου)

1657 Ps x, 9

1661 1 Cor x, 13

The Summoner's Prologue

No literary source has been found for the Summoner's account of the last abode of friars, but the punishment itself was certainly not invented by Chaucer. The mention of it in the Roman (l 7575 f) where it is not restricted to friars, may be due to the present passage. But a number of other references to it, usually in vulgar jests or curses, have been collected. See Kaluza, Chau und der Rosenroman, Berlin, 1893, p 237; Fansler, p 165; Kittredge, [Harv Stud and Notes, I, 21, Brusendorf], p 411. To the examples given by these scholars may be added Merlin Coctae, I, 135 (cited in Littré's dictionary, s v "cul," from Lacourne de Sainte-Palaye). The same repulsive conception is also represented in ecclesiastical art. See T Spencer, in Speculum, II, 196 f, who cites particularly the fresco of hell in the Campo Santo at Pisa and Grotto's Last Judgment in the Arena Chapel at Padua. The particular form of the jest in the Summoner's Prologue may have originated as a vulgarization of the tale, of contrary import, about a Cistercian monk, who found that his brethren in heaven dwelt under the palm of the Blessed Virgin. See Caesarius Heisterbacensis, Dialogus Miraculorum, vii, 59 (Cologne, 1851, II, 79 f), and of Tatlock, MLN, XXIX, 143

1685 Yis, the emphatic form of assent, used here in response to the negative implication of the question, that no friars go to hell. "Yes, on the contrary, many million" is the answer

1688 Cf Dante's description of the wings of Satan, Inf., xxxiv, 48

1692 furlong-wey, applied to time, cf MLT, II, 557, and n

1693 On this figure of the bees, which Chaucer has again in Tr., I, 193, and iv, 1356, see Angl., XIV, 243 f

The Summoner's Tale

The Summoner's Tale is mainly a description of the methods of a begging friar. The jest which makes the point of the story was doubtless a current anecdote. A somewhat similar story, entitled Le Dis de la Veschie a Prestre (The Story of the Priest's Bladder), by Jakes de Basu or Baisieux, is printed in the Originals and Analogues (Ch. Soc.), pp 137 ff, and another is recorded of a bequest of Jean de Meun to the Jacobin friars. See Koeppl Angl., XIV, 256, Of Ch III 452. On special literary influences see F Tupper, JEGP, XV, 74 f 1710 Holderness, in the southeast corner of Yorkshire. On the possibility that Chaucer may have been interested in the place partly because of his acquaintance with Sir Peter Bukton, see E P Kuhl, PMLA, XXXVIII, 115 ff, and of the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Envoy to Bukton. Professor Manly (New Light, pp 119 ff) prefers to identify the lord of that village (I 2165) as Michael de la Pole. Until 1386, he observes, the de la Poles were the greatest lords in Holderness. Chaucer also seems pretty surely to have known the family. Mr Manly queries whether Ravenser, whom he takes to be the original of the archdeacon, owed his preferment to Michael de la Pole and was ungrateful, and so incurred Chaucer's satire.

1717 A trental was an office of thirty masses for souls in purgatory. Cf The Trentals of St Gregory, in Political, Religious, and Love Poems, ed Furnivall, EETS (1866), pp 83 ff (1903), pp 114 ff. Cf Wells, 172 789 956, 1007, 1051, 1108. The masses were usually said on thirty successive days. But sometimes they were all said in one day, and the friar suggests below (I 1726) that this is better because it delivers the soul sooner.

1722 possessorers, the regular monastic orders and the beneficed clergy. Later references in the tale seem to apply particularly to the latter. The friars, in contrast to the possessorers, were supposed to have no endowments and no private property.

1723 Thanked be God. This ejaculation, which Skeat attributes to the Summoner, is rather a bit of pious hypocrisy on the part of the friar.

1727 "A secular priest, without incurring condemnation for being jolly or gay, will sing only one mass in a day."

1730 The punishments mentioned are found in many of the mediæval descriptions of hell. Cf particularly Dante's Inferno

Burning is commonly associated with both hell and purgatory, the torture with flesh-hooks and awls, in the hands of devils, more commonly with hell. But it is mentioned in various accounts of St Patrick's Purgatory. See JEGP, XIX, 377 ff. On the meaning of oules see T Spencer, Speculum, II, 196.

1734 The full formula is "qui cum Patre et Spiritu Sancto vivit et regnat per omnia secula seculorum."

1745 Ascaunces, as if, as though, cf CYT, VIII, 838, also Tr., I, 205, and 292 (where it corresponds to the Italian "quasi dicesse," introducing a quotation). It was explained by Skeat as a compound of "as" and the OF "quances," as if. But this hybrid combination has been questioned by Professor C H Livingston, who prefers to assume an unrecorded OF "escaunces" as the source. See MLR, XX, 71 f.

1747 A Goddes kechyl lit "a little cake of God." Cf a Goddes halfpeny, I 1749, and the French phrases, "un bel écu de Dieu," "une bête au monde de Dieu" cited by Tyrwhitt. He explains them (quoting M de la Moynoye, Contes de B D Periers, II, 107) as expressions of the common people, who piously attribute everything to God.

1755 hostes man, servant to the guests. ME "hoste" occurs rarely in the sense of "guest," which is common in the case of OF "hoste."

1760 Cf RR, 11332 ('sert de fable')

1770 Deus hac, God be here.

1778 go walked, gone a-walking. Walked is probably for a-walked, like a-blakeberied, Pard ProL, VI, 406.

1792 glose, interpretation, comment. Cf ML Epil II, 1180, MKT, VII, 2140.

1794 II Cor II, 6.

1803 narve, tightly. Professor Manly is doubtless right in holding that the kiss was a usual mode of salutation. But the tight embrace and the churkyng are not altogether in keeping with the office and character of the priest.

1810 God amende defautes, God mend my defects, a deprecatory reply to his compliments.

1817 grope, examine at confession.

1820 Cf Luke v, 10, Matt iv, 19.

1824 On the form seinte see Gen ProL, I, 120, n.

1834 Ire is the third in the regular list of the Seven Deadly Sins.

1838 Je vous dy sans doute, I tell you without doubt. Cf I 1832 above. These French phrases were in familiar use and do not necessarily indicate that Chaucer was following a French source.

1845 Cf John iv, 34, Job xxiii, 12.

1854 ff. This is a typical example of the "somnia coeleste" or dream which was supposed to be a divine revelacoun. On the belief in such visions see Curry, p 214, citing especially St Augustine, De Genesi ad Litteram, lib XII, cap 7 (Migne, Pat Lat XXXIV, 459), and De Spiritu et Anima, caps 24, 25 (Migne, XL, 796 ff)

1859 fermerer, for enfermerer, the friar in charge of the infirmary

1862 One of the privileges of friars who, after fifty years of service, "made their jubilee" was to go about alone instead of in pairs

1866 In acknowledgment of the miraculous vision they sang a song of thanksgiving, "Te deum laudamus," and nothing else

1872 burel folk, the larty, perhaps so called from the material of their clothing

1876 The following passage about friars, as Professor Tupper has noted (MLN, XXX, 8 f) seems to contain several reminiscences of Jerome, Adv Jovinianum With ll 1876 ff he compares lib n, caps 11, 17, with ll 1885 ff, 1915 ff, cap 15 (Migne, Pat Lat, XXIII, 300, 310, 305)

1877 See Luke xvi 19 ff

1880 In MS E1 is the marginal note "Me-lus est animam saginare quam corpus," of uncertain source Cf also Jean de Meun, Testament l 345 "Amegrent leurs ames plus que leurs cors n'engressent" (in RR, ed Méon, Paris, 1814, IV)

1881 f Cf 1 Tim vi, 8

1885 ff Exod xxxiv, 28

1890 ff 1 Kings xix, 8

1898 f Levit x, 9

1916-17 It is possible, but by no means certain, that a pun is intended here on the words chaced and chaast On word-play in Chaucer of Gen Prolog, I, 297, n

1922 by, concerning

1923 Matt v, 3

1928 duffye, distrust

1929 In view of the use of St. Jerome's treatise Adversus Jovinianum in the early part of Fragment III and of the parallels noted in the present tale, it is clear that the reference here is to Jerome's adversary rather than to the mythical emperor of the Gesta Romanorum (as suggested in the Globe ed.)

1930 Skeat notes St. Jerome's description of Jovinian (i, 40, Migne, Pat Lat, XXIII, 268) "iste formosus monachus, crassus, nitidus, dealbatus, et quasi sponsus semper incensus"

1934 Ps xlv, 2 (Vulg) "Eructavit cor meum verbum bonum" The summoner is playing on the literal meaning of "eructare," to belch Chaucer apparently used, or adapted, a current joke Mr J A McPeck has called the editor's attention to a similar representation of a drunken man's repetition of a psalm in a Latin prose satire under the name of Gohas (The Latin Poems attributed to Walter Mapes, ed Thos Wright, Camden Soc, London, 1841, p xlv) "eructatando mchoat, 'Laudate Dominum, puif, omnis gens, landate, puif, et omnis spiritus laudet, puif'" But in this case there is no pun on the text of the psalm

1937 James 1, 22

1943 St Yve, probably the patron saint of Brittany See ShipT, VII, 227 (identical with this line), and n

1944 On the practice of admitting lay brothers and sisters to a religious fraternity (a favorite means of obtaining gifts) see H B Workman, John Wyclif, Oxford, 1926, II, 107

1958 confusourum, run

1968 In the margin of MS E1 is the note "Omnis virtus unita fortior est seipsa dispersa" The quotation is unidentified, for the idea of Aesop's fable of the bundle of sticks, also Boethius, iii, pr 11

1973 Luke x, 7 Cf Haeckel, p 13, no 43

1980 "In the life of St Thomas of India" St Thomas the Apostle is said to have preached in India and built many churches See Legenda Aurea (ed Graesse, 2d ed, Leipzig, 1850), cap v, pp 32 ff, and cf A, Dickson, Valentine and Orson, N Y, 1929, p 230 On the order of words of CIT, IV, 1170, n

1989 Ecclus iv, 30

1994 f Imitated from RR, 16591 ff Virgil's "snake in the grass" (Eclouge, iii, 93) is referred to

2001-03 From RR, 9800-04, which goes back to Ovid, Ars Amat, n, 376 Cf also Aen, v, 6, and Seneca, Medea, 579 ff

2004 MS Ha adds

Schortly may no man by rym and vers

Tellen her thoughts thaty ben so dyvers from RR, 16334-36 On spurious couplets inserted after ll 2012, 2037, 2048, see the textual note

2005 "One of the chief of the Seven (Deadly Sins)" With the homily on Ire, which follows, cf ParsT, X, 533 ff

2018 Senek, Seneca The three anecdotes are found in the De Ira, but may have been taken by Chaucer from some secondary source For the first see Bk, i, ch 18

2042 dude doon sleen, the repetition of the causative do is unusual Cf leest Doon in SqT, V, 45 f

2043 See the De Ira, iii, 14

2075 "Placebo Domino in regione vivorum," Ps cxiv, 9 (Vulg) This begins an anthem in the office for the dead Placebo, "I will please," came to be used proverbially for flattering complaisance Cf ParsT, X, 617 also Dan Michel, Ayenbite of Inwyrt, ed Morris, EETS, 1866, p 60, Bacon's Essay of Counsel, also the modern term "placebos" for the sugar pills given by physicians to patients who insist on having a remedy

2079 See the De Ira, iii, 21

2080 Gysen, a name of uncertain origin Seneca and Herodotus (i, 139, 202, v, 52) call the river Gyndes, so also Orosius (ii, 6)

2085 he, Solomon See Prov xxii, 24, 25

2090 "As exact as a carpenter's square", cf Skeat, EE Prov, p 116, no 274

2107 On Christ's harrowing of hell see Mult, I, 3512, n

2113 Koeppel would derive the comparison of the friars with the sun from Cicero's similar figure for friendship (De Amicitia, viii, 47) The passage is cited in Peraldus's Summa de Virtutibus See Herrig's Arch, CXXVI, 180 f

2116 Elye, Elias, Elijah, Elise Eliseus Elisha The Carmelites claimed that their order was founded by Elijah on Mt Carmel See I Kings xviii, 19, 20

2126 Cf l 1944 above, and n

2162 the court, the manor-house

2173 Apparently a proverbial comparison

2186 He had received the degree of Master of Divinity

2187 Matt xxiii 7 f, Mark xii, 38 f

2196 Matt v, 13

2215 with meschauce, an imprecation So also is with harde grace, l 2228, probably to be taken

2231 an impossible, Cf WB Prol, III, 688, and n

2233 f Cf the long exposition of the theory of sound in HF, 765 ff

2244 Cf Gen Prol I, 100

2289 Piholomee, corruptly spelled Proholomee in some of the best MSS This might account for the loss of the second as, supplied by Skeat The mistake in the name can hardly be Chaucer's For the association of Euclid and Ptolemy of RR, 16171

2294 at town, 1 e, at Sittingbourne

FRAGMENT IV

Fragment IV, consisting of the Clerk's Prologue and Tale and the Merchant's Prologue and Tale, is not definitely connected at the beginning with the Summoner's Tale But its position in the best MSS is between Fragments III and V, and there can be little doubt that Chaucer intended that order In fact, IV and V are really connected, as they stand, and might be regarded as one group

On the position of Fragment IV in the different classes of MSS see Miss Hammond, p 302

The Clerk's Prologue

2 f Cf Gen Prol, I, 840 f, RR, 1000

6 Eccl iii, 1 Cf FrT, III, 1475, and n

7 as beh, on this use of as (pleonastic) see KNT, I, 2302, n

10 f Cf the Fr proverb, "ku en jou entre jou consente", and Skeat, EE Prov, p 116, no 275

12 This reference to friars fits the preceding tale, whether or not it was written with that in mind

16 colours, rhetorical ornaments a term frequently employed by Geoffroi de Vinsauf Cf his Nova Poetria, 1094 ff (ed Faral Les Arts Poétiques du xi^e et du xii^e Siècle, Paris, 1924, pp 231 ff) his De Modo et Arte Distandi et Versificandi, ii, 3 (Faral, pp 284 ff), and his De Colomibus Rhetoricis (Faral, pp 321 ff) See H B Hinkley, MP, XVI, 39, of further C S Baldwin PMLA, XLII, 106 ff For general discussion of Chaucer's knowledge of the rhetoricians see Manly, Chaucer and the Rhetoricians, Brit Acad, 1926

18 Heigh style (also in l 41), apparently derived from the misreading "stylo alto" for "stylo alio" in the letter which accompanied Petrarch's version of the tale of Griselda (Ch Soc Org and Anal, p 170)

26 Many have inferred from this passage that Chaucer himself met Petrarch in Italy But there is no real evidence of the meeting, and the chances are against it The Clerk's statement, of course, proves nothing It is more likely to be an acknowledgment, in a traditional form, of literary indebtedness, than testimony to a personal experience See for some account of the convention, Professor G L Hendrickson, MP, IV, 179 ff, and of M Praz, Monthly Criterion, VI, 144 f For evidence that Chaucer had little opportunity to visit Petrarch, see the discussion of his first Italian journey by Professor F J Mather, MLN, XI, 210 ff, XII, 1 ff Further references on the whole subject are given by Miss Hammond, pp 305 ff, see also Wells, pp 611, 726

29 Petrarch died July 18, 1374 Professor A S Cook notes (Rom Rev, VIII, 222 f) that he was never literally nayled in his chest, but that his body was laid uncoffined in a sarcophagus Of course Chaucer's phrase meant no more than that Petrarch was "dead and buried"

31 With this tribute to Petrarch Professor Lowes (PMLA, XIX, 641, n) compares Deschamps's famous lines on Chaucer Both here and in M&T, VII 2325, the best MSS support the spelling Petrark rather than Petrarch There are parallels for it in French, Latin, and Italian documents, and Petrarch's father was regularly called "Petracco" But the best authorized spelling for the poet's own name was "Petraeca" or "Petrarcha" See Tatlock, Dev and Chron, p 159, G L Hamilton MLN, XXIII, 171 f, and A S Cook, Rom Rev, VIII, 218

34 Lyngan, Giovanni da Lignaco (or Legnano) (circa 1310-1383), the eminent Professor of Canon Law at Bologna He wrote on law, ethics, theology, and astronomy For an account of his life, see A S Cook, Rom Rev VIII, 353 ff

Professor Cook argues that Chaucer used the term philosophus here with special reference to natural philosophy

41 ff The explicit reference here to the written form of Petrarch's tale rather counts against the supposition of a personal meeting between him and Chaucer

43 prohemye, poem, introduction The reference is really to the first section of the tale Except for Mount Vesuvius (which is Petrarch's Latin form for Mt Viso), Chaucer gives the places in the story their French names. This has been taken as an indication that he was following a French translation or Petrarch.

- 51 To Emeleward, towards Emilia
 54 impertinent, irrelevant
 55 conveyen his mateere, introduce (lit "escort") his matter

The Clerk's Tale

The source of the Clerk's Tale, as definitely acknowledged in the Prologue, is Petrarch's Latin story, De Obedientia ac Fide Uxoriam Mythologia. This is in turn a translation from Boccaccio, Decamerone, x, 10. The Italian and Latin texts are both printed in the Chaucer Society's Originals and Analogues, pp 153 ff. Chaucer's version corresponds so closely in many places to Petrarch's, that he is generally held to have followed the Latin text. Whether he also used other redactions of the story has been the subject of considerable discussion. Dr W E Farnham (MLN, XXXIII 193 ff) has pointed out a number of passages which appear to have been influenced by Boccaccio's Italian. They are possibly to be explained by the existence of marginal quotations in the MS of Petrarch's Latin. At all events, neither these parallels nor those noted in other tales suffice to prove that Chaucer was acquainted with the Decameron. There can be no doubt, however, that the story of Griselda was known to him in a French translation. Professor Cook (Rom Rev, VIII, 210 ff) argued that Chaucer consulted the version which is preserved in Le Menager de Paris (ed Pichon, 2 v, Paris, 1846), or one nearly like it. But Dr J B Severs, in an article of which he has kindly given the editor a copy (since published in PMLA, XLVII, 431 ff), has shown that another French translation (in MS Fr 1165, Bibliothèque Nationale) stands much closer to Chaucer's text. Some of the more significant parallels pointed out by Dr Severs are recorded in the following notes. Dr Severs has also collated the published text of Petrarch's Latin, reprinted in the Originals and Analogues from the Basel edition of 1581 with that of three MSS (Bibl Nat Lat, 11291, 16233, and 17165). The Basel text is on the whole closest to Chaucer's.

With Chaucer's use of a French version of the Clerk's Tale may be compared what is known or surmised concerning his recourse to French translations of Lucan, and Ovid, and Boethius. See MLT, II, 400, n., MLT, VII, 2671, n., and the introductions to the Explanatory Notes on LGW and Bo.

On the general history of the Griselda story, see Landau, Quellen des Dekameron, Stuttgart, 1884, pp 156 ff. R Kohler, Kleinere Schriften, Berlin, 1900, II, 501 ff, Westenholz, Die Griseldis-sage in der Literaturgeschichte, Heidelberg, 1888, Kate Laserstem, Der Griseldisstoff in der Weltliteratur, Weimar, 1926. Further references are given in Aarne's Types of the Folk-Tale, tr S Thompson, FF Com, no 74, Helsinki, 1925, p 133, no 887, and p 68, no 425 A, and (especially for modern versions) in Koch's notes to Hertzberg's translation of the Canterbury Tales, Berlin, 1925, pp 531 ff.

The Griselda story is one of the most familiar and popular in European literature. Most treatments of the subject, like Chaucer's, are based directly or indirectly on the Decameron. So Boccaccio may be called, in a real sense, the creator of the type. He at least gave it the literary form by which it has been known all over the world, and no source of his version has been discovered. But Petrarch, in the letter which accompanied his Latin translation, implies that Boccaccio drew upon Italian popular tradition, and modern investigation has found the elements of the story to be widely dispersed in folklore. Four Griselda mährchen published by R Kohler in Gosche's Archiv, I, 409 ff, have been shown to represent versions probably older than Boccaccio's. (See E Castle, in Archivum Romanicum, VIII, 281 ff.) And in two recent investigations the general body of related folk-tales has been fully examined. Dr D D Griffith (The Origin of the Griselda Story, Univ of Washington Pub in Lang & Lit, VIII, Seattle, 1931), following a suggestion made some time ago by Professor Kittredge, has shown that Boccaccio's story is ultimately derived from a combination of the Cupid and Psyche tale with another of the type of the Lai le Fraunce or the ballad of Fair Anne. Mr W A Cate, in a study not yet completed, but of which one chapter has been published in Stud Phil, XXIX, 389 ff, has collected evidence to prove that the two elements were not first combined by Boccaccio. On the contrary he finds that the entire Griselda story is accounted for by what he calls the "western version" of the Cupid and Psyche type—represented by upwards of forty tales in western Europe (see p 394, n.). Mr Cate has very kindly supplied the editor with information about the progress and results of his study. His conclusions are also briefly indicated in his published article, which gives an excellent statement of the whole problem.

In its ultimate origin the story of Griselda is doubtless a fairy-tale. For an attempt to discern some survivals of a supernatural character in the heroine in Chaucer's version, see W H Schofield, Eng Lit from the Norman Conquest to Chaucer, London, 1906, pp 193 f. Cf also Le Moyen Age, III, 182 f. The husband was originally an other-world visitant, and persecutions like those of Griselda were not infrequently made to serve supernatural or magic ends. Cf, for a single example, the Irish tale of disenchantment (of partly dissimilar plot) in Dr Douglas Hyde's An Sgeuludhe Gaodhalach, n, 123, no 17

(trans by Dottin Annales de Bretagne XII, 245 f.)

The Clerk's Tale has usually been regarded as one of Chaucer's earlier works, written shortly after his first Italian journey. Thus Skeat put it about 1373 and Mr Pollard accepted a date in the seventies (see Oxf Chau, III 454, Pollard Chaucer Primer, London, 1893, p 68). These scholars of course recognized that certain modifications were made to fit the tale to its place in the Canterbury series. Recently there has been a disposition to put the whole composition of the piece in the Canterbury period. See particularly Professor Tatlock's discussion, Dev and Chron, pp 156 ff. He shows that, as in the case of the Man of Law's Tale general arguments from the stanzaic meter or from the mediæval character of the poem are by no means conclusive as to early composition. For further discussion, with a reasonable statement of the grounds for assigning the work to the Canterbury period, see Professor K Sisam's separate edition of the tale (Oxford, 1923).

Passages noted below as Chaucer's additions to Petrarch may be accounted for by Dr Severs's French version, which is not yet published.

53 roote, "foot", Petrarch, "ad radicem Vesuli" (p 153)

76 "Save in some things in which he was at fault." On the sense of to blame see Gen ProL I, 375, n

88 f that he, equivalent to a relative. On such loose constructions cf KnT, I 2710, n

107 and evere han doon. Skeat interprets "and (both you and your doings) have ever brought it about." But it is simpler, and quite in accord with Middle English construction, to understand the passage "So well you and all your works please us and ever have." Us lyketh you is itself inconsistent in construction the pronoun you apparently standing as object of the impersonal us lyketh.

113 f Cf Barbour's Bruce, I, 266-68

118 f Cf ML Intro, II 20, n

155 ff With the discussion of heredity here of the treatment of gentillesse in WBT, III 1109 ff, and in Gentillesse

157 Bountee, goodness Petrarch "Quercuid in homme bon est" (p 155)

206 f A reference to the Nativity, Luke II, 7

212 oon the faueste, cf FranklIT V, 734, also oon the beste, Tr, I, 1081, oon the leeste Tr, II, 1310, oon the beste ypreysed Tr, v, 1473

For this construction, which was regular in AS and Mid Eng. Mod Eng has substituted "one of the fairest, best," etc (followed by a plural). Some passages show a confusion of the two constructions. Cf oon of the gretteste thyng, Mel VII, 1678, oon of the gretteste auctour, NPT, VII, 2984, also FranklIT, V, 932, and Tr, v, 832. For further discussion of the idiom see L Kellner, His- torical Outlines of Eng Syntax London 1892, pp 110 ff, Hinchley MP, XVI, 46 C Stoffel, ESt, XXVII 253 ff

215-17 Chaucer's addition

220 rype and sad corage, "a mature and steadfast heart", "courage meur et ancien," MS 1165 (Severs) PMLA, XLVII, 438,

227 shredde and seeth for hir lyvinge, shoed and boiled for their sustenance

229 kepte on-lofte, kept aloft, sustained

237 in sad wyse seriously

253 hath doon make has caused (somebody) to make, has had made Cf I 1098, below, and KnT, I, 1913, n

260-94 Considerably expanded in Chaucer

260 undren, 9 A M Petrarch, "hora prandu" (pp 156 f)

266 Either "to farthest Italy" or "as far as Italy extends" (last, the contracted form of lasteith)

276 Professor Manly notes that the well here mentioned perhaps preserves a trace of a spring or lake which marked the entrance to the other world in the original version

336 nevare erst never before. On this use of the superlative, see KnT, I, 1566, n

350 you avyse, deliberate, with the implication of refusal. The editors compare the formula "leroy's avysera," used in withholding the royal consent to a proposed measure

364 For to be deed though I were to die. See KnT, I, 1133, n, and 1587, n

375-76 The disinchnation of the ladies to handle Griselda's clothing is mentioned in MS 1165, but not in Petrarch's Latin or the French version in the Ménagier (Severs, p 439)

381 corone, nuptial garland Cf SecNT, VIII, 220, n, Tr, II, 1735, n

403 dorste han swore i.e. the contrary Cf KnT, I, 1089, n

413 Cf MLT, II, 532, Tr, I, 1078

422 honestete honor, nobility Cf the gloss in MSS El Hg Dd "Sic Walterus humili quidem set insigni ac prospero matrimonio honestatis summa dei in pace," etc. Professor Hendrickson (MP, IV, 191) points out that "honestatis" (so in Orig and Anal p 159) is probably an error for Petrarch's original reading, "honestatus"

429 "Knew all a wife's domestic work"

431 The commune profit (repeated ironically in l 1194) has been called a "favorite phrase of fourteenth-century Socialism." It certainly recurs often in works on social questions or on the duties of a prince. For instances of its use see NED s.vv Common, Profit, also H R Patch, JEGP, XXIX, 381 f (with references to other articles)

432 ff Cook notes (PQ, IV, 27) that the corresponding passage in Petrarch rests upon Pilatus' Latin translation of Odyssey, vii, 73 f

444 Al had hire levere, a confusion of hve were levere and she had levere

- 452 tempte, test, prove 459-62 Chaucer's addition
 460 yuele it sit, it ill befits (Fr "il sied mal") 483 Here and in the following stanza, Walter employs the disrespectful thou, perhaps (as Skeat suggested) "under pretence of reporting the opinion of others" But it recurs in ll 1031, 1053, 1056, where it may be taken simply as a mark of intimacy
 516 a furlong way, cf MLT, II, 557, n 533-36 Chaucer's description of the cruel conduct of the sergeant is closer to MS 1165 than to Petrarch or the Menager (Severs, p 440)
 554-67 Chaucer's addition
 570 f That burneth, the construction is inconsequent Cf ParDT, VI, 826 588 whenne, whence (AS "hwanon")
 590 Pansk, Petrarch, "de Panico" (p 161), Boccaccio, "de Panago" (p 166) This place has not been identified 602 evere in oon yllke, always alike, consistently 607 Noon accident, for noon adversites, no outward sign of any adversity she suffered In this apparently technical use of accident Chaucer departs from both Petrarch ("sive ex proposito sive incidenter," p 161) and MS 1165 ("de purpose ou par accident", Severs, p 447) 609 in earnest nor in game, under any circumstances On this and similar phrases see Gen ProI, I, 534, n
 621-23 Chaucer's addition
 625 svelky berth, dislike, take it ill, Petrarch, "aegre ferre" (p 162) 687 "Wondered the more, the longer (he thought of it)" Cf "the longer the better" 719 for no worldly unreste, on account of no earthly discomfort
 738 message, messenger, or collectively, messengers, Petrarch, "nuncios" (p 164) Cf also l 947, below 743 countrefete, in early English meant literally "imitate" But passages like this and MerchT, IV, 2121, show how it acquired its modern sense 811-12, 837-40, 851-61 Chaucer's additions
 871 f Cf Job i, 21
 880-82 Chaucer's addition, cf RR, 445 Lyk a worm, i.e. naked, a stock comparison (Fr "nu comme un ver")
 902 From Job iii, 3
 903 On lynes creature see KnT, I, 1912, n
 911 Professor Manly notes that "the preservation of the old clothing is a feature of the original folk-tale" 915-17 This realistic detail, not mentioned in Petrarch or the Menager, appears in MS 1165 (Severs p 439)
 932-38 Chaucer's addition
 932 Cf Job xl, 4, xlii, 1-6 Also WB ProI, III, 436
 934 f Cf WB ProI, III, 706, 688 ff

938 but it be falle of newe, "unless it has happened recently"

965 yuel buseye, ill provided 981 undren, 9 A M, Petrarch "hora tertias" (p 167)

990-91 Not in Petrarch

995-1008 Chaucer's addition Skeat held that the passage was written later than the body of the tale, and Ten Brink (Hist of Eng Lit, New York, 1893-96, II, 123) suggested that it referred to the reception of Richard II in 1387 Brusendorff (p 161, n) compared Petrarch, Trionfo del Tempo, ll 132-34 Though the passages are similar, there is no evidence that Chaucer had Petrarch in mind On the scribal note Auctor, in the margin of several MSS, which is not to be taken here as indicating that Chaucer interrupts the Clerk, see MLT, II, 358 n

999 "Dear enough at a jane," a Genoese coin worth a half-penny, used also in Provençal as a comparison for worthlessness See a poem of Rambaut de Vaquerres in V Crescini, Studi Romanzi, Padua, 1892, p 50, ll 71 f,

Jujar, to proenzalesco, s'eu ja gauz aja de mi, non prezo un genoi

1039 mo, others (lit "more"), Petrarch, "alteram" (p 168)

1049 gan his herte dresse, prepared his heart

1079-1106 Much expanded in Chaucer's version

1109 feeste maketh, "does her honor" (Fr "faire fête à")

1138-40 Cf The Former Age

1141-62 The moral is taken from Petrarch, the outcower referred to in the text

1151 Receyven in gree, receive in good spirit, in good part

1152 "For it is very reasonable that He should test that which He created"

1153 f James, i, 13

1162 ff The Host's stanza, which stands next in some of the best MSS, was doubtless written for the epilogue, as originally planned, and then rejected in favor of the present ending The idea was developed and used in the Monk's Prologue (See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Mk ProI)

1163 The second application of the tale, which follows, is the Clerk's direct reply, in satirical vein, to the Wife of Bath It was obviously written when the plan of the Marriage Group was well under way Whether any considerable time elapsed between the writing of the tale and the addition of this ending is unknown

1170 "For the love of the Wife of Bath" For the order of words of the Grekes hors Symoun, SqT, V, 209, The kynges metynge Pharao, BD, 282, Elyene that was Menelaus wif his brother, Bo, iv, in 7, 7 Other examples are given by Skeat in his note on the passage in the SqT In the earlier form of the construction the proper name was put in the gentive ("the Kinges sone Henries," AS Chron, s a, 1140), and there was therefore no ambiguity

1177 The song, as the scribe's heading, Lenvoy de Chaucer, indicates is Chaucer's independent composition. But it belongs dramatically to the Clerk, and is entirely appropriate (For the opposing view see Koch, Angl, L 65 f.)

The meter changes to six-line stanzas, with only three rimes throughout the series (-ence, -aille, -inde)

1188 Chichevache (lit "lean cow," perhaps a corruption of chiche face "lean race"), a cow which fed only on patient wives, and consequently had little to eat, sometimes contrasted with Bicornie, which lived on patient husbands, and fared better. See Jubinal, Mysteres Inédits du xv^e Siècle, Paris, 1837 I, 248, 390, Lydgate, Bycornie and Chichevache, Minor Poems, ed Halliwell-Phillips, Percy Soc, 1840, p 129, Bolte, Herrig's Arch, CVI, 1, CXIV, 80, Zt fur Volkskunde, XIX, 58 ff. For a good account of the recorded forms of the name see Miss Hammond, English Verse between Chaucer and Surrey pp 113 ff.

1204 aventaille, ventail, the lower half of the movable part of a helmet. Cf G L Hamilton, MP, III 541 ff.

1207-10 Cf WB Proib, III, 253-56, 265-70

1211 A proverbial comparison. See Piers Plowman, B, 1, 154, Skeat EE Prov, p 117, no 276

The Merchant's Prologue

On the date of the Merchant's Prologue and Tale see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Wife of Bath's Prologue. The repetition of l 1212 in l 1213 and the mention of Griseldis in l 1224 unmistakably link the Merchant's Prologue to the Clerk's Tale. But in a number of MSS the two tales are separated. See the Textual Notes on the Host's Stanza (IV, 1212^a-^b). In several MSS the Merchant's Tale is followed by the Wife of Bath's. For a spurious link connecting the two see the Textual Notes on Merch Epl.

1226-27 Cf Bukton, 13-16

1230 On Seint Thomas of Ynde see SumT, III, 1980, n

The Merchant's Tale

The story of January and May is one of the most original of Chaucer's narratives. For the earlier part of the poem he drew on his own Mehete, from which he took a number of passages. For the trick played at the end on the old dotard he used a jest — the so-called Pear-Tree episode — current in many popular tales. His exact source is unknown, but close parallels are afforded by an Italian tale and a German poem both printed by Holtzhausen, Eng Stud, XLIII, 168 ff. On other analogues and their relation see Originals and Analogues (Ch Soc) pp 177 ff 341 ff 544, Varnhagen, Anglia, VII Anz, 155 ff, Koepfel, Angl XIV, 257, Angl Beibl, XXVII 61, J Bedier, Les Fables, 4th ed Paris 1925, p 469 f, Koch's notes to Hertzberg's translation of the Canterbury Tales Berlin, 1925, pp 535 f. The Pear-Tree story is no 1423 in Arne's Types of the Folk-Tale, tr S Thompson FF Com, no 74, Helsinki, 1928 p 175. Beyond the plot, or strictly narrative portion, the tale contains much descriptive and satirical matter, derived largely from the same sources that Chaucer used in the earlier parts of the Marriage Group. The Mirour de Mariage, St Jerome against Jovinian, Theophrastus, and the Parson's Tale Reminiscences of Boethius and of Albertano's Liber de Amore have also been pointed out. Parallel passages in these and other works are noted below. For further details see Skeat Oxf Ch, III, 458, Koepfel, Herrig's Arch, LXXXVI, 34 ff, Lowes, MP, VIII, 165 ff, and the references in Miss Hammond, p 309, Wells, pp 880, 1032, 1148, 1240, 1328. On the relations of Pope's January and May to Chaucer's poem see A Schade, Est, XXV, 1 ff.

The figure of the aged or feeble lover is so frequent in literature that it is not necessary to multiply references on the subject. It appears in the Shipman's Tale and the Wife of Bath's Prologue, but Chaucer's most noteworthy treatment of it is here in the Merchant's Tale. No particular model has been pointed out for the character of January. Examples of the general type in both European and oriental literature are cited by L C Stern in CZ, V, 200, 310, n. He includes Ovid's Amores, ii, 7, and Boccaccio's Decameron, ii, 10, both of which might have been known to Chaucer. But neither of them is really similar to the Merchant's Tale. Illustrations of the character as it appears in mediæval lyrics (especially in the "chansons des malmariées") are cited by T Chotzen Recherches sur la Poésie de Dafydd ab Gwilym, Amsterdam, 1927, p 246.

Professor Tatlock (Dev and Chron pp 205 ff) conjectured that the Merchant's Tale was originally intended by Chaucer as a reply to the Shipman's Tale, then the Wife of Bath's. It is highly probable that the Shipman's Tale was written for the Wife, and possible enough (in spite of Brussendorff's objection, pp 119 f) that Chaucer at one time planned an altercation between her and the Merchant. But Professor Manly has pointed out (CT, p 624) that there are also indications of a shift of assignment in the case of the Merchant's Tale. Certain passages (ll 1251, 1322, 1389-90, and perhaps ll 1347 1384) imply that the speaker was a member of a religious order, and it is possible that in Chaucer's first plan it was the Monk, and not the Merchant, who was to oppose the Wife.

1245 The localization in Lombardy may be due to some undetected source of the story

The account of the old man at the beginning has a number of parallels in the Miroir de Mariage With ll 1245-51 of Miroir, 278-83 (Deschamps, Œuvres, IX, SATF)

1251 seculeer, the secular clergy, as distinguished from the monks and friars

1260 Identical with FranklT, V, 805

1267-1392 The Merchant's long praise of marriage is of course bitterly ironical. The whole passage is taken by Professor Koch to be a continuation of January's speech

1268-74 Cf Miroir 369-70, 377-79, 394-98, 1074 ff

1270 the fruit of his tresor, i.e. (according to Skeat) purchased with his own wealth. But it may mean rather "the choicest part, the flower of his possessions." Cf the proverbial contrast between fruit and chaff

1277 at sit uel, it is fitting. Sit is the contracted form for sulleth

1281 ff Cf Miroir, 528-33

1287-92 Cf Miroir, 221-30

1294 Theophraste, the author of the Liber Aureolus de Nuptiis, quoted by St Jerome, (Adv. Jov., i, 47). See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on WB Prol With ll 1296-1304 of Theophrastus's discussion "an vir sapiens ducat uxorem," quoted by Jerome (Migne, Pat. Lat., XXIII, 276), and in John of Salisbury's Policraticus, viii, 11 (ed Webb, Oxford, 1909, II, 296). On the construction of Theophraste, see KnT, I 1210, n. Cf also ll 1368, 1373, 1720, 1734, below

1300 Cf WB Prol, III, 308-10, 204-06

1305-06 On the variant readings see the textual note. It is probable that Chaucer never completed the couplet

1311 In MSS El Hg is written the Latin source, from Albertano of Brescia, Liber de Amore Dei, De Uxore Diligenda (appended to De Arte Loquendi et Tacendi, Cuneo, 1507), fol 40 recto. For the ultimate source cf Prov xix, 14

1315 Cf ShpT, VII, 9, and ParsT, X, 1068

1319 Cf ParsT, X, 918, also Eph v, 32 (Vulg.)

1323-35 Agam from Albertano De Amore Dei, fol 39 verso, whose text is followed in marginal glosses in MSS El Hg

1325-29 Gen n, 18, 21 f

1332 With paradyis terrestre contrast purgatorie in l 1670, below, and WB Prol, III, 489

1334-36 Cf RR, 16438-42, also Miroir, 217-20

1335 Gen n, 23 f

1341 Cf Tr v, 445, 1321, RR, 2965 f, 20375 f

1343-56 Cf Miroir, II 231-34, 239-40, 245-47, 211-16, 248-51, 418, 423-24, 435-37

1345 Cf CIT, IV, 355

1356-80 Chaucer here draws upon Albertano, Liber Consolatorius (ed Sundby, Chau Soc, 1873, pp 17 f), in part directly and in part through his own Melibeé (see VII, 1038 ff, and n). Incidental use of the Miroir appears in ll 1371-74 (cf ll 9143-49), and perhaps also in ll 1306-68 (cf ll 9111-6)

1364 The reference to the kydes skynn, which does not appear in Albertano or the Fr Melibeé, seems due to direct recollection of Gen xxvii, 16

1376 The passage ascribed to Seneca is really from Albertano (Liber Consol., p 18). Sundby traces it to Fulgentius, Mythologiarum, I, 22 (ed Helm, Leipzig, 1898)

1377 bit, biddeth. From Dionysius Cato, Disticha, m, no 23

1381-82 Eccl xxxvi, 27, "Ubi non est mulier, ingemiscit egens." Quoted by Albertano, with variant readings eger ("sick") and egens (De Amore Dei, fol 40 recto). Chaucer must have followed the former

1384 ff See Eph v, 25, 28, 29, 31, quoted by Albertano, De Amore Dei, fol 39 verso, et seq., whose text is followed in marginal glosses in MSS El Hg

1387 ff Cf FranklT, V, 749 ff, WB Prol, III, 437 ff

1393-96 Cf Miroir, 9150-52, 9156-59, 9006-07, and (perhaps) 741, 745, 754

1401 Cf Ps xxx, 3, 9

1405-17 From Albertano, De Amore Dei, fol 40 recto

Professor Tatlock (Angl., XXXVII, 73, n) has noted a similarity with the discussion of Feramonte in the "Question d'amore" in the Filocolo. But although Chaucer knew that work, it is hardly likely that he had it in mind here

1415-17 Cf Miroir, 722, 725, 727

1418 Proverbial, see Haechel, p 35, no 116

1424 "Wade's boat" In Tr, m, 614, there is another reference to the "tale of Wade." Speght's comment on the passage in the Merchant's Tale (in his edition of 1598) has often been called the most exasperating note ever written on Chaucer. He says "Concerning Wade and his bote called Gungelot, as also his strange exploits in the same, because the matter is long and fabulous, I passe it over." If Speght really knew the story and understood the point of the allusion he was more fortunate than later editors. For though there are a number of references in mediæval literature which indicate that Wade was a famous hero, they do not suffice for the reconstruction of the narrative as it was known to Chaucer. The earliest mention of Wade is in the Anglo-Saxon poem Widsath, l 22, where he is said to have ruled the Haelsingis in the Middle High German Kudrun and the Alexander he is associated with Hagen, and in numerous romances he is referred to as a famous warrior. A Middle English fragment (c 1300) connects him with sea-creatures but is altogether obscure. Only the Scandinavian Thidrekssaga (ed Bertelsen, 2 v, Copenhagen, 1905-11, I, 73 ff) and the related Rabenschlacht (ed Martin, Deutsches Holdenbuch, II, Berlin, 1866 st 964 ff) give any extended account of him. According to the Thidrekssaga he was a giant, the son of King Vilkinus and a sea-woman. He was the father of Wayland, whom he took to the dwarfs to be educated. It was agreed that after two years they might kill Wayland if Wade did not return. Wade was killed, but Wayland made his escape, and when checked in his fight by a great river he built himself a remarkable boat and sailed down to the sea. Possibly in the story known to Chaucer this boat was transferred from Wayland to Wade. Professor W G Howard reminds the editor that Wate in the Kudrun, also has a boat, on which he abducts Hilde before her espousal to Hetel, and suggests that Chaucer, if he had in mind any similar incident in the story of Wade, may mean simply that olde wyves know too much about the tricks of wedlock. A boat figures, too, in Walter Map's De Gadone Milite (De Nugis Curialium, u, 17), which has an altogether different story. Gado is a Vandal warrior and traveler who defends Offa's realm against the Romans. He is brought to England in a boat against his will.

For full discussion of the subject see, besides Skeat's note, an early article by Mullenhoff in the Zt f Deut Alterthum, VI, 62 ff (explaining Wade as a sea-divinity), R W Chambers ed Widsith, Cambridge, Eng 1912, pp 95 ff, E J Bashe, PQ, II, 282 ff.

1425 broken harm, of uncertain meaning. Skeat explains it as "petty annoyances". Professor Magoun (Angha, LIII, 223 f) cites the similar phrase "broken sorow" in Skelton's Magnificence (ed Ramsay, EETS, 1908, I 1587), of which the meaning is also doubtful.

1427-28 Cf WB Prol, III, 44^c ff.

1429-40 Cf Mirour, 730-33, 423-430, 91, 103-04.

1441-51 Cf ParsT, X, 938 ff, also Mirour, 106-16.

1456 Cf WB Prol, III, 112, and Mel, VII, 1088. The following lines also recall WB Prol, III, 113 ff.

1461-66 Cf Mirour, II 117-25.

1476 On Placebo the appropriate name for the complaisant adviser, see SumT, III, 2075, n.

1485 Cf MillT, I, 3530, and n.

1516 "Your heart is merry" The figure is that of hanging on a peg.

1523-25 The idea here expressed is discussed in a general way by Seneca in De Beneficiis, I, 14-15. It is combined with the second counsel, which follows in II 1526-29, in a passage of Walter Map's Epistola Valeru which Chaucer may have had in mind. See De Nugis Curialium, IV, 3 (ed James, Anecdota Oxoniensia, XIV, 1914, p 146, ll 17 f).

1531-36 Cf Mirour, 1538-45.

1535 On the feminine suffix in chadestere, see Gen Prol, I, 241 f, n.

1536 mannysh wood, a fierce virago (Lt "mannish mad").

1537-42 Cf Albertano De Amore Dei, fol 40 verso, also Mirour, 1553-75.

1543 Cf Mirour, 509, and the heading to Chapter vii.

1544-48 Cf Mirour, 1576-84.

1553 For this allusion, see WB Prol, III, 492 n.

1560-61 Cf RR, 13851 f.

1582 Cf Boethius, v, m 4, 14, Tr, I, 365.

1598 Proverbial see Skeat EE Prov, p 118, no 278, Haechel, p 1, no 2.

1601-04 Cf Mirour, II 1202-06, which comes in turn, from the beginning of Jerome's excerpt from Theophrastus, (Migne, Pat Lat XXIII, 276).

1621 Cf Mirour, 422.

1640 On the seven deadly sins see the Parson's Tale and Dan Michel's Ayenbite of Inwyt (ed Morris, EETS 1866, pp 15 ff). The classification by "branches" and "twigs" was customary. Cf ParsT X, 389.

1659 If there is no other obstacle than wedded happiness, he argues, in the way of your salvation, God of his mercy can remove that.

1662 er ye have youre right of hooly churche, before you receive the blessing of the Church, i e before your wedding is really solemnized.

1670 Cf WB Prol, III, 489 and n.

1682 This line is metrically defective in all MSS. Tyrwhitt inserted but before thynne, and other emendations can be easily devised. But since there are a few other lines in which an unaccented syllable is apparently lacking, it seems best to keep the reading of the MSS and recognize that Chaucer occasionally allowed himself this freedom. Because of the frequency of such lines in Lydgatian the type is sometimes called "Lydgatian". For other possible examples see FrT, III, 1647, Prol Mel, VII 951, NPT, VII, 3418 (see textual note).

1684-87 This reference to the Wife of Bath, if regarded as a comment of the Merchant's, is dramatically appropriate, though it is inserted a little strangely before the last line of Justin's speech. To avoid a complicated punctuation, and also to save the better accredited reading ye in l 1686, Professor Tatlock suggests that Chaucer adopted the bold device of making Justin himself quote the Wife. There is admittedly a choice of difficulties. But Mr Tatlock's interpretation seems the harder of the two. See his Dev and Chron, p 204, and the textual note on l 1686. Koch (Eng Stud, XLVII, 372) treats the passage as a late addition to the tale. See also Angl, L, 65 f.

1693 Maryns, as Skeat notes, is a masculine form because the name of the month is so.

1701 ff "A composite of significant bits from the order for matrimony and from the nuptial mass which would follow" (Tatlock, MLN, XXXII, 373). The hooly sacre- ment may refer either to the sacrament of matrimony or the receiving of the Eucharist

1703-07 Cf Miroir, 275-77

1716 On Orpheus, the ancient musician, see Ovid, Met., x, 1-85 xi, 1-66, and on Amphion (pronounced Amphoun) who helped by his music to build the city of Thebes, Met., vi, 177 ff., 224 ff., 271 ff., 402 ff., xv, 427 There are also several references to Amphion in Status (Theb., i, 9 f., viii, 232, x, 873) Orpheus, Joab, and Theodamas are mentioned in HF, 1203, 1245, 1246

1719 See II Sam. ii, 28 xviii, 16, xx 22

1720 Theodamas, Theodamas the Theban augur The episode referred to is uncertain In the Thebaid Theodamas is not represented as a trumpeter, though his invocation is said to have been followed by a sound of trumpets (viii, 343)

1727 fyrbond, the torch of the marriage procession Cf RR, 3024 ff

1730 Cf LGW, 2250

1732 Martianus Capella (5th cent.), the author of De Nuptiis Philologiae et Mercurii With the phraseology here of Inf., xxv, 94-98 ("Taccia Lucano omai," etc.), and for the idea, cf also Inf., xxxv, 22, Par., xix, 7 ff

1745 Esther ii and v

1754 Cf BD, 331, PF, 290 f

1763 Mr Hincley (PQ, VI, 313) compares Catullus, v, 5-6 But the idea is a commonplace in love-poetry, especially of the "Tagelied" type

1772 f Cf Gen Prol I, 100 n

1777 Cf PF, 114, RR, 15778 f

1783 Here and at ll 1869, 2057, 2107, 2125, MS El (and occasionally others) again has Auctor written in the margin Cf MLT, II, 358, n

1785 false hoomly hewe, "false domestic servant"

1786 Cf Phaedrus, lib iv, fab 18, Gesta Romanorum, ch 174

1793 From Boethius, iii, pr 5, 39 f The whole passage treats the same general subject as ll 1783 ff

1795 Cf Astr., ii, 7

1807 ypocras, a cordial drink made of wine, with spices and sugar See Pard Prol, VI, 306, n

clarree, see KnT, I 1471, n vernage, a strong and sweet kind of Italian wine ("vernaccia")

1810 On Constantyn, see Gen Prol, I, 429 ff, n

1817 For the travers, or curtain, of Tr., iii, 674

1819 ff Cf LGW, 2677 On the ritual "Benedictio thalami" see Tatlock, MLN, XXXII, 374, and for further illustrative notes on the marriage customs here referred to see Karl Schmidt, Jus Primae Noctis, Freiburg, 1831, pp 146 ff., W Hertz, Spielmannsbuch, 3d ed., Berlin 1905, pp 405 f For an interesting parallel to Chaucer's whole account see the lay of Le Fraisme by Marie de France, ll 360 ff., (ed Warnke, 3d ed., Halle, 1925)

1840 Cf ParsT, X, 859

1847-48 Cf WB Prol, III, 455-56

1862 From RR, 19731 f., cf SqT, V, 349, Haeckel, p 13, no 42

1881 compleynt, a technical name for a form of poetical composition Cf Chaucer's own complaints, and the introduction to the Short Poems

1887 In the four days the Moon passed from the second degree of Taurus, through Gemini, into Cancer

1942 The use of the subjunctive with that in direct commands or entreaties is rare in Chaucer Cf BD, 206

1962 precious, over-fastidious (Fr "pre-cieux")

1967 Cf Gen Prol, I, 844, and n

1972 The sentence is proverbial, cf FrT, III, 1475, n But the application here is astrological See the reference to "elections," MLT, II, 312, and n

1986 Cf KnT, I, 1761, and n

1987 ff The sentiment is familiar in the love-poetry of the period

2014 See Frar'sT, III, 1369, n

2021 Cf Gen Prol, I, 335 ff

2032 The reference is to Guillaume de Lorris, author of the first part of the Roman de la Rose

2034 On Prapus see Ovid, Fasts, i, 415 ff

2038 The classical divinities of the lower world are here brought into association with the fables of northern tradition Skeat (on l 2227, below) observes that the notion of identifying Pluto with the King of Fairyland occurs again in the romance, or lay, of Sir Orfeo (Rutson, Met Rom, rev ed., Edinburgh, 1885, III, 4) Sir Orfeo (Orpheus) redeems Eurydice from "the Kyng of fayri" This conception might carry with it the identification of Proserpina with the fairy queen, which is not peculiar to Chaucer Cf., for example the romance of Arthur of Little Britain, translated by Lord Berners from a lost French source of the fourteenth century (ed Utterson, Lond, 1814, pp 47 ff) On a similar confusion between fairy-land and the lower world of Christian eschatology of Dr T Spencer, Speculum, II, 183, n 7

In HF, 1511 f., Proserpina appears in her proper classical character as quene of the derke pyne

2048 Cf WB Prol, III, 130 But the phrase was a commonplace, see ParsT, X, 940

2055 Cf MLT, II, 421 ff., 1133, 1140 f

2058 For this conception of the scorpion cf Vincent of Beauvais, Spec Nat., xx, 160

2080 Soul, sole

2088-91 Cf Miroir, 734-40

2111 Cf Ovid, Met., i, 625 ff Argus is again referred to in KnT, I, 1390

2121 countrefeted, cf CIT, IV, 743, n

2125 See Met., iv, 55 ff

2126 f Cf LGW, 742

2132 f This roundabout expression means "on June 8" Cf l 2222, below

2138-48 The passage is full of phrases from the Song of Solomon (cited also in Jerome, Adv Jov., i, 30, Migne, Pat Lat., XXIII, 251 ff.) Cf particularly n, 10-12, i, 15, iv, 7-16

2146 spot, fault

2222 The Sun was in Gemini, near Cancer, which he entered about June 12 Cancer was the declination of the Sun, and the exaltation of Jupiter

2232 Claudius Claudianus (4th cent.) See his unfinished poem De Raptu Proserpinae

2247 Cf Mel., VII, 1057, and n

2250 Jhesus, filius Syrak, the reputed author of Ecclesiasticus

2252 Cf RoT, I, 4172, and n

2265 by my moodres sves soule, i e., by the soul of Saturn. See Ovid, Fasta, vi, 285 f

2268-75 Cf Miroir, 2949-56, 2959-64

2277-90 The passage seems to combine reminiscences of Albertano and Deschamps, with probably a reference to Jerome. Cf Mel., VII 1076-79 Miroir, 9051-57, 9063-70, and Jerome's chapter on Mulieres Romanae Insignes (Adv Jov., i, 46, Migne, Pat Lat., XXIII, 275 f.) On Romayn geestes (I 2284) for Roman history, see MLT, II, 1126, n

2290 Cf Mark x, 18

2300 1 Kings xi, 12

2315 Cf Arthur's words to Gawain, in Chrestien de Troyes, Erec, 61 f (ed Foerster, Halle, 1896)

Ja ne doit estre contredite
Parole puis que rois l'a dit

2321-22 Cf R.R., 10097 f

2335 With this belief about the longings of pregnant women of the ballad The Cherry-Tree Carol, and Professor Child's notes (Eng and Scott Ballads, Boston, 1882-98, no 54, II, 1 ff)

2349 by a twiste, by a branch

2365 Cf Ovid, Rem Am., 127-30, referred to in Mel., VII, 976

2367 stoore, bold (AS "stór," great), the vocative form of the adjective

2393 I wende han seyn, I supposed (myself) to have seen

2410 Proverbial. See Haecckel, p 28, no 91

The Merchant's Epilogue

2426 For another account of the Host's wife see the Mk Prol., VII, 1839 ff

2437 The reference to the Wife of Bath is sufficiently clear 2435 cause why, apparently preserved in the modern vulgar "cause why" (usually understood as "because why")

FRAGMENT V

Fragment V, comprising the Squire's Prologue and Tale and the Franklin's Prologue and Tale, regularly follows the Merchant's Epilogue in the best MSS. Although the Squire's Prologue does not contain any reference to the preceding piece, it makes a satisfactory transition therefrom. Consequently it has been argued by several scholars that Fragments IV and V should properly be considered as forming a single consecutive group. In fact in MS E1 the whole passage from IV, 2419, through V, 8, is written continuously and headed The Prologe of the Squeres Tale. See Ten Brink, Gesch der Eng Lat., II (2d ed., Strassburg, 1912), 171, 620 ff (Eng tr., II, 1, New York, 1893, 164 f., n, New York, 1896, 268), Skeat, MLR., V, 431, Tatlock, MLN., XXIX, 141, n 3. On the position of Fragment V in the different classes of MSS see Hammonnd, pp 310 f., and MP, III, 167 ff. Wells, p 680

In some MSS the Squire's Tale is followed by the Wife of Bath's. See the Textual Notes on the SqT, where the spurious link is given. Similarly, in certain MSS, as noted in the Textual Notes on the Host's Stanza (IV, 1212-22), the Franklin's Tale is preceded by the Clerk's and connected with it by a spurious link. In Tyrwhitt's edition the Franklin's Tale is followed by the Physician's. For the spurious link there used see the Textual Notes on the FranklT.

The Squire's Prologue

2 On the character of the Squire, and the appropriateness of the request here made, see Gen Prol., I, 79 ff

7-8 The Squire's remark, if it is more than a conventional protest of modesty, may be, as Dr Baum has suggested, a disapproving allusion to the Merchant, which precedes (MLN., XXXII, 376)

The Squire's Tale

The Squire's Tale is a typical romance. Interrupting, as it does, the discussion of sovereignty, it is recognized as forming a kind of interlude in the Marriage Group.

It has not been traced to a definite source, and perhaps its incompleteness is due to the fact that Chaucer, having no story before him, never worked out a plot of his own. Or possibly he intended — for his plan was obviously elaborate — to piece together episodes of different origin. A few passages, at all events, rather imply that he was following an original. See ll 65 ff., 655, and compare the note on ll 29 ff.

Various parallels have been noted to different parts of the narrative. The oriental setting Skeat attributed to the influence of the travels of Marco Polo. His evidence, however, was not enough to prove special indebtedness to that author. Several other accounts of the Mongol empire, by travelers such as Carpini, Simon de St Quentin, Guillaume de Rubriques, Friar Ricold Hayton, the Armenian and Odoric of Pordenone, were current in western Europe in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, and may have been known to Chaucer. He may also have drawn on general information about the Tartar courts, or have found his material ready to hand in the unknown source of his romance. For detailed accounts of the literature in question see, besides Skeat's notes, Pollard's edition of the Squire's Tale (London, 1899, pp. x, ff., J. M. Manly, in PMLA, XI, 349 ff., J. L. Lowes, MP, III, 1 ff., and Wash Univ. Studies, I, ii, 3 ff.). In the latter place Professor Lowes showed that for the setting, though not for the plot, Chaucer (or his source) may have drawn material from the Epistola Presbyteri Johannis (ed. F. Zarncke, Berichte der Kgl. Sachs. Gesellschaft, Phil.-Hist. Classe, XXIX, 111 ff., XXX, 41 ff.). In a version of English origin, Prester John, the King of India and Arabia sends to Frederick, "imperator Romanus," three gifts, one of which is a magic ring. Prester John is also possessed of a magic mirror like Canace's. He celebrates a birthday feast, and has a marvelous chapel associated with the day. Other details — strange food, the dry tree, etc. — afford parallels more or less significant. Other illustrations of the magical features of the story were collected, chiefly from Oriental literature, by W. A. Clouston, Magical Elements in the Squire's Tale, Ch. Soc., 1889.

The episode of Algarsyf and Theodora (mentioned in ll. 663-65) was apparently to be of the general type of the tale of the Ebony Horse in the Arabian Nights. See Bolte-Polivka, Anmerkungen, II, Leipzig, 1915, 134 f. A mediæval western version, to which Chaucer was possibly indebted, is the romance of Cleomadès, by Adenes le Roi (about 1285). See Clouston, pp. 382 ff., H. S. V. Jones, PMLA, XX, 346 ff., JEGP, VI, 221 ff., MLN, XXIV, 158. The influence of the Cleomadès is questioned by Mr. Huxley in MLN, XXIV, 95, and Notes, p. 212, and by Mr. Pollard in his separate edition of the SqT, p. xvi.

In the Falcon episode there is a striking resemblance, as Skeat noted, to the situation in Chaucer's own Anelida. Professor Tupper, who interprets the Anelida as an allegory of the married life of the Earl and Countess of Ormonde, would make the same application of the story of the Falcon (PMLA, XXXVI, 196 ff.). But his whole theory is improbable. See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on Anelida. Another and more elaborate allegorical interpretation of the whole Squire's Tale was proposed by Brandl, Est, XII, 161 ff. (also Ch. Soc. Essays, Part vi) and disproved by Kittredge, Est, XIII, 1 ff.

The date of the tale is generally held to be late, though decisive evidences are lacking. The "note of time" in l. 73 suggests that Chaucer was writing with the Canterbury scene in mind.

The tale ends abruptly after the second line of the third part. The genuineness of the final couplet is disputed. For a brief conclusion, undoubtedly spurious, found in MS. La, see the Textual Notes on the SqT. Continuations were written by Spenser, in Book iv of the Faerie Queene and by John Lane, whose work was licensed in 1614-15, though first printed by the Chaucer Society in 1888.

9 Sarray, the modern Tzarev, near Sarepta in southeastern Russia. Founded by Batu Khan in the 13th century, it became a flourishing capital of the Tartar empire. For the identification see Yule's Marco Polo, 2 v., London, 1903, I, 4 f., II, 494.

12 The name Cambuyuskan (the Ellesmere reading for Cambuskan of some other MSS.) has been identified, doubtless correctly, with that of Genghis (or Chings) Khan (1162-1227), the founder of the Mongol Empire. Skeat holds that the description applies better to Kublai Khan, his grandson, who ruled at Cambaluc, the modern Peking. But the resemblances are mostly conventional traits. Moreover, it was another grandson of Genghis Khan namely, Batu Khan, who werreyed Russye and held court at Sarray. It is uncertain whether Chaucer had any distinct knowledge of these historical figures. On the whole subject see Manly, PMLA, XI, 349 ff.

22 centre, a fulcrum or pivot about which anything turns, especially, the center of the earth, hence, an emblem of stability.

29 ff. The names Elpheta, Algarsyf, Cambalo, and Canace are all unexplained. Skeat thought Cambalo was suggested by Cambaluc (Peking), the capital of Kublai Khan. But the Tartar personal name "Kambala," the grandson of Kublai, is closer (See Yule's Marco Polo, I, 361). On Chaucer's tendency to use Italian-looking forms in -o see MLT, VII, 2345, n. Elpheta and Algarsyf look like oriental forms, and are unlikely to have been invented by Chaucer. Professor Manly suggests that Chaucer took the former from some list of the principal stars. He notes its occurrence in the Liber Astronomicus, quidam Albion, ascribed to Richard de Wallingford (MS. Harl. 80, fol. 51^a). Canace (Gr. Κανάκη) is familiar enough as occurring in the tale (told by Ovid and Gower) condemned in the Man of Law's Prologue, II, 77 ff. But there seems to be no reason why Chaucer should have taken it over from there. Probably all four names come from an undiscovered source, or sources, of the Squire's Tale.

39 Ci Frankl Prol, V, 723 ff.

45 f. leet Doon, the double causative is unusual.

For descriptions of the birthday festivals of the Khan see Yule's Marco Polo, I, 386 ff.

47 The last Idus of March, March 15, when the sun was in the fourth degree of Aries. The sign Aries, specifically the 19th degree, was the "exaltation" of the Sun. Aries was also the "mansoon" of Mars, the first "face" (degrees 1-10) being known as the "face of Mars."

51 Skeat cites other references to Aries as hot and dry or choleric and fiery

52-55 Cf RR, 67-73

57 Cf LGW Prol F, 127, n

59 sit, 'sits,' a contracted present, so also halt, l 61, stant, l 171, but, l 291, hit, l 512

67 sewes, broths (AS "seaw") With this reference to strange meats Professor Lowes (Wash Univ Stud I, n 13) compares passages from the accounts of Prester John's land

73 pryme, the first division of the day, from 6 to 9 A M In Chaucer the reference is usually to the end of that period

75 firste first subject or purpose

80 Skeat notes several instances of the riding of a horse into a hall See also Clouston, Magical Elements p 276 ff, F J Child, Eng and Scott Pop Ballads, Boston, 1882-98, II 51 (on King Estmere)

95 Sir Gawayn, King Arthur's nephew, was the pattern of courtesy

96 "Though he should come back from Fairyland" The association of the Knights of the Round Table with Faerie was natural, in view of the many tales of enchantment and other-world adventure in the Arthurian romances Cf WBT, III, 857 ff Moreover in the case of King Arthur there was a definite tradition that after he was wounded in his last battle he was carried away to the land of the faeries whence he would some day return to rule his people

103 Cf Tr, I, 12-14 The doctrine that the action should be suited to the words was a commonplace of the rhetoricians from Horace down Cf particularly Ars Poetica, 105 ff, Geoffroi de Vinsauf, De Modo et Arte Dictandi et Versificandi, ed Faral, Les Arts Poétiques du XII^e et du XIII^e Siecle, Paris, 1924, pp 318 ff

105-06 Whether the repetition of style was felt as a pun, or was merely a case of identical rhyme, it is hard to judge On Chaucer's puns, Gen Prol I, 297 n

115 ff For parallels to the steed of brass, the mirror, the ring, and the sword, see W A Clouston, Magical Elements, also Lowes, Wash Univ Stud, I, n, 3 ff

116 day naturel, the day of twenty-four hours, as distinguished from the day artificial, which lasted from sunrise to sunset See ML Prol, II, 2, n

129 constellacoun, here employed not in the common modern sense, but rather with reference to the shifting positions of the heavenly bodies "He watched for a favorable arrangement, or combination, of the planets" For a similar practice of physicians, in their use of natural magic, cf Gen Prol I, 414 ff, and n

131 The use of seals was common in ancient and mediæval magic One of the most famous in oriental tradition was Solomon's seal, with which he controlled the Jinns See Burton's Arabian Nights, I, ch 2, and G

Salzberger, Die Salomossage in der Semitischen Literatur, Berlin, 1907, pp 96 ff Skeat refers to a mediæval treatise on seals in MSS Arundel 295, fol 265 Cf also L Thorndike History of Magic and Experimental Science New York, 1923 II, 858 (with citations from Arnaldus de Villanova)

Bond probably refers to some means of imprisoning or controlling a spirit, though no special use of the term in magic is recorded by the NED

132 The most famous mirror of the sort here described was that which Virgil was supposed to have set up in Rome See l 231, below, and of Gower, Conf Am, v, 2031 ff, and the Seven Sages, 9th tale (ed K Campbell, Boston, 1907, pp 75 ff) For further illustration see Clouston pp 299 ff, Lowes, Wash Univ Stud, I, n, 7 ff

146 On magic rings, which conferred various powers on their owners, see also Clouston, pp 334 ff In only one of the stories cited (p 343, from Wolff's Deutsche Hausmärchen) is the wearer enabled to understand the language of birds But this power is often referred to in Eastern tales, and was especially attributed to Solomon For other magic devices to enable men to understand birds and beasts, see Edelstand du Mérid, Études d'Archeologie Paris, 1862, pp 448 f Professor Kittredge has called the editor's attention to the fact that in the account of the trial of Alice Perrers (1376) mention is made of the use of magic rings See Chronicon Anglae, 1323-88, Rolls Ser, 1874, p 98

156 The weapon, which possessed the power of healing the wound it inflicted, is compared below (ll 236 ff) with that with which Achilles wounded Telephus For other references see Tr, iv, 927, Dante, Inf xxxi, 4-6, Ovid, Met, xii, 112, xiii, 171-72, Trist, v, 2, 15, Rem Am, 44-48 Examples of similar conceptions are given by Clouston, pp 372 ff

162 the plat, the flat side

184 "By no device of windlass or pulley"

185 cause why, cf Merch Epnl, IV, 2435

195 Pouilleys, Apulian Lombardy and Apulia were celebrated for their horses

203 Proverbial, cf "Quot homines, tot sententiae", Skeat, EE Prov, p 118, no 279 Haeckel, p 34, no 114

207 the Pegasee, Pegasus, the winged horse of Bellerophon and the Muses Chaucer's form is due to the Latin adjective "Pegaseus," as indicated by the gloss ("equus Pegaseus") in several MSS

209 "The horse of the Greek, Sinon," i e, the Wooden Horse used by the Greeks at Troy See Aen, n 15, 195 Skeat notes that according to Guido delle Colonne the Trojan horse was of brass On the order of words see CIT, IV, 1170, n

211 olde geestes In Chaucer's age the chief authorities on Troy, besides Virgil, were Guido delle Colonne and Benott de Ste-Maure See the introductory note on the Troilus

213 For instances of such feats of jugglers see FranklT, V, 1139 ff, and HF, 1277 ff Skeat (Oxf Ch, III, 473) cites further illustrations from Marco Polo

220 ff Cf Ovid, Tristia iv, 2, 25-26

221 demetra, the Southern plural in -th, which occurs rarely in Chaucer MSS Dd and Pw have here the more regular demetra

226 manster-towr, chief tower, cf KnT, I, 2902, n

228 ff Cf, for various parallels of ideas or phraseology, RR, 18031-46, 18176, 18187, 18247 ff

231 See the note to l 132, above

232 Alocen, Abū 'Alī al-Hasan ibn al-Hasan ibn al-Haritham (ca 965-1039), commonly called in Latin Alhazen and in Arabic Ibn al-Haritham He was a distinguished Moslem physicist and astronomer and one of the greatest authorities on optics

Vitolon, Witelo (Latinized Vitello), a Polish physicist of the thirteenth century, who translated Alhazen's optics Tyrwhitt cited an edition of their combined works, Alhazeni et Vitellonis Opticæ Thesaurus, ed F Rusner, Basel, 1572

233 Aristotle, the Greek philosopher (384-322 B C) Written, preterite plural

238 Telephus, king of Mysia, was wounded by Achilles, and then healed by the rust from his spear See note to l 156 above

250 In ancient and mediæval tradition Moses and Solomon were both regarded as great magicians Reference has already been made to their rings in the note to l 146 The ring of Moses was held to cause forgetfulness, and was known as the Ring of Oblivion See Clouston, p 340, Peter Comestor, on Exodux vi (Migne, Pat Lat, CXCVIII, 1144)

On the construction he Moyses see KnT, I, 1210, n

252 Cf Aen, n, 39

254 Ashes of ferns were used as an ingredient in making glass Chaucer's reference here to the process, and also to the cause of thunder and mist, is borrowed from RR, 16096-105 See F P Magoun, Rom Rev, XVII, 69 f

263 ff On this method of indicating time see Gen ProI, I, 8, n The data here given, though more elaborate than usual, simply mean that it was nearly two hours past noon The heavens were divided into twelve equal parts, called "mansions" or "houses," of which the 1st, 4th, 7th, and 10th were known as "angles" The angle meridional, or tenth mansion was bounded by the meridian and by a semicircle passing through the north and south points of the horizon and lying 30° east of the meridian On March 15 the Sun would pass through this house between 10 A M and noon About noon, also, the constellation Leo (the best royal) began to ascend, and would not have completely risen until about a quarter before three There is doubt about the identification of Aldran Skeat held it to refer to the star now called θ Hydra, situated near the Lion's forepaws Though itself insignificant, this star heralded the rising of the brilliant α Leonis, called Regulus or Calbaled (i.e., Cor Leonis) Professor Manly (p 135) suggests that the reference may have been directly to the brighter star Mr Hinckley takes Aldran to mean rather Castor and Pollux (α and β of Gemini) See his Notes, p 227, with a reference to R H Allen, Star Names and Their Meanings, New York, 1899, p 234

269 chambre de parements, the Presence Chamber 271 Cf l 558 below, also Tr, n, 637

272 Venus children, followers or subjects of Venus, lovers

273 Cf WB ProI, III, 704 In Pasces, when Venus is exaltat Purg, i 19-21 which Chaucer used in KnT, I, 1494, and perhaps in Tr, iii, 1257, is less likely to have been in mind here

277 Clouston (Magical Elements, p 272, n 1) observes that this was hardly an oriental practice

279 The Squire seems here modestly to disclaim the qualities which Chaucer ascribes to him in the General Prologue Or were these lines written without regard to his delivery of them?

287 Lancelot, the famous knight of the Round Table, and the lover of Queen Guinevere

294 ff Cf the closely similar passage in Tr, v, 852 ff

296 as reson, was, as was right, proper Cf Fr "raison"

302 At after-soper, see ShpT, VII, 255, n

316 On the omitted relative cf Gen ProI, I, 529, n

325 Cf KnT, I, 1089, and n

340 The magical power of making the horse move, or indeed of summoning him, lay in the bridle, which was carefully preserved

347 On the relation of sleep to digestion, as conceived in Chaucer's age, Curry (pp 204 f) cites Avicenna, iii, fen 1, tract 1, cap 7

349 Cf MerchT, IV, 1862, n

352 On the four humors see Gen ProI, I, 420, n Authorities differed as to when each was in dominacion, or chief power According to the De Natura, ascribed to Galen, the domination of blood lasted from the ninth hour of the night till the third hour of the day The Kalender of Shepherdes (ed Sommer, London, 1892, III, 117) says "Syxe houres after mydnyght blode hath the maystry"

357 for me, so far as I am concerned

358 On the fumes that arise from wine-drinking of PardT, VI, 567

360 pryme large, 9 A M

362 mesurable, temperate Cf Gen ProI, I, 435

374 maistrisse, governess, as in PhysT, VI, 72

376 The sentence was carelessly constructed It means "Her governess, like these old women who are usually inquisitive, answered at once" For the use of these to designate a class of KnT, I, 1531, n For the special meaning of gladly ('usually') of NPT, VII, 3224, n

383 a ten or twelve, some ten or twelve Cf a certain, "a certain number (or amount) of," ShpT, VII, 334, and n, MkT, VII, 2177

385 the yonge sonne, the sun at the beginning of its annual course Cf Gen ProL, I, 7

387 The sun had not risen more than four degrees above the horizon, i e, it was about a quarter past six

388 esly a pas, at a slow pace

401 knoite, "point" Mr Manly compares the Latin "nodus" in Horace, Ars Poetica, 191

409 It is doubtful whether we should read fordrye, "very dry," or for drye, "because dry, for dryness" See KnT, I, 2142, n

Skeat refers to the "Arbre Sec" or "Dry Tree" mentioned by mediæval travelers, which may have furnished a suggestion to Chaucer or to his source See Yule's Marco Polo, I, 127 ff, Lowes, Wash Univ Stud, I, n, 14

425 of fairness, in respect of beauty Cf PP, 298 f

428 A faucoun peregryn According to Le Tresor of Brunetto Latini, quoted by Tyrwhitt, the falcon peregrin is so called because no one finds its nest, but it is taken elsewhere as if on pilgrimage He adds that it is very easy to bring up, very courteous, and brave, and of good manner

435 leden, language (AS "læden," lit "Latin") Cf, for the same use of Ital "latino," Dante's Ballata iv, 10 f

"h cantinno gli augelli Ciascuno in suo latino"

OfR "latin" has the same application in RR, 8408

461 ferde with hymself, treated himself (lit "fared with himself")

467 dasese, distress

471 "To heal your hurts with quickly" On the order see Gen ProL, I, 791, n, cf also l 641 below

474 aswowne, apparently a dative phrase on swowne, the noun "swoon" itself being derived by misunderstanding from the past participle "geswogen," Mid Eng 'yswownen," "aswowen"

479 On the other occurrences of this line see KnT, I, 1761, n

483 For Chaucer's full discussion of "gentillesse" see WBT, III, 1109 ff, cf also Rom, 2187 ff

491 "As the lion is chastised by means of the dog" The reference is to the proverb, "Beat the dog before the lion" Cf Othello, I, 3, 275 For various forms of the saying see, besides Skeat's note Angha, XIV 320, Herrig's Arch, CXXIV, 132, and MLN, XXXVIII 506 f

496 "As if she would (turn) to water"

504 tercelet, the male falcon, so-called because it is usually a third smaller than the female

506 Al were he, although he was On the use of the subjunctive in concessive clauses see Gen ProL, I, 68, n

511 in greyn in a fast color, see Thop, VII, 727 On colours, for ornaments of rhetoric, see CLT IV, 16 n

512 hit, hideth Cf the proverbial "snake in the grass", also Virgil Ecl, iii, 93

517 sownen into, are consonant with See Gen ProL, I, 307, n

518 Cf Matt xxiii, 27

526 crowned, consummate

527 Forfered, "arraid", perhaps to be read for fered, 'because afraid,' of Tr, iv, 1411

537 "An honest man and a thief do not think alike" Although this is clearly given as a proverb, no close parallels except Anel, 105, seem to have been noted

548 ff Jason deserted Medea, and Paris Oenone On Lameth (Lamech) and his bugyme see WB ProL, III, 53 f

555 An allusion to Mark i, 7 Modern taste might impose a restraint in such use of a scriptural passage, though the comparison had become proverbial (cf Haeckel, p 47, no 160) In Chaucer's age men spoke freely of sacred persons and things Cf LGW, 1038, BD, 679, PF, 199 f, Buk, 1 ff, and the somewhat startling application of the proverb God foryaf his deth, in Tr, iii, 1577 Even the illustration drawn from the Gospels in ProL Mel, VII, 943, would be less natural today This kind of liberty was by no means peculiar to Chaucer Examples from other writers might be indefinitely multiplied Lounsbury (Studies, II, 505 ff) noted the occurrence of such "irreverence" in the miracle plays Gower's comparison of Jason to "God's brother" (Conf Am, v, 3824) will serve as a further illustration, also the couplet of Da-fydd ap Gwilym in no ccxxi (as found in some MSS)

Anodd im gysgu unhun

Be canai Dduw huw ei hun

("I could hardly sleep a wink though God were to sing a lullaby") This was apparently altered later, perhaps from scruples about irreverence, by the substitution of St David for God See the edition of Jones and Pughe, London, 1789, p 438

558 Cf Tr, n 637

559 Til, to

571 "Always guarding my honor"

579 Wher, whether

593 Proverbial Cf KnT, I, 3041, n

596 to borue, for a security (AS "borh," pledge)

601 "When he has well said everything, he has finished (and does not keep his word)" "when he has talked well, then he acts (shamefully)"

602 Proverbial, see Skeat, EE Prov, pp 119 f, no 282, Haeckel, p 22, no 70

607 From Boethius, iii, m 2 This is also the source of ll 611 ff Chaucer uses the example again in ManoT, IX, 163

611 The number shifts from the plural to the singular

619 Cf Tr, ii, 756

624 The kite was a cowardly kind of hawk, typifying baseness

640 Canacee's ring gave her knowledge of the medicinal herbs

644 For the symbolism of the colors ("true blue") cf KnT I, 1929, n

648 The tidyf is again mentioned as inconstant in LGW Prol F, 154

655 This reference supports the theory that Chaucer was following some source for his story

663-66 On the name Algarsif see the note to l 29 ff, above The episode about him and Theodora was apparently to be similar in plot to the romance of Cleomades and the story of the Ebony Horse in the Arabian Nights See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the SqT

667 The plot, as here sketched, is obscure The editors usually assume that Cambalo in l 667 is Canacee's lover and a different person from her brother Cambalus in l 656 (called also Cambalo in l 31) But the identity of names would be strange If Cambalo was not inserted by a scribal error, Chaucer may have intended that Canacee should be abducted by two brothers, and then won back by Cambalo Spenser (F Q, iv, 3) represents three brothers as suitors for Canacee, fighting against Cambello her brother

On the occurrence of the "two-brothers motive" in the accounts of Prester John, see J L Lowes, Wash Univ Stud, I, ii, 17

671-72 These lines, though sometimes rejected as spurious, have good support in the MSS The method of indicating time, moreover, is Chaucerian See l 263, above, and n

The sun, the uncompleted sentence seems to indicate, was in Gemini, the mansion of Mercury In other words, the action of the third part was to begin about the middle of May

With the order of words in the god Mercurus hors the slye, "The mansion of the god Mercurv, the cunning," compare l 209, above, and n

The Introduction to the Franklyn's Tale

676 allow the, commend thee (Lat "al-laundare") With the rime youthe allow the cf Gen Prol, I, 523, n

683 That is, land having an annual rental value of twenty pounds

687 vertuous, rather "accomplished, capable," than "innocent"

The Franklyn's Prologue and Tale

No definite evidence has been found to fix precisely the date of the Franklyn's Tale Its connection with the "Marriage Group" and the incidental use of Jerome against Jovinian (in ll 1367-1455) both favor a late assignment, as do certain parallels to the revised (G) Prologue to the Legend (See Lowes, MP, VIII, 324 f) But other parallel passages pointed out by Professor Lowes (MP, XV, 690 ff) associate it with the Teseide and the Knyght's Tale Possibly it was written early and then adapted for its place in the Canterbury collection

With regard to the source there has been much discussion, largely on the question whether Chaucer is to be taken literally in his statement that he followed a Breton lay The affirmative opinion was defended by Professor Schofield, in PMLA, XVI, 405 ff Schofield showed that the tale corresponded closely in character to the so-called "Breton lays" in French and English, and he sought to prove that the elements of the plot were of Celtic origin But he failed to find in Celtic any significant analogue Later writers have emphasized Chaucer's indebtedness to Boccaccio who has the same story in the Filocolo (iv, 4, ed Moutier, Florence, 1829, II, 48 ff, and the Decamerone, x, 5) The Filocolo version affords striking parallels to the Franklyn's, and the Italian work as a whole was almost certainly known to Chaucer See the introductory note on the Prologus, and for detailed discussion of the problem, P Rajna, Rom, XXXII, 204-67, K Young, Orig and Dev of the Story of Troilus and Criseyde, Ch Soc, 1908, p 181, J S P Tatlock, The Scene of the Franklyn's Tale Visited, Ch Soc, 1914, p 554, J L Lowes, MP, XV, 689-728, J M Manly, New Light, p 281 All these writers support the derivation from Boccaccio, though Professors Young and Lowes admit the possibility that a Breton lay on the subject also existed In any case, as Mr Lowes insists, the pretence of following a lay would have been a natural literary artifice, and Chaucer's veracity, in the ordinary sense, is in no way involved Since certain features of the tale are derived from the Teseide, there can be no doubt — lay or no lay — of the complex character of the composition

The underlying story is far older than Chaucer's poem or his immediate source, whatever that may have been It is a märchen of wide dissemination, sometimes referred to by folk-lorists under the title, "The Damsel's Rash Promise" Numerous oriental versions are known, of which the most ancient form appears to be that preserved in the Vetäla-Stories in Sanskrit In occidental literature, besides the closely similar tales of Chaucer and Boccaccio, there are well-known versions in Bojardo's Orlando Innamorato, in the Conde Lucanor of Juan Manuel, and in the Chevalier à la Manche of Jean de Condé On these various analogues and their relations see M Landau, Quellen des Dekamerons, 2d ed, Stuttgart, 1884, pp 93 ff, Clouston, in Originals and Analogues, Ch Soc, pp 291 ff, Aman, Die Filiation der Frankeleynes Tale, Erlangen 1912 and, for a convenient brief statement, Koch's notes to Hertzberg's translation of the Canterbury Tales, Berlin, 1925, pp 544-46 Schofield, in arguing for the derivation of the Franklin's Tale from a Breton lay, showed that faithfulness in keeping a rash promise appears repeatedly as a motif in Celtic literature and Arthurian romance. Examples are furnished by the Irish Tochmarc Etaine, the Welsh Mabinogi of Pwyll the lay of Sir Orfeo, and various versions of the Tristan romance. But none of these can be regarded as a source, even indirect, of Chaucer's tale. For further discussion of the Celtic stories see G Schoepferle, Tristan und Isolot, London, 1913, II, 528 ff.

The local setting of the Franklin's Tale is carefully studied by Professor Tatlock in the Chaucer Society volume cited above. On the narrative method see W M Hart, in Haverford Essays, Haverford, Pa., 1909, pp 185-234.

The Franklin's Prologue

709 Britouns, Bretons, inhabitants of French Brittany

710 The usual meaning of lay, as of OF "lai," was "song" or "lyric." In the sense which it here bears, a short narrative poem of romantic character, it is not known to occur before the time of Marie de France (circa 1170). Her famous series of Lais she professed to derive from Breton sources, and there is no reason for doubting the Celtic origin of her material. But no lays in the Breton language have been preserved, and their form, if they ever existed, is quite unknown. The literary type was perhaps the creation of Marie, who had a number of successors in French and English. It is uncertain, as was pointed out in the introductory note above, whether Chaucer followed an actual lay of Breton origin. He may simply be repeating the customary ascription which he found in the poems of Marie and her imitators. It is even doubtful whether he had direct knowledge of the writings of Marie, though the Franklin's Tale is held by some scholars to show the influence of her lay of Equitan. Chaucer could have got full knowledge of the type from the English lays of the 13th and 14th centuries. On the history of the term "lay" see Foulet, Zt f Rom Phil, XXX, 698 ff. For the Lais of Marie de France see the edition of Roquefort, Paris, 1820, and Warake, Halle, 3d ed., 1925. On the Middle English lays compare Wells, pp 124 ff.

716 The "modesty prologue" is a conventional literary type. For parallels see Miss Hammond, English Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, Durham, N C, 1927, pp 392 ff.

721 From the Satires of Persius, Prol., 1-3

722 Scithero, Cicero. On the confusion between Cicero and Cithero, in which Mt Cithaeron is also sometimes involved, see Miss Hammond, cited above, p 458.

726 Colours of rethoryk. See CIT, IV, 16 n.

The Franklin's Tale

729 Armorik, Armorica, "Ar vor" (the land by the sea), another name for Brittany.

734 oon the faireste. On the idiom see CIT, IV, 212, n.

749 ff. Cf MerchT, IV, 1377-79.

752 for shame of his degree, out of regard for his rank (as husband).

764-66 Cf Knt, I, 1624-26, from Tes, v, 13, 7-8, a passage which may have suggested the phraseology here and in Tr, II, 756. Chaucer seems also to have had in mind the RR (see II, 9424 ff.). Other parallels are Ovid, Met, II, 846-47 and the Ovide Moralisee, II, 4977-87 (ed C de Boer, in the Verhandelungen of the Amsterdam Academy, Afdeling Letterkunde, Nieuwe Reeks, XV, 277).

768 ff. Cf Manct, IX, 147 ff., also RR, 13939 ff.

771 ff. See also Tr, IV, 1584. The idea — "vincit qui patitur" — is a commonplace. Dionysius Cato, Disticha, I, 38, may have been in Chaucer's mind. For other parallels see Skeat's note. Professor Lowes has pointed out a similar passage in Machaut's Dit dou Lyon (Oeuvres, ed Hoepffner, SATF, II, II, 2040-44, 2066-76), with which Chaucer is known to have been familiar. Cf further Haeckel, p 14, no 46.

786 kan on, has skill in.

792-96 Cf RR, 9449-54.

801 Pedmark, doubtless the modern Breton Penmarc'h, a commune in the southwest corner of the department of Finistère, though the name may apply rather to the cape than to the village. Professor Tatlock points out that the coast is still characterized by dangerous outlying rocks. The village is now small but there is every indication that it was rich and populous in the fourteenth century. The shore just at the cape is not so bold as Chaucer's description implies, and the nearest point which combines high headlands with outlying rocks is Concarneau, about thirty-five kilometers away. It seems most likely that Penmarc'h, with its perilous ledges, is really meant, and that the description of the shore itself is a little inaccurate.

803-05 For similar language, in a satirical passage, see MerchT, IV, 1259 ff. Cf also IV, 1650 ff.

808 Kayrrud seems clearly to correspond to the modern Breton Kerru (Welsh Caer-rudd). There are several places of the name in modern Brittany, but none of them fits the conditions of the tale. The meaning of the name would be "red house" or "red village," and the adjective probably refers to the color of the old Roman brick. Remains of Roman building abound in the department of Finistère, and have been found directly facing the rochers de Penmarc'h. The form Kayrrud does not correspond exactly to either the natural Breton or the natural French form in Chaucer's time. The former would be more normally spelled "Ker (or Kaer-) ruz," and the latter "Karru" (or "Carru.") Mr. Tatlock (p. 15) suggests that Chaucer's spelling represents the Breton pronunciation ("Kaerrud" or "-ruz") as heard by an Englishman. But it may be an old Breton spelling taken over from Chaucer's source.

Arveragus, a Latinized Celtic name, spelt "Arvragus" in Juvenal, Sat. iv, 127, and in Geoffrey of Monmouth, Hist. Brit., iv, 12. On Geoffrey's account of Arvragus and Geniussa see Schofield, PMLA, XVI, 409 ff.

815 Dorgen, also a name of Celtic appearance. Tyrwhitt noted that Droguen, or Dorguen, was the wife of Alain I (G. A. Lobineau, Histoire de Bretagne, 2 v., Paris, 1707, I, 70). Cf. also the series "Dorgen," "Dorien" ("Dubrogenos?")—all masculine. The source and pronunciation of Chaucer's Dorgen are both uncertain. If it comes from a Breton form in gu, the g was probably sounded as in "get."

829-31 Cf. Boccaccio, Filocolo (ed. Moutier, Florence, 1829, II, 49), alluding to Ovid, Ex Ponto, iv, 10, 5 ("gutta cavat lapidem"). But Chaucer's figure is not quite the same.

861 Cf. Anel, 177.

865-67 Possibly a reminiscence of Tes, ix, 52-53. Cf. also Boethius, i, m, 5.

867 In ydel, in vain.

875 anoyeth, injures, does harm.

877 ff Cf. Boethius, m, m, 9.

880 merk, image (Gen. i, 27). It was used of the impression upon a coin.

885 Dorgen leaves the problem of evil to the experts, much as Palamon does in the KnT, I, 1823 f., or as the Nun's Priest dismisses the question of God's foreordination, NPT, VII, 3251.

886 Cf. Rom, viii, 28, and (for a philosophical statement of the case) Boethius, i, v, p. 6.

889 this, this is.

893 for the feere, for fear. Cf. the deeth, Gen ProL, I, 605, n.

899 dehables, a French plural form in -s. See the Grammatical Introduction.

900 tables, backgammon.

901 ff The garden corresponds to one in the Filocolo (II, 23 ff.), which Rayna held to be the main source of the description. But Chaucer also drew upon recollections of Emilia's garden in the Teseide (ii, 5-7), with which he combined a passage from the Dit dou Vergier of Machaut (Oeuvres, ed. Hoepfner, SATF, I, li 52-66, quoted in full in PMLA, XVI, 446). Cf. further LGW ProL G, 104 ff.

918 At after-dynar. See ShapT, VII, 255, n.

927 Cf. Gen ProL, I, 91 f.

932 beste farynge, handsomest. This meaning of faryng is clearly established in Mid Eng., as in Old Norse. See NED, s. v. Farrand, and cf. Patch, EST, LXV, 355 f.

For the confused construction with man (sg.) of NPT, VII, 2984, see also CIT, IV, 212, n.

938 Aurelius, a name of Roman origin, but known to have been in use among the Britons. Compare Gildas, De Excidio Brit., ch. 30, Geoffrey of Monmouth, Hist. Brit., vi, 5.

In the account of Aurelius's unrevealed love, as Mr. Lowes has shown (MP, XV, 689 ff.) Chaucer was influenced by the similar description of the love of Arcite in the Teseide (iv, 40 ff.). The reminiscences seem sometimes to go directly back to the Italian poem, and sometimes to Chaucer's English version in The Knight's Tale. The following parallel passages are most significant, others also are noted by Mr. Lowes.

V 925-32 Tes iv, 62, 1-6

V 933-34 KnT, I, 1423-43

V 935-43 Tes, iv, 60, 5-6, and 63

V 940 KnT, I, 1446

V 944-45 Tes, iv, 66, 6-8

V 946 Tes, iv, 68, 2

V 947-49 Tes, iv, 78, 1-2

V 959 Tes, iv, 62, 7-8

V 1031-37 Tes, iv, 43 (with incidental use of Tes, iii, 6 a passage which also influenced Tr, ii, 50-56, and LGW ProL F, 103-14).

942 Withouten coppe, under difficulties, or perhaps, in full draught. Cf. the Tale of Beryn, Ch Soc, 1887, 306, 460. For the general idea of drinking woe, punishment, etc., cf. HF, 1879 f., Tr, ii, 784, n., 1035, 1214 f., RR, 11535, 12640 and the French proverb, "Qu'fait fohe, si la boive" (Morawski, Prov. Fr., Paris, 1925, p. 71, no. 1939). See also Kittredge, [Harv] Stud and Notes, I, 32, Hinkley, MP, XVI, 47.

943 He was despayred. The corresponding line in the Teseide reads "Ed isperava, e non sapea in che cosa." Professor Wilkins suggests that Chaucer may have read "E disperava." See Lowes, MP, XV, 692 n. 5.

947-48 layes, used here in its ordinary sense of "songs," "lyrics." See the note to l. 710 above. The term compleintes, which had reference to subject-matter, was applied to both love-lyrics and religious poems. Chaucer regularly uses it in the former sense, and sometimes treats lay and compleint as synonymous. See the introduction to the Short Poems.

950 langwyssheth, endures pain. Cf. the account of the Furies in Tr, iv, 22 ff. See also Tr, i, 1, n.

951-52 In this reference to the death of Echo, Chaucer seems to have been following Ovid, Met, iii, 394 f., rather than RR, 1439 ff., which doubtless suggested the reference in BD, 735 f.

963 "And [she] had known him a long time' For the omission of the subject of Gen Prol, I, 33, n

981 Nevere erst, never before On this use of erst see KnT, I, 1566, n

1015 After an interval dancing is resumed It is hardly necessary to assume (with Rayna and Tatlock) the influence of the Filocolo where the festivities are begun afresh in Fiammetta's garden after the heat of the day has passed

1016-17 Mr Lowes (MP, XV, 695) suggests that these lines go back to the May morning scene in the Teseide (particularly to III, 12, 1-2), with a simultaneous reminiscence of Tes, VII, 68, 1-2, and probably also of a line of Dante (Purg, VI, 60) which Boccaccio doubtless also recalled With the use of refi he compares also Tes, III, 43, 1-2, and in general Tes, IV, 72, 5-6, X, 14, 5-6

1018 The astronomical mode of defining times and persons, here satirized, was very characteristic of Chaucer and his time Cf Gen Prol, I, 8, n A close parallel to Chaucer's humorous comment is cited by Miss Hammond (MLN, XXVII, 91 f) from Fulgentius, Mitologiarum Libri Tres, Opera, ed Helm, Leipzig, 1898, p 13 After eleven flowery lines of verse, Fulgentius returns to prose with the remark, "et, ut in uerba paucissima conferam, nox erat" Professor Manly (Chaucer and the Rhetoricians, British Acad, 1926, p 13) compares also the comments of Geoffroi de Vinsauf on the opening lines of the Aeneid, and on the meter of Boethius, "O qui perpetua mundum ratione gubernas — Quod nihil aliud est quam 'O Deus'" (De Modo et Arte Dictandi et Versificandi, ed E Faral, Les Arts Poétiques du XII^e et du XIII^e Siècle, Paris, 1924, p 273)

1033 after thy declinacoun, according to thy distance from the celestial equator

1045 ff With Aurelius's procedure here in begging Apollo to invoke in turn the aid of Lucina (a rather unusual complication) Lowes (MP, XV, 721 f) compares the prayer of Florio in the Filocolo, I, 166

1049-50 Possibly suggested by the Anticlaudianus of Alanus de Insulis, II, 3 (Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 501) But a particular source is hardly needed to explain so simple a reference to the dependence of lunar upon solar light

1053 as she that is The nominative is retained, where the accusative might be expected, in this stereotyped phrase For the idiom compare I 1088, below, and KnT, I, 964

1055 ff The highest tides occur when the sun and moon are in conjunction or in opposition Aurelius prays that when the sun is next in Leo, its own mansion, and the Moon in opposition, the moon may move for two years at the same apparent rate as the sun Then it will remain at the full, and the spring-tide will last all the while

1074 Luna is here conceived in her character as Proserpina, goddess of the lower world Cf KnT, I, 2081 f

1077 Delphos, Chaucer's form for Delphi, from the Lat acc

1084 thought, anxiety, grief

1086 for me, so far as I am concerned ("for all of me") Whether, pronounced weh'er

1094 ymagynatyf, full of imaginings here suspicious

1110 Pamphilus, the hero of the mediæval Latin poem, Pamphilus de Amore See Mel, VII, 1556, n

1113 sursanure, a wound healed only on the surface, here used with reference to the first line of the De Amore "Vulneror, et clausum porto sub pectore telum" (ed Baudouin, Paris, 1874)

1118 Orhens, Orleans, the seat of an ancient university On Wright's dubious suggestion, quoted by Skeat, that as a result of its rivalry with the University of Paris it came to be regarded as a seat of occult sciences, see Tatlock, Scene of the Franklin's Tale, Ch Soc, 1911 p 43 Professor Lowes printed in Rom Rev, II, 125 ff, notes on student life at Orleans, see also J F Royster, Stud Phil, XXXIII, 383 f

1125 On magyk natureel see Gen Prol, I, 416, n

1130 The twenty-eight mansions, or stations, of the moon correspond to the twenty-eight days of a lunation For their positions Skeat refers to Ideler, Untersuchungen über den Ursprung und die Bedeutung der Sternnamen, Berlin 1809, pp 287 ff, and for their astronomical significance, to Joannes Hispanensis, Epitome Astrologiæ, Nurnberg, 1548, I, 11, IV, 18

1133 Cf I 1293 below For a discussion of Chaucer's attitude and that of the church in his time toward judicial astrology see Tatlock, Scene of the Franklin's Tale, pp 27 ff, Kittredge Anniversary Papers, Boston, 1913, p 348, and T O Wedel, The Mediæval Attitude toward Astrology, Yale Stud in Eng, 1920, 142 ff

1141 tregectures, jugglers Skeat notes that there are accounts of jugglery in Marco Polo (Yule, I, 314 ff, 386) Mandeville also reports magic at the court of the Great Khan (ed Hamelius, EETS, 1919, I, 156) But this feature of the story is not necessarily oriental For Celtic parallels of Schofield, PMLA, XVI, 417 ff, also the early Irish saga of Murchertach mac Erca, in the Yellow Book of Lecan, cols 313 ff (published in Rev Celt, XXIII, 395 ff) and the modern folk-tale, Mac an Sgoiloige agus an Gearra Glas, published by Douglas Hyde in An Sgeulachas Gaodhalach, II, 85, no 12 In the last instance the magical performances are made the condition of a marriage

1174 thrwfully, suitably, or perhaps, heartily, well The meanings of the word are often hard to define precisely

1180 daves, a variant of dayes, pl of day Cf fave(n), beside fayn, and slave(n), beside slayn

1196 Thise, used in a generalizing sense, as in ll 376, 818, above Cf KnT, I, 1531, n. With ryver in the sense of "hawking-ground" cf WBT, III, 884, n., Thop, VII, 737, n.

1203 For the clapping of hands to break a spell of the Epilogue to The Tempest 1204 For this extension of the use of the possessive — the familiar or "domestic" our — see ShpT, VII, 69, n.

1219 See ShpT, VII, 255, n.

1222 Gerounde, the Gironde Sayne, the Seine

1223 made it straunge, held off, made difficulties about it Cf to make it wys, Gen Prol, I, 785, and n.

1228 It was the regular scientific teaching of the Middle Ages that the earth was round

1232-44 Rajna (Rom., XXXII, 239) and Lowes (MP, XV, 715 f.) note a striking parallel in both words and situation between this passage and the Filocolo, II, 53

1245 hewed lyk latoun, copper-colored

1246 in his hootie declynacioun, in Cancer

1248 The sun entered Capricorn on Dec 13

1250-51 Cf Tes m, 44, 2 f

1252 Janus with double berd stands for January In MS E1 is the marginal gloss "Janus biceps," referring to "Iane biceps," Ovid's Fasti, I, 65 For a calculation of the approximate date of the clerk's operation — Jan 3-4, when the full moon would be in the fourth term of Cancer and in its own "face," a position of extraordinary potency — see Tatlock, Kitt Anniv Papers, pp 343 ff

1255 Novel, Noel, Christmas

1263 conclusioun, of the frequent use of the word in Chaucer's Astrolabe for problems or exercises in astronomy

1273 tables Tolletanes, astronomical tables composed by order of Alphonso X of Castile (13th cent.), and adapted to the city of Toledo 1274 corrected, either adapted to a given locality, or purged of errors For testimony on the inaccuracy of the tables see Tatlock, Kitt Anniv Papers, p 346, n.

1275 Expans yeers, computations of the changes of a planet's position in single years or short periods up to 20 years, collect yeers, computations for round periods from 20 to 3000 years See Astr, II, 44

1276 rootes, data for a given time or period, which serve as the basis of a computation Cf MLT, II, 314, and Astr, II, 44

1277 centrus, "the end of the small brass projection on the 'rete' of an astrolabe which denoted the position of a fixed star" (Skeat) Argumentz, "the angle, arc, or other mathematical quantity, from which another required quantity may be deduced, or on which its calculation depends" (NED)

1278 proporcionales conventz, tables of proportional parts for computing the motions of planets during fractions of a year For the adjectival plural in -s cf deltables, I 899 above

1279 equacions, possibly allowances for minor motions, though the NED does not record this meaning before the seventeenth century The reference here may be rather to the equations, or divisions, of the sphere into "houses" for astrological purposes

1280 ff his eghte speere, the sphere of the fixed stars The true equinoctial point (the head of the "fixed Aries") was conceived as situated in the ninth sphere i e., the Primum Mobile The amount of the precession of the equinoxes was ascertained by observing the distance between the true equinoctial point and the star Alnath (α Arietis) in the head of Aries (in the eighth sphere)

1285 his firste mansioun, the first mansion of the moon, called Alnath from the name of the star

1288 Each sign of the zodiac was divided into equal parts, of ten degrees each, called faces, and unequal parts, termes The faces and terms were all assigned to one or another of the planets

1289-90 The association of the moon with magic is of course familiar from antiquity down For illustrations see Tatlock, Kitt Anniv Papers, pp 341-49 According to his calculations, the mansion here concerned was probably the eighth See p 347

1311 The speeches of Aurelius (ll 1311 ff) and Dorigen (ll 1355 ff), as Chaucer notes in the case of the second, are formal "complaints" Skeat points out the similarity of the whole passage in style to the Complaint of Aneida, comparing especially l 1318 with Anel, 288, l 1340 with Anel, 173, l 1348 with Anel, 169

1325 but youre grace, but only your favor This conception, that the lover's only hope lay in the unmerited favor of the lady, was the counterpart, in the religion of love, of the Christian doctrine of grace Cf KnT, I, 3089, n.

1355-1456 This complaint rehearses the six chapters of Jerome against Jovinian which precede the extract from Theophrastus Cf the briefer summing-up by the God of Love in LGW Prol G, 281-304 In ll 1412-13 there is perhaps also a reminiscence of Deschamps, Miroir de Mariage, l 9153

1356 Possibly suggested by "si strigeano le catene," Tes, II, 32, 5

1357-58 Cf Filocolo (ed Moutier), II, 59 1360 have I leve, I had rather On this idiom cf Am Jour Philol, II, 281 ff

1366 Most of the passages from Jerome are quoted at length in Skeat's notes The persons and places are briefly identified, when necessary, here below

1367 ff The accumulation of exempla here was in accord both with the recommendations of the rhetoricians and with the practice of other mediæval poets, conspicuously with Machaut's See Manly, Chaucer and the Rhetoricians, Brit Acad, 1926, p 12, Œuvres de Machaut, ed Hoepffner, SATF, I lxxxii

1367 The Thirty Tyrants were put down in 403 B C

1380 Lacedomye, Lacedaemonia

1387 f Aristocleides, tyrant of Orchomenos in Arcadia Stymphalides, properly Stymphalis (acc Stymphalidem)

1399 A reference to the story of Hasdrubal's wife in the third Punic War (146 B C) Cf also NPT, VII, 3363

1405 Cf the legend of Lucretia, LGW, 1680 ff

1409 Melesse, Miletus A reference to the sack of Miletus by the Gauls in 276 B C

1414 Habradate, Abradates, King of the Susi Jerome took the story from Xenophon's Cyropaedia, vii, 3

1418 if I may, if I have power (to prevent it) For this negative implication of ML Prol, II, 89, n

1426 The virgin daughter of Demotion, when she learned of the death of the man to whom she was betrothed, killed herself lest she should be compelled to marry another, "cum priori mente nupsisset"

1428 Cedalus, Scedasus of Boeotia Plutarch (Amatoriae Narrationes) relates that his daughters, after being violated, killed each other from shame

1432 Nachanore, Nicanor, an officer of Alexander at the capture of Thebes (B C 336)

1437 Nicerates was put to death by the Thirty Tyrants, and his wife killed herself lest she should become their victim

1439 The concubine of Alcibiades, who buried his dead body, was Timandra See Plutarch, Life of Alcibiades

1442 On Alcestis see LGW Prol F, 510 ff, and n

1443 Penalopee, Penelope, the faithful wife of Odysseus

1445 On Laodamia, who refused to survive her husband Protesilaus, see Ovid, Heroides, xiii

1448 On the death of Portia, the wife of Brutus, see the end of Plutarch's Life of Brutus

1451 Arthemese, Artemisia, wife of King Mausolus, who built for him the famous "mausoleum"

1453 Teuta, queen of Illyria

1455 Bilyea, Bilya, wife of Duillius, who won a naval victory over the Carthaginians, B C 260 (see Florus, Eptome, i, 18) Her story, under the name Uhe, is told by Hoccleve, De Regimine Principum (EETS, p 135), quoting Jerome, Adv Jov, i, 46 (Migne, Pat Lat, XXIII, 275)

1456 Rodogone, Rhodogune, daughter of Darius She killed her nurse, who tried to persuade her to a second marriage Valeria, wife of Servius, refused to marry a second time

The following marginal notes in MS El, doubtless due to Chaucer, indicate both the source of the passage and a plan, at some time in his mind, to add further instances of unfortunate wives "Memorandum Strato regulus Vidi & omnes pene Barbares capitulo, xxvi^o primi Item Cornelia & c Imitentur ergo nupte Theanam Cleobiham Gorgam (or Gorgun) Thymodiam Claudias atque Cornelias in fine libri primi"

"Singulas has historias & plures hanc materiam concernentes recitat beatus Ieronimus contra Iovinianum in primo suo libro, capitulo 39^o"

1461 Cf Filocolo (ed Moutier) II, 58

1470 as wys, as (is) certain

1471 and, if (an unusual meaning in Chaucer)

1472 Cf the proverb, "Let sleeping dogs lie"

1479 Trouthe, truth, pledged word This is the first moral of the tale Professor Manly compares the motto on the tomb of King Edward I, "Pactum serva"

1483 telle, imperative The construction is broken after That

1503 down, ready, prepared, bound (ON "bunn")

1531 Cf the note to l 1360, above

1532 "Than that I should part" The ellipsis of that was common in this situation

1540 Dr P F Baum (MLN, XXXII, 377) argues that the speech should end here and the next four lines be assigned to the Franklin

1543-44 The second virtue inculcated is gentillesse

1547 sayd, an unusual use of the past participle See A. Graef, Das Perfectum bei Chaucer, Frankenhäusen, 1888, p 93

1549 wryte seems to be used here by oversight Cf KnT, I, 1201, and n

1575 dayes, days (of respite)

1580 a-begged, a-begging On the form see ParT, VI, 406, n

1614 "As if you had just crept out of the ground," had just made your first appearance

1624 The closing question is a common device at the end of a story or an episode Cf KnT, I, 1847, and n, and Filocolo (ed Moutier), II, 60, also Giovanni da Prato, Il Paradiso degh Alberti, ed A Wesselofsky, 3 v, Bologna, 1867, III, 152, 225 For a question similar to the one here, but propounded under different circumstances, see J F Campbell's Tales from the West Highlands, Paisley, 1890-93, II, 24 ff.

FRAGMENT VI

Fragment VI, comprising the Physician's Tale the Words of the Host, and the Pardoner's Prologue and Tale, is a floating fragment which is not connected at either end with the rest of the tales In the Ellesmere group of MSS it stands after Fragment V, in most other MSS after VIII, and in most recent editions after VII This last arrangement which was adopted by the Six-Text editor to fill out the tales of the second day, has no real authority, and recent discussion has favored either the Ellesmere order or one which puts Fragment VI immediately after Fragment I. See the general discussion of the subject in the introduction to the Textual Notes on the Canterbury Tales.

Three spurious prologues to the Physician's Tale are preserved in the MSS and early editions. See the Textual Notes on the CYT and the FranklT.

The Physician's Tale

The Physician's Tale is generally held to have been written as early as the beginning of the Canterbury period. In spirit and narrative method it resembles the stories that make up the Legend of Good Women, so much so, in fact, that some scholars have suggested that it was originally intended to stand, with the similar tale of Lucretia, in that collection. For this surmise there is no real evidence, but it is altogether probable that the story of Virginia was closely contemporary with the legends. From the fact that it is not mentioned in the list of Chaucer's works in the Prologue to the Legend, a date later than 1386 has been inferred, and from the fact that it shows no influence of Gower's version in the Confessio Amantis, a date earlier than 1390. It, as has been suggested by Professor Tatlock, the passage about duennas (ll 72 ff) has reference to a scandalous affair in the family of John of Gaunt, the most likely time of composition would be between 1386 and 1388. See the note to l 72 below, and compare for the historical details, G L Kittredge, MP, I, 5, n 7, and Tatlock, Dev and Chron, pp 150 ff.

Opinions differ as to the suitability of the tale to the Physician. It is defended by Professor Tupper (JEGP, XV, 59 ff). Professor Kittredge (Atlantic, LXXII, 829) also observes that the prologue discourse at the beginning is appropriate to the speaker. The same may be said of the advice to parents and governesses. And though the direct address to maistresses and fadres and moodres is not especially suited to the pilgrims, it is a natural rhetorical figure and may be disregarded as evidence. On the whole the situation is puzzling. The passages especially appropriate to the Physician might have been added in revision, and it is doubtful whether the tale was originally composed with him in mind.

The ultimate source of the story of Virginia is Livy's History, Bk m. Chaucer refers to Livy as his authority, but he certainly made use of the version in the Roman de la Rose (5589 ff). Whether the French or the Latin was his primary source is a matter of disagreement. See Fansler, Chaucer and the ER., New York, 1914, pp 31 ff. Chaucer's version and that of Gower (Conf Am, vii, 5131 ff.) appear to be mutually independent.

See O Rumbaur, Die Geschichte von Appius und Virginia in der englischen Litteratur, Breslau, 1890.

6 Other authorities say simply that Virginia was an only daughter. In making her an only child, Miss Grace W Landrum suggests, Chaucer was influenced by the story of Jephthah's daughter (Judges xi, 34), mentioned in l 240. (See her unpub Radcliffe diss., Chaucer's Use of the Vulgate, 1921.)

9 It was a common device, in the description of beautiful women, to represent the goddess Nature as having given special attention to their creation. Cf Anel, 80, BD, 871 ff., and see E C Knowlton, MP, XX, 310 f.

14 ff On Pygmalion see Ovid, Met, x, 242 ff. But Chaucer was doubtless following RR, 16177 ff, where Pygmalion, Apelles, and Zeus are all mentioned in a similar argument. On Apelles and Zanzus (a corruption of Zeus) MSS El and Hg have the marginal note "Apelles fecit mirabile opus in tumulo Darn Vide in Alexandri libro 1° (Hg 6°) de Zanze in libro Tullii." According to the Alexandreis of Philippe Gualtier de Chatillon (ca 1200), vii, 384 ff (ed Mueideiner, Leipzig, 1863) the tomb of Darius was the work of a Jewish artist named Apelles. The famous Athenian painter, Zeus, is mentioned, along with Apelles, in Cicero's De Oratore, iii, 26, to which reference is doubtless intended in the marginal note above. But Cicero's Apelles was the historic painter of ancient Athens, and not the fictitious figure of the Alexander romance.

20 vacare general, with this epithet of Nature of PF, 379, also RR, 16782, 19505 ff., and earlier, Alanus de Insulis, De Planetu Naturae (Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 453).

32-34 Cf RR, 16242 ff.

35-120 This passage is Chaucer's addition. 41 ff The description of Virginia's maidenly virtues, which is not derived from the Roman de la Rose, contains much that was commonplace in treatises on virginity. Professor Tupper (MLN, XXX, 5 ff) has shown that good illustrations of the passage, if not its actual source, may be found in the Libri Tres de Virginitate of St Ambrose (Migne, Pat Lat, XVI, 187-232). He compares especially l 43 with Ambrose, ii, §7, l 48 with Ambrose, iii, 9, ll 58-59 with Ambrose, iii, 5, ll 61 ff with Ambrose, iii, 25, ll 72 ff with Ambrose, iii, 31, ll 117 ff with Ambrose, ii, 10, and ll 118 ff with Ambrose, ii, 9, 14. The pathetic speech in which Virginia chooses death rather than dishonor is modeled on such examples of the self-sacrifice of virgin martyrs as are found in the stories cited from St Jerome by the Franklin (V, 1367 ff). But for this also, Mr Tupper points out, a good parallel is furnished by the account of St Pelagia in the treatise of Ambrose (Bk iii, ch 7).

54 Sownynge m, conducing to See Jess Prof, I, 307 n.

59 Cf Ovid, Ars Amat, I, 243 f
60 A proverbial phrase, cf Horace, Sat, II, 3, 321, and see Skeat, EE Proverbs, p 109, no 258

65 Cf Ars Amat, I, 229 ff

72 ff In inserting this rather extraordinary digression on the responsibilities of governesses and parents it has been supposed that Chaucer had in mind the family of John of Gaunt Katherine Swynford, the governess of Lancaster's children, was for many years his mistress, and in 1396 became his third wife Moreover, Elizabeth, his second daughter, who was married to the Earl of Pembroke as a mere child in 1380, was introduced at court in 1386, and shortly afterward had a liaison with John Holland Pembroke secured a divorce and Holland married Elizabeth and took her to Spain In June 1388, or perhaps earlier, they returned to England (For further details see Tatlock, Dev and Chron, pp 153 ff)

Mr Cowling (Chaucer, London, 1927, p 166) would connect the passage not only with the affair of Elizabeth of Lancaster but also with the abduction of Isabella atte Halle in 1387 Chaucer was commissioned to attend the inquiry

79 Cf Gen Prol, I, 476, and n

85 Cf the modern proverb, "Set a thief to catch a thief", and Skeat, EE Prov, p 109 no 259

91 f Cf Bo, III, pr 5, 78 ff, and Mercht, IV 1793 f

98 Prov xiii, 24

101 Proverbial, cf Alanus de Insulis, Liber Parabolarum, I, 31 (Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 581)

Sub molli pastore capit (var rapit) lanam lupus, et grex

Incustoditus dilaceratur eo

See also Skeat, EE Prov, p 110, no 260, Haeckel p 48, no 165

107-08 Cf II Cor II, 2

117 The doctor, St Augustine (not the Physician who tells the tale) Cf NPT, VII, 3241, and ParsT, X, 484 It is unnecessary to assume (with Brusendorff, p 129, n 3) a word-play on the profession of the Physician

135 f Chaucer here returns to his source

153 f The judge's name was Appus Claudius and the churl's Marcus Claudius But Jean de Meun calls the former simply Apus and the latter Claudius

168 ff Cf RR, 5612 ff

207-53 The account of the speech is original with Chaucer

240 Judges xi, 37-38

255-76 Cf RR, 5635-58 The bringing in of the head is narrated in RR and not in Livy See Langlois, Origines et Sources du Roman de la Rose, Paris, 1891, p 118

277 Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 41, no 141

286 With this formula, which was proverbial, cf ParsT, X, 93

The Words of the Host

288 by nayles and by blood, the familiar oath, by the nails of the Cross and the blood of Christ See I 651, and n

291 advocat, spelled advocas(e) in several MSS, seems to have been pronounced with a silent t Otherwise there is only assonance with allas

295 The distinction between gifts of Fortune and gifts of Nature (both powers being more or less personally conceived) was familiar in mediæval literature See Dan Michel, Ayenbite of Inwit, ed Morris, EETS, pp 24-25, following Frère Lorenz, Somme des Vices et des Vertus In general the endowments of the body and the soul are attributed to Nature, and the advantages of outer circumstance — honor, rank, prosperity — to Fortune But the distinction was not consistently maintained, and physical beauty, for example, was sometimes counted among the gifts of Fortune See Deschamps, Œuvres, SATF, III, 386 (no 544) In ParsT, X, 450 there is a three-fold classification of gifts of Fortune, of Nature, and of Grace

304 cors, body, self Cf ML Epl, II, 1185

306 Ypocras, a beverage composed of red wine, spices, and sugar, said to have been so named because a strainer was known as "Hippocrates sleeve" See Halliwell's Dictionary, s v Hippocras, Ipcoras, from which Skeat's note quotes a receipt for making the drink For an example of its use see Mercht IV, 1807

Galones, apparently (Skeat suggests) drinks or remedies named after Galen But there seems to be no other occurrence of the word, and it may be a blunder of the Host's

310 Semt Ronyan Ronyan here has three syllables and rimes with man, in l 320, Ronyon is dissyllabic and rimes with anon It was taken by Skeat to be a corruption of Ronan, well known to readers of "St Ronan's Well" But later commentators have questioned the identification Professor Tupper has proposed another explanation In JEGP, XIV, 257, n, he suggested the possibility of ribald ambiguity, with word-play upon "runnon", and later (JEGP, XV, 66 f) developing the theory more fully, he took the name to be a coinage from French "rognon," kidney Professor Manly points out that "runnan" occurs in fifteenth-century English documents as a term for a farm servant A double meaning with reference to one or more of these terms may have been in Chaucer's mind, but the hypothesis is not necessary For "Ronyan" and "Runnan" were current, as Professor G L Hamilton has pointed out to the editor, as corruptions of the name of St Nnman, the celebrated founder of Candida Casa See J Dowden, Proc of the Soc of Ant of Scotland, 3d Ser V, 193 ff.

313 cardynacle, for, "cardiacle," pain about the heart. It is hard to say whether this reading (in the Ellesmere MS and several others) was merely an error of the scribe or blunder intentionally attributed to the Host. In either case, of course, the form is due to confusion with "cardinal."

314 By corpus bones, see Mh. Prol., VII, 1906 n.

327 Obviously the Pardoner is not really hard put to it to think of a decent story. He is simply making an excuse for a drink. Moreover, the association between taking a drink and telling a tale is ancient and proverbial. Cf. O'Rahilly, Miscellany of Irish Proverbs, Dublin, 1922, pp. 118 f.

The Pardoner's Prologue and Tale

The Pardoner's Prologue and Tale form a consecutive composition clearly written in the period of the Canterbury Tales. There is no definite indication of a more precise date. If, as some commentators suggest, the Pardoner was not in the original group of pilgrims, his tale was probably not among the earliest of the stories. On the other hand, there is no reason for putting it among the very latest, in the period of the so-called Marriage Group. The frequent quotation from Innocent's De Contemptu Mundi associates it with the Man of Law's Tale, which has been conjecturally dated about 1390.

The story is a typical exemplum or "ex-ample," skillfully worked up in what the Pardoner presents as a customary sermon. It is of oriental origin, the earliest known analogue being one of the Jatakas, or birth-tales of Buddha, and one of the most recent being the story of the King's Ankus in Kipling's Second Jungle Book. Chaucer's source is unknown, but the version which most nearly resembles his is that in the Libro di Novelle e di Bel Parlar Gentile Florence, 1572, no. lxxxii, also printed in the Originals and Analogues (Ch. Soc.) Pt. II, p. 131, and by Skeat, Oxf. Chau., III, 440-42. For further information see A. d'Ancona, Studi di Critica e Storia Letteraria, 2d ed., Bologna, 1912, II, 136-38, Miss Hammond, p. 296, T. F. Crane, MP., X, 310, W. Wells, MP., XXV, 163-64. The mārahen type is no. 763 in A. Aarne's Types of the Folk-Tale, tr. S. Thompson, Helsinki, 1928. Besides what may have been derived from its main source, the Pardoner's Tale contains numerous literary borrowings of an incidental character. The quotations from Innocent have been already mentioned, and there are also a number of passages derived from, or parallel with, portions of Chaucer's own Parson's Tale. For the character of the Old Man, which is largely original with Chaucer, use was made of an elegy of Maximian. See G. L. Kittredge, Am. Jour. Philol., IX, 84 f.; Miss Petersen (Sources of the Nonne Prestes Tale, Boston, 1898, p. 100, n.), suggests that the same character owes something to the Liber de Apibus, by Thomas of Cantimpre, in which she also finds parallels to the localization in Flanders and to the descriptions of dicing, swearing and reveling.

Both the Prologue and the Tale of the Pardoner are apparently delivered while the pilgrims are still at the tavern (l. 321). At least there is no indication that they take the road before the Pardoner begins. So a story which is in large part an attack upon gluttony and revelry is told in a tavern by a man notoriously addicted to the vices he condemns. Professor Tupper has laid emphasis upon the humor of the situation. On his further contention that a similar method is carried out generally in the Canterbury Tales see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the CT.

On the pardoners of Chaucer's age as a class and the abuses they practiced, see J. J. Jusserand, Chaucer's Pardoner and the Pope's Pardoner, Chaucer Soc. Essays, xiii (Pt. v), cf. also G. R. Owst, Preaching in Mediæval England, Cambridge, 1926, pp. 99 ff. The character and conduct of Chaucer's Pardoner, in particular the problem of his self-betrayal, are discussed by Professor G. L. Kittredge in the Atlantic Monthly, LXXII, 829 ff., Chaucer and his Poetry, pp. 211-18.

The Pardoner's Prologue

333 theme, text. The regular mediæval sermon was in six parts: (1) theme, (2) protheme, a kind of introduction, (3) dilatation, exposition of the text, (4) exemplum, illustration by anecdote, (5) peroration, or application, (6) closing formula. The Pardoner's sermon seems to have only three or four of these divisions: (1) l. 334, (4) ll. 463-903, (5) ll. 904-15, and perhaps (6) ll. 916-18. See Professor Manly's note, with references to Lecoy de la Marche, La Chaire Française au Moyen Âge, Paris, 1868, and J. M. Neale, Mediæval Preachers and Mediæval Preaching, London, 1856, also a study of the passages in Chaucer which relate to preaching, by C. O. Chapman, PMLA, XLIV, 178 ff.

334 I Tim. vi, 10 (omitting omnium, which would be hypermetrical). Cf. Mel., VII, 1130, n.

337 Oure lige lordes seal, the seal of some bishop. Cf. Piers Plowman, A Prol, 66 ff.

345 "To give color and flavor to my preaching." On the position of with immediately after the infinitive see Gen. Prol., I, 791, n.

347 crystal stones, glass cases.

351 The holy Jew was presumably of the Old Testament era, possibly Jacob. See Gen. xxx, 31 ff., and cf. l. 364 below. The superstitious use of a sheep's shoulderbone mentioned in Par. T., X, 603, is quite different. The reference there seems to be to spatulomancy, a recognized form of divination.

355 "That hath eaten any worm, or any worm hath stung" The strange repetition of worm is due to the fact that in the first case it is the object of ete, in the second the subject of (hath) ystonge. The diseases of cattle were often attributed to the eating of injurious worms. Cf the taunt-worm in Milton's Lycidas, l 46

390 An hundred mark The mark was worth 13s 4d (two-thirds of a pound). But the purchasing value of money then was twenty-five or thirty times what it would be today since the Great War

392 Professor Manly observes that this passage and Gower's Mirour de l'Omme, ll 5245 ff, prove the use of some kind of seats in English churches. He cites further evidence as to French churches from Lecoy de la Marche, La Chaire Française, pp 197 ff

403 Cf RR, 11565 (Rom, 6837). Professor Brusendorff (pp 402 ff) argued that the English Romant, rather than the French original was followed here and in ll 407 f, 443 f, below

406 "Though their souls go a-blackberry-ing," i.e., wandering at large. The form blackberried, as Skeat explained, is formed on the analogy of such nouns as hunted, fished, from AS nouns in -ath, -th ("huntoth," "fiscath," etc). The Middle English ending, properly -eth, came to be assimilated to that of the preterite participle. Cf a-caterwaued, WB Prol, III, 354. Other examples are given in Skeat's note

407 ff Cf RR, 5113 f (Rom, 5763 f), and perhaps 5071-5118

416 Here and in ll 441 ff, the Pardoner speaks as if he belonged to a mendicant order. On the other hand, his reference, in WB Prol, III, 166, to taking a wife — if it is not a mere outburst of facetiousness — implies that he was a layman or one of the lower clergy

435 ensamples, "exempla," the term regularly applied to the illustrative anecdotes of preachers

443 ff Cf RR, 12504 (Michel). The basket-maker was Paul the Hermit, not St Paul, as some of the commentators have supposed. Cf Piers Plowman, B, xv, 281 ff, and see St Jerome's Life of Paul the Hermit, §16 (Migne, Pat Lat., XXIII, 28). Whether Chaucer himself was confused (note the apostles, l 447) is not clear

447 countrefete, imitate

The Pardoner's Tale

472 ff With this familiar characterization of swearing of ParsT, X, 591. Further illustration is given in Skeat's note on the present passage, and by Professor Lowes in Rom Rev, II, 113 ff. In the idea there is perhaps a reminiscence of Heb vi, 6. The oaths were commonly by the parts of the body of Christ (as in ll 651 ff below)

477 tombesteres, female dancers. On the suffix -stere (AS "-estere"), here used with its proper feminine significance, see Gen Prol, I, 241, n

479 On the bad reputation of wafereres see Skeat's note

483 Eph v, 18

487 Gen xix, 33

488 the stories, usually taken to be a reference to the Historia Evangelica (published with Hist Scholastica) of Peter Comestor, which tells the story of Herod and John the Baptist in chap lxxiii. But Comestor's account is very brief and says nothing about drunkenness. For the biblical narrative see Matt xiv, Mark vi. Miss Landrum (diss., II, 134) notes also the Breviarium Romanum Pars Aestiva, pp 713-19

492 ff See Seneca, Epist lxxxiii, 18. The Senecan reminiscences seem to continue through l 548. Cf especially Epist lx, 4, lxxxii, 27, xcv, 15, 19, 25, 26, 28-29, cxiv, 26 (See Rom Rev, X, 5-7)

495 dronkeleue, drunken. On the rare suffix -leue see NED, VI, 232, Angl Beibl, XIII, 235 f

499 confusoun, ruin

501 boght agayn exactly translates "redemut"

505 ff From Jerome, Adversus Iovinianum, u, 15 (Migne, Pat Lat., XXIII, 305)

512 ff Cf Ecclus xxxvii, 29-31

517 the shorte throte, the brief pleasure of swallowing. See again Jerome, Adv Jov, bk u, §8 "Propter brevem gulae voluptatem, terrae lustrantur et maria" (Migne, 297). Cf also Innocent, De Cont Mundi, bk u, ch 17 "Tam brevis est gulae voluptas" (Migne, CCXVII, 723)

519 to swynke, taken by Skeat and the NED as a compound to-swynke. But the existence of the word is very doubtful, and it seems easier to assume (with Manly) a change of construction

522 I Cor vi, 13

526 white and rede, white wine and red

See NPT, VII, 2342

529 ff Phil iii, 18 f

537 ff With the discourse on gluttony of the De Contemptu Mundi, bk u, ch 17 (Migne, 723) especially the clause "substantiam convertit in accidens" (translated in l 539). Substance and accident are used in their philosophical senses, the real essence of a thing, and the outward qualities (color, weight, texture, etc) by which it is apprehended

Chaucer can hardly have used this phrase without thinking of the current controversy about the Eucharist. Cf Wyclif's joke about the friar's treatment of a lord's cask of wine (Sermones, Wyclif Soc., III, 194)

547 f I Tim v, 6

549 Prov xx, 1, cited by St Jerome (Adv Jov, u, 10, Migne, XXIII, 299)

555 Judges xiii, 4 f, Num vi, 3

557 honeste cure, care for one's honor

558 ff Proverbial. cf M.T., II, 771 f, n

563 Lepe, a town near Cadiz, which was known for its strong wines

564 Fyssstretre, leads out of Lower Thames Street, near London Bridge Chaucer's father was a Thames Street vintner Chepe Cheapside, where there were numerous taverns

565 Doubtless an allusion to the illicit mixing of wines by the vintners Professor Manly cites evidence (from Letter Book H, p 145) that Spanish wines were cheaper than French — which would explain why they tended to creep subtly in!

567 On fumoslee, see NPT, VII, 2924, n

579 On the death of Attila (A D 453) see Jordanes De Getarum Gestis, ch xlix, Paulus Diaconus, De Gestis Romanorum, lib xv

585 Lamuel Lemuel, Prov xxxi, 4 ff

590 ff Cf Parst, X, 793

591 ff From John of Salisbury's Polycraticus, i, ch 5

603 The story is apparently taken from the Policraticus, but Chaucer has substituted Stibbon for Chilon, possibly under the influence of Seneca, Epist ix, 18-19, x, 1 (See Rom Rev, X, 5 n 15) For discussion of the identity of Stibbon, see N & Q, Ser 8, IV, 175

614 For other wise Koch (edn of Parst, 1902) reads otherwise, which he interprets as an adjective meaning "different," "otherwise minded" — a difficult and unnecessary alteration

629 With the whole passage on swearing of Parst, X, 587 ff

633 Cf Matt v, 34 (cited in the margin of MSS Hg Dd and 5 others), and James v, 12

635 ff Jer iv, 2

639 The firste table, the first five commandments, which teach man his duty toward God

641 the seconde heeste, reckoned by Protestants as the third commandment The first two commandments, according to the Protestant division, are regarded by the Catholic Church as one, and the tenth divided into two

643 rather, earlier, sooner (the literal sense)

649 f Ecclus xxxiii, 11

651 The oath by God's nails is ambiguous in English, and might refer to the nails of his body ("ungues") or the nails of the cross ("claves") In favor of the second application see Loves, Rom Rev, II 115 He cites, among other examples, "par les cloux Dieu" from a ballade of Arnaud de Corbie (Œuvres de Deschamps, SATF, I, 273 no 146) Probably, as Skeat suggests, swearers were not particular in making the distinction The nails of the body are more appropriate to the present context

652 A portion of Christ's blood was supposed to be preserved in a phial at Hayles in Gloucestershire For accounts of it see

Holmshed's Chronicle, London, 1807, II, p 475, Southey, Book of the Church, ch xii (3d edn, London, 1825, II, 70 f), and Horstmann, Altenglische Legenden, Heilbronn, 1881, p 275

653 A reference to the game of hazard, on which see ML Proh, II, 124, n

656 brached bones, dice Bucched, explained by Tyrwhitt and others as connected with "bichel" a name for dice (compare Du "bikel" cockal), is probably to be regarded rather as an opprobrious epithet derived from "bitch" and employed in Mid Engl, as it is today, in the sense of "cursed, execrable" Professor Carleton Brown (MLN, XXIII, 126) cites as a parallel phrase the Lat "ossibus caninis, id est decus," Vincent of Beauvais, Spec Morale, iii, 8, 4 It is not clear whether the adjective "caninus" refers to the material of which the dice were made or is a mere equivalent of the English epithet of abuse

667 Go bet, go better, faster, a call to the dogs in the chase

673 to-nyght, referring, as commonly in older English, to the previous night

674 Fordronke, doubtless the compound with for- in this case See KnT, I, 2142, n

679 this pestilence, during this plague There were four serious plagues, as Skeat notes, in the reign of Edward III, in 1348-49 1361-62, 1369, 1375-76 But since Chaucer's tale is later, and his source unknown, it is not possible to connect the reference definitely with any one of them

684 my dame, my mother Cf Manct, IX, 317

698 On the institution of sworn brotherhood, here referred to, see KnT, I, 1132, n

710 be deed, die, cf KnT, I, 1587, n

713 ff The old man here described seems to be almost entirely Chaucer's invention In the Italian tale in the Cento Novelle Antiche there is a hermit ("romito") represented as fleeing from Death The figure in Chaucer becomes rather a symbol of Death itself, or possibly of Old Age, conceived as Death's messenger Miss Petersen (Sources of the Nonne Prestes Tale, p 100 n) suggests that a hint for the character may have been furnished by the old man in the Liber de Apibus The Wandering Jew, though a similar figure, probably has no real connection For part of the speech that follows (ll 727 ff) Professor Kittridge (Am Jour Philol, IX, 84 f) has pointed out a very probable source in the first elegy of Maximianus, ll 1-4, 223-28 (ed Petschenig, Berliner Studien für class Phil u Arch, XI, n, also by R Webster, Princeton, 1900, pp 25 ff) Cf also the Middle English poem on Maximian, in Boddeker's Altenglische Dichtungen, Berlin, 1878, pp 245 f With the general sentiment may be compared Boethius, i, m 1, used by Chaucer in Tr, iv, 501 ff

717 with sory grace, an imprecation, as again in l 876

722 On the use of India as a limit of remoteness which was common in Middle English, see Kittredge, [Harv] Stud and Notes, I, 21 f

734 cheste, not coffin but clothes-chest

736 to wrappe in me, on the order see Gen Prol, I, 791, n

743 Levit xix 32

745 ff Cf Ecclus viii, 6

748 go or ryde, lit "walk or ride"

771 an eghte, for this use of the indefinite article cf ShpT, VII, 334 and n, also LGW, 2075

774 The value of an English florn was 6s 8d

781 Cf the proverb, "Lightly come, lightly go", and Skeat, EE Prov, p 110, no 261

782 wende, would have supposed (pret subj)

789 theves stronge, violent thieves, highwaymen

792 syly, practically synonymous with wysly in older English In the present case the wisdom consisted in what might now be called slyness

793 For drawing cuts cf Gen Prol, I, 835 ff

847 With the theology, or demonology, of this passage of Job i, 12, n, 6 and Chaucer's discussion in the FRT, III, 1482 ff

851-78 There is no similar account of the purchase of the poison in the Italian tale

858 destroyed, disturbed, harassed Cf SumT, III, 1847

889 f Ayycen Avicenna See Gen Prol, I, 432 His chief work was entitled The Book of the Canon in Medicine (Kitāb-al-Qānūn fil-Tibb) For a full account of the work and a translation of the first book see O Cameron Gruner, A Treatise on the Canon of Medicine of Avicenna, London, 1930 The fen was properly a section or subdivision of the work Skeat held canoun to be a mistaken use of the general title for a subdivision of the work But Professor Manly points out that the term is used repeatedly in chapter headings to denote "rule of procedure" The discussion of poisons is in Lib iv, Fen vi (Venice, 1582)

891 signes, symptoms

895 ff The moralizing passages here and elsewhere are marked Auctor by the scribe of MS El See MLT, II, 358, n

907 nobles, coins first struck by Edward III about 1339 and valued at 6s 8d sterlynges, silver pennies

915 and lo, sres, thus I preche This definitely marks the end of the sermon The men and women mentioned in the preceding lines are part of the imaginary congregation What follows is addressed to the Canterbury pilgrims

For a detailed discussion of the Pardoner's behavior here, and throughout his Prologue and Tale, see G L Kittredge, Atlantic, LXXII, 829 ff, Chau and his Poetry, pp 211-

18 Professor Kittredge's interpretation, very briefly stated, is as follows The Pardoner entered upon his confession not because he was overcome by drink, but because he was proud of his successful rascality He trusted the company, too, not to betray his confidence At the end of the sermon he suffered a revulsion of feeling His better nature asserted itself, and he spoke in deepest earnestness when he invoked upon the pilgrims the true pardon of Christ But this mood lasted only a moment, and he relapsed at once into impudent jocularly as he addressed the Host The Host replied with bitter offensiveness, and the Pardoner, who might ordinarily have been expected to match abuse with abuse, was reduced to silence because of the moral struggle within him Then the Host, perceiving the intensity of his anger, desisted, and the Knight intervened as peacemaker

916 Cf Ps cxlvii, 3

935 Paraventure, trisyllabic here, often spelled "paraunter"

939 moore and lasse, high and low

947 so thee'ch, so may I prosper (thee'ch)

951 Sent Eleyne, St Helen, the mother of Constantine, held to have been the finder of the true Cross See A Butler, Lives of the Saints, Dublin, 1883, Aug 18th

952 ff There is possibly an echo here of RR, 7108 ff, a passage of quite different general import, part of which seems to underlie Gen Prol I, 738 ff

953 seintuarie, here sacred object or relic, rather than sacred place Cf Roman de Troie, 25515, Chgés, 1194-96, Yvan, 6630-33

In certain MSS the Pardoner's Tale is followed by the Shipman's For two spurious links connecting the tales see the Textual Notes on the PardT

FRAGMENT VII

On the position of Fragment VII (formerly called Group B² in editions of the Tales) see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Man of Law's Epilogue and the introduction to the Textual Notes on the Canterbury Tales For spurious Pardoner-Shipman links see the Textual Notes on the Pardoner's Tale

The Shipman's Tale

It is clear from ll 12-19 that the Shipman's Tale was written for a woman, presumably for the Wife of Bath Furnivall and Skeat thought it was perhaps to be her second tale, but it was more probably meant for her first one and was then transferred to the Shipman after the plan of Fragment III was devised Professor Tatlock has conjectured, from the evidence of some copies of the Prologue, that the tale may have been temporarily shifted to the Summoner, before its final assignment to the Shipman. He suggests further that Chaucer originally intended, by this story of a merchant duped, to set on foot a quarrel between the Wife and the Merchant. Professor Manly (p 624) notes further that the Merchant's Tale bears indications of having been first intended for a member of a religious order and that Chaucer may have meant the Monk to retaliate there for the satire on monks in the Wife of Bath's tale (now the Shipman's). If either of these plans ever existed, it was abandoned in favor of the marriage debate in Fragment III. In any case, the composition of the Shipman's Tale probably somewhat antedates that of the Wife of Bath's Prologue and Tale. See Tatlock, Dev and Chron, pp 205 ff.

The story belongs to a familiar group of folk-tales, which have in common the motif of the "Lover's Gift Regained". Similar anecdotes are still current in the United States, told at the expense of nationalities proverbially famed for parsimony or shrewdness. Chaucer's exact source is unknown. It can hardly have been Decameron, viii, 1, or viii 2, both of which have features in common with the Shipman's story. The setting and the French phrase in l 214 make it seem probable that Chaucer was following a French Jahnav. But the Old French Le Boucheur d'Abbeville, though a similar story, cannot be the source for either Chaucer or Boccaccio. Sercambi's version, Novella 19 (ed Renier, Turin, 1889), stands close to Decam, viii, 1. Numerous other analogues, ranging from the Ancient Indian Sukasaptati (Parrot-Book) to modern stories current in Western Europe are discussed by J W Spargo, Chaucer's Shipman's Tale, The Lover's Gift Regained, FF Com., no 91, Helsinki, 1930 (part of a Harvard dissertation Studies in the Transmission of the Mediæval Popular Tale, 1926). Dr Spargo observes that Chaucer's tale, as compared with Boccaccio's, shows a minimum of plot and a maximum of characterization.

1 Seint Denys, St Denis, near Paris
4-19 Cf WB Prol, III, 337-56. The parallelism of thought, as well as the use of feminine pronouns, suggests that Chaucer was writing for the Wife. See also the note to ll 173 ff below.

9 Cf MerchT, IV, 1315, both perhaps from ParT, X, 1068. See also Job xiv, 2.

38 For this proverbial comparison see l 51 below, also KnT, I, 2437, and n.

41 This suggests the institution of sworn brotherhood, though not explicitly described as such. See KnT, I, 1132, n.

55 Brugges, Bruges

65 Cf Gen Prol, I, 166, and n.

69 Oure deere cosygn. With the use of oure here, indicating a point of view not literally that of the speaker or writer, cf ll 107, 356, 363 below, also NPT, VII, 3383, WB Prol, III 311, 432, 595, 713, 793. SumT, III, 1797, 1829, 2128 and FrankT, V, 1204.

Professor Tatlock, who has collected the instances, has appropriately termed the construction "the domestic our". "The colloquialism," he observes, "is an extension of an ordinary possessive to cases where it involves taking the point of view of the person addressed, and finally becomes stereotyped". See Stud Phil, XVIII, 425 ff.

70 malvesye Malmsey, wine of Malvasia (now Napoli di Malvasia), on the eastern coast of the Peloponnesus.

71 vernage, red wine from Italy (Ital "vernaccia," the name of a grape).

72 volatyl, wild fowl (Lat "volatula", Fr "volaille").

88 pryme, 9 A M

91 his thynges, the things he had to say, namely, the divine office in the Breviary.

97 under the yerde, under the rod, i.e., subject to discipline.

103 dare, he still crouch.

104 "As a weary hare sits on its lair."

105 "Which should happen to be distracted." For the omission of the relative subject see Gen Prol I, 529, n.

With forstraught of dastraught, both formed as if from "strecchen," to stretch.

131 porthors, breviary (Fr "porte-hors", Lat "portaforium").

137 for to goon, though I had to go. For the idiom see KnT, I, 1133 and n.

148 Seint Martyn, St Martin of Tours.

151 Seint Denys, St Dionysius, the patron saint of France (d 272).

173 Cf WBT, III, 1258 ff.

194 Genyloun, Ganelon, the traitor who betrayed Charlemagne's army at Roncesvalles. In punishment he was torn to death by wild horses. See the Chanson de Roland, 3735 ff. Cf MkT, VII, 2389, and BD, 1121.

206 chilyndre, a portable sun-dial (lit "cylinder"). For a description see Hoveden's Practica Chulindri ed E Brock, in Essays on Chaucer, II, m, Ch Soc, 1874.

For the practice, regular in Chaucer's time, of dining soon after prime, cf Tr, u, 1557, v, 1126.

214 Quy la, glossed Who ther in MSS E) and Hg.

Peter, an oath, by St Peter.

225 curious, involving elaborate care. Cf the active sense, "especially careful," l 243.

227 The line is repeated in SumT, III, 1943. Seint Yve is identified by Skeat with St Ives of Huntingdonshire, a very mythical Persian bishop who preached in England in the seventh century. Yves (or Yve) the familiar patron saint of Brittany, canonized in 1347, would also naturally have been known to Chaucer. Still a third saint, a twelfth-century bishop of Chartres, bore the same name (See Migne, Pat Lat, CLXI, xvii ff).

228 For tweye (two) the superior MSS read ten, which would be a high proportion of successful merchants. It is conceivable that Chaucer wrote ten and meant the sentence to be ironical. But it seems more likely that a scribe substituted ten for twy(n)e under the influence of the recurring phrase "ten or twelue"

233 "Seek relaxation on a pilgrimage" Cf the general remarks on the mediæval pilgrimage, Gen Prol, I, 465, n

255 At after-dyner, printed by Skeat and other editors at-after dinner, as in the similar phrases in Mercht, IV, 1921, SqT, V, 302, FranklT V, 918, 1219. There is support for the combination of at with after, under, etc. But in view of the frequent occurrence of the compounds after-dinner, after-supper, etc., and of phrases like at afternoon, the simple preposition seems more natural

259 seint Austyn, St Augustine

272 beye, buy. Chaucer uses two forms, beye and bye (like deye and dye)

276 a mile-wey, here a measure of time Cf furlong wey MLT, II, 557

316 upright, supine, flat on the back

334 "A certain (number) of frances" Cf MkT, VII, 2177, Tr, III, 596. Somewhat similar is the use of cardinal numerals after a, as an eighte brussheles, PardT, VI, 771, a twenty wynter, WB Prol, III, 600

355 seint Jame, probably St James of Compostella

367 The Lombards were famous money-lenders

369 Cf Mercht, IV, 2322, and RR, 10098

379 maketh it tough, on the various meanings of the phrase see Tr, II, 1025, n

402 Marie, an oath by the Virgin

403 "I care not a bit for his tokens"

416 "Score it on my tally", charge it to my account Cf Gen Prol, I, 570

434 Tallynge, dealing by tally, on credit, hence, incurring or paying a debt. A few MSS read talyng, "telling tales," but it is unlikely that Chaucer wrote this and a scribe substituted the less familiar word. Here, as in many of the Tales the final blessing is adapted to the story which precedes. In view of the likelihood that the Shipman's Tale was composed for the Wife of Bath the passage should doubtless be interpreted in the light of WB Prol, III, 130, 153, etc

The Introduction to the Prioress's Tale

435 corpus domnus, the Host's blunder for "Corpus Domini," the body of the Lord

438 a thousand last quade yeer, a thousand cartloads of bad years (last uninflected because used as a measure) Cf Mk Prol, VII, 1893

440 The monk made dupes of the man and his wife Cf MullT, I, 3389, and CYT, VIII, 1313

442 in, "inn," originally used of a private house

The Prioress's Prologue and Tale

The Prioress's Tale, although in the staccato meter which Chaucer used chiefly in the early eighties, is by common consent assigned to the period of the Canterbury Tales. The artistic perfection of the poem and its complete appropriateness to the Prioress are both evidence of a late date. Even the trifling oversight, quod she, in l. 581 betrays the fact that the tale was written with the teller in mind.

In type the story is a legend, or more precisely a miracle of the Virgin. The exact source is unknown, but from twenty-seven analogues which have been collected and examined by Professor Carleton Brown it is possible to construct pretty definitely what Chaucer had before him. In one group of legends the little martyr is a choir-boy, but in the greater number, as in Chaucer's tale, he is a school-boy. In most versions, and apparently in the original form of the story, the ending is happy and the murdered child is miraculously restored. For full information see C. Brown, The Miracle of Our Lady, Ch Soc, 1910. In a later article (MLN, XXXVIII, 92 ff.) Professor Brown cites a MS copy of the Alma Redemptoris apparently written by the hand of Friar William Herebert, with a note referring unmistakably to the legend. This proves the story to have been known, in the particular form in which the Alma Redemptoris appears, before 1333, the date of Herebert's death. An excellent study of the miracle of Our Lady as a literary type—primarily an analysis of the Old French collection by Gautier de Coincy—was contributed by W. M. Hart to the Charles Mills Gayley Anniversary Papers, Berkeley, 1922, pp. 31 ff. For an interesting miniature illustration of Mielot's 15th century version of the legend (printed by Brown, pp. 29 ff.) see Warner's edition, Roxburgh Club, Westminster, 1885, fol. 15 verso, from MS. Douce 374, Bodleian, and Miracles de Notre Dame, Miniatures du MS Fr 9199, Bib Nat, Paris, 19—, II, plate 19.

It appears that Chaucer followed closely the simple plot of his original. He also reproduced, though with far superior workmanship, the style and spirit of the numerous miracles of the Virgin current in his day. Even the tragic ending, which Skeat suggested might be due to him, has been found in several analogues, where it was perhaps taken over from the independent tale of Hugh of Lincoln. Apart from the faultless beauty of the verse, Chaucer's own contribution, in this tale as in many others, was largely in developing the setting and the personal characterization. The vitel clergeoun he changed from a boy of ten years or more to a child of seven in the beginning of his schooling, and the older felawe seems to have been entirely Chaucer's invention.

The legend took shape, according to Professor Brown, before 1200, and was first localized in England. But the general tradition of the murder of Christian children by Jews is much older, beginning as early as the tune of the Church historian Socrates (fifth century), and it is still alive. See the protest against its revival in the [London] Spectator, XCVI, 97. On the history of the whole matter of F J Child's introduction to the ballad of Sir Hugh or the Jew's Daughter. English and Scottish Ballads, Boston, 1882-98, III, 233 (no 155), also the Life of Wilham of Norwich, ed Jessopp and James, Cambridge, 1896, pp lxx ff., and H L Strach, The Jew and Human Sacrifice, London, 1909, pp 169 ff.

For the opinion, certainly mistaken, that Chaucer meant the Prioress's Tale as a satire on childish legends, see A Brandl, in Paul's Grundriss der Germ Phil., Strassburg, 1889-93, II, 1, 680.

The Prioress's Prologue

453 ff. The Prioress's Prologue, like that of the Second Nun (VIII, 1 ff.), has been shown to contain many ideas and expressions drawn from the Scriptures, the services of the church, and other religious poetry. It recalls in particular, as was most appropriate to the Prioress, certain passages in the Office (and Little Office) of the Blessed Virgin. The first stanza paraphrases Ps viii, 1-2, the opening psalm of Matins in that service. The figure of the burning bush (which was of course a familiar symbol of the Virgin) occurs in the antiphon Rubum quem vidit. This is given for the sixth hour in the Middle-English Prymer or Lay Folks' Prayer Book, where it is translated "Bi the buysch that Moyses sigh unbrent, we knowen that thū preisable maydenhede is kept" (ed H Littlehales, EETS, 1895-97, p 24). Cf F Tupper, MLN, XXX, 9 ff., and Sister Madeleva, Chaucer's Nuns, New York, 1925, pp 30 ff. Less exact parallels in thought or phraseology are further noted by Sister Madeleva, who compares the second stanza with the antiphon of Matins, "Dignare me laudare te, Virgo sacra", and the fourth stanza with the prayer and absolution of Matins "Sancta et immaculata virginitas, quibus te laudibus efferam nescio," and "Precibus et meritis beatae Mariae semper Virginis et omnium Sanctorum, perducit nos Dominus ad regna caelorum." In ll 474 ff. there seems clearly to be a reminiscence of Dante's address to the Virgin in Par., xxxiii, 16-21, which Chaucer translated more fully in the poem to the Second Nun's Tale.

It was a regular literary convention to prefix to a miracle or saint's legend an invocation to Christ or the Blessed Virgin.

461. The white lily and the burning bush were familiar symbols of the Virgin Mother. For the latter, already noted as occurring in an antiphon, cf also ABC, 89 ff. (where Chaucer is following Deguilleville). The figure of the lily, Professor Manly points out, is said by Alanus de Insulis to be derived from the Song of Solomon, ii, 2.

470. th'alghte. The vowel of thee, like that of the article the, was sometimes elided

471. lighte, either "cheered" or "illuminated."

472. See I Cor 1, 24.

The Prioress's Tale

488. It is unknown what suggested to Chaucer the localization in Asia, which has not been noted in any other version of the legend. The conditions described remind one of the situation in Norwich, England, where the Jewish colony was under the special protection of the King. See the introduction to the Life of Wilham of Norwich, cited above.

491. usure, interest, the taking of which was forbidden by the Church in the Middle Ages.

lucre of vleymyse, "filthy lucre" (gl "turpe lucrum" in MS El), cf I Tim iii, 8. For the construction (adjectival phrase with of) cf KnT, I, 1912, n.

495 ff. The livel scole was taken by Skeat to be a school of choir-boys. But it is more probable, as Professor Brown has shown, that Chaucer had in mind a regular village school. This may be inferred from the large number of children, from the lack of strict discipline, and from the hint (l 536) that some of the pupils were learning grammar. Moreover, the livel clergeoun was clearly not a choir-boy but a child in his first year of regular schooling. Neither in French nor in English does clergeoun mean primarily a chorister, and the little boy is not represented as singing with those who lerned here antiphoner. Professor Brown shows by contemporary documents that the learning of anthems was part of the regular instruction in mediæval English schools.

It is true that in one group of versions of the legend the victim is a little chorister. But Chaucer's version belongs to another group.

497. an hepe, possibly to be read an (= on) hepe (dat.), "in a crowd." See J Derooquigny, Rev Anglo-Americaine, V, 160 f.

500. to rede, probably with special reference to reading Latin. See Brown, pp 132 ff.

504. That his, whose, see KnT, I, 2710, n.

512. Cf "Sely chyld is sone ylered," Proverbs of Hendyng, st 9, and see Skeat, EE Prov, p 103, no 245, Haeckel, p 49, no 173.

514. It is related of St Nicholas that he sucked only once on Wednesdays and Fridays when an infant at the breast (Breviarium Romanum, Dec 6).

517. The primer was a prayer-book compiled for the use of both young and old, at first in Latin, though English versions came into use in the fourteenth century. See The Prymer or Lay Folks' Prayer Book, ed H Littlehales, cited above. Such compilations were regularly used in schools as late as the time of the Reformation. Very likely the copies prepared for the youngest pupils would have had prefixed an alphabet and such pieces as the Lord's Prayer, the Ave Maria, the Creed, and the Confession See Brown, pp 126 ff

518 The anthem referred to occurs in the Roman Breviary and begins

Alma redemptoris mater, quae pervia caeli Porta manes, et stella maris, succurre cadenti
The text is given in full in one of the versions of the legend See Brown pp 39, 120 ff, also his frontispiece, where the musical notation is reproduced from an early MS

In most versions of the legend the hymn mentioned is the "Gaude Maria" The "Alma Redemptoris" appears only in the small group most closely related to the Prioress's Tale

520 ner and ner, nearer and nearer

523 to seye, to be interpreted (the gerundial infinitive), he did not know what the Latin meant Cf to mene, MkT, VII, 2751

561 honest, honorable

572 wardrobe, here obviously in the sense of "privy" (called "cloaca" or "latrina" in the Latin versions nearest to Chaucer's) For evidence that the same room was often used for a clothes-room and a privy (hence the extension of the term "wardrobe") see J W Draper, ESt, LX, 238 ff

576 The familiar proverb, "Murder will out," occurs also in NPT, VII, 3052, 3057 Cf Haekel, p 42, no 143, and Skeat, EE Prov, pp 103 f, no 246

578 Cf Gen iv, 10

579 ff See Rev xv, 3 4

583 Pathmos, doubtless pronounced Patmos (with th like t, as in "Thomas")

585 fleshly, here an adverb

627 See Matt ii, 18 Mr Joseph Dwight has pointed out to the editor that this passage, along with the psalm Domine, Domine noster, occurs among the portions of Scripture read at Mass on the Feast of the Holy Innocents This might account for their association in Chaucer's mind, though the comparison of the bereaved mother to Rachel would have been natural in itself But it is an interesting general question how far Chaucer's Scriptural quotations were suggested by the services of the Church rather than the consecutive reading of the Bible

632 With the proverbial formula of RoT, I, 4320, and n. Bo, iv, pr 1, 52 ff, Skeat, EE Prov, p 104, no 247, Skeat's note to Piers Plowman C, v, 140, Haekel p 40, no 138

662 In four versions of the legend the miracle is wrought with the aid of a magical object placed in the child's mouth According to one account it was a lily, according to two others, a precious stone which replaced the tongue which the Jews had cut out In Chaucer's version the tongue is not removed, and the gran which was laid upon it has usually been taken to be a vegetable gran or kernel Skeat suggested that the idea might have come from the story of Seth, who places

three kernels or pippins under Adam's tongue at his burial (See Legends of the Holy Rood, ed Morris, EETS, 1871, pp 26, 70, and Cursor Mundi, ed Morris, EETS, 1874-93, 1366 ff) But there is very little similarity between the two stories Probably Chaucer's gran is to be understood after all as a precious stone, a gram of pearl For this meaning of the Middle English word see Wright, Specimens of Lyric Poetry, Percy Soc., 1842, p 38 Other possible interpretations of the gran, suggested by Sister Madeleva (pp 39-40), are a particle of the consecrated Host, or a prayer-bead But in view of the precious stone in other versions of the legend, the explanation "pearl" is probably to be preferred The pearl, moreover, was a recognized symbol of the Virgin

669 Cf John xiv, 18, Heb xii, 5

684 According to the Annals of Waverley, Hugh of Lincoln was murdered by Jews in 1255 For a list of contemporary documents relating to the case see Brown, p 87 The story is preserved in the ballad of Sir Hugh, or The Jew's Daughter, edited, with valuable introduction, by F J Child, English and Scottish Ballads, III, 233 ff Professor Manly (Essays and Studies, XIII, 53) notes that it was also the subject of a miracle play known to have been performed at Lincoln in 1316 He observes that Chaucer, who had various reasons for interest in Lincolnshire may have seen some later representations He reminds us further that Philippa Chaucer, with others, was given in 1386 a letter of fraternity in Lincoln Cathedral, an event which might have drawn Chaucer's attention to the Hugh of Lincoln tradition, or even have given him the first suggestion for his own tale

Prologue to Sir Thopas

This Prologue is noteworthy as conforming in meter to the rime-royal stanza of the preceding tale The regular meter of the head-links, or talks by the way, is the heroic couplet, even when they connect tales in stanzaic form or in prose

691 miracle, probably in the technical sense of "legend," "story of a miracle"

696 There has been much discussion as to the seriousness with which Chaucer's portrait of himself should be taken The hint that his figure was corpulent is confirmed by the Lenox a Scogan, l 31 The aloofness with which he is taxed by the Host seems quite inconsistent with his own account of his conduct in the General Prologue Yet reticence may well have been his social habit, as it was one of his marked literary characteristics It should be remembered, however, that the Host's description applied particularly to his aspect and behavior after listening to the Prioress's moving tale See the comments of Dr Thomas Knott, MP, VIII, 135 ff

703 elmyssh, elf-like, hence, aloof belonging to another world

711 deyntee, excellent, superior, rare The word, which is related in origin to Lat "dignitas," has become less dignified in meaning

Sir Thopas

Sir Thopas was probably intended as a twofold satire, literary and social

It has long been recognized as a burlesque of the metrical romance Richard Hurd (Letters on Chivalry and Romance, ed Moxley, London, 1911, p 147), quoting an unnamed person, declared that Chaucer wrote the poem with the intention of exposing "the leading impertinences of books of chivalry" and commentators have collected many parallels of language or episode No particular romance seems to have been singled out by Chaucer for imitation or attack But the Libeus Desconus presents a rather striking similarity of situation Professor Magoun (PMLA, XLII, 833 ff) has called attention to the "virtual identity of setting, actors, and action in the He d'Or episode" and in Sir Thopas, and concludes that Chaucer had this definitely in mind The Middle English romance of Guy of Warwick is also a good example of the general type, and contains many of the features which Chaucer reproduces Both Libeus and Guy it may be observed, are mentioned in the list of heroes in ll 897 ff A number of similarities between Sir Thopas and Sir Thomas of Ercelesbourne were noted by Sir J A H Murray in his edition of the latter romance (EETS, 1875), and still others, involving plot as well as language, have been pointed out to the editor by Dr J R Caldwell Passages from the three romances mentioned, and from other texts, are cited in the following notes merely to illustrate the satire in Sir Thopas, but with no intention either to establish a source for Chaucer or to give extensive collections of parallels For further discussion of the features satirized, with references to numerous romances, see C J Bennewitz, Chaucer's Sir Thopas (Halle diss, 1879), E Kolbing, EST, XI, 495-511, Miss C Strong, MLN, XXIII, 73 ff, 102 ff, and Miss Hammond, p 288 With special reference to the meter see Miss Strong, and Manly, MP, VIII, 141 ff

Doubts have been expressed from time to time as to the presence or extent of literary satire in the tale, especially on the ground that Chaucer admired the romances and wrote excellent ones himself But this would not have prevented him from recognizing or burlesquing their many absurdities, and it is hard to believe that such was not his intention At the same time two recent studies of Sir Thopas have made it seem very probable that Chaucer had another purpose, perhaps his primary one, namely, to poke fun at the Flemish knighthood This opinion is set forth by Miss L Winstanley in her edition of the Procees's Tale and Sir Thopas, Cambridge, Eng, 1922, and by Professor Manly in Essays and Studies, XIII, pp 52 ff They find plenty of evidence of the contemptuous attitude of the French and English aristocracy toward the Flemish bourgeoisie It is especially apparent in Froissart's account of the treatment of Flemish embassies at court The interpretation proposed by these scholars gives point to many of the jokes about Sir Thopas' equipment and behavior Whether, as Miss Winstanley maintains, Chaucer meant Sir Thopas to represent Philip van Artevelde himself, is more doubtful The parallels she draws between Philip's career and Chaucer's tale are not very convincing, but attention will be called to them below The notes are intended to supply only a very brief explanation of the points of the satire, nearly all of which have been discussed in the books and articles cited above

The tale contains no definite indication of date It is usually held to have been written during the Canterbury period, and even to have been planned for the dramatic situation in which it is so effectively introduced But if, as Professor Manly suggests, it was composed at the time of the Flemish embassy to London in 1383, it would have been just as available for Chaucer's purposes in the Canterbury series

The following are the full titles and editions of the romances cited below, usually by abbreviations

- Amis, Amis and Amloun, ed Kolbing, Heilbronn, 1884
- Bevis, Sir Beves of Hamptoun, ed Kolbing EETS, 1894
- Cleges, Sir Cleges, ed Treichel, EST, XXII (1896), 345 ff
- Degare, Sire Degarre, ed Schleich, Heidelberg, 1929
- Eglam, Sir Eglamour of Artois, Cambridge MS, ed Hallwell Thornton Romances, Camden Soc, 1844
- G G Kn, Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, ed Tolkien and Gordon, Oxford, 1925
- Guy, Sir Guy of Warwick, Auchinleck MS, ed Zupitza, EETS, 1883-91
- Horn Childe, Horn Childe and Maiden Ravnild, ed Hall in King Horn, Oxford, 1901, pp 179 ff
- Ipom, The lyfe of Ipomydon, Harleian MS, in Ipomedon, ed Kolbing, Breslau, 1889, pp 257 ff
- Isumb, Sir Isumbras, ed Schleich, Berlin, 1907
- K Als, King Alsaunder, in Metrical Romances, ed Weber, Edinburgh, 1810, I, 1 ff
- K Horn, King Horn, ed Hall, Oxford 1901
- K Tars, The King of Tars, ed Krause, EST, XI (1887), 1 ff

Lib Des, Libeaus Desconus, ed Káluza, Leipzig, 1890

Oct, Octavian, Southern version, ed Sarrazin, Heilbronn, 1885

Perc, Sir Perceval of Gales, ed Campion and Holthausen, Heidelberg, 1913

Rich L, Richard Cœur-de-Lion, ed Brunner, Vienna, 1913

Sq L Deg, The Squire of Low Degree, ed Mead, Boston, 1904

Sev Sages, The Seven Sages of Rome, ed Campbell, Boston, 1907

T E, Thomas of Erceidoun, ed Murray, EETS, 1875

Tristr, Sir Tristrem, ed Kolbing, Heilbronn, 1882

712 ff A typical beginning Skeat cites Sir Bevs and Sir Degare cf also, for various forms of the opening address to the hearers, Chronicle of England (in Ritson, Metrical Romances, Edinburgh, 1884-85, II, 270), Horn Childe, T E, Clages, Ipom, Amis, and Sev Sages

712 entent, Chaucer's form, where it can be tested, is almost invariably entente, but the rime here calls for entent. In several other instances in Sir Thopas the rimes are irregular or unusual, such as would cast doubt on the authenticity of a poem not frankly written as a burlesque. Cf deer rwer, 736-37 (ryvere, Tr, iv, 413, but ryver, WBT, III, 884), plas solas, 781-82, Thopas gras, 830-31, cote-armour flour, 866-67, chivalry drury, 894-95 (possibly a mere spelling), Gy chivalry, 899-902, well Percivell, 915-16, wilde childe, 803-06 (where the irregularity seems to consist in adding an unhistoric -e to the nom child)

717 Thopas, obviously topaz, the gem, "an excellent name for such a gem of a knight" (Skeat). There may have been the further symbolism of purity, inasmuch as the topaz was worn by young girls as a charm against luxury. See Manly's note, and cf ll 745 ff. For a different explanation, which involves rather too many conjectures, see H Lange, Deutsche Literaturzeitung, XXXVII, 1299 ff, 1669 ff, 1827 ff. Mr Lange holds that Chaucer was playing upon Froissart's "Mélador, ou le chevalier au soleil d'or", that he took Mélador to mean "honey-gold" (as he took Melboeus to mean "mel bibens," VII, 1410), and that he adopted Thopas as an equivalent because in heraldry the topaz corresponds to the blazon "or" and to the planet Sol. It was suitable, Mr Lange adds, for "Rutter Honiggold" to have had a golden shield and saffron hair!

720 At Popering, in the place Miss Winstanley, in support of the theory that Sir Thopas represents Philip van Artevelde, notes that Philip's father, Jacques van Artevelde, "had devoted himself in a quite special way to the interests of Poperinghe." But this would not be an obvious reason for making it the birthplace of Sir Thopas. Professor Manly looks for the explanation in a tradition, which he infers from the contemporary Cronycke van Nederlent that the men of Poperinghe were regarded as stupid. He observes further that the actual lord of Poperinghe, as Chaucer might well have known, was the Abbot of St Bertin — a most improper father for the pattern knight! (See F H d'Hoop, Recueil des Chartes du Prieuré de Saint-Bertin, à Poperinghe, Bruges, 1870, Introd, p xv)

In the place, interpreted by Skeat "in the mansion, manorhouse", but it may be a mere rime-tag, meaning "right there." Other more typical tags are in ll 723, 749, 766, 793, 796, 831, 887, 917

722 Cf Amis, 25, Ipom, 11, Eglam, 934 ff

724-35 The following description, with its ridiculous comparisons, as Professor Manly observes, fits a burgher rather than a knight of aristocratic lineage

725 payndemayn, very fine white bread. The name "panis dominicus" is explained by Chambers, Book of Days, Edinburgh, 1862-64, I, 119, as derived from the figure of the Saviour or the Virgin imprinted on each loaf. But R F Patterson in MLR, VII, 376, compares rather the classical Latin "vinum dominicum" (Petronius, Saturnicon, § 31) used for the superior wine which was served to the master. There is an Old French adj, "demame," "qui appartient au seigneur," perhaps derived from the rare Lat adj, "dominus." "Panis domina" would exactly correspond to payndemayn. See E Blau, Angl Beibl, XXXI, 237

727 scarlet in grayn, i e, cloth dyed with grain, with cochineal. Cf NP Epnl, VII, 3459

731 Cf Lib Des, 139 f. The long beard (compared absurdly to saffron, used in cooking for coloring and flavoring) was an antiquated fashion.

734 Syklatoun, a costly cloth (OF "ciclaton"). On the history of the name see G F Moore, Cyclatoun-Scarlet, Kirtledge Anniversary Papers, Boston, 1913, pp 25 ff

735 jane, see CIT, IV, 999, n

736 ff Cf Guy (Auchinleck MS), 2797 ff, Amis, 136 ff, Perc, 209 ff

737 for rwer, Skeat renders "towards the river" (Fr "en riviere"), but the preposition is strange. In Tr, iv, 413, for ryvere might mean either "for waterfowl" or "for hawking", the former would make better sense here. For the use of the term for "hawking" cf fro ryver, WBT, III, 884, and see NED, s v River 2

738 The goshawk was appropriate to a yeoman rather than a knight

740 Archery belonged to the yeomen, and in Chaucer's time wrestling was also not a knightly accomplishment. Cf Gen ProI, I, 548 (where the ram is mentioned as a prize)

742 ff Cf Guy, 237 ff (thirty maidens in love with the hero). Miss Winstanley, in drawing the parallel with Philip van Artevelde, compares the elf-queen here with the "demonisse" said by Froissart to have accompanied Philip in the field

743 Paramour, passionately See KnT, I, 1155, n

745 For this rhetorical device—the reinforcement of a word by adding the negative of its opposite—see also I 882, below, and of Intro to MancT, IX, 20, Rom, 310, BD, 143 Many examples from Middle English verse are given by Kit-tredge, [Harv] Stud and Notes, I, 62 f

750 With out ride of Gen ProI, I, 45

751 Cf Ipom, 1489 Worth upon, got upon, lit "became upon" (AS "wear?")

752 launcegay, a short lance, originally a Moorish halpik (from Span "azagaya"), not a weapon for severe encounters

754 Cf Oct Imp, 283-84 Prilath, spurs his horse Chaucer rings the changes on the word through the tale

756 The bukke and hare, Mr Manly suggests, are wild beasts such as might be expected in the forests of Flanders

759 Sleat, comparing Amis (ll 979 ff), suggests that the accident which nearly befell him was killing his horse But Professor Manly is probably right in holding that the sory care refers to the events that follow

760 There follow a series of catalogues of birds, trees, food, clothing, etc., such as were endlessly spun out in the later romances Cf particularly, for trees and birds, K Alis, 6790 ff, T E, 29 ff, and the late romance, Sq L Deg, 27 ff, with Mead's note Chaucer's list of herbs and spices is again appropriate to the tradesman His description of the songs of the birds is of course intentionally absurd—including, possibly, the feminine pronoun hir (which appears in good MSS) after thrustelcock

772 ff For the association of longynge with the song of the birds of Guy, 4519 ff, T E, 33 ff, especially the latter Thomas of Erceuldoune, after hearing the birds, "lay in longne" and had a dream or vision of an elf-queen He set out with all his might to meet her at "Eldoune tree" If, as has been suggested, Chaucer had this story in mind, he managed the affair of Sir Thopas rather differently, and with comic effect There is also a similar dream in the Sev Sages, ll 3235 ff But it may be doubted whether Chaucer was parodying any particular piece In general, no episodes were more familiar or delightful in the romances, especially in the Arthurian cycle, than the adventures of knights with ladies of the "other world" But it was usual for the fairy to seek or summon her mortal lover, whereas there is no indication that the elf-queen is in pursuit of Sir Thopas

Part of the humor of the situation, as suggested long ago by Bennewitz, may lie in the fact that Sir Thopas has never seen the object of his passion Love for an unknown person, or one known only by report—love before sight—is common in saga and romance so common, indeed, in Celtic saga that Irish has a technical name for it, "grád ecmase"

783 Professor Manly notes that forage was properly "dry fodder"—another intentional absurdity?

797 A knight would surely have leapt or vaulted, not climbed, into his saddle

807 The giant guardian, commonly a herdsman, was one of the regular figures in the "Other world" See A C L Brown, [Harv] Stud and Notes, VIII, 70 ff Cf further, for giants in romances, K Horn, 801, Lab Des, 1324, Oct, 920, Tristr, 2333, 2712, Guy, 10590 ff (the famous fight with Colbrand) Miss Winstanley makes the bold conjecture that the giant in Sir Thopas, described later as three-headed (l 842) stands for the threefold army of Charles VI, the Count of Flanders, and the Duke of Burgundy, which opposed Philip van Artevelde

808 Sire Olifaunt, Sir Elephant Miss Winstanley, because "Olifaunt" was the name of Roland's horn in the Chanson de Roland, takes the giant to represent the French chivalry opposed to Philip But the name is appropriate enough without any such far-fetched explanation

810 Termagant, supposed by the medieval Christians to be a god or idol of the Saracens The origin of the name (Fr Tervagan(t), Ital "Tervagante" or "Trivigante") is uncertain The oath occurs five times in Guy

815 For the musical instruments of Guy, st 17 (pp 394, 396), Cleges, 99 ff, Oct, 67 ff They also surround the elf-queen in T E, 257 ff

symphonie, used vaguely in Middle English as the name for several kinds of instruments, sometimes pipes and sometimes strings

826 slawe, slain With the form slawe(n), a dialectal variant of slayn, may be compared fawe(n) beside fayn

830-32 Here the satire turns upon a commonplace sentiment of saga and romance, that Heaven helps the brave, "Fortuna fortes adjuvat" Cf LGW, 1773 For the negative statement of the same doctrine, Unhardy is unseely, see RoT, I, 4210, and n Cf also Haeckel, p 5, no 17^b

Child, a term commonly applied to knights and squires Cf Horn child, l 898 below, also Byron's Childe Harold and Browning's Child Roland

833-35 Perhaps an imitation of Bevis, 1-4

836 sydes smale, hardly appropriate to a knight Dr Caldwell suggests that Thopas was deliberately made effeminate, in imitation of the elf-queen in T E The white leere, l 857 (of T E, 68 Camb MS) and the ambling war-horse (dappul gray, l 884 like the palfrey in T E, 41) certainly give a feminine turn to the description. But the parallel passages are not decisive enough to establish imitation.

843 For paramour, for love. The French phrase has here become a noun, as in the modern "paramour," but the sense is abstract, not personal.

845 Do come, cause to come, summon.

846 gestours, tellers of gestes, that is, tales of history or adventure.

847 ff The festivities here have been regarded as altogether out of place mentioned purely for satire. This may be doubted, since feasts and ceremonies were not unusual at the dubbing of a knight or before he set out on some exploit. But the description of Sir Thopas' arming, short as it is, Chaucer contrived to make tedious in effect. It is also pretentious and absurd, with the list of dainties and spices and the tales of popes and cardinals linked up with love-kyunge.

848 rotales, the French pluralization of the adjective is unusual in Chaucer except in his translations. But cf delitables, Franklitt, V, 899.

851 ff The account of the actual arming of Sir Thopas has usually been taken by modern authorities — as, for example, by Fairholt, Costume in England, London, 1885, I 154-55, Cutts, Scenes and Characters of the Middle Ages, 5th ed, London, 1925, pp 350 f, and Mr O Barron in the article on Arms and Armour (English) in the Encyc Brit (11th ed, II, 587) — as a serious document on the practice of the period. Professor Manly (Ess and Stud, XIII, 70) argued that it is full of absurdities which were intended by Chaucer as part of his burlesque. Instead of a linen shirt and breech, he maintained, the knight would put on a padded jerkin, he would not have worn an aketon at all, and it would have been absurd for him to wear a habergeon above an aketon and a hauberk outside of that. But this is by no means all clear. The aketoun doubtless refers to the padded jacket or jerkin worn under the armor. It was usual for a knight to have the threefold protection of an aketon a coat of chain mail, and body plates. The haubergeoun (properly a diminutive of hauberk) refers to the coat of mail. The hauberk (which meant originally a protection for neck and shoulders, and was later applied to a long coat of mail) seems to stand here for the breastplate and backplate (cf l 865), though this use of the word is exceptional. It is also probable that the knight might have worn a breech and shirt of fine cloth next his skin. Mr Barron (p 586) cites the use, at an earlier period, of a "gambeson" of linen, not necessarily quilted. Cf also Schultz, Das Hofische Leben, Leipzig, 1889, II, 33-39, and Fairholt, I, 155 (with an illustration showing a knight in shirt and breech about to put on his armor). Libeus (Lib Des 223, in Cotton MS, ed Ritson, II) puts on a "scherte of selk," and Gawain (G G Kn, 571) wears a "dublet of a dere Tars." Perhaps as Mr Manly suggested there is a joke in the description of the cote-armour as lily-white, when it should have displayed the knight's armorial bearings, though this comparison is also paralleled in Launfal, 742 (Ritson, Met Rom, I, 202). Further improprieties may be recognized in the spear of cypress (l 881) instead of the customary ash, and in the war-horse softly ambling In londe (ll 835 ff). For accounts of the armor of the period see, besides the works of Fairholt and Schultz already cited, J Quicherat, Histoire du Costume en France, Paris, 1877, Viollet-le-Duc, Dictionnaire Raisonné du Mobilier Français, vols 5 and 6, Paris, 1874-75, A. Demmin, Die Kriegswaffen, Leipzig, 1893.

862 For Percyng, for fear of, to prevent, piercing. The preposition "for" frequently has this sense in early English. For other examples see NPT, VII, 3117, Astr, n, 38.

864 Jewes werk. For an interesting collection of evidence that the Jews have been famous as armorers and workers in metal from the beginning of their history see H S Ficke, PQ, VII, 82 ff. They were of course also the principal dealers in armor and weapons in the Middle Ages. It is unlikely that the term Jewes werk is used by Chaucer here in ridicule (as it is interpreted by Kolbing, Est, XI, 510, and Brusendorf, p 483). Cf further Kr S Jensen, National-følelsen, Copenhagen, 1910, p 41 (cited by Brusendorf).

869-70 Cf Lib Des, 1657-58, Degare, 998 ff, Oct, 1033.

872 Sir Thopas swears by homely fare. His oath is doubtless a burlesque of solemn oaths by the peacock, the swan, the heron, etc. Cf the celebrated episode at the court of Edward III related in the poem called The Vows of the Heron (La Curne de Ste Palaye, Mémoires sur l'ancienne chevalerie, Paris, 1826, II). For further references on the custom see Wells, pp 99, 105 f, 242, and Miss Hammond, English Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, Durham, N C, 1927, pp 414-15.

875 qurborilly, leather softened in hot water and afterwards dried (Fr "cur bouilli"). On its use Skeat refers to Cutts, Scenes and Characters, p 344.

878 revel boon, whale ivory (OF "rohal," probably from a Scandinavian word ending in "hval," whale). With the description of saddle and bridle cf T E, 49, 63.

884 Cf T E, 41.

888-90 For the same expression cf Eglam, 344, 634, 905, Sir Degrevant, ed Luck, Vienna, 1917, p 27, T E 307 f. On the history of the term see M Forster in the Berichte der Sachsischen Akad der

Wissenschaften, Leipzig, Phil-Hist Kl LXXI, iv, 85, n

891 ff The minstrels' appeals for silence sometimes approached the bluntness of Chaucer's lines here Cf K Ahs, 29, 39, 2047, Rich L, 4069

897 For references to such stereotyped lists of romances see Miss H E Allen, PMLA, LXXII, 140 Cf also the beginning of Rich L On Horn child there are two Mid Eng romances King Horn, ed Lumley, EETS, 1866, and Hall, Oxford, 1901, and Horn Child and Maiden Rinnild, printed in Ritson's Metrical Romances, Edinburgh, 1884-85, II, 216 ff, and in Hall's King Horn Ypotys is rather a legend than a romance, and was perhaps included in the list for the purpose of burlesque It has been pointed out, however, by Miss Dorothy Everett (RES VI, 446 ff) that the Ypotys is found together with Sir Lybeus in two late MSS, and she suggests that Chaucer may have associated Ypotys with romances simply because he recalled a MS of similar contents It is edited in Horstmann's Altenglische Legenden, Neue Folge, Heilbronn, 1881, pp 341-45, 511-26 Sir Beves of Hampton and sur Guy of Warwick were constantly associated For editions of these and of Libeus Desconus (sur Lybeus) see the introductory note The name Lybeus is from "La Biaux Desconneus," the Fair Unknown Pleyndamour, obviously from "plein d'amour," is unidentified Skeat notes that a Sir Playne de Amours is mentioned in Malory's Morte Darthur, ix, ch 7, also that Spenser's Sir Blandamour (Faerie Queene iv, 1, 32) may be derived from Chaucer's Pleyndamour The name appears to have been in actual use in the fifteenth century It occurs as that of one of the scribes of the Cambridge MS Ff 1 6 "Nomen scriptoris Nicholaus plenus amoris" (perhaps a Latinization of Pleyndamour or Fullalove, though it may be a mere rime-tag) See Athen, 1909, I, 557, and Brusendorff, p 188, n Dr Eccles has called the editor's attention to the occurrence of "Robertus Plenus Amoris" as the name of the scribe of another fifteenth-century MS (Bodleian Summary Catalogue of Western MSS, II, 211), and "Thomas plenus amoris" is given as the name of the writer of a fifteenth-century addition to the Fr romance of Alexandre (Summary Catalogue, II, 381) Professor Magoun, who noted this last occurrence, suggests that Pleyndamour in Sir Thomas is really due to a confused memory of Bevis's amie, "la dame d'amour"

905 A stock comparison See Lib Des, 669, Isumb, 458, K Tars 194

916 See Perc, 5 ff, 2204 ff The first reference, however, is to Percival's father 917 worthy under wede, well-looking in has clothing, a common alliterative expression like 'goodly under gore,' or the AS "heard under helme"

The Prologue to Melbeec

923 drasty, filthy (AS "draestig," which glosses Lat "feculentus") The early editions printed drasty, erroneously

933 The use of geeste is peculiar It regularly means either "exploit" or "narrative of exploits," "tale," "romance," (usually in verse) The sense here may be "tell a real story," as distinguished from mere "rime doggerel" But the term seems rather to designate a form of writing distinct from prose or rime Similarly in the Pars Prol (X, 43) the corresponding verb is used with reference to alliterative verse I kan nat geeste, "rum, ram, ruf," by lettre

943 On Gospel harmonies such as Chaucer might have known, see Margaret Deanesly, The Lollard Bible, Cambridge, 1920, 55, n 1

947 as in here sentence, so far as their meaning is concerned The particle as is not quite pleonastic here, but retains some restrictive force In l 954 it is more nearly superfluous On the construction see Gen Prol, I, 462, n

955 Chaucer's remark about proverbs is odd, as Professor Tatlock has observed for the French version of Melbeec which he followed was considerably more condensed than the Latin original

958 On the order of words see Gen Prol, I, 791, n

The Tale of Melbeec

The Melbeec is a close translation of the French Livre de Melibée et de Dame Prudence, attributed sometimes to Jean de Meun and sometimes to Renaud de Louens, which is in turn a condensed paraphrase of the Liber Consolationis et Consili by Albertanus of Brescia (?1193-?1270) The Latin original, edited by Thor Sundby, was published by the Chaucer Society in 1873 The French version was embodied in the Ménager de Paris, compiled in 1392-94, and is accessible in the edition of that work by J Pichon, 2 v, Paris, 1846 See also E Koepfel, in Herrig's Arch, LXXXVI, 29 ff, G Grober, Grundriss der Rom Philologie, Strassburg, 1888-92, II, 1, 746, 1025 Chaucer's tale was edited separately, with valuable notes, by E Matzner, Altenglische Sprachproben, Berlin, 1867-1900, I, ii, 373 ff The French text printed in the Ménager differs somewhat from Chaucer's version and may not have been his original A few variations are noted by Tatlock, Dev and Chron, p 191 n Cf also Professor A S Cook, Rom Rev, VIII, 219 f, who concluded that Chaucer probably used the Ménager version both of the Melbeec and of the Griselda story With regard to the latter see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Clerk's Tale The Melbeec contains, near the beginning (l 1045), two passages from Albertanus not represented in the Menager Miss G W Landrum (PMLA, XXXIX, 82 f) suggests that Chaucer had both texts before him at the outset and then, finding the French satisfactory, abandoned the Latin. But it is not safe to draw this inference without having more knowledge of the French MSS.

Since the French translation of Albertanus is earlier than the compilation of the Ménager, the date of that work proves nothing with regard to the date of Chaucer's Melibeus, and other precise evidence is lacking. Skeat held the tale to have been written early (1372-77) and afterwards revised, and Dr F J Mather (ed Gen. Prolog., Knt., and NPT, Boston, 1899, xiv f) pronouncing it a "stupid piece," also assigned it to the seventies. But in such a critical judgment large allowance must be made for change of taste, and the Melibeus in its own age seems to have been highly esteemed. Moreover, Chaucer apparently wrote the translation of Innocent's De Contemptu Mundi between 1386 and 1394, and the Parson's Tale, another treatise of distinctly mediæval character, is usually assigned to his later years. In the case of the Melibeus the few clues that have been pointed out are all uncertain or indefinite. They are discussed by Professor Tatlock, Dev and Chron., pp 188 ff. From the absence in the English text (after l 1199) of a passage of the French in condemnation of boy sovereigns Mr Tatlock infers that Chaucer made a deliberate omission to avoid giving offense to Richard II. In that case he must have written after 1376. Then Mr Tatlock tries to determine the date more closely from the literary relations of the Melibeus to Chaucer's other works. He shows that it probably preceded the Man of Law's Prologue and Tale, the Nun's Priest's Tale, the Pardoner's Tale, and the Merchant's Tale, in all of which there is pretty clear evidence of its influence, and on the basis of less conclusive parallels he argues that it followed the Troilus and the Knight's Tale. All the literary associations favor an assignment to the Canterbury period.

Another historical argument, which, if valid, would fix the date about 1386, has been set forth by Professor J L Hotson in an ingenious article (Stud. Phil., XVIII, 429-52), on the Tale of Melibeus and John of Gaunt. Mr Hotson shows the striking parallels between the situation of Melibeus and that of John of Gaunt when he contemplated going to war to enforce his claim to the throne of Castile, and he suggests that Chaucer made the translation to dissuade his patron from that undertaking. The argument would be stronger if the data concerned were not nearly all present in Chaucer's French original.

The passages quoted from various authors have been mostly identified by Sundby and Skeat. They are registered in the following notes for the reader's convenience. But it should be understood that in nearly every case Chaucer was simply following his French original.

967 Melibeus, explained below (l 1410) as meaning a man that drynketh hony ("mel bibens") Prudence, taken by Albertanus from Cassiodorus, Varamur, lib ii, epist 15 "Superavit cuncta infatigabilis et expedita prudentia." Sophie, wisdom (σοφία), not mentioned in either the French or the Latin text.

970 According to l 1421 the three olde foes represent allegorically the world, the flesh, and the devil, known as the three enemies of man. Cf the Middle English Debate of the Body and Soul (Emerson, Mid. Eng. Reader, New York, 1915, pp 56 f), and see P Meyer, Rom., XVI, 2 ff.

976 Ovid, Rem. Am., 127 ff.

984 From Seneca, Epist. 74, § 30. References to the Epistles are to Hense's ed., Leipzig, 1914.

987 See John xi, 35.

989 See Rom. xii, 15.

991 Seneca, Epist. 63, § 1.

993 Cf also Epist. 63, § 11.

995 Not from Jesus son of Sirach, or Ecclesiastus, but from Prov. xvii, 22. This text and the next were quoted in the opposite order by Albertanus, hence Chaucer's confusion.

996 Ecclus. xxx, 22-24.

997 Prov. xxv, 20 (Vulg.) Chaucer added in the shepes flees, perhaps through confusion of the French "l'artuson," moth, with "toison."

998 godes temporels, the French adjectival plural in -(e)s is rare in Chaucer except in his translated works. See the Grammatical Introduction.

1000 Job i, 21.

1003 Cf Mult., I 3530, and n.

1017 by vengeance, omitted by Tyrwhitt, with Lounsbury's approval (Studies, I, 320), is in all the eight published MSS and the French text.

1028 to moeve werre, Fr "de mouvoir guerre."

1030 Skeat notes that the Latin text has here three phrases for Chaucer's proverb. The closest is "Ad paenitentium proparat, cito qui iudicat," from Publilius Syrus, Sententiae (ed Meyer, Leipzig, 1880), no 32. Matzner quotes also from Publilius Syrus (p 59) "Velox consilium sequitur poenitentia." This is quoted later by Albertanus (p 39). Cf l 1135, below, and Haeckel, p 28, no 92.

1031 Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 29, no 93.

1036 Proverbial, cf Tr., n, 1276, Haeckel, pp 24 f, no 80, Skeat, EE Prov., p 71, no 169.

1045 Ecclus. xxii, 6.

1047 Ecclus. xxxii, 6 (Vulg.)

1048 From Publilius Syrus, Sent., 594. See also Haeckel, p 27, no 89.

1053 Piers Alfonse, Petrus Alphonsus (or Alfonsa) a Spanish Jew who was baptized in 1106, author of the Disciplina Clericalis. The reference is to Ex xxiv (ed Hilka and Soderhjelm, Heidelberg, 1911, p 37)

1054 This proverb, which is not given in the French or Latin, corresponds exactly to Tr, I, 956, Tatlock argues that it was taken from that poem Cf also Tr, IV, 1567 f, Haeckel, p 25, no 83, and p 26, no 85, Skeat, EE Prov, pp 64 f, no 155. On wikked hasie cf ParsT, X, 1003, Haeckel, p 26, no 84

1057 Eccles vii, 28

1059 Eccles xxv, 30 (Vulg)

1060 Eccles xxxii, 19-21

1062 From Marcus Annaeus Seneca, Controversiarum, Lib II, 5 (13), 12 Cf WB T, III, 950

1063 From Publilius Syrus, Sent, 324

1067 Cf Seneca, De Beneficis, IV, 38, 1 Turneh has corage, changes his mind

1070 save your grace, Lat "salua reverentia tua" The book, the Latin text gives no further reference

1071 The reference is apparently to the Formula Honestae Vitae of Martinus Dumiensis, cap II (Migne, Pat Lat, LXXII, 26), though the parallel is loose The work is attributed to Seneca by Albertanus

1075 See Mark xvi, 9

1077-79 Cf MerchT, IV, 2277-90

1079 Cf Matt xix 17 Luke xviii, 19

1086 This proverb, which Chaucer here takes from Albertanus, is found again in WB Prol, III, 273 ff It was of common occurrence, and Chaucer may well have known, among other versions, that of Innocent III in the De Contemptu Mundi (Migne, Pat Lat, CCKVII, 710) and that of the Gohardic poem De Conrue non Ducenda (T Wright, Latin Poems Commonly Attributed to Walter Mapes Camden Soc, 1841, p 83) In a shorter form, which mentions only the leaking roof and the chiding wife, it is quoted in the ParsT, X, 631 This corresponds to Prov xxvii, 15 which is doubtless the source of the whole group of sayings Cf also Prov xix, 13 and x, 26 On the many variants and their diffusion in European literature see Archer Taylor, Hessische Blätter für Volkskunde XXIV, 130 ff, Skeat, EE Prov, pp 105 f, no 249, Haeckel, p 46, no 158

1087 See Prov xxi, 9, cf WB Prol, III, 775 ff

1098 ff For these examples cf also MerchT, IV 1362 ff See Gen xxvii, Judith viii et seq, I Sam xxv, Esther viii et seq

1104 "It is not good for a man to be alone" For the idiom of ParsT, X, 456, 469, 666, 849, 935 See Gen ii, 18

1106 Cf NPT, VII, 3164

1107 The verses, as quoted in the Latin text, are

"Quid melius auro? Jaspis Quid jaspide? Sensus

Quid sensu? Muher Quid mulhere? Nichil "

With these Sundby compares the following variant from Ebrardi Bituniensis Graecismus, cum comm Vincentu Metulni, fol C, I verso

"Quid melius auro? Jaspis Quid jaspide? Sensus

Quid sensu? Ratio Quid ratione? Deus "

Skeat adds, from MS Harl, 3362, fol 67, as printed in T Wright's Reliquiae Antiquae, London, 1845, I, 91

"Vento quid levius? Fulgur Quid fulgure? Flamma Flamma quid? Muher Quid mulhere? Nichil "

1113 Prov xvi, 24

1115-18 At this point the Latin text has ten pages (Sundby, pp 20-30) which are omitted in the French and the English

1118 Tobit iv, 19

1119 If any of you This corrects the first pers ("nostrum") of Albertano (p 31), perhaps from recollection of James I, 5

1121 f Cf I 1246 f, below, and see Haeckel, p 27, no 88

1127 Not from Seneca, but from Publilius Syrus, Sent, 281

"Iratu nihil non criminis loquitur loco "

1130 I Tim vi, 10 Cf I 1840, below, Pard Prol, VI, 334, ParsT, X, 739, and see Haeckel, pp 11 f, no 38

1135 From Publilius Syrus, Sent, 32 Cf II 1030, 1054 above

1141 Eccles xix, 8, 9

1144 The book, not definitely quoted in the Latin text Cf Petrus Alphonsus, Disc Cler, Ex II (p 6), Eccles viii, 22

1147 Not from Seneca, but from Martinus Dumiensis, De Moribus (Migne, Pat Lat, LXXII 29)

1153 Apparently cited as proverbial Albertanus (Sundby, p 41) has something similar 1158 Prov xxvii, 9

1159 Eccles vi, 15

1161 Eccles vi, 14

1162 Cf Prov xxii, 17, Tobit iv, 19, Eccles ix, 14

1164 Cf Job xii, 12

1165 De Senectute, vi, 17

1167 Eccles vi, 6

1171 Prov xi, 14

1173 Eccles viii, 20 (Vulg)

1174 From Cicero, Disput Tusc, III, 30, 73

1176 From Cicero, Laelius, xxv, 91

1177 Cf Martinus Dumiensis Formula Honestae Vitae, II "Non acerba, sed blanda, tamen verba" See also Prov xxvii, 23

1178 Prov xxix, 5, perhaps also the basis of I 1179

1180 From De Officiis I, 26, 91

1181 From Dionysius Cato, Disticha, III, 4

1183 From Publilius Syrus, Sent, 91

- 1184 The Latin text quotes from "Yso-pus"
"Ne confidatis secreta nec hinc detegatis, Cum quibus egistis pugnae discrimina tristas"
- 1185 Not from Seneca, but from Publius Syrus, Sent, 389
- 1186 Ecclus xii 10
- 1189 From the Disc Cler, Ex ii (p 6) In the last clause, "Que enim male egeris, nota-bunt, que uero bona fuerint, deuntabunt," there is a reading "deuabunt," which may account for Chaucer's perverten
- 1191 a philosophre, unidentified Latin text reads "ut quidam philosophus dixit, nemo ei satis fidus est, quem metuit"
- 1192 Loosely quoted from the De Officiis, ii, 7, 25
- 1194 Prov xxxi, 4 (Vulg) See also
MLT, II, 771 ff, n
- 1196 The passage in Cassiodorus is Variarum, lib x, epist 18
- 1197 Cf Prov xii, 5 Sundby notes that the quotation in the Latin text closely resembles Publilius Syrus, Sent, 354
- 1198 Ps i, 1
- 1199 After l 1199 there are omitted in the French and English about two pages of Latin original (Sundby, 53-55) After l 1210 another passage is omitted (Sundby, 57-58)
The English version also omits after l 1199, a passage of the French on the lack of wisdom of young princes See the introductory note above
- 1201-10 Based upon the De Officiis, ii, 5, 18
- 1215 Cf Chaucer's Proverbs, and Haeckel, p 12, no 39
- 1216 From Dionysius Cato, Disticha, iii, 14
- 1218 From the Disc Cler, Ex iv (ed cit, p 11)
- 1219 Proverbial, cf PF, 511, Haeckel, pp 15 f, nos 49, 50
- 1221 From the De Officiis, i, 9
- 1225 Apparently a legal aphorism, quoted from no particular source
- 1226 Not identified in Seneca
- 1229 Cf the Digesta of Justinian, xlv, 1, 26 (ed Mommsen, Berlin, 1870, II, 653)
- 1231 Cf Publilius Syrus, Sent, 362
- 1246 Cf ll 1121 ff above
- 1257 there been ye condescended, to that you have yielded
- 1264 For this sentiment, which became proverbial, Sundby compares St Chrysostom, Adhortatio ad Theodorum Lapsum (i, 15, Paris, 1839), Vincent of Beauvais, Spec Hist, xvii c 45 See also Haeckel, p 41, no 140
- 1269 From the Decretals of Gregory IX (Frankfort, 1586), lib i, tit 37, cap 3 (but applied to priests, not physicians)
- 1292 See Rom, xii, 17, quoted in the Latin text Skeat suggests that Chaucer had in mind also I Pet iii, 9 Cf also I Thess v, 15, I Cor iv, 12
- 1304 Ps cxxvii, 1 (cxxvi, 1, Vulg)
- 1306 f From Dionysius Cato, Disticha, iv, 13 Cf Haeckel, p 4, no 14
- 1309 From the Disc Cler, Ex xvii (p 27)
- 1315 lete the lepyng, neglect the protection
- 1316 f Prov xxviii, 14
- 1319 espaille, rather collective, "companies of spies," than abstract, according to Sheat See NED, s v Espial 2
- 1320 Not from Seneca but from Publilius Syrus, the Latin text quotes Sent, 542, 607, 380, 116
- 1324 Again from Publilius Syrus, Sent, 255
- 1325 f From Ovid, Rem Am, 421-22
"Parua necat morsu spatiosum upera taurum,
a cane non magno saepe tenetur aper"
- The reference to the thorn is inserted by Chaucer, and occurs neither in Albertanus nor in the Ménager From the attribution to the book (the Bible?) of the statements about the thorn and the dog, Koepfel argued that Chaucer cannot have been following Albertanus's Latin text (See Herrig's Arch, LXXXVI, 29-30)
- Wesele*, weasel, seems due to a confusion of Fr "vivre" = Lat "upera," with Lat
"uuerra"
- 1328 From Seneca, Epist 3, § 3
- 1330 Albertanus here quoted his own De Arte Loquendi et Tacendi (ed Sundby, in Brunetto Latino's Levnet og Skrifter, Copenhagen, 1869, p cviii)
- 1339 f Not from Cicero, but from Seneca, De Clementia, i, 19, 6
- 1344 From Cicero, De Officiis, i, 21, 73
- 1347 Not identified in Cicero Matzner quotes Publilius Syrus, Sent, 125 "Diu apparandum est bellum, ut vincas celerius"
- 1348 From Cassiodorus, Variarum, lib i, epist 17
- 1355 The reference is to the De Officiis, ii, 5, cf ll 1200 ff above, where the points mentioned by Cicero are enumerated
- 1360 consentyge, consistent with, conducive to, Cicero, "quid consentaneum cuque"
- 1380 Cf Justinian's Code, viii, 4, 1
- 1383 that may, Fr "que non"
- 1392 Fr "de la vengeance se engendrera autre vengeance" (variant reading, not in Ménager text)
- 1395 Orens, which is not mentioned in the Latin text, seems to be used as the equivalent of "longinqua" Dr H O White suggests that Chaucer may have misread the French
"Deux causes ouurières et efficiens"
- 1401 litted nat, delayed not, Lat "nec per eos remansit"
- 1404 From the Decretum Gratiani, Pars ii, causa i, qu i, c 25
- 1406 Perhaps from I Cor iv, 55, and Rom
xi, 33
- 1410 The Latin text interprets Melheus as "mel bibens"
- 1415 From Amores, i, 8, 104 "Impia sub dulci melle venena latent" The application is not there

1416 Prov xxv, 16 See also Skeat, EE Prov, p 106, no 250

1424 On the Seven Deadly Sins see the Parson's Tale Fyne wittes, five senses

1437 Fr "Cellu nüst aux bons, qui espargne les mauvais", from Martinus Dumiensis, De Moribus, v "Bonis nocet qui mahs parit" Chaucer's MS was apparently corrupt

1438 From Cassiodorus, Variarum, lib 1, epist 4

1439 From Publius Syrus, Sent, 528

1440 Rom xiii, 4 Spere is a mistake for sword, Fr "glaiue," Lat "gladium"

1449 From Publius Syrus, Sent, 320

1450 From Publius Syrus, Sent, 189

1455 From Publius Syrus, Sent, 172

1460 Rom xu, 19

1463 From Publius Syrus, Sent, 645

1466 From Publius Syrus, Sent, 487

1473 From Caecilius Balbus, De Nug Phil (ed Woelflin, Basel, 1855), p 33, no xh, 4

1477 putte, suppose, Fr "posons"

1481 From Seneca, De Ira, i, 34, 1

1485 Prov xx, 8

1488 From Publius Syrus, Sent, 483

1489 From Dionysius Cato, Disticha, iv, 39

1496 the poete, Fr "le poete", not mentioned in the Latin text, and unidentified Skeat compares Luke xxiii, 41

1497 Seint Gregorie, Harl MS Seint Paul not mentioned in the Latin text The passage has not been traced

1502 From I Pet ii, 21 ff

1510 Cf II Cor iv, 17

1512 Prov xix, 11 (Vulg)

1513 Prov xiv, 29 (Vulg)

1514 Prov xv, 18

1515 Prov xvi, 32

1517 Cf James i, 4

1528 From Cassiodorus, Variarum, lib 1, epist 30

1531 Not from Seneca, cf Martinus Dumiensis, De Moribus, vi "Nunquam scelus scelere vincendum est"

1539 Prov xix, 19

1541 Cf the Digesta of Justinian, l, 17, 36

1542 Prov xxvi, 17

1550 Eccl x, 19, cf Haecel, p 10, no 35

1553 The Latin text quotes I Tim iv, 4

1554 Skeat notes that on the fly-leaf of a MS is written "Homo sine pecunia est quasi corpus sine anima" The source is unknown

1556 Pamphilles, Pamphilus, hero of a Latin poetic dialogue, Pamphilus de Amore (ed A Baudouin, Paris, 1874) The lines (53-54) referred to are

"Dum modo sit dives cuiusdam nata bubulca, Elget ex mille quem libet [or, volet] illa vrum"

Cf FranklT, V, 1110

1558 Not from Pamphilus Skeat compares Ovid, Tristia, i, 9, 5 f

1559 Proverbial, cf ML Prol, II, 120, n

1561 Also not from Pamphilus Cf Petrus Alphonsus, Disc Cler, Ex iv (p 10) "ut ait verficantor Glorificant [var Clarificant] gaze priuatos nobilitate" The author is unknown

1562 Cf Horace, Epist i, 6, 37, quoted by Albertanus, ed Sundby p 98

1564 See Cassiodorus, Variarum, lib ix, epist 13 The Latin reads "mater criminum," and the French "mere des crimes" Chaucer's text is based on a misreading "runes"

1566 From the Disc Cler, Ex ii (pp 6 f)

1568 See the De Contemptu Mundi, i, 16 The same passage understood ML Prol, II, 99 ff

1571 Ecclus xl, 28 Cf ML Prol, II, 114, and n

1572 Ecclus xxx, 17 Chaucer's version corresponds to the French "meulx vault la mort amere que telle vie"

1575 hou ye shul have you, how you should behave yourself

1578 Prov xxviii, 20

1579 Prov xiii, 11

1583 The quotation is not in the Latin The source is unknown

1585 From Cicero, De Officiis, iii, 5, 21

1589 Ecclus xxxiii, 27 Cf Haecel, p 12, no 40

1590 f Prov xxvii, 19

1593 Cf Prov, xx, 4

1594 From Dionysius Cato, Disticha, i, 2

1595 The reference to St Jerome has not been traced The idea is attributed to him also in the Ayenbite of Inwyt (ed Morris, EETS, 1866, p 206), and in Jehan de Vignay's introduction to his French translation of the Legenda Aurea Chaucer quotes it again, following de Vignay, in SecN Prol, VIII, 6-7

1602 From Dionysius Cato, Disticha, iv, 16

1605 From Dionysius Cato, Disticha, iii, 21

1612 The quotation, which is not in the Latin, is unidentified

1617 Cf Prov xxvii, 20

1621 From De Officiis, ii, 15, 55

1628 Prov xv, 16

1630 Ps xxxvii, 16 Prophete Fr "phi losophe"

1634 II Cor i, 12

1635 Ecclus xii, 24

1638 Prov xxxi, 1

1639 Ecclus xli, 12

1642 From Cassiodorus, Variarum, lib i, epist 4 "Est enim indigni [var digni] animi signum, famae diligere commodum" Albertanus inserts this sentence, as if it were his own, between two other quotations from Cassiodorus (iii, 12, and ix, 22) But for "indigni" (or "digni") he substitutes "in-genus," which explains gentil in the Fr version and in Chaucer's

1643 From St Augustine, Sermo cccv, 1 (Migne, Pat Lat., XXXIX, 1568 f) This is not in Albertanus

1651 The author is unidentified, Latin text "quidam philosophus"

1653 Eccl v, 11 Not in Albertanus

1661 I Macc vi, 18, 19

1664 Eccl ix, 1 (Vulg)

1668 II Sam xi, 25 I Sam and II Sam are called Liber Primus and Liber Secundus Regum in the Vulgate

1671 Not from Solomon, but from Jesus son of Sirach, Ecclus iii, 26, cf Haeckel, p 17, no 55

1676 Senet Jame, an error for Senek. (Fr "Séneque") See Seneca, Epist 94, 46 which quotes Sallust, Jugurtha, 10, 6

1678 For the construction of CIT, IV, 212, n

1680 Matt v 9

1686 Cf "Familiarity breeds contempt", also Skeat, EE Prov, pp 106 f, no 251

1691 From Martinus Dumensis, De Moribus, iii (where, however, it is an injunction) "Dissensio ab alio incipiat, a te autem reconciliatio"

1692 Ps xxxiv, 14

1696 Prov xxviii, 14

1701 The source of the quotation is unknown. Skeat compares the French proverb, "À l'œil malade la lumière nuit"

1704 Prov xxviii, 23

1707 ff Eccl vii, 4-6 (Vulg)

1719 Prov xvi, 7

1735 Ps xx, 4 (Vulg)

1740 Ecclus vi, 5 (Vulg)

1753 ff Ecclus xxxiii, 18 ff

1757 that man sholde nat yeven, the negative is perhaps due to the French construction Cf Bo, iii, pr 10, 15 But for similar constructions in English see Tr, ii, 716, n

1775 f From Martinus Dumensis De Moribus iv "Locum tenet innocentiae proximum confessio Ubi confessio, ibi remissio"

1777 This quotation does not quite correspond to that given by Albertanus "Pecatum extenuat qui celeriter corrigit" (Publius Syrus, Sent, 4, 489)

1783 From the Digesta of Justinian, i, 17, 35

1794 Proverbial, cf LGW Prol F, 452, n

1840 From I Tim vi, 10

1842 From Publius Syrus, Sent, 479

1846 From Publius Syrus, Sent, 293

1850 From the Decretals of Gregory of 1269, p 849, IX, hb 3, tit 31, cap 18

1853 Cf Seneca, De Clementia, i, 24, 1

1859 From Publius Syrus, Sent, 64

1860 De Officiis i, 25, 88

1866 From Publius Syrus, Sent, 366

1869 James ii, 13

1884-88 Not in the Lat or the Fr (See Tatlock, Dev and Chron, p 191, n 2) It is obviously a free translation of I John i, 9

The Monk's Prologue

The opening words of the Host in the Monk's Prologue correspond closely to a single stanza (usually cited as "Verba Hospius") which appears in some MSS at the end of the Clerk's Tale (see IV, 1162 ff, and n) Apparently Chaucer first wrote the speech for the latter position, and then transferred it to the Monk's Prologue when he developed at length the characterization of the Host's wife Professor Tupper (Types, pp 50 f) reminds us that the shrewish hostess has been a conventional type in English literature He compares Mrs Towtowse in Joseph Andrews

The address to the Monk (ll 1932 ff) is similarly repeated, in substance, in the so-called Nun's Priest's Epilogue (VII, 3447-62), which is preserved in only four published MSS and was doubtless meant to be canceled

1891 As I am faithful man, "upon my faith as a Christian"

1892 corpus Madrian, the body of Madrian, a saint who seems to be otherwise unknown,—probably one of the characteristic blunders of the Host The name may be a corruption of St Materne or St Mathurn For the story of the latter, with references to his "precious body," see the Legenda Aurea, tr Caxton, Temple Classics, 1900, IV, 1 ff

1893 barel ale, for the construction of Intro to PrT, VII, 438, and n

1894 Goodelief, printed godelief in previous editions But Miss Rickett has shown that it occurs as a proper name in numerous Kentish records, and it is doubtless to be so taken here It is written as one word in several MSS, and spelled with a capital in two The name of Henry Bailly's wife appears as "Christian" in the Subsidy Roll for Southwark (4 Rich, II), and we can only conjecture whether he is here concealing her real name or referring to a second wife See TLS, 1926, p 935, and MP, XXV, 79 ff Further examples of the name, dating as far back as the 12th century, are given by H G Richardson, TLS, 1927, p 44 Goode laef occurs again in WB Prol, III, 431, where it may conceivably be a man's name (like the German "Gothlieb"), but it seems more likely to be the epithet

1901 Cf Gen Prol, I, 449 ff

1906 By corpus bones, the blundering phrase, characteristic of the speech of the Host, is here attributed to his wife

1917 "She will make me kill some neighbor and then suffer the death penalty" (or perhaps, "go my way in fight"?)

1922 The prefix mys- goes with both dooth and serth Cf Mill Prol, I, 3139

1926 Rochester is thirty miles from London Since Sittingbourne, mentioned in WB Prol, III, 847, is ten miles farther on the road towards Canterbury, the order of tales in the MSS, which puts Fragment III before Fragment VII, is unsatisfactory. See the introduction to the Textual Notes on the CT.

It is uncertain whether Chaucer meant Rochester to be the lodging-place of the pilgrims on their first or their second night.

1933 Cf Jean de Meun, Testament, 1072 (R.R., ed Meon, Paris, 1814 IV, 55), for a reference to the good pastures of the friars.

1936 sexteyn, "sacristan," the officer in charge of the monastic buildings and church vessels and ornaments, celerer, in charge of kitchen and cellar, and of the provision of food and drink.

1940 governour might refer either to a place of authority in an ecclesiastical establishment or to a secular position like that of a governor in a royal palace.

1956 Proverbial, cf LGW, 2395, Haechel, p 33, no 111.

1962 Lusshesburghes, spurious light coins imported into England from Luxemburg during the reign of Edward III.

To take the Host's banter here as serious theological argument would clearly be to "make earnest of game." From one point of view it is simply a variation on the old theme of the Gohardic poets, that "clerus scit diligere urgnem plus milite." Nevertheless it should be observed that sacerdotal celibacy was much discussed in England at the end of the fourteenth century. Wychif's opinion on the subject is a matter of dispute. Though he has some passages, especially in his later writings, in defence of the marriage of the clergy, he appears to have been in general sympathy with the practice, if not the requirement of celibacy. But in the decade or two following his death the Lollards made an open attack on the regulation. The particular argument of the Host, however, seems to have been seldom used. In the century-long controversy about compulsory celibacy the opponents of the law have laid emphasis chiefly on the weakness of human nature and the licentiousness of the clergy when living under unnatural restraint. They have rarely referred to the effect on the population of the withdrawal of the clergy from parenthood. A striking parallel to the Host's remarks is furnished by a passage, also in a humorous vein, in the brilliant Irish satirical poem of Brian Merriman, The Midnight Court (especially ll 805 ff., see the edition of L. C. Stern, CZ, V, 225). On the opinions of Wychif and the Lollards see H. C. Lea, History of Sacerdotal Celibacy, New York, 1907 I, 473 ff. H. B. Workman, John Wychif, Oxford, 1926, II, 45.

1964 Proverbial of CkProl, I, 4355, and n.

1967 Cf I 2158, below, and see Gen Prol I, 307, and n.

1970 St Edward probably Edward the Confessor.

1973 ff A closely similar definition of tragedy is given in a gloss inserted in Bo, II, pr 2 78. In fact the terms "tragedy" and "comedy" in mediæval literature have reference chiefly to writing in epic or narrative form rather than in dramatic. Thus Chaucer calls his Troilus a tragedy (v, 1786), and Dante's great poem which begins in Hell and ends in Heaven, is known as the Divine Comedy. On the history of the terms see Wilhelm Cloetta Komodie und Tragodie im Mittelalter (Vol I of Beitrage zur Litteraturgeschichte des Mittelalters Halle 1890). References will be found there to works in hexameter and the other forms or which Chaucer speaks. Since the Aeneid the Thebard, and the Pharsalia were all reckoned tragedies in this looser sense of the term, Chaucer may have had them particularly in mind. In mediæval works of the sort the elegiac meter was chiefly employed. The De Casibus and De Claris Mulieribus of Boccaccio were in prose.

1984 ff The Monk's excuse for departing from chronological order is usually held to apply to the position of the Modern Instances. But the ancient tragedies themselves, with Caesar before Crassus and Nero before Alexander, are not strictly arranged.

The Monk's Tale

On the date of the Monk's Tale and the probable circumstances of its composition see particularly Tatlock, Dev and Chron, pp 164 ff., and Kittredge, The Date of Chaucer's Troilus, Chau Soc, 1909, pp 41 ff. This tale, like that of the Second Nun has usually been taken to be one of Chaucer's early writings. The Bernabò stanza, which cannot have been written before 1386 (Bernabò died Dec 19, 1385), has been recognized as a later interpolation, and the other so-called Modern Instances — the two Pedros and Ugolino — have been similarly regarded by Sheat and most authorities. Professor Tatlock, who opposes the theory of interpolation and appears to take the whole tale as a product of the Canterbury period, gives no decisive reason in support of the late date. In fact positive evidence is lacking on both sides, but the general character of the tragedies favors an assignment to the beginning of Chaucer's Italian period (about 1374). Professor Kittredge shows that even the accounts of Ugolino and the Pedros may very well have been written at that time. They emphasize the Fortune motif and conform in general to the plan of the series, whereas the Bernabò stanza has every appearance of being an afterthought.

The general plan of the tale is due to Boccaccio's De Casibus Virorum Illustrium (acknowledged in Chaucer's sub-title) and the Roman de la Rose (5839 ff.). From the latter, doubtless, came the fundamental Fortune motif, and perhaps the suggestion of the use of contemporary instances. The single tragedies are also partly derived from the same sources Adam Hercules, and perhaps Nero and Samson showing the influence of the De Casibus, and Croesus and Nero and possibly Samson that of the Roman de la Rose Hercules comes in part from Boethius (iv, m 7), Zenobia from Boccaccio's De Claris Mulieribus, Ugolino from Dante's Inferno, xxxiii, perhaps with collateral use of an Italian chronicle, and Lucifer, Samson, Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Holofernes and Antiochus all from the Old Testament or the Apocrypha. The story of Alexander, which is told in general terms has not been traced to any particular source. That of Caesar, for which Chaucer himself cites the authority of Lucan, Suetonius, and Valerius, is also of uncertain derivation. See the note to l 2671 below. For the accounts of the two Pedros and of Bernabò, Chaucer doubtless drew on his own knowledge and recollections. Or the general conception of Fortune as the ruling motif of the tragedies reference may be made to H R Patch, The Goddess Fortuna, Cambridge, 1927. An extensive list of similar stories and collections, Roman and mediæval, has been drawn up and discussed by R W Babcock, PMLA, XLVI, 205 ff. It exhibits very well the development of the tradition before Chaucer.

The position of the Modern Instances differs in various MSS. In the best group (Ellesmere and most of its nearest relatives) they stand at the end. But in most copies they come between Zenobia and Nero. The following head-link the Nun's Prologue with its reference (l 2732) to the closing line of Croesus, suggests that Chaucer's final purpose was to put the Modern Instances in the middle. There is a natural ending of the whole tale, moreover, in the definition of tragedy with which Croesus closes. But whether the Ellesmere order is simply due to an officious scribe, desirous of mending the chronology, or preserves the form of an early copy of the tale it is perhaps impossible to determine. The Monk's own apology for the chronological confusion unfortunately does not settle the matter, for it might have reference to the ancient instances alone. There is a slight inconsistency, on any assumption, in the final state of the text. If the Croesus stands at the end, as the following head-link appears to require then the tale has so good a formal conclusion that the Knight's interruption seems out of place. The question is still further complicated by the head-link itself, which exists in several MSS. in a short form omitting all reference to the Croesus passage. Here again there is doubt whether the shorter link represents a first version by Chaucer or is simply due to a scribe's omission of twenty lines. To account for all the facts one might imagine some such procedure as the following. Chaucer may have first written the ancient tragedies, ending with Croesus, and then have appended the tragedies of the two Pedros and Ugolino, which were probably written at the same period. Bernabò was doubtless added in 1386, perhaps just when Chaucer was considering the use of the whole series for the Canterbury collection. If the Modern Instances stood at that moment at the end, Chaucer may have observed the unfinished character of the series and therefore have planned the interruption of the Knight (or Host as a few MSS say.) He may first have written the shorter link, without any reference to Croesus, and afterwards expanded it, having decided to restore the original conclusion. If he transferred the Modern Instances to the middle, he may at the same time have inserted the Monk's apology for the order of the tragedies. All this is possible, but it involves a complicated series of assumptions and it is simpler, to say the least, to regard the order with Croesus at the end as the one intended by Chaucer from the outset. Then the shift in the Ellesmere group of MSS can be attributed to a scribe and the Knight's interruption is natural enough if Chaucer forgot for the moment the inconspicuous though formal conclusion of the Croesus, and conceived of the tale simply as an indefinitely extensible series of tragedies. This was certainly his conception of it when he made the Monk say, in his Prologue, that he had a hundred such stories in his cell. For further discussion of the whole question see Miss Hammond, p 258, Bradshaw, cited in Furnivall's Temporary Preface to the Six-Text edn, Ch Soc, 1868, pp 23-24, Tatlock, Dev and Chron, p 171 f, Koch, EST, XLI, 127 ff, and Brusendorff, pp 77 f.

1999 Lucifer, "light-bringer," the name of the morning star. It was applied to Satan as a result of a common interpretation of Is xiv, 12.

2007 The stanza on Adam is probably from the De Casibus, i, 1, De Adam et Eva. The field of Damysene, the field where Damascus afterwards stood. Boccaccio has "Et ex agro qui postea Damascenus ductus in Paradisum deliciarum." Cf also Petrus Comestor, Hist Schol, Genesis, cap xiii "in agro sulciet Damasceno."

2009 Perhaps suggested by the De Contemptu Mundi, ii, 1 "Formatus est homo de spurcissimo spermate." But the idea was familiar.

2015 The account of Samson seems to be mainly derived from Judges xiii-xvi. But the influence of De Casibus i, 17, and RR, 16677-88, should perhaps be recognized.

2018 whil he myghte see, until he became blind.

2035 cornes, crops (Vulg "segetes." "fruges.")

2046 Judicum, for Liber Judicum, the Book of Judges. Cf Metamorphosios, Intro to MLT, II 93, n.

2047 Gazan, apparently due to the accusative "Gazam" in Judges xvi, 1.

2063 The form Dalida for Delila, held by

Fansler (p 31) to be due to RR, occurs as Miss Landrum has noted (PMLA, XXXIX, 89) in the Speculum Historiale, the Cursor Mundi, the Confessio Amantis, and Deguillville's Pèlerinage

2091 The moral, which differs from the usual references to Fortune in the other tragedies, closely resembles the comment in De Casibus and RR, 16541-16700

2095 The chief source of the Hercules is Boethius, iv, m 7 Certain details may be due to Ovid, Met ix, and Heroides, ix and Boccaccio, De Clar Mul, xxii See Shannon, Ch and the Roman Poets, Cambridge, Mass., 1929, pp 312 ff

2098 ff In the references to the labors of Hercules the names of Cerberus and Caous are clear The leoun is the Nemean lion Centauros, the exact form found in Boethius, refers to Pholus and Nessus The dragoun is Ladon Busrus is a distortion of Busrus, whose story is confused with that of Diomedes, king of Thrace The error was perhaps due to Heroides, ix, 67-70 The serpent is the Lernaean hydra Achelous, i e, Achelous Antheus, i e, Antaeus The boor, i e, the Erymanthian boar

2117 bothe the wordes endes, the eastern and western ends of the world The Pillars of Hercules at Gibraltar were familiar to everybody, and there was also a tradition that Hercules set up pillars at the limits of the oriental world The latter are mentioned by Gower in the Conf Am (v 2054 ff), and by Benoit de Ste Maure in the Roman de Troie, (ed Constans SATI, II 805 ff), and accounts of them are given in several versions of the Alexander Legend See particularly Julius Valerius, Res Gestae Alexandri, iii, 49 (ed Kubler, Leipzig, 1888) and the so-called Pseudo-Callisthenes iii, 27, Codex A (ed Muller, in Arrianus Anabasis, etc., Paris 1846, p 139 n) For other references and further discussion of the tradition, which is connected with the ancient story of the pillars of Dionysus, consult G L Kittredge The Pillars of Hercules and Chaucer's Trophee, in Putnam Anniversary Volume, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, 1909, pp 545 ff

The identification of Trophee is uncertain The gloss (in MSS El and Hg) Ille vates Chaldecorum Tropheus "Tropheus, the well-known prophet of the Chaldees," simply explains ignotum per ignotus and the problem is further complicated by a reference in Lydgate's Fall of Princes, I 283-87 (ed Bergen, EETS, 1924) where the name is applied not to a person, but to the source of Chaucer's Troulus

In youthe he [i e, Chaucer] made a trans-lacoun

Off a book which callid is Trophe

In Lumbard tunge, as men may reede and see,

And in our vulgar, long or that he deide,
Gaff it the name off Troulus and Cresseide

For various explanations see Skeat, Oxf

Ch, II, lvi, n, Miss Hammond, p 98, and Engl Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, Durham, N C, 1927, pp 440-41, Kittredge Putnam Vol, pp 557 ff, F Tupper, MLN XXXI, 11 ff, and O F Emerson, ibid, p 142 ff The most likely conjectures are those of Professor Kittredge, that the common noun tropaea "trophea," for the pillars, came somehow to be misunderstood as the name of an author or a book and that of Skeat supported by Professors Tupper and Emerson, that the same word was applied to Guido, because of his epithet "delle Colonne" ("de Columpnis") In favor of this latter identification is urged the fact that Guido's Historia Trojana may have been the source of Chaucer's passage about the pillars of Hercules, and was also one of the principal forerunners, and probably an actual source, of the Troulus But Lydgate, it should be kept in mind, applies the name Trophee to Chaucer's Italian source The Chaldaean prophet remains a puzzle, which Professor Tupper would explain away by dividing the gloss He suggests that two notes, Tropheus on the present passage, and "Ille vates Chaldecorum" on Daniel in l 2154, stood on contiguous inner margins of a MS and were consequently combined It would be a relief to accept this explanation, but certain difficulties stand in the way Glosses were less usual on inner margins of MSS, the chances are against these two having stood side by side and having been combined in reversed order, and Daniel was not a prophet of the Chaldees

2121 thuse clerkes, scholars, authorities (in general) For the use of thuse of Knt, I, 1531 and n Below, in l 2127, comme clerkes seems to refer specifically to Ovid and Boccaccio See Ovid's Met, ix, and Heroides, ix, and Boccaccio's De Casibus, I, 18, and De Clar Mul, xxii

2136 any throwe, for any time

2137 world of prees, world of turmoil, turbulent world For the construction of Knt, I, 1912, and n The grammatical inconsistency, For hym is yleud, may be noted

2139 Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 52

2140 glose, deceive, beguile From the original sense of "gloss," "interpret," the word passes to the idea of an irrelevant or misleading comment, and so to outright deception

2143 The accounts of Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar were paired as a double tragedy and the Fortune moral is introduced at the end of the second They are taken from Dan I-v

2147 See II Kings xxiv, xxv

2148 The vessel the plate, used collectively like Fr "vasselle"

2152 leet do gelde, caused to be castrated The verbs leet and do, commonly used separately in a causative sense, are here combined

The statement itself, which is not in the biblical account, may be due to a confused remembrance of Dan 1, 3

2166 tweye, an error for three, namely, Shadrach, Meshch, and Aednego

2177 a certeyn yeres, a certain number of years, cf Shap^I, VII, 33a, and n

2239 Lordynges, a common term of address with minstrels and poets. It has been taken here to indicate that the line was written with the oral delivery of the Monk definitely in mind, but the assumption is unnecessary

2244-46 See Skeat, EE Prov p 102, no 243, and p 107, no 254, Haeckel, p 6, no 19, for parallels

2247 The account of Zenobia comes from the De Clar Mul, xcviii, with some use, apparently, of the De Casibus, viii, 6

Palmyrene, Palmyra

2252 Boccaccio, on the contrary, says she was of the race of the Ptolemies

2253 fayrnesse beauty in general, seems to be contrasted with shap, beauty of figure

2256 Office of women, a close rendering of De Clar Mul "mulebribus officis"

2271 Odenat e, Odenatus or Odenathus, the ruler of Palmyra

2307 She was acquainted with Egyptian literature and studied Greek under the famous philosopher Longinus

2320 Sapor, Shapur I, king of Persia, 241-272 A D

2325 Petrak. Why Chaucer refers here to Petrarch rather than to Boccaccio is unknown. From the fact that he never names Boccaccio it has even been inferred that he attributed to Petrarch (or to Lollius) all the writings of Boccaccio that he knew. See the remarks on Lollus in the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Troilus

On the spelling Petrak, see CIT, IV, 31, n

2335 Claudius Gothicus, emperor, 268-70 A D. He was preceded by Gallienus (253-68) and followed by Aurelianus (270-75)

2345 In Boccaccio the names are "Heremianus" and "Timolaus." Probably Heremanno should be emended to Heremanno or Hermannno, which would scan better, though the headless line was common enough. Chaucer's forms in -o might be thought to indicate that he had a source or intermediary in Italian. But he changed a number of names in various works to an Italian form. Cf Cambalo, SqT, V, 31, 667, Danao, LGW, 2563, Iulo, HF, 177, Lyno, LGW, 2569, Myda, WBT, III, 951, Sytheo, LGW, 1005, Vulcano, HF, 138, and Pernaso, Parnaso, passum. Some of the instances in LGW have been explained as due to Chaucer's use of an Italian translation of Ovid. See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on LGW

2347 Proverbial, see Skeat, EE Prov, p 103, no 255

2372 vitremyte, usually explained (in accordance with a suggestion of Skeat's) as a coined word, formed on the Latin "vitream mitram," and meaning a glass head-dress. There are a number of phrases in which a head of glass or a cap of glass is a symbol of weakness or discomfiture. Cf Tr, II, 867, v, 469, Debate of Body and Soul (Emerson, Mid Eng Reader, New York, 1915 p 56 l 14), also the following passage quoted by Tatlock (MLN, XXI, 62) from Boccaccio's De Gen Deor, xiv, 18 "Verum si hi umbecilles sunt atque tractabiles sibi caueant memores prouerbu ueteris, quo prohibetur hos certamen lapidum non intrare, quibus sit galea utrea." Düringsfeld, Sprichwörter, Leipzig 1872, I, 311, cites Italian proverbs very similar to Chaucer "Chi ha testa di vetro, non faccia a' sassi," "Chi ha cervellera di vetro, non vada a battaglia di sassi." Skeat's interpretation of vitremyte thus gives a meaning in itself not unsatisfactory. But it is to be observed that there is no such idea in Boccaccio's De Casibus, which Chaucer was probably following. The corresponding sentence there runs "Haec nunc galeata concionari multibus assueta, nunc velata cogitur mulierularum audire fabellas." In view of the antithesis between "galeata" and "velata" Professor T. A. Jenkins has proposed a derivation of vitremyte from Old French "vite" or "vete" (L "vitta") and Old French "mite" (L "mitra"), perhaps by metathesis from "vitemitra" or "mitrevite." He gives evidence that "vitta" and "mitra" were used more or less interchangeably in the sense of "veil" or "band," and suggests that Zenobia's vitremyte was a hood with two horns (like a mitre), to which a veil was attached. If the word was actually employed for such a head-dress, some instance of its use may be expected to be found. For Professor Jenkins's argument see his article in Mélanges de Linguistique et de Littérature offerts à M. Alfred Jeanroy, Paris, 1923, pp 140 ff

2374 The distaf, Skeat notes, is mentioned in the De Casibus

2375 ff. For the brief account of the two Pedros and of Bernabò no written sources need be assumed

Pedro, King of Castile and Leon, 1350-69, was killed by his brother, Don Enrique, March 23 1369. The field of snow, etc. refers to the arms of Bertrand du Guesclin, who lured Pedro to Enrique's tent. The wikked nest has been identified as Oliver Mauny (OF "mau n"), who helped Enrique when the struggle first went against him. He was not, the Monk continues, like Charlemagne's Oliver, the friend of Roland, but was a kind of Genilon-Oliver, a traitor like Genilon.

Chaucer had various reasons for interest in Pedro of Spain. The Black Prince fought with him against Enrique in 1367. Then John of Gaunt married Constance, Pedro's daughter, in 1371, and assumed in her right the title of King of Castile and Leon. And for about two years after Constance came to England Chaucer's wife, Philippa, appears to have been attached to her household Professor Brusendorff (p 489) pointed out a ballade on Bertrand du Guesclin, attributed to Deschamps and written after Bertrand's death in 1380, which refers to the coat of arms in language closely similar to Chaucer's It begins "Lescu dargent a une eagle de sable A deux testes et un roge baton Portoit le preuz le vaillant conestable Le bon Bertran de Clesquon ot surnon" If it were certain, as Brusendorff held, that Chaucer imitated the ballade, the Pedro stanzas (and with them probably the Modern Instances as a whole) would have to be dated after 1380

2391 King Peter of Cyprus, otherwise known as Pierre de Lusignan, was assassinated in 1369 On his conquest of Alexandria and some of his other campaigns see the note on Chaucer's Knight in the Explanatory Notes on the Gen Prolog Like Peter of Spain he was well known to the English court, having been entertained by Edward III in 1363 and having numbered many Englishmen among his followers His reputation for chivalry, as Chaucer says, was of the highest but his murder can hardly be ascribed to jealousy of his fame It was due rather to resentment at his personal misconduct and his oppressive rule See N Jorga, Philippe de Mezeres, Paris 1896, pp 385-91

2399 Bernabò Visconti fell from power on May 6, 1385, when he was treacherously arrested by Gian Galeazzo On Dec 19 of the same year he died suddenly in prison, and the current opinion attributed his death to poison Chaucer very likely wrote this stanza as soon as the news reached England, and the uncertainty of the last line is paralleled curiously by a marginal entry in Malverne's continuation of Higden's Chronicle (Rolls Ser., IX, 78, n) "Quo in tempore dominus Barnabos moriebatur in carcere, qua morte an gladio aut fame seu veneno ignoratur" For an account of the occurrence, with references to the authorities, see Kittredge, The Date of Chaucer's Troilus, pp 46-50 Professor Kittredge even conjectures that the news may have been brought to England by a particular member of Sir John Hawkwood's company, who came from Lombardy, according to Malverne, early in January 1386

Barnabò, like the two Peters, was a character of special interest to Chaucer and the English court His niece, Violanta, married Lionel Duke of Clarence, Bernabò had offered one daughter, Katerina, to Richard II, and had married another, Donnina to Sir John Hawkwood, and Chaucer himself had been on an embassy to Milan in 1378

2407 ff Chaucer's account of Ugolino comes from Dante's Inferno, xxxii, but differs in some details from its source In

Dante there is no explicit statement about the fals suggesthoun of Ruggieri, and the number of the children is four Possibly Chaucer's variations in these points are to be explained by his use of some Italian chronicle See N & Q, Ser., 8, XI, 205 f 369 f Chaucer omits all reference to Ugolino's dream On the other hand he expands the narrative in places, adding, for example, ll 2433-38 The references to Fortune, which bring the story into accord with the general scheme of the Monk's Tale, are likewise his own

2463 It is questionable whether Chaucer actually used Suetonius for the Nero See Fansler, pp 24 ff All the incidents, except perhaps those mentioned in the second stanza, would be accounted for by RR, 6185 ff, 6414 ff, and Boethius, u, m 6, u m 4 The reference to Suetonius itself may have been taken from RR, 6458 For the second stanza Dr Fansler (p 26 n 7) doubtfully suggests the use of Eutropius's Breviarium, vii, 9 (14 in modern editions)

2467 south is supplied by the editors for north, the reading of the MSS, since that quarter is represented by septentrion The blunder seems more likely to be a scribe's than Chaucer's

2477 Cf Dante, Inf., v, 56 "Che libito fe' licito in sua legge"

2479 ff Closely similar to Boethius, u, m 6

2495 a masster, i.e., Seneca

2552 For the story of Holofernes see the Book of Judith 2560 For lesynge, for fear of losing

2575 ff On Antiochus see II Mac-cabees ix

2631 ff The story of Alexander was the more commune in the Middle Ages because he was the hero of a favorite cycle of romances In the House of Fame (ll 914 f) Chaucer shows acquaintance with the legendary material But in the Monk's tragedy he follows rather historical tradition, as represented, for example, by Quintus Curtius (see his Historiarum Alexandri Magni, ed Hedrick, Leipzig, 1908) Chaucer's knowledge may have come from the popular Alexandres of Gautier de Chatillon Cf also Vincent of Beauvais, Spec Hist. iv, 63 ff The tragedy is so brief and general as not to be easily assigned to a particular source For an excellent account of the Alexander cycle as a whole, with full bibliography, see F P Maugon, Jr, The Gestes of King Alexander of Macedon, Harvard Univ Press, 1929

2644 There is a brief reference to his luxuria in the Spec Hist. iv, 31

2653 write, pret subjunctive

2655 See I Macc 1, 7

2660 This account of Alexander's death, given as an alternative tradition by Diodorus Siculus, xvii, 118, and adopted by Quintus Curtius, is usually followed by medieval writers See, for example, Vincent, Spec Hist (ed Douai, 1624), iv 64-65

2661 I.e., Fortune hath turned thy high throw (at dice) into the lowest throw For the figure of Gower Mirour de l'Homme, 23399 22102-03

Another instance of the poetical use of Alexander as a victim of Fortune occurs in Boccaccio's Amorosa Visione, XXXV

2671 For an argument that Chaucer's Caesar is really based upon Lucan, Suetonius and Valerius as suggested in ll 2719-20 see E F Shannon, Chau and Rom Poets, pp 335 ff Professor Lowes has called the editor's attention to the fact that certain features of the tragedy — the triumph, the epithet laureat, the account of Pompey's death — are closely paralleled in the French Hystore de Julius Cesar of Jehan de Tuum (ed Settegast, Halle, 1881) President MacCracken, in his edition of Lydgate's Serpent of Division (London 1911), pp 42 f, suggests that Chaucer followed Vincent of Beauvais, Spec Hist vi, 35-42 Boccaccio's account, De Casibus, vi, 9, Chaucer appears not to have used

2673 For the use of he cf KnT, I, 1333

2680 For the statement that Pompey was Caesar's father-in-law of Higden's Polychronicon, where the same error occurs twice (Rolls Series IV, 188, 192) The ultimate source of this mistake is perhaps the statement in Suetonius, ch xxvii, that Caesar proposed for the hand of Pompey's daughter He was refused, but this fact is not added by Suetonius See MacCracken, p 43

2697 Brutus Cassius, an error in which Lydgate followed Chaucer at least four times (Falls of Frances, vi, 2877 ff., Serpent of Division, Coronation Address to Henry VI, Minor Poems, Percy Soc, 1840, p 125) It occurs also in the Anglo-Saxon translation of Boethius, ch xix (where the original, Bk u, m 7, really refers to the elder Brutus, who drove out the kings) Still an earlier example of the error, in an anonymous commentary on Virgil written not later than the ninth century (preserved in MS 358, École de Méd de Montpellier), was pointed out by H T Silverstein, MLN, XLVII, 148 ff The misunderstanding was perhaps due originally to the omission of et between Brutus and Cassius in some Latin epitome — in a phrase, for example, like "dolo Bruti et Cassi" in Vincent of Beauvais, Spec Hist, vi, 42 Cf MacCracken's ed of The Serpent of Division, pp 39 ff., Miss Hammond, Engl Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, p 450

2721 word and ende, a modification of the older formula, ord and ende, beginning and end, cf Tr, u, 1495 v, 1669

2727 The tragedy of Croesus seems to be based upon the longer account in RR, 6489 ff In l 2728 Chaucer drew upon Boethius, u, pr 2

2751 to meene, to be interpreted Cf PrT, VII, 523

2761 With the definition here of ll 1973 ff and 1991 ff above, also Boethius, u, pr 2, just after the passage about Croesus

The Nun's Priest's Prologue

The Nun's Priest's Prologue is preserved in several MSS in a shorter form which omits, among other passages, the Host's reference to the tragedy of Croesus (ll 2782-87) In two copies, moreover, the interruption in l 2767 is ascribed to the Host instead of the Knight These variants suggest that Chaucer wrote the Nun's Priest's Prologue and Tale for another position and that later, upon transferring them to the end of Fragment VII, he introduced the Croesus passage, and also removed what would have been a monotonous repetition of the Host's interruption of Chaucer just before the Melibee See Miss Hammond, pp 241 ff., also the Textual Notes on the NP Prolog

2779 "By St Paul's bell" (in London)

2782 Cf MkT, VII, 2766, 1993, 2762

2800 Cf Ecclus xxxii, 6 (Vulg) "Ubi auditus non est, non effundas sermonem", also Mel, VII, 1047

2810 svr John, a common nickname for a priest, but apparently the Nun's Priest's actual name See l 2820 The familiarity of the Host's address is shown in the use of the second person singular

2816 Yis, the emphatic form of assent The modern "yes" is equivalent rather to Chaucer's ye

The Nun's Priest's Tale

It is probable that the Nun's Priest's Tale was composed with the narrator in mind Certainly the homiletic material and method are highly appropriate to the teller Whether, as has been suggested, Chaucer intended the story from the outset for the place it occupies after the Monk's Tale, is more doubtful It supplies an effective contrast to the Monk's "tragedies," which it has been thought to burlesque (See S B Hemingway, MLN, XXXI, 479 ff) Yet the examples of Croesus and Nero (ll 3138, 3370) are introduced without any such backward references as would have been natural if Chaucer had meant his readers to recall the Monk's accounts of them On the whole it seems clear that the Nun's Priest's Tale was composed when the scheme of the Canterbury pilgrimage was well under way The maturity of the workmanship favors this supposition But beyond these considerations, and the reference in l 3394 to the Peasants' Revolt of 1381, there is no positive evidence as to its date

The tale would have to be assigned to Chaucer's very last years if an allegorical interpretation, recently proposed by Professor J L Hotson (PMLA, XXXIX, 762 ff) could be established as true According to Mr Hotson's theory, daun Russell is represented as a col-fox, instead of the usual red fox of the Renard cycle, because he stands for Nicholas Colfax, a follower of Mowbray, who was associated with him in the murder of Gloucester at Calais in September, 1397. But the fox's colors (ll 2902 ff) correspond to those of Mowbray's truncheon as Earl Marshal. Hence he represents Mowbray himself as well as Colfax, and the quarrel with the cock stands for the duel of Mowbray and Bolingbroke. Chaunticleer's colors correspond to Henry's arms. The fox is ruined by talking, as Mowbray was ruined by his slander of the King. Mowbray's duel with Bolingbroke took place on September 16, 1398, and Mr Hotson would date Chaucer's tale shortly after the exile of the principals, on Oct 3. The allegory as appears even from this bare summary, is not altogether consistent. Mr Hotson complicates it still further by making the fox, already a composite of Colfax and Mowbray, represent also, through his name daun Russell (l 3334), Sir John Russell, a minion of Richard II. Some of the parallels — for example, that between the cock's colors and Henry's arms — do not seem very significant. The whole interpretation is extremely conjectural. Yet it deserves to be recorded, along with the same scholar's theory about the Melibeus and Professor Tupper's explanation of the Aneida among the ingenious attempts to find political or social allegory in Chaucer's poems. Obviously it cannot be used with any confidence to establish a date for the Nun's Priest's Tale. On the other hand there is no difficulty in assuming that the tale, standing as it does at the end of a fragment, was added by Chaucer at a late stage of the composition of the Canterbury series.

The source of the story of the Cock and the Fox was held by Tyrwhitt to be the fable of Marie de France, Dou Coc et dou Werpil (see Ch Soc Orig and Anal, p 116, Die Fabeln der Marie de France, ed K Warnke Halle, 1898, pp 198 ff, Eng tr, Oxf Chau, III, 432 f). Later investigators have compared it rather with the Roman de Renart, and Miss K O Petersen, by a careful analysis of many forms of the tale showed that Chaucer's version belongs rather with the epic than with the fable and corresponds pretty closely to the original of Goethe's Reinecke Fuchs. Specifically she concludes that it goes back to a lost source which combines features from the Roman and from the Reinhart Fuchs of Heinrich Ghchezare (12th century). See her study On the Sources of the Nonne Prestes Tale, Radcliffe College Monographs, no 10, Boston, 1898. Later investigators, while accepting her general conclusion as to the epic connections of the story, have expressed varying opinions about its exact relation to the Roman. See especially L Foulet, Rom, XXVIII, 296 ff, I C Lecompte, MP, XIV, 737 ff and K Sisam, in his separate edition of the tale, Oxford, 1927, pp xxiii ff. All these scholars reject Miss Petersen's hypothetical version. The first two would account for Chaucer's variations as due to invention or independent combination of sources. Professor Sisam holds that the tale is in the direct line of descent from the Roman but was separated from that source by an uncertain number of intermediate versions, probably some of them oral. That the epic form of the story is ultimately derived from the fable is maintained by E P Dargan, MP, IV, 38 ff.

Only a small part of Chaucer's tale is taken up with the central episode. The narrative is expanded with anecdotes and moral applications suitable to the Priest and is enriched by literary allusions. The homiletic material is discussed by Miss Petersen and fully illustrated by citations from sermon books of the period. She concludes that Chaucer made particular use of the commentary of Robert Holkot (d 1349), Super Libros Sapientiae. See the note to l 2984 below. On the sermon books in general, which hold an important place in mediæval fiction, see, besides Miss Petersen's interesting discussion, H B Workman, John Wyclif, Oxford, 1926, II, 213 ff.

The following notes are indebted to the excellent introduction and commentary in Professor Sisam's separate edition.

2821 stape in age advanced (lit "stepped") in years. Cf MerchT, IV, 1514, and the Elizabethan "stept in years." For a similar expression of "ferre ronne in age," Lydgate's letter to Gloucester, l 46 (Minor Poems, Percy Soc, 1840, p 51).

2829 "She found herself," provided for herself.

2832 The "hall" and the "bower" were old Anglo-Saxon terms for the main banquet hall and the inner apartments, respectively, of a great house. On their survival in mediæval England, particularly in relation to the royal court ("aula" and "camera") see Liebermann, Herrg's Arch, CXLIII, 248. There is humorous exaggeration in their application by Chaucer to the humble cottage of the widow, who would doubtless have had only one room, or a single room with a loft above.

2842 whyt ne reed cf PardT, VI, 562 ff, Tr, III, 1384.

2844 Either "with which she found no fault" or "of which she had plenty." Probably the former, cf lakken, "blame," Tr, I, 139.

2849 hight, 3sg pt or pp. For the omission of the subject relative see Gen Prol, I, 529 n.

2850 ff Chaunticleer's colors, as noted above, have been taken to represent the arms of Bolingbroke. But the significance of the comparison is made doubtful by the similar description of a cock in the song (perhaps, to be sure, of later date) printed in CHEL, II, 391.

2851 orgon, apparently felt as a plural, like Lat organa, of the plural verb gon

2856 equinoctial, the equinoctial circle, a great circle of the heavens in the plane of the earth's equator According to the old astronomy it made a complete daily revolution, so that fifteen degrees would pass, or "ascend," every hour For the belief that the cock crew exactly on the hour of Gawain and the Green Knight, l 2008, and Hinckley, p 128

2875 loken in every lith, locked in every limb

2879 Cf the stanza printed by Skeat, Athen 1896, II, 566 (from Trin Coll Camb MS R 3 19), and Hinckley p 130

My lefe ys faren in lond, Allas! why ys she so?

And I am so sore bound
I may nat com her to

She hath my hert in hold

Where euer she ryde or go,

With trew loue a thousand-fold

2881 For mediæval references to this belief or tradition see E du Meril Poesies Inédites du Moyen Age, Paris, 1854, pp 5, 7, etc

2896 recche craght, interpret favorably, bring to good issue

2908 herteless, lacking in courage

2914 ff The qualities mentioned were those regularly demanded of lovers in the works on Courtly Love See W G Dodd, Courtly Love in Chaucer and Gower, Harv Stud in Eng, I, 1913 pp 246 f Avantours, men who boast of the favors they receive, were held in especial contempt Cf Tr, iii, 288 ff, and see W A Neilson, The Origins and Sources of the Court of Love, [Harv] Stud and Notes, VI, 169

2922 ff Chaucer's writings give abundant evidence of his interest in dreams Several pieces — BD, HF, PF, LGW Prol — purport to be the records of dreams, and though this might be a mere case of conformity to literary fashion, the poems themselves show more than a passing consideration of the dream experience Then in at least three passages of some length — HF, 1-65, Tr, v, 358 ff, and the present debate of Chauntecler and Pertelote — the mediæval theories on the subject are explicitly discussed Macrobius's Commentary on the Somnium Scipionis has been long recognized as the source of much of Chaucer's information on the matter He expressly refers to Macrobius several times and professes to have been reading the Dream of Scipio when he fell asleep and had the vision which he records in PF, and commentators have regarded the discussion in HF, 1-65, as a recapitulation of Macrobius's chapter But in that passage and elsewhere Chaucer has many observations not derived from Macrobius Some may be traced with probability to the Roman de la Rose (see particularly ll 1-20) And beyond that it is probable that Chaucer knew the medical treatises on the subject, or at least drew on the general information and opinion current in his age A convenient description of this body of doctrine will be found in W C Curry's Chaucer and the Mediæval Sciences, pp 195 ff

Pertelote, like Pandarus in Tr, v, 358 ff, goes pretty far in her skeptical denial of the significance of dreams But she was quite in accord with current learned opinion in so far as she denied any prophetic import in the so-called "somnium naturale," which originates with the bodily complexions and humors Cf Curry p 220 ff, citing Galen, Avicenna, Albohazen Haly, Arnoldus de Villa Nova, and others See specifically Avicenna, lib iii, fen 1, tract 4, cap 18, lib, i, fen 2, doc 3, cap 7

2924 fume, vapor rising from the stomach Cf the explanation of drunkenness in PardT, VI, 567

2925 ff On the humors see the notes to Gen Prol, I, 333, 420 For the doctrine that they affect the colors of objects of Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, i, 3, 3

2926 to-night, this night just past, a common meaning in older English, cf RvT, I, 4253, PardT, VI, 673 Chaucer also uses the phrase for the present night (now passing), Tr, iii, 669, v, 1169, and for the night following the present day, FrT, III, 1636, MerchT, IV, 2253, ShapT, VII, 278, LGW, 1710

2940 Catoun, Dionysius Cato See MillT, I, 3227, n The reference here is to his Disticha, i, 31

2941 Ne do no fors, "attach no importance," of Fr "fare fors" Cato says, "Somnia ne cures"

2942 ff Pertelote's prescriptions, like her diagnosis, are in complete accord with the authorities They agree that digestives, medicines for absorbing or dissipating melancholy and choler, should be administered before purgatives, and the remedies named by Pertelote all have a recognized place in the materia medica Curry (p 225) cites especially the accounts of them by Dioscorides (Deyscorides, Gen Prol, I, 432) For the digestives he refers particularly to Richard Saunders, The Astrological Judgment and Practise of Physic, London, 1677, remarking that of course nothing will be found there about digestives Of worms But, as Professor Lowes has pointed out to the editor, Dioscorides has a chapter on the use of earthworms (Περὶ τῶν τῆς γῆς ἐντέρων) in the treatment of certain fever and other diseases (ii, 72, in Sprengel's ed, Leipzig, 1829-30, ii, 67, in Willmann's ed, Berlin, 1907-14)

2959 The Fevere terciane, which recurred every third (i.e., alternate) day, was attributed by the medical authorities to the predominance of red and black bile either pure or mixed with other humors See the passages cited by Curry, pp 226 ff He suggests that Chauntecler was in danger of a particularly severe type of malady, known as "causon" or "febris ardens"

2966 mary, pleasant, referring to the garden rather than to the nauseous herbe yre (coronopus) Liddell interprets "in our garden where the marrow is"

2967 The conversational effect of the meter is surely intentional, and it is not necessary to regularize the line by omitting hem or up

2984 Oon of the gretteste auctour, see ClT, IV, 212, n. The term here used might have been applied to either Cicero or Valerius Maximus, both of whom have the stories (Cicero, De Divinatione, 1, 27, Valerius, 1, 7) Miss Petersen, p. 109 f., argues that the latter is meant, but that Chaucer got the stories second-hand from Holkot, where they are quoted from Valerius. In MLN, XLVII, 150, Miss S. Sakamishi notes that Giraldus Cambrensis, in his Expugnatio Hibernica, cites the anecdotes from Valerius and has them in the order given by Chaucer (Opera, V, 294 ff., Rolls Ser., 1867)

3050 Auctor is written in the margin of MS E1. On its meaning see MLT, II, 358, n

3052, 3057 Cf PrT, VII, 576, and n

3065 This statement does not apply strictly to Cicero or Valerius Maximus or Holkot. Professor Manly remarks that Chauntecleer is perhaps "deceiving Pertelote by a pretense of scrupulous accuracy." In l. 3164 he is certainly not above taking advantage of her ignorance of Latin!

3092 owles are commonly regarded as birds of ill omen. The apes, it has been suggested, are mentioned simply for the sake of the rhyme

3110 On the death of Kenulphus (Cenwulf), King of Mercia, in 821, his son Kenelm (Cenhelm), a child of seven, became heir to the crown. He was put under the tutelage of his aunt, Quenedreda (Cwenthryth), who procured his murder. Shortly before his death the child dreamed that he climbed to the top of a noble tree, whereupon one of his best friends cut it down and he flew to heaven in the form of a little bird. See Alban Butler, Lives of the Saints, Dublin, 1833, Dec 13. Caxton's Golden Legend, ed. Ellis (Temple Classics), IV, 60 ff.

3117 For trausoun, for fear of, to prevent, treason. Cf l. 862 above, and n.

3123 The Somnum Scipionis of Cicero, originally a chapter of the De Republica, Bk vi, was edited with an elaborate commentary by Macrobius about 400 A. D., and the work in this form was well known in the Middle Ages. See also PF, 31, and n.

3128 Dan vii, 1 ff.

3130-35 Gen xxxvii, xl, xli

3138 On the dream of Croesus cf MkT, VII, 2740 ff.

3141 On Andromache's dream, for which there appears to be no ancient "authority," see Dares Phrygius, De Excidio Trojae Historica, ch. xxiv, Roman de Troie, 15263 ff., Guido, Hist. Trojana, sig. 14^r (Strassburg, 1489)

3160 Cf Mars 61 (almost identical)

3163 "As surely as gospel truth" ("In principio" being the first words of the gospel of St. John), or "as surely as in the beginning" (when woman first tempted man). The first explanation is probably right. See Gen. Prolog., 1, 254, n.

3164 "Woman is man's rum", a common sentiment in mediæval literature, for which no single source need be cited. A number of variations on the theme will be found in Vincent of Beauvais's Spec. Hist., x. 71. Cf MLN, XXXV, 479 ff., Skeat, EE Prov., p. 108, no. 256.

3187 According to a common opinion the creation took place at the time of the vernal equinox. See Bede, De Temporibus Ratione, c. 66.

3190 The date intended is apparently May 3. March was complete and there had passed, besides March, thirty days of April and two of May. According to the calculations of Brae (Astrolabe, London, 1870, pp. 99 ff.) and Skeat (n. to l. 4045) the sun would have passed 21° of Taurus on May 3 and its altitude at 9 o'clock would be 41° or a fraction more.

Chauntecleer's catastrophe falls on the same date as the fight of Palamon and Arctus and an experience of Pandarus. See the notes to KnT, I, 1462, and Tr., u, 55.

3205 Cf MLT, II, 421 ff., and n.

3208 The name "Petrus Comestor" is written here in the margin of MSS E1 and Hg, but the reference to him, if one is intended, has not been traced.

3212 Lancelot de Lake, the knight of Arthur's court. Mr. Hinckley (p. 141) cites the reputation of Walter Map the supposed author of the original Lancelot, for untruthfulness.

3217 heigh ymaginacioun, i. e., by divine foreknowledge. Cf worthy forwytynng, l. 3243.

3222 undren, perhaps nine o'clock, though the term was applied to different hours. See Glossary.

3224 gladly, usually habitually. For this extension of meaning cf SqT, V, 376, ParsT, X, 587, LGW, 770, and perhaps SqT, V, 224, BD, 1010, 1012, also Gr. gladiu meaning both "to love" and "to be accused."

3227 Scarriot, Judas Iscariot. Genylon, the traitor in the Chanson de Roland. Cf MkT, VII, 2389.

3228 Synoun, the deviser of the Trojan horse. See the Aeneid, II, 259.

3241 The problems of foreordination and freedom, of divine grace and human merit, were much discussed in Chaucer's age. St. Augustine was the great representative of orthodox doctrine on the subject in the early church. Boethius treats it in his De Consolatione Philosophiae, bk. iv, pr. 6, and bk. v. The passage illustrates the distinction, mentioned just below, between "simple necessity" and "conditional necessity." Thomas

Bradwardyne, lecturer at Oxford in the reign of Edward III and archbishop of Canterbury at his death in 1349, was author of a treatise De Causa Dei, which was an important contribution to the controversy, on the Augustinian side. For a long discussion of the subject by Chaucer see Tr, iv, 953-1078. The distinction between contingency and necessity was also several times treated by Wyclif. See his Logic, ii, 194, Misc Phil, i, 71, De Dom Div, 166 ff.

3256 colde, baneful fatal. The line is proverbial. Cf Mel VII, 1096, also "Cold red is quene red," Proverbs of Alfred, l 336 (ed Skeat, Oxford 1907, p 32), and Skeat, EE Prov, pp 108 f, no 257. The Icelandic form, "Kold eru opt kvenna-rath," comes even closer to Chaucer's line.

3260 Cf RR, 15195 ff.

3271 Physiologus, the Latin bestiary, entitled Physiologus de Natura XII Animalium, and attributed to Theobaldus. This contains a passage De Srenis. For the text and translation see A W Rendell, Physiologus, London, 1928.

3280 According to the old philosophy every object or creature had its contrary toward which it felt a natural antipathy. As late as the 17th century the term was used with reference to magnetism. Cf Bacon, Introduction to the History of the Sympathy and Antipathy of Things.

3281 On the use of erst, where Mod Eng would more naturally employ the comparative, see KnT, I, 1566, and n.

3294 Boethius wrote a treatise De Musica. See Skeat's reference to it in his note to HF, 788.

3306 wynke in older English meant to close the eyes, and so not to see.

3312 See the poem of Nigellus Wireker (or Witeker) entitled Burnellus seu Speculum Stultorum (in T Wright's Anglo-Latin Satirical Poets of the Twelfth Century Rolls Ser, 1872, I, 54 ff.) A young man named Gundulfus broke a cock's leg by throwing a stone at it. Later, when Gundulfus was to be ordained and receive a benefice, the cock crowed so late that Gundulfus overslept and lost his living.

3320 On seinite see KnT, I, 1721, n.

3321 countierfete, imitate.

3325 f Cf RR, 1034 f (Rom, 1050 ff), LGW Prol P, 352 f. Mr Sisam cites ye lordes here, along with manstresses in PhysT, VI, 72, and chanouns religuous, CYT, VIII, 992, as examples of direct address not dramatically appropriate to the Canterbury pilgrims. They are all natural rhetorical figures.

3329 Ecclus xii, 10 ff, xxvii, 26. Or the reference may be to Solomon as the author of Proverbs (xxxix, 5).

3345 Cf RR 4385 ff.

3347 Gaufred, Geoffrey de Vinsauf author of the Poetra Nova, which was published soon after the death of Richard I. It was long recognized as an authoritative treatise on poetry. The passage referred to is an example of a lamentation, and deals with Richard's death. Cf particularly the lines on Friday, the day on which Richard was wounded.

O Veneris lacrimosa dies! O sidus amarum!
Illa dies tua nox fuit et Venus illa venenum
(ed E Parat, Les Arts Poetiques du XII^e et du XIII^e Siecle, Paris, 1924, p 208)

3357 streute swerd, drawn sword ("acies stricta," Aen, ii, 333 f.)

3358 f See Aen, ii, 550 ff. With the form Eneydos (gen sg) of Metamorphosios, ML Prol, II, 93, and n.

3363 Hasdrubal was the king of Carthage when the Romans burnt it in 146 B.C. For the suicide of his wife see Orosius, iv, 23, and St Jerome, Adversus Jovinianum, i, 43.

3370 Cf MkT, VII, 2479.

3375 ff The chase of the fox was a stock scene in mediæval poetry of peasant life. Cf The False Fox, in T Wright's Reliquæ Antiquæ, London, 1845, I 4-5. Other examples are cited by Dr G M Vogt in his unpublished Harvard dissertation (1923) on The Peasant in Middle English Literature. Representations of the chase from carvings of the 14th and 15th centuries are reproduced in Professor Sisam's edition, frontispiece and p xxi.

3383 Colle oure dogge, on the "domestic" our see ShpT, VII, 69, n. For the dog's name Talbot of a song printed in CHEL, II, 393. There is a long list of names of hounds in the Roman de Renart (ed E Martin, Strassburg 1882-87) V, 1187 ff.

3393 benedictee, to be pronounced in three syllables, see KnT, I, 1785, n.

3394 The reference is to the Peasants' Revolt of 1381. The hostility to the Flemings was due to their competition in labor. See Oman, The Great Revolt of 1381, Oxford, 1906.

3426 Cf WBT, III, 1062.

3438 Cf Pars Prol, X, 31 ff.

3442 Rom xv, 4.

3443 For the familiar figure of RR, 11216, also Jean de Meun's Testament, 2167 ff (in RR, ed Méon, Paris, 1814, IV, 115), and MLT, II, 701 f.

3445 As seith my lord. It is uncertain who is meant or why he is mentioned at this point. Writers of stories commonly ended them with a prayer, as may be seen in many of the Canterbury tales, and it is not clear in what respect the form here used is peculiar. If the ascription applies especially to the phrase if that it be thy wille, there may be an allusion to the prayer of Jesus in Gethsemane (Matt xxvi). But in that case oure lord would be more natural than my lord. A marginal note, of uncertain authority, in MS E1 identifies the lord as "Domnus archiepiscopus Cantuariensis," and a considerable search has been made, without success, to find a similar form of benediction associated with that prelate. From 1381 to 1396 the archbishop of Canterbury was William Courtenay Professor Manly observes that the actual "lord" of the Nun's Priest was the Bishop of London, then Robert Braybrooke

The Nun's Priest's Epilogue

3447 This Epilogue, except perhaps the last couplet, appears to be a genuine but rejected passage Ll 3461-62, with the indefinite reference to another, may be a spurious attempt at patchwork.

3459 brasile, a wood used for a bright red dye The name was afterwards applied to Brazil in South America, because a similar wood was found in that region

Greyn of Portyngale, the coccus grain imported from Portugal

FRAGMENT VIII

Fragment VIII comprises the Second Nun's Prologue and Tale and the Prologue and Tale of the Canon's Yeoman The two stories are clearly connected (see l 554) but the fragment as a whole has neither head-link nor end-link In the Ellesmere group of MSS it stands between Fragments VII and IX, in the others it is separated from IX by VI, or both VI and VII In the modern editions, as explained in the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the ML Epil VII and VI have been transferred to an earlier position The Ellesmere order VIII IX, X, although attributed by some authorities to a redactor later than Chaucer, has been adopted in the Six-Text print and recent editions It is supported by the indication, in l 556, that the Canon's Yeoman joined the company at Bughton-under-Blee, which is five miles beyond Ospring, on the way to Canterbury

For details with regard to the MSS see Miss Hammond, pp 172, 315, Wells, p 737 In certain MSS, in which the Second Nun's Tale follows the Nun's Priest's Tale, a spurious link has been added to the latter tale See the Textual Notes on the NP Epil Two spurious links which appear in many MSS and connect the Canon's Yeoman's Tale with the Physician's Tale will be found in the Textual Notes on the CYT

The Second Nun's Prologue and Tale

The Second Nun's Prologue and Tale are held generally and with the highest probability, to be early writings of Chaucer which he took over, but never really adapted, for the Canterbury Tales Even the ascription to the Second Nun appears only in the rubrics, while in the text of the Prologue (l 62) the narrator is referred to as an unworthy son of Eve Yet there seems no reason for doubting that Chaucer meant to assign the tale to the

Nun who attended the Prioress as her chapel-eyne (Gen Prol, I, 163 f)

Except for the mention of the Luf of Seint Cecile in the Prol LGW, there is no definite indication of the date of composition The immaturity of style and the closeness of the translation are generally accepted as evidences of early work But the passages from Dante in the Invocatio ad Mariam are not likely to have been written before the first Italian journey Unless the Invocatio was composed separately and added later (as Professor Carleton Brown has inconclusively argued), a safe date for the whole work would be shortly after 1373

The Prologue consists of four parts (1) four stanzas on Idleness (ll 1-28), (2) the Invocatio ad Mariam (ll 29-77), (3) a brief Envoy to the Reader (ll 78-84), (4) the Interpretatio nominis Cecilee, also addressed to the Reader (ll 85-119)

The idea of the stanzas on Idleness Skeat held to have been taken from Jehan de Vignay's Introduction to his French translation of the Legenda Aurea But there are no very significant correspondences between the passages of Chaucer and of de Vignay and the "Idleness-Prologue" has been shown to be a conventional type of introduction used in many works See C Brown MP, IX, 1-16, and F Tupper, MLN, XXX, 10, n 6

On Mr Tupper's inference that the story was intended as part of a schematic treatment of the Deadly Sins see the general observations in the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Canterbury Tales

The Invocatio ad Mariam is a fabric made up of elements from the Paradiso of Dante, several Latin hymns, or anthems, the Anticlaudianus of Alanus de Insulis, and the Commentary of Macrobius on the Somnium Scipionis Stanzas 2, 3 and 4 are in large part translated from the address of St Bernard to the Virgin at the beginning of Canto xxxii of the Paradiso But several lines and phrases from Alanus are interwoven with Dante The fifth stanza is indebted to the Salve Regina, and lines 43-47 echo the Quem Terra (and perhaps also another canto of the Paradiso) Both these Latin hymns occur in the Hours of the Virgin, whence Chaucer probably derived the passages here used The often repeated motif of ll 47-49 occurs in the anthems for Evensong, Post Partum and Beata es Virgo For the familiar phrase ful of grace (l 67) the Ave Maria is a sufficient source The sixth stanza recalls another place in the Paradiso (xxxii, 133-35) and part of the seventh (ll 71-74) is almost certainly based upon a passage in Macrobius For the full discussion of these parallels see Skeat's notes, Holthausen, in Herrig's Arch, LXXXVII, 265 ff, Carleton Brown, in MP, IX, 1 ff, MLN, XXX, 231-32, F Tupper, in MLN, XXX, 9-10, Lowes in MP, XV, 193 ff, and Sister Madeleva, Chaucer's Nuns and Other Essays, N Y, 1925, pp 34-35

Mr Tupper remarks that the composition of such a prelude to a miracle of the Virgin or a life of a saint was a literary convention even commoner than the 'Idleness-Prologue' which precedes. It seems probable therefore, that the Invocatio was composed at the same time as the tale of Cecilia and that the combination of the two was not made especially for the Canterbury Tales.

The Interpretatio nominis Cecilie Chaucer himself, or a scribe's rubric (in MSS El Hg), credits to Jacobus Januensis (i e., a Voragine) in the Legenda Aurea.

The source of the tale proper has been assumed to be also the version in the Golden Legend (ed Graesse 2d ed, Leipzig, 1850, pp 771 ff., also in the Ch Soc Orig and Anal, pp 192 ff.) But in certain features Chaucer's account is closer to a version which follows the Greek life by Simeon Metaphrastes. For this Latin text see Historia Aloysii Lipomani de Vitae Sanctorum, Pars n., Lovanii 1571, p 32 (Kolbing), Surius, De Probatis Sanctorum Vitae November Cologne, 1617-18, pp 478 ff., revised as Historia seu Vitae Sanctorum, Turin, 1875-80 XI, 638 ff. A careful comparison of Chaucer's version with both was printed by Kolbing, ES, I, 215 ff. Nearly all the features which Ten Brink held to be original with Chaucer are paralleled in the Metaphrastes text. The version of Metaphrastes is itself derived from early Latin Acta, represented in modified form in the Acta compiled by G Laderchi, Sanctae Caeciliae Acta, etc., Rome, 1722, and in the Sanctuarium of Mombritius, Paris, 1910, I, 332 ff. Chaucer's version is compared with these Latin texts by Holt-Hausen, Herrig's Arch, LXXXVII, 265 ff. It appears that Chaucer either had an original which combined materials from the Legenda Aurea and the old Latin Acta or that he made such a combination himself. Professor Tatlock, in MLN, XLV, 297 f., argues for the latter conclusion.

On the origin and early history of the legend the most important authorities are Laderchi, and G B de Rossi, Roma Sotterranea Christiana, Rome, 1864-77, II, xxxv ff. For further references see the Catholic Encyclopedia, s v Cecilia, St

The Second Nun's Prologue

1 ff For this characterization of Idleness of Jehan de Vignay's Introduction, where the idea is attributed to St Bernard. See Orig and Anal, p 190 f. Professor Tatlock (Angl, XXXVII, 106, n 2) has noted a parallel in the Ameto, ed Moutier, Florence, 1834, p 58 f.

2 f Cf KnT, I, 1940, and n

7 The idea, which is common enough, is also in Jehan de Vignay's Introduction, where it is ascribed to St Jerome.

8 ff For the comparison of Idleness to the devil's net ("panter") Skeat cites Wychli,

Select Eng Works, ed Arnold, Oxford, 1869-71, III, 200

15 "Even if men never feared to die," i e., if they considered this life only

19 Sloth holds Idleness in a leas Idle-ness was recognized as a brand of Sloth (Accidia) in the classification of the Deadly Sins

25 the legende, the regular name for the life of a saint, also a short title for the most popular collection of such lives, the Legenda Aurea of Jacobus a Voragine

30 St Bernard was celebrated for his devotion to the Virgin. In the Paradiso xxxi, 102, he calls himself "il suo fedel Bernardo," and the address to her in Canto xxxiii, of which Chaucer makes use in the Invocatio below, is put in Bernard's mouth. For some account of his writings in her honor see Mrs Jameson, Legends of the Monastic Orders, 5th edn., London, 1872, pp 142, 144, 145

36-56 These lines follow in general the prayer of St Bernard in the Paradiso, xxxiii, 1 ff., as indicated by line numbers below

1 36 Vergine Madre, figlia del tuo Figlio,

1 39 Umile ed alta più che creatura, Termine fisso d'eterno consiglio,
Tu se' colei che l'umana natura

Il 40, 41 Nobilitasti sì, che il suo Fattore

Il 41, 42 Non disdegno di farsi sua fattura

1 43 Nel ventre tuo si raccese l'amore,

1 44 Per lo cui caldo nell'eterna pace

Così è germinato questo fiore

Qui sei a noi meridiana face

Di caritate, e guiso intra i mortali

Sei di speranza fontana vivace

Donna, sei tanto grande e tanto vali,

Che qual vuol grazia ed a te non ricorre,

Sua disianza vuol volar senz' al

Il 53, 54 La tua benignità non pur soccorre

Il 53, 54 A chi domanda, ma molte fiata

Il 55, 56 Liberamente al domandar precorre

1 51 In te misericordia, in te pietate,

1 50 In te magnificenza in te s'aduna

Quantunque in creatura è di bontate

On other passages reminiscences of which Chaucer apparently combined with these lines from Dante, see the introductory note above. With ll 37-38 of the Anticlaudianus, v, 9 (Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 538 ff.), ll 13-14, 26, with l 42, the same chapter, ll 14-16, and with l 56, perhaps, l 66, ibid. But some of these phrases were commonplaces of the Marian hymns. With ll 45-49 of the opening lines of a hymn of Venantius Fortunatus (Dreves, Analecta Hymnica, Leipzig, 1886-1922, II, 38, no 27)

Quem terra, pontus, aethera,

Colunt, adorant, praedicant,

Trinam regentem machinam,

Clastrum Mariae bajulat

The cloistre blissful of l 43 may be an echo of this passage as well as of the "beato chiostru" of the Paradiso, xxv, 127

Against Skeat's opinion that the Dante passage (ll 36-56) was a late insertion, Professor Carleton Brown has argued effectively for the unity of the Invocatio. But his own suggestion that the whole Innocatio was late is also unlikely

46 out of reles, without ceasing

52 Skeat (reading hir) notes that in Chaucer's time the gender of sonne was still felt to be feminine Cf Astr. II, rubric 1, also Piers Plowman, B, xviii, 243

Dr Paget Toynbee (Athen, 1904, II, 518) proposed the emendation somme, "sum," in order to bring the line nearer to Dante's "Quantunque di bontate" But Professor Brown argued that the figure of the sun was commonly enough applied to the Virgin to make such an emendation unnecessary And in fact another phrase, in the same underlying passage from Dante, "meridiana face di caritate" (ll 10-11), is interpreted by the Italian commentators as referring to the noonday sun at the height of its power

57-63 The fifth stanza departs from Dante and seems to have been influenced by the antiphon, "Salve regina" (See Daniel, The Hymnal, Leipzig, 1855-56, II, 321)

58 flemed wrecche, banished exile (the original sense of AS "wraecca") Lounsbury (Studies II 389) compares St Bernard, Tractatus ad Laudem Gloriosae Virginis, Migne, Pat Lat, CLXXXII, 1148 "Respice ergo beatissima Virgo, ad nos proscriptos in exsilio filios Evae" The conception of this life as an exile was not unusual, but the parallel to some of Eve (l 62) is striking Galle, bitterness, perhaps with an allusion to the name Mary, and to the Hebrew "mar," bitter Cf ABC, 50

59 See Matt xv, 22 ff

62 On the inappropriateness of this line to the Second Nun see the introductory note, above

64-70 This stanza perhaps contains a reminiscence of Paradise, xxxii, 133-35

Di contro a Prieta vedi sedere Anna,

Tanto contenta di mirar sua figlia,

Che non move occhi per cantare Osanna

With l 64 of James II, 17

67 ful of grace of "Ave Maria, gratia plena," and Luke I, 28

69 Osanne, Hosanna

70 On Anna, the mother of the Virgin, see FRT, III 1613, n

71-74 These lines, which have a general resemblance to the sense of Bernard's prayer (ll 31-33, 35-37), correspond much more closely to passages in the commentary of Macrobius on the Somnium Scipionis (I, 10, 9, 11, 2, 3 11, 8, 8, 9) This contains the figures of the prison, the contagion of the body, and the weight of earthly desire The remoter source of both Chaucer and Macrobius, as Mr Lowes points out may be found in the Aeneid, vi 730-34, and in Servius's commentary on this passage occurs again the figure of the contagion of the body Perhaps Chaucer knew and recalled this comment Possibly, too as Mr Lowes further shows, Chaucer may have found the passages from Servius and Macrobius both in Albericus the Myth-ographer, where they are brought together in the long chapter on Pluto (Bode, Scriptores Rerum Mythicarum Cellis, 1834, I, 178, 180) For further conjectures as to the transmission of the quotations see Lowes MP, XV, 200-01

75 havene of refut cf Ps xlvii, 1, xlviii, 3, cvii, 30 But the epithet was common in the hymns to the Virgin See also MLT, II, 852, ABC, 14

85 ff The Interpretatio, in the original Latin of Jacobus Januensis, forms part of the legend Similar etymological explanations, as Skeat observes, are found in other chapters He compares particularly the account of St Valentine, chap xlii In the case of St Cecilia all the etymologies proposed are wrong The word is really a "gentle" name, borne by members of the "Caecilia gens" Their common ancestor, according to tradition, was Caeculus, whose name was doubtless a diminutive of "caecus," blind For an attempt to prove that St Cecilia actually belonged to the patrician family in question see de Rossi, Roma Sotterranea, II, xxxii-xliii, 133-61 The derivations given by Jacobus Januensis and adopted by Chaucer are the following (1) "coeli loba" hevene lyhe, (2) "caecus via," wey to blynde, (3) "caelo et lya," hevene and Lya (representative of the active life), (4) "caecilia quasi caecitate carens," Wan'ryng of blyndnesse (on the principle, "lucus a non lucendo"), (5) "caelo et leos" (1 e, Gk λῆος, Attic λαός, people), hevene of people

113 ff The Latin which corresponds to this stanza belongs to the third derivation Chaucer has transferred it to the fifth

114 swyt and round refer to the Primum Mobile, brennyng, to the Empyrean

The Second Nun's Tale

120 Most of the traditional account of St Cecilia is included in Chaucer's tale Her martyrdom has been variously assigned to the reigns of Marcus Aurelius Alexander Severus, and Diocletian Her remains, along with those of Valerianus and Tibertus, are supposed to have been buried in the catacombs of St Calixtus, and removed thence, in 821, by Pope Paschal I to a church called after her name (Santa Cecilia in Trastevere) In 1589, when the church was rebuilt by Cardinal Sfondrati, her coffin was found there (See Baronino, Annales, Mainz, 1623, ad ann 821) In 1851, De Rossi discovered what was probably her original crypt next to the papal crypt in the cemetery of Calixtus See his Roma Sotterranea

134 the organs (Lat "cantantibus organis"), the archaic plural, for which "organ" came to be used later In NPT, VII, 2851, organ is construed as plural On the history of the word, see Chappell, Hist of Music London, 1874, I, 327

The association of music with St Cecilia is held to be due to this passage in her legend. Its earliest occurrence in art seems to be the picture by Raphael now in Bologna, painted in 1513.

139 A mistranslation of the Latin "et biduanis et triduanis jejuniis"

152 Sister Madeleva (Chaucer's Nuns, pp 40-41) explains the angel as the "guardian angel" of Christian teaching, and refers to Psalm xci, 1

172 Via Apia, the Apian Way, which led from Rome to Capua and Brundisium. The Latin text, which Chaucer mistranslates, says that Valerian is to go along the Via Apia to the third milestone

177 Urban, Pope Urban I who succeeded Cauxtus, A. D., 222, and was beheaded May 25 230. For his legend, see the Legenda Aurea, cap lxxvii

181 purged, i. e., by baptism

186 semites buryeles, Lat "sepulchra marturum" The reference is to the catacombs. The form buryeles is here plural, though originally the singular ended in -s (AS "byrigels") The modern singular, "burial," arose from misunderstanding of the ending. Cf "garde," "prickle," "ridle," all of which were formed by the same suffix lotynge, lying hid (Lat "latitantem")

201 An oold man, doubtless St Paul. The passage Valerian reads in his book (ll 207 ff) is a close translation of Eph iv, 5, 6

208 crustendom, baptism

218 fynt, findeth

220 ff The roses and lilies are symbols respectively, of martyrdom and purity. Skeat, following an explanation in Mrs Jameson's Sacred and Legendary Art (8th edn., London, 1879, pp 35 f), held the roses to typify love or divine fervor. But the other interpretation has been clearly established by numerous parallels. As early as the third century St Cyprian, in an epistle to martyrs and confessors, speaks of white and purple crowns as rewards for the children of God the white, "de opere" (i. e., for Christian living), the purple, "de passione" (Migne, Pat Lat, IV, 249 f) St Jerome, in a letter to Eustochium, written about the year 404, associates crowns of roses and violets with actual martyrdom ("effusio sanguinis") and crowns of lilies with the purity which he describes as a "quotidianum marturium" (Migne, XXII, 905, § 31) Again, in an epistle to Furia (557, § 14), he ascribes lilies to virgins and roses to martyrs, as does also St Ambrose in his commentary on the Song of Songs (Migne, XV, 1871, § 3) On these and other uses of the same symbolism from the early centuries till the age of Chaucer see J. L. Lowes, in PMLA, XXVI, 315 ff., XXIX, 129 ff., H. N. MacCracken, in MLN, XXVII, 63, F. Holthausen, in Herrig's Arch, LXXXVII, 271, O. F. Emerson, in PMLA, XLI, 252 ff., and R. D. Cornelius, PMLA, XLII, 1055 ff. Other references are given in Wells's Manual, pp 880, 1032 11+9, 1241, 1328, and the whole subject is further discussed by Professor Tatlock in PMLA, XLV, 169 ff. To the same study the following notes are indebted for a number of references

Apart from the symbolism of the flowers there is a question as to the exact significance of the crowns. In most of the instances that have been noted they were undoubtedly conceived, like the "crown of life" or "crown of glory" repeatedly mentioned in the New Testament, as tokens of victory or rewards of faithful struggle. This is the case also in the so-called Pseudo-Linus version of the martyrdom of St Peter, to whom angels bring crowns of roses and lilies as he hangs upon the cross (Martyrium Beati Petri apostoli a Lino episcopo conscriptum, ed Lipsius and Bonnet, in Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, Leipzig, 1891, I, 15) Moreover this legend of St Peter which is cited by Mr Tatlock (pp 170 f), is probably roughly coeval with the life of St Cecilia. In the case of St Cecilia, however, another interpretation is at least equally possible. The crowns are brought to her and her husband, not at the moment of martyrdom, but as soon as they determine to live a life of virginity in marriage. The situation is closely parallel to that recorded in the life of St Amator bishop of Auxerre, who died in 418. Amator was compelled by his parents to marry a virgin. "Sed cum tempus copulationis urgeret, se mutuo exhortantes, votum virginitatis fecerunt. Et ecce Angelus adfuit, qui duas eis coronas attulit, propositum laudans, & ad perseverandum exhortans" (Bollandist Acta Sanctorum, May, I, 51) The flowers in the crowns of Amator and his wife are not specified, but the circumstances of the presentation are similar to those in the legend of St Cecilia. In both cases, husband and wife each receive a garland. It seems natural to regard the crowns as celestial substitutes for the nuptial crowns of an earthly marriage. The coronation of bride and groom was a conspicuous part of the ancient wedding ceremonies among both Greeks and Romans, as the στέφανωμα is to this day in the Eastern Church.

For further discussion of nuptial crowns see Tr, n, 1735, n

236 Cf KnT, I, 1196

248 Of rose and lilies. The Lat "roseus hic odor et hlorum" explains the strange change of number 270-83 Skeat notes that this passage, though present in the Latin and French texts of the legend, is lacking in three other English versions. He accepts Tyrwhitt's suggestion that it was originally a marginal observation which crept into the Latin text.

271 The reference is to the proper "preface" to the mass for St Cecilia's day in the Ambrosian liturgy. This explanation of the passage, which is not given in previous editions, has — curiously enough — been several times discovered and forgotten Professor Child, as Professor Tatlock reminded the present editor, long ago pointed it out orally to his classes, but apparently neither he nor any of his students ever printed the observation. Then in 1891 Professor Holthausen (Herrig's Arch, LXXXVII, 269) indicated the same source. And recently it was independently rediscovered by Mr M Henshaw, who printed the passage from the praefatio in MP, XXVI, 15 f. See Tatlock, PMLA, XLV, 169, n 3.

274 palm of martyrdom, literally translated from the Legenda ("martyr palmam"), which takes it in turn from the Ambrosian praeface. Emerson has noted the use of the same symbol in St Ambrose's Sermo xx (Migne, Pat Lat, XVII, 642-43) and in Tertullian's De Spectaculis, cap xxx (Opera ed Oehler, Leipzig, 1853, I 61). See PMLA, XLI, 260.

276 hure chambre, i.e. marriage

277 Valerians, a probable correction for the reading Ceciles of all the published MSS.

shrifte, confession. Lat "testis est Valeriani conjugis et Tiburti prouocata confessio."

283 Devocoun of chastitee to love, chaste devotion to (spiritual) love. The Latin original (both in the Legenda and in the Ambrosian praeface) has simply "Mundus agnovit, quantum valeat devotio castitatis," Skeat's rendering, "To love such devotion to chastity," and that of Emerson, "Devotion to chastity as against love," both seem unnatural, though the grammatical construction in either case is possible enough. For the use of to to indicate opposition or hostility Emerson cites NED, s v To, 25, b.

315 we, in the nominative, anticipates I 318.

319 Cecile. In the French translation Valerian answers, not Cecilia.

322 "If this were the only life" Lat "si haec sola esset vita."

329 Hath souled, Lat "animavit."

338-39 This does not quite correspond to the Latin "Sicut in una hominis sapientia sunt tria, scilicet ingenium, memoria et intellectus."

347 colde baneful, destructive. See NPT, VII, 3256, and n.

349 From this point forward Chaucer's version corresponds rather to that derived from Simeon Metaphrastes than to the Legenda Aurea.

351 That, who

369 cornicular, subordinate officer, assistant (Lat "corniculario"). The designation does not occur in the Legenda Aurea, and Skeat held that Chaucer used at this point the lives of Valerian and Tiburtus (Bollandist Acta Sanctorum, April, II, 203 ff.) But Kolbing (p 221) shows that it occurs in the Metaphrastes version (corrupted into "cubiculario").

386-91 From II Tim iv, 7, 8.

413 Juppiter encense, offer incense to Jupiter.

420 Possibly a reminiscence of Job xiii, 15.

442 bigonne, the full form of the strong preterite, second person singular. The final -e here was only rarely preserved in Chaucer's verse.

443-67 Chaucer here departs considerably from his original.

467 "He stares and raves in uttering his judgment." Compare the modern phrase "staring mad."

489-97 Not in the Legenda Aurea. Cecilia, in Chaucer's narrative has not yet said anything to justify this remark of Almachius. But in the Latin text from Metaphrastes she attacks the heathen gods in a short speech just preceding. The speech may have been omitted in the copy Chaucer followed.

498 outer eyen, outer (bodily) eyes.

503 taste, test, try.

539 "whom she had fostered" Lat "omnes quos ad fidem converterat."

550 The Church of St Cecilia, at the end of the Trastevere, is supposed to occupy the site of the saint's house. It is doubtful whether any part of the present building is older than 1599.

The Canon's Yeoman's Prologue and Tale

The first line of the Canon's Yeoman's Prologue indicates that it was to follow the Second Nun's Tale. Otherwise there is no connection between either Prologue or Tale and that which precedes.

The whole episode of the Canon and his Yeoman is generally held to have been written late. But whether it was actually an afterthought on Chaucer's part, there is no way of telling. For in any case the characters would not have been mentioned in the General Prologue. That Chaucer introduced them out of resentment against some alchemist who had cheated him (as Tyrwhitt suggested IV, 181), is pure supposition, but the conjecture has led recently to interesting speculation.

Mr H E Richardson, in the Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, Ser 4, V, 38 f., called attention to a contemporary of Chaucer's who was both an alchemist and a canon, William Shuchurch, canon of the King's Chapel at Wmdors. In 1374, one Wilham de Brumley, "chaplain, lately dwelling with the Prior of Harmandsworth," confessed that he had made counterfeit gold pieces according to the teaching ("per doctrinam") of Shuchurch. It is not known whether Shuchurch was still practicing his "science" at Wmdors in 1390, when Chaucer was charged with repairing the royal chapel. If he was, Chaucer would almost inevitably have known about him, and may have had personal dealings with him. Mr Richardson even suggests — and Professor Manly joins him in the tempting conjecture — that the poet was a victim of Shuchurch and wrote the Canon's Yeoman's Tale in resentment at his deception. Professor Manly calls attention to the repeated occasions in his later years on which Chaucer borrowed small sums of money and raises the question whether his need of ready cash may not have been due to the pursuit of Elxir, the Philosopher's Stone (New Light, pp 244 ff).

For Mr Manly's further suggestion that the Canon's Yeoman's Tale was originally composed, not for the Canterbury series, but to be read to an audience which included some canons of the church — perhaps even for the canons at Windsor — see the note to l 992, below.

No source has been discovered for the Tale. In the first part the Yeoman describes his life with his master, in the second he tells of the tricks of a London canon — a quite different person, he definitely protests. The story was doubtless a current anecdote, or combination of anecdotes. But in working it up Chaucer may have drawn on personal observation, for he displays considerable practical acquaintance with alchemy. Whatever his actual experience, his attitude toward the science, if any inference can be drawn from the Yeoman's exposures, would seem to have been skeptical.

A number of parallels to the Tale are pointed out by Professor Kittredge in Petrarch's Dialogus De Alchymia (No 111 in De Remedijs, Lib 1). He gives these merely as illustrations and not as sources of Chaucer's story. See Trans Royal Soc of Lit, XXX, 92 ff. The first trick of the Canon is closely paralleled later in Erasmus's Colloquium Πρωτολογια, and there are slight resemblances to the tale in his Colloquium Alchymista. See H de Vocht, ESt, XLI, 385 ff. For another anecdote of the same character see the Centifolium Stultorum, Vienna, 1709 p 147 (noted by Andrae Angl Beibl, XXVII, 84 f). A very similar modern case of swindling is also recorded in the [London] Spectator, LXVI, 646. The most important literary analogue to the whole episode is Ben Jonson's Alchemist.

On the interpretation of the tale and the character of the Yeoman see G L Kittredge, Trans Royal Soc of Lit, XXX, 87 ff, and S F Damon, PMLA, XXXIX, 782 ff. The alchemical terms and processes are discussed at length in Skeat's notes, to which the brief explanations below are largely indebted. For fuller information reference may be made to Ashmole's Theatrum Chemicum, London, 1652. There is a convenient historical sketch of alchemy in the introduction to C M Hathaway's edition of Jonson's Alchemist, N Y, 1903, pp 15 ff.

The Canon's Yeoman's Prologue

556 Boghtoun under Blee Boughton, which was five miles from Ospring, a regular stopping-place on the Canterbury Road. See the references on the duration of the pilgrimage in the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the CT.

557 A man, the Canon. Skeat quotes from Rock, Church of Our Fathers London, 1903-04, II, 69, the statement that some families of canons regularly required their members, when outside of the house, to wear over their cassock a linen surplice, and above that a black cape. Whether Chaucer's Canon was regular or secular is not clearly stated, but he manifestly enjoyed considerable freedom.

555 "He (i.e., the Canon) was spotted with foam, so that he looked like a magpie."

566 male tweyfoold, a double bag. Perhaps tweyfoold implies that it was folded over because nearly empty.

578 For swoot, to prevent sweat.
581 Were ful, (that) might be full. The relative is omitted, as frequently.

587 On the function of the Yeoman as a "setter" see the remarks of Professor Kittredge Trans Royal Soc of Lit, XXX, 89 f. At the outset he speaks respectfully enough of the Canon. If there is mockery in his extravagant praise, it is not made too apparent. But the Host shrewdly leads him on to turn against his master.

602 kneue. The -e is apparently preserved in hiatus, though the emendation kneuen would be easy.

611 leye in balauunce, put in the balance, wager.

632 worshupe, dignity, hence, respectable appearance.

633 f. "His upper garment is not worth a mite, in reality, for a man like him."

So moot I go, so may I have the power to walk, a frequent adjuration.

645 Cf. "Omne quod est nimium uertitur in uitium," of which the first words are quoted in the margin of MS E1. A number of similar proverbs are cited in Skeat's note.

655 crafty and sly here do not carry their present evil connotation. Cf l 1253, below.

658 blinde, without opening at the farther end, compare the modern "blind alley."

659 by kynde, by nature.

665 Peter, by St Peter.

Harde grace, ill-favor.

669 multiphre, the technical term for transmuting the metals into gold. Perhaps a pun is involved on the multiplication of gold, in this sense, and the original chemical sense of multiplication, which referred to the fact that the strength of an elxir could be multiplied by repeated operations. See L Zetzner's Theatrum Chemicum, Strassburg, 1659-61, "Multiphatio praedicta sulphuris," III, 301, and "De multiplicatione," III, 818.

681 Cf KnT, I, 1089, and n.

682 slit slideth, contracted form 688 f From Dionysius Cato, Disticha de Moribus, 1, 17

The Canon's Yeoman's Tale

721 neer, nearer
 726 Mr E F Paper (PQ, III, 253) queries whether Chaucer, and also the artist who represents the Yeoman in the Ellesmere miniature, knew the proverb "A man's a man though he wear a hose upon his head" 731 which, what sort of, Lat "qualis"
 739 ydo, done with, ended
 743 jupartye, jeopardy, hazard literally, "jeu parti," a game in which the chances are even In French and Provençal the term was used for certain debates in verse See L Selbach, Das Streitgedicht in der Altprovenzalischen Lyrik, in Ausgaben und Abhandlungen, LVII, Knobloch, Streitgedichte im Prov und Altfranzösischen, Breslau, 1886 Also Ducange s v "Jocus Partitus" 746-47 "Misery loves company" MS El has the marginal quotation, "Solacium miseriorum &c," with which Skeat compares the proverb quoted in Marlowe's Faustus, II, 1, 42 "Solamen miseris socios habuisse doloris" For the idea, cf further Seneca, De Cons ad Polybium, XII, 2, Tr, 1, 708 f 764 lampe, plate sheet, for lambe, OF "lame," Lat "lamina" 770 sublymyng, sublimating, vaporizing by heat
 772 mercurie crude crude Mercury, ordinary quicksilver, as distinguished from the real Mercury (the "Greene Lyon"), which the alchemists professed to make Skeat refers to Ashmole's Theatrum Chemicum, p 280
 778 spirites, gases or vapors Four "spirits" in particular were ordinarily recognized in alchemy sulphur, sal ammoniac, quicksilver, and arsenic (or, according to some authorities, orpiment) See ll 820 ff
 782 Cf Mill Prol, I, 3134, and n
 790 armonyak, a corruption of armenak, Armenian "Bolearmenie" or "Bol Oriental" was a medicinal red earth or clay (Cf armonyak, I 798)
 797 Watres rubifyng, reddening of waters Contrast the process called albificacioun, or whitening of waters, in l 805 See Zetzner's Theatrum Chemicum, III, 41, 110, 634 ff 798 sal armonyak, properly sal ammoniac (also called sal armeniac) Salt of Ammon, in Libya, a crystalline salt The form armonyak may be due either to association with Gk αρωμα, joning, since the gum ammoniac was used as a cement, or to confusion with armenak, the proper form, in boole armonyak, above 808 Cered pokets, bags or pockets closed with wax 814 embabyng, imbibition, absorption 816 cytranacioun, turning to citron color When the materials of the philosopher's stone were in a state favorable to the success of the experiment they were supposed to assume the color of a citron

820 On the four spirits and the seven bodies see also Gower's Conf Am, IV, 2462 ff

838 Ascaunce, as if perhaps See SumT, III, 1745, and n

842 elvysshe nyce loore, strange and foolish lore With the use of elvish here compare Prol Thap, VII, 703

844 lerne, teach On the confusion of leren and lernen see MLT, II, 181, n

860 f The list of names would be enough to raise a devil For an example of this kind of conjuration see The Bugbears, Herrig's Arch, XCIX, 29 f

874 to seken evere, always to seek, i e., never found

875 temps tense The reference of the gerund to seken is future

877 sadde, sated

878 bitter sweete, bitter-sweet, here, a dangerous allurements

897 Compare PhysT, VI, 92

921 chut, chideth, halt, holdeth

922 Somme seyde, one said The tense changes from a general present to a definite past, as if a particular instance came to mind long on, attributable to, owing to (mod dial "along of", AS "gelang")

929 so theech, "so thee ich," so may I prosper

934 crased, cracked

941 many a throue, many a time

962 ff Proverbial Cf the following couplet from the Parabolae of Alanus de Insulis (II, 1 f, Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 585), of which the beginning is quoted in the margin of MS El—

Non teneas aurum totum quod splendet ut aurum,

Nec pulchrum pomum quodlibet esse bonum
 See also HF, 272, Haeckel, p 38, nos 130, 131, Skeat, EE Prov, p 86, no 206, p 121, no 284

972 The story begins at this point Chanoun of religoun, i e., a regular canon, not a secular one See ll 992 ff

979 of falshede, in respect to falseness Cf NPT, VII, 2850

989 gouvernaunce, conduct

992 The address to chanouns religous here has been criticized as inappropriate to the Canterbury pilgrimage, and Professor Manly has suggested the bold inference that the tale was actually read to the canons of King's Chapel at Windsor See the introductory note above for his theory about the personal application of the tale The speculations are all interesting, but l 992 would not be inexplicable as a merely rhetorical apostrophe Cf PhysT, VI, 72, NPT, VII, 3325

1005 By you, with reference to you

1012 an annueleer, a priest employed solely in singing annual masses for the dead

1018 spending silver, spending-money

1024 a certeyn, a certain sum

1026 The mark was 13s 4d, the noble, 6s 8d

1039 condicoun, character

1048 in good tyme, at a seasonable time hence, fortunately, a formula used to avert evil consequences from a boast or a compliment

1055 For the order of words compare Gen Prol, I 791 and n, also l 1151, below

1062 Marie, an oath by the Virgin

1066 Skeat notes several parallels to the proverb, "Proffered service stunketh," EE Prov, p 121, no 285, cf Haeckel, p 47, no 161

1122 For this meaning of philosofre compare Gen Prol, I, 297 and n

1126 mortifye, subject to a chemical change, cf l 1431

1175 abnt, abideth, contracted form

1185 Sein' Gile, St Aegidius See the Legenda Aurea cap cxxx

1189 with harde grace, a plague upon him, a mild imprecation

1230 The teyne, or plate, which is here concealed from the priest, is to be used in the third trick

1313 ape, dupe Cf Gen Prol, I, 706, and n

1319 heyne, wretch, primarily, niggard (origin unknown, possibly connected with heyne, spare, save, ON "hegna")

1320 Unwytynge, like knowynge in l 1324, is an absolute participle

1327 "You are blameworthy" On the change in the use of "to blame" see Gen Prol, I, 375, n

1342 For this proverbial comparison see KnT, I, 2437, n

1348 Cf Gen Prol, I, 88

1362 nerre the freendshupe, if the friendship were not, or, by the modern idiom, if it were not for the friendship

1371 and, if, an uncommon use in Chaucer

1389 debat, strife

1391 blent, blinds (contracted form of blendeth)

1407 Cf the proverb, "The burnt child fears the fire", and Skeat EE Prov, pp 121 f, no 286

1410 "Better late than never", cf Haeckel, p 23, no 76

1411 "Never is a long term", see Skeat, EE Prov, p 122, no 287

1413 Bayard, a common name for a horse "As bold as blind Bayard" was a proverbial comparison, see Skeat, EE Prov, pp 122 f, no 288

1418 f Cf MLT, II, 552 f

1422 rape and renne, seize and lay hold of (?), an alliterative phrase of uncertain origin, which occurs in various forms rap(e) and ren(ne), rap and rend (or wring), rve and rend. It is sometimes regarded as a corruption of AS "hreapian and hrinan" But the NED derives rape rather from Lat "rapere," OF "raper"

1428 Arnoldus de Villa Nova (c 1235-1314) was the author of a treatise on alchemy entitled Rosarium Philosophorum Skeat quotes a reference to the saying of Arnold in a tract printed in Zetzner's Theatrum Chemicum, III, 285 But the passage which Chaucer appears to have used is in Arnold's treatise De Lapide Philosophorum It is cited in full by Lowes, MLN, XXVIII, 229, with a reference to Arnaldus de Villanova, Opera, Lyons 1532, fol 304, recto

1432 The "brother" of mercury was sulphur

1434 Hermes Trismegistus was the supposed author of many works on magic and alchemy The name was given by the Greeks to the Egyptian god Thoth, whose wisdom was held to be preserved in certain "Hermetical Books" dating from the second third, and fourth centuries See W Scott Hermetica I Oxford, 1924, also Pauly-Wissowa, Real-encyclopaedie, s v Hermes Trismegistos For some account of his reputation in the Middle Ages see L Thorndike, History of Magic and Experimental Science, London, 1923, II 214 ff A specimen of the works ascribed to him is printed in Zetzner's Theatrum Chemicum, IV, 592 ff

1440 Sol and Luna, gold and quicksilver

1447 the secree of secrees, an allusion to the treatise Secreta Secretorum, attributed to Aristotle (ed Robert Steele in Opera hactenus inedita Rogeri Bacon, Fasc v Oxford 1920) It is the main source of the seventh book of Gower's Confessio Amantis, and was translated into English by Lydgate and Burgh (ed R Steele, EETS, 1894)

1450 This reference is to the work printed in Zetzner's Theatrum Chemicum (V 191 ff) under the title Senioris Zadith Tabula Chymica It was perhaps a translation from the Arabic The story which Chaucer tells of Plato is there related of Solomon (p 224)

1457 ignotum per ignocius, explaining the unknown by the more unknown

1460 On the four elements see Gen Prol, I, 420, n

1470 deffende, forbid

1479 terme of his lyve, for the duration of his life

1481 boote of his bale, remedy for his evil

FRAGMENT IX

The Manciple's Prologue and Tale constitute a separate group in the Six-Text print. Although the Prologue is not definitely linked to the Canon's Yeoman's Tale, the action is said to take place under the Blean Forest, at a point identified as either Harbledown or Up-and-Down Field in Thanington. It has usually been assumed, then, that the pilgrims had passed Bognon on their last day's journey toward Canterbury. But the possibility, long ago suggested by Ten Brink, that the Manciple's Tale was intended to start the homeward journey from Canterbury, has been recently urged again, with valid arguments, by Professor Root. See MLN, XLIV 493 ff, cf Pars Prol, X, 16, n. The position of Fragment IX in the various classes of manuscripts is regularly just before the final Fragment X.

The Host's remarks to the Cook in the Prologue are puzzling in view of the fact that the Cook had already taken part in the discussion and had told a (fragmentary) tale. See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the Cook's Prologue. Perhaps Chaucer meant to cancel the Cook's Prologue and Tale, and introduce the Cook for the first time in the Manciple's Prologue. Or, on the other hand, the fabliaux which finish Fragment I may have been written later than the Manciple's Prologue, and the discrepancy between the two left unadjusted. Both possibilities are supported by Skeat in different places. See Oxf Ch III, 399, and V, 436.

A separate edition of the Manciple's Tale, or rather a reprint of it from the Lansdowne and Ellesmere MSS, accompanied by facsimiles of the Lansdowne text, was published by Dr G Plessow Berlin, 1929. Though intended primarily as an introduction to paleography and textual criticism, the edition contains a phonetic transcription of the Ellesmere text, notes on sources and an analysis of the formal rhetorical devices employed in the tale.

The date of Fragment IX is undetermined. Miss Hammond (pp 254-57), although suggesting that the Manciple was one of several pilgrims added by afterthought to the General Prologue, nevertheless reckons his Tale among the earlier of the Canterbury series. Dr Plessow also argues for an early date, finding evidence in the formal rhetorical type of narration and the free use of the Roman de la Rose. There is no close connection between the Prologue and the Tale or indication that the latter was written with the particular situation in mind.

The source of the Tale is Ovid's account of Apollo and Coronis (Met., i, 531-632), which Gower also followed for his briefer version in the Confessio Amantis, iii, 768-817. The use of my some in the opening and closing exhortations in Gower and in the Manciple's moral application has been taken as evidence that Chaucer recalled Gower's treatment of the story. But since the formula recurs constantly throughout the Confessio in the remarks of the priest, whereas the Manciple attributes it to his mother (my dame), any influence of Gower at this point must remain doubtful. Neither Chaucer nor Gower has been clearly shown to have used the other's version, and Chaucer's was in all probability the earlier in date.

The general theme, of the Tell-Tale Bird, was the subject of one of the stories in the romance of the Seven Sages, and Professor Tatlock has argued from an allusion in WB

Prol, III, 232 f that Chaucer perhaps knew that version of the tale. But in the Manciple's Tale which is not very similar, he followed rather Ovid. See Tatlock, Dev and Chron, p 203, n 3, and Plessow's edition, Beilage 2 (a detailed comparison of Chaucer's tale with Ovid's, in parallel columns). On the various analogues European and oriental, see Clouston, in the Ch Soc Orig and Anal, pp 437 ff, Skeat, Oxf Ch, III, 501, V, 439, Kilis Campbell, Seven Sages Boston, 1907, p xxvii ff, Plessow's edition, pp 94 ff. Mr H B Hinckley has called the editor's attention to a version in Machaut's Livre du Voir-Dit, ed P Paris, Paris, 1875, pp 317-330.

Chaucer's narrative is considerably expanded by moralizing comments, drawn from the Parson's Tale, probably from the De Arte Loquendi et Tacendi of Albertano de Brescia, and from other sources. References for particular passages are given below.

The Manciple's Prologue

2 Bobbe-up-and-down, usually identified with Harbledown (spelled also Herbaldoun and Hebbadonne). For references to this place in early accounts of journeys to Canterbury see Furnivall, Temp Pref to Six-Text edn, Ch Soc, 1868, pp 31, 124, 127, 131. Another identification, with Up-and-Down Field, in Thannington, was proposed by J M Cowper, Athen, 1868, II, 886.

5 Dun, like Bayard, was a general name for a horse. The reference here is to a rural game, described in Brand's Popular Antiquities, ed Hazlitt, London, 1870, II, 308 f, and in Nares' Glossary, London, 1822, s v Dun. A heavy log was brought into a room, and the cry was raised "Dun is in the mire," the horse is stuck in the mud. Then two members of the company would try to move the log, and if they failed, the rest, one after another, would come to their aid. A number of allusions to the game are noted by Skeat Cf Haecckel, p 50, no 180.

9 for cokkes bones, a corruption of the oath "for Goddes bones." Cf Pars Prol, X, 29.

12 Do hym come forth, make him come forth.

14 a botel hey, a small bundle of hay, here a symbol of worthlessness. For the construction, compare a barel ale, Mk Prol, VII, 1893, also galon wyn, l 24, below.

18 queue, quean, wench (AS "cwene").

23 "I had rather sleep (sleep, infin) than (have) the best gallon of wine in Cheapside."

25 ff For evidence that the enmity of coks and manciples was traditional see F Tupper, Types of Society, New York, 1926, p 100.

29 as now, for the present. On the so-called pleonastic as see Gen Prol, I, 462, n.

33 nat wel disposed, i e, indisposed in health.

38 A curse, apparently with reference to the belief that the devil entered through the open mouth. See Angl Beibl XIII, 306 for a story of a lad who was held to be possessed. He had the habit of keeping his mouth open, and the women said he did so in order that the Devil might easily pass in and out.

42 atte fan at the vane of the quintain. On the game see Nares' Glossary, s.v. Quintain, and Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, ed Hone, London, 1876, pp 182 ff (bk iii, ch 2), also the notes on Ben Jonson's Love's Welcome at Welbeck, ed Cunningham, London, 1875, VIII, 125, 132. The vane or board was at one end of a cross-bar, which swung round on a pivot. At the other end hung a bag or a club. The joustler had to strike the fan and avoid the stroke of the bag.

44 wyn ape ape-wine. The different stages of drunkenness, or its effects upon different men, were compared to various animals. According to the Kalendrier et Compost des Bergiers, (Troyes [1480?]) facsimile reprint, Paris, 1925, sig F, xlf), the choleric man has "vin de lyon", the sanguine, "vin de cunge", the phlegmatic, "vin de mouton", and the melancholic, "vin de pourceau". Another tradition, found earliest in Rabbinical literature, says that when a man begins to drink he is like the lamb, then he becomes successively like the lion, the ape, and the sow. A number of references on the subject are collected in Skeat's note, and to them may be added the tractate De Generibus Ebricosorum et Ebrietate Vitanda, printed in Zarncke's Deutschen Universitäten, Leipzig, 1857, I, 116 ff. Classification in the last named text is into "ebrietates asmae," "cannina," "ebriu ut oves," "ut vituli et simiae," "sues."

The cook is satirically described as ape-drunk. Instead of being foolishly playful, he is really surly and dull.

50 chypachee, exploit of horsemanship. Miss Rickert, noting the possibility that the cook's name was Roger Knight, has suggested that chypachee may be one of the few cases of word-play in Chaucer. See TLS, 1932, p 761.

51 "Alas that he did not stick to his ladle!"

57 domnacrown, a common term in both physiology and astrology. See KnT, I, 2749 ff, and n.

72 Reclayme, a technical term, meaning to bring back a hawk by holding out, a lure.

85 if I may, if I have power (to make him). On the formula see ML Intro, II, 89, n.

90 pouped, blown. There is a play here upon the double meaning of horn, drinking horn and wind instrument.

The Manciple's Tale

105 Chaucer may have got his idea of Phoebus' life on earth from two or three passages in Ovid Ars Amat, II, 239-40, Met, I, 438 ff, II, 679 ff.

109 Phytoun, the Python. See Ovid, Met, I, 438 ff.

116 Amphoun, Amphion. Cf MerchT, IV, 1716, and n. The story of Amphion was so familiar that no particular source need be assumed for it. Passages which Chaucer may have known are Horace, Ars Poetica, 394 ff, Statius, Thebaid, I, 9 ff, Boccaccio, De Gen Deorum, v, 30.

133 Ovid likens the crow to doves, geese, and swans. Chaucer and Gower mention only the swan.

139 Coronis of Larissa, according to Ovid. 143 ff. The sentiment here expressed was a commonplace in literature and popular proverbs. Cf the parallels cited in WB Prol, III, 357-61, n. But the present passage, as indicated by a marginal note in MS Hg, is based upon the Liber Aureolus de Nuptus of Theophrastus (quoted in Jerome, Adversus Jovinianum, I, 47, Migne, Pat Lat, XXIII, 277). On Chaucer's other use of this work see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the WB Prol.

160 ff. Cf RR, 14027-30, which is preceded by the illustration of the caged bird (II 13941-58). Chaucer doubtless also had in mind Horace, Epist, I, 10, 24, on which Jean de Meun comments. It is quoted again in John of Salisbury's Polycraticus, III, 8 (ed. Webb, Oxford, 1909, I, 191). For a similar idea compare further LGW, 2446 ff, Tr, I, 218 ff.

163 ff. The illustration by the caged bird is found in Boethius as well as in the Roman de la Rose. Chaucer employed it again in the Squire's Tale (V, 610 ff), where he clearly followed Boethius, here in the Manciple's Tale, however, he seems rather to have used the French version. Compare Angl, XIV, 261 f, for a chronological theory.

175 ff. The parallels of the cat and the she-wolf are from RR, 14039-52, 7761-66. For further information on this animal love see O F Emerson, Rom Rev, XIII, 146 f.

183 vleyms, properly the genitive of vleyem, though it came to be felt as an adjective and developed the adverb vleymsly (Parst, X, 154).

187 by, with reference to.

193 with meschance, a mild curse.

195 sowneth into, is consonant with. See Gen Prol, I, 307, and n.

207-08. Cf Gen Prol, I 742, n.

210-37. With the Manciple's excuse Fansler (p 222) compares that of Reason, RR, 6987-7184.

226 This anecdote about Alexander was familiar. See Cicero, De Republica, III, 12, St Augustine, De Civ Dei, IV, c 4, Gesta Romanorum, c 146, John of Salisbury, Polycraticus, III, 14 (ed. Webb, Oxford, 1909, I, 224 f), Higden, Polychronicon, III, 422 (Rolls Series).

235 tectueel, familiar with texts, learned in the authorities.

258 scdde tokenes, sure signs.

265 Both Chaucer and Gower omit the pathetic circumstances related by Ovid, that Coronis begs Phoebus not to slay her unborn child

279 trouble wit, troubled, clouded mind
With the whole passage on ire compare
Parst, X, 537 ff, and SumT, III, 2005 ff

292 ff There is a whole class of tales, known to folk-loreists as "les pourquois," which account similarly for the appearance or other characteristics of animals

301 Cf PF, 363

307 which, to whom

314 f Prov xxi, 23

317 With this formula of WP Prol, III, 376

318 My sone The repetition of this form of address though appropriate enough to the Manciple's dame, was perhaps actually due in part to its recurrence in the Proverbs of Solomon (cf xmii, 15, 19, 26)

318 ff The counsels which follow are mostly familiar or proverbial, and in several cases of biblical origin. Koepfel (Herrig's Arch, LXXXVI, 44 ff) argued that Chaucer's immediate source here was the De Arte Loquendi et Tacendi of Albertano of Brescia, in which nearly all the ideas and some of the exact quotations are found. But his parallels are widely scattered in Albertano and are not always close to Chaucer. Dr Fansler, who questions the influence of Albertano, cites (p 201 f) alternative passages from RR. The more important parallels are noted below. References to Albertano are to the ed of Thor Sundby, in Brunetto Latino Levenet og Skrifter, Copenhagen, 1869, pp lxxxv-cxx

320 Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 52

325-28 Cf Dionysius Cato (1, 12) "Nam nulli tacuisse nocet, nocet esse locutum" (quoted by Albertano, p xcvi)

329 Cf RR, 7037 ff Albertano, p cx, is not so close

332 f Cf Dionysius Cato (1, 3) "Virtutem primam esse puto, conspescere linguam" (quoted by Albertano, p xcvi), also RR, 12179 ff, and Tr, iii, 294

335 ff Cf Albertano, p cxv

338 Prov x, 19 (quoted by Albertano, p cxv)

340 Ps lvii, 4

343 Prov vi, 17

345 Cf Prov x, 19, and 31, xvii, 20, xxvi, 28

Among passages on the subject in the Psalms, Skeat notes Ps x, 7, xii, 3, iii, 2, lxxv, 3-8, cxx, 2-3. By Senekke is probably meant Seneca's treatise De Ira used by Chaucer in the Summoner's Tale (III, 2018 ff). But, as Skeat notes, Senek is often used in the Melibeie for the Sententiae of Publilius Syrus 350 For parallels to the proverb, "of litle medlyng cometh rest," see Skeat, EE Prov, p 124, no 290, and H E Rollins, ed Paradise of Dainty Devices, Harv Univ Press, 1927, p 251. The Flemish form has not been identified. For a similar reference, also unexplained, see the Ck Prol, I, 4357

355 ff Another commonplace. Cf Albertano, p xcvi (quoting Horace, Epist 1, 18, 71), RR, 16545 f, Haeckel, p 53

357 Koepfel and Skeat compare Albertano p cvi (not quite parallel)

359 Cf Dionysius Cato (1, 12) "Rumores fuge, neu studeas novus auctor haberi"

FRAGMENT X

Fragment X, which is regularly the final fragment in the MSS, comprises the Parson's Prologue and Tale, and the author's Retraction. The Parson's Prologue seems to be perfectly linked by its first line to the Manciple's Tale which precedes, and Fragments IX and X might consequently be regarded as a single fragment. But there is some doubt about the reading Manciple in l 1. In the Hengwrt MS the word is written over an erasure, and in MS Christ Church the Yeoman is named instead, and his tale precedes. Possibly Chaucer left the space blank, and the Manciple's name was inserted by the scribe or editor who finally combined the fragments. Aside from the questionable reading in l 1, there is reason to doubt whether Chaucer meant Fragment X to follow as it stands. The Manciple's Tale was begun in the morning (IX, 16), and cannot have lasted till four in the afternoon (X, 2, ff). Chaucer must have planned other stories for the interval, perhaps one by the Cook, whose place the Manciple generously took for the moment, possibly, as Mr Hinckley has suggested to the editor, one in alternative verse, which would have given special point to the Parson's remark in l 43. But the Parson's reference to alteration was natural enough without this explanation. Skeat held that Chaucer wished to recognize the Vision of Piers the Plowman.

The Parson's Prologue

1 Manciple On the reading, see the introductory note just preceding

2 south lync The altitude of the sun was 29°, which means, for April 20th that the time was about 4 P M. With the sun at that angle an object six feet high would cast a shadow eleven feet long. For the same method of calculating time, see also ML Prol, II, 7 ff

10 The Moon's exaltation was Taurus, whereas Libra was the exaltation of Saturn. Since Libra would be actually ascending at the time indicated, this must be the sign intended. Chaucer either forgot his astrology for the moment, or confused the "exaltation" with the "face" of the Moon, which was the first ten degrees of Libra. For the reading in mene Libra, see the Textual Notes. Skeat was apparently right in rejecting it, and with it the calculations of the date of CT which had been based upon it See his notes, p 445, also Wells, p 681

16 Whatever tales were still to be written, Chaucer apparently intended the Parson's to be either the last on the journey to Canterbury, or the last on the return to Southwark For the query whether it was perhaps to be saved for the latter place see Manly p 655, and of the suggestion that the Manciple's Tale was also meant for the return from Canterbury, in the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on Fragment IX

29 for cokkes bones, see Manc Prol, IX, 9, n

32 I Tim 1, 4, iv, 7, II Tim iv, 4

39 The conjunction that is occasionally employed in Mid Eng to repeat of, when, as etc See ParsT, X 740 PF, 312, Bo, 1, m 3, S, and of similar uses of Fr "que"

42 The alliterative verse of Chaucer's century was written mainly in the Northern and West Midland dialects Hence a southern man could not be expected to be familiar with it

43 geeste, the usual sense is "to tell a tale, a geste" Skeat remarks that it has here no reference to the form of the story But in the Prol Mel (VII, 933) the corresponding noun seems to designate a form of writing distinct from either prose or rime It looks as if Chaucer applied the term especially to alliteration, and Skeat himself notes that one important alliterative poem bore the title "Gest Hystonale" (of Troy)

The nonsense-words rum-ram-ruf, which here simply indicate the consonantal repetition, were current in both French and English in similar uses For examples see Skeat's note

49 See, for the same idea, the opening paragraph of the ParsT Miss K O Petersen The Sources of the Parson's Tale, Radcliffe College Monograph No 12, Boston, 1901, p 3, n 5, compares also the last chapter of L'Ymage du Monde, by St Pierre de Luxembourg

51 See Rev xv, 2

57 textuel learned in the texts, hence exact, accurate Cf MancT, IX, 316

58 sentence, substance, essential meaning For the same distinction see the Prol Mel, VII, 947

67 hadde the wordes, was the spokesman (Fr "avoit les paroles")

The Parson's Tale

The Parson's Tale is a sermon on Penitence, in which is embodied a long treatise, originally separate, on the Deadly Sins Its authorship has been much disputed, some critics denying it to Chaucer altogether, and others maintaining that it is heavily interpolated Both style and subject-matter, in places, have been suspected as un-Chaucerian According to one theory, developed in an elaborate essay by H Simon, the original tale was a Wychfite treatise to which orthodox additions were made in the first decade of the fifteenth century By other scholars other methods have been used for detecting supposed interpolations But in spite of all their attacks, present opinion is decidedly in favor of the authenticity of the whole work The supposition that Chaucer was a Wychfite and meant the Parson to represent Wychf or one of his followers, is now generally abandoned (See the note on the Parson in the Explanatory Notes on the Gen Prol) Many portions of the tale which were suspected to be interpolations have been found to correspond to passages in texts which presumably represent Chaucer's source And although the treatise is undeniably dull, as compared with Chaucer's original tales in verse, it nevertheless contains many characteristically Chaucerian terms of expression Moreover Chaucer appears to have used in his recognized works numerous passages of the tale For a full discussion of the question of authorship and interpolation, with a digest of earlier opinions, see H Spies, Festschrift für L Morsbach, Halle, 1913, pp 626 ff Simon's essay, Chaucer a Wychfite, is published in the Chaucer Society Essays, Pt II, 1876, and a dissertation of W Eilers, supporting a different theory of interpolation, was translated and printed in the same series of Essays, Pt v, 1884 The principle arguments before Spies, in defense of the unity and authenticity of the tale were those of Furnivall, Trifol Forewords Ch Soc, 1871, p 113, Koch, Angl, II, 540 ff, V, Anz, 130 ff, Herrig's Arch, LXIX, 464, and Lutbit, 1885, Sp 326 and Koepfel, Herrig's Arch, LXXXVII, 33 ff

Chaucer's immediate source has not been found It was long supposed that he derived the material on the Deadly Sins from the Somme des Vices et des Vertus of Frère Lorens But that portion of the treatise is now held to come from an untraced version of the Summa seu Tractatus de Viciis, of Guilielmus Peraldus (before 1261), and the sermon on Penitence, from some version of Raymond of Pennaforte's Summa Casuum Poenitentiae (before 1243) See Miss Petersen, Sources of the ParsT, Spies, p 647, and Koepfel, Herrig's Arch, LXXXVII 47 ff (where it is argued, from certain parallel passages, that Chaucer also made some use of Frère Lorens) For a detailed comparison of Chaucer's treatise with that of Frère Lorens, see Eilers A list of related texts is given by Miss Petersen, p 80, n 1 See also, on one Middle English analogue, the Cleynsng of Mannes Sowle (in MS Bod 923), M H Liddell, in An English Miscellany presented to Dr Furnivall, Oxford, 1901, pp 255 ff, and Spies, Neue Philologische Rundschau 1902, pp 115 ff On Gaytringe's Sermon on Shrift, see F Tupper, MLN XXX, 11, and on still another similar treatise (in MS Bod 90), see Liddell, Acad, XLIX, 447, 509

Professor Tupper's theory that Chaucer meant the Canterbury Tales as a whole to be a more or less systematic exposition of the Seven Deadly Sins has been discussed in the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the CT. It does not derive any strong support from parallels between the Parson's Tale and those of the other pilgrims.

Since the exact original of the Parson's Tale is unknown, the relation of this text to its sources cannot be traced in detail, and the meaning of some passages cannot be explained to complete satisfaction. But account is taken in the following notes of the parallels pointed out by Miss Petersen and by Spies. References are also given, where the editor found it possible, to the ultimate source of quotations from the Bible and other authors, and to significant parallel passages in Chaucer's other works. Most of this material was of course brought together by Skeat and his predecessors. Miss G. W. Landrum, in an unpublished Radcliffe dissertation on Chaucer's Use of the Vulgate, has pointed out a number of biblical quotations where Chaucer is closer to the original text than the intermediate sources he is supposed to have followed. In the following notes references are not always given for familiar biblical persons and events, of course such citations might be indefinitely multiplied. Unless otherwise noted references are to the English Authorized Version.

Whether Chaucer was the first to bring together the Sermon and the Treatise on the Sins or found them already combined in his source, has not been proved. Miss Petersen expressed the latter opinion (p. 80). Koepfel (Herrig's Arch., LXXXVII, 48), and Spies (p. 720) both argue that Chaucer made the combination. The language of Chaucer's source or sources, is also uncertain. Miss Petersen says "perhaps Latin." But certain indications — adjectival plurals in -s, adjectives placed after nouns, the quotation in v. 248, for example — point rather to French.

The date of the tale is also undetermined. Skeat, Oxf. Ch., III, 503, put it before 1380 — along with the Melbeee. Koch (Chronol. of Chaucer's Writings, Ch. Soc., 1890, p. 79) and Ten Brink (Litgesch., II, 189 f.) assigned it to Chaucer's last years. For references to other estimates see Miss Hammond, p. 320. The question is bound up, of course, with that of Chaucer's exact relation to his sources. If he made his translation at one time and from a single source, the date was probably early. For many passages from the Treatise on Sins appear to have been used in tales generally assigned to the eighties. But if the two portions of the Parson's Tale came separately to Chaucer's hands, it is possible to assume, with Koepfel (p. 50), that he translated the Treatise on Sins early, and then wrote the Sermon on Penitence, in which he incorporated the older work, toward the end of his life. Positive evidence however, is lacking of date of composition even for the Sermon on Penitence.

For an analysis of the structure of the Parson's Tale showing its accordance with the principles of mediæval sermon writing, see C. O. Chapman, MLN, XLIII, 229 ff.

Verse numbers refer to the subdivisions (usually sentences or clauses) made in the Six-Text print and carried over to later editions.

Correspondence between the Tale and the Summa of Pennaforte, Miss Petersen points out (p. 3), "beginning with the first paragraph and runs on pretty consecutively, with the exception of the break at the digression on sin, almost to the end of the Tale."

The scripture text is from Jer. vi, 16 (Vulg.) 75 perisse, perhaps in the active sense, "destroy." The order of words is against Skeat's rendering, "that wishes no one to perish." But the reference is to II Pet. iii, 9 "nolens aliquos perire" of Ez. xvii, 23, 32 and xxxiii, 11, I Tim. ii, 4.

79 esprituels, the French plural in -s, which is rare in Chaucer's verse occurs frequently in Mel and Parst. This suggests that the direct source of the latter, as of the former, was French.

80 Cf. Parv. Prol., X, 49 ff.

82 whennes it is cleped Penitence not taken up in Chaucer's text, though treated regularly by Pennaforte.

84 See St. Ambrose, Sermo xxv, §1 (Migne, Pat. Lat. XVII, 655).

85 Skeat quotes a sentence with similar meaning from the passage of St. Ambrose just cited. But Pennaforte refers to St. Augustine.

89 Skeat cites St. Isidore, Sententiarum, lib. ii, c. 13 (Migne, Pat. Lat., LXXXIII, 615) — a passage which is not precisely parallel.

92 See St. Gregory, In Septem Psalmos Poenitentiales Expositio, Ps. xxvii, v. 8 (Migne, Pat. Lat., LXXXIX, 572).

93 Cf. PhysT, VI, 286.

96 ff. The firste accoun of Penitence (96) Another defeaute (99) The thridde defeaute (100).

The statement here is confusing, and Skeat suggested that the original must have described three actons of Penitence, and afterwards three defects. But no such lacuna is indicated by a comparison with Pennaforte's Latin. Pennaforte lists three actions of Penitence, and makes no mention of defects. "Una est, quae novum hominem parit, et fit ante baptismum. Altera vero poenitentia est, sive actio poenitentiae, quam quis post baptismum facit de mortalibus peccatis. Tertia est, quae fit de peccatis venialibus quotidianis."

97 See St. Augustine, Sermo cccii, c. 2 (Migne, Pat. Lat., XXXIX, 1537).

100 See St. Augustine, Epist. cclxv, §8 (Migne, Pat. Lat., XXXIII, 1089).

103 slaughtre of children, probably a reference to the accidental overlaying of them by nurses See v 575, below

105 naked, thinly clad

108 St John Chrysostom The exact passage is not identified Skeat quotes a reference to "confessio" and "cordus contritio" in the 20th Homily on Genesis, c iv (Migne, Pat Gr, LIII, 170)

112 ff The figure is not in Pennaforte But Miss Petersen compares Bonaventura, De Dieta Salutis, tit ii, De Poenitentia, and Spies (Morsbach Festschrift, p 664) refers to the Clensing of Mannes Sowle, described by Liddell, Furnivall Miscellany, p 265

115 Really the words of John the Baptist Matt iii, 8

116 Matt vii, 20, cf Haeckel, p 34, no 112

119 Prov xvi, 6

125 Ps cxix, 113

126 Dan iv, 10 ff

127 Cf Prov xxviii, 13

130 St Bernard of Clairvaux The quotation has not been identified Skeat compares Sermo xi, §5 (Migne, Pat Lat, CLXXXIII, 649)

134 Pennaforte has "Res dignas confusione agunt," and though he and Chaucer both cite Job, the reference seems to be really to Prov xii, 4 (Vulg)

135 Ezechie, Ezekiah. See Is xxxviii, 15

136 Rev ii, 5

138 Cf II Pet ii, 22

141 Ezek xx, 43

142 II Pet ii, 19 Both Chaucer and Pennaforte cite St Peter, but the words are closer to John viii, 34, to which there is a marginal reference in the Latin MS

143 Probably a reference to Job xli, 6

144 The quotation is not identified

145 Also unidentified it is attributed by Pennaforte simply to Philosphus

150 See St Augustine, Sermo ix § 16 (Migne, Pat Lat, XXXVIII, 87)

151 This sentence, as Miss Petersen notes, seems to be a part of the quotation Take reward of, have regard to

156 Prov xi, 22, cf WB Prol, III, 784, n

159 A marginal gloss in Pennaforte refers to Jerome, ad cap 7, Oseea Skeat refers to the Regula Monachorum, falsely attributed to St Jerome (Migne, Pat Lat, XXX, 319 ff)

162 Rom xiv 10

166 See St Bernard Sermo ad Prelatos in Conclio, §5 (Migne, Pat Lat, CLXXXIV, 1098)

168 Cf Prov i, 28

166 ff A number of parallels between the following passages and the Pricke of Conscience are noted by Miss Petersen (pp 12 ff)

169 From St Anselm, Meditatio Secunda (Migne, Pat Lat, CLVIII, 724) The paraphrase is loose at the end

174 Not identified in St Jerome, probably based ultimately upon Ps xcvi, 3, 4

175 ff Vv 175-230 deal with the pains of Hell They are not paralleled in Pennaforte Miss Petersen notes that the primary source of some of them is St Gregory's Moralia ix, c 63-66 (Migne, Pat Lat, LXXV, 910-18) There is a similar account in the Pricke of Conscience, ll 6552 ff, to which reference is given by Miss Petersen

176 Job x 20-22

180 at regard of, in comparison with

183 shal turne hym al to peyne, shall all turn to pain for him

186 ff agayn, agayns, over against in place of

189 I Sam ii, 30, not from Jeremiah

191 The reference is to Job xx, 25 "valent et venient super eum horribiles" (Vulg). Skeat notes that this is quoted in the Pricke of Conscience, l 8592, with "demonēs" supplied before "horribiles," also that Wyclif's version has "orrible fendis" defouled trampled upon

193 Ps lxxv, 6 (Vulg, somewhat expanded) oneden to, united to, centered upon

195 Deut xxxii, 24, 33

196 forther over, a frequent connective in the Tale On Chaucer's use of it see Spies, Morsbach Festschrift, p 719

198 Is xiv, 11

201 Micah vii, 6

202 flesshly, carnally

204 Ps x, 6 (Vulg)

208 Matt xii, 42, xxv, 30

209 Is xxiv, 9

210 Is lxvi, 24

211 Job x, 22

214 From St Gregory, Moralium, lib ix c 66 (Migne, Pat Lat, LXXV, 915)

216 Rev ix, 6

217 Cf "et nullus ordo," Job x, 22

220 Ps cvii, 34 (loosely quoted)

221 St Basil the Great, bishop of Caesarea (329-79) See his Homilies on the Psalms, on Ps xxviii, 7, § 6 (Migne, Pat Gr, XXIX, 293)

223 "sempiternus horror inhabitat," Job x, 22

227 Prov xi 7

229 Quotation unidentified Cf Eccl i, 18

230 The quotation from St Augustine is also unidentified

231 At this point Chaucer returns to the subject-matter of Pennaforte

236 Ezek xvii, 24

238 The reference to St Gregory has not been traced

248 Again quoted, as verse, in Fortune l

7 Its appearance here favors the supposition that Chaucer's original was in French

252 "to pay his debt with" On the order see Gen Prol, I, 791, n

253 The passage in St Bernard is unidentified It is also referred to in the Pricke of Conscience, 5653

256-82 This passage does not correspond exactly to anything in Pennaforte

256 This quotation has also not been traced

269 The quotation from St Augustine is not identified

273 Probably a reference to Ps lxxix, which was commonly applied to the sufferings of Christ

274 Quotation unidentified

281 Is lxx, 5

284 John xix, 19

286 Matt i, 21

287 Acts iv, 12

288 For the etymology compare Dan Michel, Ayenbite of Inwyt, ed Morris, EETS, 1866, p 118 It apparently rests upon association with Heb "netzer," branch, sprout, as in Is xi, 1, xiv, 19, lx, 21

289-90 Rev iii, 20

300 and nat repente, and not to repent (infinitive used coordinately with the noun repentance)

303 St Augustine, De Vera et Falsa Poenitentia, 24 (Migne, Pat Lat., XL, 1121)

307 Ps xxvii, 10

309 Ps xxxii, 5 Chaucer seems to be following Pennaforte's exact words "'Dixi,' id est, firmiter in animo proposui"

313 Cf Eph ii, 3 Miss Petersen notes that Pennaforte has at this point a column and a half of quotations not taken over by Chaucer

317 Chaucer omits the consideration of the second point whether it oghte nedes be doom or noon The discussion of the third point, whiche thynges been covenable to verray Confessoun, he defers until after a threefold digression on Sin, vv 321-981

320 and nocht awanite thee, and he must not boast The change of subject is confusing

321-981 The tract on Sin, which interrupts the course of the sermon on Penitence, falls into three parts (1) vv 321-86, a general introduction, which corresponds to scattered passages in Pennaforte (collected by Miss Petersen, p 34, n 2), (2) vv 387-955, the systematic account of the Seven Deadly Sins, based ultimately on Peraldus, and (3) vv 960-81 a discussion of the circumstances which aggravate Sin, expounded by Pennaforte as the fifth topic of Confession

322 Rom v, 12

325 Cf Gen iii, 1-7

331 Cf Pennaforte, quoted by Miss Petersen, p 30 He cites St Augustine

334 contract, contracted (short form of the participle)

336 Cf I John ii, 16, also Pennaforte, quoted by Miss Petersen, p 27

337-40 Skeat notes the close agreement with the Ninth of the Articles of Religion

342 Gal v, 17

343 II Cor xi, 25-27

344 Rom vii, 24

345 Cf St Jerome, Epistola xxx ad

Eustachium, De Virginitate, §7 (Migne, Pat Lat., XXII, 398)

348 James i, 14

349 I John i, 8

351 subyeccion, suggestion, i.e., temptation MSS En² Se La read suggestion But this was a recognized sense of the Lat "subiectio"

bellows

355 by the devel, concerning the Devil The source of this supposed utterance of Moses is unidentified

357 Cf v 331, above, and n

362-64 Miss Petersen (p 7, n 1) quotes a parallel passage from Pennaforte, based upon St Augustine The proverb occurs there in the form "Levia multa faciunt unum grande" Cf "Many littles make a muckle," Skeat, EE Prov., pp 124 f, no 292, Haeckel, p 14, no 45

368 Quotation not traced in St Augustine, other occurrences of it are noted by Miss Petersen, p 34, n 2

371-81 A close rendering of a passage of St Augustine cited by Pennaforte See Miss Petersen, p 34, n 2

376 Cf Matt xxv, 43

383 The quotation from St Augustine has not been traced For another occurrence of it see Miss Petersen, p 35, n

385-86 Cf Pennaforte, quoted by Miss Petersen, p 30

387-955 Correspondences between this section and the Tractatus de Viciis of Peraldus are given in parallel columns by Miss Petersen, pp 36 ff

387 sprynge, source (or perhaps sprynge(n), pl) If taken as a verb, sprynge(n) gives a sense opposite to the one expected

388 Cf Ecclus x, 15, quoted by Peraldus

390 The number of branches assigned to Pride varies considerably in different treatises See Miss Petersen's note, p 36, n 3, also Laddell, Acad, XLIX, 509

406 clappen as a mille, doubtless a stock comparison See CIT, IV, 1200

407 This reference to precedence seems not to occur in the recognized sources of the Parson's Tale Lowes (MP, VIII, 322 n) has pointed out the possibility that Chaucer had in mind Deschamps (Mirour de Mariage II 3376-81, 3292-93, 3305-07, 3311-20) In a matter of popular custom like this, however, it is hardly safe to assign a particular literary source Cf Gen Prol, I, 449 ff

Kisse pax, to kiss the "pax," a small piece of wood or metal used at the Mass for the "kiss of peace"

411 leafsel, arbor Cf RvT, I, 4061

413 Luke xvi, 19

414 See St Gregory, Homiliarum in Evangelia, ii, 40, §3 (Migne, Pat Lat., LXXXVI, 1305)

415 costlewe, costly For the suffix, cf dronkelewe, PardT, VI, 495, n

423-31 Chaucer's discussion here is more detailed than that of Peraldus Laddell

(Acad XLIX, 509) notes a parallel in this respect in the sermon in MS Bodl 90

427 fir of seint Antony, erysipelas, which St Anthony was supposed to cure Mr J U Nicolson (The Complete Works of Villon, tr., NY Y., 1931, pp 256 f) explains the name by the fact that the order of St Anthony in the Dauphine nursed the sick in an epidemic of the disease in the 13th century

429 honestete, decency, in vv 431, 436, it seems rather to mean "dignity"

434 Zech x 5

435 See Matt xxi, 7 The reference to the disciples' garments is not in Peraldus

440 hostilers, servants (ostlers), so perhaps also in Gen Prol, I, 241

442 Ps lv, 15

443 See Gen xxxi, xlvii, 7

445 The illustrations are not in Peraldus Wilde fir, some burning spirit, like the flaming brandy around Christmas pudding

452 delvernesse, "agilitas" (Peraldus), franchise 'libertas'

457 Cf Words of Host, VI, 299 f

459 Cf Gal v, 17

460 causeth ful ofte many a man to peryl, bringeth to peril The idiom seems not to be exactly paralleled elsewhere

461 ff For the argument of WBT, III, 1109 ff also Gentillesse

467-68 From Seneca, De Clementia, 1, 3, 3, and 1, 19 2, quoted by Peraldus

472 Cf Knt, I, 1255-56

473 Cf CIT, IV, 1000

475-83 There is no close agreement to be noted between the first six "remedia" of ParT, and the tract of Peraldus See Miss Petersen, p 45, n 3

483 to stonde to, to abide by

484 The philosophre is not identified For the quotation from St Augustine, see his treatise on Ps civ, 25 (Migne, Pat Lat., XXXVII, 1399) Cf also PhysT, VI, 114 ff

485 On the general conception of the sin against the Holy Ghost, cf Matt xii, 32

500 Ps xxxvii, 7

502 John xii, 4-6 (where the reference is not to the Magdalen, but to Mary, the sister of Martha)

504 Luke vii, 39

506 Peraldus cites Matt xx, 11 (Petersen, p 48)

512 Matt xxii 37 ff, Mark xii, 30 f

526 Matt v, 44

532 The speses of this paas, the kinds of this grade or degree

535 From St Augustine, De Civ Dei, bk xiv, c 15, §2 (Migne, Pat Lat., XLI, 424)

536 The philosophre not identified Skeat quotes Horace, Ep 1, 2, 62 "Ira furor brevis est" But neither this nor the passage from Peraldus cited by Miss Petersen (p 49) is quite parallel to Chaucer

537 trouble, troubled (adj.)

539 Eccl vii, 4 (Vulg) "Melior est ira risu"

540 Ps iv, 5 (Vulg)

544 Cf SumT, III 2005 ff

549-56 Not paralleled in Miss Petersen's citations from Peraldus

551 See St Isidore, Etymol, xvii, c 7 (Migne, Pat Lat., LXXXII 615) The story is told of the "juniper," which Isidore derives from the Gk νύψ, fire In v 552 the allusion is clearly to the kindling of the New Fire on Holy Saturday This was noted (as Professor Karl Young has brought to the editor's attention) by Mr J N Dalton, The Collegiate Church of Ottery St Mary, Cambridge, 1917, p 244 On the custom of kindling an Easter fire see J E Frazer, The Golden Bough, X (Balder the Beautiful, I), 3d ed., London, 1913, pp 120 ff

562 old wratthe, "via inveterata," ultimately from St Augustine, Sermo lviii, 7 (Migne, Pat Lat., XXXVIII, 397)

564 Cf SumT, III, 2009 ff

565 sixe, an error for three The reference is to I John ii, 15

566 Probably from Prov xxv, 18

568 Prov xxviii, 15

shepe, an unusual word glossed by either Chaucer or a scribe

569 Prov xxv, 21

570-79 Not closely paralleled in Peraldus

572 in his defendaunt, in his (own) defense The unusual construction suggests that Chaucer was following a French original ("en se defendant")

574 Num xxxv, 17

582 Ps cxlv, 9

588-90 Exod xx, 7 Matt v, 34-37

591 ff Cf ParT, VI, 472 ff, and n, 635, 651, 708

592 Jer iv, 2

593 Ecclus xxxii, 11

594-97 This passage again departs from Peraldus

597 Acts iv, 12

598 Phil ii, 10

599 Cf James ii, 19

601-07 Not paralleled in Peraldus

603 ff Cf ParT Prol, VI, 350

The references that follow are to various sorts of magic or divination Basins of water or swords were sometimes used instead of mirrors in catopromancy Circles were drawn on the ground, to confine the spirit invoked by sorcerers The use of fire gave its name to "pyromancy," that of the shoulder-bone to "spatulomancy" Divination by birds is the familiar Roman augury The commonest form of divination by beasts was by the inspection of its entrails after a sacrifice The use of lots (sort) was familiar in the Middle Ages On geomancie, divination by dots in the dust, see Knt, I, 2045, n Divination by dreams and by strange noises is still familiar References to these various practices are given by Skeat They are nearly all described in Brand's Popular Antiquities, (ed Hazlitt, London, 1870) See also W J Thoms, Folk Lore Record, I, 176-79

611 he loosely used for "a man," "the person implied" (in the preceding clause)

614 Prov xv, 29, is cited by Peraldus

617 Cf SumT, III, 2075 n, also the personal name Placebo in Mercht, IV 1476

619 I Cor vi, 10

620 Proverbial 'Curses, like chickens, come home to roost' Skeat notes Southey's use of it, in Greek, as a motto for the Curse of Kehama, of EE Prov p 125, no 293 Peraldus quotes Prov xxvi, 2, which was apparently interpreted in the same sense

623 Matt v, 22

627 Matt xv, 34, cf Haecckel, p 37, no 124

629 Prov xv, 4
Deslatae, lit unwashed foul (Fr "des-lavater"), used here to translate "immoderata")

630 The passage in St Augustine (also quoted by Peraldus) is not identified For the idea, cf WB Prol, III, 244 The second reference is to II Tim ii 24

631 Prov xxvii, 15 Cf Mel, VII, 1086, n

633 Prov xvii, 1 Cf Haecckel, p 9, no 29

634 Col iii, 18 Cf WB Prol, III, 160 f

636 Wine was considered an antidote to the poison of the toad

639 See II Sam xvii, 1

640 Cf Ecclesi xxvii, 29 (quoted by Peraldus) Fals lyyngye, evil liver This form (from "vivant"?) is perhaps another sign of a French original See the introductory note

642 Cf Eph ii, 14

643 is aboute to, sets out to, is on the point of 647 In Peraldus this idea is credited to St Jerome, without a particular reference

648 Cf Matt, xii, 36 (quoted by Peraldus)

649 Ecclesi v, 3

650 a philosophre, "quidam philosophus" in Peraldus, not identified

651 With the develes apes of Goddess apes, Tr, i, 913 deffendeth, forbids, see Eph v, 4

654-76 Not paralleled in Peraldus

657 Cf I Cor xiii, 4, 5 The reference in St Jerome has not been traced

658 The philosophre is unidentified

660 This reference has also not been traced Cf for the idea, Boethius, ii, pr 7, 63 ff

661 Matt. v, 9 Cf FranklT, V, 773 ff
The wise man, Dionysius Cato See the Disticha de Moribus, 1, 38 "Quem superare potes, interdum vince ferendo"

664 Prov xxx, 9

665 Matt xvii, 35

670 Skeat cites a story of similar purport from Seneca, De Ira, i, 15, 3 But Chaucer's anecdote is different

677-85 Only the introductory sentence corresponds to Peraldus

678 For the quotation from St Augustine see v 484, above, where it is applied more properly, to envy

679 Ecclesi ix, 10

680 Jer xiviii, 10 (where the Vulgate has "fraudentur" for necligently)

687 Probably a reference to Rev iii, 16

688 Cf Prov xviii, 9, xx, 4, xxi, 25

690 The reference to St Bernard has not been traced

692 Quotation from St Gregory also unidentified

694 Skeat compares St Augustine, De Natura et Gratia, c 35 (Migne, Pat Lat XLIV, 266), and Sermo cx, §3 (Migne, XXXVIII, 140)

698 seith "creant," surrenders owns himself beaten On creant, a cry for mercy, apparently meaning "entrusting oneself to the enemy," see Dugange, s v Recrédere, Godefroy s v Recrément, NED, s v Creant

700-01 Luke xv 7, 24

702-03 Luke xxiii, 42, 43

705 Matt vi, 7 John, xvi, 24

709 Prov viii, 17

710 With this and v 714 compare SecN Prol, VIII, 1-3

712 Ecclesi vii, 19 (Vulg)

714 Cf KnT, I, 1940, and n

716 Perhaps a reference to Matt xi, 12, and, for the words of David, Ps lxxviii, 5

721 It has been suggested that the newe shepherdes, who do not appear in Peraldus, as cited by Miss Petersen, may have been intended by Chaucer as a reference to the government being taken over by Gloucester in 1388

723 Skeat refers to St Bernard's Vitus Mystica, c xix, §66 (Migne, Pat Lat, CLXXXIV, 674-75) But the correspondence is not very close between that passage and the citation from St Bernard in Peraldus

725 II Cor vi, 10

728-37 Not paralleled in Peraldus, De Vicis But Miss Petersen compares his treatment of Fortitude in the Summa Virtutum, i, 4

734 arn, the Northern form of the plural (Mod Eng are), which is unusual in Chaucer

739 I Tim vi, 10 Cf Mel, VII, 1130, n

740 On the repetition of when, of, etc, by that see Pars Prol, X, 39, n

741 St Augustine, Enarratio in Psalmum, xxxi, part ii, §5 (Migne, Pat Lat, XXXVI, 260)

748 Eph v, 5

751 Ex xx, 3, 4

752 taylages, taxes (lit "taking by tally")
Carriage was a service of carrying, or a payment in lieu of the same Cf FrT, III, 1570
Amercementa, fines inflicted "at the mercy" of an affixor

753-74 Not paralleled in Peraldus With ideas on gentility of WBT, III, 1109-76

754 The reference should be to St Augustine's De Civ Dei, bk xix, c 15 (Migne, Pat Lat, XLI, 643)

- 755 Gen ix, 18-27 (not Gen v)
 759-63 From Seneca, Epist xlvii (loosely rendered) 762 Cf MLT, II, 1141, n
 766 Gen ix 26
 778 One that is superfluous, but the repetition is found in all the published MSS except Ha Compare v 941, below Perhaps correction should be made in both cases
 781 ff On Simon Magus see Acts viii, 17 ff 788 Damasie Pope Damasus I (336-84)
 Cf St Jerome, Contra Hierosolymitanum, §8 (Migne, Pat Lat., XXIII 361) 793 Cf PardT, VI, 590 ff
 794-803 Not in Peraldus
 797 See Dan xiii (Vulg.), or the apocryphal Book of Susannah 804-17 These verses have only a slight correspondence to Peraldus 819-20 From Phil ii, 18, 19 Cf PardT, VI, 505 ff, 529 ff
 822 Cf PardT, VI, 549, 558
 828 See St Gregory Moralium, Lib xxx, c xviii, §60 (Migne, Pat Lat., LXXVI, 556)
 831-35 Not paralleled in Peraldus
 831 Galen, Galen The references to him and to St Augustine have not been traced 837 ff Ex xx, 14, Lev xx, 10, xix, 20 (Vulg., "non morientur"), Deut xxii, 21, Lev xxi 9 839 See Gen xix, 24 f, Is xix, 18
 841 Rev xxi, 8
 842 ff See Matt xix, 5, Gen ii, 24, Eph v, 25, Ex xx, 17, Matt v, 28
 843-51, 853-64 Not paralleled in Peraldus
 844 The reference to St Augustine has not been traced 850 The reference to the prophete is unidentified 852 that oother, the second, for the first, see v 830 above 853 basilcock, the basilisk, or cockatrice, which was supposed to kill by a glance
 854 See Prov vi, 26-29, vii, 26, Eccles xii, 13, 14 xiii, 1, xxvi, 10, and Skeat, EE Prov., pp 125 f, no 294
 858 bushes, which seems to be the right reading, has no published authority before Tyrwhitt (MSS beautees, Thynne, benches)
 859 Cf MerchT, IV, 1839 ff
 861 Cf St Jerome, Contra Jovinianum, i, §11 (Migne, Pat Lat., XXIII, 226)
 864 Cf Mark ix, 44
 867 See Gal v, 19-21, Rev xxi, 8
 869 See Matt xii, 8 The states of virginity, widowhood, and matrimony were likened, respectively, to the bringing forth of fruit a hundredfold, sixtyfold, and thirtyfold Cf St Jerome, Contra Jovinianum, i, §3 (Migne, Pat Lat., XXIII, 213)
 The Latin citation at this point has been held to indicate that Chaucer's original was in Latin. But he may of course have found the words quoted in a French text
- 879 I Cor iii, 17
 880 f Gen xxxix, 8 9
 883 Cf Gen i, 28
 889 John viii, 11 (Vulg.)
 894 Cf SumT, III, 1869 ff
 895 II Cor xi, 14
 897-98 See I Sam ii, 12 (Vulg. "Liber Primus Regum") Belial is explained in Judges xix 22 (Vulg.), as meaning "absque iugo" Chaucer may have found this in French as "sans joug," and misinterpreted it as "sans jure" (Skeat) 900 mysterie office (from Lat. "ministerium"), in I Sam ii, 13 (Vulg.), the word is "officium"
 904 Cf St Jerome, Contra Jovinianum, i, §49 (Migne, Pat Lat., XXIII, 281)
 906 See Tobias vi, 17 (Vulg.)
 910 Cf Rom i, 26, 27
 911 Proverbial, see Skeat, EE Prov., p 126 no 295
 915-55 This last Remedium, unlike the other six, has a number of correspondences with Peraldus, as noted by Miss Petersen 918 Eph v, 32 (Vulg.), Gen ii, 24
 919 John ii, 1-11
 921 The reference to St Augustine has not been traced
 922 Eph v, 23 ff, I Cor xi, 3
 923-38 Not paralleled in Peraldus
 929 Eph v, 25
 930 I Pet iii, 1
 931 the decree, perhaps an untraced reference to the Decretals of Gratian 932 Perhaps a reference to I Pet iii, 3
 933 The passage in St Jerome has not been traced Perhaps the question about St John refers to Rev xvii, 4, xviii, 16
 934 See the ref to St Gregory in v 414 above
 941-50 Not paralleled in Peraldus
 947 Matt xxvi, 7, John xii, 3
 948 "She is the life of angels," i.e., she lives like them The phrase does not seem natural, and may be due to some misunderstanding of the source 955 The comparison to Samson, David, and Solomon occurs in both Peraldus and Frère Lorens 957 I lete to dwynes, of KnT, I, 1323, where the remark is dramatically more appropriate, though the Parson may mean by dwynes the authorities in theology, as distinguished from a humble priest like himself But Chaucer very likely wrote the passage without having him in mind The general sentiment reappears several times in Chaucer's works, and may be taken as a characteristic expression of the author Cf NPT, VII, 3240 ff., HF, 12 ff., 52 ff 960-81 This section, on the circumstances which aggravate Sin, corresponds to the fifth topic of Confession in the Summa of Raymond de Pennafort. (See the note to v 321, above.) Miss Petersen notes (p 35) that the substance of it is found in Frère Lorens and many other authors.

958 The passage in St Augustine has not been traced For other places where it is quoted see Miss Petersen p 35 n Against v 959 MS El has the marginal note "Memorandum mors intravit per fenestras"

971 eschew, reluctant (lit shy")

982 At this point Chaucer returns to the regular course of Pennaforte's treatise, taking up the third point mentioned in v 317

983 Ezechias, Hezekiah See Is xxxviii, 15

985 The reference to St Augustine is not identified Perhaps it should include the whole sentence

986 See Luke xviii, 13

988 I Pet v 6

994 Matt xvi, 75

996 Luke vii, 37

998 The comparison to the wound is not found at this point in Pennaforte, though he has it in another connection See Miss Petersen, p 26 She cites other parallels, on p 20 n 1

1000 Cf Luke xii, 46

1003-05 On certain additions to Pennaforte's discussion here and in vv 1008-11, see Miss Petersen, p 24, n

1003 Cf Mel, VII, 1054, and n

1005 Between vv 1005 and 1006 Pennaforte has a passage corresponding to vv 1025-27

1015 Caym, Cain see Gen iv, 14 On Judas, see Matt xxvii 5

1020 From St Augustine, Sermo clxxx, §4 (Migne, Pat Lat XXXVIII, 981)

1025-27 In Pennaforte the corresponding passage comes earlier Cf the note to v 1005, above

1026 The quotation from St Augustine is not identified

1028 The rubric Explicit secunda pars Penitencie also stands after v 386, before the digression on the Seven Deadly Sins But it is really in place here, after the conclusion of the third subdivision of Confession

1032 Cf Matt xxv, 40 ff

1036-37 Matt v, 14-16

1040-44 Not in Pennaforte Miss Petersen (p 28, n) cites several parallels 1043 Cf note to v 957, above In this case, of course, the Parson might naturally not include himself among maistres of theologie.

1047 The quotation from St Jerome has not been traced

1048 Matt xxvi, 41

1054 Col iii, 12

1057 Pennaforte also names "tumor" (drede) first and "pudor" (shame) second But he proceeds to treat them in the reversed order

1062 Cf Ps xlv, 20, 21 Heb iv, 13

1068 Cf ShapT, VII, 9, and MerchT, IV, 1315 There is perhaps an allusion to Job xiv, 2

1069 Cf St Gregory, Moralium, lb

xxiv, c 19, §36 (Migne, Pat Lat, LXXVI, 738)

1073 Skeat suggests emending seconde to same because the second kind of wanhope is discussed in v 1074 But the confusion seems to lie in Chaucer's relation to his source The seconde wanhope here corresponds to a second division of the first kind of despair ("desperatio venie") in Pennaforte With the second sentence of v 1073 compare Ps cm, 17 (cited by Pennaforte)

1076-80 The peroration is not in Pennaforte

Chaucer's Retraction

At the end of the Parson's Tale, in every MS which has that tale complete, stands the so-called Retraction of the author Its authenticity has been often questioned But it has good support in the MSS, and the testimony of Gascoigne, in his Dictionarium Theologicum (printed by J W Hales Athen, 1888, I, 404 f, and again in his Folia Litteraria New York, 1893, pp 110-11) shows that the story of Chaucer's death-bed repentance was believed in the fifteenth century Instances more or less parallel have been noted by Kittredge, MP, I, 12 f, Tatlock, PMLA, XXVIII, 521 ff, and Wells, p 747, and the list they give — which includes, among others, St Augustine, Bede, Geraldus Cambrensis, Jean de Meun, Sir Lewis Clifford, Spenser, Herrick, Dryden, Ruskin Ibsen, Tolstol — might be easily extended Henry Vaughan — while still young, to be sure — repented of the frivolous poetry of his earliest years In Chaucer's own age Boccaccio is said to have turned because of conviction of sin, from his licentious writing in Italian to the learned Latin treatises of his later years (See E Hutton, Giovanni Boccaccio, London, 1909 pp 198 ff) One other name may be added here because it is also that of a contemporary of Chaucer the Welsh poet, Llewelyn Goch, who repudiates in his Awdl i Dduw (Ode to God) his love-song to Lleucu Llwyd See the Myvyrian Archaeology of Wales, London, 1801-07, I, 534, ed Denbigh, London 1870, p 352 On the whole there is no sufficient reason for rejecting the Retraction For detailed discussion see the references given by Miss Hammond, pp 321-22, to which should be added H Spies, in the Tobler-Festschrift, Braunschweig, 1905, pp 383 ff Conjectures as to the time of the composition of the passage, and the manner of its insertion into the MSS, are discussed by Miss Hammond, pp 282 f

On the headings of the Retraction see the Textual Notes It has reference primarily, of course, to the Parson's Tale itself, described as this ltel tretys in v 1081 The passage from v 1084 to the middle of v 1090 has been suspected to be an interpolation, but may well enough have been inserted by Chaucer himself

1083 Cf II Tim iii, 16

1086 The book of the xxx Ladies, the Legend of Good Women Most MSS read xxx, see the Textual Notes Skeat emended to xxx, or nyctene, to accord with the facts The inaccuracy might be due to various causes and is surely not reason enough for rejecting Chaucer's authorship of the Retractation

1087 The book of the Leoun, now lost, usually held to have been a redaction of Machaut's Dit dou Lyon (Euvres, ed Hoepffner SATF II)

Professor Manly questions whether Chaucer would have been likely to translate that work, and even suggests that the Wife of Bath's query (III, 692), Who peynede the leoun, tel me who?, may have led somebody to infer that Chaucer wrote a book of this title Professor Brusendorff, who also doubted that Chaucer translated Machaut's poem suggested (p 429 f) that the work here referred to was a redaction of Deschamps's La Fiction, (or Le Dict) du Lyon (Euvres, SATF, VIII, 247 ff), a satire on the political situation in France about 1380-82 But the case for Machaut's Dit dou Lyon has been reasonably restated by Langhans Angl, LII, 113 ff Chaucer gives evidence, in the Book of the Duchess and the Troilus, of having known the Dit, and if he made a version of it he would have been likely to include it among the love-poems repudiated in the Retractation

1092 The full form of the invocation is, "Qui cum Patre et Spiritu Sancto vivit et regnat in saecula saeculorum"

THE BOOK OF THE DUCHESS

Although the Book of the Duchess is not assigned to Chaucer by any of the copyists its authenticity is sufficiently attested by LGW (Profl F, 418, Profl G 406), and the Prologue to Bk 1 of Lydgate's Falls of Princes The Man of Law also, in the introduction to his Tale (II, 57), says of Chaucer, In youthe he made of Ceyx and Alcione, having reference, apparently, to the passage in BD about Ceyx and Alcione It is possible, however, that the episode was originally treated in an independent poem

A note, said to be in the hand of John Stow, in the Fairfax MS, declares that Chaucer wrote the Book of the Duchess at the request of the Duke of Lancaster, "pitiously complaynyng the deathe of the sayd dutchesse blanche" Blanche of Lancaster, the first wife of John of Gaunt, died Sept 12, 1369, and the poem, if it is an elegy upon her, was probably written soon after that date Lancaster was remarried in 1372 For an argument against Stow's interpretation, see Langhans, Untersuchungen, pp 280 ff, and Angl LI, 350 Although there are difficulties in the way of the application to John of Gaunt, still the traditional view is probably right

Opinions differ as to the presence of autobiographical material in the Book of the Duchess It is hardly possible that the whole poem refers, as Langhans maintains, to Chaucer's unsuccessful love for a lady of high rank But certain references in the poem (ll 30 ff), taken together with the Complaint to Pety, have often been interpreted as evidence of a long and hopeless love on the part of the poet See Furnvall, Trial Forewords, pp 35 ff, Ten Brink, Geschichte der Eng Lit II (2d ed, Strassburg, 1912), 49 f According to another theory, proposed by Fleay (Guide to Chaucer and Spenser, London, 1877, pp 36-37), Chaucer's eight-year sickness was his unhappy married life But in view of the conventional character of the passages in question their autobiographical value is very dubious See the note to l 30 below, and cf Lounsbury, Studies, I, 211 ff, and Sypherd, MLN, XX, 240 ff

The literary influences behind the Book of the Duchess are almost wholly French Parallels with the Roman de la Rose and with poems of Machaut and Froissart have long been recognized Although the opinion expressed by Sandras in his Étude sur Chaucer, Paris, 1859, that Chaucer's poem is a servile imitation of Machaut's Dit de la Fontaine Amoureuse, is badly mistaken, yet the Dit may have furnished some hints for the general situation, and it apparently served, beside Ovid, as a subsidiary source for the Alcione episode Chaucer's especial indebtedness to Machaut's Jgement dou Roy de Behaigne has been shown in detail See, besides Skeat's introduction and notes, Max Lange, Untersuchungen über Chaucers Boke of the Duchesse, Halle, 1883, G L Kittredge in Est, XXVI, 321 ff, MP, VII, 465 ff, and PMLA, XXX, 1 ff, and Miss Anna T Kitchel, Chaucer and Machaut's Dit de la Fontaine Amoureuse, Vassar Medieval Studies, New Haven, 1923, pp 219 ff Resemblances between the Book of the Duchess and Machaut's Dit dou Lyon are noted by Langhans, Angl, LII, 117 f

On the type of vision to which both the Book of the Duchess and the House of Fame belong, see W O Sypherd, Studies in Chaucer's Hous of Fame, Chaucer Soc, 1907, also MLN XXIV, 46, where special comparison is made of Le Songe Vert There is a full collection and classification of the dreams in Anglo-Saxon and Middle English literature in an unpublished Harvard doctoral dissertation (1921) by E C Ehrenspenger For a noteworthy critical discussion of the Book of the Duchess see G L Kittredge, Chaucer and his Poetry, Cambridge, 1915, ch 2 On the rhetorical artificiality of its structure see Manly, Chaucer and the Rhetoricians, Brit Acad 1926, pp 8 ff

1-15 Imitated from Froissart, Paradyz d'Amours, ll 1 ff (Œuvres, ed Scheler, Brussels, 1870, I) Froissart was long supposed to be the borrower For evidence that his poem preceded Chaucer's see Kittredge, EST, XXVI, 321 ff Professor Kittredge (p 336) also notes that the opening passage of the Paradyz was suggested by several passages in Machaut's Dit de la Fontaine Amoureuse

The conditions here described are just such as, according to mediæval theory or general human experience, would have led to dreams See Curry's remarks on the "somnium animale" pp 233 ff, also Kittredge, Chaucer and his Poetry, pp 58 ff

16-21 Cf the beginning of Machaut's first Complainte (Poesies Lyriques, ed Chichmaref, Paris, 1909, I, 241)

23 Cf Paradyz d'Amours, l 7

23-29 With these lines and l 42 of Machaut's Jugement dou Roy de Navarre, Œuvres, ed Hoepfner, SATF, I, Paris, 1908, ll 109-12

30 On the inferences which have been drawn from this and related passages as to an unfortunate love affair of Chaucer's youth, see the introductory note just above Since the situation and the sentiments are paralleled again and again in the French poets of the period, it is safest to regard the account as pure convention It is to be noted, however, that Chaucer assumes a different attitude in the Troilus, where he represents himself as an absolute outsider in the affairs of love

31 what me is, what the matter is with me

32 who aske (subjunctive), whoever may ask

39-43 The comparison of the lady to a physician is a commonplace Particular use may have been made here, however, of two passages in Machaut Remede de Fortune (Œuvres, SATF, II), ll 1467-69, and Dit dou Lyon ll 57-61 (Œuvres, SATF, II)

40 but that is dou i e no more of that

45 Cf Paradyz d'Amours, l 13

48 The rance was Ovid's Metamorphoses For the story of Ceyx and Alcione see xi, 410 ff

68 To tellen shortly The storm and shipwreck are described at length in Ovid (ll 480-557) Machaut does not mention them

73 telles The third singular present indicative in -es (properly of the Northern or West Midland dialect) occurs very rarely in Chaucer Here and in l 257 below it is clearly established by the rime

136 Go bet, literally, go better, i e, faster, a common phrase

142 Seys body the kyng, the body of Seys the king On the order of words see CIT, IV, 1170, n

153-65 This seems to combine Ovid (ll 592 ff) and Statius (Theb, x, 84 ff, 95 ff)

154 hys, the messenger in Ovid is Iris, Chaucer substitutes a male

155-56 Imitated from Machaut's Dit de la Fontaine Amoureuse, ll 591 f (Œuvres, SATF, III)

164 The phrase under a rokke corresponds to the MS variant reading "sub rupe" (in place of "sub nube") in Met, xi, 591 (See Shannon, Chaucer and the Rom Poets, Cambridge, Mass, 1929, pp 6 f)

167 Eclympasteyr In Froissart's Paradyz d'Amours (l 28) Enchmpostair is one of the sons of the "noble dieu dormant" The source of the name is uncertain Derivation has been suggested from Icelon platera (Gk πλαστρη) or from Icelon and Phobetora (corrupted into Pastora), which occur in Met, xi, 640

171 On Chaucer's references to the "pit of hell" see T Spencer, Speculum II, 179 ff They have sometimes been attributed to the influence of Dante, but the conception was familiar in the Middle Ages In addition to the examples given by Mr Spencer see those cited from Celtic literature in Rev Celt, XLVI, 138 ff

173 To envoie, in rivalry (Fr "à l'envi")

184 oon ye corresponds to Machaut's "l'un de ses yeus" (Fontaine Amoureuse, l 632), Ovid has "oculos" (l 619)

189-90 For this commonplace formula, which recurs in FranklT, V, 1465 f, 1593 f, PhysT, VI, 229 f, cf RR, 7244 f

222-23 Cf Paradyz d'Amours, ll 19-22

242-69 Chaucer seems to be following the Dit de la Fontaine Amoureuse (ll 807-10), where the poet promises the god a hat and a feather bed Cf also Paradyz d'Amours, ll 15-18 Froissart there prays to Morpheus, Juno, and Oleus, the last of whom may be represented by Chaucer's som wright elles

248 on ward, in his keeping, custody

255 cloth of Reynes, a kind of linen made at Rennes, in Brittany

272-75 Cf Paradyz d'Amours, ll 14, 31

282 The kynges meynynge Pharao, the dream of King Pharaoh For the idiom see l 142, and n, for the story of the dream see Gen xli

284 ff The reference to Macrobius is perhaps really second-hand and due to a similar citation in RR, 7-10 On the Somnium Scipionis, which was written by Cicero and edited by Macrobius, see PF, 31, n

291 ff The whole description at the beginning of the dream is largely indebted to the Roman de la Rose, and there is a kind of acknowledgment of this fact in ll 332-34 For particular resemblances of ll 291-92 with RR, 45-47, 88, 304-05 with RR, 705, 484-85, 306-08 with RR, 667-68, 309-11 with RR, 487-92, 318 with RR, 74 f, 101, 331-32 with RR, 20831-32, 339-43 with RR, 124-25 (though in this case the Dit du Roy de Behaigne, ll 13-14, is closer)

304 som is probably singular, as often elsewhere in this construction Cf KnT, I, 3031-32

309 entewmes, usually taken as a noun "tunes" Emerson suggested (PQ, II S1 f) that it is the Northern form of the verb, 3 sg pr, substituted for the preterite in rime For other Northern forms see ll 73, 257

310 "Certainly even to gain the town of Tunis I would not have given up hearing them sing" The choice of Tunis was probably due to the rime

326 f In mentioning these subjects related to the tale of Troy Chaucer doubtless had in mind either Benoit or Guido delle Colonne probably the former The Roman of the Rose does not associate Medea with the Trojan story

333 bothe text and glose, perhaps simply a formula meaning "the whole story" Possibly as Professor Rand has suggested to the editor, Chaucer may have had in mind some manuscript in which both text and commentary were illustrated by pictures An excellent specimen of such illustration is the famous Book Morahsee, of which a "reproduction integrale" was published in Paris, 1911-27 (Soc Française de Reproductions de MSS à Peintures) No similar MS of the Roman of the Rose is known

334 On the Roman of la Rose see the introduction to the Romaunt

348 f With this scene Professor Lowes (PMLA, XIX, 648) compares the huntsmen of the god of Love in the Paradys d'Amours, ll 916 f

Chaucer's description of the hunt here and in ll 1311 ff is quite in accord with the actual practice of his age For full explanations of the technical terms see O F Emerson, Rom Rev, XIII, 115 ff

351 slee with strengthe, kill in regular chase with horses and hounds (Fr "à force")

353 embosed become exhausted (lit "covered with bosses or flecks of foam") See Emerson, pp 117 ff

365 th' emperour Octovien, probably the Roman emperor Octavian, a favorite figure in the Charlemagne romances, who married Florence, daughter of Dagobert, king of France There is a Middle English romance Octovian (or Octavian Imperator), ed Sarrazin, Heilbronn, 1885

It has been held that the character introduced here is a flattering allegory of Edward III Professor Cook, who accepts this application, takes the comparison to have been with the historical Octavianus, the Emperor Augustus See Trans Conn Acad, XXIII, 31 f

Professor S P Damon has suggested orally to the editor that both Octavian and the Black Knight, into whom he is changed by dream substitution, stand for John of Gaunt Thus Chaucer begins by complimenting the Duke as a warrior, and proceeds to console him for his bereavement This interpretation rests upon Mr Damon's opinion that the poem represents an actual dream of Chaucer's In view of the prevalence of the dream convention such an inference is very dubious But an examination of the poems of the type to determine their agreement with the facts of dream psychology might yield interesting results The Book of the Duchess Mr Damon argues has all the natural features of a dream Professor Kittredge (Chaucer and his Poetry, pp 67 ff) has also called attention to this aspect of the poem

370 A goddys half, in good tyme! Phrases employed in the expression of a favorable wish or good omen

384 on a defawte ysalle, checked by the loss of the scent

386 A forloyn, lit "very far off", a signal that the dogs were far off from the game It would be followed by the coupling of the hounds

387 I was go walked The construction of walked appears to correspond to that of the past participle in German ("kam gelaufen," etc) But there may be involved a confusion with nouns in -ed, earlier -eth, -ath See the note on a-blakeberyed, Paro Prol, VI, 406

388-97 The description of the lost whp contains resemblances to that of the little dog, in Machaut's Dit du Roy de Behaigne ll 1204 ff, and that of the lion who is compared to a dog in the Dit dou Lyon, ll 325 ff

390 houde no good, did not know any good or advantage, hence, knew not what to do On this recurring idiom of ML Epil, II, 1169, n

402-03 These lines are perhaps reminiscent of RR 8411 ff, though Flora and Zephyrus were naturally associated See LGIV Prol F, 171, for other resemblances with RR of ll 405-09 with RR, 8427 ff, 410-15 with RR, 53 ff (also with LGW Prol F 125 ff), 416-42 with RR, 1361-82, 12790-96

408 swiche seven, seven times as many On the idiom see Klaeber, MLN, XVII, 323 f

419-22 From RR, 1367-69 For a different rendering see Rom, 1391-94

435 Argus, more commonly called Argus, which is in turn an Old French adaptation of the Arabic surname Al-Khwārizmī (native of Khwārizm) of the mathematician Abū 'Abdallāh Muhammad ibn Mūsā See MuIT, I, 3210, n The form "Argus" occurs in RR, 13731 (Michel), a passage which Chaucer may have had in mind

438 ken, i.e., kin, mankind The form ken (rime with ten) is properly Kentish

442 From this point forward Chaucer draws largely, as Professor Kittredge has shown (MP, VII, 465 ff, PMLA, XXX, 7 ff), on several poems of Machaut, and especially on the Jugement dou Roy de Behaigne With the complaint of Behaigne 193-200 There the lady faints after her lament (208 ff, as the Black Knight comes near doing (ll 487 ff)

445 f The young knight, according to the usual interpretation of the poem, represents John of Gaunt, who was, however, twenty-nine years old when his wife died. This discrepancy in age is used by Professor Langhans (Untersuchungen zu Chaucer, Halle, 1918, pp 281 ff) as an argument against the identification. It is possible that four and twenty is a scribal error, perhaps due to the omission of v in xxviij.

490 pure, very, as in Knt, I, 1279 Cf also ll 583, 1212 below

502-04 Cf Roy de Behaigne, ll 56 ff

512 Professor Kittredge has suggested (in an unpublished note) that Chaucer's information about Pan, the god of kynde, came ultimately from Servius, who calls Pan "totius Naturae deus" (Comm on Virgil, Ecl u 31). The statements of Servius, as he shows, are repeated, with variations, by Isidore, Etym, viii, 11, 81-83 (Migne, Pat Lat, LXXXII, 323), Vincent of Beauvais Spec Doctrinale, xvii, 10 (Douai 1624), and by several of the mythographers. See Bode, Scriptores Rerum Mythicarum, Cellis 1834, I, 40-41, 91, 200, and Van Staveren, Auctores Mythographi Latini, Leyden, 1742, pp 914 f.

519-25 Cf Roy de Behaigne ll 70 ff

526-28 "Yes, indeed, the amends are easily made, for none are really due"

526-66 These lines show resemblances to the Roy de Behaigne, ll 75-101

531 He made hyt nouthen tough ne queynte, he did not make it a matter of difficulty or elaborate formality. On this idiom see Gen Pro, I, 785, n.

568 The allusion is to Ovid's Remedia Amoris.

569 ff The music of Orpheus had power to bring rest to the tortured in the lower world. Cf Ovid, Met, x, 40 ff. Daedalus represents the skillful mechanic, his story is also told in Met, viii 183 ff. On Ypocras (Hippocrates) and Galyen see Gen Pro, I, 429, n.

583 Cf Roy de Behaigne, ll 196-97

589 Cesiphus, Sisyphus, mentioned along with Orpheus in Met, x, 44. But that lyeth in helle is applicable rather to Tityus, who is referred to (but not named) by Ovid in the same place. Perhaps Chaucer's memory was confused for the moment.

591-94 Possibly an echo of Rom, 333 ff

599-616 Apparently based upon the Roy de Behaigne, ll 177-87 (Œuvres, SATF, I), which may in turn have been suggested by R.R. 4293 ff. With l 600 of Machaut's Remede de Fortune, l 1198.

617-709 The trade against Fortune contains reminiscences of at least four of Machaut's poems, the Remede de Fortune, the Roy de Behaigne, the eighth Motet, and the Lay de Confort. Cf particularly the Remede de Fortune, ll 918, 1052-56, 1138, 1162, 1167-68, Behaigne, ll 1072-74, 1078-80, the eighth Motet (Poésies Lyriques, ad Chekemaref, Paris, 1909, II, 497 f) ll 5-9, 16-18, and Confort (Poésies Lyriques, II, 415), ll 10-13 (for the unusual remark, in ll 693 ff, that the planets and elements give the Black Knight a "gift of weeping"). The allegory of the game of chess is probably taken from R.R. 6620 ff. The figure from checkmating is also found in the Remede de Fortune, ll 1190-91. But such comparisons were common, cf, for example Rutebeuf's Miracle de Theophile, ll 1-8 (Œuvres, ed Jubinal, Paris, 1874-75, II, 231 f). With the figure of the scorpion, Kittredge (PMLA, XXX, 11), compares Machaut's ninth Motet (Poésies Lyriques, II, 500). See also R.R. 6744-46, MLT, II, 361, 404, and Mercht, IV, 2058-64.

628 f Cf R.R. 8907 ff

653 ff draughtes, moves at chess. Fers, properly "wise man counsellor" (Pers "ferzēn"), the piece next to the king, now called the queen, which appears to be the meaning here. In mediæval chess, as Mr D C McKenna has noted in an unpublished discussion of this passage, the queen did not have the importance that the piece has in the modern game. Chaucer may have had in mind the power of a real queen. The rules and problems of chess in the Middle Ages are treated by Mr H J R Murray, A History of Chess, Oxford, 1913.

660 The myd poynt of the chekker apparently refers to the four central squares of the board, where the checkmate often took place. See Murray, pp 605, 474.

661 poun errant, lit "traveling pawn." According to Mr Murray (p 751) the expression was frequently used for the mating pawn.

663 Athalus, Attalus III, Philometor, King of Pergamos, called in R.R. 6691 i, the inventor of chess. See Murray, p 502.

667 Pthagores, Pythagoras, called Pactagoras in l 1167.

699 f "There is nothing owing me in the way of sorrow"

707 Proverbial, cf Tr, u, 789, and n.

709 Tantale, Tantalus, who is mentioned along with Ixion and Sisyphus in Met, x, 41. Cf the note to l 589 above. Ixion, Tantalus, and Sisyphus are also named near together in R.R. 19279-99.

710-58 In the following conversation Chaucer made considerable use of the Roman de la Rose, cf, for example, ll 717-19 with R.R. 5847-56, 726-34 with R.R. 13174 ff (for the same stock examples), 735-37 with R.R. 1439 ff (= Rom. 1469 ff), 738-39 with R.R. 9203-06 (and 16677 ff).

722 ff ferses twelve, all the pieces except the King. Mr Murray (p 452) shows that by the mediæval rules "a game was won by checkmating the opponent's king, or by robbing or denuding him of his forces — an ending called Bare King."

735 Ecquo, Echo.

749-52 Cf Roy de Behaigne ll 253-56

759 ff The following account of the service of the God of Love is thoroughly conventional. It contains reminiscences of the Roy de Behaigne, ll 125-33, 261-73, the Remede de Fortune, ll 23-60, and RR, 1881-2022, 12889-92

797 John of Gaunt was only nineteen when he married Blanche

805 ff Cf Roy de Behaigne, ll 281 ff, Dit dou Vergier (Euvres, SATF, I), ll 155-58

813 Practically a translation of Machaut's eighth Motet, l 17

816-1040 For the long description of the lady Chaucer drew very largely upon the Roy de Behaigne, with frequent incidental use of the Remede de Fortune, and occasional reminiscences from the Lay de Confort and the Roman de la Rose. Even some of the most individualizing traits in the picture are paralleled in the French sources. Yet it is hard to believe that the passage does not contain real portrayal of the Duchess of Lancaster. Cf ll 817 ff with Behaigne 286 ff, 833-45 with Fortune 71-72, 95-99, 102-03, 197-99 (and also with RR, 1681-83), 844-45 with Confort 164-66, 848-74 with Behaigne 297-330, 871-72 with Rom 543 f and Behaigne 321-22, 904-06 with Behaigne 356-58 and Fortune 1629-30, 907-11 with Behaigne 397-403, 582, 912-13 with Behaigne 411-14, 918 with Behaigne 580-81, 919-37 with Fortune 217-38, 939-47 with Behaigne 361-63, 948-51 with Fortune 54-56, 952-60 with Behaigne 364-83, 966-74 with Fortune 167-74, 985-87 with Fortune 123-24, 1035-40 with Behaigne 143-53, 156-58

This mode of describing a lady feature by feature was conventional in mediæval love poetry. A rhetorician's specimen doubtless known to Chaucer was furnished by Geoffroi de Vinsauf, Poetra Nova, ll 563 ff (Falar, Les Arts Poétiques du XII^e et du XIII^e Siecle, Paris, 1924, pp 214 ff). For a number of other examples see Falar, pp 80 f, and Miss Hammond, Engl Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, pp 405, 452. Cf also, with regard to formal portraits, Tr, v, 799, n

824 the sterres seven. This phrase usually meant the planets, but since these have been mentioned just before, some other reference must have been intended, possibly the seven stars of the Ursa Major, or the Pleiades

831 "By Christ and the twelve Apostles"

893 "She was free in giving human affection where it could be reasonably and worthily bestowed" (lit "in reasonable cases that carry weight")

905 In the margin of the Fairfax MS beside this line, and also ll 942 and 948, is written, apparently by John Stow, the word "blanche," intended doubtless to identify the lady as the Duchess Blanche of Lancaster

945 f Cf Song of Songs vii, 4

963-65 For the figure of the torch, which was a common illustration, cf RR, 7410 ff

982 The soleyne femur. The ancient tradition about the Phoenix was of course familiar in both learned and popular writings of the Middle Ages. Passages which Chaucer may have had in mind are Met, xv, 392 ff, and RR, 15977 ff, both of which emphasize the solitariness of the bird. Cf also Gower's Balade no 35 (Works, ed Macaulay, Oxford, 1899-1902, I, 365 f)

1019 to holde in honde, to cajole, to put off with false promises. Cf Shakespeare's phrase "to bear in hand." See also MLT, II, 620, n

1021 in balauance, in suspense

1024 ff Cf, for the general tenor of this passage, the Dit dou Lyon, ll 1368 ff, RR, 17563 ff, and Gower's Conf Am, iv, 1615 ff. For illustrations of the young knight's wanderings see Lowes, Rom Rev, II, 121 ff

1028-29 The Drye Se, probably the Great Desert of Gobi in Central Asia, the Carrenar (or Carrenare), the Kara-Nor, or Black Lake on its eastern side. This region lay on a main trade route between China and the West. That it was known to mediæval Europeans is proved by the mention of it by Marco Polo (ed Yule, 3d ed, London, 1903, I, 196 ff). Chaucer and his contemporaries may have confused it with great shoals at the mouths of the Dwina and the Petchora in Russia, which bore similar names and lay along the course of another Asiatic trade route. On the whole subject see Lowes, MP, III, 1 ff, for other explanations, see pp 2-5

1054-74 With this list of worthies of the Remede de Fortune, ll 107 ff, and also Machaut's thirty-eighth Balade Notee (Poesies Lyriques, II, 560 f), and Behaigne, ll 421-25. The sentiment was a commonplace

1069 Antylegyus, a corruption of Antilogus (Antilochus), which is in turn a mistake for Archilochus. Achilles and Antilogus were slain by ambush in the temple of Apollo, whither they had resorted in order that Achilles might marry Polyxena. The plot was laid against them in revenge for the death of Hector and Troilus. This episode is briefly related by Dares, ch 34, but Chaucer may have got it rather from Benoît, Roman de Troie, ll 21838 ff (where Dares is cited), or from Joseph of Exeter, De Bello Trojano, vi, 402 ff. It is also in Guido delle Colonne (Strassburg, 1489, sig l 3, verso)

1070 On Dares Phrygius and his place in the history of the Trojan legend, see the introduction to the Troilus

1080-85 Probably from RR, 8605-12, where "Titus Livius" is cited by name Cf PhysT, VI, 1

1088 ff Cf Remede de Fortune, ll 64-65, 89-94, 135 ff, 295-302

1089 f The rime say (pret ind) and say (a clipped form of the infin) is very unusual in Chaucer. Possibly, as Skeat suggested, the former should be seye (pret subj), though the indicative seems more natural

1108-11 Cf Dit dou Lyon, ll 207-12

1115-25 Perhaps a development of Behaigne, ll 1140-47

1117 On Anthisophel see II Sam xvii. Antenor betrayed Troy by sending the Palladium to Ulysses Cf Tr, iv, 202 ff, Benoit, Roman de Troie, ll 24397 ff (where both Dares and Dictys are referred to), and Guido delle Colonne, Historia Trojana, Strassburg, 1489, sigg m l ff Genellou, the celebrated traitor of the Chanson de Roland See M&T, VII, 2375 ff, n Roland and Oliver, whose friendship was proverbial, were the most famous of Charlemagne's knights

1146-50 Cf Remede de Fortune, ll 357-66

1152-53 Cf RR, 1996-97 "Il est assez sires dou cors Qui a le cuer en sa comande" This is turned about in l 1154 "and if any one has that (his heart), a man may not escape"

1155-57 Cf Remede de Fortune, ll 401-03 The making of complaints in song was of course the regular procedure under such circumstances

1162 Tubal, an error for Jubal, who is called in Gen iv, 21, "the father of all such as handle the harp and organ" The confusion of the two names is not peculiar to Chaucer Its occurrence in some MSS of Isidore's Etymologiae (ii, 16) doubtless helped its spread

1167 Pictagoras, Pythagoras The Greek tradition that he was the inventor of music is recorded by Isidore along with his mention of Jubal (or Tubal)

1169 Aurora, a Latin metrical version of parts of the Bible, with allegorical interpretation, by Petrus de Riga, Canon of Rheims, in the twelfth century

1180-1312 In the following passages Chaucer again makes frequent use of the Roy de Behaigne and the Remede de Fortune Cf ll 1181-82 with Fortune 681-82, 1183-91 with Behaigne 453-56, 1192 with Behaigne 466, 1195-98 with Behaigne 461-62 and Fortune 1671-83, 1203-18 with Behaigne 467-76, 1216 with Fortune 696, 1219 with Behaigne 504-05, 1226-28 with Behaigne 656-58, 1236-38 with Behaigne 509-12, 1239-44 with Behaigne 541-48, 1250-51

with Fortune 751-52, 1258-67 with Behaigne 610, 1273 with Fortune 4074-75, 1275-78 with Behaigne 642-43, 1285-86 with Fortune 139-40, 1289 ff with Behaigne 166-76

1200 With sorwe, probably imprecatory rather than descriptive For the construction see MLT II, 896, n

1206 the dismal, the evil days, Anglo-Fr "dis mal," Lat "dies mali" These were two special days each month in the medieval calendars They were also called Egyptian Days ("dies Aegyptiaci") See Vincent of Beauvais Speculum Naturale, xv, 83 (Douai, 1624) Chaucer very likely interpreted the word as meaning "ten evils" (taking it from the French "dix") The English adjective "dismal" is derived from this source

1212 Pure, very See note on l 490 above

1234 but I mete, unless I am dreaming 1246 ff For the lamentation of Cassandra see Benoit, Roman de Troie, ll 26113 ff

1248 On Ilyoun see LGW, 936, n

1270 This phrase occurs twice in Behaigne, ll 641, 670

1318 f The ryche hal was doubtless Richmond, or Richemont, in Yorkshire, which came into the possession of John of Gaunt at the age of two, when he was created Earl of Richmond, and belonged to him until his second marriage in 1372 For the historical details see Professor F Tupper, MLN, XXXI, 250 The long castel probably refers to "Lancaster" (also called "Loncastel," "Longcastel"), and there may be further reference in the walles white and seynt Johan to the names of Blanche and John of Gaunt See Skeat's letter in Acad XLV, 191, and Tupper's note in MLN, XXXII, 54

1324 ff At the end of the poem Chaucer reverts to the Paradys d'Amours, from which he took the suggestion of his opening lines With ll 1324-25 of the Paradys, ll 1685-92, with 1330-34, Paradys 1693-95 and 1722-23

THE HOUSE OF FAME

The House of Fame, like the Book of the Duchess, is not ascribed to Chaucer in the MSS, but its authenticity is sufficiently vouched for by Chaucer's own reference in the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women (F, 417, G, 405) and in the Retraction at the end of the Canterbury Tales In the poem itself, moreover, the Eagle addresses the narrator as Geffrey (l 729)

From the fact that Lydgate, in the Fall of Princes, does not name the House of Fame among Chaucer's works the inference has been drawn that the piece is there indirectly referred to as "Dante in Inglish," and several scholars have striven to show that it is a kind of parody of the Divine Comedy Chaucer undoubtedly used a number of passages from Dante, and was under his influence at the time of writing But there is no organic or structural relation between the two works, and Lydgate's phrase, "Dante in Inglish," is best interpreted as a complimentary characterization of Chaucer himself (The application of the term to the Ugolino story, as proposed by Miss Hammond, pp 374 f, or to the Wife of Bath's Tale, III, 1125 ff, as suggested by Professor Brusendorff, p 151, seems less probable) For extreme statements of the theory of Dantean influence on the House of Fame see A Rambeau in EST, III, 209-68, and C Chiarini, Di una imitazione inglese della Divina Commedia, La

Casa della Fama di Chaucer, Bari 1902, and for dissenting criticism of Lounsbury's Studies in Chaucer, New York, 1892, II, 242 ff., and a review of Chiarini in the Journ of Comp Lit I, 292-97. In the following notes are registered only those parallels from Dante which seem probably significant.

Primarily and essentially the House of Fame belongs to the type of love-visions which abounded in French literature for a century after the Roman de la Rose. The best general account of its literary relations is Professor W O Sypherd's Studies in Chaucer's Hous of Fame, Ch Soc., 1907. See also EST, XLI 113 ff. Among the French parallels or sources the Panthere d'Amours of Nicole de Margival (ed H A Todd SATF, 1883) is particularly important. See H R Patch MLN, XXXIV, 321-28. Le Temple d'Onnour of Froissart, taken by Brusendorff (pp 158 ff) to be a primary source may also have given Chaucer a few hints, but certainly did not supply him with his general plot or plan. It was written to celebrate a marriage (of unidentified persons) and some critics, as will be indicated below hold Chaucer to have had a similar purpose. The Corbaccio of Boccaccio, a work of the same genre, has been suggested as a partial source of the House of Fame by Miss M L Brown in MLN, XXXII, 411-15. But the resemblances she cites are not convincing.

Many special literary influences on the House of Fame have been pointed out, particularly by Skeat in his notes and by Ten Brink in his Chaucer Studien, Munster, 1870. The debt to Virgil and Ovid which was perhaps not sufficiently emphasized by Professor Sypherd, has been studied by Professor E F Shannon, Chaucer and the Roman Poets, Cambridge, 1929, pp 48 ff. On the possible use of the Old French Roman d'Eneas see Lowes, PMLA, XXXII lv, on the use of Theodulus see Holthausen in Engl., XVI, 264-66. The influence of the Amorosa Visione of Boccaccio on this and other works of Chaucer is doubtful. It is asserted by Professor Koeppl in Anglia, XIV, 233 ff., and by Professor C G Child in MLN, X, 190 ff., and questioned by Dr H M Cummings, Indebtedness of Chaucer's Works to the Italian Works of Boccaccio, Univ of Cincinnati Studies, 1916, p 26. On the evidence of the general similarity of the two works and of the special testimony of a single passage (ll 1136 ff) Professor Brusendorff (p 161, n) has argued unconvincingly for Chaucer's knowledge and use of Petrarch's Trionfo della Fama.

Many critics have found in the poem a more or less elaborate allegory of Chaucer's own life. For an account of various theories see Sypherd, pp 156 ff., Koch, EST, XLI, 113-21, Wells, pp 656 ff., and V Langhans, Untersuchungen zu Chaucer, Halle, 1918, pp 71-74. These interpretations are mostly arbitrary and fanciful, and Professor Sypherd is probably right in rejecting them. But some scholars who have abandoned the autobiographical theories still insist that Chaucer must have had a purpose beyond the mere writing of a love-vision. Thus Professor R Imelmann (EST, XLV, 397 ff) and Professor Brusendorff (pp 162 ff) hold that the poem was to celebrate the marriage of Richard and Anne. Professor Koch (EST, L, 369 ff) would refer it to John of Gaunt's (finally unsuccessful) plans for the marriage of his daughter Philippa in 1384. And Mr F C Ruedel (JEGP, XXVII, 441 ff) would explain it as Chaucer's veiled rebuke to John of Gaunt for having outraged decency by appearing in public with his mistress, Catherine Swynford, in the summer of 1378. Chaucer's own indignation, he holds, was aroused because he had reason to suspect Lancaster of illicit relations with his own wife. Mr Ruedel's theory involves a series of arbitrary interpretations and hazardous conjectures. His fundamental assumption about Lancaster and Philippa Chaucer, though recently supported anew by Dr Russell Krauss (Chaucerian Problems especially the Petherton Forstership and the Question of Thomas Chaucer, in Three Chaucer Studies, New York, 1932), is by no means proved or even made probable. For the personal allegories assumed by the other scholars there is also no secure basis in the text, and the poem seems at best inappropriate to the celebration of a marriage or betrothal. One thing only — the mention of the man of gret auctorite in l 2158 — leads the reader to suspect that the completed poem was to be connected somehow with a person of consequence such as Richard or John of Gaunt. But the identity of the person and the nature of the connection seem now beyond the range of conjecture. Professor Manly (Kittredge Anniv Papers, Boston, 1913, pp 73 ff) giving up the allegorical explanation, has argued that the vision was meant to introduce a collection of tales, but that the scheme was abandoned in favor of the Canterbury pilgrimage. For discussion of this suggestion, with some reasonable objections, see Sypherd, MLN, XXX, 65-68.

The House of Fame contains no precise indication of date. Inferences drawn from the biographical and allegorical interpretations are all uncertain. Those based upon literary relations are also not very secure. The assumption, for example, that the poem is the "Comedy" announced by Chaucer at the end of the Troilus is both unwarranted and improbable. The possible use by Chaucer of the Temple d'Onnour and the imitation of Chaucer by Gower in the Mirrouir de l'Homme (see the note to l 1547) afford slight clues, and are both consistent with a date about 1379-80. In general, the probabilities favor the early years of the Italian period, before the composition of the Palamon or the Troilus. The use of the octosyllabic couplet would have been more natural at that time than later. This date would account also for the transitional character of the poem—a French love-vision in type but clearly written under the influence of Dante. See Wells, pp 659-60 and for fuller discussion Tatlock, Dev and Chron, Ch Soc 1907 pp 34 ff., Lowes, PMLA, XX, 819, 854 ff., and Kitzredge The Date of Chaucer's Troilus Ch Soc., 1909, pp 53-55

1 ff Rhetorical preliminaries—sixty-five lines on dreams, forty-five of invocation, and about three hundred and fifty in the outline of the Aeneid—occupy nearly all the first book. See Manly, Chaucer and the Phe-ocrians Brit Acad., 1926, p 8

For the opening passage on dreams Chaucer seems to have been chiefly indebted to suggestions from the Roman de la Rose (particularly ll 1 ff., and 18499 ff.) Rosembances may be noted between HF, 11 and RR, 18181, 18424, HF, 12 and RR, 18208, HF, 15-18 and RR, 18247 ff., HF, 24-31 and RR, 18342-49, HF, 33-35 and RR, 18357-60, HF, 36-40 and RR, 18394-402, and HF 41-42 and RR 18365-66. For part of this material, not closely paralleled in RR, Chaucer may have drawn on various authorities. The subject was much discussed in the literature current in the Middle Ages. The classification of dreams in ll 7-11 seems most likely to go back to Macrobius (Som Scip, i, 3), who distinguishes five kinds—"somniaum," "visio," "oraculum," "insomniaum," and "visum" (also called "phantasma"). Again, in l 18 the gendres perhaps have reference to Macrobius's division of the "somniaum" into five species ("proprium," "alienum," "commune," "publicum," "generale"), though this is not certain. Other discussions which Chaucer may have had in mind, or which at all events illustrate his doctrine, are those of John of Salisbury, Policraticus, ii, 15 (ed Webb, Oxford 1909, I, 88 ff.), Vincent of Beauvais, Speculum Naturale, xxvi, 32 ff. (Douai, 1624) Bartholomaeus Anglicus, De Proprietatibus Rerum vi, 24-27 (De Somno), and Robert Holkot, Liber Sapientiae, Lectio ccc. For a tabulation of pertinent passages see Sypherd, pp 74-76, cf also Curry, pp 202 ff.

It is not clear just how seriously Chaucer meant his own classification to be taken. There does not seem to be any regularly recognized distinction between dream and sweeten (l 9). Ten Brink's suggestion that the former corresponds to "somniaum" and the latter to "insomniaum" (Chaucer Studien, p 101) is at all events not borne out by Chaucer's usage elsewhere.

21 On the complexions see Gen Prol, I, 333 n

48 figures, if not used in its ordinary sense of figurative or symbolic representations, may refer to the images ("simulacra") supposed to originate in the imagination of a dreamer. See Curry (pp 206-07). For the process assumed he refers to Vincent of Beauvais, Spec Nat xxvi, 41 (Douai, 1624), Antonius Gaizo, De Somno, etc., Passi, 1539, c vii 53-54 "Let this thing be the affair of great scholars." Cf Tr, v 379 also the modern (bookish) construction, "Wo worth the day," in which "worth" is a verb (AS "wearpan," to become)

55-56 Cf RR, 18513

63 The reason for the date is unknown. Professor Imelmann explains it as referring to Dec 10, 1381, when (he estimates) the news came of Anne's approaching arrival in England. Professor Brusendorff (pp 163 ff.), who also held the poem to celebrate the royal marriage, would date the dream Dec 10 1380, two days before the appointment of the ambassadors who were to make the arrangements. This he suggested, was the actual date of the decision of the King and Council. According to Professor Koch, who would explain the House of Fame as referring to John of Gaunt's efforts to arrange a marriage for his daughter Philippa Chaucer may have received a premature report of a betrothal in December, 1384, and may thereupon have written the poem. The later failure of the negotiations would account for the fact that he never finished it. In none of these three cases, it is to be observed, has December tenth been shown to have been actually a significant day, and the allegorical interpretations of the poem are themselves altogether doubtful.

66 ff There has been considerable discussion as to the source of the three invocations. The second and third (ll 518-28, 1091-1109) clearly come from Dante, and it has been held that the whole idea of invocations was suggested by the Divine Comedy. But their use was common in poetry of various kinds and not unexampled in love-visions. In fact the particular address to Morpheus in the present passage seems to have been suggested by Froissart's Tresor Amoureux (ll 615 ff., Cœuvres ed Scheler, Brussels 1870-72, III, 71). The description of the god and his habitat is based upon Ovid, Met, xi, 592 ff. With the lines on Lethe Dr T Spencer compares Claudian, De Raptu Pros, i, 282 (Speculum, II, 182)

76 That her, equivalent to "whose" On this construction see KnT I, 2710, n

81 From Dante, Par, i, 1

82 With this echo of the Gloria Patri of Tr, i, 245

99 That, a repetition of That in l 98

105 For the story of Cressus's dream and his death upon the gallows see M.T., VII, 2740 ff. Chaucer's source was RR, 6489 ff., which he doubtless had in mind when writing this passage.

112-14 Cf Rom, 23-25

115 forgo, ordinarily explained as "over-wearied by walking," but no other instances of this use of the word seem to be recorded. Possibly we should read for go (two words) and interpret "for gone," i.e., because of having walked. On this construction with for cf. KnT, I, 2142, and n.

117-18 Cf. RR, 8833-38. St. Leonard was the patron saint of captives and might therefore be expected to release the wretched who were in the prison of married life. For a somewhat similar use of the figure of MercB, 28.

120 This line furnished Lydgate with the title of his Temple of Glas.

130 The temple of Venus here resembles her temple, which is much more fully described in the Knigh't's Tale. No model has been found for either description. For the idea of the paintings on the walls there would have been sufficient suggestion in the temple of Juno in the Aeneid, I, 446 ff. Mediæval poetry provides numerous other examples, and Chaucer must have been familiar with many actual decorations of the sort. (See Sypher, pp. 81 ff.) For some of the details of the description of Venus and Cupid Chaucer may have drawn on the De Deorum Imaginibus of Albricus Philosphus (printed in Van Staveren's Auctores Mythographi Latini Leyden 1742) or some similar treatise. See Lounsbury's Studies, II, 381 f.

141-42 Perhaps reminiscent of Dante's Inf. III, 10-11.

143 Here follows at some length a summary of the earlier portion of Virgil's Æneid. The opening lines are translated.

152 Synoun, Sinon.

155 Made the hors broght, caused the horse to be brought. For the idiom of KnT, I, 1913, n.

158 Ilyoun, Ilium, properly only a poetical name for Troy, but apparently used by Chaucer, as elsewhere in mediæval writings, in the restricted sense of the citadel of Troy. Cf. LGW, 936, n.

177 Iulo, Iulus, who was the same person as Ascanius. The blunder, if it be one, may be due to the wording of Aen. IV, 274, or possibly to a misinterpretation (by Chaucer or a predecessor) of the Historia Miscella (formerly ascribed to Paulus Diaconus), I, 2, after Aeneas, "regnum suscepit Ascanius, qui et Iulus, eiusdem Aeneae filius" (ed. Eyssenhardt, Berlin, 1869, p. 2). For evidence of a confusion in the Latin tradition itself see E. K. Rand, Speculum, I, 222 f.

184 Virgil does not tell how Creusa met her death.

198 From here to l. 225 Chaucer follows the first book of the Aeneid. But according to Virgil the storm is quieted by Neptune, and it is not until Aeneas has landed that Venus appeals to Jupiter to protect him. Perhaps Chaucer's variation, usually referred to as an inaccuracy, was a deliberate alteration to emphasize the activity of Venus. (See E. K. Rand, Speculum, I, 222.)

219 Joves, Jupiter. This peculiar form, which seems to be formed on an Old French nominative, occurs again in ll. 586, 597, 630 and in Tr., II, 1607, III, 15.

240 ff. Virgil's account of Aeneas is here considerably enlarged upon in the form of a love-story. This development was due, as Professor Shannon (pp. 55 ff.) has shown, to the influence of Ovid, who is cited with Virgil in l. 379. Chaucer also drew upon Ovid in his legend of Dido in the Legend of Good Women.

265-66 Cf. RR, 12139-42 (Rom., 7467 ff.).

269-85 For these reflections on men as deceivers Professor Shannon (pp. 364 ff.) has suggested a possible source in Catullus, Carmen lxxiv, 143-48. But Mr. J. A. S. McPeck, in MLN, XLVI, 295 ff., argues that they are sufficiently accounted for by Heroides, xvi (xvii), 191 ff., and RR, 4391 ff. On Chaucer's use of Catullus see further LGW, 1891 ff., n.

272 On this proverb see CYT, VIII, 962, n.

273 "So may I have the use of my head." Cf. MerchT, IV, 2308, NPT, VII, 3300, LGW Prose, 194.

286 be Eneas, by, with reference to Aeneas.

290 Skeat quotes from Cotgrave's Dictionary, s.v. "Herbe," the similar French proverb "L'herbe qu'on cognoist on la doit her à son doigt." See his EE Prov., pp. 86 f., no. 207, also Haeckel, p. 22, no. 69.

315 ff. With Dido's plea which has no exact parallel in the Aeneid, Professor C. G. Child compares the Amorosa Visione c. xxvii (MLN, X, 191 f.).

350 Cf. Aen. IV, 174, which is quoted (incorrectly) on the margin of MSS F and B.

351 Cf. Luke xii, 2, also quoted in MSS F and B, cf. Haeckel, pp. 41 f., no. 142.

355-56 seyd Yshamed be, said to be put to shame.

359 The MSS cite here the line, "Cras poterunt turpia fieri sicut heri." With "turpia" and "fieri" transposed this is a rimed pentameter from the so-called Versus Magistri Hildeberti, a short elegiac poem on Troy. The text is printed by Haureau, Notices et Extraits, XXVIII, II, 438-40, and by Du Ménil, Poésies Populaires Latines Antérieures au XI^e Siècle, Paris, 1843, pp. 309-13. Fourteen lines are quoted at the end of Caxton's Recuyell of the Histories of Troye (ed. Sommer, London, 1894, II, 703). For further references see G. L. Hamilton, MLN, XXIII, 63.

361 Proverbial. Cf. Tr. II, 789, and n.

378 On the form Eneydos (genitive) see ML Prose, II, 93, n.

379 The reference is to the Heroides, vii (Dido to Aeneas).

388 ff. The examples of untrue lovers come from the Heroides, II, III, V, VI, IX, XI. See Shannon, Chaucer and Rom. Poets, pp. 62 ff., and (on the possible supplementary use of the Italian translation attributed to Filippo Ceffi) S. B. Meech, PMLA, XLV, 110 ff.

Here and there Chaucer seems to have drawn on other versions of the stories. Thus the lines on Phyllis combine information from Ovid with the account in RR. They have also been compared by Professor C G Child with the Amorosa Visione, c xxv (MLN, X, 191). The account of Theseus and Ariadne corresponds in a number of details to that in Machaut's Jugement dou Roy de Navarre, ll 2741 ff. But it is uncertain whether Chaucer was following Machaut or the Ovide Moralisé, which has been shown to have been in turn Machaut's source. See Lowes, PMLA, XXXIII, 322 ff. Professor Shannon (pp 66 ff.), who questions Chaucer's use of Machaut would derive the whole account from Ovid except the introduction of Phaedra, which he thinks probably due to the De Gen Deorum. Chaucer's information about Phaedra may also have come from the Amorosa Visione (c xxv) or from Filippo's Italian translation of Ovid.

391. On the parentage of Phyllis see LGW, 2423, n. In Boccaccio's De Gen Deor, xi, 25, she is called "Lycurga filia."

392. This phrase is closely similar to RR, 13213, also to Ovid's statement in Her, ii, 1 f.

405-26. Certain details in this account of Theseus are not found in Ovid. Chaucer may have been following the Jugement dou Roy de Navarre or the Ovide Moralisé. See Lowes, PMLA, XXXIII, 320 ff., and Meech, PMLA, XLVI, 182 ff.

409. "Whether he had laughed or lowered," i.e., in any case. For expressions of this type see Gen Prol, I, 534, n.

411. The modern idiom is "if it had not been for Ariadne."

416. in an ile, i.e., on the isle of Naxos.

426. On the Northern (and West Midland) form tellis see BD, 73, n.

429. The book, etc., the Aeneid (iv, 252 ff.).

435 f. For the tempest see Aen, v 8 ff., and for the death of Palinurus, the steersman, the end of Bk v.

439. For the account of Aeneas's consultation of the Sibyl and visit to the lower world see Aen vi.

449. Claudius Claudianus, the author of the De Raptu Proserpinae (about 400 A.D.), is mentioned along with Virgil and Dante as an authority on the lower world. Cf. also l 1509 below, LGW Prol G, 280, and MercnT, IV, 2232.

451 ff. Chaucer's summary of the last six books of the Aeneid is very brief.

458. Lavina, Lavinia. The form of the name (which occurs again as Lavine in BD, 331) may be due to either French or Italian. Cf. RR, 20831, and Dante's Purg, xvii, 37.

462. The desolate places in the Panthere and the Corbaccio are not actual deserts of sand. For this feature Chaucer's description may be reminiscent of Inf, i, 64, or xiv, 8-13. In the latter passage Dante refers to the desert of Libya, also described by Lucan in Pharsalia, ix. Chaucer may have drawn directly upon Lucan or (as Professor Lowes has suggested to the editor) upon the French Hystoire de Julius Cesar of Jehan de Tuim (ed. Settegast Halle, 1881), which shows closer resemblances. Another desert which may have been in Chaucer's mind is that in the Lay du Desert d'Amours of Deschamps (Oeuvres, SATF, II, 182 ff.). Various symbolic interpretations of the desert have been suggested by the commentators. See Sypherd, pp 49, 52. In the imagery of the love-vision, as Professor Patch has shown it may well represent the state of the despairing lover. See MLN, XXXIV, 321 ff.

493. The fantome, or "phantasm," was often explained as produced by the operation of demons upon the mind of the sleeper, and the term illusionum was applied to their false revelations. See Curry, pp 209, 214, with especial citation of Vincent of Beauvais, Spec Nat, xxvi, 56 (Douai, 1624).

499 ff. These lines are perhaps an imitation of Purg ix, 19-20, and ll 502 ff. may go back to Purg, ii, 17-24. How far the suggestion for the eagle came from Dante and how far from the description of Ganymede in both Virgil and Ovid is a matter of dispute.

Book II

514 ff. For the dream of Isaiah see either ch i or ch vi of his prophecy. That of Scipio is related in the Somnium Scipionis of Cicero, of Chaucer's account of it at the beginning of the Parlament of Fowls. On Nebuchadnezzar see Daniel i-iv, and MkT, VII, 2143 ff., and on Pharaoh, see Gen xii, 1-7. The mention of Turnus is not so clear. Skeat took it to refer to the visit of Iris, Aen, ix, 1 ff., but Professor Tatlock (MLN, XXXVI, 95, n.), suggests rather the visit of the Fury Allecto vii, 413 ff. Eleanor is of uncertain identification. Professor Bright (MLN, IX, 241) suggested Hamilar, whose dream of the fall of Syracuse is mentioned by Valerius Maximus, Facta et Dicta Memorabilia, i, 7, 8. Dr Heath (Globe edn, p 564), suggested Elkanah (Vulg, Elcana), the father of Samuel. But though the names are similar, it is not recorded that Elkanah had any dream, and the same is true of Alcanor (Aen, ix, 672, x, 338), who is mentioned by Skeat. Other characters who have been suggested are Elpencor (Odyssey, x, 552, xi, 51, xii, 10), Acanor (prose Merlin, SATF, 1886, I, 209), Elpincor (Roman de Troie, SATF, 12327) and Escanor (in the romance of Escanor by Girard d'Amiens, Stuttgart Latt Ver., CLXXXVIII). But none of these appears to have been associated with a vision. A more likely explanation than any of the preceding is that proposed by Professor Tatlock, MLN, XXXVI, 95-97. He refers to the Old French Cassidorus, a continuation of the prose redaction of the Sept Sages de Rome (This romance is unprinted, but some account of it is given in Alton's edition of the Marques de Rome, Stuttgart Latt Ver, CLXXXVII, pp v-vii, xiii.) Helcana, the heroine of the story is forced to live in man's disguise, and takes the name Helcanor. When her lover is counselled not to marry, she appears to him twelve times in dreams and tells him stories to show that he should. As Professor Tatlock remarks, there is a difficulty in the identification in the fact that Helcana-Helcanor is not herself the dreamer. But Chaucer may have forgotten this, or may have thought the inaccuracy added to the humor of the allusion. Mr Tatlock thinks there was intentional anticlimax in the addition of this rather absurd figure to the list of famous dreamers of antiquity.

518-19 This invocation to Cyprus is almost certainly reminiscent of Tes, 1, 3. Throughout the passage memories of Boccaccio are mingled with those of Dante. See the note on ll 520 ff. The form Cypris occurs again in Tr, iii, 725 and Cypride in PF, 277.

519 favour, apparently in the unusual sense of "help" or "helper."

520 ff. The address to the Muses is clearly an imitation of Inf, i, 7. With the following lines of also Inf, i, 8-9, Par, i, 11, xviii, 87. The Italian spellings of Parnaso and Elcon are probably due to recollections of Tes, xi, 63, or of Par, i, 16 and Purg, xxix, 40. The dubious language of the last-named passage may explain, Skeats suggests, why Chaucer took Helcon to be a well rather than a mountain. But in the Teseide it is definitely called a fountain ("fonte"), and Guido's Historia Trojana, sig a 5, recto, col 1 ("imbubens Elhona") carries the same implication. In Aeneid, 16, and Tr, iii, 1810, Elcon is also described as in (or on) Parnaso, hence doubtless to be understood as a spring. The mountains, Helcon and Parnassus, were in reality not near together. But they were often so represented by post-classical writers. On the whole matter see Lowes, MP, XIV, 725 ff, and Root's note on Tr, iii, 1807-10.

534 The descent of the eagle is partly imitated from Dante (Purg, ix 28-30) and partly from Machaut's Jugement dou Roy de Navarre, Oeuvres, ed Hoepffner, SATF, I, ll 301 f, and Confort d'Ami, Oeuvres, III, ll 1899 f.

557 Skeat compares Inf, ii, 122, and Purg, ix, 46, but the correspondence is not close, and no source seems necessary.

573 The form Seynie can be easily explained here and in l 1066 below as the feminine form of the adjective (from the French). On certain cases where it is masculine and a different explanation seems necessary see the Gen Pro, I, 120, n.

586 "Will Jupiter turn me into a constellation?"

588 On Enoch see Gen v, 24, on Elijah, II Kings ii, 11, on Romulus, who was carried to heaven by Mars, Met, xiv, 816 ff, and on Ganymede, whom Jupiter bore up in the form of an eagle Aen, i, 28, and Met, x, 159-

60 Enoch and Elijah were constantly associated, and they, as well as Ganymede are mentioned in the Ecloga Theoduli (ll 65-68, 217-19, 77-80, ed Osternacher, Ripariae prope Lentiam, 1902) a poem which was known to Chaucer (See Holthausen, Angl XVI, 264 ff.) The whole passage may have been suggested by Inf, ii, 32, where Dante says that he is neither Aeneas nor Paul. In that case Chaucer substituted names of characters more appropriate to his peculiar situation.

597 ther-about, busy about that, having it in intention.

600 ff. Possibly influenced by Inf, ii, 49 ff.

623 The meaning of cadence here is uncertain. Skeat suggested that perhaps ryme is used for couplets, and cadence for longer stanzas. From the contrast with ryme one might also infer that the reference is to unrhymed or alliterative verse, or even to the rhythm of prose. Examples of the application of the word to rhythmic prose are cited from the fifteenth century by Miss Hammond, Eng Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, p 457. Possibly no precise contrast was intended. Of the note on drem and sweven, ll 1 ff, above, also that on sort, cas and aventure in Gen Pro, I, 844 ff. Saintsbury (History of Eng Prosody, London, 1906-10, I, 160, n), citing Gower, Conf Am, iv 2414, and Andrew of Wyntoun, Chronicle, v, 4341 f (ed Amours, Scot Text Soc, 1903-14, IV, 22), argues for the "ordinary sense" of the word.

637 "And describest everything in relation to them" (i e, to lovers).

639 f. For this figure of the "dance of love" cf Tr, i, 517 f, and Gen Pro, I, 476, n.

652 This has reference obviously to Chaucer's labors as comptroller of the Custom.

662 Cf Inf, i, 113.

678 long yserved, served for a long period. On the use of "serve" in relation to love see KnT, I, 1814, n.

681 Proverbial, cf Skeat, EE Prov, p 87, no 208.

689 "To make the beard" meant to cheat, delude. Cf RnT, I, 4096, and n.

692 "Holding in hand," cajoling, putting off with false hopes. See MLT, II, 620, and n.

695 On love-dayes "days of reconciliation," see Gen Pro, I, 258, n.

696 cordes, musical chords.

698 cornes, grains of corn.

706 ys, the emphatic affirmative. See NP Pro, VII, 2816, n.

712 thyn owne book i e, Ovid's Metamorphoses. The description of the House of Fame is in Bk xii, 39-63.

719 "And [it, the house] stands in so exactly determined a place."

730 The doctrine (stated again in ll 826 ff below) that every natural object has a natural place which it tries to reach, and in which it tries to remain, was the predecessor of the law of gravitation. It survives in the familiar hymn, "Rivers to the ocean run." It is not easy to assign Chaucer's statement to a definite source. But he very likely had in mind the similar discussion in Boethius ii, pr 11, 71-81, and perhaps also a passage in the Paradiso (1, 103 ff). Cf further Purg xviii, 28 (for the remarks on fire), the Convivio, iii, 3 ("loco proprio"), RR, 16761-67, and the De Planctu Naturae of Alanus de Insulis (Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 453). An earlier statement than any of these, as Professor Patch reminds us in EST, LXV, 357, is to be found in St. Augustine's Confessions, xiii, 9 (Migne, XXXII, 848).

745 "While each of them is free ('at large'), a light thing seeks to go up and a heavy thing down."

765 Cf SumT, III, 2233 ff. The doctrine was familiar. The statement of it which Chaucer probably knew, and which contains the illustration given in ll 788 ff, will be found in Boethius' De Musica, Bk 1 (especially chaps 3 and 14). Another statement, which is perhaps still closer to Chaucer's, is that of Vincent of Beauvais in Spec Nat (Douai, 1624), iv 14-18 (partly quoted by Sypherd, pp 97-99, with a parallel passage from Macrobius), cf also xv, 58.

798 fro roundel to compas, from small circle to large.

811 an ayr, a surrounding circle or sphere of air.

822 Take yt in earnest or in game, take it seriously or as a joke, i.e. in any way you choose. For another occurrence of the same formula see CIT, IV, 609. A number of phrases of similar import were current in Middle English. Cf foul or fair, 1 833, below and see Gen Prol, I, 534, n.

824 Of pure kynde lit, of pure nature, by its very nature.

845-46 Cf Met xii, 39-40.

847 conservatyf the soun. This construction, in which the adjective takes an object like a participle, is most peculiar. Cf the occasional treatment of verbal nouns in Plautus "quid tibi nos tactost?", Aulularia, 423.

888 Cf Dante, Par, xxii, 128, but the similarities of language may be due only to the similarity of situation.

907 The comparison of the distant earth to a prykke is natural enough and calls for no explanation. Chaucer may, however, have had in mind a similar passage in the Somnium Scipionis (vi, 16) or one in Boethius, ii, pr 7, 10 f.

915 The reference is to the account, in the romances of Alexander of how he was carried in a car in the air by four gigantic griffins. See the Mid Eng Wars of Alexander, ed Skeat, EETS, 1886, ll 5515 ff, the Latin version, De Prelus, ed Landgraf, Erlangen, 1885, p 131, the Ethiopic version, in

E A T W Budge Life and Exploits of Alexander, London, 1896, pp 277 f (where the reference is to an eagle) and 474 f, and, for further references, F P Magoun The Gestis of King Alexander of Macedon, Cambridge Mass, 1929 p 41, n 3.

916-18 This brief reference to Scipio may be due to RR, 18367-69, though the Somnium Scipionis was doubtless known to Chaucer at the time of writing.

919 Daedalus and Icarus are likewise mentioned in RR, 5226-27. But Chaucer certainly knew Ovid's version of the familiar story (Met, viii, 483 ff) and the brief reference here points to no special source. Comparisons have been made with Inf xvii, 109-14 the Ecloga Theoduli, ll 101-03, and Boccaccio's Amoros Visione, xxxv.

930 ff By many a citezeyn and eyryssh bestes are probably meant the daemons of the air. Skeat took the "beasts" to be the signs of the zodiac. But with the term "citizen" he compared several passages in the Anticlaudianus of Alanus de Insulis, where the reference is to the aerial powers. See iv, 5 (Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 525), "aerios cives" v, 7 (Migne, 537), "cives superi", v, 9 (Migne, 538), "superos cives". Since Chaucer clearly identifies the two, the same interpretation probably applies to the beasts. It is supported, as Professor W P Ker has shown, by the term "animalia corpore aera" in St. Augustine's De Civ Dei, viii, 16 in viii, 15, Plato is acknowledged as an authority on the powers in question. (See Migne, Pat Lat, XLI, 240 f). The reference to Plato in Dante's Par, iv, 22-24 seems to be irrelevant here.) Ker further suggested that the discussion of the subject by Apuleius, in his De Deo Socratis which was one of Augustine's sources, may also have been known to Alanus and to Chaucer. He compared particularly ll 925 ff, 965 ff, with sentences in Apuleius. For full discussion see his note, Mod Quart, I (= MLQ, II), no 5, pp 38-39.

939 Wallyngs Strete, a famous old road, which probably ran from Kent to the Firth of Forth. The Milky Way was called "Watling street" or "Walsingham way" in England just as it was known in southern Europe as "la via di San Jacopo" (the way to Santiago), and "la strada di Roma" (the way to Rome). Cf Dante's Convito, ii, 15 and H F Cary's note on Par, xxv, 18 (his translation).

942 For the story of Phaeton see Met, ii 31 ff.

948 the Scormoun, the zodiacal sign.

950 for ferde, for fear. In this phrase ferd(e) seems to be a substantive, but its original construction is uncertain. Possibly it was a participle after for, but this again would be easily confused with the compound forfered.

966 ff Cf Anticlaudianus, iv, 6 (Migne, 526), also Apuleius, De Deo Socratis, x.

972 See Boethius, iv, m 1.

- 981 Cf II Cor xii, 2
 985 Marcian, Martianus Capella (fifth century) His treatise De Nuptus inter Philologiam et Mercurium contained an extended discussion of astronomy Chaucer refers to him again, in a quite different context, in Mercht, IV, 1732 ff 986 Anticlaudian, the Anticlaudianus of Alanus de Insulis 1004 the Raven the constellation Corvus Eyther Bere, Ursa Major and Ursa Minor
 1005 Arionis harpe, Lyra
 1006 Castor, Pollux, Gemini, Delphyn, Delphinus 1007 "The seven daughters of Atlas," the Pleiades 1008 The unusual form arn for the regular be(n) of Chaucer's dialect may be noted 1022 On St Julian, the patron saint of hospitality see Gen Prol, I, 340, n 1034 For this oath by St Peter of 12000 below, also ShipT, VII, 214, WB Prol, III, 446 FrT, III, 1332
 1044 Cf Tr, iii, 737
 1063 On the idiom lives body for "living body" (genitive for adjective) see KnT, I, 1912, n 1066 Seynte Clare (1194-1253), an abbess and a disciple of St Francis See Catholic Encyclopædia, IV, 4-6

Book III

- 1091 ff The invocation is imitated from Par, I, 13-27
 1098 This seems to be a definite acknowledgment on Chaucer's part of his practice of writing verses without the full number of syllables He may have in mind particularly those which begin with an accented syllable, — the seven-syllable lines in the octosyllabic, and the nine-syllable lines in the decasyllabic, measure Or is it simply a prayer for indulgence with imperfect verses?
 1099 On the use of that to repeat though, cf, etc., see Pars Prol, X, 39, n 1116 Cf Met, xi, 43
 1117 The reason for the mention of Spain, unless it was for the rime, is not apparent 1130 Various sources have been suggested for the idea of a mountain of ice The commentators who have emphasized Dante's influence on the poem have compared the mountain of Purgatory See particularly Rambeau, Est, III, 249-50 Dr A C Garrett proposed to trace the conception to folk-tale accounts of glass mountains See [Harv] Stud and Notes, V, 157 ff But the most probable suggestion is that of Professor Sypherd (pp 114 ff), who shows that the whole conception of the goddess of Fame and her abode was influenced by descriptions of Fortune and her house, and who cites particularly the account of the dwelling of Fortune on a rock of ice in La Panthere d'Amours by Nicole de Margival

- 1131 seynt Thomas of Kent, St Thomas à Becket 1136 half, i.e., side With the names carved on ice and melted by heat Professor Brusendorff (p 161, n) has compared Petrarch's Trionfo del Tempo, li 127 ff
 1147 Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 44, no 149
 1170 compace, riming with place, ought to be the infinitive, and not the noun "compass" It is probable, therefore that we should either emend the MS reading no to ne or interpret no as "nor" (for which there is slight authority) See Kenyon The Syntax of the Infinitive in Chaucer, Ch Soc, 1909 p 91, n 1
 1183 seynt Gyle, St Aegidius See CYT, VIII, 1185, n
 1184 beryle, Professor Sypherd suggests (p 133, n 2), was an appropriate material for a palace of Love He quotes from L'Intelligenza (ed Gellrich, Breslau, 1883, st 25) "Per sua vertute fa crescer l'amore" The word was sometimes employed in a transferred sense for crystal or glass See NED, s v, II, 3, which assumes this meaning in l 1288 below But the reference there, as here, seems to be to the gem 1203 Orpheus, the famous minstrel Chaucer doubtless knew Ovid's account of him in Met, x and xi 1205 Orion, apparently Chaucer's spelling for Arion See Ovid's Fasts, ii, 79-118, for his story 1206 Eacides Chiron, Achilles' tutor, Chiron the centaur Achilles was the grandson of Aeacus The combination seems to have come from Ovid's Ars Amat, i, 17, "Aeacidae Chiron" 1208 Glascurion, a British bard He is probably the same as the Glasgeron of a well-known ballad (Child, Engl and Scotch Ballads, Boston, 1882-98, III, 136, no 67) The name may go back to the Welsh "y Bardd Glas Kerant (or Gerant)," the Blue Bard Kerant, supposed to have lived in the tenth century This identification was proposed by T Price, Literary Remains, Llandoverly, 1854-55, I, 151-52, and has been received favorably by most commentators both on Chaucer and on the ballad Unfortunately the accounts of the Welsh bard thus far pointed out are modern and of very little authority According to the Iolo MSS (ed Taliesin Williams, Llandoverly, 1848, pp 623-25) he was a brother of Morgan Hên, King of Glamorgan he collected ancient records of poetry and bardism and compiled the laws of the chair and the Gorsedd He is also credited with having compiled the first Welsh grammar A few pieces of prose and verse, attributed to him, are published in the Myrran Archaeology of Wales, London, 1801-07, III, 100 ff The Iolo MSS also record that he went to King Alfred to London as his domestic bard, they say that many other Welsh bards accompanied him, and that to them was due an improvement in learning and knowledge among the Saxons. As a result of these statements some scholars have been disposed to identify the Bardd Glas with Bishop Asser, the biographer of Alfred. Cf. W. Owen Pughe, Cambrian Biography, London, 1803, pp. 19, 128-29, T. Price Lit. Remains, I, 151, T. Williams, Iolo MSS, p. 624. But there is no real support for the hypothesis. Cf. J. H. Parry, The Cambrian Plutarch, London, 1834, pp. 95 f. Nothing is known of the Blue Bard to account for Chaucer's mention of him here and the source of Chaucer's information is undiscovered. Possibly he got it from some of his Welsh friends. See the note on l. 1925 below.

1212-13 Cf. RR, 16029-31.

1221 "Both on dulcet (or doucet) and on reed." The former was "a wind instrument resembling a flute." See NED s.v. Doucet, 2.

1224 pipes made of grene corn, i.e., the simple pipes made by the rustics. See Rom, 4250.

1227 f. Atters and Pseustis (variants of Cytherus and Presentus) are of doubtful identity. The former has been taken as a corruption of Tyrtæus or of Tityrus (in Virgil's Eclogues). Pseustis has been explained as the shepherd who debates with Alithia in the Ecloga Theoduli.

1229 Marcia, Marsyas, the satyr whom Apollo first defeated in a musical contest and then flayed. Chaucer's form of the name and his treatment of it as feminine are doubtless due to the fact that he was musically by the Italian 'Marsia' in the Par, I, 20. (For Chaucer's earlier use of this passage see the note to l. 1091 above.) Elements from Ovid's account (Met, vi, 382 ff.) seem to be combined here with those from Dante.

1243 Messenus, Misenus, trumpeter to Hector and to Aeneas. See Aen, iii, 239, vi, 162 ff.

1245 Joab is mentioned as trumpeting in II Sam. ii, 28, xviii, 16, xx, 22. Theodomas, doubtless Thodamas, the augur of Thebes. In Theb, viii, 342 ff., as Skeat observes, his invocation is followed by trumpeting, though he is not actually mentioned as himself blowing a trumpet. Perhaps Chaucer had in mind some mediæval version of the Theban story. Cf. also MerchT, IV, 1720.

1257 f. Cf. RR, 4623 f. (Rom, 5123), Haecckel, p. 42, no. 144, Intro to MLT, II, 20 ff., and n.

1260 On tregetours see FranklIT, V, 1141, and n.

1266 On natural magic and the treatment of diseases by images cf. Gen. Protol, I, 414, n.

1268 The ascendant is that part of the zodiacal circle which ascends above the horizon at a given moment.

1271-74 Skeat has compared with this passage RR, 14397 ff., where Balenus, Medea, and Circe are mentioned together.

Quene Medea, Medea, who by magic restored Aeson to youth. See Met, vii, 162 ff. 1272 Circes, Circe, cf. Met, xiv. Chaucer's form with -s may be due to the frequent occurrence of the genitive "Circes" in Ovid. Calypsa, Calypso, the nymph who detained Odysseus on an island (Odyssey, 1). Cf. also Ovid, Ex Ponto, iv, 10, 13.

1273 Hermes Balenus, Belenus (Balonus), the disciple of Hermes Trismegistus. Hermes is apparently either a possessive genitive or an epithet. On Hermes Trismegistus see CYT, VIII, 1434, n. On Balenus see Professor Langlois's note to RR, 14399. He cites de Sacy's identification of Belenus, Belenos, etc., with Apollonius of Tyana, also the mention of a Liber Beleni de horarum opere in the Speculum Astronomie of Albertus Magnus. The usual Arabic form of the name is Balmas. For a list of works attributed to him see M. Steinschneider, Apollonius von Thyana (oder Balmas) bei den Arabern, Zt d. Deutschen Morgenland Gesellschaft, XLV, 439 ff.

1274 Lamote, probably Elymas, the sorcerer mentioned in Acts xiii, 8. On Symon Magus see Acts viii, 9.

1277 Colle tregetour, probably an English magician mentioned in a French manual of conversation composed in 1396, and declared to have practiced his art recently at Orleans. He is described as "un Englois qu' estoit fort nigromancien qui est a nom Colin T. qui savoit faire beaucoup des merveilles par voie de nigromancie." The manual is attributed, doubtfully, to an Englishman, M. T. Coyle. Professor J. F. Royster, who proposed the identification, suggested very reasonably that "T" in the French may stand for Tregetour. He called to mind further the reference in FranklIT to Orleans as a seat of magic arts. For further references see his article in Stud. Phil., XXIII, 380 ff.

Lady Guest (Mabinogion, London, 1838-49, II, 176) long ago noted that the name of Colle is similar to that of "Coll mab Collfrewi," described in one of the Welsh Triads (no. 90) as a famous magician. This identification was repeated by J. Loth, Les Mabinogion, 2d ed., Paris, 1913, II, 271, n., and has been noted again recently in TLS, 1931, p. 28. In TLS, 1931, p. 79, Miss K. M. Buck argues that the reference is rather to Collfrewi than to Coll, his son, and cites her Wayland-Dietrich Saga, London, 1924-29, VIII, 384, for further information.

1303 Adopting hatte (Skeat's conjecture), we may render the sentence "Nor how they are named in masonry, as for example corbels full of carved work."

1311 ff. At this point and in the description of the goddess which follows, Professor Emil Koeppel found certain resemblances to Boccaccio's Amorosa Visione. See Angl., XIV, 235 ff. The actual parallels between the two descriptions are of little significance and it has never been established that Chaucer knew the Visione. If he did, however the fact that Boccaccio presents a goddess of Renown ("La Gloria del Popolo Mondano") may help to account for Chaucer's modification of the traditional character of Fame as a goddess merely of rumor or report. Whether or not Chaucer was influenced by Boccaccio's poem, his portrayal of the goddess was chiefly affected by the current conceptions of the divinites of Fortune and Love (See Sypherd, pp 16-17, 112-32). The association of the ideas of fame and fortune in Boethius may, as Sypherd suggests, have helped determine the course of Chaucer's thought.

1316 kynges, i.e. kings-of-arms

1329-35 Cf RR, 6738-40

1352 the Lapidare, the Lapidarium, a metrical treatise in Latin on precious stones, composed in the eleventh century by Abbot Marbodius

1361 see, seat

1368 ff With the description here of Boethius, I, pr 1, 3-14, and Aen, iv, 173 ff The curious mention of Partriches wynges (l 1392) seems to be due to a mistranslation of Virgil's "pernicibus alis" (or Chaucer may have had a MS which read "perdicibus") The Latin phrase is correctly rendered in Tr, iv, 661, with preste wynges

1376 sterres sevene, the planets

1380 tolde, counted

1383 ff See Rev iv, 6 It is hardly necessary to assume the influence of Purg, xxix, 92 ff, as suggested by Rambeau

1395-1405 Companion has been suggested with Par, xxii, 97-111

1414 For the story of the shirt see MktT, VII, 2119 ff

1432 ff Josephus, author of the Historia Judaeorum, probably said to be of the secte saturnyn because of the astrological doctrine that the Jewish religion, as the root of all others, is signified by "the father of the planets" See Miss A H Miller, MLN, XLVII, 99 ff She cites Roger Bacon, Opus Majus, tr Burke, Philadelphia, 1928, I, 277 f

1437 The other sevene, presumably Jewish historians, are not named

1455 gynne, here apparently merely a colorless auxiliary, as was commonly the case with the pret gan, gunnen

1459 An allusion to the story of the two tigers in Theb, vii By killing three Greeks they led to the renewal of hostilities at Thebes

1460 Stace, Statius (d 96 A D), the author of the Thebaid and of the Achilleid He was incorrectly supposed to have been a native of Toulouse Thus Dante calls him "Tolosano" (Purg, xxi, 89), and Boccaccio "Stazio di Tolosa" (Amorosa Visione, v, 34) Though Chaucer appears to be following Dante just here, it is not probable that he derived the persons on the pillars from any single source The great poets who receive Dante upon his entrance into hell are not quite the same They include Horace and omit Statius and Claudian See Inf, iv, 88 ff The Amorosa Visione has no parallel list

1466 Omer, Homer

1467 ff Dares, Dares Phrygius Tytus, doubtless a corruption of Dictys (Cretensis), whom Chaucer calls Dote in Tr, I, 146 It is barely possible, as Professor Rand has argued (Speculum, I, 224) that Chaucer meant to include Livy (the Tytus Lyvynus of BD, 1084, and PhysT, VI, 1) among the authorities on the Trojan story Lolhus, supposed by Chaucer to be the name of an authority on the Trojan war and adopted as the author of the pretended source of the Troilus For a full discussion of the Lollius question see Professor Kittredge's article in the Harv Stud in Class Philol, XXVIII, 47-133 Guydo de Columpnus (or Guido delle Colonne), author of the Latin Historia Trojana, which was based upon the Roman de Troie of Benoît de Ste-Maure On all these writers and their part in the transmission of the mediæval Trojan legend see the introduction to the Troilus

1470 Gaufride, Geoffrey of Monmouth (d 1154), author of the celebrated Historia Regum Britanniae which is the source of a great body of literary material on the legendary history of Britain Since he deals with the tradition which makes the Britons the descendants of Aeneas, he is properly reckoned among the writers who "bore up Troy" It is unlikely that Chaucer, as Professor Rand has suggested (Speculum, I, 225), meant himself to be recognized as the Englyssh Gaufride

1479-80 Perhaps an echo of Benoît, II 45-70, 110-16

1482 The significance of the tynned yren of Virgil's pillar is not quite clear Miss Elizabeth Nitchie, Vergil and the English Poets, New York, 1919, pp 57-59, points out that tin was the metal of Jupiter ("a plate of Jupiter"), and interprets "tinned iron" to imply Mars controlled and directed by Jupiter in the Aeneid Copper, as the metal sacred to Venus, was a natural choice for Ovid, and the sulphur in Claudian's case is associated with the lower world

1499 Lucan, the author of the Pharsalia, which narrates the wars between Caesar and Pompey

1508 lyk as he were wood, explained by Professor Shannon (pp 357 f) with reference to Claudian's own mention of the poetic "furor" in De Raptu Proserpinae, I, 5

1511 f Cf Inf, ix 44

1526 ff In the description of the groups of supplicants and the awards that they receive there may be reminiscences of Dante Rambeau notes particularly (p 259) the sound of bees in Inf, xvi, 3 The passage on Providence in Boethius, iv, pr 6, may also have been in Chaucer's mind But the whole conception of the arbitrary goddess seems to have been most influenced, as Sypherd has argued (pp 117 ff), by the characteristics of the divinities of Love and Fortune

Other bee-smiles in Chaucer are noted by Koeppl in Angl XIV, 243

1530 alleskynnes, really a genitive singular, dependent upon condicuous

1547 There seems to be no definite authority for the statement that Fame and Fortune are sisters, but the frequent association of the two, and the obvious derivation of much of Chaucer's description of Fame from the accounts of Fortune, make it natural for him to invent the relationship (if he did)

Ll 1547 f and 1573-82 have a rather striking parallel in Gower's Mirour de l'Omme ll 22129-52 Professor Tatlock, who pointed out the resemblance (Dev and Chron, pp 38 ff) held Gower to have been probably the borrower and inferred a date "about 1379" for the House of Fame But Professor Patch questions this inference and has called the editor's attention to a similar conception of the trumpets (in this case called "Eur" and "Malheur") in the Dance aux Aveugles of Pierre Michault (ed Douxfls, Lille 1748, pp 32 f) He holds Gower's version to represent an earlier form of the idea than Chaucer's

1571 With the phrase the god of wynde Skeat compares RR, 18006, but no source is needed for this commonplace epithet The representation of Aeolus with two trumpets is ascribed by Lounsbury (Studies, II, 382) to Albricus Philosphus De Deorum Imaginibus (Van Staveren, Auct Myth Lat, Leyden, 1742, 920 f) The connection with Thrace Professor Shannon (p 341 f) would explain by reference to Valerius Flaccus, Argonauticon, I, 597 ff Skeat notes also Ovid's phrase "Threicio Borea" (Ars Amat, II 431)

1596 Triton, mentioned in recollection of Ovid's Met, I, 333 He is referred to as a trumpeter twice in the Aeneid (vi, 171 ff, x, 209)

1598 The use of to after let is unusual and Skeat suggests the possibility of reading to-goo here (and to-glyde in FranklT, V, 1415) as a compound

1643 pelet, a stone ball, such as were used with the earliest kind of cannon

1702 clew, a strong preterite of clawen, "to claw, rub" Chaucer elsewhere has the weak form clawed

1708 For the use of a lek in a comparison to denote worthlessness, see Gen Prol, I, 177, n

1710-11 Cf RR, 17443-44, though no literary source need be assumed

1742 "They did not once intend in their heart to show us friendliness, on the contrary [they] could (i e, would gladly) see us dead" (lit. "bring us on our bier")

1747 for woad, like mad Cf for pure woad, Rom, 276, and on this use of for with an adjective see KnT, I, 2142, n

1758-62 Cf RR. 9855-58

1768 For the figure of the pasture of Tr, II, 752

1783 The proverb of the cat who would eat fish but would not wet her feet was widely current Skeat cites, among other versions the mediæval Latin line, "Catus amat piscem, sed non vult tingere plantam" He compares also Conf Am, IV, 1108-09 and Macbeth, I, 7, 45 Cf his EE Prov, pp 87 f, no 209 and Haeckel, p 9, no 31

1794 noskynnes labour, labor of no kind Cf note to l 1530

1796 bele Isawde the fair Isolde (or Iseult), mentioned as a type of beauty, contrasted with the menial that grinds at a hand-mill

1803 Cf Inf, v, 28-33, where "muggia" corresponds to Chaucer's beloweth Other mediæval references to the wind of hell are collected by T Spencer, Speculum, II, 192 ff

1810 "Such amusement they found in their hoods," i e so much fun did they make of them For the idiom of the phrase "to put an ape in a man's hood," Intro to PrT, VII 440, and n

1840 pale, stripe He wore the garb of a fool

1844 Yndus, Isis ("Isidis" being the Latin genitive) The reference is generally taken to be to Herostratus, who in desire for fame set fire to the temple of Diana at Ephesus Why the temple of Isis in Athens is substituted is unknown

1879-80 A proverbial expression Cf Conf Am, III, 1626-27

1908 The form brynges (for bryngest), supported by the rime, is without parallel in Chaucer (though there are cases of the Northern third person singular in -es) It seems better to let the irregularity stand than to remove it by emendation

1920 For the "house of Daedalus" see Met, VIII, 158 ff The name "labyrinthus" is applied to it in Aen v, 588, and in Boethius, III, pr 12, 77, where a gloss identifies it as "Domus Dedali" See Bo, III, pr 12, 171

1925 ff For many features of the House of Rumor Chaucer is indebted to Ovid's account of the dwelling of Fame (Met, XII, 39-63) But in two striking particulars he departs from his classical source He describes it as a revolving house, made of interwoven twigs The conception of a whirling house was common in the romances, and entrance was often gained by the aid of a guide, sometimes a helpful animal (Cf La Mule sanz Fraim, ed Hill, Baltimore, 1911, ll 440 ff The Welsh Saint Greal, ed Robert Williams Hengwrt MSS I, London, 1876, p 325, and the prose Perceval, ed Potvin, Perceval le Gallois, Mons, 1866-71, I, 195 f, and for other instances see Sypherd, pp 144 ff) But buildings of wicker or wattle were more unusual in the literature familiar to Chaucer and it seems probable that he may have known by observation or report of such actual houses among the Irish and Welsh For in formation about them again consult Sypherd, pp 141 ff The question whether Chaucer ever lived in Ireland has been briefly discussed in the biographical introduction His possible interest in Wales through his friends Sir John Clanvowe and Lewis Johan has been pointed out by Professor Kittredge in MP, I, 16 and PMLA, XVI, 450-52 It may be noted further that the Bret Glascursion (1208) also suggests some knowledge of Welsh lore on Chaucer's part

1926 Possibly a reminiscence of Inf, II, 53-54

1928 Oyse, a river which flows into the Seine near Paris It was doubtless chosen here for the rime

1940 hottes, baskets Skeat's emendation for hottes seems reasonably sure to be right

1943 With churkynages cf KnT, I, 2004

2011 "To drive away thy heaviness with" For the order of words cf Gen Prolog, I, 791 n

2016-18 Reading and interpretation are both uncertain "Since Fortune has made the fruit (object, effect?), or the root (cause, source?) of thy heart's rest to languish," etc (?)

2034 ff Cf Inf, III, 55-57

2053 Thus shal hit be, probably in the sense "Thus is it reported to be" This use of shal, like Ger "soll" is known in early English LGW, 1725 appears to be another example

2060 There is a discussion of the spreading of report in Dante's Convivio, I, 3

2101 On sworn brotherhood see KnT, I, 1132, n

2108-09 This conception of the KnT's conception of truth and falsehood is developed from a bare suggestion in Ovid "Mixtaque cum veris passim commenta vagantur Millia rumorum" (Met, XII, 54-55)

2119 Cf Sum Prolog, III, 1695

2122 Shipmen and pilgrims might both be naturally associated with travelers' yarns On the reputation of pilgrims, in particular for untruthfulness, see the note in Hall's edition of King Horn Oxford, 1901, p 153

2152 The reading is uncertain The line means either "And lifted up their noses on high" or "And lifted up their noses and eyes"

2154 "And stamp as men do in trying to catch eels" No exact parallel to this figure has been noted, but the slippiness of eels is of course proverbial Skeat quotes Plautus, Pseudolus 747, "anguilla est, elabitur"

2158 The man of gret auctorite has been conjecturally identified with Richard II (Snell, Age of Chaucer, London, 1901, p 185), Thomas of Gloucester (von Westenholtz, Angl Beibl XII 172), and John of Gaunt (Ruedel, JEGP, XXVII, 447 ff) But in our complete ignorance of what was to follow, speculation is idle

The fragment ends in the middle of a sentence Caxton's copy breaks off at l 2094, after which he adds twelve lines of his own, see the Textual Notes Thyne prints ll 2095-2158 and then appends Caxton's ending slightly altered What Chaucer's own intentions were with regard to continuing the poem is entirely unknown Professor Brunsendorff argued (p 156) that the unfinished form is due merely to bad MS tradition He held Chaucer to have composed a very short ending, which has been lost This appears to be also Professor Manly's opinion (Kittredge Annv Papers, p 79)

ANELIDA AND ARCITE

The Anelida, which is ascribed to Chaucer by Lydgate (Prologue to Bk 1 of the Falls of Princes) and marked as his in three MSS, is of undoubted authenticity

The question of its date is bound up with that of the date of the other works in which use is made of the Teseide It may well have been the earliest of the group and it almost certainly preceded the Knights Tale See the Introduction on Chronology, and of Tatlock, Dev and Chron, Ch Soc, 1907, pp 83 ff Professor Langhans (Angl, XLIV, 239) rightly recognizes the inferiority of the Anelida to the Knights Tale, the Troilus, and the Parliament of Fowls But his date, 1373-74, rests upon an unproved assignment of the Parliament to 1374

Two attempts have been made to connect the poem with episodes in court society Professor Bilderbeck (N & Q, 8th Ser IX, 301 f) took it to refer to Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford, who repudiated his wife,

Philippa de Coucy, in 1387 But there is little reason for the identification, which is generally regarded as improbable because of Chaucer's friendly relation to the Earl See Tatlock, as cited above and Miss Hammond, Est, XLIII, 26 A more elaborate theory, proposed by Professor F Tupper (PMLA, XXXVI, 186 ff) must also, in spite of certain curious resemblances in proper names, be rejected for lack of real evidence Mr Tupper would identify Anelida, Queen of Ermonie, as the Countess of Ormonde (born Anne Welle), the wife of James Butler, the third earl Ormonde, he shows, was sometimes Latinized Ermonia Butler, being a d'Arcy on his mother's side, was represented by Arcite From the fact that he had two illegitimate sons, Thomas and James le Botiller, born sometime in the eighties, it is inferred that he was guilty of such infidelity as the poem condemns But bastardy was not so rare in the English court of Chaucer's time as to give one much confidence in the selection of this particular instance. Moreover, there is no evidence whether Thomas and James le Botiller were born before or after Ormonde's marriage to Anne, and, as Mr Tupper himself points out, the Earl lived honorably and happily with his wife for many years. The parallel between Arcite's behavior and that of d'Arcy, or Ormonde, is after all not very striking, and with the acceptance or rejection of this central identification stand or fall Mr Tupper's interpretations of other details of the story. Scythia, according to his explanation, represents Ireland, Thebes, the English Pale, Theseus stands for Lionel, Hippolyta for Elizabeth de Burgh, Countess of Ulster, Emily for Maud Ufford, half-sister of Elizabeth and wife of Thomas de Vere, Earl of Oxford, Creon possibly for the Earl of Desmond, Lionel's successor as viceroy. The resemblances are slight between these characters and the historical counterparts named, and the fact that their story follows Boccaccio in all essentials makes the whole allegorical explanation as unnecessary as it is unlikely.

The source of the plot (if the allegorical theories are rejected) is unknown. For similar situations Skeat (Oxf Chaucer, I, 78, 534) compares the story of the falcon in the Squire's Tale, and the Complaint to His Lady. On the former parallel see also Tupper (pp 196 ff.), who would identify the falcon, as well as Anelida, with Anne Welle. Chaucer himself, in his Proem, professes to follow Stace and Corymne and he actually uses for the setting and beginning of his narrative both Status and the Teseide of Boccaccio. See Ten Brink, Chaucer Studien, Munster, 1870, pp 48 ff., and B A Wise, The Influence of Status upon Chaucer, Baltimore, 1911, pp 66 ff. The explanation of Corymne is a matter of dispute. Of the various persons suggested—Corinna, Corninus, Corippus, Ovid (Cornina's poet), Boccaccio—the Theban poetess Corinna seems most appropriate. There is no good reason for a reference to Corninus or Corippus. The theory of Professor Shannon (Chaucer and the Roman Poets, Cambridge, Mass., 1929, pp 15 ff.) that Chaucer meant to acknowledge indebtedness to the Heroides, would be easier to accept if the use of Corinna as a name for Ovid could be really established. Moreover, Mr Shannon somewhat overestimates the influence of Ovid on the Anelida. Dr Wise's suggestion, that Chaucer was constructing a synonym for "Boccaccio" out of the Italian "corina" ("wry-mouthed"), like Professor Bright's similar explanation of "Loilus" (PMLA, XIX, xxii f) is altogether improbable. For fuller discussion of the whole subject see Lounsbury, Studies in Chaucer, New York, 1892, II, 403-04, Wise, p 67, and Shannon, as cited.

The suggestion recently made by Professor T. Vallese (Goffredo Chaucer, etc., Milan, 1930, pp 43 ff.), that the real source of the Anelida was Boccaccio's Fiammetta, cannot be accepted. The resemblances on which it is based are either too general or too conventional to be significant.

The Complaint proper belongs to a genre much practiced in Chaucer's time, and represented by several of his other poems. On this type in general, known as the "complainte d'amour" or the "salut d'amour," see P Meyer, Bibl de l'École de Chartres, 1867, pp 124-70, and Bull de la SATF, 1887, pp 94 ff., also Faral's ed of Gautier d'Aupais, Paris, 1919, p ix. The specimen in the Anelida has been compared particularly with the second of two complaints of Machaut, entitled Le Lay de Plour (Poésies Lyriques, ed Chichmaref, Paris, 1909, II, 434 459), and with his Lay de la Sousce (II, 443). See Legouis, Chaucer, Paris, 1910 p 45, and Miss M Fabin, MLN, XXXIV, 266 ff. But none of these pieces closely resembles it. For comparisons with Ovid's Heroides see Shannon, pp 38 ff. Professor Shannon, whose discussion of the genre is interesting, shows that Anelida's complaint, like the Complaint of Mars, differs from most poems of the sort in being more specific and embodying more narrative elements.

The name of Arcite was taken over from the Teseide, the source of Anelida, unless Professor Tupper's theory be accepted, must be regarded as undiscovered. The derivation by Bradshaw and Cowell (Proc Camb Philol Soc, xiii-xv, 14 f., Ch Soc Essays, pp 615 ff.) from the ancient Persian goddess Anâhita (Avatras, Latinized in the accusative Anaetidem or Anaetida, whence Anelida) is far-fetched. On the occurrence of the name Anelida in Arthurian romance see J Schick, Lydgate's Temple of Glas, EETS 1891, p cxx. Professor Koepfel (Est, XX, 156) suggested that Chaucer took it from L'Intelligenza (ed Gellrich, Breslau, 1883), st 75. But conclusive evidence is lacking of his knowledge of that work. (See Kittredge, MP, VII, 478.)

1-70 The chief sources of the first ten stanzas are as follows: 1-3 from Tes, 1, 3, 2, and 1, 4-7 from Theb, xu, 519 ff (with use of Tes, u, 22 in st 6), 8-10 from Tes, u, 10-12.

1 On the epithet red as applied to Mars see KnT, I, 1747, n. Here it is doubtless due to Tes, 1, 3, "Marte rubicondo."

2 A reference to the temple of Mars on Mt Haemus in Thrace, described by Status, Theb, vii, 40 ff.

5 Chaucer here confuses Bellona and Pallas (unless, as is possible the names are not in apposition). The two are kept distinct in the Thebaid (cf u, 704, 715 ff). But the confusion appears in Boccaccio, De Gen Deor, v, 48, where Bellona is also called sister of Mars, and his charioteer.

8-14 This stanza contains, alongside of the main source in Boccaccio, echoes of

Dante's Paradiso, 1, 8-9, of also Boethius, 11, pr 7. (See Lowes, MP, XIV, 729)

10 Oddly enough the Teseide at this point declares that the story there related is not treated by a Latin author. Chaucer implies that the tale of Anelida is in Status, whom he cites below by name (l 21). But as a matter of fact he derived it neither from Status nor from Boccaccio, and his statement must be regarded simply as a literary fiction. He is only making the conventional claim to ancient classical authority.

15-20 With the opening stanza of the Teseide Chaucer has here interwoven reminiscences of Bk xi, st 63, and of Par, 1, 31, 36, and xiii, 55-59. The reference to Cyrea, the epithet glade, and the specific mention of the laurel and of Polyhymnia all seem to be due to Dante. (See Lowes, MP, XIV, 725 ff.) The adjective memorial may even be due to Dante's "memoria" (Par, 1, 9), though it is appropriate on general grounds to the character of Polyhymnia. On the idea that Helcon was a well see HF, 521, n.

20 For the figure of Tes, xii, 86, Theb, xii, 809, and Filostrato ix, 3. It recurs in Tr, 1, 1 ff., where Chaucer was clearly following Purg, 1, 1.

22 The beginning of this passage from Status (Theb xii, 519 ff.), inserted before l 22, is also quoted in several MSS of the Cantebury Tales at the head of the Knight's Tale. Ll 22-42 closely follow the Thebaid, and have also striking similarities with the Knight's Tale. For example, with l 25 of KnT, I, 869, l 24, I, 1027, 979, ll 30-31, I, 975-76, ll 36-37, I, 881-82, ll 43-46, I, 872-73, 1027, ll 64 ff., I, 938 ff. L 38 repeats I, 972. Emelye is the Emilia of the Teseide (and the Knight's Tale), she does not appear in Status. 25 contre houses, homes ("domos patriae").

50 ff The following summary of the earlier part of the Thebaid is based upon Boccaccio.

51 Juno was angry with Thebes because it had been the scene of Jupiter's amours with Europa, Alcmena, and Semele. Cf Theb, 1, 250 ff.

57 ff The persons here named took part in the famous war of the Seven against Thebes. For a further account of them see Tr, v 1485 ff., and n. Chaucer's spelling of Amphiorax (Amphiaraus) is noteworthy. The final -x is the French spelling for -us, but was perhaps pronounced here as x. Cf Gen ProL, I, 384 f, n.

72 Ermony, apparently Armenia. (Professor Tupper's identification with Ormonde is discussed above.) The reason for the choice of Armenia is unknown. Possibly it was suggested by Scythia, the land of Emilia's sister, possibly by a visit of the King of Armenia to England in 1334, though this assumption implies a rather late date for the poem. Professor Lowes (Washington Univ Studies, I, 11, 17 L) collects references to the presence of Armenians in England and suggests further that Chaucer's interest in Peter of Cyprus implies an interest in other eastern visitors. Dr Wise (p 70) would connect Ermony with Harmonia, who possessed the brooch of Thebes (see Theb, 11 265 ff.). But this involves an unnatural confusion of personal and local names. Moreover, Dr Wise himself remarks (p 136) that a French Theban romance might have represented an Armenian queen as residing in the city. He compares the Roman de Thebes, 3872 for a similar statement about the son of Hergart, King of Ermine.

80 Such references to the satisfaction of Nature were conventional in the description of beautiful women. Cf PhysT, VI, 9, and n.

82 Penelope and Lucretia are also named as examples of constancy in BD, 1081-82, a passage which seems to go back to RR, 8605 ff.

85 The name of Arcite, which does not occur here in any of the MSS, seems necessary to both sense and meter.

105 For this proverbial expression of SqT, V, 537. Skeat and Tupper note, besides the general similarity of the situation to that of the falcon and the false tercelet, several other more or less significant parallels of detail. With l 99 here of V, 523 with l 119, V, 569, with l 141, V, 610, with l 146, V, 644, with l 150, V, 550, with l 162, V 462, 632, with l 166, V, 448, and with l 169, V, 412, 417, 430, 631.

146 Blue is not included since that was the color of constancy. Cf l 330 below, and SqT, V, 644.

150 See Gen iv, 19-20. It is really Jabal, Lamech's son who is called "the father of such as dwell in tents."

157 Cf WB ProL, III, 386, where the line is repeated, with the substitution of whyne for pleyne. The idea is that a treacherous horse can both bite and whinny.

158 bar her on honde, accused her. Cf MLT, II, 620, and n.

182 Cf KnT, I, 2397.

184 at the staves ende, "at a distance, away from close quarters or familiarity, on unfriendly terms" (NED, s v Staff 5b). In Chaucer the figure seems to be drawn from riding or driving. For further discussion see N & Q, Ser 3, VII, 344, 418 f, 471 f.

186 For the various uses of danger cf Gen ProL, I, 517, n. Here it refers, as commonly, to the offishness or fastidiousness of the lady.

194 The custom is illustrated in BD, 1024 ff.

201-03 Cf Ovid's Amores, 11, 19, 3, 11, 4, 17, 25-26.

207 With the account of Anelida here and in the opening lines of the Complaynt, Shannan (pp 38 f) compares Her, x, 137-40 (Ariadne).

211 The metre of the Complaynt is very elaborate. The introductory stanza, rhyming sabaabbab, is exactly matched by the last stanza, ll 342-50, the words of the first line of the Complaint being repeated at the end. The next six stanzas form a kind of strophe, and are matched by the six stanzas of antistrophe which follow. In each series the first four are in the measure of the introductory stanza. The fifth is more complicated, containing sixteen lines, of which the fourth, eighth, twelfth, and sixteenth have five accents and the rest four, their rimes approach the arrangement of a virelay aabaabbabbbabba. The sixth stanza of each returns to the decasyllabic measure, with final rimes aabaabbab as in the introductory stanza, but there are internal rimes in every line. The correspondences are indicated by numbers in the text.

The device of internal rime was a "colour" taught by the rhetoricians. For early English examples of it, mainly in poets who were imitators of Chaucer, see Miss Hammond Engl Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, Durham, N.C., 1927 pp 466-67.

211 With the point of remembrance of "la puntura della rimembranza," Purg. xii, 20
214 ff Parallels to the Complaint to his Lady are as follows 214 and Lady, 55, 216 and Lady, 123, 222 and Lady 35, 237 and Lady, 50, 247 and Lady, 107-08

229 ff With ll 229-34 Professor Shannon (pp 39 f) compares Her., xii, 175-78 (Medea), and with ll 247 ff, Her., i, 49. But the ideas are commonplace and the parallels, like some of the others he cites, are of doubtful significance.

265 Cf ll 113-15 above
272 On sweet foo and similar cases of oxymoron see Tr. i, 411, n

273 ff With ll 273-77 Professor Shannon (pp 40 f) compares Her., ii, 63-66 (Phyllis) and iii, 144 (Briseis), and with 284-89, Her., iii 139-41 (Briseis)

286 mene weyes, middle courses 299 weye womanhede cast aside womanhood by taking the man's part as sutor

306 "Your demeanor flowers but does not seed", that is, there is promise but no performance

315 Cf RR, 9913-14

320 Chaunte-pleure, a French moral poem of the 13th century, entitled La Pleure-chante, warns those who sing but will weep hereafter "Mult vaut meuz plure chante, ke ne fet chaunte et plure" The expression became proverbial for joy that ends in woe. See Rom., VI, 26 f., XIII, 510 f., A. Thomas in Medieval Studies in memory of Gertrude Schoepperle Loomis, Paris and New York, 1927, pp 329 ff. Morawski, Proverbes Français, Paris, 1925, p 47, no 1279

328-34 With the appearance of the lover in a dream Professor Shannon (p 41) compares Herodes, xv, 123 ff (Sappho)

346 Cf PF, 342, n. In Heroides, vii, 3 ff., Dido similarly compares her lament to a swan-song

357 Here, if the poem had not broken off, was obviously to follow the description of the temple of Mars which Chaucer actually used in KnT, I, 1967 ff

THE PARLIAMENT OF FOWLS

Both Chaucer and Lydgate testify to the genuineness of the Parliament. See LGW Prol G, 407, and the Retraction at the end of the CT, also the Prologue to Bk. 1 of the Falls of Princes.

On the date and possible occasion of the poem see Tyrwhitt's edition of the CT, I, xxvii, note e, Saturday Review, XXXI, 468, J. Koch, Est., I, 287 ff, and his Chronology of Chaucer's Writings, Ch. Soc., 1890, pp 37 f., J. B. Bilderbeck, Selections from Chaucer's Minor Poems London 1895, pp 71 ff., O. F. Emerson, MP, VIII, 45 ff., MLN, XXVI, 109 ff., and JEGP, XIII, 566 ff., S. Moore, MLN, XXVI, 8 ff., H. Lange, Angl., XL, 394 ff., J. M. Manly, Studien zur Eng. Phil. (L. Morsbach Festschrift), 279 ff., V. Langhans, Untersuchungen zu Chaucer, Halle, 1918, pp 19 ff., and Angl., LIV, 25 ff., Edith Ruckert, MP, XVIII, 1 ff., M. E. Reid, Wisconsin Stud. in Lang. and Lit., XVIII, 60 ff., T. W. Douglas, MLN, XLIII, 378 ff. (with a convenient summary of recent discussion), H. Braddy, PMLA, XLVI, 1007 ff. (and in Three Chaucer Studies, New York, 1932, part u)

Tyrwhitt's conjecture that the Parlement refers to the marriage of John of Gaunt with Blanche of Lancaster, and that of the Saturday Review, connecting it with the courtship of Ingelbert de Couci and Isabel Plantagenet (in 1364), are now both abandoned. Recent opinion has generally associated the poem with the betrothal of Richard II and Anne of Bohemia in 1381. This theory, as originally presented by Professor Koch, identified the three tercels as Richard, William of Hainault, and Frederick of Meissen. Later Emerson showed that William was not a sutor for Anne in 1381, consequently he put Frederick of Meissen in the second place, and identified the third sutor as Charles VI of France. But even in its amended form the theory proved to be open to serious objections. There is ground for believing that the engagement with Frederick was broken by Anne's relatives in 1377, in which case he could hardly have been regarded as a rival of Richard in 1381, and the evidence of the suit of Charles VI is very slight. These and other difficulties were urged by Professor Manly and Miss Ruckert, the former rejecting the personal allegory altogether and the latter proposing a new set of identifications. According to Miss Rickert's interpretation, the formel represents Philippa of Lancaster, eldest daughter of John of Gaunt, and the suitors are Richard, William of Hainault and John of Blois. She has shown that in 1381, the year of Richard's betrothal to Anne, John of Gaunt apparently had in mind all three men as possible husbands for Philippa. But the evidence does not indicate that they were in any proper sense suitors or rivals. Some of the general objections, too, which were urged by Professor Manly against the Richard-Anne theory, hold against Miss Rickert's suggestion. Recently Miss Reid and Mr Douglas in the articles cited above, have restated the argument for the application to Richard and Anne. The former sees in the passage from the Somnium Scipionis the poet's counsel to the young king, and several scholars have found in the closing lines a veiled appeal to Richard for favor. But these interpretations, doubtful in themselves, do not particularly strengthen the case for the allegory. Mr Douglas, admitting that it is hard to fit the fiction to the historical facts, goes so far as to maintain that the poem would be even more of a compliment if Richard was the only suitor and the rival birds were pure inventions! It must be conceded that these conjectures are far from satisfactory, and it is not surprising that the most recent writers on the subject have searched in new directions for an interpretation. Professor Langhans (in Angl., LIV, 25 ff.) abandons entirely the application to Richard and propounds a new theory, that Chaucer wrote the poem for his own marriage (dated conjecturally in 1374). But this again is pure surmise, unsupported by any real evidence in the text and involves, moreover, an improbably early date of composition. Mr Haldeen Braddy (in the article cited above), after restating the general argument for an allegorical interpretation, brings Richard again into the discussion. He suggests that the poem alludes to the negotiations, conducted in 1376 and 1377, for the marriage of Richard to the Princess Marie of France. Marie died suddenly in May, 1377, and the treaty was never ratified. Since, at the time of the negotiations, she was already affianced to William of Bavaria, Mr Braddy takes him to be the second tercel. For the third eagle he has no historical identification to propose. The circumstances of the negotiations fit several features of the Parlament, and the theory offers fewer difficulties than those previously proposed. But it is not supported by such striking parallels of incident as would make it convincing. On the whole the question of an allegorical interpretation must still be left open. The Parlament looks, without doubt, like an occasional piece. But St Valentine's Day in itself was perhaps a sufficient occasion. After all the discussion, a personal application of the poem, though undeniably possible still seems to be by no means necessary.

If the theories of allegory in the Parlament are rejected, the principal evidence usually relied on for dating the poem about 1381-82 disappears. There remains the uncertain astronomical clue in l 117 which seems to point to 1382 (though the conditions were also fulfilled in 1374). General considerations of literary relationship also favor a date in the early eighties, and the social satire which is probably to be recognized in the speeches of the birds may reflect the "class consciousness" of the period of the Peasants' Revolt. On various interpretations of these speeches see the note to l 323.

On its face the Parlament is a poem for St Valentine's Day. It belongs to the well-known medieval literary genre, the love debate, and the subject discussed is a typical "question of love" ("demande d'amour"). See Manly, p 282, and W A Neilson, The Origin and Sources of the Court of Love [Harv.] Stud and Notes, VI, ch 3. The particular plot or situation is paralleled by a wide-spread tale of The Contending Lovers which is discussed by Dr W E Farnham in PMLA, XXXII, 492 ff XXXV, 247 ff, and Wisc Stud in Lang and Lit, no 2 (1918), 340 ff. Chaucer may even have known a version of the story in which the rival suitors were birds, though he may have made this modification himself to suit his immediate purposes. The idea of a counsel or parliament of birds was familiar. The one described by Gower (Balade xxxv) as held on St Valentine's Day may have been suggested by Chaucer's poem. For other examples see, besides the articles of Manly and Farnham, W Seelmann, Die Vogelsprachen (Vogelparlamente) in Jahrbuch des Vereins für Niederdeutsche Sprachforschung, XIV, 101 ff. Instances of bird allegory in Machaut and Deschamps are cited by Miss Rickert, MP, XVIII 4. For the dream device or framework, comparison may be made with the Book of the Duchess and the House of Fame, and the works cited as sources and analogues in the introductions to the Explanatory Notes on these poems.

Reference should be made to the suggestion of Professor Brusendorff (p 286 n.) that Chaucer may have been influenced by an Old Czech poem the New Council (Nová Rada) of Smil Flaška. Knowledge of this, Brusendorff observed, could have reached Chaucer through some of the Bohemian followers of Anne at the English court. But the two works are not similar enough to make any indebtedness probable. See Langhans, Angl., LIV, 25 ff (with a full summary of Smil's poem at pp 47-56). Professor Magoun has called the editor's attention to an earlier comparison of the two poems by A Kraus, in the Lusty Filologické, XXXI, 199 ff. There is a German rendering of the Nová Rada (Der Neue Rath) by J Wenzig, Leipzig, 1855.

Definite literary borrowings are to be noted in the Parliament from the Somnium Scipionis, at the beginning of the poem, from the Tesede in ll 183-294, and from the De Planctu Naturae of Alanus de Insulis in the description of Nature (ll 298 ff.) Perhaps Alanus furnished also the immediate hint for the parliament itself (see the note to l 298). Further literary indebtedness is indicated in the notes. On the use of Dante see particularly Lowes, MP, XIV, 706 ff. Reminiscences of the Roman de la Rose are few and unimportant, cf. Fansler, p. 134 ff.

Valuable notes on the text, supplementary to those of Skeat, will be found in the editions of Bilderbeck (Selections from Chaucer's Minor Poems, London, 1895) and Emerson (Poems of Chaucer London, 1911). Professor Koch's notes (Chaucer's Klemere Dichtungen, Heidelberg, 1928) deal chiefly with textual variants.

1 The familiar aphorism, "Ars longa, vita brevis," which goes back to Hippocrates Cf. Skeat, EE Prov, p. 57, no. 135.

Professor Manly (Chaucer and the Rhetoricians, Brit Acad, 1926, p. 8) notes that the passage is a typical instance of the rhetorical method of beginning a poem with a "sententia" — here expanded into two stanzas. Further rhetorical devices follow in the preliminary narrative which occupies 119 lines, before the story proper begins.

8 With Chaucer's claim to be an outsider in affairs of love may be compared his attitude in the Troilus.

10-13 With these lines, which express a familiar sentiment, Professor Shannon (Chaucer and the Rom. Poets, Cambridge, 1927, pp. 13 f.) compares Ovid, Amor, i, 1, 21-26, ii, 1, iii, 1, Ars Amat, i, 9, and Rem Am, i, 40.

15 ff Cf. Prologus LGW, 29-39.

31 The Somnium Scipionis of Cicero originally formed part of the De Re Publica Bk. vi. It was preserved by Macrobius (about 400 A.D.), who illustrated it with a long commentary. The combined work of Cicero and Macrobius was of great influence on mediæval literature. Chaucer refers to it in BD 284, HF, 514, and NPT, VII, 3123 (where Macrobius appears to be credited with the authorship of the Somnium). The Scipio referred to is the younger Africanus, who visited Massinissa, king of Numidia, in 150 B.C. They talked all day of the elder Africanus, and the younger dreamed of him at night.

For the suggestion that Chaucer's use of the Somnium Scipionis here involved a veiled petition for remuneration or reward see S. Moore, MLN, XXVI, ii, and Braddy, PMLA, XLVI, 1018.

56 Galaxye, the Milky Way apparently thought of here as a path to heaven. On various popular names for it, "Wating street," "Walsingham Way," etc., see HF, 939, n.

59-63 The nine spheres are those of the seven planets, that of the fixed stars, and the primum mobile. Chaucer refers to their music again in Tr, v, 1812-13. Cicero and Macrobius distinctly recognize only seven notes of the spheres, excluding the primum mobile altogether, and giving the same note to the sphere of the fixed stars and to that of one planet (probably Saturn). Macrobius gives a single note to Venus and Mercury (Commentary, ii, 4, 9).

64 The reference is to the so-called Great or Mundane Year, the period in which all the heavenly bodies should depart from and return to a given position. The time has been variously estimated. Macrobius makes it 15,000 ordinary solar years (ii, 11, 11), the Roman de la Rose, 36,000 years (l. 16816), the Complaynt of Scotland (ed. Murray, EETS, 1872, p. 33), 37,000 years.

80 The resemblance of this passage in Cicero to the doctrine of purgatory doubtless gave it special interest for Christian writers. It was imitated by Dante in Inf, v, 31-36.

82 dede, possibly an old plural in -e, though Chaucer's regular ending is -es.

85 ff Based on Dante, Inf, ii, 1 ff. Cf. also Aen, ix, 224-25.

90 f Cf. Boethius, iii, pr. 3, 19 ff., also Chaucer's Paty, ll. 99 ff.

93 It is uncertain whether there was an adjective forwery, or whether all cases of this apparent compound are to be printed as two words. On the idiomatic use of for with adjectives see KnT, I, 2142, n.

97 The explanation of the dream here suggested by Chaucer is quite in keeping with the theory of the "somnium animale," i.e., a dream caused by some activity or disturbance of the mind. Cf. Curry, pp. 234 ff.

99 The theme of this stanza is familiar; a close parallel is found in Claudian, De VI Consulatu Honoru Augusti, Praefatio, ll. 3-10 (Leipzig, 1876-79, II, 29). Cf. also Macrobius Commentary, i, 3, 4. Skeat notes other passages on the subject, to his list may be added Petronius, Fragm. xxx (ed. Buechele, Berlin, 1922), and Boccaccio, De Gen. Deor, i, 31.

109 Cf. Dante, Inf, i, 83 ff.

111 Macrobius concludes his Commentary with the words "Vere igitur pronuncian-dum est nihil hoc opere perfectius quo un-versa philosophiae continetur integritas."

113 Cytherea, Venus.

114 Cf. MerchT, IV, 1777, and n.

117 North-north-west. This passage affords a possible clue to the date of the poem. Though Venus can never be seen exactly in the position named, she might be so described when she is at or near her greatest distance north from the equator, and the sun is about 45° east of the vernal equinox. Early in May, 1382, as Professor Koch pointed out (Chronology, pp. 37-38), she was visible as evening star slightly north of the northwest point, and Professor Manly (Morsbach Festschrift, pp. 288-89) has shown that the conditions were also fulfilled in 1374 and 1390. Of these three years, 1382 alone seems a probable time for the composition of the Parliament. For further discussion see Koch Est, LV, 224-25 (where the writer withdraws an earlier conjecture, based upon the reading north nor west, that the date should be 1381, when Venus, as morning star from January to June, was visible south and east). Mr Braddy (PMLA, XLVI, 1019) argues that Venus was near enough to the position indicated in April or May, 1377.

Of course, as Professor Manly remarks, the phrase north-north-west may not have been used with exact astronomical significance. It may mean only "in an unpropitious position." He compares Hamlet's "I am but mad north-north-west" (ii, 2, 396).

122 grene ston, mossy stone. The description here has been supposed to refer to Woodstock (See Hales, Folia Litteraria, New York, 1893, ch 7.) If this could be proved it would not necessarily mean that Chaucer resided there when he wrote the poem. Koepfel (Angl, XIV, 234) argues that Chaucer was following a description in Boccaccio's Amorosa Visione, ii, 20-35. Cf also RR, 130 f 127 ff. Here the indebtedness to Dante, Inf, iii, 1 ff, is obvious. Possibly some features of the description — the contrasted parks and streams, for example — are reminiscences of RR, 20279-636, 20651 ff.

140 Cf RR, 16616, Skeat, EE Prov, p 57, no 136. Haeckel, p 24, no 77, though no particular source need be sought for the proverbial statement.

141 The first inscription was in gold, the second in black.

146 156 erroure, ignorance, doubt (lit "wandering").

148 adamauntes, loadstones. The primary meaning was "diamond" (adamas, indestructible), but in mediæval Latin the word was applied to the loadstone, and thus associated by confusion with "ad-amans."

155-56 These lines, which echo a commonplace of the Divine Comedy, seem to have been most definitely influenced by Par iv, 10-12. With ll 157-58 of Inf, iii, 127-29.

155 Perhaps It should be taken here as the equivalent of "there" (like the German introductory "es"), in which case there should be no comma after face.

159 On the use of "servant" for lover see KnT, I, 1814, n.

169 Cf Inf, iii, 19.

176-82 Lists of trees, such as the one here given, are a well-known convention in classical and modern poetry. There is another in KnT, I, 2921 ff, suggested by Tes, xi, 22-24, and others probably known to Chaucer occur in Met, x, 90 ff, in Pharsalia, iii, 440 ff, in Theb, vi, 98 ff, in De Raptu Proserp, i, 107 ff, and in Joseph of Exeter's Iliad (the metrical Dares) i, 505 ff. Spenser imitated Chaucer in the Faerie Queene, i, 1, st 8, 9, and later poets have carried on the convention. For notes on the continuity of the literary tradition from Ennius to modern times see Lane Cooper, Class Weekly, XXII, 166, and W. B. Sedgwick ibid, p 184, cf also Fleckeisen's Neue Jahrbucher, XCVII, 65.

The list here in PF is modeled in part, as Professor Root has shown, on the passage in Joseph of Exeter. The following epithets employed by Joseph are similar to Chaucer's: "iraxinus audax," "the hardy asshe," "cantatrix burcus," "the doctre pypere," "cupressus fiebilis," "the cypresse, deth to playne," "oliva concilians," "the olyve of pes," "ebria vitis," "the dronke vyne," "interpres laurus," "the laurer to devyne." Several of these characterizations have parallels in the other lists. The saylyngge fyr also, is matched by Claudian's "apta fretis abies," and the victor palm, in any case an obvious commonplace, is paralleled in both Ovid and Boccaccio. But the remaining five characterizations seem to be Chaucer's. For a detailed comparison of the different lists see Root, MP, XV, 18 ff.

The epithets are all clear except perhaps the pler elm, which doubtless refers to the tree's support of the vine (Spenser's "vine-propp elme"). The association of elm and vine recurs in several of the lists.

183-294 A close imitation of Tes, vii, st 51-60, 63-66, 61-62. The Italian passage in turn goes back here and there to the Roman de la Rose, and it is hard to judge whether Chaucer recalled the French poem directly or only followed it at one remove. With 190-96 of RR, 1375-82, 661-70, with 204-10, RR, 20395 ff, 20559 ff, 20655 f (possibly, as Fansler, p 135, suggests, the recollection in 204-05 was simply carried over from ED, 340-42). 201-03, which depart from Boccaccio, perhaps contain a reminiscence of Dante's Earthly Paradise (Purg, xviii, 9-15), and 204-07 may be from the Anticlaudianus, i, 3, 20-22. (See O. F. Emerson, PQ, II, 83 ff.)

199 On the mediæval freedom in referring to sacred persons and things see SqT, V, 555, n.

214 Wille is undoubtedly due to a misreading of "voluntade" for "voluptate," an easy scribal error which Dante actually mentions in his Convivio, iv, 6 (as noted by Miss Hammond, MLN, XXXI, 121).

217 Cf Met, i, 468-71.

228 What Chaucer means by the unnamed other thre is not clear. Skeat takes them to refer to "il folle Ardire Lusnghe e Ruffiane" (Foolish Boldness, Flatteries, and Pimps) with which Boccaccio's list ends. But the first two correspond well enough to Foolhardynesse and Flaterye, and the "Ruffiane" are suggested by Messagerye and Meede (the sending of messages and giving of bribes). Chaucer's Beute represents Boccaccio's "Bellezza," his Youthe, "Giovinezza," and his Desyr may stand for "Piacevolezza," to which it is not so exactly equivalent. No other figures are mentioned in Boccaccio's stanza

231 bras, Boccaccio says copper, the metal appropriate to Venus

243 The hill of sand, with its approximate symbolism, is Chaucer's addition

245 Byheste and Art, Boccaccio's "Promesse ed arte," artful behests (hendiadys)

246 ff Cf KnT, I, 1920 ff

253 In referring to the god Priapus Chaucer may have had in mind, besides the Teseide, Ovid, Fasta 1, 415

261 In KnT, I, 1940, the porter of Venus is Idleness, so also in Rom, 582

272 Valence, probably Valence, near Lyons, in France The name survives in the modern "valance," for hangings or curtains

275 Cf the proverb "Sine Cerere et Libero friget Venus," Terence, Eunuchus, iv, 5, 732

277 Cypride, from Cyprus (Cypridis), an epithet of Venus, having reference to her worship in Cyprus Chaucer may have taken the form from Alanus, it occurs again in Tr, v, 208

283 ff This list of lovers is a combination of Boccaccio's stanzas 61-62 and Dante's Inf v, 58-69 L 294 was apparently suggested by the last line in Dante's passage On Calypte (Calisto) see Ovid, Fasta, n, 156, Met, n, 409 ff Chaucer lacked the name of the mother of Parthenopaeus, mentioned by Boccaccio as "that other proud one" ("quell'altra altera" st 61), namely, the second Atalanta The others are mostly familiar and need no explanation On Biblis see Ovid, Met, ix, 453 ff, on Sylla (Scylla), Met, viii, 6-151, xiii, 730-34, and xiv, 18 ff, and on Rhea Silvia (the moder of Romulus), Livy, i, 3-4, and Ovid, Fasta, iii, 9-45

Canace was the Indian queen of the Alexander romances On the trick by which she got Alexander into her power see the Pseudo-Callisthenes and Julius Valerius, ed Muller, in Arrian Anabasis, etc, Paris, 1846, pp 126 ff, also the Mid Eng alliterative Wars of Alexander, ll 5075 ff (EETS, 1886, pp 257 ff) But it seems altogether likely that Chaucer here means Canace (Heroides, xi) On the confusion of the two names see Skeat, Oxf Chau, I, 515 There is another reference to the story of Canace in ML ProI, II, 78 The Mid Eng Romance of Sir Tristrem has been edited by Sir Walter Scott (Edinburgh 1804) by Kolbing (Heilbronn 1882), and by G P McNeill (Scottish Text Soc, 1886) The stories of Dido, Pyramus and Thisbe, and Cleopatra are all told in the Legend of Good Women

298 The account of Nature and the birds is based upon a much longer passage in the De Planctu Naturae of Alanus de Insulis, a poet of the twelfth century (For the Latin text see Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 431 ff) The birds are said by Alanus to be depicted upon the wonderful garments of Nature Chaucer represents them, more naturally, as gathered around the goddess But many of his characterizations correspond to those of Alanus For others he perhaps drew upon RR, 643 ff It is not necessary, however, to assume direct literary sources for what may have come from common belief or personal observation

It should be noted that Alanus compares the birds to an "animalium concilium" (Migne, 435) which perhaps gave Chaucer the immediate suggestion for his Parliament

299 This comparison is proverbial and particularly common in mediæval literature Examples are cited by Miss Hammond, Eng Verse between Chaucer and Surrey p 452

309 In the fourteenth century the ancient popular cult of St Valentine was taken up by courtiers and made the subject of literary treatment Chaucer's Complaint of Venus and the Complaynt d'Amours (of doubtful authorship) were both Valentine poems, and other examples by Gower, Lydgate, Granson, and Charles d'Orleans are mentioned by Manly (Morsbach Festschrift, p 286) Some Valentine's Day celebration may have been the sole outward occasion of the Parliament

312 On the use of that in clauses where when or if might be expected to be repeated see Pars ProI, X, 39, n

323 Skeat remarks that this classification of birds into birds of prey, seed-fowl, worm-fowl, and water-fowl can hardly be Chaucer's own He cites a somewhat similar division attributed to Aristotle by Vincent of Beauvais, Speculum Naturale, xvi, 14 (Douai, 1624) The groups are usually taken to represent the different classes of society, the birds of prey standing for the nobles, the worm-fowl for the bourgeoisie, the seed-fowl for the agricultural class (or, according to some, for the clergy), and the water-fowl for the great merchants Some such application is likely to have been intended, whether or not the Parliament referred to any particular courtship or marriage Miss Rickert, supporting her application of the poem to Philippa of Lancaster, argues that the utterances of worm-fowl and water-fowl reflect the opinions of the merchants and the citizens, two groups who were hostile toward John of Gaunt But it is not necessary to see in them anything except the natural reaction of the middle classes against the sentiments of courtly love Holding this to be the real issue involved, two recent writers have offered opposite interpretations of the poet's purpose According to Mr Douglas (MLN, XLIII, 381 f) Chaucer was poking fun at the inability of the lower classes to appreciate the fine points of courtly love According to Mr David Patrick (PQ, IX, 61 ff) his sympathies were with the common birds But Mr Patrick exaggerates the satire on courtly love in various works of Chaucer

For the suggestion that the passages about worm-fowl contain veiled comments by Chaucer on the social discontent at the time of the Peasants' Revolt, see Bilderbeck, Chaucer's Minor Poems pp 74 ff

331 For the belief that the eagle looks straight at the sun when it is brightest of the Mid Eng Bestiary, ll 68 ff (Matzner's Altenglische Sprachproben I Berlin, 1867, p 59) also the etymology of Isidore, "Aquila ab acumine oculorum vocata" (Migne, Pat Lat LXXXII, 460)

333 Cf Pliny, Hist Nat, x, 3, where six kinds of eagles are enumerated

337 Cf SqT V, 428

339 The merlin preys upon smaller birds like the lark

341 The dove seems to be distinguished from the turtul in l 355 below Perhaps the ring-dove or wood-pigeon is meant

342 Alanus refers to the swan, "sui funeris praeco" (Migne, 435) But the idea is of course familiar Skeat compares Pliny, Hist Nat, x, 23, and Vincent of Beauvais, Spec Nat, xvi, 49-50 (Douai, 1624) Cf Anel 346 f LGW, 1355 f, Skeat, EE Prov, p 58, no 137, Haeckel, p 44, no 153

343 For the ill-boding owl see, besides Alanus (Migne, 436) Aen, iv, 462, Theb, iii 511-12, and particularly Met, v, 533 ff, where the story is told of the transformation of Ascalaphus (Escaphalo in Tr, v, 319)

345 On the supposed thievishness of the chough (mentioned by Alanus, Migne, 436) see C Swanson, Folk Lore and Provincial Names of British Birds, London, 1886, p 75 Skeat also refers to Pliny, Hist Nat, x, 29 The Bohn translator of Pliny refers in a note (London, 1855-57, II, 508) to parallel stories

346 The skornynge jay, so called, probably with reference to its mocking imitation of the sounds of other birds

351 The epithet, Venus sone, is probably due to the proverbial reputation of the sparrow for lecherousness Cf Gen ProI, I, 626, n. An allusion to Lesbia's sparrow in Catullus, suggested by K P Harrington, Catullus and his Influence, Boston, 1923, p 142, is rightly questioned by J A S McPeck, MLN, XLVI, 294

353 For foules two MSS read flies, which Skeat adopted But Professor Cook has shown (MLN, XXI, 111, XXII, 146) that bees were classified as birds ("aves") by patristic and mediæval authorities

357 Chaucer perhaps confused Alanus' description of the pheasant with that of the "gallus silvestris, domestici galli deridens desidiam" a few lines below (Migne, 436) Or he may have had in mind the fact that a pheasant will breed with the common hen (for which Skeat cites Stanley's History of Birds, 1880, p 279)

358 The proverbial watchfulness of the goose is illustrated by the story of the saving of the Roman Capitol in 389 B C The cuckoo is called unnatural (unkeynde) because of its behavior to the hedge-sparrow, cf King Lear, I, 4, 235 See also l 612

360 This refers either to the belief that the drakes destroy the young ducks (Bell) or that they sometimes kill the female in the fury of their wantonness For the latter idea see Vincent, Spec Nat, xvi, 27 (Douai 1624)

361 Skeat cites numerous authorities for the belief that the stork destroys its female if he finds it unfaithful See Vincent, Spec Nat, xvi 48 (Douai, 1624), Bartholomæus, De Proprietatibus Rerum, xu, 8 (citing Aristotle) Oesterley's notes (p 725) to Gesta Romanorum, c 82, Berlin 1872 The allusion might also be to the story that a stork struck out the eyes of a servant who committed adultery with his master's wife (Aelian, De Natura Animalium viii, 20)

363 The raven is called wise because of its predictions For the crow with voice of care see Georgics, I, 388 "Tum cornix plena pluviam vocat improba voce" (not quite accurately translated, if it is the source), cf also Batman's translation of Bartholomew, xu, 9 "with an eleunge voyce" (London, 1582 fol 181 verso)

364 The throstle was apparently supposed to live to great age

371 formel, applied to the female of a fowl, seems to mean primarily "mate fit companion" On proposed identifications of the formel here see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the PF

376 at his reste, at home

379 The term incare Chaucer doubtless took from Alanus, where it occurs in cols 453, 476, and 479 (Migne) It is also found in RR, 16782, 19507 Cf further PhysT, VI, 20

380 f This familiar idea appears in Alanus, col 443 (Migne). See also RR 16961 and Boethius, m, m 9, and cf Gen ProI, I, 420 n

388 The break in the construction is unusual, even for Chaucer's period

393 f The commentators who support the allegorical interpretation of the poem insist, reasonably enough, on the superiority of Richard in rank and birth But in view of the fact that he was only fifteen years old in 1382, the latest date suggested for the poem, these lines seem extravagant and inappropriate Certainly Professor Bilderbeck's interpretation of secre as a reference to Richard's secretive nature is not warranted. The adjective refers rather to the virtus of secrecy in love, the opposite of "avaunting" See l 430 below, also Tr, I, 744, and NPT, VII, 2917

411 Thus is, to be read as a monosyllable ("this"), and frequently so written

452 f On the applicability of these lines to William of Bavaria see H Braddy, PMLA, XLVI, 1015

477 f Professor Emerson is seen in these lines allusions to the youth of Charles VI and his helplessness in the hands of his uncles. Miss Rickert remarks, on the other hand, that they are especially appropriate to John of Blois, who was in prison and consequently unable to offer his lady any service. But neither application is necessary, the speech may be no more than a modest profession of unworthiness suitable to any lover.

485 Note the use of legal terms (ple, pletynge etc.) in this and the following stanzas.

489 this speche, the speaking in general, rather than the plea of the third tercet.

494 On this colloquialism see FrT, III, 1602, n.

510-11 The meaning and punctuation are uncertain. Skeat interpreted "If it be your wish for any one to speak, it would be as good for him to be silent." Possibly it means rather "If you please (with your permission), a man may say what he might as well keep silent about." Cf Mel, VII, 1219, n.

518 A proverb equivalent to "Proffered service stunketh", cf CYT, VIII, 1066, n., for a verbal parallel of Dante's "offizio non commesso," Purg x, 57.

564 which a resoun, what sort of a reason.

574 Cf RR, 4733-34. But the sentence is proverbial, see Skeat, EE Prov, pp 58 f., no 139, Haeckel, p 19, no 62.

592 Apparently proverbial. Cf Lydgate, Dance Macabre, l 392, 511 f. (in Hammond, English Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, Durham, N.C., 1927).

595 Also proverbial. Cf "There's as good fish in the sea as ever was caught", Skeat, EE Prov, p 59, no 140, Haeckel, p 11, no 37.

599 Cf Boethius, iv, pr 4, 90 ff.

612 See l 358, n.

630 Interpreted by Skeat "I have no other (i.e. no wrongful) regard to any rank."

632 If I were Resoun. This seems to refer to the function of a counselor, commonly discharged by Reason in the allegorical writings of the period. (It should be noted, however, that several MSS read If hit were resoun.)

636 With this remark of Nature of PhysT, VI, 9 ff., and n.

647 ff These lines are usually taken to refer to the negotiations preceding Richard's marriage with Anne. Mr Braddy (PMLA, XLVI, 1017 ff.) has shown that they are at least equally applicable to the earlier plans for his betrothal to Marie. But the delay was common enough as a matter of literary convention, and makes a natural ending for a poem of the type of the "demande d'amour."

657 for tarrynge, to prevent tarrying, to avoid delay.

675 A roundel, or triolet, is a short poem in which the first line or lines recur as a refrain in the middle and at the end. The usual form in Machaut, Deschamps, and Chaucer is abb abR (in which R represents one or more of the first three lines). The length of the poem varies from fourteen lines, when both refrains repeat three lines in full, to nine when one refrain is omitted entirely and the other consists of a single line. The MSS do not make clear in the present instance, and in Chaucer's Mercules Beaute, how many lines should be repeated in each refrain, but the form adopted by Skeat and here printed has good support and fits the meaning of the lines.

677 The note, the tune. The words "Qu bien aime a tard oubler," written in several MSS, probably indicate the French tune, though (as Skeat observes) it is hard to see how Chaucer's line could be matched by a tune which goes with a line of four accents. Octosyllabic pieces of Moniot de Paris and Machaut beginning with these words, and a ballade of Deschamps having nearly the same burden, are cited by Skeat, who also notes scattered occurrences of the line. It is recorded as a proverb by Morawski, Proverbes Français, Paris, 1925, p 67, no 1835, and Haeckel, p 3, no 10.

697 Some commentators see in these closing lines an appeal for royal favor. Professor Jones (MLN, XXVII, 95) compares rather the sentiment of Inf, i, 83.

BOECE

Although the Boece is ascribed to Chaucer in only one MS (Shurley's Add, 16165, British Museum) it is generally accepted as authentic. Chaucer acknowledges the authorship of such a work in Adam Scryveyn, the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women, and the Retraction at the end of the Canterbury Tales, and Lydgate includes it in his list of Chaucer's writings in the Prologue to Bk 1 of the Falls of Princes.

The exact date is unknown. But from the fact that Boece and Troilus are coupled by Chaucer in Adam Scryveyn it is commonly held that the works were written in the same period, and the Boece is put shortly after 1380. Though the influence of Boethius is discernible in works probably written by Chaucer before that year, it is most marked in the Troilus, the Knight's Tale, and other Canterbury Tales, all presumably of later date.

Chaucer's translation, though painstaking, is diffuse and sometimes very free, and it is heavily glossed. He unquestionably used, alongside of the Latin original, the Latin commentary of Nicholas Trivet and a French prose version ascribed to Jean de Meun. Unfortunately neither Trivet's commentary nor the French translation is accessible as a whole in print. But the English text, in those passages where the French work is available for comparison, has been shown to correspond sometimes to the French and sometimes to Boethius's Latin Dr E T Silk, of Yale University, in an uncompleted and unpublished study of which he has kindly communicated the results to the editor, has made a comparison of Chaucer's text with Trivet's which leaves no doubt of Chaucer's use of the commentary. It may be expected that Dr Silk's work, when printed, will make clear Chaucer's exact indebtedness, respectively, to the Latin commentator and the French translator.

For some account of the French version, to serve until the publication of the complete text, reference may be made to M H Liddell, Acad XLVIII, 227, Nation [New York] LXIV, 125, also his notes to the Globe text (from which are derived most of the French citations given below). The French version is preserved in MSS Fr 1079, Lat 8654, and Lat 18424, in the Bibliothéque Nationale MS 18424 contains also the Latin original and Trivet's commentary, but was almost certainly not the copy used by Chaucer. Jean de Meun's authorship, which is not certain, is defended by E Langlois in Rom, XLII, 331 ff, in opposition to the opinion which ascribes to him the version in mixed prose and verse preserved in MS Fr 17272 and numerous other MSS.

The glosses, which are freely interspersed in the course of both the French and the English translations, Professor Liddell held to be derived from the commentary wrongly ascribed to St Thomas Aquinas. But Miss K O Petersen (PMLA, XVIII, 173 ff) showed that in nearly every case Chaucer's glosses correspond more closely to those of Trivet, whose work was probably a source of this Pseudo-Aquinas. For further discussion see J L Lowes, Rom Rev, VIII, 383 ff, and for a convenient and judicious exposition of the whole question, B L Jefferson, Chaucer and the Consolation of Philosophy of Boethius, Princeton, 1917, pp 1-15. Good editions of the Latin text are those of Obbarius (Jena, 1843), Peiper (Leipzig, 1871) and Stewart and Rand (London, 1918). The last named contains the English translation of "IT" (1609), revised and corrected. For exposition and criticism of the Consolatio see H F Stewart, Boethius, an Essay, Edinburgh, 1891, and E K Rand, in Harv Stud in Class Phil, XV, 1 ff.

In the notes that follow, no systematic comparison of Chaucer's text with either the Latin or the French is presented. Passages from one or the other, and from the glosses, are cited simply to elucidate the English version. Errors in the translation are noted when they seem significant. They are more fully discussed in Mr Stewart's Boethius, pp 222-25, and in Dr Jefferson's monograph, pp 16 ff. Glosses clearly intended to be recognized as such are printed in italics. But no attempt has been made to indicate the numerous words and phrases throughout the translation which also rest upon glosses. The Latin glosses which appear frequently in the English MSS are also not included in the text, though attention is called to some of them in the notes. This material cannot be satisfactorily treated until Dr Silk publishes his study of the French text and Trivet's commentary.

Miss L Cipriani (PMLA, XXII, 565) has argued—very dubiously—that Chaucer's translation was influenced by the Roman de la Rose. But the parallels she cites are mostly without significance. See Dr Fansler's comments, Chaucer and the Roman de la Rose, New York, 1914, pp 180 ff.

Title

It may be noted that the "Consolatio" was a recognized literary type in Greek and Latin. For examples, of the address to Apollonius, who had lost a son (a work attributed to Plutarch, but now held to be spurious, see the Moralia, Leipzig, 1925, I, 248 ff) and the consolation of Seneca, addressed to Marcia daughter of Cremutius Cordus, when suffering a similar bereavement.

Book I

Meter 1

- 4 rendyng "lacerae," rent or tattered
 13 wyerd, "fata." In the Latin the adjective "maesta" (sorrowful) goes with "sens." 22 to urecches, a mistranslation of "maestas," which refers to "annis," in sad years.
 23 yclepud, "uocata," invoked (referring to death).
 27 lyghte, "leibus," correctly glossed temporels, transitory, in MS A.
 31 unpretous "impia."
 32 unagrear duellynges, "ingratas moras."
 33 what why, "Quid."
 35 in stedefast degre, "stabil gradu."

Prose 1

- 2 and merked, etc, wrote down by the use of a stylus.
 5 The woman here described is Philosophy.
 8 with swch vigour, etc, "inexhausta uigoris."
 26 the beaute, "Quarum speciem," which begins the next sentence in the Latin.
 32 ff. By the Greek P and T are meant π and ο, the initials of Πρακτικη and θεωρητικη, Practical (or Active) and Theoretical (or Contemplative). On this distinction in Philosophy see Boethius, in Porphyrium Dial. 1, and on the corresponding distinction between the active and the contemplative life see StCNT, VIII, 85, n.

50 cruel, "torus," stern, severe 53 f The translation here is a conflation of Fr "ces communes putereles abandonnees au peuple," and Lat "has scenicas meretriculas"

60 nothyng fructifyenge, "infructuosus"
 61 destroyen the corne, "segetem necant," gl "destruunt" (Triv)

63 f This follows the French "Tiennent les pensees des hommes en costume et ne les dehvrent pas de maladie" (Lat "hominumque mentes assuefaciunt morbo, non liberant")

64 ff "At si quem profanum, uti vulgo solitum uobis, blanditiæ uestræ detraherent" Chaucer follows Jean de Meun in mistranslating "uti vulgo solitum uobis"

72 me, i e, from me
 73-74 "eleaticis atque academicis studis" The Eleatic philosophers were followers of Zeno of Elea, the Academic, of Plato

75 mermaydenes, "Sirenes"
 76 til it be at the laste, Chaucer apparently was translating "usque in exitum" (as in Peiper) The better reading appears to be "exitum" (Rand)

81 wrothly, rather "sadly", Lat "maestior"

94 Freely rendered from Lat "uultum luctu grauem atque in humum maerore delectum"

Meter 2

1 dreynt in overthrowinge depnesse, "praecipua mersa profundo"

6 dryen, "aucta", perhaps Chaucer read "acta"

11 the sterres of the coolde mone, "gelidae sidera lunae," possibly with reference to the constellations seen by moonlight but invisible by day

13 recourses, courses, orbits Istyt by diverse speeres, moved or whirled, by different spheres "Et quaecumque uagos stella recorsus Exercent uacos flexa per orbes" According to the Ptolemaic system of astronomy each planet was fixed in a revolving sphere which carried it about in its orbit The reference here is particularly to the theory of direct and retrograde motions Cf the Astr ii, 35

15 by nombres, etc "Comprehensam numerus uictor habebat" Trivet adds an astronomical demonstration

35 fool, "stolidam", Fr. "la fole terre"

Prose 2

31 uplited in a frounce, "contracta in rugam ueste"

Meter 3

6 clustred, "glomerantur"

8 On the repetition of when by that of

Pars Prol, X, 39, n, firmament, "polus," gl "firmamentum" (Triv)

9 plowngy, "nimbosus"

13 Boreas, Boreas, the north wind

14 beteth, "Verberet"

17 rechaken, "uibratus"

Prose 3

3 took hevene, apparently from Fr "je pris le ciel" rather than Lat "hausi caelum"

4 so that I sette, "ubi deduxi"

6 byholde, "respicio"

23 MS C inserts quasi diceret, non above neue, so in Trivet

27 Reference may be here intended to such philosophers as Solon, Anaxagoras, and Pythagoras, all of whom lived before Plato and met with opposition in their time

53 MS C inserts persequendo above perverte, so in Trivet

57 So yif, "quod si," but if 58 Anaxogore, Anaxagoras (b c 500-428) was exiled from Athens on the charge of impiety

60 Zeno of Elea (Velia) in Italy, born about b c 488, the inventor of Dialectic The accounts of his torments vary See Diogenes Laertius, ix, 26 ff, Cicero, De Nat Deor, iii, 82, Tusc, ii, 22, Valerius Maximus, iii, 3

62 the Seneciens, and the Canyos, and the Soranos, "at Canios at Senecas at Soranos," meaning men like Seneca, Canius, and Soranus The form Seneciens, which might more naturally be taken to mean followers of Seneca, is probably due, as Liddell suggests, to the Fr "Seneciens" On the familiar story of Seneca see MkT, VII, 2495 ff Julius Canius (or Canus) was a Stoic philosopher, condemned to death by Caligula His death is described by Seneca, De Tranquillitate, cap xiv Soranus, another Stoic, was condemned to death under Nero See Tacitus, Annales, xvi, 23

70 the bylters see, etc, "in hoc uitae salo", gl "in hac uita que salum, id est, mare dicitur" (Triv)

87 pails, spelled paleys in some MSS, in either case it means "rampart" (Lat "uallo")

Meter 4

1 cleer of vertu, "serenus," gl "clarus uirtute"

7 hete, "aestum," surge Cf Chaucer's own gloss on hete in m 7, below

9 Visevus, Vesuvius

21 stable of his ryght "stabilis suique iuris", Fr "estables de son droit"

Prose 4

3 an asse to the harpe, proverbial Boethus has it in Greek, ονος λυρας (in some MSS ονος προς λυραν), in MS C, "asinus ad liram" For another case of its use by Chaucer see Tr, I, 731. A number of occurrences of the Greek proverb are cited in the edition of Boethius by A. Fortescue, London, 1925, p 11

4 Chaucer omits the quotation, Ἐγὼ δα, μὴ κείθε νοῶν, "speak out, conceal not in mind" (Homer, Il 1, 363) Jefferson (p 17) notes that several words of the Latin are omitted in this Prose

With 4-6 of Tr 1, 857

10 And scheweth it nat ynogh by hymselfe, "nec per se satis eminet"

23 enformedest, "formares"

25 ordre of hevene, "ad caelistis ordinis exempla", a reference to Plato's Republic, ix, the end

29 confermedest, "sanxisti" See the Republic, v 473 D

37 See the Republic, vi

41 felonous turmentours cuteseens, "improbis flagitiosisque ciuibus"

45 M^S C¹ inserts c^o Platonis after auctorite, "sc quam ex traditione Platonis" (Triv)

50 knowynge with me "mihi, consui", Fr "consachables avecques moi"

55 that ne myghte nat ben relesed by prayers, "inexorables," gl "que exoracione relaxari non possent" (Triv)

62 Conigaste, Congastus (or Cungastus) This passage is the only authority for the facts Congastus is mentioned in Cassiodorus, Epist viii, 28

65 Trygwille, Triguilla

73 myseses and grevances, "calumnus," slanders

79 carages, "uectagalibus," taxes See FrT, III, 1570

81 ff This gloss is divided by Skeat, and the second part put after l 101. But the French text has it combined, as in the English MSS. See Jefferson, p 14

95 unplatable, "inexplicabilis"

99 On the phrase comune profit, which here translates "communis commode ratione" see CIT, IV, 431, n

100 so that, etc., "ne coemptio exigeretur" (purpose, not result)

102 Paulyn, Decius Paulinus, consul in 498. Skeat refers to Cassiodorus, Epist i, 23, iii, 29

110 Albyn, probably Decius Albinus Skeat refers to a letter addressed to him by Theodoric, see Cassiodorus, Epist iv, 30

113 On Cyprian see also two letters in Cassiodorus, Epist v, 40, 41, and of H F Stewart's Essay on Boethius, pp 42-52

118 to hem-ward, "apud auhos", Fr "vers ceus du paliz roial"

123 On Basulvus, see Stewart's Essay, p 48

125 for nede of foreyne moneye, "alienae aeris necessitate"

126 Opilou, Opilio, brother of Cyprian See Cassiodorus, Epist v, 41, viii, 16 Gaudencius, otherwise unknown

134 f aperceyved, "compertum" made known

The Lyng, Theodoric, King of Italy 493-526. Ravenna was his capital

140 lymed, rather "added" "astru"

153 axestow in somme "summam quae-ris", will you have it in a word?

162 forsake, deny

163 ff "At uolui nec umquam uelle desistam Fatebimur?", sed impediendi delatoris opera cessabit (or "cessavit") Chaucer's rendering is inaccurate

177 See Republic vi 485 C

181 to gessen or prisun, "aestimandum"

195 nedes "negotus," "besoungnes" (mistaken by Chaucer for "besoungs")

201 Germaines sone, Caligula, son of Germanicus

218 Epicurus, in Lactantius's De Ira Dei, xii

238 the gilt, etc., "maiestatis crimen," "le blâme de la royale maeste"

246 secre, in the Lat not a substantive but an adjective modifying "pretium" understood "Minuit conscientiae secretum, quotiens ostentando quis factum receipt famae pretium" The French has the same mistake

256 submyttede, "summitteret," subdued

265 Boethius was imprisoned in a tower at Pavia

270 The gloss points out that the remark is ironical

276 bare me on hande, accused me See MLT, II, 820, n

283 sacrilege, "sacrilegio" gl "sorceria"

287 Pittagoras, Pythagoras The saying is given by Boethius in Greek, ἔρω θεῶν (MSS θεῶν) See Iamblichus, De Vita Pythag xvii (86), Seneca, De Vita Beata, xv

291 I, for me, an unusual use of the nominative

293 right clene secre chaumbre, "penetral innocens domus", referring to his innocent private life Chaucer's explanation rests upon a gloss, "uxor"

301 feith of so greet blame, "de te tanti criminis fidem capiuat"

308 of thy free wil, "ultra", "de ton gre" of thy part

311 bytydeth, "accedit" (mistranslated as "accidit")

324 good gessynge, "existimatio bona" So again in 334, by gessynge, "existimatio bona"

326 Loosely translated

329 charge, "sarcinam," burden.

Meter 5

1 wheel, etc., "stelliferi orbis" "la roe qui porte les estoules," i e., the Primum Mobile

2 festnyd, "nexus" variant for "nixus," (Obbarius)

7 fulle hornes, i e., at full moon

10 derke hornes, the faint horns of the crescent Cf Tr, iii, 624

14 cometh eft, etc., "Solitas iterum mutet habenas," should change again his accustomed reins, i.e., change chariot, become again a morning-star Skeat quotes Cicero, De Nat Deor, II, 20, 53 "dicatur Lucifer, cum antegreditur solem, cum subsequatur autem, Hesperus" Skeat's emendation, corneth for cometh, seems unnecessary

17 restreynest, shortenest, "stringis"

21 swyfte tydes, "Agiles horas"

29 Arcturus, Arcturus, a Bootis, in Libra

31 Syrus, a Canis Maioris, the Dog-Star, in Cancer

37 slydyng Fortune, "lubrica Fortuna"

47 the blame and the peyne of the feloun, "Crimen iniqui," gl "penam criminis iniqui"

49 covered and kembd, "compta"

57 erthes, lands, "terras"

64 boond, i.e., the chain of love, described in II, m 8 Cf also KnT, I, 2987 ff

Prose 5

19 by emperoures, etc., "multitudinis imperio," "par empire ne par commandement"

22 In the original the quotation is in Greek εις κοινου εστιν, εις βασιλευς (II, II, 204, with εστω changed to εστιν)

41 face, the look of this place, "loci huius facies"

55 thynges opposed, accusations, "ob-jectorum"

72 thy uode muse, "Musae saeuentis" See m 5, above

83 thilke passynous, etc., "ut quae in tumorem perturbationibus influentibus induruerunt"

87 by an esyere touchyng, "tactu blandiore"

Meter 6

1 the heuy stierre, "grauis Cancrī sidus" The sun is in Cancer in June 6 lat hym gon, etc., "Quernas pergat ad arbores"

10 churkyng, hoarse, raucous, "Stridens campus inhorruit" Cf KnT, I, 2004

24 by overthrowyng wey, "praecipitua"

Prose 6

14 fortunous [fohe] (MSS fortunous fortune), "fortuita temeritate," "fortunele fohe" Perhaps the MSS are right, and the translation is due to "fortuitus casibus," two lines above

19 See m 5, above

25 ough! "Pape"

26 whi that thou art sik, etc., "our in tam salubri sententia locatus aegrotus"

28 I conyecte, etc., "nescio quid abesse coniecto," "ne ne see quot"

35 so that, "nedum," much less

40 so as [thorw] the strengthe, etc., "uelut hante ualli robore" On the reading see the Textual Notes

60 ther man nat al arrace, etc., "conuellere autem sibi que totum extirpare non possunt"

78 pleynly, "plenisime," "plenement"

80 the entree of recoueryng, "aditum reconcelandae"

81 For-why, for forth, wherefore, since therefore

82 exiled fro thy propre goodes, "exsulem te et expoliatum propriis bonis." Cf KnT, I, 1272

95 noryssyng, "fomitum," furtherance, perhaps misread as "fomentum" Cf II, m 11, 39

104 fastere, "firmioribus" of thoughts deceyded, "mentium" (confused with "mentior"?)

113 menelche, "mediocribus"

Meter 7

2 yeten adoun, "Fundere"

3 truble, adj, "Turbidus"

4 medleth the heete, "Misceat aestum"

See m 4, 7, above
6 f clere as glas, "Vitrea" Cf KnT, I, 1958

8 wihstande, "Mox resolutio Sordida caeno Visibus obstat" (Possibly the reading wihstant, sg, as in Lat, is correct)

10 royleth, "uagatur"

16 holden the weye, etc., "Tramite recto Carpere callum"

Book II

Prose 1

2 by atempre stillenese, "modesta taciturnitate" Chaucer seems to apply this to Boethius, Boethius to Philosophy 16 colours and desceytes, "fucos," gl "id est, deceptiones"

18 ff Cf Tr, IV, 2-3

30 hurten and despysen, "incessere" "assailur"

34 entre, "adyto," sanctuary, confused by Chaucer with "aditu" (as also in the gloss of the Pseudo-Aquinas quoted by Liddell)

44 ff Com, etc., "Adst igitur rhetoricae suadela dulcedinis" 50 moedes or prolacons, "modos"

55 ff Cf Fortune

57 alway tho ben her maneres, "ista natura" is omitted in translation

69 use her manerus, "utere moribus"

78 ff Chaucer's note is apparently due to an alternative reading such as is recorded in MS C² "uel quam non relictam, secundum alios libros"

103 floor, "aream," domain

118 amonges, from time to time, "inter se"

126 Cf Tr, I, 848

Meter 1

4 Eurippe, Euripus, the channel between Boeotia and Euboea, which was famous for its strong current 13 Cf Tr, iv, 7

Prose 2

Cf Fort 25 ff
26 "habes gratiam uelut usus alienus"
60 Worth up, "Ascende", imperative of worthen (AS "weorðan") 64 "An tu mores ignorabas meos?" omitted in translation 65 Cresus, Croesus See Herodotus, I, 86, 87, and cf M&T, VII, 2727 ff 73 Perseus, "Persi regis," of King Perseus, Fr "le roy de Perse" The reference is to the defeat of Perseus (or Perses) III, of Macedonia, by L. Aemilius Paulus in 168 B C See Livy, xlv, 8 78 ff Cf M&T, VII, 1973 ff, and n 82-85 in the entre or in the seler of Jupiter, "in iouis lumine", Fr "ou suel, c'est dire en l'entree de la meson Jupiter" In Boethius the quotation runs, δοτους μηδους τον μεν ενα κακων τον δε ερεπον εαων See II, xxiv, 527 For the use of tonne, cf also WB Prol, III, 170, L&W Prol F, 195 Seler is possibly a mistake for selle, "seuil"

Meter 2

2 melde, "fundat"
7 bryghte, "edita," lofty 12 as fool large, "Multi prodigus auri" 16 scheweth othere gapynges, "Alios pandit hiatus" (some MSS read "altos") 19 to any certeyn ende, "Certo fine," within a certain limit

Prose 3

34 prynces, Festus and Symmachus Boethius married Rusticiana, Symmachus's daughter 36 the whiche thyng, i e, affynite
44 over al this, "Praetereo," I pass over, mistranslated as "praeterea" 57 under the blithnesse of peple, "sub plebis alacritate" 65 Circo, the Circus (properly ablative, Lat "in circo") 67 preysynge and laude, "largitione," largesse 73 as her owne delices, "ut delicias suas," as her darling 81 forsaken, "negare"
88 schadowe or tabernacle, "scaenam," "en la cortine et en l'ombre" 95 See Fort, 71
97 and also, etc, "fortunae etiam manentis" 98 what thar rekke, what need you care?

Meter 3

17 overwhelveth, "Verso concitat aequore" 21 tumblyngge, "caducus" as also in pr 4, ll 169 f, below, and in, pr 9, l 178

Prose 4

7 ff Cf Tr, iii, 1625-28, Dante, Inf, v, 121 ff 16 al be ut, "si," if 29 Symmachus was put to death by Theodoric soon after the execution of Boethius 37 thi wyf, Rusticiana, daughter of Symmachus 47 conseylours, "consulares" of consular rank of whiche, "quorum," "es quex" 54 ben dwelled, "suppetunt"
60 Cf Fortune, 38
78 thi delices, "delicias tuas," here "effeminacy" 84 ff Cf Tr, iii, 816 ff
91 angwyssche of nede, "angustia rei familiaris," "angoisse de povrete" 104 ff for alwey etc, "inest enim singulis, quod inexpertus ignoret, expertus exhorreat" 122 nothyng wrecchid, "adeo mihi est miserum" 128 aggreablete "aequanimitate"
132 ff Cf Tr, iii, 813 ff, MLT, II, 421 ff 170 ff ledeth, "uelut" Cf Tr, iii, 820-33
179 that it, what See K&T, I, 2710, n 186 lost, loss (subst) 195 al the kynde of mortel thynges, "omne mortalium genus"

Meter 4

10 lause, loose (ON "lauss")
12 ff Freely translated "Fugiens periculosam Sortem sedis amoenae Humili domum memento Certus figere saxo" 19 a cler age, "Duces serenae aeuum"

Prose 5

4 Now undrstand heere, "Age", "Or entens ica" 16 to hem that dispenden, "effundendo," strictly "by spending" So also "coaceuando," by hoarding 29 al hool, "tota"
51 semen a fair creature, rather "semen fair to a creature", "naturae pulchrum esse uideatur" 54 of the laste beaute of the world, "postremae aliquid pulchritudinis," something of the basest beauty Peiper reads "postremo" 84 of bestis, "animantium" (not "animalium") 93 to the, not in Boethius, where the sense is rather "to her" 141 subgt, "sepositis," separate (misread as "suppositis"?)

144 beest, "animal"
173 han to knowe etc, "sese ignorare naturae est"

175 cometh hem of vice, "hominibus uitio venit," "leur vint"

193 and for his wikkidnesse, obscure Perhaps "even for his wickedness", "cum pessimus quisque eoque alieni magis audius quidquid usquam auri gemmarumque est se solum qui habeat dignissimum putat"

202 From Juvenal, Sat x, 22 Cf WBT, III, 1191 ff

Meter 5

1 The French version of this meter (from MS Lat 18424) the Latin original, and Trivet's comments are all printed in full by Miss Petersen, pp 190 ff With the passage as a whole of The Former Age

9 pyment and clarree are associated in RR, 8379, a passage, based upon this meter, which may in turn have influenced Chaucer's translation

11 f fleeses of the contre, etc, "uellera Serum," referring to the Seres, the Chinese, the French translation, "les toisons de Simans," might appear to mean Syria Cf Virgil, Georg, II, 121 venym of Tyrie, "Tyrio ueneno" (rather "dye" than venym, cf Georg, II, 465)

Prose 6

6 as greet damages, etc The Latin has a rhetorical question

12 the imperie of consulers, "consulare imperium" See Livy, III, 32

30 whuch, what

32 so requerable, "expetibilis"

57 As whilom, etc, "Cum putaret" translation perhaps due to Fr "comme" A tyraunt, Nicocreon, king of Cyprus A fre man of corage, "liberum," gl "sc animo" The reference is to Anaxarchus of Abdera See Valerius Maximus, III, 3, Diog Laert, IX, 59

65 ff So that the torments, etc, Fr "les torments li sages homs le fist estre" But the Latin is also closely similar

74 Busyrdes, Busiris (called Busirus in MkT, VII, 2103), a king of Egypt who sacrificed all strangers, until he was slain by Hercules See Virgil, Georg, III, 5, Ovid, Tristia, III, 11, 39

77 Regulus, Marcus Regulus, B C 255 See Cicero, De Officiis, III, 99

82 ff Wenestow, etc Obscure Cf the Lat "Vilamne igitur erus hominis potentiam putas, qui quod ipse in alio potest, ne id in se alter valeat, efficere non possit?" Probably a thynge should be shifted to follow the second doon

112 and as of wil, "ultra"

119 And dignytees, etc The number is confused. Lat "collata improbis dignitas."

125 that beren hem, i e, thynges
126 reproved, disproved, Lat "redarguantur"

Meter 6

1 We han wel knowne, "noutraus" This passage, as Mr Lowes has noted, is a confition of Boethius's Latin and Jean de Meun's French

3 ff Cf MkT, VII 2463 ff

4 made sleen, Fr "fist oare"

5 his brother, Britannicus See Tacitus, Ann, XIII, 16, Suetonius, Nero, 33

13 "Censor extincti decoris" Cf Tacitus, Ann, XIV, 9, Suetonius, Nero, 34

18 After translating the Latin, Chaucer here inserts as a gloss his translation of the French

23 Septem Tryones, the seven chief stars in Ursa Minor, hence, the North

27 Nothus, Notus, the south wind

32 ff "Heu grauem sortem quotiens iniquus Additur saeuo gladius ueneno" In MS C² (Latin) are the glosses "gladius, i potestas exercendi gladium, ueneno, i venenose crudelitati"

Prose 7

4 matere of thynges to done, "materiam gerendis rebus"

8 lst that ne schulde, lest that his virtue should perish, etc The ne seems due to French idiom

14 drawen to governaunce, "allicere," allure

28 ne halt but the resoun of a prykke etc, "ad caeli spatium puncta constat optinere rationem"

37 Tholome, Ptolemy, see his Megale Syntaxis, II (beginning)

61 ff what for defaute, etc, apparently a conflation of Lat "tum commercii insolentia" and Fr "par faute de acoustumance de merchandise"

66 Marcus Tulyus, see Somnium Scipionis, VI

68 that introduces a direct quotation

73 Parthes, Parthians

114 endyd, "definitum," finite

127 ff were thought, etc, "si cum inexhausta aeternitate cogitur"

132 audience of the peple, "populares auras" (not "aures")

137 Have now (here and undrstand), "Accipe," "Or recoit et entent"

146 raiker, former

152 took pacience, "patientiam adsumpsit," "il prist un petat en soi pacience"

Meter 7

1 overthrowynge, "praecipit"

4 schewynge, "patentes"

12 ferne, distant, "remotos"

20 Fabricius, consul 232 B C, and conqueror of Pyrrhus Brutus, either Lucius Junius Brutus, consul 509 B C, the founder of the Republic, or the later Brutus who killed Julius Caesar

22 Caton, either Marcus Portius Cato, consul 195 B C, or Cato Uticensis (B C 95-46)

27 Laggeth, "Iacetus", Fr "Donques gesez vous" (which probably accounts for the imperative)

31 cruel, "sera" (mistaken for "seua," i e, "saeua")

Prose 8

2 bere an untrelable batayle, "inexorable gerere bellum"

4 desceyvable, "fallax nihil", negative omitted

12 unplyten, "explicare"

31 exercice, "exercitatione," experience

42 ff Cf Fortune

Meter 8

1 Tr, III, 1744-64 is based upon this meter Vareith accordable chaungynges, "Concordes uariat uoces" 11 eende, limit, Lat, "fine"

15 Cf KnT, I, 2991-93

17 hath also commandement to the hevene, "caelo imperitans," "commandant au ciel"

19 f loven hem togidres, "Quidquid nunc amat inuicem," "s'entreatment" Contynuely, "continuo," straightway

Book III

Prose 1

5 streighte, pp (apparently pl), Lat "arrectus auribus"

9 so, "quantum"

13 unpurygal, "inparem"

19 agrisen, pp filled with terror, Lat "perhorresco"

45 Do and scheve, "Fac et demonstra," "Fai et demonstre"

49 f for the cause of the, "tibi causa" Marken the, Fr "je te senefierai"

Meter 1

1 plenteuous, Lat "ingenuum"

5 ff Cf Tr, I, 638 f, III, 1219 f

6 if mouthes, etc, "Si malus ora prius sapor edat"

13 hors, horses

Prose 2

3 streite seete, "augustam sedem" (misread "angustam") See also m 9, 44, below

5 cures, efforts, Lat "cura"

18 out of this ilke sovereyn good, "extrinsecus."

25 ff With this whole passage of KnT, I, 1255, 1266 ff

56 is torned, "uersatur," resides

63 freendes, "amicorum genus", hence it, below

84 "Habes igitur ante oculos propositam fere formam," etc

88 ff Cf Gen Prol, I, 336 ff MerchT, IV 2021 Tr, III, 1691

92 byrefte away, "afferre" (confused with "auferre")

94 ff studres, "studia," efforts reherceth and sekehth, "repetit" Cf KnT, I, 1262 ff

117 it nys nat to wene, "num aestimandum est"

143 lovyngs, "diligendo" (var lect, "deligendo")

Meter 2

2 with slakke, etc, "Fidibus lentis", Fr "par sons Jelitables" Liddell suggests that slakke is a mistake for wakke (wakke, soft)

3 enclymeth and flyttech, "flectat"

5 purveiable, "prouda"

10 Pene, "poeni leones," lions of North Africa

12 stourdy, "trucem" cruel

22 assareith, "imbut" Liddell suggests emending to apareith

23 ff Cf SqT, V, 611 ff, MancT, IX, 163 ff

24 janglynge, "garrula"

27 pleyngs bysynes, "Ludens cura"

43 by a pryve path, "secreto tramite" Cf Tr, III, 1705

Prose 3

24 false beaute, "falsa beatitudinis species," a false semblance of happiness

38 ff Cf PF, 90-91, Pity, 99 ff, Lady 44 ff

72 foreyne, "forenses," public, Fr 'complaintez de plaz'

102 ff for thoughe this nede, etc, "nam si haec hians semper atque aliquid poscens opibus expletur"

111 what mar be, "quid est quod," why is it

Meter 3

1 ff Inaccurately translated "Quamus fuente diues auri gurgite Non expleturas cogat auarus opes," etc

5 f precyous stones, pearls, "baciis" Rede See, "rubri litoris" On the Red Sea pearls see Pliny, Nat Hist, XII, 18

8 bytyngs bysynesse, "cura mordax"

Prose 4

3 ff Inaccurately translated "Num us ea est magistratus, ut utentium mentibus uirtutes depellant?"

13 Nomyus, Nonius, called "struma" by Catullus, Carmen lu

25 beren the magistrat, hold office, "gerere magistratum"

Decorat, Decoratus, quaestor circa 508

See Cassiodorus, Epist v, 3 and 4

52 so as, since, "cum nequeat"

57 and forsothe nat unpunysched, "uerum non impune"

64 comen by, "contingere" Cf Gent,

5 67 manye maner, etc, a mistranslation of "multiplici consulatu" Boethius had been often consul

88 weren born, "ortae sunt"

90 provostrye, "praefectura"

103 of usauces, properly "of those using them", Lat "utentium", Fr "des usans" (perhaps mistaken for "usances")

Meter 4

Cf MkT, VII, 2463 ff

3 Tyrrie, Tyre, Lat "tyrio" (adj)

8 f reverentz, French plural form

Unworschapful seeths "indecores curules"

Prose 5

3 How elles, etc, gl yrornce in MS C¹

22 noun-power entreth undirnethe, "in-potentia subintrat"

26 tyraunt, Dionysius of Syracuse The reference is to the famihar story of the sword of Damocles See Cicero, Tusc, v, 21, 6

46 famlers or seruantes "familiaribus" (confused with "familiaribus"), Fr "famihers"

51 in hool, etc, "saepe incolumis saepe autem lapsa"

53 ff See MkT, VII, 2495 ff

56 Antonyus, a mistake for Antoninus, i.e., Caracalla See Spartianus, Caracallus 8 (Scriptores Historiae Augustae, xii, ed E Hohl, Leipzig, 1927)

62 ff See Tacitus, Ann, xiv

66 hem that schullen falle, "rutores", gl "ipso casuros"

73 ff Loosely translated "An praesidio (or "auxilio" as in some MSS) sunt amici, quos non uirtus sed fortuna conchat?" (Confusion between conseyled and concoled?)

75 ff Cf MkT, VII, 2244 f

78 f Cf MerchT, IV, 1784, 1793-94

Meter 5

2 cruel corages, "Animos feroces"

3 Tyle, "ultima Thyle," identified as Iceland or one of the Shetland Isles

Prose 6

5 From Euripides, Andromache, 319 f Quoted in Greek in the original ἡ δοξα δδξα, μυριασι δη βροτων ουδεν γεγωσι βροτον ωγκωσας μεγαλ MS C² has "O gloria, gloria, in milibus hominum nichil aliud facta nisi auribus infatio magna"

31 ff I ne troue, etc The Lat "ne commemoratione quidem dignam puto" perhaps explains the extra negative

36 ff See WBT, III, 1109 ff, also Gentlesse

56 outrayen or forlyven, "degenerent" (Peiper "degeneret")

Meter 6

11 thow youre, etc, "si primordia uestra spectes"

13 forlyved, "degener"

Prose 7

1 delyces, "uoluptatibus"

18 jolyte, translating "lasciuam," for which most MSS read "lacunam"

20 ff Mistranslated "sed nimis e natura dictum est nescio quem filios inuenisse tortores quorum quam sit mordax quaecumque condicio, neque alias expertum te neque nunc anxium necesse est ammonere"

23 Eurypidis, in the genitive form, as in the Latin The reference is to the Andromache, 418-20

Meter 7

7 with bytynge overlonge haldynge, "nimis tenaci morsu"

Prose 8

1 that thise weyes ne ben, "quon hae ad beatitudinem uae sint"

11 supplyen supplicate, Lat "danti supplicibus"

16 ff Mistranslated from the Lat "subiectorum insidus obnoxius periculis subiacebis"

19 distract, "distractus"

44 f of the somer sesoun, "uernalium" Aristotle No such passage has been found in Aristotle, and Messrs Rand and Stewart emend to "Aristophanes" in the Latin original Cf Plut, 210 βλεποντι αποδειξω σ οξυτερον του αυγκωσας

Boethius refers to Lynceus, rather than to the lynx For his story (to which may be due the tradition about the lynx's sharp vision) see Pindar, Nem, x, 61 ff The Fr, like Chaucer, refers to the animal ("de lins")

Meter 8

9 the foordes, etc, "Tyrrhena uada" Cf Aen, 1, 67

27 What preyere, etc, "Quid imprecer" Fr "Quelle priere puis je faire," etc

Prose 9

15 hirl chlyste, "rimula"

17 al redy, "promptissima"

24 ff Wenestow, etc, "an tu arbitraris quod nihilo indigeat egere potentia?"

56 that is superfluous The sense is Consider whether he who needs nothing, etc needs fame

73 adden, "fateamur" According to Laddell the free translation is also in the French

111 that, whom Lat "quem valentia deserit" etc

138 that schal he nat fynde, "num reperiet" (interrogative instead of negative)

153 Lat "in aduersum" omitted in translation after torne

173 nory, "alumne"

197 that lyeu "quae autem beatitudinem mentiantur"

206 See the Timaeus 27 C

Meter 9

This meter is an abridgement of the first part of the Timaeus The beginning of the translation seems to echo the Apostles' Creed

9 floterynge matere Materiae fluitantis"

12 that moevede the frely, from Trivet's gloss, "non necessitando sed libere movendo te"

13 berynge in thyn thought, "mente gerens" Cf LGW, 2229

16 Thou drawest ensaumpler, precedes Thow that art althir-fayrest, etc, in Lat and Fr

28 the mene soule, etc the soul in the midst of threefold nature Lat "Tu triplicis mediam naturae cuncta mouentem Conectens animam per consona membra resoluus"

35 ff Thow by evene-lyke causes etc "Tu causis animas paribus utasque minores Prouehis et leuibis sublimis curribus aptans In caelum terramque seris quas lege benigna Ad te conuersas reduci facis igne reuertit"

37 It is doubtful whether Chaucer means haye to be an inf or an adj

44 streyte seete, see pr 2 3, above

45 envroune "lustrare," behold, Fr "avrouner"

53 berere, "uector"

Prose 10

12 for that, in order that

16 ne as For the negative after denye of ll 36 f, 48 f below, and see Tr, II 716 n

17 ryght as a welte of alle goodes, "ueluta quidam omnium fons bonorum"

19 be the amenusynge of perfeccoun, "imminutione perfecta," i.e., by the lack of perfection

21 in every thing general, "in quolibet genere"

30 f Cf KnT, I, 3003 ff descendith, "dilabitur"

48 that no thing nys beter, "quo melius nihil est"

59 first er thynges that ben inparfit, "minus integris priora"

61 that my resoun ne go nat away with-outen an ende "ne in infinitum ratio prodeat"

69 take "accipio" Fr "receif"

90 am beknouwe, acknowledge

96 feyne etc, "fingat qui potest"

134 ff thanne mouen neiher of hem ben parfit etc, "quare neutrum poterit esse perfectum, cum alterutri alterum deest"

149 Upon, besides "super haec"

153 por-smes, por-smata, "deductions"

155 corolarie, from Lat "corolla," garland, hence gift in mathematics, an additional inference or deduction

Meede of coroune gift of a garland, Fr "loier de coroune" 161 men ben maked just supplied from the Lat "uta iustitiae adeptione iusti sapientiae sapientes fiunt" and from the Fr

216 the discreoun of this questoun, the settlement of this matter, "Cuius discretionem rei sic accipe"

254 the sovereyn fyn and the cause, "summa cardo atque causa"

261 the moeyng to ryden, "equitandi motum"

Meter 10

13 On the river Tagus (in Spain and Portugal) and its golden sands see Ovid, Am, I, 15, 34, Met II, 251

15 f Hermus (some MSS, Herymus, Herynus) a river in Lydia, "auro turbidus Hermus," Georg II, 137 Rede brinke, rutilante ripa" Indus, in northwestern India

18 grene stones white gl smaragdus (emeralds) and margarites (pearls) in C¹ C² A² Lat "Candidis miscens urides lapillos"

27 eschueth, etc, "Vitat obscuras animae runas"

Prose 11

4 How mychel preysen, "quanti aestimabis"

9 also togidre, at the same time, Fr "aussi ensemble"

11 yf that tho thynges, etc, "maneant modo quae paulo ante conclusa sunt"

41 ne cometh it hem nat, etc, "nonne contangit", Fr "leur avient"

73 figure of mankynde, "humana species", Fr "humane figure"

85 I se noon other, "minime aliud ude-tur"

101 Lat "Sed quid de herbis arboribusque quid de inanimatis omnino consentiam rebus prorsus dubito" Chaucer erroneously makes "inanimatis rebus" identical with "herbis arboribusque" Boethius distinguishes between vegetable growths and lifeless objects See 145 ff, below

128 sheden diffuse, "per medullas robor corticemque diffundunt"

136 myghty to suffren harm, "mah patiens" gl by Pseudo-Aq, "potens mala sustinere"

138 renovelen and publysschen hem, combining Lat. "propagentur" and Fr. "renouvelent"

148 hrs, MS C², rest hs, Fr. "leur"

171 willeful moeynyges, etc., "de uoluntarius animae cognoscentis motibus"

180 the bygynynges of nature, "ex naturae principus"

235 despoyled of oon, etc., "uno ueluta uertice destituta"

243 the myddel sothfastnesse, "mediae ueritatis notam"

245 But this thing in that, Liddell would emend, But in this thing that that, to conform to Lat and Fr

Meter 11

3 f by no mysweyes, "nullis deus" rollen and treden, "reoluat"

11 Cf Tr, iv, 200

13 lyghte, "lucebit"

14 After translating eight lines of Boethius, Chaucer here retranslates the passage from Trivet's commentary. The corresponding glosses of Trivet and the Pseudo-Aquinas are printed in full by Miss Petersen, pp 181 ff and Dr Jefferson, p 12

27 seen, appear with which Liddell compares LGW Prol F, 224, G, 156, Gen and Exod, 1923 (ed Morris, EETS, 1865) MS B has be, Skeat reads seme, with Thynne Lat. "lucebit," translated lyghte, above, glossed "lucebit" in Ps-Aq

29 to the sighte withoute-forth, "usu exteriori" (Triv) Cf v, pr 4, 213

39 norysachynges, "fomes" (mistranslated as "fomentum") Cf i, pr 6, 95

47 ff For one statement of the Platonic doctrine of anamnesis see the Phaedo, 72 E

Prose 12

23 ff Thou ne vendest nat, etc., "Mundum, inquit, hunc, deo regi paulo ante mimme dubitandum putabas"

25 nys, negative, as frequently, after doute

30 answeren, "exponam", Fr. "espondrai" (mistaken for "respondrai")

34 but yif ther ne were oon, "nisi unus esset"

43 brynge forth, "disponeret" The sentence is loosely translated 51 used to alle folk, "ustato cunctis"

73 the same good, "ipsum bonum"

80 a keye and a styere, "ueluta quidam clausu atque gubernaculum" Here, and in 96, Chaucer apparently confused "clausu" and "claus"

91 ne scheweth, etc., "non minus ad contuendum patet"

106 ff for the reume, etc., "nec beatum regimen esse uideretur, si quidem detrectantium iugum foret, non obtemperantium salus" The English here departs from the original

124 ff So that, at the laste, etc., "ut tandem alquando stultitiam magna lacerantem su pueat"

144 Cf Ovid, Met, i, 151 ff, Virgil, Georg, i, 277 ff

145 with the goddis, against the gods, explained by Liddell from the confusion of Fr. "ou les dieux" with "aux diex"

171 the hous of Dydalus, Lat. "labyrinthum" See Aeneid vi, 27 ff, v 588

184 as a covenable yfte, "quasi munusculum" referring to the "corollarium," which Chaucer translated a meede of coroune (pr x, 155, above) Liddell suggests that Fr. "coronable (don)" was here misread as "covenable"

194 gouvernementis, "gubernaculis"

199 in cercles and, inserted by Chaucer, Lat. "sed ex altero fidem trahente insitis domesticisque probationibus" Liddell notes that in cercles is due to a gloss in Ps-Aq and that knownen is from Fr. "conneus," translating "domesticus"

203 scoreme, etc., "Iudimus," gl. "deludere uel decipere (Trivet)"

212 For the line of Parmenides (corruptly quoted in the Boethius MSS) see Plato's Sophistes, 244 E πανθεν ευκυκλου σφαιρης εναλιγκιον ογκο, "like the mass of a sphere well-rounded on all sides" Skeat suggests that Boethius' explanation, "rerum orbem mobilem rotat, dum se immobilem ipsa conseruat," may be due to the succeeding verses μεσοθεν ισοπαλες παντη, το γαρ ουτε τι μειζον ουτε βεβαιωτερον τελει

220 styed, "agitantur"

226 See Timaeus, 29 B ως αρα τους λογους, ωντερ εισιν ερηγηται, τουτων αυτων και συγγενεις οντας Cf Gen Prol, I, 741-42, Manct, IX, 207-10

Meter 12

4 Orpheus, see Virgil, Georg, iv, 454-527, Ovid Met, x, 1-85

7 ff the wodes moevable, etc., "Postquam febilibus modis Silvas currere mobiles Amnes stare coegerat" Dr Jefferson (p 22) following Peiper takes "mobiles" with "amnes" But Chaucer's rendering seems preferable

25 f resceyved and lavyd, "hauserat", Fr. "pusie" Cf iv, pr 6, 14 Callyope, the chief of the Muses Orpheus' father was Oeagrus, King of Thrace See Ovid, Ibis, 482

33 of relessyng, "ueniam"

34 On Cerberus, the three-headed dog, see Virgil, Aen, vi, 417, Ovid, Met, iv, 450

38 Loosely translated from "Quae sontes agitant metu"

41 On Ixion's wheel see Ovid, Met, iv, 461 Virgil, Georg, iii, 38, iv, 484

42 overthrowyng, turning over "Non Ixionium caput Velox praecipitat rota"

43 On Tantalus, see Ovid, Met, iv, 458, x, 41

- 47 On Tityus, Tityus, see Virgil Aen., vi 595 Ovid Met., iv 457 54 But we wolen putten etc "Sed lex dona coerceat," gl 'sed apponemus conditionem quam vocat legem' (Trivet)
 58 Cf KnT, I 1164
 66 and was deed 'Orpheus Eurydicen suam Vidit perdidit occidit' "Occidit" apparently means "was undone" (cf Georg., iv 491-92), but Chaucer took it to mean "died" 69 Chaucer's gloss here combines that of Trivet "in superna bona," and that of the Pseudo-Aquinas, "in supernam claritatem" 76 helles, inferos"

Book IV

Prose 1

- 7 forbrak, interrupted 'abrupti'
 21 f "so as, since 'cum'" Yf that, that, "quod" 33 abyeth the tormentes, etc, "in locum facinorum (i.e., crimes) supplicia luit" 39 and alle thynge may, "potentis omnia" 53 unaraced "inconuulsa"
 64 cesen, transitive, "sopitas querelis" 70 alle thynge ytreled, "decursis omnibus" (ablative absolute) 74 fetheris, wings, pinnas" So again in m 1, 1 77 sledys, sledges Lat "vehiculis", Fr "voiturez"

Meter 1

- 3 ff See HF, 973 ff
 8 The region of fire was supposed to be next outside that of the air Beyond this were the spheres of the planets, next that of the fixed stars, and then the Primum Mobile That eschawfeth etc Quique agili motu calet aetheris" 13 the were of the olde colde Saturnus, "iter gelidi senis"
 14 and he, vmaked a knyght of the clere sterre, "Miles corusca sideris" Perhaps, as Skeat suggests, Boethius imagines thought to become a companion of the planet Mars, and there to be made a knight Both Trivet and the Pseudo-Aquinas explain the star as God ("sc dei") 24 ymages of sterres, constellations 42 fastne my degree, take my stand, "sistam gradum"

Prose 2

This chapter and the following are based upon Plato's Gorgias

- 1 Owh! "Papae!"
 11 naked of alle strengthes "cunctas uribus desertos" Laddell explains naked by Fr "desunez," mistaken for "desnuez"

19 the fey of my sentence the certainty of my opinion, "nostrae sententiae fides"

- 45 And in that that every wyght may, "Quod uero quisque potest" 56 studies desires 'studus' 104 Yf that 'Etsi', even though 122 I knyht forth, Contexe"
 141 yugement, Chaucer evidently misread "iudicium" as "iudicum" Lat "idque, uti medici sperare solent iudicium est erectae iam resistentisque naturae" 147 I schal schewe the etc, crebras coaceruabo rationes" 151 to that i e to that to which (a customary ellipsis) 165 be, by, in respect to 166 lyghte meedes ne veyne games, "leua aut ludicra praemia" 195 mystorned, "transuersos"
 203 for to been, to exist So also in 204, and later 222 withholdeih ordre "ordinem retinet" 227 mouen, "possunt"
 234 Plato, in the Gorgias (especially 507 C)

Meter 2

Boethius drew the subject of this meter from Plato's Republic Book x

- 5 enryrouned, etc, "saepotos tristibus armis" 6 blowyng etc, "rabie cordis anhelos" 10 gredy venymes "audis uenenis" 15 slidyng and desceyng hope, "spes lubrica"

Prose 3

- 11 forlong, Chaucer's gloss on stadye, "stadio" 16 purposed "propositum"
 27 foreyn schrewednesse, "aliena improbitas" 44 partlees of the mede, devoid of reward, "praemio expertem" 72 also, even so
 83 ff ne defouleth etc, "non affect modo uerum etiam uehementer infect" 111 undir, below, "infra"
 117 of foreyn richesse, "alienarum opum" 130 slow, and astonyd, and lache, "segnis ac stupidus torpit" 133 studies, "studia," purposes

Meter 3

- 1 aryed, in transitive sense, Lat "appulit" 2 duc of the cuntre of Narice, "neritus ducis" Neritos was a mountain of Ithaca Ulixes (and Cerces, below) are explanatory glosses 6 drynkes etc, "Tacta carmine pocula", Fr "beuages fez par enchantemens" 13 Marmoryke strictly speaking, northern Africa between Egypt and the great Syrtis

18 the godhede of Mercurie, that is cleped the bridd of Arcadye, "Numen Arcadis altius" Mercury was born on Mt Cyllene in Arcadia 32 the monstrous chaungynge, "Monstra quae patitur," gl "monstruosam mutationem quam sustinet"

Prose 4

1 I confesse and I am aknowe it, "Fateor" 34 by thre unselmyesses, "triplici infortunio" (i e, "uelle," "posse," "perficere")

38 thilke unselmyesse, "hoc infortunio," namely, the second of the three

82 taken, "sumpta," assumed

101 ne noon ensample of lokynge, "nullus respectus exempli" Chaucer has inverted the order of both Lat and Fr

137 for the dresert of felonye, in view of the deserts of wickedness, "quam iniquitatis merito malum esse confessus es"

149 us, negative, as commonly, after denye See also l 248, below

155 to leten, "relinquis"

162 ff some ben tormented, etc, "quorum alia poenali acerbitate alia uero purgatoria clementia exerceri puto"

177 and that thou woldest fayn lernen, and is added by error here and in one Fr MS

194 studies of men, "hominum iudicia"

203 briddes, i e, owls

217 ne seek, etc, "extra ne quaesieris ultorem"

219 ryght as, just as if

221 that repeats the partide as Cf Para Prol, X, 39, n

237 wolde we nat wene that he were blynd? "num uidentes eadem caecos putaremus" Chaucer follows the Fr in taking "uidentes" with the subject of "putaremus"

271 That folweth wel, "Consequitur", Fr "ce s'ensut bien"

276 and it scheweth, etc, and is not in the Latin 303 at any clafte, "aliqua rimula"

Meter 4

1 What, why, "Quid tantos iuuat excitare motus"

2 f hasten and bysien, combining Lat "solicitare" and Fr "hastur" The fatal disposicion of your deth, "fatum," gl "fatalem dispositionem sive mortem"

8 serpentz, "serpens", Liddell emends to the singular

16 But the resoun, etc, "Non est rusta satus saeuitiae ratio"

Prose 5

4 fortune of peple, "fortuna populari"

12 wise men, "sapientiae"

16 subgiz, not in Lat or Fr

33 hepyth, "exaggerat"

35 so as, "cum," since

Meter 5

2 Arctour, Arcturus, properly the chief star in Bootes, here used as a name for the constellation

2 neygh to the sovereyne centre or poynt, "Propinqua summo cardine"

5 sterre, constellation

5 ff The reference is to the rising and setting of Bootes Lat "Cur legat tardus plaustra Bootes Mergatque seras aequore flammis, Cum nimis celeres exphict ortus"

12 ff This refers to an eclipse of the moon Lat "Palleant pleneae cornua lunae Infecta metis noctis opacae" At such a time, Boethius says, a vulgar error ("publicus error") leads people to beat upon brass with frequent strokes ("crebris pulsibus") On this practice, the purpose of which was apparently to drive away the evil spirit that had taken control of the moon, see Tylor, Primitive Culture, 4th ed, London, 1903, I, 328 ff Cf also Tacitus, Ann, i, 28, Pliny, n, 9 (12), Juvenal, Sat, vi, 440 ff Chaucer follows Trivet and the French in attributing the custom to the Corybantes, who were really priests of Cybele and worshiped her with noisy rites 18 thikke, "crebris," gl "spissus vel frequentibus"

35 truly, "nubilus"

Prose 6

9 a ltel what, a little bit

14 laven, exhaust, "cu uix exhausti quicquam satis sit"

20 Idre, the Hydra See m 7, below

22 no manere ne noon ende, "nec ullus fuerit modus" ("Modus" means here "limit," not "manner," as also in v, pr 6, 318 below)

41 whil that I were to the, etc, "dum nexas sibi ordine contexto rationes" Chaucer apparently read, with some MSS, "tibi" for "sibi"

43 As it liketh to the so do "Vt libet," gl "supple, fac, ut tibi placet"

61 olde men, ancients

93 ff ledith, etc, "per temporales ordines duct"

104 or elles by som soule, "seu anima" (gl "anima mundi") For the idea Skeat cites Plato, De Legibus, x

147 it axeth, "petit," seeks, tends toward

167 of sexes "fetuum", Fr "sexes"

Was there a variant "sexuum"?

172 whan, "cum," because

178 unable to ben bowed, "indeclinabilem"

196 f But thou mayst seyn, etc, "Quae uero, inques, potest ulla iniquior esse confusio" Chaucer, as Liddell suggests, seems first to have translated "Mais tu diras" from the French, and then to have taken "inques" as a noun Skeat notes that the reading "inquesior" for "inquir" (as in MS C²) may underlie Chaucer's error

- 201 Whether, "num"
 233 hels of corages, "animatorum salus" 238 lechere, leech-er, "medicator" 247 ff for to constreyne, etc., "ut pauca perstringam" 255 my famyher, servant, disciple, "familiaris noster Lucanus" See Pharsalia, I, 128 261 wikkid "peruersa" (with "confusio," not "opimoni") 268 continue, "colere," Fr "coutuer" (apparently misread by Chaucer as "continuer") 269 withholden, retain, "retinere"
 282 the more excellent by me, "quidam me quoque excellentior," more excellent than I. Boethius apparently forgot that Philosophy, not the author, is speaking. Chaucer's version, which seems to mean "more excellent through me, by my aid," may be due to the gloss (as in MS C¹) "philosophus per me." The Greek quotation, Ἀνδρὸς δὲ ἑρῶς θεῶν αὐτῆρες οὐκοδομησαν, is from an unknown source. Chaucer doubtless followed the Latin gloss in MS C¹ "Viri sacri corpus aedificauerunt uirtutes"

- 286 taken, "deferatur," entrusted 301 into experience of hemsely, "hos in experimentum sui tristibus ducit" "Sui" is usually taken to refer to "hos," and this gives a sense more in keeping with the context
 319 of wykkid meryth, "male meritos," Fr "de mauuaise merite" 328 In the whiche thing I trowe that god dispenseth, "In qua re illud etiam dispensari credo," in which thing also this is to be allowed for 330 f overthrowngye to yuel, "praeceps" Uncouenable, "inportuna" (misread as inoportuna?) 333 egren, "exacerbare"
 350 continyuacioun and exercysynge, "exercitium," Fr "coutumance" Chaucer combined both, misreading the latter as "continuaunce"

- 387 syn that, etc. Boethius here quotes Ἀγαθὸν δὲ με ταῖτα θεὸν ὡς παντ ἀγορευεῖν. From Homer, II, xii, 176 (with ἀγορευεῖν for ἀγορεύσας). Chaucer seems to have followed the Latin gloss (as in MS C²) "Fortissimus in mundo Deus omnia regit"

Meter 6

- 10 raysschyngye coursus, "rapidos meatus" 14 deeyen, dye, "tinguere"
 28 joynen hem by feyth, "Iungantque fidem," join alliance 44 Among these thynges, "interesa," meanwhile 54 roundnesses enclyned, "Flexos orbes," Fr "rondeces flechez"

56 continued "continet," read as "continuit," or translated in the light of the Fr "contenez par ordenance estable"

Prose 7

- 24 nat able to ben wened to the peple, "inopinables" So again in 67 29 and seyn, subject, "they," omitted
 65 War now and loke wel, "Vide," gl "cave" 71 it folweth or comith, "euenit," gl "sequitur" 85 semeth, "debet" (perhaps misread as "debet," which occurs just below)
 93 confermen (Skeat confirme), Lat "confirmanda" 95 Boethius means that "urtus" is derived from "ures" The accepted etymology, from "uir," is given by Cicero in 2 Tusc, xviii 99 in the encres or in the heyghte, combining Lat "proiectu" and Fr "hautece" 100 ff to fleten with delices, etc., "diffuere delicos et emarcescere uoluptate" 104 For that the sorowful fortune, etc. This purpose clause, in the Latin, belongs in the previous sentence 106 occupye the mene, "medium occupate"

Meter 7

- 3 recovered and purgide combining Fr "recouura" and Lat "pauit" 8 Menelaus wif his brothor For the construction of the Graekes hors Sinon, SqT, V, 209, and n 12 unclouthide hym, etc., "Exuit patrem," gl "pietatem paternam" 15 doughler, Iphigenia On her sacrifice, see Ovid, Met, xii, 27 ff 24 empty, rather "great," Lat "inmani" (perhaps mistaken for "inani") 31 ff The following passage, on the labors of Hercules, was used by Chaucer in the MkT, vii, 2095 ff See, for most of the incidents, Ovid, Met, ix, 190 ff 32 On Hercules and the Centaurs of further Ovid Met, xii, 536 34 dispolvyngye, "spolium," spoil On the Nemean lion see also Heroides, ix, 61 38 The apples of the Hesperides, guarded by a dragon 46 Idra, Hydra
 55 Antheus, Antaeus For his story, see also Lucan, Pharsalia, iv, 590-660 59 On Kacus, Cacus, see Ovid, Fasti, i, 543 ff 61 the bristled boor, the boar of Erymanthus See Ovid, Heroides, ix, 87 72 why nake ye your bakkes? "Cur terga nudatas?" Why do you expose your backs (in fight)?

Book V

Prose 1

2 resoun, "orations" (misread as "rationis"?)

4 "Recta quidem, inquam, exhortatio tuaque prorsus auctoritate dignissima" (We should expect thyn before auctorite)

13 ff I haste me, etc., Festino debitum promissionis absoluerè unamque tibi aperire"

20 and it is to doute, "uerendumque est"

25 to knowen togidre etc., "nam quietis mihi loco fuerit ea quibus maxime delector agnoscere, simul cum omne disputationis tuæ latus indubitata fide constiterit, nihil de sequentibus ambigatur" (Chaucer seems to have taken "simul" with "agnoscere")

41 voys, "uocem" (in the sense of "word," as the gloss indicates)

42 thing summitted, "subiectæ rei"

44 left or duellynge, "reliquus"

47 Cf the proverb, "Ex nihilo nihil fit"

52 prince and bygygnere, "principio" (beginning)

53 but ther casten, etc., "quamquam id illi non de operante principio, sed de materiali subiecto hoc omnium de natura rationum quasi quoddam iecerint fundamentum"

69 See Aristotle, Physics, II, 4-5

75 for grace, "gratia," for the sake of 90 the causes of the abreggyng of fortun hap, "fortuna causa compendi," the causes of fortuitous gam Chaucer follows the French ("l'abregement du cas fortunel") in translating "compendu"

96 undirstoden, "intendit" intended, mistake perhaps due to Fr "entendrent"

Meter 1

Mr Lowes has noted that Chaucer follows the French closely at the beginning of this meter

3 Achemenye, properly Persia (from Achæmenes, the grandfather of Cyrus), here extended to include Armenia, where the sources of the Tigris and the Euphrates are near together though not identical

4 the fleynge batarle, the fleeing troop, battalion, or perhaps a literal rendering of the Latin "pugna fugax" The reference is to the Parthians, who shot arrows at their pursuers Cf Virgil, Georg, III 31

15 and the wattris, et, "Mixtaque fortuitos implicet unda modos"

23 passeth, "meat," moves

Prose 2

9 nature of resoun, "rationalis natura"

24 sovereynes, the French plural form of the adjectives seldom used by Chaucer except in his translations from French But see Franklin, V, 899, and the Grammatical Introduction

26 wil, "uoluntas"

27 myght, "potestas"

30 loken hem, "se conservant," keep themselves, Fr "se gardent" (misunderstood by Chaucer?)

47 caityfs "captiuae" For the idea of the following sentence of Tr, IV, 963 ff

53 Cf Homer, II, III, 277, Ἡέλιος θ, δς παντ εφορᾷ καὶ παντ επακουει, also Od, XII, 323 In Peiper's Boethius and earlier editions the line stands at the end of Prose 2 Παντ εφορᾷν καὶ παντ επακουειν, and this was obviously the arrangement known to Chaucer Stewart and Rand, following Engelbrecht, transfer it to the beginning of m 3 (reading εφορᾷν and επακουειν, infinitives, with "Phoebum" as subject)

Meter 2

1 The explanation of the epithet "mellifluous oris" follows the French

3 "Puro clarum lumine Phoebum" Cf the Homeric phrase, λαμπρον φως ηελιοιο, II, I, 605

13 strok of thought, "Vno mentis cernit in actu" Cf v, pr 4, 214

Prose 3

With this whole discussion of Tr, IV, 967 ff

23 wrihen away, "detorqueri"

29 proene, "probo," in the sense of "approve" as indicated by Chaucer's gloss

40 ff and in this manere, etc., "eoque modo necessarium hoc in contrariam relabi partem"

45 but, as it were, y travailed, "quasi uero laboretur," as though this were the problem The meaning is brought out by the gloss, where the Fr has "nous travaillons"

53 But I ne enforce me nat now to schewen it, "Ac non illud demonstrare nitamur" Some read "nos" for "non"

74 ff although that the cause o the soth cometh of that other side, "ita cum causa ueritatis ex altera parte procedat," though the cause of truth proceed from one part Chaucer's translation and gloss rest upon a misunderstanding of "altera"

126 wanteth lesynge, "mendacio creat"

149 See Horace, Sat, II, V, 59

173 purposed and byhyght, "proponuntur"

192 And yit ther folweth, etc., from the French, Lat "Quoque nihil sceleratius excogitari potest" inconuenient, Fr "desconuenue," disadvantage

197 ne that no thing is leueful, etc., "nihilque consiliis licet humanis," and nothing is permitted to human counsels

223 ff A loose rendering of the Latin "illuc inaccessae luci prius quoque quam impetrent ipsa supplicandi ratione coniung"

228 by the necessity of thingis to comen received, "recepta futurorum necessitate," the necessity of future events being granted

234 See iv, m 6, above

Meter 3

3 the conjunctions of God and of man
But the reference seems to be rather to fore-knowledge and free will, as indicated in the next gloss

4 Which God, "quis deus"

10 But ther nis no discord, a question in the Latin "An discordia nulla est ueris Semperque sibi certa coherens?" ("An" misread as "Ac"?)

15 be fyr, etc., "oppressi luminis igne"

20 to fynden ihulke notes of soth covered, "Veri tectas reperire notas"

41 But whanne, etc., again a question in the Latin

49 withholdeth, "tenet"

52 neyther nother lit "ne either ne other", Lat "Neutro est habitu"

56 rethreth, "retractans" Fr "retraite"

Prose 4

3 See Cicero, De Divinatione, II, 60

4 deyved, "distribuit"

24 uspendid spent, for Lat "expendero," in the sense of "weighed," "considered", Fr "respondu"

42 confessed and byknowen, "fatebare," gl "concedendo, fassus es"

45 endes "exitus," outcomes

47 by grace of posicoun, "positionis gratia," by way of supposition

50 Cf the use of pose in KnT, I, 1162 MS C² glosses, per impossibile

88 ff But certes right as we trowen, etc., "quasi uero no ea quae prouidentia futura esse praenoscit non esse euentura credamus ac non illud potius arbitremur, licet eueniant, nihil tamen ut euenirent sui natura necessitatis habuisse"

99 ff in the tornynge, etc., "in quadrigis moderandis atque flectendis"

159 And for that this schal mowen schewen, etc., "Nam ut hoc breui liqueat exemplo"

162 otherweys otherweys, "aliter alter"

171 wit sense

184 the envyrourynge of the unversite, "uniuersitatis ambitum," the compass of the universal The reference here is to the Platonic doctrine of forms

190 strengthe, power, "us" So also in m 4, below

211 nor ne ne, neither nor nor 214 by a strook of thought formely, "illo uno actu mentis formaliter" Cf iv, m 2, 13

Meter 4

1 The porche, "porticus," in Athens, where Zeno taught and whence the Stoics had their name (Gk poro)

23 unpruluth "explicit"

37 that chesith his entrechaunged uey

"Alternumque legens iter"

50 passion, "passio," feeling, sensation

Prose 5

1 But what yif and albeit so But if even though, Lat "Quod si quamuis"

5 entalenten, "afficiant"

15 ytaught or emprimented, "insignitur"

36 remuable bestis, "mobilibus beluis"

54 ff Thanne is euer the iugement of resoun soth ne that ther nis no thing sensible or elles, etc., "aut igitur rationis uerum esse iudicium nec quidquam esse sensible, aut —" Either the judgment of reason is true and sensible things do not exist, or the conception of reason is false, which treats the sensible as if it were universal

99 parsoners of resoun, "rationis participes"

Meter 5

1 passen by, "permeant", Fr "passent par"

4 "Continuumque trahunt ut pectoris incitata sulcum" Chaucer omits "ut pectoris incitata"

9 by moyst fleyng "liquido uolatu" (in smooth flight) and oothere bestis etc., "Haec pressissime solo uestigia gressibusque gaudet"

17 Cf Truth, 19

23 axest, "petis," seekest

Prose 6

15 parfyt possessoun and al togdre, "tota simul et perfecta possessio", Fr "parfaite possession et toute ensemble"

33 Aristotle, De Caelo, I (especially 279 B, ff)

50 ff and yit u byhowith, etc., "idque necesse est et sui compos praesens sibi semper ad-sistere" Cf Trivet's gloss "compos enim dicitur cui nichil deest sed assequitur omnia ad votum"

58 Skeat notes that this is rather the doctrine of Proclus and Plotinus, Plato himself having taught the contrary in the Timaeus

66, 68 other oothur, one thing another, "alud alud"

77 folweith, "imitatur"

83 decresuth, "decrescit", Fr "de-scrasit"

104 ff for that it sholde contynue, etc., "ut continuaret eundo uitam cuius plenitudinem complecti non ualuit permanendo"

115 the science of hym, i.e., his knowledge

147 comparysoun or collacoun, "digna collatio" gl "collatio vel comparatio" (Trivet)

148 presence, "praesentis," present, the present instant, Fr "present"

169 troubleth, "perturbat", Fr "trouble" (var "destourbe") 188 of ful sad trouthe, "solidissimae veritatis" 223 presentz, the Fr plural form of the adjective 237 by the whiche, etc., "qua prius quam fierent etiam non euenire potuissent" 242 so as, since, "cum eueniet" 265 absolut the boond of necessite, "necessitatis nexibus absoluta" 266 alle thingis, Fr "tout," by which Laddell would explain it in l 268, and later 287-347 are printed by Lowes alongside of the Latin original and Jean de Meun's translation in Rom Rev. VIII, 386 ff The correspondence between the English and the French is shown to be very close 292 to entrechaunge stowndis of knowynge, "noscendi uices alternare" Cf the gloss, which follows the Fr "que elle entrechaunge aussi ses divers fais de cognoistre" 300 clepith hem ayen, and retorneth hem, "retorquet ac reuocat"

307 And this presence, etc., "quam comprehendi omnia usendique praesentiam" 311 ff See v, pr 3, above
 318 manere, "modum," measure, limit Fr "propre maniere" 321 ff The gloss, attributed by Miss Petersen to Trivet, is shown by Mr Lowes to be a literal translation of the French 326 wikkrdly, "iniquae" (spelled "in-ique"), Fr "feloneusement"
To the wylmyges "uoluntatibus"
 328 byholdere and forwytere, "spectator praescius", Fr "regardeur et cognoisseur" 331 diuerse, not in the Latin, translated from the French (which probably followed Trivet) 341 yilde, "porrigite"
 347 A final ascription in the terms of a Christian doxology (To whom be gl[ori]fyed and uorshpe be Infynyt tymes Amen) is added in MS C² It is not in the text of Boethius, though added in the Latin copy in MS C² (Skeat) It is also in Trivet's commentary See PMLA, XVIII, 188

TROILUS AND CRISEYDE

On the date of the Troilus opinions have differed considerably For a statement of the views of the older authorities see Tatlock Development and Chronology, Ch Soc, 1907, p 10 Professor Tatlock himself (chap 1, §2, and previously in MP, I 317 ff) argued for a date not later than 1377 He maintained that the passage about Troilus in Gower's Mirour de l'Omme (ll 5245-56), probably written in 1376 or 1377, alluded to Chaucer's version of the story, and he tried to show that the general character of the Troilus indicates early composition But the evidence drawn from the Mirour is inconclusive, and general critical considerations in the opinion of most scholars, count rather in favor of a later date This conclusion is supported by a few bits of definite evidence, in no single case perhaps decisive In Bk iv, 169-210 a passage largely original with Chaucer, there may be allusion to Jack Straw's rebellion of 1381 The reference in Bk 1 171 to the letter A ("Right as oure firste letre is now an A") is almost certainly a compliment to Queen Anne, married Jan 14, 1382 And the planetary situation described in Bk iii, 624 ff — Saturn, Jupiter, and the crescent Moon all in conjunction in Cancer — corresponds with surprising closeness to the actual conditions on or about May 13, 1385 Moreover, there had been no conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter in Cancer since 769 A D, so that the occurrence would inevitably have been a matter of interest to Chaucer and his circle In fact it was actually recorded, with a reference to its astrological significance ("quam secuta est maxima regnorum commotio") in Walsingham's Historia Anglicana, ed Riley, London 1863-64, II, 126 It is uncertain at what stage in the composition of the Troilus the description of the storm was introduced, though it clearly stood in the first or unrevised edition In any case if the passage refers, as is altogether probable, to the conjunction of 1385, the poem cannot have been completed before that year And this date is satisfactory on literary grounds The Troilus would then be clearly later than the House of Fame, and probably also than the Palamon and Arcite, and it would be separated by only a short interval from the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women, which there is reason for dating in 1386-87

For detailed discussion see Lowes, PMLA, XXIII, 285 ff, Kittredge, The Date of Chaucer's Troilus, Ch Soc, 1909, C Brown, MLN, XXVI, 208 ff, R K Root and H N Russell, PMLA, XXXIX, 48 ff, and Root's edition, pp xiv ff

A special problem is presented by the relation of the Troilus to Usk's Testament of Love Several passages in the Testament are based upon the Troilus, and in fact show knowledge on Usk's part of widely separate portions of Chaucer's poem There is no difficulty in explaining this indebtedness if the Testament is dated as late as 1387 But if, as has been recently argued, the Testament was composed by Usk during his period of imprisonment between December, 1384, and June, 1385, it may be necessary to assume that he knew the Troilus in the making for the discussion of the matter see R. Bressie, MP, XXVI 28-29

The text of the Troilus was clearly revised by Chaucer, in some places possibly twice. See the introduction to the Textual Notes. Although many passages were changed, the alterations were not so significant as in the case of the Prologue to the Legend, and there is no sure evidence of the date of the second edition.

The main source of the Troilus, as has been long recognized, was Boccaccio's Filostrato (Opere Volgari, ed Moutier, Florence, 1827-34, XIII). The Italian poem (Moutier's text) has been published separately to accompany the English prose translation by N. E. Griffin and A. B. Myrick (Philadelphia, 1929), and another text has appeared in the Bibliotheca Romanica, ed P. Savj-Lopez, Strassburg, 1912. An English metrical rendering in a modified form of ottava rima, by Hubertus M. Cummings was published at Princeton in 1924. The sources and occasion of Boccaccio's poem, and his treatment of the material, are fully discussed by Professor Griffin in his introduction to the prose translation.

The relation of Chaucer's work to that of Boccaccio was first exhibited at length by W. M. Rossetti, who made for the Chaucer Society in 1873-83 a parallel edition of the Troilus and the corresponding passages of the Filostrato. A detailed comparison of the two poems was made by R. Fischer, Zu den Kunstformen des mittelalterlichen Epos, Wiener Beitrage, IX, 1899, pp 217-370. For a comprehensive study of the sources of the Troilus see Karl Young, The Origin and Development of the Story of Troilus and Criseyde (Ch Soc, 1908), and of his earlier article in MP, IV, 169 ff. Professor Young showed that for certain parts of the poem, especially Bk III, ll 512-1190, Chaucer probably utilized Boccaccio's Filocolo (Opere Volgari, VII-VIII). Of the Troilus story proper, Chaucer doubtless knew both of the versions which precede Boccaccio's, those of Benoît de Sainte-Maure and Guido delle Colonne. He made considerable use of the former, and probably followed the latter in occasional details. It is not clear that he used either Dictys or Dares, though he drew upon the poetical paraphrase of Dares by Joseph of Exeter. Incidental borrowings from various authors — most notably from Ovid, Statius, Boethius, Dante, and Petrarca — have been pointed out by scholars and will be recorded in the notes. For additional information or discussion see N. E. Griffin, Dares and Dictys, Baltimore, 1907, also his introduction to the prose translation of the Filostrato already mentioned, G. L. Hamilton, The Indebtedness of Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde to Guido delle Colonne's Historia Trojana, New York, 1903, G. L. Kittredge, Chaucer's Troilus and Guillaume de Machaut, MLN, XXX, 69, and Chaucer's Lollus, Harv Stud in Class Phil XXVIII, pp 47 ff (with an appendix on the use of the Teseide), H. N. Cummings, The Indebtedness of Chaucer's Works to the Italian Works of Boccaccio, Univ of Cincinnati Studies, X, 50 ff (in which the influence of the Filocolo is denied), B. A. Wise, The Influence of Statius upon Chaucer, Baltimore, 1911, R. K. Root, Chaucer's Dares, MP, XV, 1 ff, M. Praz, Chaucer and the Great Italian Writers of the Trecento in The Monthly Criterion, VI, 18 ff, 131 ff, E. L. Shannon, Chaucer and the Roman Poets, Cambridge, Mass., 1929, pp 157 ff (a comparison of Criseyde with the Helen of Ovid's Heroides). The notes that follow are indebted to all these studies, as well as to Skeat's edition and the various articles registered by Miss Hammond, pp 395 ff, and Wells, pp 872 f, and appendices. The editor wishes to acknowledge especially the use he has made of the very full notes in Professor Root's recent edition. The Troilus episode in the Roman de Troie comprises ll 13065-21782. The poem is here cited from the edition of L. Constans, SATF, 6 v, 1904-12. A convenient summary of the episode is given by Professor Kittredge, The Date of Chaucer's Troilus, pp 62-65. The Historia Trojana of Guido is cited from the Strassburg edition of 1489.

Chaucer's own attribution of his original to myn auctour called Lollus (l. 394) has been the subject of much discussion. See the references in Miss Hammond, pp 94 ff, and Wells, p 872, and especially Kittredge, Harv Stud in Class Phil, XXVIII, 47 ff also Lange, in Anglia, XLII, 345 ff and Imelmann, Est XLV, 406 f. The theories that Lollus stands for Boccaccio or Petrarch must be rejected. The passages in connection with which he is mentioned, or Chaucer's source referred to, come sometimes from one of these authors and sometimes from neither. But in none of them does Chaucer mean to acknowledge indebtedness to an Italian contemporary. He professes to be following an ancient Latin authority to whom he attributes the whole substance of his story from whatever source derived. This authority he calls Lollus, most probably because he believed that there was actually an ancient historian of Troy who bore that name. This supposition is borne out by the mention of Lollus alongside of Dictys (Tythus) and Dares in the House of Fame (l. 1468). Where Chaucer got his supposed information about Lollus is unknown, but it is likely, as was long ago suggested by R. G. Latham (Athen, 1868, II, 433), that the whole notion originated, with him or with some predecessor, in a mistaken inference from Horace's "Trojan bell scriptorem, maxime Lollum" (Epis. i, 2, 1). Chaucer may even have known the line only as it is quoted in John of Salisbury's Policraticus, vii 9 (ed Webb, Oxford, 1909, II 128).

Another baffling name for the source of the Troilus is preserved by Lydgate, who speaks of the poem as "a translacioun off a book which callid is Trophe in Lumbard tunge." See his list of Chaucer's works, Prologue to the Fall of Princes. Chaucer also cites Trophee, either as an author or as a work in the account of Hercules in the Monk's Tale (VII 2117), and various interpretations are discussed in the notes to that passage.

In the table which follows are indicated the main parallels between the Troilus and the Filostrato. The correspondences are often not close, even in the passages noted, and in many places not listed lines and phrases were taken over from the Italian. Such details, when they seem significant, will be mentioned in the Notes. In the case of the Troilus numbers refer to lines, in that of the Filostrato, to stanzas (with lines occasionally added after commas).

Troilus	Filostrato
I, 21-30	I, 5-6
57-140	7-16
148-231	17-25
267-273	26
281-329	27-32, 6
354-392	32, 7-37
421-546	38-57
547-553	II, 1
568-630	2-10
646-647	11, 1
666-667	13, 7-8
673-686	11, 7-8, 12
701-703, 708-714	13
722-724	15, 1-2
856-865, 874-889	16-17, 20-22
967-994	24-25, 27-28
1009-1064	29-34
II, 274-291	35-36, 44
316-320	46
393-399	54-55
407-420	47-48
501-509, 519-522	55-57
540-541	61, 1-2
554-578	62-64
584-588	43
596-604	68
659-665, 704-707	72
733-735	71-70
746-763, 768-788	69, 73, 75-77
960-981	79-81, 89
995-1009	90-91
1044-1064	93-95
1065-1092	97, 105, 107
1100-1104	108-109
1120-1158	109-113
1173-1178	114
1195-1200	118
1205-1209	119
1212-1226	120-128, 134
1321-1351	128-131
III, 1-38	III, 74-79
239-287	5-10
330-336	9-10
344-441	11-20
1310-1323	31-33

Troilus	Filostrato
III, 1338-1365	III, 34-37
1373-1386	38-39
1394-1426	40-43
1443-1452	44
1471-1493	44-48
1499-1555	49-56, 1
1588-1624	56-60
1639-1680	61-65
1695-1701	70
1709-1743	71-73
1772-1806	90-93
IV, 1-10	III, 94
29-35	IV, 1
47-112	2-11
127-168	12-16
211-322	17, 22, 26-36
330-357	38-41, 43
365-385	44-46
393-406	47-48
415	49
439-451	50
452-628	52, 54-58, 60-75
631-637	76
645-795	77-93
799-821	95-96
841-926	97-107
939-948	108-109
1083-1095	109-110
1108-1253	110, 112-127
1303-1306, 1324-27	133
1331-1343	131-134
1359-1372	135-136
1422-1446	137-140
1464-1542	141-146
1555-1659	147-163
1667-1701	164-167
V, 15-90	V, 1-6, 10-13
190-261	14-21, 24-28
280-295	22-23
323-336, 353-364	29-32
386-686	33-38, 40-61, 67-71
687-693, 708-743	VI, 1-6
750-755	7
766-805	8, 10-11, 33, 24
841-847	9
855-942	12-25
953-958	26-27
967-991	28-31
1100-1354	VII, 1-32, 40-41, 48-55
1373-1421	60, 62, 72, 75
1422-1439	76, 105, 77
1513-1522	27, 89-90
1523-1537	100-102, 104
1562-1586	VIII, 1-5
1632-1764	6-26
1800-1806	27
1828-1836	28-29

Book I

1 ff The opening stanzas of the Filostrato were inconsistent with Chaucer's attitude as an outsider in love (cf II, 13), and he therefore did not use them.

The invocation to Tisiphone instead of one of the Muses may be due to Theb. 1 56 ff Cf further ibid ll 85-87, viii 65-71 686 A mediæval parallel is afforded by the Lamentationes Matheoh (ed Van Hamel I Paris, 1892, p 6, Lat 1 60 Fr 1 214) which would hardly have been in Chaucer's mind here Chaucer's conception of the Furies appears to be a blending of the classical notion of the goddesses who inflict torment with Dante's description of them as eternally suffering (Inf ix 37-51) The idea of their 'eterno pianto' is emphasized again in the invocation to Bk iv (ll 22-24) Cf further SqT V, 448, FranklT, V 949-50 1101 and see MP, XIV, 720 ff It should be added that the conception of sorrowing Furies is not without classical authority Mr T Spencer (in Speculum, II, 185) cites Claudian De Raptu Proserpinae, l, 225 and Boethius, III, m 12 31 ff

1 double sorwe Cf "Della doppia tristizia di Jocasta," in Purg, xxii, 56—a phrase which Chaucer may have recalled, though the passages are otherwise quite dissimilar

2 "The son of King Priam of Troy" For the order of words of the Greekes hors Simon, SqT, V, 209 and n

5 In the Troilus the poet represents himself as reading or telling the story to an audience Similar references to hearers are of course naturally to be expected in the Canterbury Tales, which purport to have been orally narrated on a pilgrimage But they also occur in Chaucer's other works, where they doubtless reflect the actual practice of the poets of reading their works aloud to a company See Anel, 162 ff, LGW Prol G, 85 ff, F, 97 ff, LGW, 1554 ff, 2559 ff, HF, 245 ff, 1255 ff, 1299 ff, 1453 ff For further illustration of the custom see the note to II 80, below

With the rime Troye fro ye of Rome to me, Gen Prol, I, 523 n

7 Cf Fil, I, 6 "Cid che dirà 'l mio verso lagrimoso"

12-14 A commonplace of the rhetoricians See SqT, V 103 and n

15 ff Chaucer's service of the God of Love is more fully described in HF, 615 ff

Line 15 was probably intended as a paraphrase of the papal title 'servus servorum Dei' (Cf ParsT, X, 773, also Dante's Inf xv, 112) In fact the poem as a whole combines the conventions of pagan epic with the mediæval conception of the religion of love Lines 29 ff, as Root notes, recall the liturgical "form of a 'bidding prayer,' when the priest exhorts the congregation to pray successively for various categories of persons" And l 42 refers in strict theological terms to the sin of despairing of the mercy of God which was held to be the "sin against the Holy Ghost" So the lover is said to be despered out of Loves grace (See also n 530 ff, and ParsT, X, 693 ff) This conception of the Church of Love, which is of structural importance in the LGW as in Gower's Confessio Amantis appears only incidentally in the Troilus For other references to it see l 336 n 523 ff, 1503 n, 15-17, 1267, 1282 Cf also KntT, I, 3089 and n and W G Dodd, Courtly Love in Chaucer and Gower, Harv Stud in Eng I, 1913 pp 191 ff

21 From Fil, I, 5 "Tuo sia l'onore e mio sia l'affanno" But Boccaccio is addressing his lady whereas the subject in Chaucer's line is the god of Love

58 60 The thousand shippes and ten yer may have been suggested by Aen., II, 198, cf also Ovid, Her xiii, 97

66 Homer's Calchas (Iliad I 69 ff) was a Greek In Guido he is represented as a Trojan and takes the place of Chryses

68-70 Cf iv 1409 ff This consultation of the Delphic oracle is not mentioned in the Filostrato Chaucer could have got the suggestion either from Benoit (Roman de Troie, ll 5817 ff) or Guido (Historia, sig e 6 recto, col 1)

71 calculynge, astrological computation? It is hard to believe that Chaucer was unconscious here of word-play on the name of Calchas On the infrequency of his puns see Gen Prol, I, 297, n

77 wolde whoso nolde, whether anybody wished it or not Compare "willy-nilly" (will he will he)

83 With the omission of the subject of casten of Gen Prol I, 33, and n

99 Cruseyde On the development of the name see E H Wilkins, in MLN, XXIV, 65 ff Boccaccio's original spelling was probably "Cruseida" although "Gruseida" is common in MSS and editions of the Filostrato The change from a learned form in "Cr" to a more popular one in "Gr" is paralleled in other Italian words, and in the present case it would have been assisted by the analogy of "Gruseida" The name is derived from the Greek "Chryseida," acc of "Chryseis" But between the Homeric daughter of Chryses and the mediæval Cruseyde there is otherwise little connection In fact as has been shown in the Introduction to the Troilus Cruseida is Boccaccio's substitute for Briseida who is the heroine of the story in the Roman de Troie, and she in turn has little in common with the Briseis of the Iliad The story of Troilus and Cruseyde is wholly of post-classical invention The steps by which it came to be attached to Cruseyde are discussed by President Wilkins, in the article just cited, and by Professor Kittredge, The Date of Chaucer's Troilus, pp 13 ff 126 and hom and (went) home.

132-33 Boccaccio (st 15) says that Gruseida had neither son nor daughter and Benoit (l 13111) refers to her as "la pucele"

146 On the part played by Dares and Dictys in the development of the Trojan story see the Introduction to the Troilus

The form Dite is perhaps due to Guido, who cites "Ditem Grecum et Phrigrum Daretem" (sig a l recto, col 2), apparently through misunderstanding of Benoit, l 92 (variant reading, "Et en langue greçoise dite" — past participle). Since, however, Benoit regularly employs the form "Dithis" or "Ditis" the assumption of Guido's influence is not absolutely necessary.

153 Palladon, the Palladium or image of Pallas. See Aen, II, 166 ff.

162 ff The account of the "inamoramento" of Troilus (Fil, I, 17-31) is Boccaccio's, for the story in Benoit begins later with the separation of the lovers. Boccaccio apparently drew suggestions for his invention from another episode in the Roman de Troie, the love of Achilles for Polyxena (ll 17489 ff), from the Filocolo, and from his personal experience with Maria d'Aquino. Chaucer's account, while based upon that in the Filostrato, adds details which suggest that he may have independently resorted to the Filocolo or the Polyxena episode. For a detailed comparison of all these passages see Young, Origin, pp 35 ff, 167 ff. Cf also E. H. Wilkins, MP, XI, 39 ff. The situation itself, the meeting of lovers at a religious service, is distinctly mediæval. Interesting examples, including Dante's sight of Beatrice in a church at Florence and Petrarch's first sight of Laura at a service in Avignon, are mentioned by Professor Griffin in the introduction to his translation of the Filostrato, p 15.

170 Professor Griffin notes further (intr, p 55) that the black habit was not only appropriate to Criseyde's widowhood, but also corresponded to the "bruna vesta" which Maria d'Aquino apparently wore when Boccaccio first saw her.

171 This line, which replaces Boccaccio's statement that Criseida surpassed other women as the rose does the violet, has been very plausibly explained by Professor Lowes as a compliment to Queen Anne. See the Introductory Note above.

193 The cynical remarks of Troilus are taken from the Filostrato, and there perhaps reflect the opinions of Boccaccio, born of his early experience in love. See Griffin, intr, pp 53 f.

203 Cf m, 329, and n.

205 Ascavnces, as if (Ital "quasi discesse"). Cf SumT, III, 1745, CYT, VIII, 838, also l 292, below.

208 If any literary allusion is intended here, beyond the familiar figure of Cupid's bow, the reference might be to Met, I, 456 ff.

210 For the stock comparison, "proud as a peacock," see Haekel, p 60.

214 An elaboration of the proverbial saying, "Pride will have a fall." See Apperson, Engl Proverbs, London, 1929, p 512.

217 Cf the Scotch proverb, "All fails that fools think." See Skeat, EE Prov, p 61, no 148.

218 Bayard, the name of the famous bay-colored steed given by Charlemagne to Renaud, hence a poetic or allusive name for any horse.

219 so pryketh hym his corn, he "feels his oats."

221 Though I prounce al byforn, the figure is that of a tandem team.

228 stere, probably "steer, control" (as in III, 910). See JEGP, XX, 397 f.

229 a-ferre, afire (Kentish form).

232-66 These lines are in general Chaucer's own. For the reflections on the power of Love, which are too commonplace to be traced to a particular source, comparison has been made with the Roman de Troie, 18443-59, Filocolo, I, 5-6 and 96-98, and Confessio Amantis, VI, 78 ff.

234 To scornem, "with regard to scorn-ing."

236-38 Cf KnT, I, 1163 ff.

241 ff Cf WB Prol, III, 721 ff, also Gower, Conf Am, VI, 78 ff. Solomon, Virgil, and Aristotle were familiar examples of wise men, and Samson and Hercules of strong men, overcome by love.

245 The language echoes the Gloria Patri. Cf also HF, 82.

260 Comparison has been made with Ovid, Amores, I, 9, 46. But the doctrine of the ennobling effect of love was a commonplace of the courtly literature of the Middle Ages and the Renaissance. See, for example, III, 22-28, 1786-1806.

267 The figure is of course proverbial. Cf II, 1387 ff, and also the Aesopic fable of the Oak and the Reed. See Haekel, p 23, no 75, Skeat, EE Prov, p 62, no 149.

274 ff Cf, besides Fil, I, 28, Guido's Historia 2 k, verso, and Filocolo, I, 4-7.

275 in thrifty wise, thoroughly, attentively. Cf thrifuly, III, 211, and see ML Prol, II, 46, and n.

281 This statement, which corresponds to Boccaccio's "Elli' era grande" (I, 27), is not quite consistent with Chaucer's later description in Book V, II, 806 ff. The formal portrait there given was influenced, as will be seen, by other sources.

285 "Her very bearing, the mere movements of her body."

295-98 Cf II, 365-66 and III, 1499. The idea, which is conventional, occurs also in Fiammetta, Opere Volgari, ed Moutier, VI, 9, and in the Roman de Troie, II, 17552 ff. Root notes also the philosophical statement in Bo, V, m, 4, 1 ff.

300 "To draw in his horns," to become less presumptuous. Proverbial, alluding to the action of the snail.

307 the spirit in his herte, the vital spirit. KnT, I, 2749 ff, and n.

336 The allusion is to the religious orders, which lived under a "rule." With the whole speech in mockery of lovers of the words of Theseus, KnT, I, 1785 ff.

338 a sely fewe, either "a few simple points" or "a very few", probably the latter Sely, "trifling, insignificant," was sometimes merely used for emphasis

363 a temple, in the temple

394 On Lollius see the Introductory Note above He is the Latin author from whom Chaucer professes to have derived his story and whom he pretends faithfully to follow

400-20 The Canthus Troilus is a fairly close rendering of Petrarch's Sonnet 88 (In Vita), "S'amor non è"

409 If harm agree me, Petrarch, "S'a mal mo grado" (if against my will), for which Root suggests Chaucer's MS may have read, "Se mal m'agrada"

411 quake deth, living death For the use of such contradictory terms, cf. n, 1099, v, 228 The rhetorical figure of oxymoron in the description of love has been common in both ancient and modern literature Cf RR, 4293 ff, derived from Alanus de Insulis, De Planctu Naturae (Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 445 f) For further illustrations see Romeo and Juliet, I, 1, 169, with Farmer's note (Furness, Variorum edn., p 22), and of the remarks on the subject in the Tatler, No 90 The Ovidian use of the figure is noted by Miss Hammond Eng Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, Durham N C, 1927, p 524

449 Proverbial, cf. RR, 2358 (Rom, 2478), and see Haekel, p 17, no 56

455 Polyxena, the daughter of Priam and Hecuba

456 f For the illogical construction, cf. ML Prol II, 49 n

457 The omission of the negative was idiomatic See Zupitza's edition of the Mid Eng Guy of Warwick, EETS, 1875-76, p 368

464 savacoun (Ital "salute," Fil, I, 44) is perhaps here, as W M Rossetti suggested, in the sense of well-being or safety The usual theological application, even if transferred to love, seems inappropriate

465 founes, fawns, i.e. young desires The figure is not in Boccaccio

470 of armes prove, "proof, test of prowess"

483 the deth, the plague

484 ff For these regular symptoms of love-sickness of KnT, I, 1372 ff, and n

517 Cf HF, 639-40, also Gen Prol, I, 476, and n

532 This line, for which the Italian has simply "più ch'altro" (Fil, I, 54, 8), sounds proverbial No particular reference has been recognized in it

543 Pandare For general remarks on the character of Pandarus, especially as modified by Chaucer, see the introduction to the Troilus Boccaccio may have taken the name Pandaro from Benoit's "Pandarus de Sezele," which in turn goes back to Homer's Pandarus of Zeleia, the Lydian archer who shot an arrow in violation of a truce and who was killed by Diomed (Iliad, iv, 125-26, v, 95 ff) But beyond the bare name Boccaccio's

Pandaro has no connection with these figures For the development of the character of the go-between — of which Pandarus has become par excellence the representative in European literature — various models have been suggested Governale, the friend of Tristan, in the Italian Tristano Galehout in the French Lancelot du Lac, who arranges a meeting between Lancelot and Guinevere, the ami of Achilles, who negotiates with Hecuba for the hand of Polyxena, and four characters in the Filocolo — Duke Feramonte, Ascolone, Glorizia, and the "fedehissimo servidore" who carries letters between Florio and Biancofiore (For detailed references see Young, pp 43 ff, and Griffin, intr, pp 42 ff) From any or all of these figures single features in the character and conduct of Pandaro may have been derived But no one of them can be regarded as his original In fact the type of procurer (or more commonly procurers) was so well established in both Latin and mediæval literature that the places are very numerous from which Boccaccio might have derived hints It has even been suggested that he draw upon personal experience with such an intermediary in his relations with Maria d'Aquino

For information about feminine counterparts of Pandarus in classical and mediæval literature reference may be made to the commentators on La Celestina, perhaps the most famous example of the type See particularly Menéndez y Pelayo, Orígenes de la Novela, III (Nueva Biblioteca de Autores Españoles, XIV), Madrid, 1910, pp xlx-xcix, and of Bonilla y San Martín, Revue Hispanique, XV, 372 ff, and F Castro Gussasola, Observaciones sobre las Fuentes Literarias de La Celestina, Madrid, 1924

550 ff With this dialogue and the corresponding passage in the Flostrato (u, 1-20) has been compared the scene in the Filocolo (I, 214-22) in which Duke Feramonte extorts from Florio a confession of his love

557 for ferde, "for fear" Aitracoun was imperfect sorrow for sin, something less than "contrition"

559 leys on presse, "lay away, put aside" (rather than "compress, diminish," as suggested by Skeat)

560 holynesse, piety (See Tatlock, Stud Phil, XVIII, 422 ff)

568 With the alternatives here cf. Gen Prol I, 844, and n

628 Apparently proverbial, Elizabethan variants are cited by H E Rollins, Paradise of Daunt Devices, Harv Univ Press, 1927, pp 267 ff

630 Proverbial See Skeat, EE Prov, p 62, no 150, Haekel, p 20, no 63

631 ff The comparison to the whetstone is also proverbial See Rollins, p 268 Chaucer may have known its occurrence in the Ars Poetica, II 304-05 This whole passage, which does not follow the Flostrato contains echoes of the Roman de la Rose

Cf particularly l 637 with RR, 21573 ff, and ll 638-44 with RR, 21559 ff. The proverbial statement in l 637 is also paralleled by Bo, II, m 1 and the gloss "Namque per oppositum noscitur omne bonum." See further Haeckel, p 35, no 118. Possibly ll 646-47 were suggested by Fil, u, 11, 1.

637 Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 35, no 118.

652-700 The citation of "ensamples" here, for which there is no parallel in the Filostrato, may be due to the similar use of exempla by Duke Feramonte in the Filocolo, I, 219 ff.

659-65 From Heroides, v, 151 f (now regarded as spurious), expanded, probably, by the use of glosses or of the Italian translation attributed to Filippo Ceffi (See PMLA, XLV, 112 f). Perhaps Chaucer was also influenced by Tes, III, 25. The conception of the physician who cannot heal himself was of course proverbial. Cf, e.g., Luke iv, 23.

674 For the phrase of Knt, I, 1133 and n.

687-88 Cf Seneca, Epist Mor, I, 3, 4. "Utrumque enim vitium est, et omnibus credere et nulli" (quoted in a gloss to Boethius, III, m 8).

694 Ecl iv, 10, cf Skeat, EE Prov, pp 62 f, no 151.

700 This bit of local color, not found in the Filostrato, is a characteristically Chaucerian addition, doubtless suggested by Ovid, Met, vi, 312.

704-07 A gloss in MS R ("Require in Metamorphosis") makes it probable that Chaucer was following Ovid in these lines, and Root suggests doubtfully that he had in mind Met, ix, 142 f. A passage in the account of Procris (Met, vii, 720) is perhaps closer. "Quaerere quod doleam statuo" (var "studeo," which fits better Chaucer's passage). But the parallel is not conclusive and the counsel against over-indulgence in grief was a commonplace of moral philosophy.

704 Cf Seneca, Epist xvi, 4, 26 ("Quid enim est turpius quam captare in ipso luctu voluptatem?"), also the OF proverb, "Nul duel sordoler ne nule joye sorjojr" (Morawski, Proverbes Français, Paris, 1925, p 51, no 1403).

708 For the proverb "Misery loves company" cf CYT, VIII, 746 f, and see Skeat, EE Prov, p 63, no 152.

712-14 A gloss in MS R again refers to Ovid, and Professor Kittredge has observed to the editor that Chaucer was probably following the Epist Ex Ponto, II, 7, 41-42. "Sic ego continuo Fortunae vulneror ictu, vixque habet in nobis iam nova plaga locum." Cf also iv, 16, 51-52.

715 If God wol, a phrase of emphasis, "in God's name."

731 This phrase is taken literally from Bo, I, pr 4, 3. Cf also Haeckel, p 33, no 108. The passage as a whole has been compared by Mr Young with Filocolo, I, 238.

738-39, 755, 806, etc With these references to solitary complaint cf Fil, II, 1, 6, 13, 16, etc.

740 Skeat compares "He makes a rod for his own breech." For other parallels see his EE Prov, pp 63 f, no 153, Haeckel, pp 6 f, no 21, H B Hinckley, MP, XVI, 39. Chaucer's version resembles those in Proverbia given in Cynrims Sprichwörter, Marburg, 1888, nos 779-85.

747 f Cf RR, 7557-58.

780-82 With this consolation may be compared Filocolo, I, 220.

786 On Titus (Titius) see Boethius, III, m 12. Cf also Aen, vi, 595, Met, iv, 457, x, 43.

809 Unknown, unkrst Proverbial. Cf Haeckel, p 10, no 33. The idea is also expressed in the proverb, "Spare to speak, and spare to speed," discussed by H E Rollins, The Paradise of Dainty Devices, Harv Univ Press, 1927, p 266 f.

810-12 Cf RR, 20889-92 (closely similar).

813-19 Cf Machaut's Remede de Fortune, 1636-51, 1662.

834-56 With this passage, of which there is no hint in the Filostrato, Dr Fansler compares the discourse of Reason, RR, 5842 ff. The argument is also paralleled, as Root notes, in Boethius at the beginning of Bk II.

846-47 Cf Boethius, II, pr 3, 39-42.

848 ff Cf the Remede de Fortune, 2531-38, and Boethius, II, pr 1, 56-58.

856 Cf Rom, 2560-61.

857-58 Cf Boethius, I, pr 4, 3 f, also Ovid, Rem Am, 125-26.

860-61 Cf II, 407 ff.

890-966 Mainly Chaucer's, with occasional echoes of Boccaccio.

891-93 Cf Seneca, Epist I, 2, 1, Boethius, II, pr 4, 68-72.

894-95 For the doctrine that the love of a good object is good cf Dante, Purg, xvii, 94 ff, xviii, 34 ff (not necessarily Chaucer's source).

897-900 Cf the Remede de Fortune, 1671-83. Fil, II, 23, is partly parallel, though the argument is different.

900 Among all the other virtues she must have Pity.

916 "Fievers blanches" The agues wherewith maidens that have the greensickness are troubled, and hence "Il a les fievers blanches," either he is in love, or sick of wantonness" (Cotgrave, s v Fievre). Cf The Cuckoo and the Nightingale, l 41 (Oxf Chau, VII, 349), and Conf Am, vi, 239.

918 tooke on hem, either "complained" or "put on clothing."

927 f Cf RR, 21551-52.

928 For faylunge, to avoid failure.

932-38 Cf ll 421-27, above.

946-49 From Ovid, Rem Am, 45-46. Cf Alanus de Insulis, Libri Parabolarum, Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 582.

948-52 Cf for elaborate series of such antitheses Alanus de Insulis, Libri Parabola- rum, loc cit Other examples are cited by Skeat, EE Prov, p 64, no 154, Haecckel, p 67, Morawski, p 5, and Miss Hammond, Eng Verse between Chaucer and Surrey p 467

950 Cf Filocolo, II 276

953 f Possibly a reminiscence of Fil ii, 23, 7-8 "possa tu soffrire, Ben raffrenando il tuo caldo disire" Cf also Bo, v, m, 1, 20 ff (for the figure of the bridle)

954 "Yield to the time (or occasion)" This use of suffire to has no exact parallel in NED It suggests the Latin proverb, "Vin- cit qui patitur" But Chaucer's choice of the word here may be due merely to the Italian ("soffrire")

956 This proverb is familiar in many variants Cf "The more haste, the worse speed" See Haecckel, p 25, no 83, Skeat, EE Prov, pp 64 f, no 155 Chaucer has it in exactly the same form in Mel, VII, 1054, and Tatlock (Dev and Chron, p 193), has suggested that it is there quoted from Tr Cf also Bk iv, l 1567 f, below

960-61 Cf RR, 2245-46 (Rom, 2367 f), also Seneca, Epist 1, 2, 2-3, and Boethius, ii, pr 11, 35 f

964 Cf Albertanus of Brescia, De Amore Dei, iii (quoting Seneca Ad Lucilium, Epist 1, 2, 3) "Etiam Seneca dixit, Non convalescit planta que sepe transfertur" (Coni, 1507, fol 60 verso)

969 Cf Anel, 20, and RR, 12759-60

976 It is unknown who are meant by the wyse lered Chaucer may have had in mind Virgil's statement in the Purg, xvii, 91-93 Cf also xviii, 19 No such authority is cited in the corresponding passage of Fil (ii, 27), where Pandaro's argument is frankly cynical "Io credo certo, ch'ogni donna in voglia Viva amorosa," and "La mia cugina è vedova, e disia" Professor Young (Wisconsin Studies in Lang and Lit, no 2, pp 367 ff) has shown how the sensual theory of Boccaccio is refined away by Chaucer Perhaps the change was due in part to Dantean influence

1000 "The best pillar of his religion and (the one) to disturb his enemies most" For the figure of a "pillar of the church" cf Gen Pro, I, 214

1001 The zeal of converts is proverbial

1004-05 Cf Ephes 1 4 f, though no special text is needed on the doctrine of salvation by grace

1021 for the manere, from considerations of propriety, good behavior

1024 On the notion that the spots on the moon represented an old man with a bundle of sticks see S Baring-Gould, Curious Myths of the Middle Ages, Philadelphia, 1869, pp 190 ff, also R Kohler, in Anglia, II, 137 ff There is a Middle English poem on the subject printed in T Wright's Specimens of Lyric Poetry, Percy Soc, 1842, pp 110 ff, in Ritson's Ancient Songs, London, 1823, I, 68, and Boddeker's Altenglische Dichtungen, Berlin, 1878, pp 176 ff Cf also Inf, xx, 126; Pax, ii, 40.

1038 "And I thy surety!" A strong affirmation, here perhaps with the ironical suggestion, "How could there be anything wrong?"

1065-92 These lines do not correspond to the Filostrato, though they perhaps echo later passages in the Italian poem Cummings (Indebtedness to Boccaccio, p 53) compares particularly iii, 90 and vii, 80

1065 ff The figure is taken almost literally from the Nova Poetria of Geoffrey de Vinsauf, ll 43-45 "Si quis habet fundare domum, non currit ad actum Impetuosa manus intrinseca linea cordis Praemittitur opus" (Les Arts Poétiques, ed E Faral, Paris, 1924, p 198) Sende out (1 1068) is apparently a translation of "praemittitur" (or "praemittetur"), instead of "praemetitur"

1092 dryeth forth, endures, goes through with, cf v, 1540

Book II

1-3 Almost surely a reminiscence of Dante, Purg, 1, 1-3, although the figure is familiar Cummings (p 53) compares Boccaccio, Ninfale Fiesolano, vii, 65 and Sonnet, 95, Tes, xi, 12, Fil, ix, 3, and Petrarch's Canzone viii (In Morte) See also Ovid, Ars Amat, 1, 772, iii, 26, 748, Rem Am, 811-12

3-4 The boot Of my conynng, "la navicella del mio ingegno," Purg, 1 2

7 kalendes, beginning, literally, the first day of the month

8 With the invocation to Cho, the Muse of history, cf the Thebaid, 1, 41

14 According to Chaucer's fiction the source of the Troilus was in Latin See the Introductory Note above There is no reason for understanding the reference here to be to Italian ("Latino volgare"), as Skeat explained it

21 A proverb of wide currency "Caecus non judicat de colomibus" See Haecckel, p 29, no 94, Skeat, EE Prov, p 66, no 157 It is used with a similar application in Dante's De Vulgari Eloquentia, II, vi, 27, and in L'Intelligenza, (ed Gellrich, Breslau, 1883) st 5, and both passages have been suggested as possible sources for Chaucer (See Kittredge, MP, VII, 477 f and Lowes, MP, XIV, 710-11)

22 ff Ultimately from Horace Ars Poetica, 70-71, with perhaps further debt to Seneca, Epist xix, 5, 13, Chaucer's immediate source for the Horatian passage may have been John of Salisbury, Metalogicon, 1, 16, iii, 3 (ed Webb, Oxford, 1929, pp 42, 134), or Dante's Convivio, ii, 14, 83-86 (cf also 1, 5, 55-66)

28 Proverbial Cf l 42 below also the Proverbs of Heandyn, l 29 (Mezans's Altenglische Spruchproben, I, 305). See Skeat, EE Prov, p 66, no 155

36 Cf Alanus de Insula, Liber Parabolarum, Magna Est. Est. CCLX, 591, "Mille

viae ducunt homines per saecula Romam" See also Haeckel, p 69

42 Also proverbial Cf Haeckel, p 34, no 113

50-56 Cf Tes, m, 6-7, RR, 45-66

55 Bole, Taurus On May 3 the sun would have reached about the twentieth degree of Taurus The epithet white has been traced to Ovid's description of the snow-white bull in the form of which Jupiter visited Europa (Met, n, 852) But the reason for the association is not obvious

It is uncertain why Chaucer chose May 3 specifically as the date of this occurrence The same question arises, it will be remembered, in the Knigh't's Tale and the Nun's Priest's Tale See KnT, I, 1462, n

64-71 The passage is somewhat similar to Tes iv, 73 Cf also Purg, ix, 13 ff, and Petrarch's Sonnet 42, In Morte, "Zefiro torna" For the transformation of Progne see Ovid, Met, vi, 412 ff

74 Cf MULT, I, 3515 f An instance where the Moon was in unfavorable 'plight' is described in MLT, II, 302 ff For an account of the astrological calculations involved see the note on that passage Trolus's "casting," as Root suggests, might have consisted simply in consulting a moon-book (Lunarium) See L Thorndike, Hist of Magic, New York, 1929, I, 680 ff

80 ff This scene, in which the maiden reads aloud to the three ladies, is not taken from the Filostrato It doubtless represents a common practice of Chaucer's age See Miss Ruth Crosby's (unpublished) Radcliffe dissertation, Chaucer and the Custom of Oral Delivery, 1929, especially pp 43 ff She notes (pp 28 ff) that similar groups are described in the Yvain (ed Foerster, Halle, 1912), ll 5360 ff, and Li Chevaliers as Deus Espees (ed Foerster, Halle, 1877), ll 4266 ff, 8951 ff Cf also the familiar story of Robert Bruce reading Fierabras to his men as they were ferried across Loch Lomond (Barbour's Bruce, ed Skeat, EETS, 1870-89, m, 435 ff) For further references to the custom see Havelock (ed Skeat-Sisam, Oxford, 1915), I, 2327, and Sir Tristrem, n, st 13 (with Sir W Scott's note, ed Edinburgh, 1804, pp 285 ff)

84 ff Chaucer's classical authority for the story of Thebes was the Thebaid of Statius, of which a Latin summary is inserted in the Trolus MSS after v, 1498 See the note to v, 1485 ff Although the term "romance" (l 100) is not altogether applicable to the Latin poem, still the mention of bookes twelve (l 108) indicates that Chaucer had it in mind

104 The use of bishop here may have been suggested by "evesque" in the Roman de Thebes, 5053, though it was natural enough as a bit of unconscious modernization The description of the geste of the ascege of Thebes here is applicable in general to the Thebaid

110 The barbe, a piece of white plaited linen passed over or under the chin and reaching midway to the waist, was worn by widows. See the NED, and DuCange, s v Barbuta

113-19 Cummings compares Fil, n, 49 The whole scene of Pandarus's visit to Criseyde he suggests, is borrowed from Fil, n, 108

134 And I your surety, i e, I will warrant guarantee

151 "Many a strange matter, joyous and solemn" Skeat gives unkouth an adverbial force, "very" (Scottish "unco"), but this use as Root observes, seems to be late

157-61 Cf the Roman de Troie, 3991-92, 5393-96

158 Perhaps an echo of Guido's phrase "alius Hector vel secundus ab ipso" (Historia, sig e 2 verso, col 1 For the comparison with Hector see also n, 1775

167-68 Cf RR, 5660-62, which in turn goes back to Lucan, Pharsalia viii, 494-95

191-203 These lines have no counterpart in the Filostrato, and Chaucer does not seem to be referring to any particular episode in Benoit or Guido

193 For the figure of iv, 1356, also RR, 8721 f Other parallels in Chaucer are noted in Angl, XIV, 243 f

197 ff Apparently influenced by Tes, viii, 81

225-26 Cf Fil, n, 37 The next fifty lines are mainly independent of Boccaccio

236 Withouten paramours, either "except sweethearts," or "except by way of passionate love"

260 Proverbial Root quotes, "The last word byndeth the tale" Cf also "La fin loe l'oeuvre" (Morawski, p 37, no 1002)

315-85 The speech of Pandarus is mainly Chaucer's, though suggestions for it are found in various passages in Boccaccio Cf particularly Fil, n, 42, 43, 44, 46

343 Proverbial, cf Skeat, EE Prov, pp 66 f, no 159

344 vertueles, lacking in such virtue or efficacy as a gem ought to possess For a representative mediæval account of the virtues of precious stones see Marbodius (bishop of Rennes, 11th century), De Lapidibus Preciosis Enchiridion, Paris, 1531 Cf also L Pannier, Les Lapidaires Français du Moyen Âge, Paris, 1882

366 doute of reson, reasonable fear

398 Hazlitt records two somewhat similar proverbs "Too late to grieve when the chance is past" (London, 1907, p 501), and "He is wise that is ware in time" (p 193) See also Skeat, EE Prov, p 67, no 160

400 ff Cf Ars Amat, n, 117-18

409-27 With Criseyde's speeches here of that of Helen in Ovid's Her, xvi (xvii), 111 ff

424 paynted proces, dishonest procedure, colored so as to appear what it is not

425 Skeat suggests that Pallas is invoked here with reference to the Palladion (l, 153), and notes also that she was a virgin goddess Criseyde calls upon her again in v, 977, 999

428-500 In these lines, which are mainly Chaucer's own, a few parallels with the Filostrato have been noted, see Fil., u, 52, 66 and 121

435-36 Cf Tes., i, 58, and iii, 1

470 Proverbial. See Haeckel, p 23, no 73, Skeat, EE Prov., p 67, no 161

477 On holding in hand see iii, 773 ff, and HF, 692 n

479 f With Criseyde's reservation as regards her honor of u, 468, 762, and iii, 941 ff, also Fil., u, 121 Professor Shannon has noted as a parallel the words of Helen in Her., xvi (xvii), 17 f. See also ll 727-28 below

483 Proverbial medical doctrine Cf Gen. Prol., I, 423-24

484 f Mr C L Wrenn, in MLR, XVIII, 289 ff, suggests that this stanza was influenced by Horace, Odes, iii, 3, 1-8. But the two passages are not very similar

513 On the game of throwing darts or spears see Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, ed Cox, London, 1903, pp 62 ff

525 mea culpa, a familiar phrase from the Confiteor, or the form of confession. The whole speech of Troilus here illustrates the application of religious conceptions to the affairs of love

527 Ledest the fyn, directest the end. With the thought in general of Boethius, iv, pr 6 115-17

530 On the sin of disesperaunce or "wanhope", see i, 15, n

533 f Cf KnT, I, 1096 and n

538-39 Cf Ovid, Met., iv, 64, also LGW, 735-36. See Skeat, EE Prov., p 68, no 162

542-50 Certain details of this episode for which Fil. (u, 61-62) offers no parallels, were possibly suggested by Filocolo (I, 238)

553 With the newe daunce Troilus compares "the newefot," Conf. Am., vi, 145

611-44 The description of Troilus's triumphant entry has no counterpart in the Filostrato. The original hunt for the passage, and for the second ride of Troilus (u, 1247 ff), Chaucer perhaps got from Fil., u, 82, where Criseida stands at her window and Troilus and Pandaro pass by, apparently on foot. For certain features of the triumph he may have drawn upon Benoît's account of Hector's return from battle (Roman de Troie, 10201 ff). Cf also the lines which describe the return of Troilus from a later fight (20597 ff), and further similarities of detail may be noted in ll 3147-48, 10283 ff, and 20620 ff. But the best parallel to the episode as a whole (as pointed out by Professor Lowes in an unpublished study) is afforded by the account of Aeneas and Lavinia in the OF Roman d'Eneas, ll 8047 ff., cf also ll 8381 ff

615 cast up, open. The adoption of the reading lains for yates, against MS authority, is unnecessary (See MP, VII, 479)

616-18 Cf Benoît (ll 3143 ff) and Guido (sig c 1 verso, col 2). Both relate that Hector ordered the gate Dardanides to be opened to allow his army to issue forth

According to Guido the city had six gates, the first of which was Dardanides. The name Dardanides was originally that of an ancestor of Priam

622-23 Cf Boethius, v, pr 6, 91-94

637 Cf SqT, V, 558

651 Who yaf me drynke? Who has given me a love-potion?

656 for pure ashamed, for very shame. On this idiomatic use of "for" with an adjective or participle see KnT, I, 2142, n

659 ff With Criseyde's reflections here of those of Helen in Her., xvi (xvii)

671 Proverbial. See Skeat, EE Prov., p 68, no 163, also Duringsfeld, I, 50 no 102

681 The term houes here (as Skeat remarks) probably refers not to the zodiacal sign, but rather to one of the twelve divisions of the celestial sphere made by great circles passing through the north and south points of the horizon. See Chaucer's Astrolabe, u, 37, on the equations of houses. The first and seventh, the one just below the eastern horizon and the one just above the western, were deemed fortunate

684-85 Venus had also not been in an entirely unfavorable position at the time of Troilus's birth

715 ff Proverbial. See Haeckel, p 27, no 87, and p 49, no 174

716-18 Cf RR, 5744 f. The negative drynkeles seems at first to contradict the natural meaning of the sentence. But after "forbid" and other verbs with a negative implication it was not uncommon in early English to repeat the negative idea, usually by the particle ne, in a dependent clause. Cf n'art, ABC, 26 (after douie), that no man make Mel, VII, 1584 (after deffendeth and forbedeth), sholde nat, Mel, VII, 1757 (after deffendeth), nys, Bo, u, pr 10, 16 ff (after denyed), 36 f (after douie), also Layamon's Brut, ed Madden, London, 1847, ll 13179, 22067, and see, for examples from AS, J E' Wulfing, Die Syntax in den Werken Alfreds des Grossen, Bonn, 1894-1901, II, 93 ff. In the present passage the negative idea is expressed by the idea drynkeles. But such substitution for the clause with ne was rare

724 For the vehement condemnation of avauntours, men who boast of favors received, see ii, 306 ff. Cf also NPT, VII, 2914 ff, and n

754 The figure from chess, which has been referred to RR, 6652 ff, occurs also in BD, 659 ff. It was a common trope, used by Rutebeuf, Deschamps, and Machaut

756 Cf KnT I, 1625, and n, SqT, V, 619

759 naught religious, that is, not a nun, not vowed to celibacy

766-67 Cf Boethius, I, m, 3, 7-10

784 For this phrase, of FranklT, V, 942, and n

786-88 Cf Ovid, Her. xvi (xvii), 39 f

789 Proverbial. See Haeckel, p 31, no 103, and cf HF, 361, BD, 708

791 Apparently also proverbial MS S¹ has the gloss "Acriores in principio franguntur in fine" For sayings of similar tenor cf Haeckel, p 52

797 sporneth, stumbles it is too insubstantial to make anybody stumble

798 "Ex nihilo nihil fit" Cf Haeckel, p 10, no 34

807-08 "Nothing venture, nothing win" Cf v, 784, and see Skeat, EE Prov, pp 68 f, no 164, pp 78 f, no 189, Haeckel, p 9, no 30

811 Cf RR, 2277-78

813 ff The garden scene and Antigone's song are added by Chaucer The setting may have been suggested by a later passage in the Filostrato (iii, 73 ff) where Troilo leads Pandaro into a garden and sings a love-song in some respects similar But the real source of Antigone's song appears to be Machaut's Paradis d'Amour (ed Chichmaref, Poésies lyriques, Paris, 1909, II, 345 ff) See Young, Orign, pp 173-76, and Kittredge in MLN, XXV, 158 Koepfel, in EST, XX, 156, compared Gower's 46th Balade But the resemblance is slight

816 The origin of the names of Cruseyde's neeces is unknown Antigone is of course familiar in the story of Thebes Hamilton, Chaucer's Indebtedness to Gundo, pp 94 ff, would derive Tharbe from "rex Thabor" in Gundo's Historia (sig f 5 verso, col 2), and Fierpypp from Ovid's Pleippus, the uncle of Meleager (Met viii, 440)

841 ff Cf Venus, 1-24

861 Cf the proverb, "Many talk of Robyn Hood, that never shot in his bow" See Hazlitt, p 311 Root notes that two of the scribes (those of MSS H¹ and Ph) recognize the saying and supply glosses referring to Robyn Hood

867 For the figure of a glass head or a glass cap, as a symbol of insecurity, see MkT, VII, 2372, n (vatremyte), and cf v, 469 The present passage of course corresponds to the modern proverb, "those who live in glass houses should not throw stones" Cf Skeat, EE Prov, pp 69 f, no 166

884-86 The assonance here (sike endrite) is perhaps the only clear case in Chaucer Skeat suggested emending to syte, "be anxious"

905 Cf, for the humorous turn, FranklT, V, 1017 f

908 Cf Dante, Par, xxi, 93

920 Cf KnT, I, 1509, SqT, V, 53 ff, LGW ProI G, 49

925 On a possible relation between this dream of the eagle and Fil, vii, 23-24, with further influence of Dante's Purg, xxx, 108 (and following cantos), see M Praz, Monthly Criterion, VI, 29-31

954 "Put on your hat and go"

964 hameled, hambled, mutilated The term was used of both dogs and deer It is probably here to be applied to the sorrow of Troilus, conceived as a pursuing hound For the suggestion that it may refer rather to Cruseyde conceived as the game in flight but now half captured, see O F Emerson, Rom Rev, XIII, 147-48

967-71 Cf, besides Fil, ii, 80, Dante's Inf, i, 127-32, which Boccaccio followed

986-87 The homely comparison sounds proverbial

989 Cf FrT, III, 1475, n

1001 "I am not to blame for your ill-success" For the idiomatic use of long, along, see CYT, VIII, 922, n

1022 It is still a familiar belief that men's ears glow when they are talked about

1023 The suggestion of the letter comes doubtless from Fil, ii, 91 For the directions about how to write it cf Ovid, Ars Amat, i, 467 ff

1025 "Don't make a display by using arguments" These is employed here, as often, in the generalizing sense Make it tough has a meaning not recognized by the NED, but clearly established by several passages to which Professor Kittredge has called the editor's attention The NED gives two senses (a) "to make it difficult, to show reluctance" (the probable meaning in BD, 531), (b) "to be persistent or obstinate" A third sense (c), "to bear one's self jauntily or with self-assurance, to put on style or airs, to swagger," is found in A Treatise of a Gallant, 138-39 (Hazlitt, Early Pop Poetry, London, 1866, III, 157)

"Tryppynge with small shankes/as lyght as lefe on lynde/

To make it toughe and fresshe/as it were the newe yere"

Cf also Rowlande and Ottuell, l 118, and Hoccleve, Reg of Princes, 3516 ff, both put by the NED under (a) This meaning best fits the present passage and iii, 87, probably also v, 101 Further developments of sense (c) are "to make merry," as in The Kyng and the Hermyt, 308 (Hazlitt, I, 24), "to use eager blandishments," as in A Penni Worth of Witte, ed Laing, Edinburgh, 1857, l 329, "to act lustily" — sensu obsceno — as in ShpT, VII, 379 The meaning "vigorous," "assiduous," or "energetic" may underlie all these special idioms

1027 Cf Ovid, Her, iii, 3

1030 ff The phrase "to harp on one string" was doubtless proverbial, but Chaucer may have known the parallel passage in Horace, Ars Poetica, 355-56 Cf Skeat, EE Prov, p 70, no 167

1041-43 Cf Horace, Ars Poetica, 1-5, partly quoted in John of Salisbury's Polycraticus, ii, 18 (ed Webb, I, 103)

1093 ff The services of Pandarus in the Troilus and the Filostrato in bearing letters between the lovers have been compared to those of the "fidelissimo servidore" in the Filocolo (I, 267-75) The sentimental performance of Troilus in moistening the seal with tears has also a parallel in the Filocolo, I, 274

1099 Cf "the jolif wo," Conf Am, vi, 84 and see i, 411, n., above

1107 On the figure of the dance of love see Gen Prol, I, 476, n

1108 Skeat and Root read to-laugh, "laughed exceedingly" (pret 3 sing) NED under To-prefix² records numerous examples of the use of "to-" merely for emphasis But it gives no case of the prefix with "laugh" or verbs of similar meaning In the absence of such parallels it seems safer to read *to laugh*e (inf), though the construction is doubtful There is little support in Chaucer for the historical infinitive LGW 635 and 653 may be examples Cf also Conf Am, viii, 1393 and Macaulay's note In the present passage *to laugh*e is possibly to be taken in a causal sense "And she, for laughter, thought (lit "it seemed") her heart would break" See J S Kenyon, The Syntax of the Infinitive in Chaucer, Chaucer Society, 1909, pp 80-81

1109-10 "fynde Game in myn hood," make a joke of me Root compares Intro to PrT, VII, 440

1120 ff Cf the similar situation in Fl, ii, 109

1145 This was the fate of Capaneus Cf v, 1504 f, and Thebaid, x, 888 ff

1178 he koude good, he knew how to act (in the circumstances in question) See ML Epil, II, 1169, n

1201 The reference is to the old custom of sewing together the pieces of parchment on which a letter was written

1213 f Cf Her, xvi (xvii), 143 f

1229 ybete, embroidered See KnT, I, 979, n

1234 f Apparently proverbial, cf Haekkel, p 54

1239 Also a proverb Skeat, EE Prov, p 71, no 168, cites Hazlitt, "Soon learnt, soon forgotten" But the Latin gloss in MS HL is closer "Levis impressio, levis recessio"

1240-1304 Chaucer's own elaboration of the narrative

1249 with his tenthe som, with a party of ten The idiom is common in Mid Eng Sometimes the number includes the leader (as in AS), and frequently not Som is the indefinite pronoun, not the noun "sum" See Bosworth-Toller, Anglo-Saxon Dictionary, s v sum, i, 1, b

1274 "God send others such thorns to pick on!" This pious wish is perhaps aimed at Pandarus's unresponsive mistress For the use of mo cf CIT, IV, 1039

1276 "Strike while the iron is hot" Cf Mel, VII, 1036, n

1332 Cf Skeat, EE Prov, p 71, no 170

1335 Cf Skeat, EE Prov, pp 71 f, no 171 Koepfel (Herrig's Arch, XC, 151) compares Alanus de Insulis, Liber Parabolarum, Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 583 "De nucce fit corylius de glande fit ardua quercus"

1347 For the use of dice in divination to foretell success in love Root compares Macaulay's note on Conf Am, iv, 2792, also Cicero, De Divinatione, i 13, 23, n, 21, 48, n, 59 121

1349 After his gistes according to his plan or itinerary Gistes almost certainly means 'stations or stages of a journey' (NED Gist, Gest) Professor Root's interpretation casts (of dice) "would fit the context but the word seems not to be recorded in this sense

1360-83 Proverbial "A great tree has a great fall", cf Skeat, EE Prov, p 72, no 172 The lines are imitated by Usk in the Testament of Love iii, 7, 99-101

1387 ff Cf i, 257 f, and n

1394-1757 This episode as a whole is Chaucer's invention The intimacy of Deifebo and Troilo in the Filostrato (see especially viii, 78 ff) may well enough have given him the hint for it The idea of Criseyde's insecurity in Troy, used by Pandarus as a pretext for his intercession with Deiphobus, is sufficiently suggested by her appeals to Hector at the beginning of the poem (Tr, i, 106 ff, Fl, i, 12-13)

1467 false Poliphete does not appear in the Filostrato Hamilton (Chaucer's Indebtedness to Guido p 97, n 3) suggests that Chaucer had in mind the Trojan priest, "Cererique sacrum Polyphosten," of Aen, vi, 484 Two characters in the Roman de Troie are named Polibetes, but they are both Greeks

1495 word and ende, see MkT, VII, 2721, n

1503 Another instance of the application of theological terms to love Cf Luke viii, 48

1533 This sounds proverbial

1534 triste, the hunter's station in a deer hunt

1554 An absurd request, since running was proverbially associated with madness Cf "to run mad" also, "Lote renne aboute and breyde wod," Body and Soul (Emerson, Mid Eng Reader, New York, 1915, p 50, l 30)

1557 an hour after the prime, ten in the morning, the hour of dinner See v, 1126

1564 A literal equivalent of R.R., 18298 Cf SqT, V, 401 ff

1610 Cf v, 651

1735 The significance of the corones tweyne is uncertain Skeat explained them as the crowns of roses and lilies brought by an angel to the virgin couple in the Second Nun's Tale (VIII, 270) Pandarus, he says, thus boldly insinuates that the proposed meeting is to be of the most innocent character But such an allusion is out of place here, unless Chaucer meant by the very anachronism to heighten the cynical humor of Pandarus's speech And it is hard to believe that Chaucer's readers, without some further hint, would have thought, at that point, of the crowns of Cecilia and Valerius The meaning or implication of the line may be what Skeat suggests, and the allusion in corones tweyne be rather to nuptial crowns as symbols of innocent or honorable love. Another explanation, offered by Bell (III, 115), is that the crowns were those of Priam and Hecuba. But this lacks point, and is not supported by anything in the context.

Other scholars still have proposed allegorical interpretations of the passage. Mr G C Macaulay (in Acad., 1895, I, 339), taking his hint from the dialogue just preceding in the Filostrato (ii, 134), in which Criseida refers to "la corona dell onestà mea" and Pandaro in reply speaks of "questa corona," suggests that Chaucer's Pandarus is referring symbolically to Love and Mercy. But this application, though possible, is entirely arbitrary, whereas the crown has often served as a symbol of honor ("onestà"), and especially the honor of chastity. If an explanation is to be sought in this passage of the Filostrato, it would seem safer to take the crowns as symbolizing the honor of both parties, Criseyde and Troilus. Mr Root, in his note on this line, hesitatingly suggests that the crowns stand for either Pity and Bountee (see Pity, 58, 71-77) or Justice and Mercy, represented in Christ and the Virgin (see ABC, 137-44). These interpretations also are possible. But if Chaucer intended either of them, he certainly left his readers to search for it.

The explanation of the corones tweyne as nuptial crowns would seem altogether the most natural if it were clear that Chaucer had any knowledge of their ancient use. The garland of the bride was of course familiar to him. In fact he refers to it in CIT, IV, 381. But the double crowning of brides and grooms was a regular custom of the Greeks and Romans (apparently also of the Hebrews) and of the early Christian Church. To this day it is so conspicuous a part of the marriage service in the Orthodox Eastern Church that the whole ceremony is known as the "crowning" (στέφανισμα). In the Western church it was discontinued early as a general practice, though it is recognized in a Latin ritual printed for Poland and Lithuania as late as 1691. And according to L. Gautier (La Chevalerie, Paris, 1884, pp 416, 420) it survived as a social custom in medieval France (though he fails to cite clear evidence of the crowning of the groom). On the whole it is not unreasonable to suppose that Chaucer and his readers would have associated a pair of crowns with the marriage service. And if Chaucer knew of the ancient Greek custom, he may conceivably have been trying for "local color" here as in a number of other passages in the Troilus.

On nuptial crowns in general see G E Howard, A History of Matrimonial Institutions, Chicago, 1904, I, 295. References to Hebrew usage were collected by Selden, Uxor Hebraica (ed. Beckmann, Frankfurt am Oder, 1673) lib ii, cap 15, and to that of the Greeks and Romans by Carlo Pasquali, Coronae, Leyden, 1671, pp 126 ff., see also Smith-Cornish, Concise Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities, London, 1898, s v Matrimonium, and J Kochling, De Coronarum apud Antiquos Vi atque Usu (Religionsgeschichte Versuche, XIV, pt ii, Giessen, 1914). On the Christian marriage ritual see, besides Howard's chapter cited above, Martene, De Antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus, Antwerp 1763-64, II, 124 f., and for other references consult the Catholic Encyclopaedia, s v Marriage (Ritual of).

1738 com of, on this figure from falconry or hunting see the Glossary.

1745 wagging of a tree, proverbial for "the slightest movement."

1752 kankedort, an unexplained word which seems to refer to a state of discomfort or anxiety. Comparison has been made with Swedish "kanka" (to be unsteady) and "ort" (place), also with "canker" (cancer) and "dort" (Lowland Scottish = sulkiness), and also with Old French "quant que dort (whenever he sleeps). But none of these derivations seems likely to be right. Root notes the occurrence of what appears to be a corruption of the word, in the form "crank dort" in Henry Medwall's Nature, Tudor Facsimile Text reproduction of the British Museum copy, London, 1908, sig. e 1 recto.

1750 See the Textual Notes for an extra stanza inserted at this point by a single MS R. It is apparently genuine, but Chaucer doubtless meant to cancel it. As Root remarks, it may have been originally intended to follow l 1736.

Book III

1-49 The poem is an invocation to Venus, based mainly upon Filostrato, iii, 74-79, where a similar address to the goddess forms a portion of the song of Troilo. At that point (ll 1744 ff., below) Chaucer substitutes a different song derived from Boethius. Perhaps the added appeal to Callope (l 45) is due to Statius, Theb., iv, 34 f., or Dante, Purg., i, 9.

The whole passage affords an excellent example of the mediæval practice of "astrologizing the gods" (See KnT, I, 2217 ff., n.) Venus is addressed first as the planet of the third sphere (l 2), companion of the sun (l 3), and then as the daughter of Jove, the goddess of love. By love, moreover, is meant both sexual attraction and the cosmic "love" which binds together the universe. In fact several lines in both Boccaccio and Chaucer are clearly colored by the Christian conception of the love of God.

A number of passages, classical and Christian, on Venus, Love, etc., which illustrate Boccaccio's stanzas and indicate some of his sources, are collected by A S Cook in Herrig's Arch., CXIX, 40 ff. Professor Cook lays especial stress on the influence of Dante

5 Closer to this than Fil, iii, 74 ("Benigna donna d'ogni gentil core") or Inf, v, 100 ("Amor, che al cor gentil ratto s'apprende") is Guido Guinizelli's line, "Al cor gentil ripara sempre Amore" (Canzone, ed d'Ancona, Bologna, 1877, p 13, l 1) If Chaucer had not read Guido's poem, he might have known this single line from Dante's citation of it in the Convivio, iv, 20

8-14 For a fuller statement of this doctrine see ll 1744-71, below and KnT, I, 2988, both of which go back to Boethius, ii m 8

11 vapor, influence, emanation (Bocce "vapor") Perhaps from Purg, xi, 6, where the early commentators understood "vapor" to refer to the divine Love It is now interpreted as Wisdom Cf Wisdom of Solomon, vii, 25

15-17 Behind the names of pagan divinities Mr Root is doubtless right in recognizing the Christian doctrine that the vivifying power in creation was the Holy Spirit, which impersonates the Love of God He cites Thomas Aquinas, Summa, pars 1, qu 45, art 6

17-21 Chaucer seems to have in mind only the amorous adventures of Jupiter, whereas Boccaccio speaks of Venus in terms applicable to Mercy as an attribute of God

22 ff Cf i, 250, and n

22 For the influence of Venus upon Mars see also Mars, 36-42

33 jo, a word otherwise unknown in English was derived by Skeat from Old French "joer," to play, to move Here he would interpret it as "come about, come to pass" Mr Root suggests doubtfully a connection with Mod Eng "gee," to fit, suit agree

35 Cf the saying, "There are as good fish in the sea as ever were caught"

39-42 The language here seems to echo that often addressed to the Virgin Cf Pr Prol, VII, 478, and Dante, Par, xxxiii, 16

43 Cf ii, 13

45 The invocation of Calliope, the Muse of epic poetry, was perhaps influenced by Dante's Purg, i, 7-9

50-238 Largely original with Chaucer, though suggestions are furnished by the Filostrato, especially iii, 23-29 With the vows of Troilus (ll 127-47) may be compared also passages in the letter to Criseida, Fil, ii, 96-106 But the similarities are mostly of too commonplace a character to prove indebtedness

63 that is yours deeth to write, that is to blame for your death

81 A recurring expression Cf i 957, below, also LGW, 1817, and Gen Prol, I, 782 (Harl 7334 variant)

87 f Cressida liked him none the less for being abashed — (1) for not being malapert, (2) for not bearing himself with jaunty self-assurance, (3) for not being over-bold in flattery or in professions of love — in such "fair words" as, according to the proverb, "make tools fain"

For this interpretation, which gives a consistent meaning to a difficult passage the editor is indebted to an unpublished note of Professor Kittredge On made it tough see ii, 1025 n The phrase 'to sing a fool a mass' was undoubtedly proverbial though no exact parallel seems to have been found to its use in the present passage Lydgate (Chorl and Bird, Minor Poems, Percy Soc 1840 p 191) associates it, as an act of mad futility, with teaching an ass to play on the harp Both examples he may have got from the Troilus (see i, 731), though there is a very similar combination of ideas in the proverb, "Surdis frustra canitur nec asinus cithara gaudet" (Bebel, Proverbia Germanica, ed Suringar, Leyden, 1879, no 79 p 28) "Surdo canere" ("narrare" etc) is a common Latin saying which in Low German regions is elaborated by the mention of the mass Cf "Men en sal ghenen doven twee missen singhen" (Hoffmann von Fallersleben, Altniederlandsche Sprichwörter, no 495, p 32, in Horae Belgicae IX, Hanover, 1854 See also Antonius Tunnicius, ed H von Fallersleben, Die Alteste Niederdeutsche Sprichwörter-sammlung, Berlin, 1870, no 722 p 65, P J Harrebomée, Spreekwoordenboek der Nederlandsche Taal, Utrecht, 1858 I, 147) Lydgate's use of the English phrase "to sing a fool a mass" indicates that it was probably current in the same sense But this meaning does not suit the passage about Troilus Here, Professor Kittredge suggests, the reference is rather to 'fine and flattering speeches such as a confident suitor might use to beguile a silly woman' She would take them all on faith, not understanding their true import any better than a fool understands the mass

For the idiom to bold to synge, "overbold in singing," see Kenyon, Syntax of the Infinitive in Chaucer, Chau Soc, 1909, p 67, and cf Macbeth, iv, 2, 69

114 For the proverbial comparison see LGW, 1841, Haeckel, p 47, no 163

115 Cf SqT, V, 496

150 natal Joves feste, probably (as Skeat suggests) the feast of Jupiter, who presides over nativities Cf l 1016 below Mr Root's interpretation, "Jove's natal feast," the pagan equivalent of Christmas, does not seem the natural meaning of the words

188-89 There are numerous instances in ballad and romance where bells are said to have been thus rung "without hand" to mark an event of special joy or solemnity See, for example, Child, English and Scottish Ballads, Boston, 1882-98, I, 173, 231, III 235, 244, 519 f also Hinckley in MP, XVI 40, Tatlock in MLN, XXIX 98, and P Barry in MLN, XXX, 28 f Mr Barry suggests that many stories of the sort had their origin in a single instance related by St Willibrord (eighth century) about the monks of Fulda See Vitae S Bonifati, ed W Levison Hanover, 1905, p 53

198 bere the belle, usually explained as meaning "lead the flock," hence "take precedence." For the suggestion that the reference is rather to taking the prize in a race see JEGP, VI, 115. See also Skeat, EE Prov, p 73 f, no 173 Haeckel p 48 no 167.

294 From Dionysius Cato, Bk 1, Dist 3 Cf Manct, IX, 332 f, also RR, 7037, 7041-45, 7055-57. Several similar proverbial expressions are cited by Haeckel, p 16, no 52.

309 Also proverbial. See Haeckel, p 32, no 106, and Skeat, EE Prov, p 73, no 175.

329 Cf the Latin proverb "Felix quem facunt aliena pericula cautum", also RR, 8003-04, and for other variants see Skeat, EE Prov, p 73 f no 176.

340 the chartres up to male, to draw up the charters i e, to put in writing the exact terms that she has granted you.

349 richesse, abundance (Ital "dovizia," Fil, iii, 11, 5).

351-54 Besides the immediate source, Fil, iii, 12, cf RR, 47-54 and 78-80.

404 Depart, make the distinction. Root notes that Troilus is making "a common distinction of scholastic philosophy between likeness and identity of substance." He cites Duns Scotus, Expositio in Metaphy Arist, lib x, sum 2, cap 1, no 30 (Paris, 1891-95, VI, 385), and Thomas Aquinas, Summa, pars 1, qu 31, art 2.

413 and lat me thanne allone, "and then leave me to arrange it alone." Ital "Poi mi lascia operar con qual sia l'una" (Fil, iii, 18).

445 sesed, seized, possessed (in the legal sense).

451-52 Perhaps an echo of Fil, ii, 84, 7-8.

502 as seyth myn outour, i e, the fictitious Lollus the statement is not in the Filostrato. The same applies also to l 575.

510 fulfelle Kentish for fulfille.

512-1190 The account of the way by which the lovers are brought together differs widely from the corresponding part of the Filostrato. Professor Young (Origin, pp 139 ff) has argued that Chaucer probably derived many suggestions for his plan from the passage in Boccaccio's Filocolo where a meeting is arranged between Florio and Biancofiore (II, 165-83). In both stories are to be noted the concealment of the lover by a go-between, the motif of jealousy, the lady's exaction of oaths, the use of rings, and the interchange of more or less formal vows. The whole suggestion of Troilus's jealousy of Horaste, for which there is no basis in the Filostrato, may be due to the account of Florio's jealousy, in an episode in the early part of the Filocolo (I, 247-89). Dr Cummings, who rejects the theory of the influence of the Filocolo, has pointed out (Indebtedness to Boccaccio, p 65) a number of parallel features in the Filostrato. But some of these are insignificant, and the rest are not sufficient to account for the development of the plot. On the whole question see further Professor Root's comments in his edition, pp xxxi-xxx, and Professor Griffin's introduction to the prose translation of the Filostrato, p 101, n 1. The nocturnal visit, as Mr Griffin argues, was undoubtedly a stereotyped situation.

526 f "Beyond a doubt it was free in the wind from every magpie and every sparrow," i e, there were no birds to windward to give an alarm.

542 For the holy laurer Skeat cites Met, i, 566 f. But, as Root observes, Ovid does not represent Apollo as speaking from out the tree.

549 the chaungynge of the moone, the phase when the moon is invisible.

587 "Since I trust you most."

593 For the story of Tantalus see Met, iv, 458 ff, and cf Boethius, iii m 12, 37.

596 a certein of ShpT VII, 334, n.

609 No dainty was lacking.

614 On Wade see the MerchT, IV, 1424, and n.

615 Proverbial "Every thing hath an end" — to which is sometimes added in English and several other languages, "and a pudding (sausage) hath two." Cf KnT, I, 2636, LGW, 651, Skeat, EE Prov, p 94, no 224, Haeckel, p 43, nos 147, 148.

617-20 Cf Boethius, iv, pr 6 35-56, v, m 1, 11 f, and KnT I, 1663 ff. n. Chaucer may also have been influenced here and elsewhere by Dante's discussion of the heavenly spheres in Convivio, ii 4.

624 The rain was caused by the conjunction of the crescent Moon, Saturn, and Jupiter in Cancer, which was the Moon's mansion. On the actual occurrence of such a conjunction in May, 1385, and its bearing on the date of the Troilus see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on Tr. According to the calculations of Professor Russell there cited, Jupiter and Saturn were in exact conjunction in Gemini on April 13, and remained in "platic" conjunction (i e, less than nine degrees apart) until the end of June. Jupiter entered Cancer on May 1, and Saturn on May 14. By May 13 the crescent moon appeared close to both planets. Venus, which had been in conjunction with Saturn May 3, and with Jupiter May 5, had moved on some ten degrees. Chaucer transferred Venus to the morning (see ll 1415 ff below, and n).

671 For the custom of drinking wine just before going to bed see Gen Prol, I, 819-21.

694-95 Cf ii, 1106 and Gen Prol, I, 476, n.

711 Proverbial, like "the fat is in the fire." See Skeat, EE Prov, p 74, no 177.

716 Mars and Saturn both had an evil influence. Cf KnT, I, 1995 ff, 2456 ff, for illustrations of the misfortunes they caused Venus when "combust" by being too near the Sun, lost its influence. See Astr, ii, §4. On the combination of astrology and mythology see the note to ll 1 f, above.

720-21 Possibly suggested by Tea, vii, 43, though no source need be assumed. See Chaucer's translation of the passage in KnT I, 2221-25. Cf also Ovid, Met, x, 715.

722 On Jupiter and Europa see Met, II, 833 ff, and cf LGW Prol F, 113 and n

725 For the form Cyprius, see also HF, 518 With the adoration of Mars by his love of Venus cf KnT I 2383 ff

726 On Dane (Daphne) see Met I 452 ff and cf KnT I 2062 ff

729 See Met, II, 708-832

731 Cf Ovid Ars Am I 261 f

733 With fatal sustren cf v 3 also for the application of the term "sorores" to the Parcae, Theb, I 632 viii 59, ix 323 For the idea that the child's fate is spun before his first garment is made see KnT I 1566, and n

741 trappe, either a trap-door in the floor or a secret entrance in the paneeling

764 Proverbial See Haeckel pp 22 f, no 72, Skeat EE Prov p 74, no 178

773 See HF 692, and n

775 "Make him a hood above a cap," apparently meaning to cover up the eyes hoodwink deceive For similar phrases see Gen Prol I, 586, n

797 The motif of jealousy is suggested in the Filocolo (II 175), where brief reference is made to the episode cited in the note on l 512 The character of Horaste is Chaucer's invention and the name is apparently taken from that of Orestes ("Horestes" in Guido 'Horeste' in the Conf Am iii 2176) See Kittredge Language p 347, and Hamilton, Indebtedness to Guido p 97

808 With this expression may be compared Biancofiore's reference to the "iniquo spirito" of Florio's jealousy (Filocolo I 259-60) But the Filostrato (vii 18 3-4) has the phrase "e l nemico Spirto di gelosia"

813-33 Cf Bo, II, pr 4, 84-87, 132-43 The sentiments were commonplace Cf MLT, II, 421 ff, NPT, VII, 3205

837 Apparently a stock comparison See also l 1010 below Root refers to Gower, Mirour, II 2641 ff, and Ovid Met, II, 768 ff

850 a favr "a fine thing (to do)" Root suggests that the word is rather favr, "market," with some such sense as "bad bargain"

853 Glossed in MSS Hl' Hl' "Mora trahit periculum" (delays are dangerous) Cf Skeat, EE Prov, pp 74 f no 179

855 From Ecdl II 1

861 fare-wel feldfare the bird is flown, all is over Cf Rom 5510, where the phrase is used of false friends who desert one in misfortune According to Skeat and the NED the phrase expresses good riddance, with allusion to the fieldfare's welcome departure northward at the end of winter Professor Kittredge suggests to the editor that the emphasis here is rather on folly and that the phrase might be paraphrased "Away, you fools" But in the Troilus passage as he agrees, there is surely no such implication For further examples see the NED, and Hazlett, Proverbs, London 1907, p 149

885 "True blue" was the color of constancy Cf Anel, 146 n

890 "Hazle-bushes shake" A proverbial saying of which the application is not entirely clear Skeat takes it to be simply a useless truism to indicate the futility of sending the ring In two later passages (v 505 1174) references to hazlewood seem to be mere expressions of incredulity or derision, and that may be the meaning here Professor Kittredge has called the editor's attention to the expression, "Thou sittest on hazel bou" apparently in the sense "You talk idly" in The Thrush and the Nightingale, 106 (Hazlett Early Pop Poetry London 1864-66 I 54), and he compares also 'Thou maist of hazelwode singe' (Dan Topas in Wright's Political Poems Rolls Ser, 1859-61, II 79)

896 Apparently proverbial

901 while "specious, plausible" Cf I 1567, below, also NED, s v White, †10, and for a parallel use of Fr "blanche" the Testament of Jean de Meun, l 1473 (in RR, ed Meon, Paris, 1814, IV 75)

919 al prime face, "prima facie"

920-45 The account here of Criseyde's acceding to Troilus's desire perhaps goes back to earlier passages in the Filostrato Cummings (Indebtedness to Boccaccio, pp 67 f), compares particularly Fl, II 133 139, 121

931 dulcarnoun a name for the 47th proposition of the first book of Euclid, hence a term for difficulty or perplexity The word is originally the Arabic epithet of Alexander the Great ("Dhu l Karnayn" the two-horned), who claimed descent from Jupiter Ammon, the horned god The application to the proposition in Euclid probably came from the resemblance of the diagram to a figure with horns In l 933 Pandarus says Dulcarnoun is called flemyng of wrecches But that is a translation of "Fuga miserorum" which corresponds in turn to "Eleufuga" a name which was actually applied to the fifth proposition See Skeat, Athenaeum, 1871, II, p 393 and for at my wifes ende, has EE Prov pp 75 f, no 181

936 fecches, "beans" one of Chaucer's numerous comparisons to denote worthlessness See Gen Prol I 177 n

947 For the use of ther in clauses which express blessing or cursing of ll 966, 1437, 1450, below and see KnT I, 2815, n

973 feere fire (Kentish)

979 fond his countenance, "assumed the attitude or appearance" Cf "to make a countenance," NED, under Countenance 1b 2d

989-90 Cf KnT I, 1169, 1785 ff

1016 ff Cf KnT I 1313, and Bo I, m 5

1021 suffrest, permatrest.

1035 Cf u 784

1046 ff On ordeal and purgation by oath Root refers to Follock and Martland, Hist of Engl Law (Cambridge, 1898, II, 598 ff) On sortilege, one of the most primitive and widespread of all forms of divination, see

Tylor, Primitive Culture, 4th ed., London, 1903, I, 78 ff

1060-61 Proverbial Cf Haecckel, pp 7 f., no 25, Skeat, EE Prov., p 76, no 182

1064 shoures, assaults the Middle English "shour" (AS "scur") referred often to the storm of battle

1072-92 Similar to earlier scenes in the Filostrato (n, 1-3, 62)

1088 See KnT, I, 2749, n

1092 ff This episode appears to be partly imitated from Fil iv, 18-19, where Troilo faints on learning that the Trojans are willing to give up Criseida. The swoon is not repeated by Chaucer in the corresponding passage in Bk iv

1104 For the figure, cf n, 1272 f

1141 ff In the Filocolo there is also a formal marriage before the image of Cupid

1154 bar hym on honde, accused him See MLT II, 620, n

1161 See Gen ProL, I, 177, n

1192 For a similar comparison see Filocolo, II, 165-66

1194 For the bitterness of soot, which was proverbial, cf RR, 10633-34, also NED, s v Soot

1200 Proverbial, cf LGW, 2648, Haecckel, p 32 no 107

1203 "The seven planets" Cf Scogan, 3

1215 "Bitter pills may have sweet effects" Cf Skeat EE Prov., p 76, no 183

1219-20 Cf Bo m, m, 1, 5-7, also Alanus de Insulis Liber Paraboliarum, Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 592

1235 "When she hears any shepherd speak."

1255 The application of the name Cithærea to the planet is paralleled, as Root notes, in Dante (Purg., xvii, 95)

1257 Comparison has been made with Dante, Purg., i, 19. But the conception of Venus as a beneficent planet was usual

1258 Imeneus, Hymænaeus Hymen, the divinity of marriage

1261 Cf Dante, Par., xxxiii, 14 ff. On the bond, or chain, of love of ll 1762 ff below. See also KnT, I, 2987 ff., and n

1267 Note the use of this familiar Christian doctrine here in the prayer to Venus, and also in l 1282. On its application to the affairs of lovers see KnT, I, 3089, n

1316 Whether intentionally or through misunderstanding, Chaucer here departs from the Italian "D'amor sentron l'ultimo valore" (Fil m, 32)

1324-27 On the position of these stanzas see the Textual Notes

1365 ff The interchange of rings is one of the features which Young (Organ, p 146) attributes to the influence of the Filocolo (II, 181 f)

1368 ff This gift of Criseyde's is Chaucer's addition. Boccaccio (Fil., viii, 9-10) simply tells of a "fermaglio" or "fbbaglio" given by Troilo to Criseida. By scripture Chaucer may mean either the motto or posy on the ring or the written authority for the story

1384 the white and ek the rede. In NPT VII, 2842, and ParT, VI, 526, white ne (and) rede refers to wine, and the same meaning is possible here. But in view of the Italian "denari perderanno" (Fil, m, 39) "white silver and red gold" seems more likely to be intended. For illustrations of this meaning see NED s v White, 10

1387-93 These lines, which depart from Boccaccio seem to have been suggested by Dante's Purg., xx, 106-08, 116-17, where Midas and Crassus are likewise associated in a discussion of avarice. See Lowes in MP, XIV, 711 ff. The use of affectus a characteristically Dantean word, indicates Chaucer's assimilation of Dante's moral doctrine. On Midas cf further Ovid Met., xi, 100 ff. M. Crassus was slain in battle against the Parthians in 53 B.C. The Parthian King Orodes had molten gold poured into the mouth of his fallen enemy. Mr Lowes (p 712) suggests that Chaucer's account may contain reminiscences of Li Hystore de Julius Cesar, by Jehan de Tumm. On the other hand Professor Shannon (Chaucer and the Rom Poets, pp 133, and n), holds that the De Casibus, vi, 7 is a sufficient source for what Chaucer tells about Crassus 1415-26 Primarily from Fil, m, 42-43. In elaborating the passage Chaucer probably had in mind Purg., xix, 1-6, with its reference to the rising of "maggor fortuna". For the epithet comune astrologer of Alanus de Insulis, De Planctu Naturæ, Migne Pat Lat CCX, 436 ("vulgaris astrologus") By Lucyffer, the morning star, is meant the planet Venus. For similar references to the dayes messenger of Amores i, 6, 65 f., ii, 11, 55 f., Her., xvii (xviii), 112. For Fortuna Mayor various explanations have been offered. Skeat interpreted it as Jupiter, and cited Gavin Douglas's notes to his translation of the Aeneid (ed Small Edinburgh 1874, II, 288). But he later rejected this application for Chaucer's time (See Acad., XLVI, 352, and Oxf Chau., VI, 404 also W C Curry, MLN, XXXVIII, 94 ff). In the first instance Fortuna Mayor had reference to geomancy the occult art which is described in KnT, I, 2045, n. The figure so named had the form x x, and in the arbitrary assignments of the geomancers it was referred to the Sun as its planet. So Professor Curry would interpret the passage as meaning simply "the sun rose". But according to the commentators on Dante the name was sometimes applied to a group of six stars in the constellations of Aquarius and Pisces, and "maggor fortuna" in the Purgatorio is held to refer to this figure. Skeat (Acad., XLVI, 352) identified the stars concerned as θ Pegasi and α , π , γ , ζ , η Aquarii, and

Professors Root and Russell (in PMLA, XXXIX 56-58) calculated that in the latter part of the fourteenth century in the middle of May, at the first appearance of dawn the group would have been about halfway between the eastern horizon and the zenith, and was still rising estward

1427-42 These lines which have no counterpart in the Filostrato, recall the sentiment of the "aubade" or "Tageheil" and lead up to the dawn-song proper in ll 1450-70 Filocolo, I, 173 has an address to Night in two respects similar Cf also Amores I, 13 The "aube" was not so common in mediæval English poetry as in French and German Examples of later English songs on the night visit are given by C R. Baskervill, in PMLA, XXXVI, 593 f

1428 Alcmena (Almena) was the mother of Hercules by Jupiter For the story that the moon passed through three courses on the night when the child was begotten see Theb, vi, 288 f, xii, 300 f, Roman de Thebes ed Constans, SATF Paris 1890, II, 88 Another account which may have been known to Chaucer is in Boccaccio, De Gen Deor lib xiii cap 1 There are references to the incident in Amores, I 13, 45 f and Tes, iv, 14

1433-35 Cf Ovid, Amores I, 13 11 f, 17 ff

1450-70 There is a bare suggestion for this passage in a single couplet of Fil (II, 44) But the passage cited above from the Amores (I, 13) seems the more likely source

1462 The light would be necessary to the work of engravers of seals

1464-70 The confusion between Titan and Tithonus may be due to Boccaccio's "Titon" in Tes, iv, 72 or in Filocolo II, 222 Cf further Ovid, Heroides, xvii (xviii), 111 ff, Dante, Purg, ix, 1-3, Petrarch Sonnet 23, In Morte, and Servius on Georg, III, 48

1490 these worldes tweyne two worlds such as this" (Root) The Filostrato has "che 'l troian regno" (II, 47) Perhaps Chaucer meant "the realms of both Troy and Greece"

1495-97 Cf Virgil Eclogue, I, 60-64 (very general resemblance)

1502 Cf KnT, I, 1133, and n

1514 With this use of mo ("others") cf II, 1274, also CIT, IV, 1039 and n

1546 brude, "arise" Cf LGW 1156

1555-89 The visit of Pandarus to Criseyde here is not paralleled in the Filostrato

1577 "Christ forgave his crucifixion" The ultimate reference is doubtless to Luke xxiii, 34 But the phrase had become proverbial, to express the limit to which forgiveness might be carried Cf "Dieu pardonna sa mort," Morawski, Proverbes Français, Paris, 1925 p 21, no 585

1600 Cf Aen, vi, 550 f For the alternative readings which substitute Cocytus for Flegeton see the Textual Notes

1626-28 Cf Dante, Inf, v, 121-23, also

Bo, II, pr 4, 7-10, and Thomas Aquinas Summa, Secunda Secundae, qu 36 art 1

1634 Cf RR 8261-64 ultimately from Ovid Ars Amat II, 11-13

1642 raile here a verb, "behave rashly"

1688-94 Comparison has been suggested with Par, xix 7 ff, xxiv 25 ff But surely no source need be sought for so familiar a formula

1691 f Cf Bo, II, pr 2, 10-13 also Dante s Convivio, iv 22

1693 Cf Par, xix, 8

1703 Prouis, Pyrois one of the four horses of the sun The other three, according to Ovid Met, II 153 ff, were Eous Aethon and Phlegon

1716-19 A combination of Fil, II, 72 and II, 84

1744 For Troilo's song as given here by Boccaccio, Chaucer substitutes a song based upon Boethius, II m 8 Five and a half stanzas of the Italian song were used earlier in the Proem of this book The fact that this whole passage (ll 1744-71) is omitted in MS H1 and the first form of MS Ph has led to the plausible inference that Chaucer added it some time after he wrote the rest of the book (See Root's note)

1762 ff See the note to l 1261, above

1784 In the figure of the falcon Chaucer followed Boccaccio (Fil II 91), and Boccaccio Dante (Par, xix, 34) But in the Filostrato the application is to Troilo instead of Criseida

1785-10 These lines combine reminiscences of Tes I, 3, and xi, 63, and Dante, Par, viii, 7-8 The reference to Venus as daughter of Dione might be due to Aen II 19, or to various passages in Ovid (Ars Am II, 593, III, 3 769 Amores I 14, 33)

1809-10 On the erroneous conception of Helcon as a fountain or spring on Mt Parnassus see HF, 521, n

Book IV

1-11 For the commonplace sentiments of the opening stanzas of b, besides Fil, II, 94, Boethius II, pr 1 and m 1 RR 8039 ff, and Machaut Remede de Fortune (Œuvres SATF II), 1049-62, and Jugement dou Roy de Behaigne (Œuvres I) 684-91 See also Chaucer's very similar phraseology in MLT, II 1132 f 1140 f

22 ff On the term Herynes see Pity 92, n and for the character of the Furies as suffering pain of I, 1 n above Both passages seem to contain reminiscences of Inf ix 45 ff Perhaps the form Alete is due to the Italian "Aletto" For the idea that the Furies are Nyghtes doughtren thr of Met, iv, 451-52, Aen, xii, 845-47, and Boccaccio De Gen Deor, II m 6-9 For the invocation as a whole comparisons have been suggested with Met, viii, 481 ff, Heroides xi 103 and Theb, xi, 57 ff 344 ff But these passages have no evident bearing on Chaucer's lines

25 Quirine, Quirinus, a name given to Romulus. See Ovid, Fasti II, 475-76. For the statement that he was a son of Mars see Fasti, II, 419, Aen., I, 274 ff., Met., XV, 863, and cf. Par., VIII, 131-32. With the epithet cruiel cf. "sævi" in Theb. VII, 703.

32 Hercules lyon, the sign Leo associated with Hercules because that hero killed the Nemean lion. Cf. "Herculei terga leonis," Ars Amat., I, 68. The Sun was in Leo during the latter part of July and the first part of August.

38-42 With these lines, which do not correspond to anything in the Filostrato, cf. Rom de Troie, II 11996-12006.

50 ff. Except for Phebuso, who appears to have been invented by Chaucer, all these men are named in Fl., IV, 3. According to Boccaccio they were all taken prisoners, but there is no authority for this statement in Benoit or Guido, and Chaucer's account (with Maugre in l. 51) is in accord with theirs. The reading of a single MS., H¹³ (Paldomas and also Menestes), suggests, as Root points out, that Chaucer's earliest draft may have agreed with Boccaccio. Antenor, Polydamas, Sarpedon and Polymnestor are familiar names in the Trojan cycle. Santippe (Ital. "Santippo") is doubtless Antipus, or Xantipus, King of Frisia. The spelling with X, which occurs in the 1489 edition of Guido (sig. h 6 recto, col. 1), would account for Boccaccio's form Polite (Polites, Aen. II, 526), Monesteo (Mnestheus, Aen., V, 116 ff.), and Rupheo (Ripheus or Rhrpeus, Aen., II, 339). Boccaccio may have taken over from Virgil.

57-58 Boccaccio here says that Priam asked for the truce ("Chiese Priamo triqua, e fugi data," Fl., IV, 4, 1). But both Benoit and Guido say that the Greeks sent Ulysses and Diomedes as legates to seek a cessation of fighting for the burial of the dead. See Roman de Troie, II 12822-13120, and Historia sig. I 1 recto, col. 1. Chaucer's statement differs in the different MSS. as may be seen from the Textual Notes. Perhaps the first version agreed with Boccaccio, and was revised later under the influence of Guido or Benoit.

96 in hre sherte, in her smock, that is, without rich apparel.

115 astronomye, what would be rather called "astrology" today. Calchas's prediction has the four-fold support of an oracle, astrological calculations, the casting of lots, and divination by augury with birds.

120 ff. The reference to Neptune and Apollo is not in the Filostrato. Benoit (Rom de Troie, 25920 ff.) says that Neptune built the walls of Troy and Apollo consecrated them, but he does not tell of Laomedon's refusal to pay their wages. This part of the story Chaucer might have learned from Ovid (Met., XI, 194 ff., cf. also Her., XV (xvi), 181 f.). The "locus classicus" for the legend is Iliad, XXI, 441 ff. For other accounts of it see Hyginus, Fab 89 (ed. Bunte, Leipzig, 1857, p. 82), Servius, Comm. in Aeneida, I, 610, Boccaccio, De Gen. Deor., VI, 6. Bode, Scriptores Rerum Mythicarum, Cellis, 1834, I, 43-44, 138, 174.

138 Thoas is not mentioned in the Filostrato. In including him in the exchange Chaucer may have been following either Benoit, Rom de Troie, II 13079 ff., or Guido, Historia, sig. I 1 verso, col. 1. The account in Guido bears the closer resemblance to Chaucer's.

143 parlement, used by Chaucer in the English sense, though the Italian "parlamento" in the corresponding passage apparently means "parley." Guido's term is consilium.

169-210 In this passage, which is largely independent of the Filostrato, Chaucer seems again to be indebted to Benoit or Guido. The speech of Hector may have been suggested by Benoit's account of his protest against the truce with the Greeks (II 12965 ff.), and the popular outcry it arouses recalls the outburst against Calchas when he asked for his daughter, as related by Guido (sig. I 1 verso, col. 1). If Chaucer had these incidents in mind, he chose to alter the story. According to the Historia, the Trojans opposed the surrender of Criseyde, but were overruled by Priam, whereas in Chaucer's account they urge the exchange of Criseyde for Antenor. For a detailed comparison of the different versions of the episode see C. Brown, in MLN, XXVI, 208 ff. Professor Brown suggests further that Chaucer's stanzas in condemnation of the noyse of peple (II 183 ff.) allude to the Peasant's Revolt, and that the blase of straw (I 184) may even contain a pun on the name of Jack Straw. In spite of the infrequency of word-play in Chaucer, it is not unlikely here. Gowcr, as Mr. Brown notes, has two puns, in Latin, on the same name in the Vox Clamantis (I, 652, 655). The whole tone of the present passage, moreover, is similar to that of a stanza of the Clerk's Tale (IV, 995-1001) which has long been regarded as an allusion to the uprising of the peasants.

197 ff. From Juvenal, Sat., X, 2-4.

198 what is to yerne, what is to be desired.

202-06 For the reason of Antenor, which does not appear in the Filostrato, compare Benoit (II 24397 ff.) and Guido (Historia, sig. I 1 recto col. 1, et seq.). It consisted in contriving the removal of the Palladium.

210 here and howne, an unexplained phrase, which seems to mean "people of all sorts, everybody." The interpretation "hare and hound" as Skeat shows, does not fit the form of either word (though the NED cites late occurrences of "hound" without the d, and Professor Kittredge has called the editor's attention to "masterles howne" in G. Harvey's Letter-Book, ed. Scott, p. 42). Skeat's own suggestion, "gentle and savage" (from AS "heore" and "huna") is possible, but lacks support Root offers another explanation — howne from ON "hun" young bear hence urchin, and here from ON "herra" lord master — but recognizes that it is equally unconvincing

225-27 Imitated from Dante Inf, iii, 112 ff

239 The figure here, which is in Boccaccio (Fil, iv, 27), goes back to Inf xii 22-24, and thus in turn to Aen i 222 ff

251-52 Cf CIT IV 902-03 and also, for the adjectival use of the genitive lyves, KnT, I, 1912, n

271-72 Cf Mk Prol VII 1976 f

279 There is possibly an echo here of some of the passages in Statius about the living death of Oedipus Cf especially Theb 1 46-48, xi, 580-82 and 698 ("quantum miser incubo terrae"). The comparison to Oedipus is made explicit in l 300 The epithet combre-world occurs in Hoccleve's Lament for Chaucer, De Regimine Princ, l 2091 (ed Furnivall, EETS, p 76)

300 Oedipus blinded himself on finding that he had killed his father Laus and married his mother Jocasta See Statius, Theb, i, 46-48, and Tes, x 96

305 unneste, correctly glossed in MS H1 by "go out of the nest,"

316 For the term lady sovereigne cf LGW Prol F, 94, 275 (Fil has "o dolce bene" iv, 36)

323-29 Perhaps there is a reminiscence here of Tes, xi, 91, for which Boccaccio in turn may have got a hint from Ovid's epithaph, Tristia, iii 3 73-76

327-29 The reference to Troilus's burial-place, for which there is no parallel in the Filostrato, was possibly suggested by the Filocolo (I 266)

330 unholisom, Ital "insano" (Fil iv, 38), probably in the ordinary sense of "insane"

351-55 The attendant knight is a new figure introduced by Chaucer

356-57 Cf Fil, iv, 43 8 The lines of the Troilus are nearly repeated in MLT, II 608 f

356-92 Cf Boethius, ii, pr 2 6-8, also R.R., 8023-26

407 ff With the sentiment expressed here of Ovid, Amores ii 4, 10 ff

413 rypere, either "the sport of hawking" or "water-fowl" See Thop, VII 737, n

416 The real source of this line, quoted as a saying by Boccaccio and attributed by Chaucer to Zanus or Zanus was perhaps Ovid's Rem Am, 462 or 484 For evidence of its later currency as a proverb see Haeckel, p 3, no 9, Skeat, EE Prov p 77, no 186 Chaucer's passage shows, besides the use of Fil iv, 59, further reminiscences of the Remedia particularly ll 135-210, 214-39 (See Kittredge Harv Stud in Class Philol XXVIII, 70) Zanus is of uncertain identity If the form is a corruption of Zeuxis, Chaucer may have had in mind the sage of that name in the Alexander story

See Julius Valerius (ed Kuebler, Leipzig, 1888) i, 9 Zeuxis the painter is referred to, also as Zanus in PhysT, VI, 16

431 unthraft, foolish, unprofitable stuff Cf ML Epil II, 1165 and i 275 above

432-34 There seems to be a verbal reminiscence here of R.R. 4640-41 (Rom 5151 f) which suggests that Chaucer somewhat associated Pandarus with the character of Reason The resemblances, however, are unimportant and in any case l 434 was proverbial See Haeckel pp 12 f no 41

461 Nettle in dock out nettle in dock out that is first one thing and then another The phrase comes from a charm for curing the sting of a nettle The wound is rubbed with the juice of a dock-leaf, while the charm is repeated The words as given in Notes and Queries 1st Ser, III 133, are as follows Nettle in dock out Dock in nettle out, Nettle in, dock out Dock rub nettle out

For other forms with references, see Skeat's note on the passage, also his EE Prov, p 78 no 187, and Notes and Queries, same vol, pp 205 368 463, Grendon, in Journ of Am Folklore, XXII 214, n 6 and Haeckel p 50, no 179 Chaucer's lines here are imitated by Usk, Testament of Love, Bk i chap 2, l 167 (Oxf Chau VII 13)

462 "Now evil befall her that may care for thy wo!"

466 Cf Seneca, Epist 78 13, though the idea is so familiar that no source is certain It occurs also in Boethius, ii, pr 4, 57-59

470-76 The mention of Proserpina which is not found in the corresponding passage in the Filostrato (iv 54), may well be due to the lines of the Inf (ix 43 ff) which seem also to have influenced Chaucer's conception of the Furies See the note to i, 1 ff above Perhaps there is a further echo of the same Dantean passage in iv 785 ff

477 for syn, probably to be taken in the sense "finally" Professor Magoun suggests the possible reading for-syn "very ingenious" On such adjectival compounds with for- see KnT, I 2142 n

503 f From Boethius, i m 1, 13 f

506 here a bribe Troilus says that while he was happy he would have bribed Death to let him alone, but now he would be glad to be killed

519-20 The figure was probably suggested by R.R. 6332-83

548 ravysshyng of wommen Hesione, sister of Priam was carried away to Greece by Telamon and when the Greeks refused to surrender her Helen was seized by Paris in reprisal See Benoit, II 2793 ff, 3137 ff, 4059 ff

556 "This would constitute an accusation against her"

557 "Moreover I know very well that I can not obtain her" The Filostrato (iv, 69) has "Nè spero ancora ch'el dovesse darla"

558 by note, apparently "in song, music", though the NED (s v Note, sb², 3^e) cites no case of this idiom before 1436

588 Skeat compares "a nine days' wonder," also the Latin "novendiale sacrum," Livy 1, 31, see also his EE Prov, p 78, no 188, and NED, s v Nine, adj 3^a and 4^b

600-01 On this favorite commonplace ("Fortes Fortuna adjuvat") see Thop VII, 830, n

607 of ferd, "because of being frightened" (?) Root suggests also "frightened off," but the construction seems less likely Skeat's reading for ferd "for fear" has some MS support

618 Not so close to Filostrato (iv, 75) as to KnT, I, 1163-68 Chaucer may have recalled his own lines (if written earlier) or their source in Boethius, iv, m 6 For the currency of the idea as a proverb see Haeckel, p 2, no 5

622 For the proverbial phrase "on six and seven" (or 'at sixes and sevens') see Skeat, EE Prov, pp 79 f, no 190 Haeckel, p 50, no 175, and NED, s v Six B 5 Professor Root, who would interpret the present passage "risk everything on the cast of the dice," shows how the term may have been applied in the game of hazard "A player throws two dice and the sum of the numbers which fall is the 'main' If the 'main' is 6, the caster may win by throwing at the next cast either 6 or 12 If he throws 2, 3, or 11, he loses If his second throw is a number other than these, that number becomes his 'chance.' If 6 is the 'main' and 7 the 'chance,' probability favors the caster at the odds of six to five The chances are correspondingly against the 'setter,' who bets against him To 'set' one's all on six and seven is, therefore, to venture with the odds against one" This explanation of the original application of the phrase is very likely correct But it developed another meaning, "in confusion, disorder, state of upheaval," which would also make good sense in the present passage The NED does not recognize this sense as occurring before the sixteenth century, though it is very likely the meaning of the passage there cited from the Towneley Plays (EETS, 1897, xvi, 128)

623 There is clearly an allusion here to the teaching of the Church that a martyr's death ensured immediate entrance into heaven The belief was especially emphasized in the time of the Crusades Pope Urban, at the Council of Clermont in 1095, gave assurance of remission of sins to those who should lose their lives either on the journey to the Holy Land or in battle against the Saracens See the Historia Hierosolymitana of Fulcher of Chartres, ed Hagenmeyer, Heidelberg, 1913, p 135 For illustrations of the belief of Hagenmeyer's notes, also Fulcher's account of the speech of Baldwin, pp 411-12, and the striking incident related on pp 476-77 A crusader rides to meet certain death in the Turkish hosts, crying,

"si quis vestrum in Paradiso cenare desiderat, nunc mecum veniat et mecum prandeat iam iam enim abibo" On the prevalence of the belief in the early Christian centuries see Harnack, Lehrbuch der Dogmengeschichte, Freiburg, 1894, I, 425 ff For modern statements of the doctrine the Rev A J Denomy has referred the editor to Tanqueray, Synopsis Theologiae Dogmaticae Specialis, II, 262-64, and Billuart Theologia Dogmatica, Tractatus de Fortitudine, diss 1, art 11

661 with preste wynges with swift wings (Ital "oon prestassum" ale," Fil, iv 78), ultimately from Virgil's "pernicibus alis" (Aen, iv, 180) which Chaucer, in HF 1392, rendered partriches wynges, obviously by confusion with "perdux"

683 pietous love, Ital "pietosa allegrezza" (Fil, iv, 80) In his account of the women's talk Chaucer follows Boccaccio closely

707 wo and wery are probably both to be construed as adjectives after for On the construction see KnT, I, 2142, n

728 The Italian says "itch," not "ache" ("ove 'l capo prudea" Fil, iv, 85)

736 ff On the order of the stanzas at this point see the Textual Notes

736 ownded, wavy, cf oundy, HF, 1386, also RR, 21135-36

737 For the detail about the fingers, which does not occur in the Filostrato, comparison has been made with Guido (Historia, sig 1 2 recto, col 2), where the parallel is not exact Filocolo, I, 176, which has also been cited, is hardly closer ("diluicate mani")

745 in corsed constellaoun, when the planets were in unfavorable combination

762 The name of Criseyde's mother is not given by Boccaccio, and Chaucer's authority (if he had one) is unknown Argyve occurs below, in the Latin summary of the Thebaid, as the equivalent of Argia, the name of Polynices's wife See v, 1509, and Theb, II, 297

765 Cf Gen ProL, I, 179-80

767-68 Cf Bo, II, pr 11, 109-24

769 by-word, proverb Root cites from Le Roux de Lincy (Proverbes Français, Paris, 1859, I, 83) "Seiche racine de l'arbre la ruyne" See also Skeat, EE Prov, p 80, no 192

776 unshethe, unsheath, perhaps a reminiscence of Dante's lines about the flaying of Marsyas, Par, I, 20-21 The same passage doubtless underlies HF, 1229-32, where, however the striking figure does not appear

782 ordre, religious order

785-87 Cf II 470 ff, above The language here recalls again the KnT, I, 2768, cf the note to l 618, above

788 ff Chaucer's conception of Elysium may have been influenced by Dante, especially Inf, iv The particular definition, feld of pite, is not merely an adaptation of Ovid's "arva piorum" (Met, xi, 62), was perhaps due to an association of Elysos with

"eleison" in the familiar κυριε ελεησον of the liturgy See MLN, XXIX, 97, Harv Stud in Class Philol, XXVIII, 53, n 10

791 For the story of Orpheus and Eurydice see Virgil, Georg., iv 453 ff, Ovid, Met., x, 1 ff, xi 1 ff

813 ff Besides the corresponding passage in Filostrato, Chaucer may have had in mind Guido's similar description (Historia, sig 1 2 recto, col 2), also possibly Filocolo (I, 188)

829 causa causyng, the "causa causans" or primary cause, as distinguished from a "causa causata" or secondary cause

836 From Prov xiv, 13 Cf MLT II, 421 f, and n, NPT, VII, 3205, also Boethius, ii, pr 4

841 In Fil (iv, 97), this stanza is spoken by Pandaro

865 Cf KnT, I, 1400 f

884 into hitel, nearly

918 ff With Pandarus' argument here (and in Fil, iv, 106 f) has been compared that of Glorizia to Biancofiore in Filocolo, I, 117 f

927 'Be to him a cause rather of the fiat than of the edge', that is, rather of healing than of hurting For the conception see SqT, F, 156 ff, and the note, 239 ff In the present passage Root suggests a possible verbal echo of Dante's Inf., xxxi, 4-6

934-38 Cf Fil, iv, 107, where Pandaro merely advises Griseida to control her own grief so as to be able to alleviate Troilus' sorrow Chaucer substitutes lines which advise more positive action, and in ll 1254 the advice is carried out

953-1085 This long discussion of predestination is derived from Boethius, v, pr 2 and 3 It is not found in the a MSS of the Troilus, and seems to have been inserted by Chaucer after the main body of the narrative was composed See Root's discussion of the MSS, Textual Tradition pp 216 ff, and the Introduction to his edition, pp lxxi ff Stanzas 136 and 156, which precede and follow the soliloquy, are based upon a single stanza (iv, 109) of the Filostrato

The philosophical doctrine of the passage, and the appropriateness of its insertion in the Troilus, have both been much discussed by the commentators See especially W C Curry, PMLA, XLV, 129 ff, and H R Patch JEGP, XVII, 399 ff, MLR, XXII, 384 ff, and Speculum VI, 225 ff The argument of Troilus closely follows that of Boethius, but whereas in the De Consolatione, Philosophy makes a reply and defends human freedom, Chaucer (or Troilus) stops with the fatalistic conclusion It is not to be inferred that Chaucer himself was a fatalist The speech, as Mr Patch argues, expresses not Chaucer's moral, but Troilus's emotional reaction, and is therefore completely relevant At the same time it is to be observed that more than once in the Troilus the reader is made to feel a deep sense of overruling Destiny See v, 1085, and n

958 Proverbial See Haecckel, p 31, no. 102

968 For the grete clerkes of the NPT, VII, 3241 f, where St Augustine, Boethius, and Bishop Bradwardine are mentioned

976 For the idiom see KnT I, 1089, n

996 The reference is to the tonsure of the clergy

1098 n'enforce I me nat vn shewynge, Lat "Ac non illud demonstrare nitamur" (Boethius, v, pr 3, ll 26 f) Skeat suggests that Chaucer's negative, which occurs also in his Boece was due to a misreading of "nitamur" as "vitamur"

1098 Cf u, 1347, and n

1116 There is no reference to Juno at this point in the Filostrato (v, 111 f)

1128 ff In the part of the Filostrato which deals with the separation of the lovers there are many features and incidents which Boccaccio appears to have taken over from his Filocolo Griseida's promise to return on the tenth day, which is not found in Benoit, seems to have come from that source See Young, Origin, pp 66-103

1135 The simile is Chaucer's

1136 out of ters kynde, unlike the nature of tears

1139 On Myrrha the daughter of Cinyras King of Cyprus, who was changed into a myrrh tree, see Met., x, 311 ff

1142 here wofullie were gostes, apparently the souls of the lovers, though the corresponding phrase in Fil, iv, 116 ('gh sprita affanmati') refers rather to the "spiriti" in the old technical sense, which control the functions of their bodies On this matter see KnT, I, 2749, n

1159 Filostrato, iv, 117, reads "E gh occhi suoi velati" Chaucer's copy, as Root suggests, may have had the variant reading "levati"

1174 Not in Filostrato Cf Gen Prol, I, 301

1181 woon, hope, resource (apparently from AS "wán")

1187-88 Boccaccio does not mention Minos at this point Chaucer may have been thinking of Dante's Minos or of the pagan judge of the dead, as described by Virgil, Statius and Claudian, or of both combined Although the pagan conception would be more strictly appropriate in the case of Troilus, Christian ideas cannot be dismissed as anachronistic in a poem which refers to "Amphorax" as a "bishop"

1208 Atropos was the Fate who cut the thread of life Cf, besides the regular Latin sources, RR, 20364-65 See also l 1546, below

1216 Cypride, the Cyprian Venus Cf v, 208

1237 a forlong wey, see MLT, II, 557 n

1283 Proverbial Cf ML Prol, II, 27-28

1295 for that is no demaunde, there is no question about it Cf l 1694, below

1305-06 Cf, for the sentiment, RR, 2601-02 (Rom, 2740-42)

1356 On this familiar comparison see n, 193, n

1366-1414 The use of the avarice of Calchas, merely suggested by Boccaccio (Fl, iv, 136, 7) is most skillfully developed by Chaucer

1373 f Apparently proverbial, in the sense that one cannot 'have it both ways,' or "have one's cake and eat it too" See Skeat, EE Prov, p 81, no 194, for similar sayings

1397-98, 1404-11 These passages about the gods have no exact equivalent in the Filostrato They are more nearly paralleled in Benoit (Roman de Troie, 13768-73) and better still in Guido (Historia, sig 13 recto, col 1) Both these authors represent Criseyde as making such reproaches to her father In Chaucer, though she expresses the intention of speaking thus she is actually muwet, milde and mansuete at the time of meeting (see v, 194), and the account in the Filostrato is similar (v, 14, 3) For the skepticism (real or pretended) of Criseyde Dr Wise (Influence of Statius, pp 16 ff) has suggested another possible source in Statius's portrayal of Capaneus, "superum contemptor" See Theb, iii, 611 ff, 645 ff ix 550, etc

1406 amphibologies, ambiguities, from Lat "amphibologia," itself a corruption of "amphibolia" which is used with reference to the ambiguous answers of oracles by Isidorus, Etymol, i 34 13 (Migne, Pat Lat, LXXXII, 109), and Cicero, De Div, ii, 56

1408 The marginal gloss in H1, "Timor invenit deos," may record the exact words of Chaucer's Latin source But various statements of the doctrine were accessible to him The most familiar version is the line, "Primum in orbe deos fecit timor," which occurs in a fragment attributed to Petronius (ed Buecheler, Berlin, 1922, no 27), and was probably taken over from him by Statius, Theb, iii, 661 It is quoted, in slightly differing forms, as from Petronius by Fulgentius, Mitologiarum, i, 32 (Opera, ed Helm, Leipzig, 1898 p 17), Petrus Cantor, Verbum Abreviatum, cap 93 (Migne Pat Lat, CCV, 271), and Holkot, Super Libros Sapientiae, lect 164, (Reuthingen, 1489, fol H 3 recto), and as from Virgil by Johannes de Alta Silva, Dolopathos (ed Hilka, Heidelberg, 1913, p 102, f 9) The association with Virgil may be due to Servius's quotation of the line from Statius in his Comm in Aen, ii, 715 Chaucer had thus a number of possible sources for the idea which had become a commonplace in Latin and mediæval literature For still other variations on the theme see Lucretius, i, 151, v, 1218 ff, vi, 52, Cicero, De Fin, i, 19, 64, Juvenal, x, 365 (with special reference to Fortuna), Orosius, vi, 1, and for the Epicurean doctrine behind some of the Romans, Diog Laertius, x, 79, 81, 142 Lucan's "Quae finxere tument" (Pharsalia, i, 486), which was doubtless known to Chaucer, is sometimes cited as a source of Petronius But Lucan refers not to the invention of gods, but to the imagined terrors of Caesar's advance on Rome (See also G L Kittredge, MP, VII, 480, and B A Wise, Influence of Statius, p 17)

1411 For the occasion see Benoit, Rom de Troie, 5817-5927 Calchas, sent to Delphi by the Trojans, met Achilles who was consulting the oracle on behalf of the Greeks When the oracle gave warning of the fall of Troy, Calchas went over to the enemy

On the form Delphos cf FranklT, V, 1077 n

1415 ff These declarations of Criseyde's sincerity are not paralleled at this point in the Filostrato But see v, 7, and Tr, v, 19-21, and cf Benoit Rom de Troie, 13495-97 and Guido, Historia, sig 1 2 recto, col 2

1453 The bear and his leader are of different opinions Obviously a proverbial observation, with which Root compares, as of similar purport, "Man proposes, God disposes"

1456 For a variant of the same proverb cf KnT, I, 2449, and n

1457-58 Another proverb Cf "Clochier ne faut devant boteux" (Leroux de Lancy, Proverbes Français, I, 211), also Skeat, EE Prov, p 82 no 196

1459 Argus had a hundred eyes See Ovid, Met, i, 625, cf Haeckel, p 48, no 164

1478-82 Chaucer seems at this point to have used Benoit (ll 13803 ff) or Guido (sig 1 3 recto, col 1) as well as the Filostrato

1483 Fere, terrify
1505 On the philosophical distinction between substance and accident see ParDT, VI, 537 ff, n Root suggests that Troilus is also playing with the more popular meaning of accident, "uncertainty" as opposed to sikernesne This is possible, though Chaucer is not much given to playing upon words See Gen Pro, i, 297, n

1534 ff Criseyde's oath by Athamas is probably due to Dante's Inf, xxx, 1 ff, where the punishment of "falsatori" is described Ovid's account of Athamas (Met, iv 420 ff), may also have been in Chaucer's mind Juno, he relates, crossed the Styx into hell to persuade Tisiphone to haunt him This may have suggested the mention of the Styx But the characterization of it as the "pit of hell" is rather mediæval than classical Numerous references to the conception are cited by T Spencer in Speculum, II, 180 f Dante's description of the Styx as "una palude" (Inf, vii, 106) is not quite parallel, though a pit and a marsh are easily associated

1541-45 From Met, i, 192 f Cf also Theb, vi, 112-13

1548 Probably a reminiscence of Ovid, Amores, i, 15, 10 ("Dum rapidas Simos in mare volvet aquas") L 1553 doubtless goes back to the similar statement about the

Xanthus in the Heroides, v, 29-30, repeated in RR, 13225 f Cf also Theb, vi, 553, and Met, xii, 324 (where, however, the application is not to love)

1554 Cf the fate of Amphiarus, ii, 105

1562 take, "take place," recorded by NED (s v Take, 27 b) as the only occurrence of the word in this sense

1568 Proverbial A number of sayings of similar purport are noted by Haeckel, p 26, no 85 Cf i, 956, n

1584 Another proverb, "Vincit qui patitur" Cf FranklT, V, 771 ff, and n

1585 "He who will have what he likes must give up what he likes" Root compares "Nought lay down, nought take up" Hazlett's Proverbs, p 340 See also Skeat, EE Prov, p 83, no 198

1586 With this (which is again proverbial) of Tes, xii, 11, 1-2, and see KnT, I, 3041-42, n

1590 ff The astrology here, as so often, is Chaucer's addition to his source

1591 Before Lucina (the moon) pass out of Aries and beyond Leo, that is, before the tenth day

1608 Cynthia, Cynthia, the moon

1620 pure, very, cf KnT, I, 1279

1628 Proverbial Cf Haeckel, p 30, no 98

1645 Cf Ovid, Heroides, i, 12, Skeat, EE Prov, p 84, no 200

1667-82 The corresponding passage in the Filostrato (iv, 164-66) is spoken by Troilo to Criseida

1677 popphssh, popular, vulgar, Ital "popolesco" (Fil, iv, 165)

1695 Cf Mercht, IV, 1341, and n, for the recurring formula The fuller form here is perhaps influenced by I Cor ii, 9

Book V

1 Cf Tes, ix, i, 1

2 The Fates are conceived as subject to Jupiter Cf Theb, i, 212 f For the same idea, in Christian terms, see KnT, I, 1663 ff

3 Parcas, the Latin accusative of "Parcae," the Fates The sustren thre are Clotho, who spins, Lachesis, who apportions, and Atropos, who cuts the thread of life Cf RR, 19768 ff, Purg, xxv, 79, xxi, 25, though no single source need be sought for so familiar an allusion See also ii, 733 ff

8 ff From Tes, ii, 1, cf also Theb, iv, 1 f On the use of astronomical and mythological definitions of time see Gen Prol, I, 8 n For gold-utressed MS H1² has Aurcomus tressed, doubtless incorporating a gloss which shows the Latin original of the epithet Chaucer's source is unknown The Latin adjective is applied to the sun in Valerius Flaccus, Argonauticon, iv, 92, and in Martians Capella, De Nuptus Phil et Merc, i, 12 (ed Kopp, Frankfurt am Main, 1836, p 44)

12 Troilus was the son of Hecuba

25 crop and more, "twig and root" hence "altogether, from top to bottom"

53 in rumour of this fare, 'upon hearing of this behavior'

67 valey, a mistranslation of Boccaccio's "vallo," rampart (Fil, v, 10)

88-175 The account of Diomedes's conversation with Criseyde has some basis in Fil, vi, 10-12, 14-25, but it shows also the influence of the Rom de Troie, 13529 ff

90 by the reyne hure hente, W M Rossetti (MS H1², Chau Soc, p 235) suggested that Chaucer misunderstood the Italian "di colei si piglia," which means "takes a fancy to her"

98 A proverbial expression Cf Skeat, EE Prov, p 84, no 201, and Haeckel, p 16, no 53

101 make it tough, act over-boldly in making love See ii, 1025, n, above

106 koude his good, knew what was best for him, knew what he was about See ML Epul, II, 1169, and n

113-16 Cf Rom de Troie, 13602-610

143 O god of love, one god of love

155-58 Cf Rom de Troie, 13591-96

158 As paramours, by way of passionate love Cf KnT, I, 1155

164-65 Cf Rom de Troie, 13552-55

176-92 This description of Criseyde's conduct seems influenced by passages from the Rom de Troie (II 13617 ff, 13637 ff, 13676 ff, 13713 ff) L 189 may perhaps be an echo of Guido (Historia, sig 1 2 verso, col 1)

212 The punishment of Ixion, bound to an overturning wheel in hell, was of course a matter of familiar knowledge For references to it cf Georgics, iii, 38, Met, iv, 461, x, 42, Boethius, iii, m 12, ll 34 f

223-24 Chaucer is here following Fil, v, 20 Boccaccio in turn may have been echoing Ovid, Her, x, 12 Cf LGW, 2186

249 mete, "dream"

270 The address to the reader has been ascribed to the influence of Dante Similar expressions are certainly characteristic of the Divine Comedy Cf Inf, viii, 94, xxv, 46, xxxiv, 22, Par, v, 109, x, 7 But it is hardly necessary to assume that Chaucer had any literary model for so natural a device

274 ff An imitation, sometimes almost literal, of Tes, vii, 94 Cf also Boethius, ii, m 3, 1-4, and (more remotely) Theb, xii, 1 ff

280 ff This passage combines with its immediate source in the Filostrato (v, 22-23) a number of elements from the account of Arcite's death in the Teseide Perhaps Chaucer had also in mind the pyre and funeral games of Archemorus in Theb, vi For various parallels, some of them not very significant, see Tes, vii, 4, 27, x, 37, 89, 93-98, xi, 13, 14, 35, 50, 62-62, 69 90 See also the corresponding episode in the KnT, I, 2800-2966

319 On the owl foreboding of the owl cf LGW, 2253 f. The name Escapulo (or As- capulo) is clearly a transformation of Ascalaphus, whom Proserpina changed into an owl See Met., v, 539 ff., vi, 432, x, 453 xv, 791 The Italian-looking form in -o is puzzling, since there is no mention of the name in the Filostrato But for similar formations see M&T, VII, 2345, n

321 It was Mercury's function to act as the guide of souls (Psychopompus) Cf l 1827 below

332 paramours, adverbial, as in l 158, above

337 ff Cowling (Chaucer, p 16) observes that Chaucer himself must have lived apart from his wife much of the time when she was in the service of Constance of Padilla

350 Proverbial Cf Haeckel p 53

358 ff Pandarus argues that Troilus's dream is without import, because it is a mere "somnia naturale," proceeding from the melancholic humor With the discussion here, which is much fuller than Boccaccio's (Fl, v, 32), cf NPT, VII, 2922 ff., and n

365 ff Cf., besides Fl, v, 32, R.R., 18509 ff

376 On the belief that dreams vary with the seasons of the year see Curry, p 211 He cites especially Vincent of Beauvais, Spec Nat, XXVI, 63

379 "May it be well with old women in this matter of dreams," i.e., "let old women concern themselves with dreams" For Wel worth, u.o worth, cf HF, 53, and n For the generalizing these see KnT, I, 1531, n

387 forrype, Ital "a te stesso pardona" (Fl, v, 33), which means rather "spare thyself"

403 According to iv, 52, Sarpedon had been taken prisoner by the Greeks Neither Chaucer nor Boccaccio explains his return to Troy

421 of fyn force, of very necessity

445 Cf l 1321, below, and see MerchT, IV, 1341, and n

451 piteous or pitous, with three syllables, seems called for by the meter Chaucer's usual form is pitous, and Skeat suggests that the Ital "pitioso" had some influence here

460 The figure of the key, here taken from Fl, v, 43, was of frequent occurrence Cf Anel, 323-24, also R.R., 1999 ff Ivain (ed Foerster, Halle, 1891), 4632 ff, Perceval (ed Hulke, Halle, 1932), 2634 ff, Machaut, Livre du Voir Dit, il 3583 ff (Soc des Bibliophiles Fr, Paris, 1875, pp 161 f)

469 On the figure, of n, 867, and n

484 A man who borrows fire must hurry home with it Cf the proverbial phrase "to come to fetch fire" (Hazlitt, Proverbs, London, 1907, p 468)

505 Ye, haselwode, an expression of incredulity Cf l 1174, below See also n, 890, n

523 Chaucer's use of the term palais for Criseyde's house, which Boccaccio calls simply "la casa" or "la magione" is striking Professor Young (Origin, p 172) has suggested that it is due to the influence of passages in the Filocolo which refer to the "palagio" of Biancofiore

549 The figure of the ruby is not in the Filostrato

551 f For the detail of kissing the doors, which the Filostrato does not mention, comparison may be made with R.R., 2538, and the Filocolo, I, 124 The latter seems more likely to have influenced Chaucer at this point

561-81 The corresponding passage in the Filostrato (v, 54 f), as Professor Griffin has observed (intro, p 56), apparently reflects Boccaccio's own experience as described in his Proemio, p 4 Cf also Filocolo, I, 120, 263

601 On the fury of Juno against Thebes see KnT I, 1329, and n Perhaps the language here echoes especially Inf, xxx 1-2

638 The figure of a voyage may be due to a misreading of Fl, v, 62, "dnu porto di morte" "I carry desires of death" Chaucer perhaps took "porto" to be the noun for "port, harbor"

644 Charybdis, the famous whirlpool, opposite Scylla's rock, on the straits of Messina Cf Aen, ii, 420, 558, Met, xv, 75

655-58 All the MSS read Lat(h)ona which Caxton and Thynne emended to Lucyna, perhaps correctly The scribes could easily have corrupted the latter into the former, and Chaucer shows elsewhere an acquaintance with Lucina's name and function See KnT, I, 2085 But in view of the epithet "Latonia" applied to Diana in Virgil and Ovid, it seems at least equally possible that the slip was Chaucer's

662 Chaucer tells the Phaeton story in HF, 940-56, following Met, ii, 31 ff Here no definite classical source need be assumed

671-72 Cf., besides Fl, v, 70, Boccaccio's Proemio, p 4, also Filocolo, I, 120, and Tes, iv 32

694-707 Criseyde's scheme of playing upon her father's covetousness is here taken up again See the note to iv, 1366

741-42 Proverbial Root cites from Duringsfeld (Sprichwörter, Leipzig, 1872-75, II, no 122), as the version nearest to Chaucer's, "Dopo la morte non val medicina"

744-49 The figure of the three eyes of Prudence Chaucer may have derived from Purg, xxx, 130-32 The underlying idea, that Prudence regards past, present, and future, is explained in several of the commentaries Cf also Cicero, De Inventione, ii, 53, Thomas Aquinas, Summa, Prima Secundae, qu 57, art 6, Dante's Convivio, iv, 27, and the Pseudo-Seneca (Martianus Dumiensis) Formula Honestae Vitae, chapter 1, quoted by Albertanus, Laber Consolationis et Consilii, ed Sundby, Chau Soc, 1873, pp 57-58 (in a passage omitted in Chaucer's Melibee and the French source)

757-61 With these lines, not derived from Boccaccio, Root compares the proverb,

"Tous se mêlent de donner des avis, un est est celui qui les tous suit" (Duringsfeld, Sprichwörter, II, no 235)

763 Cf the discussion of suffisance in Bo, II, pr 2, 3, and 4

769 knottles, the figure is that of a thread which slips smoothly, without a knot

784 Proverbial Cf II, 807, and n

790-91 The exact source of this quotation seems not to have been found For the idea of Ars Amat, I, 361 f "Pectora dum gaudent nec sunt adstricta dolore, Ipsa patent blanda tum subit arte Venus"

799 ff The portraits of Diomede, Criseyde, and Troilus which here interrupt the narrative, are examples of a literary type cultivated chiefly by the later Greek and Roman writers and in the Middle Ages Striking examples are the personal descriptions of Alexander in the documents which relate his legendary life (see Pseudo-Callisthenes and Julius Valerius, I 13, ed Muller, Paris, 1846 pp 12 f, in Arrianus, Anabasis etc) and the early Christian portraits of Christ and Antichrist For some account of the vogue of this type in Greek and Roman, as well as Christian literature see E von Dobschütz Christusbilder Leipzig 1899, especially II 293 ff Similar in literary method is the feature-by-feature description of ladies which is extremely common in mediæval love-poetry and was recognized as one of the regular 'colours of rhetoric' For references to the rhetoricians see BD, 816 ff, n

There are portraits of Diomede, Criseyde and Troilus in Dares Benoit, and Guido, and all of them Chaucer doubtless had in mind But his primary source, as indicated by marginal quotations in MSS J and Gg, and fully set forth by Professor Root, was the Figu Daretis Ylias of Joseph of Exeter For discussion of the parallel passages see Mr Root's notes and his earlier article in MP, XV, 1-22 (Lines and references given below follow his citations from MSS and sometimes differ from the text of the Delphin Classics, London, 1825) Certain features in Chaucer's descriptions seem to be due to Boccaccio or Benoit

With the account of Diomede of particularly Joseph of Exeter, IV, 124-27 Lines 804-05 probably go back to Fil, VI, 33 and 24, though heir of Calydonne may be due to a misreading of Joseph's "(Calydonius) heros" (IV, 349) as "heres"

806 ff Again a composite of Joseph (IV, 156-62) and Benoit (II 5275 ff) Lines 818-19, in particular seem due to a misreading of Joseph's line "Divinus forme certant insignia morum," of which the last word is wrongly copied as "amorum" in the margin of MS J

With the statement about Criseyde's stature in l 806 contrast I, 281, where Chaucer was following Boccaccio The present passage is in agreement with Joseph, Benoit, and Guido (sig e 2 recto, col 2)

809-12 The description of Criseyde's hair departs from Joseph "nodatur in equos Flavices crinita sinus" The corresponding passages in Benoit and Guido do not mention the subject Possibly Chaucer recalled Tes, VII, 65 or XII 54 but compare also his earlier reference in Tr IV 816-17

813 f Criseyde's joined brows are mentioned by Dares, Joseph Benoit and Guido but only the last two regard the trait as a lah. In ancient Greece it was held to be a mark of beauty, and sometimes as the sign of a passionate nature See Curry, The Middle English Ideal of Personal Beauty, Baltimore 1916 p 48, Griffin, JEGP, XX, 39 ff

817 With this striking line have been compared Fil, I 27 3-4 28, 8, and IV, 100, 3 also Par, xviii 21 (which is the closest parallel) See Professor A S Cook in Rom Rev, VIII, 226 where the Dante passage was noted and other parallels discussed

825 Cf Benoit, I 5286, and Guido sig e 2 recto, col 2, ll 22 f

827-40 Partly from Joseph of Exeter IV, 61-64 cf also Benoit, especially II 5393-5446

832 For the construction, with creature in the singular number, cf CIT, IV, 212 n

837 "In daring to do what belongs to a knight" Cf Joseph of Exeter "nullique secundus Audendo virtutis opus" (II 61 f)

852 Cf Sgt, V, 294 (closely similar)

892 Either the gods of retribution or the departed spirits of the slain Trojans shall be in terror of the Greeks so cruel a vengeance will be inflicted Though Chaucer's definition of Manes seems explicit enough, his application of it is uncertain and the source of the definition is also unknown In classical Latin the term referred sometimes to departed spirits, sometimes to the gods of the lower world, and in a few instances to punishment conceived impersonally (as in Aen, VI, 743, where it is glossed by Servius "supplicia") In the present passage Dr Wise suggests (Influence of Statius p 24), the spirits of the Trojans may be represented as the agents of retribution For the idea that the Manes torment those who inflict violent death he cites Aen, IV, 387, Theb III, 75, IV, 606, V, 163, 312 VII, 770, and other passages But Mr Root's interpretation of Chaucer's words is simpler and more natural

The Greeks will strike terror even to the deities of hell"

897 ambages, ambiguities, Ital "ambage" (Fil VI, 17, 3)

904-10 With the argument here drawn from Fate cf that used by Paris with Helen, Her, XV (xvi) 17 f, 41 f

932 Tydeus the father of Diomedes, was one of the chief heroes on the side of Polyneices in the Theban struggle See Fil, VI 24 and Theb, VII, 538 ff

971 Orkades, the Orkneys representing the western limit of the world, as India did the eastern

975 Cf I, 97

999 "Flavus" is the customary Latin adjective for Pallas's hair Cf Theb., iii, 507, Met., ii, 749, viii, 275, etc

1000-04 In these lines Chaucer appears to have combined the accounts of Benoit and Guido Cf Rom de Troie, 13676-78 (for ll 1000-01) and Guido, sig 1 2 verso, col 1 (for ll 1002-04)

1010-11 Cf Rom de Troie, 15053 ff

1013 For the incident of the glove, which is lacking in the Flostrato, cf Rom de Troie, 13709-11, and Guido, sig 1 2 verso, col 1-2

1018 Criseyde had promised to return before the moon should pass out of Leo See iv, 1590 ff

1020 Sigmasfer, the zodiac, so called by Claudian, In Rufinum, i, 365

1023-29 Cf Fil., vi, 33, 6-8 But this sodeyn Diomedes is apparently Chaucer's

1030 gostly for to speke, "to speak truly" lit "religiously," "devoutly" Cf the modern phrase "the gospel truth" This use of gostly seems to have been rare Dr Theodore Spencer has called the editor's attention to two instances in Handlyng Synne, ed Furnivall, EETS, 1901-03, ll 2372, 2418

1033-36 Cf Fil., vi, 34

1037-39 he wan, that is, Diomedes won it in battle (Thynne reads she wan, incorrectly) This occurrence, which is not mentioned by Boccaccio and of which Guido gives only a partial account, is related in the Rom de Troie, 14286 ff

1040-44 The broche corresponds to the "fermaglio" which Boccaccio says Troilo noticed on a garment which Deifobo captured from Diomedes (Fil., viii, 8-10) The pencil of hure stene however, is due to Benoit, Rom de Troie, 15176 ff

1044-50 Apparently based upon Benoit's account (Rom de Troie, 20202 ff) Cf also Guido, sig k 6 verso, col 2

1054 ff Criseyde's soliloquy, for which Boccaccio and Guido offer no parallel, follows in part the soliloquy of Briseida in the Rom de Troie 20238-340

1057-64 Cf Helen's words to Paris in Her., xvi (xvii), 207 ff

1062 "My bell shall be rung," that is, my story shall be told, my dishonor proclaimed A proverbial phrase, for which Mr Root cites parallels in Conf Am., ii, 1727 ff, and Lydgate's Compl of the Bl Knight, 262 (Oxf Chau., VII, 253)

This prophecy of the condemnation of Cressida is amply fulfilled in later English poetry But the degradation of her character in Shakespeare is due not so much to Chaucer as to his successors, beginning with Henryson See H E Rollins, The Troilus-Cressida Story from Chaucer to Shakespeare, PMLA, XXXII, 383 ff

1067 f The idea, "Sie ist die Erste nicht" (Faust, Part I, "Truber Tag"), arises naturally enough in the situation But Chaucer may have had in mind the words of Paris and Helen in Her., xvi (xvii), 41, 47 f

1071 Criseyde's pathetic declaration of her purpose to be faithful to Diomedes occurs also in Benoit (ll 20277 f)

1085 Note here the implication of Fate, the influence of which is repeatedly recognized in the course of the poem

1086 From the indications given by Benoit, Root shows that the elapsed time can hardly have been less than two years

1107 Cf "laurigero Phoebo," Ovid, Ars Amat., iii, 389

1110 Nisus' daughter, Scylla, who was changed into the bird "ciris" See LGW, 1908 ff Professor Meech (PMLA, XLVI, 189) shows that Chaucer might have found the explanation of "ciris" as "lark" in a gloss or in the Ovide Moralsé

1140 the yate, the portcullis

1141 as naught ne were, as if there were nothing, that is, without giving any special reason for doing so

1174 In the Flostrato Pandarus' expression of incredulity is different "From Mongibello the fellow expects the wind" (vii, 10) With Chaucer's phrase here of l 505, above It seems to mean, "Your happiness will come out of the wood if it come at all" Joly Robyn was a common name for a shepherd or rustic Skeat cites instances of its occurrence in Adam de la Halle's Jeu de Robin (Théâtre Français au Moyen-Âge, ed Monmerqué and Michel, Paris, 1870, pp 26 ff, 102 ff), in Rom (l 7453), in Twelfth Night (iv, 2, 744), and in Hamlet (iv, 5, 181)

1176 Last year's snow is a familiar symbol of the irrevocable past, as in Villon's refrain, "Mais où sont les neiges d'antan?" (Ballade des Dames du Temps Jadis)

1177-80 From Fil., vii, 11

1190 Troilus tries to persuade himself that Criseyde meant that the moon should pass wholly out of Leo, which would give her another day It was in Aries when she made the promise See iv, 1592

1277 Cf RR, 1 ff, and see, with reference to theories of dreams, NPT, VII, 2922, n

For the incident of Troilus's dream and the encouraging advice of Pandarus, Boccaccio may have obtained a hint from the similar account of Governale and Tristan in the Italian Tristano (ed E G Parodi, Bologna, 1896, p 187) or from the advice of Ascalione to Florio in the Filocolo (II, 26 f)

1368 chste of every care, "receptacle of every sorrow"

1375-79 With these lines, which are not from Boccaccio, Root compares BD, 599-616 and RR, 4293-4330

1433 Cf Knt, I, 1838, and n

1443-49 A resumption of ll 1240-53

1450-1519 Chaucer substitutes the divination of Cassandra for the altercation between her and Troilo in Fil., vi, 86 ff In Boccaccio's account Troilo interprets his own dream (Fil., vi, 25-28) Sibille, which was properly an epithet ("prophetess"), Chaucer seems to take as a second name of Cassandra. Other cases of the same confusion or misunderstanding are cited in Root's note.

It is unnecessary to seek a particular source for the conception of Cassandra as a prophetess of evil. Chaucer may have got it from Benoit (ll 4143 ff, 4881 ff, 10417 ff, 27183 ff etc) or from Ovid (Her., v, 113 ff, xvi, 121 ff).

1464-84 Cf Met. viii 260-546, and Boccaccio De Gen Deor., ix, cap 15 and 19.

1480 According to ancient authorities Tydeus was the half-brother and not a descendant, of Meleager. Chaucer was probably misled by l'avolo" in Fil. vii, 27, which he translated below in ll 1512 ff. Root notes that Boccaccio gives the relationship correctly in De Gen Deor., ix, 21.

1485 ff A summary of the Thebaid of Statius. A Latin argument is inserted in the MSS after l 1498 and printed by Skeat after l 1484. In this edition it will be found in the Textual Notes. On its probable source, in the metrical arguments, perhaps as old as the sixth century, which preceded the single books of the Thebaid, see G. L. Hamilton, in MLN, XXIII, 127. These arguments are found in Statius, Opera, ed. Amar and Lemaire, Paris, 1825-27, II-III. Chaucer's outline goes far beyond the meager Latin summary and shows familiar knowledge of Statius. Some details, as Professor Magoun has pointed out to the editor, he seems to have taken directly from the arguments prefixed to the separate books. For a detailed comparison of the whole passage with the Thebaid see Wise, Influence of Statius, pp. 26 ff. The story is treated more briefly in KnT, I, 931 ff and Anel 50 ff.

Polynices (Polymythes) and Eteocles (Ethecles), sons of Oedipus, were to rule Thebes alternately, but the latter expelled his brother Adrastus, king of Argos, took up the cause of Polynices and conducted the famous war of "The Seven against Thebes." With Adrastus and Polynices were associated Tydeus, Amphiarus (Amphiorax), Capaneus (or Campaneus), Hippomedon (Ypomედων) and Parthenopaeus (Parthonope). All of the seven except Adrastus were slain and Creon, who seized control of the city, refused to allow the burial of their bodies. This led to the expedition of Theseus, King of Athens, which is mentioned at the beginning of the KnT.

1488 Tydeus and Polynices were fellows by formal compact. See Theb., i, 468 ff, and of the "sworn brotherhood" of Palamon and Arcite (KnT, I 1132, and n).

1492 Hemonydes, Maeon, the son of Haemon, one of the fifty warriors sent by Eteocles to waylay Tydeus. Tydeus killed the other forty-nine and sent Maeon back to Eteocles.

1494 The reference may be to the prophecies of Maeon (Theb., ii, 71 ff), or of Amphiarus (Theb., iii, 640 ff) or of Laius, (Theb., iv, 637 ff).

1497 A serpent, sent by Jove, stung the infant Archemorus to death, while the child's nurse Hyppisyle, was guiding the Argive host to the river Langa (Theb., 505 ff). The epithet holy seems due to the "sacro serpente" of the metrical argument to Theb. v.

1498 the furies, the women of Lemnos, incited by the Furies, killed all the males but one on the island.

1499 The funeral rites of Archemorus occupy Theb., vi.

1500 On the death of Amphiarus see Theb., vii, 794 ff. On the spelling Amphiorax see Gen. Prol. I, 384, n.

1501 ff On the death of Tydeus see Theb. vii, 716 ff, on that of Hippomedon, ix, 526 ff on that of Parthenopaeus, ix, 841 ff and on that of Capaneus x 907 ff. The drowning of Hippomedon is mentioned in only one MS of the brief Latin summary namely H¹², which has the additional line "Fervidus Ypomედων timidique (read "tumidoque") in gurgite mersus" which comes from the twelve-line argument to Bk. ix.

1508 The first combat of Eteocles and Polynices is described in Theb., xi, 389 ff.

1509 Argive, Argia, the wife of Polynices ("Argiva" variant in the argument to Bk. xii). This seems to be Chaucer's source for the name of Criseyde's mother, though the reason for the choice is not apparent. See iv, 762, n.

1511 The statement that Thebes was burned is not definitely made in the Thebaid, though there are a number of references to the possibility of destruction by fire. Chaucer may have got the hint from these, or from the Teseide or the Roman de Thebes (cf l 10131).

1513-19 The interpretation of Troilus's dream here transferred to Cassandra's mouth, corresponds to that in Fil., vii, 27.

1520-26 Cf Fil., vii, 89. In the Filostrato Cassandra taunts Troilus for loving Griseida (vii 86, 87), in the Troilus she angers her brother by her interpretation of the dream.

1523 sestow a rhetorical question, not addressed to Cassandra. Fool of fantasie, fantastic fool.

1527-33 Alceste, Alcestis, the heroine of the LGW, and the model of wifely devotion. Her husband was Admetus, King of Phœae in Thessaly.

1541-47 Cf Inf., vii 68-82, also the discussion in Boethius iv, pr 6.

1548 parode glossed "duracioun" in MSS H¹² H¹⁴ Cp seems to be merely a corrupt form of perode.

1558 On aventarille see G. L. Hamilton, MP, III, 541.

1558-61 Boccaccio's account of the death of Hector is supplemented by that of Benoit (Rom de Troie 16185 ff). Cf also Guido's Historia, sig 1 6 recto, col 1.

1589 ff Criseyde's letter at this point is found only in Chaucer. But Boccaccio's poem indicates some kind of communication between Troilus and Griseida. See Fil., viii, 5-6. For the contents, moreover, Chaucer drew on earlier letters in Fil., ii, 96, 122, 126 1597-1600 Cf. Fil., ii, 122, 4-8

1611-13 Cf. Her., xvii (xvi), 149-51

1634 kalendes, beginning, as in ii, 7. Root observes that Chaucer seems to be playing upon the phrase "Calends of exchange," explained conjecturally by NED, s.v. Calends 3a as meaning a money-changer's calendar, reckoning, or account.

1644-66 Cf. Fil., viii, 8-10

1660 This brooch was not mentioned earlier in the account of the parting of the lovers. But according to iii, 1370 ff., Criseyde gave Troilus a brooch of gold and azure.

1669 word and ende, see MkT, VII, 2721 n.

1689 "To fief your love with" On the order of words see Gen Prol, I, 791, n.

1705 This detail of the bleeding sides, not mentioned in the Filostrato (viii, 16, 4-7), may have been added from Benoit (I 20075).

1751-56 These lines allude to combats which are fully described by both Benoit and Guido. See the Rom de Troie 19281-21189 and the Historia, sig. k 5 verso — sig. l 2 verso. Boccaccio dismisses the matter with a single line (Fil., viii, 25, 7).

1758 ff. These lines, which correspond to Fil., viii, 26, 1-5 are perhaps influenced by the account of Troilus in the Rom de Troie, 19955-21189.

1765 ff. Lounsbury (Studies, II, 315) suggested that Chaucer was thinking rather of Guido than of Dares. Anyhow it is very doubtful if he made direct use of Dares's prose Historia. Root has shown that the material here referred to is to be found in the Metrical "Dares" of Joseph of Exeter, which also furnished hints for the portraits in ll. 799 ff., above.

1772 ff. The conclusion, or epilogue, of the poem is carefully analyzed and fully discussed by Professor Tatlock in MP, XVIII, 625 ff. Ll. 1772-85, in which Chaucer makes his first moral application of the Troilus, suggest that he already had in mind the plan of the Legend of Good Women.

1786 ff. Go, intel bok, in the use of this formula, Chaucer follows a long literary tradition. For examples from Ovid, Martial, Statius, and various mediæval writers in French, Provençal, and Italian, see Tatlock, pp. 627 ff. Nearly all the cases he cites occur in collections of short poems. Boccaccio employs the device also at the end of longer works, and Chaucer probably had his usage in mind. The envoi in the Filocolo (II, 376-78) seems most likely to have influenced him. Boccaccio there mentions Virgil, Lucan, Statius, Ovid, and Dante, for the last of whom Chaucer may have deliberately substituted Homer as more appropriate to a tale of Troy. But too much significance should not be attached to the similarity of the lists. The same poets, with the addition of Claudian, are represented in the pillars in HF, 1455 ff. and they correspond also, with the single exception of Statius (who takes the place of Horace) to the group whom Dante joined in Lumbo (Inf. iv, 82 ff.).

In ll. 1789-90 may be recognized a variation on another literary convention, that of the so-called "envy-postscript." Cf. Astr. ii, 46 and see F. Tupper JEGP, XVI, 551 ff., where numerous examples are cited, both ancient and mediæval, of prologues and epilogues in deprecation of envy. The idea, and in l. 1791 the language, repeats Statius, Theb. xii, 816 f. ("vestigia semper adora").

1787 On this use of ther see KnT, I, 2815, n.

1793 ff. With the solitude here expressed of Adam Scriveyn. That there was plenty of occasion for the caution is fully shown by the condition of Chaucer's MSS. The diversite, which Chaucer rightly recognized as a cause of corruption, consisted partly in dialectical variations and partly in growing disregard of final -e. See the Grammatical Introduction.

1807-27 From Tes. xi, 1-3, where the flight of Arcite's soul is described. Chaucer did not use the passage in the KnT. On the reasons for its omission see KnT, I, 2805 ff., n. Boccaccio's stanzas are supposed to have been suggested by the Somnium Scipionis (De Re Publica, lib. vi), to which Chaucer also may have independently reverted. His knowledge of it is well attested by the FF. A second source, if not the primary suggestion, for the passage in the Teseide (as pointed out in a long neglected note of Tyrwhitt's to which the editor's attention was called by Professor Lowes), is certainly to be recognized in Lucan's account of the death of Pompey (Pharsalia, ix, 1 ff.). For further comment see H. R. Patch, Est, LXV, 357 ff.

1809 Nearly all the MSS. read seventhe for eighthe. But Boccaccio has "ottava," and the reference seems clearly to the concavity (or inner surface) of the eighth sphere. It is not made clear by either Chaucer or Boccaccio whether the spheres are numbered from that of the Moon outward or from that of the Fixed Stars inward. Professor Root argues in favor of the latter order, which is followed in the Somnium Scipionis (cap. xvii), and it seems probable on the whole that the station of Troilus was conceived as in the sphere of the Moon.

1810 In convers letyng, leaving on the other side. Boccaccio has "convessi," convex surfaces, which Chaucer either misread or deliberately altered. The reference is of course to the terrestrial elements earth, water, air, and fire.

1812 The erratic stars are the planets. On the music of the spheres see Somnium, cap. xviii, and FF, 59 ff.

1814 ff. Cf. Somnium, cap. xix-xx.

1819-21 Cf Pharsalia, ix, 11-14, especially "risitque sui ludibria trunci"

1835-55 On this repudiation of earthly love see Tatlock, MP, XVIII, 635 ff. The contrast between earthly and heavenly affection was of course one of the most familiar commonplaces of the age and is more than once brought out by Chaucer. The expression of it here has been taken by some to be merely conventional (Cf Fansler, Chaucer and the RR, p 228, n 12). But the whole spirit of the passage is that of religious sincerity. How far it is merely an utterance of personal feeling on Chaucer's part, and how far it reflects a more general conflict of pagan and Christian ideals, as Professor Tatlock suggests is difficult to judge. A similar conflict or contrast in the De Amore of Andreas Capellanus is cited by Professor Young in MLN, XL, 274 ff.

1837 Cf KnT, I, 2847, and n

1840-41 A proverbial comparison. See Skeat EE Prov, pp 85 f, no 205 Cf also Ps cii, 15 f

1848 The attack on heathen worship seems to be no less earnest than that on pagan love. Professor Tatlock (pp 652 ff) notes that there is a parallel disowning of paganism at the end of Boccaccio's De Genealogia Deorum. For the terms of the invective comparison has been made with Guido's denunciation of idolatry Historia, sig e 4 verso, col 2. Hecuba's outburst Rom de Troie, 21715 ff, 21732 ff, and Emilia's, in Tes, xi 42.

1856 ff The request for criticism or correction is in accordance with usage, though less common than the general device of the envoi. Professor Tatlock (pp 631 ff) notes instances in the life of St Dunstan by "B," the Ormulum, Deguileville's Pilgrimage, and various works of Boccaccio, whose example Chaucer probably followed. The selection of Gower and Strode, Tatlock suggests, had particular reference to the moral and religious issues involved in the paganism of the poem.

On Gower and his personal relations to Chaucer see the Biographical Introduction. With the term "moral" which has become a kind of fixed epithet for Gower, of the characterization of him in the metrical prologue to John Walton's translation of the Consolation of Philosophy (ed M Science, EETS, 1927, p 2, st 5).

The philosophical Strode is doubtless to be identified with Ralph Strode, fellow of Merton College before 1360, an opponent of Wyclif, though apparently on friendly terms with the reformer. Strode was an eminent Thomist philosopher and authority on logic. His Logica is lost, but fragments of his system are preserved in his Consequentiae and Obligationes. His theological treatises all appear to have perished, and for a statement of his opinions we are dependent on Wyclif's reminders Responsio ad decem Questiones Magistri R. Strode (Opera Minora, London, 1913, pp 398-404) and Responsiones ad Argumenta Radulphi Strode (Opera Minora pp 175-200). It is clear that one feature of Wyclif's philosophy to which Strode objected was his necessitarianism and Professor Tatlock (p 656, n 2) observes that he might for the same reason have disapproved of the philosophy of the Troilus. See n 953, n.

In the Vetus Catalogus of the fellows of Merton, written in 1422 there is added to the name of "Strood" the statement "Nobilis poeta fuit et versificavit librum elegiacum vocatum Phantasma Radulphi" (DNB). On this evidence it has been suggested that Strode was the author of the fourteenth century elegiac poem The Pearl and consequently of the associated poems Clenesse, Patience and Sir Gawayn and the Green Knight. But the identification of The Pearl with the Phantasma Radulphi is at best an unsupported conjecture, and there is some difficulty in the assumption that the Middle English author who wrote in a northerly (West Midland) dialect, was fellow of Merton, a southern college. Another work, not yet identified, an Itinerarium Terrae Sanctae was attributed to Strode by Bale on the authority of a lost treatise of Nicholas Brigham De Venatione Rerum Memorabilium. The list of Strode's compositions is still further amplified by Pits and Dempster. But his authorship of literary works, as distinguished from philosophical or theological, must be regarded as doubtful.

There is more to be said for the identification of Strode the philosopher with the Radulphus Strode who was prominent as a London lawyer from 1373 until his death in 1387. Notices of Ralph Strode of London do not appear until after references to Strode cease in the Merton records. In 1373 he became Common Pleader (Common Serjeant), and in 1386 Standing Counsel for the City. Reasons for identifying him with Strode of Merton have been found in two records one of which was only lately discovered. In 1374 Wyclif and Ralph Strode of London appear together as manpnors for a parson. And in 1377 according to a document preserved at Merton College and copied in the Calendar of Fine Rolls (for 1377-1383) IX, London, 1926 p 8 Ralph Strode of the City of London and Robert Rygge, parson of the church of St Stephen, Bristol were manpnors in the commitment of certain land in the suburb of Oxford to John Bloxham, warden of "Merton-halle". Finally, he is brought into relation with Chaucer by the fact that he was granted a mansion over Aldersgate in 1375, the year after Chaucer received his Aldgate residence, and especially by the recent discovery in the Coram Rege rolls that he and Chaucer were fellow sureties in 1382 for the peaceful behavior of John Hende, a wealthy London draper.

For more complete data on Strode see Sir I Gollancz in D N B, C Brown, PMLA, XIX, 146, E P Kuhl, PMLA, XXIX, 272 ff, H B Workman John Wycht, London, 1926, II, 125 ff, and for discussion of the lately discovered records, Miss Ruckert, TLS, Oct 4, 1928 p 707, H W Garrod, ibid, Oct 11, p 736, Sir I Gollancz, ibid, Oct 25, p 783 Mr J T T Brown (Scottish Antiquary, XII, pp 5 ff) suggested the possibility that the literary works ascribed to Strode by Bale and his successors were really by David Rate the confessor of James I of Scotland But his identifications of the various titles are not convincing

On a reference late and perhaps untrustworthy to N (or R) Strode as tutor of Chaucer's "little son" Lewis see the Explanatory Notes to the Astrolabe 1863-65 From Dante, Par, xiv, 28-30

THE LEGEND OF GOOD WOMEN

On the various forms of the title see the Textual Notes The authenticity of the Legend is well established, not only by the MS attributions, but also by internal evidence and by Chaucer's acknowledgment of the Seintes Legende of Cyprede in the Introduction to the Man of Law's Tale Chaucer refers to the work again as the Book of the XIX (or XXV) Ladres in his Retractation (probably genuine) at the end of the Canterbury Tales Lydgate includes it in his list in the Prologue to Bk 1 of the Fall of Princes, describing it as a "legende off parfit hoolynesse," and declaring that it was written at the request of the Queen But the authority for this last assertion, and for Speght's similar statement in his 1598 edition ("Argument" to the Legend), is entirely uncertain In its support see Professor Carleton Brown, ES, XLVII, 61 f, and Tatlock, Development and Chronology, Ch Soc, 1907, pp 111 ff Dr V Langhans (Untersuchungen zu Chaucer, Halle, 1918 p 186) makes the unlikely suggestion that the queen referred to by Lydgate was Alceste rather than Anne

Whether or not the work was written at the Queen's request, there is a kind of dedication to her in Prologue F (ll 496-97) This serves to date at least the Prologue in question between Richard's marriage, June 14, 1382 and the death of Anne, June 7, 1394 Within these limits no exact date has been established Ten Brink (Chaucer Studien, Munster, 1870, pp 147 ff) suggested that the poem expresses Chaucer's gratitude to the Queen for the appointment of his deputy in the custom house in February, 1385 But the petition for this assistance was signed by the King's favorite, the Earl of Oxford, and the intervention of the Queen, though not impossible, is entirely unproved (See Life Records, Ch Soc, 1875-1900, Pt iv, p 251, and Tatlock's comments in MP, I, 325 ff) More secure evidence for an approximate date is furnished by the literary relations of the Prologue Following a suggestion of Tyrwhitt, Professor Lowes proved (PMLA, XIX, 593 ff.) that it was indebted to Deschamps's Lay de Branchue and other French poems on the "marguerite" Now Deschamps's lay was written for May 1, 1385, and may have been brought to Chaucer by Sir Lewis Clifford in the spring or summer of 1386 At all events, Deschamps declares, in a ballade addressed to Chaucer, that he sent some of his poems to Chaucer by Clifford's hand and while the communication cannot be proved, the relation between the Prologue to the Legend and the French poems in question makes 1386 a very probable year for Chaucer's composition (Deschamps's ballade has been several times printed See, besides the editions of Deschamps [no 285 SATF, II, 138 ff], Paget Toynbee, Specimens of Old French, Oxford, 1892, pp 314 f, 482 ff and especially T A Jenkins, MLN, XXXIII, 268 ff, with text, translation, and full commentary)

The Prologue exists in two versions, about whose relative dates scholars disagree The form here designated G (usually A) is preserved in only one MS (Cambridge Univ, Gg 4 27), and was first printed by Furnivall, in 1871 All the other MSS have the form here called F (usually B), from MS Fairfax The G-version has generally been regarded as the earlier draft, and was so represented by Skeat and the Globe editor But Ten Brink (ES, XVII, 13 ff) questioned the traditional view and dated G later than F, probably not before 1393 Since his argument, opinions have been rather evenly divided on the subject In favor of the priority of G see especially E Legouis, Quel fut le premier composé par Chaucer des deux prologues de la Légende des Femmes Everplaires?, Le Havre, 1900, J B Bilderbeck, Chaucer's Legend of Good Women, London, 1902, J C French, The Problem of the Two Prologues to Chaucer's Legend of Good Women, Baltimore, 1905 and John Koch, ES, XXXVI, 142 ff, XXXVII, 232 ff, Angl L, 62 ff For the opposite order see (besides Ten Brink) Lowes, PMLA, XIX, 593 ff, XX, 749 ff, and in Kirtledge Anniversary Papers, Boston, 1913, pp 95 ff, Tatlock, Dev and Chron, ch 4, and H Lange, Angl, XLIX, 173 ff, LII, 128 ff Dr Langhans, in his Untersuchungen, pp 77 ff., argued that G alone is genuine and that F is a revision of Chaucer's text by another author See also his later articles in ES

LVI, 36 ff, Angl, L 70 ff (with a brief review of the history of opinion) and LIV, 99 ff. Less important articles and reviews are listed by Miss Hammond, pp 381 ff, and by Wells, pp 873, 1030, 1145, 1235 f, 1325.

Although neither theory may be susceptible of absolute demonstration, the probabilities, in the opinion of the present editor, strongly favor the priority of the F-version. Arguments based upon a literary preference for either version, or upon the problematic interpretation of Alceste as an allegorical figure representing Queen Anne, are of necessity indecisive. But such considerations as have been advanced by Professor Lowes, in the articles listed above, are less colored and consequently safer. After pointing out certain French and Italian sources of the Prologue, as already noted, he showed that F is closer to the originals, both verbally and structurally, than G. This relation is hard to understand on the theory that G is the original version. Then from an examination of passages shifted in revision, Mr Lowes also showed that the purely mechanical "joiner-work" is easier to explain on the assumption that G is the later text. A number of the altered passages point clearly to this conclusion, and none of them seem inconsistent with it. Indeed the chief objection to regarding G as the revision is probably the fact that some excellent poetry in F has been sacrificed in the rearrangement. But this will not surprise anybody who recalls how Chaucer appears to have canceled some of the best links in the Canterbury Tales. And fortunately the special beauties of version F need not be lost to the reader. For it is the wise practice of most modern editors to print the two texts side by side.

More or less involved in the whole problem of the Prologue, as already remarked, is the particular question whether Alceste represents Queen Anne. In support of this identification, which according to the usual understanding carries with it the identification of Love as King Richard, see Ten Brink, Geschichte der Eng Lit, Strassburg, 1912, II, 116; Skeat, Oxf Chau, III, xxiv, the works of Bilderbeck and French cited above, H Lange, Angl, XXXIX, 347 ff (with detailed argument from heraldry), and Koch, Est, LV, 174 ff, and Angl, L, 62 ff. R. Bressie, in MP, XXVI, 28 f, argues that Usk's Testament of Love, and even the Pearl, are to be associated with a marguerite cult in honor of the Queen. For adverse criticism of the allegorical interpretation of the Prologue see Lowes, PMLA, XX, 773 ff, Kittredge, MP, VI, 435 ff, and Langhans, Untersuchungen, pp 182 ff, and Angl L, 70 ff. The possibility of a compliment to Queen Anne in the panegyric on the daisy is perhaps not to be denied, though very little is known of the literary "cults" actually in vogue at her court. But in the opinion of the present editor for an allegorical equation between Alceste and Anne, and still more, between Richard and the God of Love, involves too many difficulties and improprieties to be probable. Nor is such an interpretation of the characters required by anything in the text of the Prologue. Passages in which evidence of the allegory has been sought will be considered in the notes that follow.

A different identification for Alceste was proposed by Professor Tupper in JEGP, XXI, 308 ff. He took her to represent Alice Chester (or de Cestre), whom he held to be a lady-in-waiting of the Queen and a life-long friend of the poet. But Professor Manly, in MP, XXIV, 257 ff, produced evidence from the household books to show that she was an elderly laundress.

In the fundamental idea of the LGW — a martyrology of Cupid's saints — there is involved the application of theological conceptions to the affairs of love. It is therefore not surprising that Queen Alceste, the intercessor, should bear some resemblance in character and office to the Blessed Virgin. The God of Love, too, is not quite the ordinary Cupid, but has the character of a pitying lord. This religious parallelism was pointed out by Professor Lange in Angl, XLIX, 173 ff, 267 ff. It is set forth in detail by Dr D D Griffith, Manly Anniversary Studies, Chicago, 1923, pp 32 ff. Dr Griffith shows that the Christian coloring is less marked in version G than in version F. But Professor Brusendorff (p 144, n.) questioned whether this was the result of deliberate purpose.

The date of the Prologues, either or both, does not determine the time of composition of the individual legends and on this subject there is also a wide diversity of opinion. Professor Lowes (PMLA, XX, 802 ff) showed reason for holding most of the legends to be earlier than the Prologue, see also Tatlock, Dev and Chron, pp 122-31. Professor Root, basing his discussion particularly on the Medea argued for a later date (PMLA, XXIV, 124 ff, XXV, 228 ff), against his view, see Kittredge, PMLA, XXIV, 343 ff.

The sources of the Prologue have been most fully exhibited in Professor Lowes's articles. For the first part — the panegyric of the daisy (F, 1-196) — the principal suggestion came apparently from Deschamps's Lay de Franchise, but there are also reminiscences of a number of other French poems on the "marguerite." The second part — the vision of Love, with the accusation and defense of the offender against his law (F, 197-200) — is indebted for its framework and many details to the Paradys d'Amours of Froissart. The more important parallels in these various sources are pointed out in the notes that follow. Other literary influences on the Prologue, less important structurally, have been observed by several scholars. Professor Kittredge in MP, VII, 471 ff, noted a possible relation to Machaut's Jugement dou Roy de Navarre. The striking parallelism of the general situation between the Prologue and the woodland fight of Palamon and Arcite in the K_nT has been noted by Professor Tatlock (Stud Phil., XVIII, 419 ff.) Dr Fansler (pp 69 ff.) calls attention to a few resemblances to Machaut's Dit du Vergier. He also compares with Alceste's defense of the poet the defense of the lover by Fals-Semblant in R.R., 12277 ff. But on the whole the influence of the Roman de la Rose was slight (cf Fansler, p 256). For the underlying fiction of Chaucer's heresy against Love there are various literary parallels. See Brusendorff, p 140, citing, besides Machaut's two Jugement poems, Jean de Meun's excuses (R.R., 15135 ff.) and Brantôme's story of Jean in the Vies des Dames Galantes. Cf F. Guillon, Jean Cloupinel, Paris, 1903, pp 169 f.

For the general conception of the legends Chaucer was indebted on the one hand to the lives of the saints, and on the other to Ovid's Heroides and Boccaccio's De Claris Mulieribus and De Casibus Virorum et Feminarum Illustrium. The nine individual stories seem to have been based on various authorities, chiefly Ovid and Virgil. Those sources which can be recognized with some probability are indicated in the notes. Cf Bech, Angl., V, 313 ff., and Skeat's introduction and notes, and especially E. F. Shannon, Chaucer and the Roman Poets, Harv Univ Press, 1929, pp 169 ff. Professor Shannon makes detailed comparison of Chaucer's text with the Latin texts, in particular with Ovid. Here, as in the case of several of Chaucer's other works, the question arises as to his use of vernacular translations of his Latin sources. Professor Lowes has shown (PMLA, XXXIII, 302 ff.), in an examination of the Philomela, that in that legend Chaucer utilized the French Ovide Moralisé alongside of Ovid's Latin, and Mr S. B. Meech (PMLA, XLV, 117, XLVI, 182 ff.) has pointed out the influence of the same French work in the Legend of Aradne. Mr Meech has found no trace of the Ovide Moralisé in the other Legends or in the Canterbury Tales. But in the first article cited he shows that in a number of passages, noted below, Chaucer probably utilized the Italian translation of the Heroides, ascribed to Filippo Ceffi. On the general question of Chaucer's use of vernacular versions of Latin texts see the introductions to the Explanatory Notes on the Clerk's Tale and on Boece. Professor Shannon (Ch and the Roman Poets, pp 282-83) dismisses the subject a little too summarily.

Professor H. C. Goddard's articles (JEGP, VII, no 4, 87, VIII, no 1, 47) should be mentioned, in support of the theory that the Legend was really a satire upon women, to be understood in a sense opposite to its apparent meaning. Against this opinion see the cogent argument of Lowes (JEGP, VIII, 513 ff.)

Professor R. M. Garrett, in JEGP, XXII, 64 ff. has restated the satirical interpretation in a less extreme form, but he also appears to the editor to carry it too far.

Special acknowledgment should be made here, as in the case of all Chaucer's writings, of the editor's indebtedness to Skeat's notes. The two later editions, by Pollard (in the Globe Chaucer) and by Koch (in [Chaucer's] Kleinere Dichtungen), are sparsely annotated, though Koch gives extensive lists of variant readings.

Prologue

(References are to the line-numbers of Prologue F, unless the G-version is specially designated. Corresponding passages in the two versions will be found in the parallel columns of the text, except where the order was changed in revision.)

1 On the rhetorical character of the beginning — a combination of the methods of "sententia" and "exemplum" — see Manly, Chaucer and the Rhetoricians, Brit Acad., 1926, p 8. There is a striking parallel to the opening lines in Froissart's Johi Buisson de Jonece, ll 786-92 (Œuvres, ed Scheler, Bruxelles, 1870-72, II, 24, see Kittredge, Est, XXVI, 336, n.)

11 Wel more thing, many more things 16 Evidently a proverb, the Latin form of which is noted in the margins of some MSS "Bernardus monachus non uidit omnia." It is by Tyrwhitt and most later commentators taken to refer to St Bernard of Clairvaux (1091-1153). Skeat (following Tyrwhitt) cites J. J. Hoffmann, Lexicon Universale (Leyden, 1698), s v S Bernardus, Burgundus "Nullo habuit praeceptores praeter quercus & fagos. Hinc proverb. Neque enim Bernardus vidit omnia." A writer signing himself E. S. A. in N & Q, 8th Ser., III, 433, argues that the reference was rather to Bernard of Morlaix, whose De Contemptu Mundi describes heaven and hell. Professor Tatlock (MLN, XLVI, 21 ff.) has proposed a third identification, with Bernard the traveler (sometimes called "Bernardus Sapiens"), who with two other monks made a journey to the Holy Land about the year 870, and left an account in his brief Itinerarium (T. Tobler, Descriptiones Terrae Sanctae, Leipzig, 1874, pp 85-99, 393 ff. Migne, Pat. Lat., CXXI, 569-74). Mr Tatlock cites several references to him as "Bernardus Monachus." Professor G. L. Hamilton, who is preparing an argument in favor of the traditional identification with Bernard of Clairvaux, has called the editor's attention to a variant of the proverb — "Multa sunt quae bonus Bernardus nec vidit, nec audivit" — used by Cowper in a letter written July 25, 1792 (Correspondence, ed Johnson, London, 1824, II, 294). Mr Hamilton would connect the saying with a treatise attributed to St Bernard and entitled Meditationes, or De

Interiori Homine See Migne, Pat Lat, CLXXXIV, 485 ff

40-65 These lines, as Lowes has pointed out, contain numerous echoes of the French "marguerite" poems. Cf in particular ll 40-43 with Froissart's Paradys d'Amours (Œuvres I, 1 ff) ll 1633-35, 1621-22 and his Prison Amoureuse (Œuvres I 211 ff), ll 898-99, ll 44-49 with Deschamps's Lay de Franchise (Œuvres, SATF, II, 203 ff), ll 14, 27-30, and Froissart's Ditié de la Fleur de la Margherite (Œuvres, II, 209 ff), ll 162-66, ll 50-52 with Machaut's Dit de la Marguerite, ed Tarbé Rheims 1849, p 124, ll 53-55 with Froissart's Le Joh Mois de May (Œuvres II, 194 ff) ll 289-90, and Deschamps's balade no 532 (Œuvres SATF, III, 368 ff) ll 15-16, ll 56-59 with Froissart's Ditie, ll 81-82, 159-62 and ll 60-65 with Deschamps's Lay de Franchise, ll 44-50. Line 43 may reflect Chaucer's consciousness that he was substituting the English name of the daisy for the French "marguerite" of his sources. Cf also ll 182-85, below. The phrase flower of flowers in l 53 and again in l 185 is a commonplace. Cf A B C, 4.

43 With this use of our cf l 1689, below also ShpT VII 69 and n (The reading her, which is peculiar to MS F, is clearly an error).

45 ff Closely similar to KnT, I, 1675 ff. As Professor Tatlock has noted the resemblances between the Prologue to LGW and the KnT, are not merely verbal. There is also a parallel between the situation here and that where Duke Theseus separates Palamon and Arcite, and then pardons them at the queen's request. See Stud Phil, XVIII 419 ff.

G 58 With this line, which is true to actual fact, Professor Lowes compares, among other passages, Froissart's Ditié, ll 96 ff, and his Paradys d'Amours ll 1636-38.

68-77 This is addressed to contemporary poets such as Machaut, Froissart, and Deschamps and may be regarded as an acknowledgment on Chaucer's part of his debt to their poems on the "marguerite."

72 Court society in both England and France was apparently divided into two parties or amorous orders devoted respectively to the Flower and to the Leaf. Cf Gower, Conf Am, viii 2462 ff, and Deschamps, nos 764-67 (Œuvres, SATF, IV, 257 ff). In England Philippa of Lancaster was the great patroness of the Flower. The English poem, The Flower and the Leaf, formerly attributed to Chaucer, is now held to be of the 15th century. On the literature of the Flower and the Leaf see Kittredge, MP, I, 1 ff, G L Marsh, MP, IV, 121 ff, 281 ff.

74 making, poetry, 'ye have reaped the field of poetry, and carried away the grain.' The figure of gleaming after the reapers may be an echo of Ruth ii (if any literary suggestion was necessary), which was used in the Introduction to Higden's Polychronicon.

The reference to reaping in Usk's Testament of Love (Prol, 97 ff), generally associated with Chaucer's lines, has more resemblance to the passage in Higden (See MP, XXVI, 19 ff).

G 71-80 These lines correspond to F 188-96. Professor Lowes has shown (Kittredge Anniv Papers pp 96 ff) that the verbal changes are best explained on the theory that G is the revised form. He argues similarly with regard to two other shifted passages G, 93-106 (= F, 197-211) and G 179-202 (= F, 276-99).

G 76 "I am not retained by either party." With the use of withholde(n) here (and in F, 192) cf Gen Prol, I, 511.

84-96 Chaucer here follows closely the opening stanzas of the Filostrato, a passage which he did not use in the Troilus. At the same time several phrases still echo the French "marguerite" poetry. With ll 86-87, for example, may be compared Machaut's Dit de la Marguerite pp 126-27 with the phrase erthly god (l 95) of "la déesse mondaine" in Deschamps's Lay de Franchise l 52 and the simile of the harp suggests the title of Machaut's lost Dit de la Harpe. Indeed Professor Lowes conjectures that Chaucer's transition to the Filostrato was itself due to certain lines near the close of the Dit de la Marguerite (p 128) which are similar in language and sentiment to the passage in Boccaccio.

100 seen at eye, see clearly before the eyes.

103 besy gost active spirit.

108 Note the change of date from the first of May, in the F-version to the end of the month in the G-version (l 89).

113-14 These lines contain an echo of Tes, in 5. Europa is there called by her own name in calling her Agenores doghtre. Chaucer may have recalled "Agenore nata." Met ii 858 (where her story is told) or the Filocolo (ed Moutier, II, 149). The sun, as the passage indicates, was in the middle of Taurus on the first of May.

G 96 The G-version introduces at this point the poet's return to the house and his dream, which do not occur in F until l 200. Professor Lowes argues that G has thus more unity and avoids verbal repetitions and is therefore the revised form. — The remark about the house with the arbor (which occurs in both texts) perhaps furnishes an indication of the date of composition. It seems hardly applicable to Chaucer's house over the city gate, and he is known to have surrendered his lease in October, 1386, perhaps for the purpose of attending to new duties either as Member of Parliament, or as Justice of the Peace in Kent.

G 113 ff. From RR, 57 ff. The Fr has "povreté," rendered pore estat here and in Rom, 61. Brusendorff (p 398) suggested that Chaucer recalled his own translation. In BD, 410 he rendered the same passage more literally.

115 ff There is here a complex interweaving of Machaut (Dit, ll 17-23), Guillaume de Lorris, Baudouin de Condé, and perhaps Boccaccio (Tes, n, 6-7)

123 In the attribution of fragrance to the daisy (against the truth of fact) Chaucer again follows the tradition of the "marguerite" poets Cf, for example, Machaut's Dit de la Marguerite, pp 123, 125, Froissart's Pastourelle, xvii (Œuvres, II, 341 ff), l 66, and Deschamps's Marguerite ballade, no 539 (Œuvres, SATF, III, 379 f), l 16 It is probable that in this particular the poets simply transferred to the daisy a quality which they were continually celebrating in the rose

127 For the figure of the cold sword of winter of SqT V, 57 Chaucer may have got it from Machaut, Roy de Navarre (Œuvres, SATF, I, ll 34-36, or from R.R., 5942 ff, or from the Anticlaudianus of Alanus de Insulis, vii, 8 (Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 557) With the passage as a whole cf also (as noted above) BD, 410 ff and RR, 55 ff, 124-25

137 sophistrye, cf "sofime" in R.R., 21498, and the De Placitu Naturae of Alanus, "perdit nunc venatorum sophismata abhorrebat (Migne, CCX, 436, pointed out by E S A, N & Q, 8th Ser, III, 249-50)

139-40 Cf R.R., 703-04

145 Cf PF, 683

153-74 This paragraph on the birds is replaced in G by the five lines (139-43) in which the lark heralds the approach of the God of Love The passage in F is in the manner of the Roman de la Rose, and contains a number or verbal parallels of more or less uncertain significance (See Miss Capriani, PMLA, XXII, 594-95) With ll 139-40 of G Professor Lowes compares SqT, V, 399-400, on which he suggests Chaucer may have been occupied at about the same time See also note to l 127, above

160 On Daunger, here used in the sense of the fastidiousness, offishness, of the Lady, see Gen Prol, I, 517, n

163 The reference here is to the Christian doctrine of grace On the application of this and other theological ideas to the affairs of love, see Knt, I, 3089, n., and Tr, I, 15 ff, n

166 Etik (or Etike) here might refer either to a book or to a person The term is several times applied to Horace by John of Salisbury, who, in Polycraticus, viii, 13 (ed, Webb, Oxford, 1909, II, 317), introduces a quotation from the Satires (I, 2, 24) and a paraphrase from the Epistles (I, 18, 9) with "ut enim at ethicus" Chaucer's quotation doubtless comes, directly or indirectly, from the latter passage The version in Dante's Convivio, Canz, m, 81 ff, may also have been in his mind See further Lowes, MLN, XXV, 87-89

G 141 ff Mr Praz compares Purg, u, 26 ff See Monthly Criterion, VI, 22

171 ff For the association of Flora and Zephyrus of R.R., 8411 ff

184 Chaucer's etymology of "daisy," from "day's eye," is entirely correct The Anglo-Saxon is "degeesege" ("degeesege") The flower was probably so called because of its resemblance to the sun, to which the term primarily applied

213 Cupid leads in Alceste, clothed in the likeness of a daisy Her name is disclosed in F, 432, but through apparent inadvertence in composition Chaucer represents himself later (until l 518) as failing to recognize her This slip is common to both texts of the Prologue In the G-version Alceste is named in l 422, but the passage may possibly be regarded as an aside to the reader, and hence not inconsistent with what follows On her story see the note to l 510, below

215 fret, a caul of gold wire, below l 228, it means rather an ornamental border The origin of the word is uncertain, cf OF "frete," trellis-work, and AS "frætwæ," adornment

217, 220 The rare word flouroun, here used in the sense of "petal," must have been taken by Chaucer from Froissart's Dittie, where it is twice employed in the same sense (ll 166, 187) Professor Lowes argues that its use in the F-version, over against the more familiar floures in the G-version, is evidence of the priority of the former But it is not quite certain that we are dealing here with an alteration by the poet Floures (as Mr Lowes himself notes) is the reading of part of the MSS of the F-version, and its appearance in G may simply perpetuate a scribal blunder Flouroun seems anyhow to have been Chaucer's first form

221 o perle, a single stone Oriental, eastern, means (as commonly, when applied to gems) of superior quality For an allegorical interpretation of the crown see the note to l 504, below

227 grees, sprays, boughs, explained by some commentators as referring to the branches of the broom ("planta genesta"), worn by Richard as a badge See the next note Rose-leves, rose petals

G 161 The lylye floures in G replace a sun-crown in F Those commentators who hold the Prologue to be allegorical understand both, as they do the grene greves above, to refer to Richard On his monument there is a representation of the sun ascending behind clouds, and the lilies, it is pointed out, may betoken his claim to the French throne Professor Bilderbeck, on the theory that F is the revised version, held that the lily crown was appropriate in 1385, when the war with France broke out, but that in 1390, in time of peace, the sun was substituted Professor Lange, holding F to be the earlier version, argued that the sun was appropriate in 1385-86, and that the lilies were substituted in 1396 to symbolize Richard's marriage to the young French princess Isabella But Lange also recognized Christian symbolism in the sun-crown, and compared the title sol justitiae given to Christ by Albertus Magnus. And again changing the symbol, he suggested that the sun, serving as a crown of gold, represents pure, heavenly love as opposed to the earthly passion celebrated in the Troilus. See Bilderbeck, Chaucer's Legend of Good Women, pp 85 ff., Lange, Angl., XLIV, 72 ff., XLIX, 173 ff., 267 ff., and for critical comment Langhans, Untersuchungen, pp 216 ff., and Angl. L, 97 ff., Koch, Angl. L 64. The presence of any of this allegory in the passage is dubious, and the particular interpretations suggested are arbitrary and more or less inconsistent.

231 for hevy nesse, to avoid heaviness. With this use of for of Tr, I, 928, and n 232 ff. Cf. Dante, Purg., II, 34, 37-39, and (more doubtfully) Inf., III, 52-54. See M. Praz, Monthly Criterion, VI, 22 f.

G 179-202 These lines correspond to F, 276-99. If the former was the revised version the shift had the advantage of bringing closely together the sternness of the God of Love and the comfort of Alceste. The new order may also have suggested the transfer of the ballade from the dreamer to the Ladies.

247 In the F-version the ballade is sung by the poet, like the corresponding song in the Paradys d'Amours. The change in G makes it form a distinct part of the action. Froissart's ballade sings the praises of the daisy, and agrees in substance and language with other parts of the Prologue. Both pieces, with their lists of proper names, belong to a type of poetry common in the period. Cf. for example, Machaut's Voir-Dit (Soc des Bibl. Fr., Paris, 1875), II 6753 ff. (also II 6045 ff.), Deschamps, nos 313 (Œuvres, SATF, II, 335 ff.), 546 (III, 389 f.), 651 (IV, 110), 778 (IV, 279 f.), 1274 (VII, 13 ff.) and no 42 of the Pieces attribuables à Deschamps (X, xlix f.).

249 ff. Though Absalom's beauty was proverbial, the line about him seems to be derived from RR, 13870. Marcia Caloun, Marcia, the wife of Cato Uticensis. Chaucer may have had in mind Dante's references to her (Inf., IV, 128, Purg., I, 78 ff.). "Martia Catonis" is mentioned, however, also by Geoffroi de Vinsauf, Poetria Nova, l 1780 (ed. E. Faral, Les Arts Poétiques, etc., Paris, 1924 p 251), cf. also Lucan, Pharsalia, II, 326 ff. (which gives some account of her), and note Dante's comment on this passage in Convivio, IV, 28. See Kittredge, MP, VII, 482 f.

The other characters in the ballade are easily recognizable, and the stories of several are told in the Legends that follow. Probably Chaucer intended to include all the women in the series (see F, 554), though the variation between the list here and those names in ML Prol suggests that his purpose was never exactly defined.

255, 262, 269 My lady, of version F, corresponds to "ma dame," in Froissart and ballade no 42, attributed to Deschamps, cited in the note to l 247, above, and is probably the original reading, for which G substituted Alceste.

265 espied by thy chere whose condition is disclosed by thy appearance.

285 Such a multitude that not even the third or fourth part of it had ever been in this world of all mankind, that is, simply, three or four times the whole population of the world since the time of Adam. The passage is probably an echo of Inf., III, 55-57. See M. Praz, Monthly Criterion, VI, 21.

298 in figurynge, in emblem, symbol.

307 furlong wey of space, the time required to walk a furlong. See MLT, II, 557, and n.

308 ff. With the general situation here — the accusation by the king, the queen's intercession, her reminder to her lord of his duty to be merciful, the pardon of the offender and the imposition of a task — of the scene in KnT, I, 1696 ff., where Duke Theseus comes upon Palamon and Arcite fighting in the woods. It is likely that Chaucer carried over some or all of these features from his earlier work. In both cases too, they are largely his invention, or at least not derived from his recognized sources.

314 ut am I for the idiom of KnT, I, 1736. Ner, nearer (the comparative of neigh).

321 relyke, treasure, precious possession, applied primarily to the relics of a saint. The use of the word as a term of endearment is striking, but not unnatural. It occurs in both English and French (see Rom., 2673, 2907), and the Welsh word, "craur," is commonly used in the same sense. Cf. Bardonaeth Dafydd ab Gwilym, London, 1789, XI, 43, xxxi, 12, xxxii, 11.

329 Chaucer here testifies clearly that he translated the Roman de la Rose. Whether he ever completed it, or left it unfinished like so many of his works, is unknown, and it is also a matter of dispute whether he made any part of the existing Middle English translation. On this question see the Introduction and Explanatory Notes to that work. It happens that none of the three fragments contains such passages as would have given most offense to the God of Love.

G 260 paramours, doubtless adverbial here, "by way of romantic love." See KnT, I, 1155, and n.

332 The reference is of course to Chaucer's Troilus.

G 268-312 This passage on books occurs only in the G-version. By some commentators it is condemned as a digression and its omission from the F-version deemed an evidence of revision in that text. By others (who take G to be the later version) it is defended as germane to the argument and held to have been added in revision. In support of this latter opinion is the fact that some of the authors cited are those whom Chaucer used in his later writings.

The identity of Valerye is doubtful Skeat (following Tyrwhitt) took the name to refer to the Epistola Valeri ad Rufinum ne uxorem ducat, printed among the works of Jerome, but now ascribed to Walter Map (See Migne Pat Lat, XXX, 254 ff, also Thomas Wright's edition of Map's De Nigis Curialium, Camden Soc, London, 1850, pp 142 ff, the edition by M R James, in Anecdota Oxoniensia, XIV, 1914, pp 143 ff and the translation by Tupper and Ogle, Courtiars' Trifles, London, 1924, pp 183 ff) The mention of Jerome just below supports this identification, and although the work is primarily denunciatory, it does speak in praise of Penelope, Lucretia, and the Sabine women Lounsbury and others take Valerye to be Valerius Maximus, who praises Portia, Julia, Lucretia, and the wives of Scipio, Q Lucretius, and Lentulus (See Tatlock, Dev and Chron, p 100, for a brief defence of this view) A third possibility (in spite of Tatlock's flat denial) is Valerius Flaccus, whose Argonautica tells the stories of Hypsipyle and Medea (Bks II and VII) It is quoted by name in the Legend of Hypsipyle (l 1457) But since Valerius is mentioned there quite incidentally, and only as authority for the names of the Argonauts rather than for the story of Hypsipyle, he hardly seems to belong in the present list

The other names are easily identified Titus is Titus Livius — cited below (l 1633) as an authority for the Legend of Lucretia, and Claudyan is the late Roman poet, author of the De Raptu Proserpinae Jerome agayns Jovnyan refers to a celebrated attack on marriage by St Jerome (Migne, Pat Lat, XXIII, 211 ff) By the epistel of Ouyde is meant the Heroides, one of the chief sources of the individual legends that follow The Estorial Myrour is the Speculum Historiale, part of the encyclopaedic work of Vincent of Beauvais (first printed in Strassburg, 1469-73, there is no modern edition, but the Histoire Littéraire de la France, XVIII, contains a good synopsis)

Chaucer makes extensive use of the anti-feminist satire of Jerome in the Wife of Bath's Prologue and the Merchant's Tale The God of Love cites him here, and (probably) Valerius ad Rufinum, because they both give some testimony about good women Cf the Franklin's Tale, which derives from Jerome a long list of examples of chastity (V, 1364-1456) Valerius Maximus also is used in the Wife of Bath's Prologue (III, 642) and Tale (III, 1165)

Besides the preceding authorities, acknowledged by name, Chaucer may have remembered in writing the present passage Deschamps's Miroir de Marriage (Oeuvres, SATF, IX), which, like Jerome, influenced the works of his last period With G, 268-69 of Mirror, 9081 ff with ll 276-77, Mirror 9097-9100, and with ll 301-04, Mirror, 9063-67 Furthermore, ll 261-63 recall WB Prol, III, 707-

10 a passage which was very likely written first

G 277 There is possibly an echo of this line (and hence of the G-version) in Lydgate's Troy-Book, III, 4362 (See C Brown, EST, XLVII, 59)

G 315 Possibly there is to be recognized here a friendly fing at Gower, who suggested at the end of the Confessio Amantis, (viii, 2941* ff, ed G C Macaulay, III, 466), that Chaucer, like himself was too old for the service of Love This might explain the substitution for wrecches of the F-version, of the more vivacious olde folos of the G-version Cf the probable reference to Gower in the Introduction to the Man of Law's Tale (II, 77-89) and the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on that passage For the theory that the old age lines were removed in revision, also because of the passage in Gower, see Bilderbeck, pp 105-06 (Professor Bilderbeck reasons, of course, on the assumption that F was the revised version) The whole matter of a literary quarrel and perhaps personal estrangement, between Chaucer and Gower is very dubious The passages cited in evidence should not be taken too seriously

338 With Seynt Venus of RR, 10827, 21086 The use of the term here was probably traditional rather than the result of deliberate adaptation to the device of the Legend Cf WB Prol III 604

341 ff A number of commentators have seen in this speech a serious lecture on the duties of a king addressed to Richard II by Anne in the person of Alceste Cf particularly Bilderbeck, Legend of Good Women, pp 94 ff, S Moore, MLR, VII, 488 ff, and Lowes's criticism of the view in PMLA, XX, 773 ff For the objections to regarding Alceste as a symbol of the Queen see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on LGW The speech itself, it may be readily granted, can easily be applied to the circumstances of Richard's reign In fact such an application is supported by a passage of similar import in Lak of Steedfastnesse, and Chaucer's sympathy with the sentiment expressed may perhaps be inferred from the Parson's Tale (X, 761 ff) But this interpretation by no means carries with it the allegorical identification of Love with Richard The political counsel, if intended, is quite incidental Alceste's advice is intelligible and consistent throughout if understood to be addressed, as on its face it appears to be, to the God of Love Even such incongruity as may be felt in the reference to trauntz of Lumbardye serves a humorous purpose The first suggestion for the whole exhortation may have come from the account of Theseus in the KnT, I, 1773 ff

G 326 For the phraseology, which was doubtless proverbial, of RR, 12277 f

352 Cf RR, 1034

353 totelere, tattler, properly a substantive, here used as a modifier in apposition 381 the philosophre, probably Aristotle See his advice to Alexander on the subject of kings, cited at length by Gower in Conf Am, vii, 2149 ff The treatment of the matter in the Nicomachean Ethics, Bk v, may have been indirectly known to Chaucer Cf also Seneca, De Clementia, 1, 3, 3 and 5 4 For a repetition of the language and the rime, see Intro to MLT, II, 25 f

411 Cf RR 10923 f

412-13 With the plea here made of the close of Deschamps's Lay Amoureux, ll 275-end (Euvres, SATF, II, 202) and Ovid's defense of himself at the beginning of the Remedia Amoris (except that Ovid declares himself to have been always a lover, whereas Chaucer usually maintained the attitude of an outsider in the service of lovers)

417 ff The references to HF, BD, PF and RR are clear enough In the case of Palamon and Arcite it is a matter of dispute whether the poem so named was substantially identical with the KnT or a quite different earlier version of the Teseide, probably in stanzas On this matter see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the KnT The remark (l 421) that the story is little known refers to the Palamon and Arcite tale in general, not to Chaucer's English poem It simply echoes a statement in Tes, 1, 2 Most of the balades, roundels, and virelays mentioned in l 423 are lost Indeed Professor Brusendorff (pp 432 f) argued that the reference here is too conventional to prove that Chaucer ever composed any considerable number But Chaucer's testimony is confirmed by Lydgate (Prologue to Bk 1 of the Fall of Princes), though perhaps only on the authority of this passage (which his statement resembles in phraseology), and by Gower (Conf Am, viii, 2943 * ff) Songs and lays are also included in the list of sinful works repudiated in the Retractation But only a few of Chaucer's lyrical compositions seem to be preserved No real virelay of his is known, and only two roundels (Merciles Beaute, and PF, 680 ff), and of the twelve ballades or ballade-groups attributed to him only three or four could properly be described as hymns for the God of Love Professor Manly (Cant Tales, p 503) suggests that Chaucer, who was working in the technique of Machaut, probably composed the music as well as the words of his songs

The luf of Seynt Cecile (l 426) is doubtless the Second Nun's Tale, which bears every mark of being an early work Origenes upon the Maudeleyne (l 428), which is lost, is supposed to have been a translation of the homily De Maria Magdalena, commonly attributed to Origen This identification was suggested by Tyrwhitt, Glossary, s v Origenes, with a reference to Opera Origenis, (Paris, 1604, II, 291 f)

The term other holynesse (l 424) apparently means "another religion", the works that follow belong rather to Christianity than to the religion of the God of Love

G 414 the Wretched Engendrynge of Mankynde, apparently a lost translation, complete or partial, of the Latin prose treatise of Pope Innocent III, De Contemptu Mundi sive De Miseria Conditionis Humanae (Migne, Pat Lat, CCXVII, 701 ff) The form and extent of Chaucer's version are unknown From the fact that passages from Innocent appear in ML Prol and Tale, Skeat inferred that Chaucer made a translation in seven-line stanzas, but the citations would have been adapted in any case to the form of the work in which they were used Professor Lowes suggested that the rendering was in prose, and that Chaucer at one time meant to assign it to the Man of Law, who protests that he cannot tell his tale in verse (See II, 96, and the introductory note to ML Headdrunk) This is possible, though entirely uncertain On the date of the translation positive proof is also lacking But the use of the material in ML Prol and Tale favors the supposition that Chaucer was occupied with Innocent about 1390, and this would also explain the mention of the work in the revised version of the LGW Prol

452 A common proverb "Bis dat qui cito dat" Cf Mel, VII, 1794 ff, Skeat, EE Prov, p 88, no 210, Haeckel, p 25, nos 81, 82

464-65 That is, an honest man has no participation in the deed of a thief Cf Haeckel, p 37, no 126

490 Chaucer takes here his habitual attitude of an outsider in love

496-97 Eltham, seven miles from London Sheene, now Richmond These lines are found in the F-version only Their addition there, if F is the later version, is hard to explain Both Koch and Langhans, holding that opinion, explain away the couplet as an interpolation, which Langhans ascribes to Lydgate (See EST LV, 178, Angl, L, 74)
 If, however, G is the revised form, the excision of the passage is natural After the death of Anne, in 1394, Richard at once forsook the royal residence of Shene and ordered its destruction Chaucer might well have preferred not to keep lines which would perpetuate the association of the poem with the place (References to Shene in chronicles later than the time of the supposed destruction of the manor house appear to show that the King's command was not fully carried out For such passages, see Lowes, MP, VIII, 331, n and 334, n)

503 On this line, which Chaucer repeats in five places in nearly identical form, see KnT, I, 1761, n

504 Professor Lange finds in this line an allusion to the allegorical character of Al-ceste According to his general theory she stands for the Queen, whose name "Anna" signifies (in Hebrew) "gratia," grace, mercy
 So she discloses by her action what she is

She wears a crown of pearl (l 221, above) because in the symbolism of precious stones the pearl stands for "gratia," mercy. See Angl., XLIV, 213 ff., and for objections, Langhans, ibid., pp 337 ff and L, 87 ff, Koch, L, 62

510 Alcestis was the wife of Admetus, king of Phœræ in Thessaly. To prolong her husband's life she consented to die in his stead. Afterwards she was brought back to him from the lower world by Hercules. As an ancient type of wifely devotion she was a natural choice for the chief heroine of the Legend, but the work was broken off before her separate story was reached. The source from which Chaucer derived the brief account of her given here is unknown, it might have been from Hyginus Fable li, or from Boccaccio, De Gen Deor, xii, 1, though the statements of neither correspond precisely to his. The story of the transformation into a daisy (l 512) seems to have been Chaucer's own invention. Ovid's Metamorphoses, in which Clytæ, Daphne, Narcissus, Crocus, and Hyacinthus were all changed into flowers, perhaps furnished a suggestion, and a further hint may have come from Froissart's Dittæ, ll 69 ff., which tells how the tears of Hērès for her husband Cepheï were turned into daisies.

518 The discrepancy between this line and l 432, where Alceste has already told her name, cannot be quite explained away. It is probably due to the fact that Chaucer was following Froissart (Paradys d'Amours, ll 358-60) so closely that he overlooked for the moment what had gone before in his own poem. The blunder was not corrected in revision. Professor Langhans would adjust matters by omitting the comma after Alceste and interpreting, "Is this good Alceste the daisy, etc?" But this is hardly consistent with the rest of the speech.

526 Agaton, apparently Agatho, an Athenian tragic poet and friend of Plato. The reason for his association with Alcestis may be that Plato's Symposium, which tells her story, was known as Agatho's Feast. (It is called Agathon's Convivium by Macrobius, Saturnalia, ii, 1. See Hales, MLQ I, 5 ff.) The direct source of Chaucer's information is unknown. His spelling, Agaton, suggests an Italian original, and instances of the occurrence of the name in Dante (Purg, xxi, 107) and Boccaccio (Amorosa Visione, v, 50) have been pointed out, yet neither of these passages would have led Chaucer to associate Agatho with Alcestis.

531 Cybella, Cybela or Cybele, a Phrygian goddess of fertility, possibly suggested to Chaucer by the mention of Ceres in Froissart's Dittæ, ll 105 ff.

533 "And Mars gave redness to her crown," with reference to the red tips of the petals. For the association of Mars with the color red see KnT, I, 1747, n.

540 In the F-version of the ballade (B.

249 ff.) Alceste is not mentioned by name. In the G-text she appears in the refrain, and thus reproach of the God of Love was there fore canceled.

542 kalendar, almanac, hence gude, example, model.

562 In putting these words into the mouth of the God of Love Chaucer may have had in mind, and have expected his readers to recall, the similar situation in Machaut's Jugement dou Roy de Navarre and the Trésor Amoureux (ascribed to Froissart, Œuvres, III, 52 ff. but of doubtful authority), where very special meters are prescribed (see Kittredge, MP, VII, 471 ff.)

The Legend of Cleopatra

Chaucer apparently used the account of Cleopatra in Boccaccio's De Casibus, vi, 15, or that in the De Claris Mulieribus, cap lxxxvi, or both. Whether he had other literary sources is uncertain. Bech (Angl, V, 314 ff.) thought he followed Florus (Eptome Rerum Romanorum, iv, 11, modern editions ii, 21) for certain details, but the only striking parallel is that of the "purple sails," and these are mentioned, as Professor Shannon has pointed out (pp 186 f.), in both of Boccaccio's accounts. Skeat noted other parallel features in Plutarch, and suggested that Chaucer might possibly have known him in a Latin translation. In any case Chaucer appears to have handled his sources freely, and the description of the battle of Actium is thoroughly mediæval. Perhaps also the serpent-pit, in the account of Cleopatra's death, may have been taken by Chaucer from contemporary life or story. Gower's reference to Cleopatra, in Conf Am, viii, 2573 ff., is probably based upon Chaucer.

580 Tholome, Ptolemy, the name of Cleopatra's father and two brothers. The reference here is probably to the elder brother, in conjunction with whom she was appointed queen after her father's death (B c 51). He perished in the Alexandrine War, and she then reigned in conjunction, nominally, with her younger brother, a mere child. In less than four years she procured his murder, and became sole ruler.

583 on a tyme, soon after the battle of Philippi (B c 42).

589 For this commonplace doctrine about Fortune of MkT, especially VII, 2136 ff., 2763 ff.

592 After the death of his first wife, Fulvia, Antony married Octavia, the sister of Augustus, whom he deserted for Cleopatra.

600 Cf. KnT, I, 1817, and n.

614 ff. The general idea here, for to make shortly as the bestie, is of course common in Chaucer. The particular figure in l 621, a variation on more familiar phrases, may have been suggested by a description of Cleopatra's barge in the source of the story.

624 Octovyan, Octavianus, better known as the Emperor Augustus

629 ff Nearly all the features of this account of the battle of Actium were apparently taken by Chaucer from descriptions of sea battles of his own time In 1901 Professor W P Ker, in his introduction to Berners's translation of Froissart (Tudor Translations, London, 1901-03, I, lxxvii), pointed to Froissart's account of the battle of La Rochelle (1372) as possibly the original of this passage Schofield (Kittredge Anniversary Papers, pp 139 ff) collected excellent illustrations from Froissart's description of the battles of Sluys (1340) and Espagnois-sur-Mer (1350) and from the English romance of Richard Coeur de Lion (ed Brunner, Wiener Beilage, XLII, ll 2639 ff) The relevant passages in Froissart are bk 1, chaps 50 and 303-05 of Johnes's translation, London, 1839 (Berners, ch 50, 297-99), and the addition, printed in Johnes, I 197 ff Schofield supposing the Legend to have been written between 1385 and 1387, showed that there was an intense interest in naval affairs in England during those years But nothing in his argument stands in the way of the theory that the Cleopatra was written at an earlier date Froissart's first book was finished about 1373 And in any case it need not be assumed that Chaucer used him as a literary source

The employment of alliteration is noteworthy through a large part of this description The same device is used with similar effect in the account of the tournament in KnT (I, 2601 ff)

634 With the general situation here of that when Edward III set out to meet the Spaniards in the battle of Espagnois-sur-Mer (Froissart, tr Johnes, I, 197 ff, not in Berners's version)

636 "And try to attack with the sun at their back" The English followed precisely this method in the battle of Sluys (Froissart, chap 50, Johnes, I, 72)

637 The gonne certainly means "cannon," and not (as Skeat held) the "missile" hurled therefrom With out gooth, in the sense "goes off as discharged," Professor Webster (MP, XXV 292) compares "russe out" in Skelton's Garland of Laurel, l 623

639 For the use of great stones in attempts to sink the enemy of the battle of Espagnois and La Rochelle (Johnes, I, 197 ff, 472 f)

640 The grapnels (hooks for laying hold of vessels) and the shearm-hooks (used to cut their ropes) are mentioned in the description of Sluys, Espagnois, and La Rochelle

642 For a similar boarding exploit of Espagnois (Johnes, I, 199), and also an account of a battle between the French and English in 1217 (Nicolas, History of the Royal Navy, London, 1847, I, 177-81)

645 For the use of spears in sea-fights of a battle off Guernsey (Johnes, bk 1, chap 91), and La Rochelle (chap 305)

648 The pesen are explained by Sheat as "peas" poured on the hatches to make them too slippery for the boarding party Because of the lack of evidence of this practice, Schofield took the passage to refer rather to the use of pitch, which, according to Jean de Meun's Art de Chevalerie (a translation of Vegetus's De Re Militari), ed Robert SATF 1897 p 174, was poured on the decks of enemies' ships for the purpose of spreading wild fire (or "Greek fire") Such use of burning oil is mentioned in an account of a sea fight with the Saracens in 1190 (Itinerarium Regis Ricardi, ed Stubbs, Rolls Series, 1864, p 81) Cf also the romance of Richard Coeur de Lion, ll 2643 ff A more remote example, in which "Greek fire" figures, is afforded by the description of a battle between Greeks and Russes (c 940) in the Russian Primary Chronicle, tr S H Cross, [Harv.] Stud and Notes, XII, 158 This explanation implies a misunderstanding by Chaucer of some written source, for pesen can hardly have been an English word for pitch The French "pois" (pitch) on the other hand could easily have been mistaken for "pois" (peas) But Professor Webster (MP, XXV, 291) has recently found two passages which he presents in support of the older interpretation that peas were poured on the decks to make them slippery In both cases, to be sure, soap or grease is the substance employed or recommended His first citation is from an account of a sea-fight off Naples in 1283, given in Saba Malaspina's chronicle (Rosario Gregorio, Bibl Scriptorum qui Res in Sicilia Gestas sub Aragonum Imperio Retulere, Panormi 1791-92, II, 407) The second is from Aegidius Romanus De Regimine Principum, bk iii, part 3, ch 23 Mr Webster notes that the grease was poured on the enemy's deck, not on one's own

649 The quicklime was carried to be thrown into the enemies' eyes See N & Q, 5th Ser., X, 188, Strutt, Manners and Customs, London, 1774-76, II, 11, and Aegidius Romanus, in the chapter cited

651 Proverbial, cf Tr, iii, 615, n

653 It is not certain whether to-go is to be regarded as a third plural present indicative of a compound with to-, meaning "scatter," or as the infinitive of the simple verb On the whole the compound makes the best sense here, and the historical or narrative use of the infinitive has slight support in Chaucer Cf to laughre, Tr, ii, 1108, and see J S Kenyon, The Syntax of the Infinitive in Chaucer, Ch Soc., 1909, pp 82 f

654 With the purpre sayl of Boccaccio's De Claris Mulieribus, "ornata purpureis velis et aurea classe," and his De Casibus, "cum aurata nau, velisque purpureis", and also the Epitome of Florus, "cum aurea puppe veloque purpureo"

655 For the comparison, which was a commonplace, see RR, 15621-22

662 Antony really stabbed himself a year later at Alexandria. In hastening the action Chaucer perhaps followed Florus.

672 The description of the shrine again shows a resemblance to Florus.

678-80, 696-702 This account of Cleopatra's death in a pit of snakes seems to be peculiar to Chaucer and Gower (Conf Am, viii 2573-75). The earlier authorities ancient and mediæval, usually say that she died from the bite of an asp or serpent in the mausoleum of Antony (in case they mention any place at all), and some of them record an alternative tradition that she died by poison. According to the Old French Histoire de Jules Cesar (of Jehan de Tump), she went naked into a pit to meet her death, but there is no mention of the serpents. References to confinement in a serpent-pit are by no means uncommon, however, in mediæval literature. There is a familiar instance in the romance of Bevis of Hampton, and other examples in considerable number have been collected by Tatlock (MLN, XXIX, 99 f), C Brown (ibid., pp 198-99), and Griffith (Manly Anniversary Studies, p 38). Dr F E Faverty, in an unpublished Harvard dissertation (1930) on Legends of Joseph adds references to the Gesta Romanorum, ed Oesterley, Berlin, 1872, pp 556, 739, G H Gerould, North-English Homily Collection, Oxford diss, 1902, pp 41-42, E Hull, The Cuchullin Saga, London, 1898, p 283. Many of these instances occur in the lives of saints, and Chaucer, as Dr Griffith suggests, may have been led to think of them by his representation of Cleopatra as a martyr. Or, as Professor Tatlock observes, he may have devised this horrible form of death simply because he knew serpent-pits to be common in Africa. This would be one of the most striking cases of his use of local color.

The Legend of Thisbe

Chaucer's version is based on Ovid's Met, iv, 55-166. His rendering is at once close in substance and free and natural in form. The omission of all mention of the mulberry-tree is noteworthy. See Shannon, pp 190 ff. Gower has the same story in the Conf Am, in 1231 ff. For a comparison of his version with Chaucer's see Macaulay, Works of Gower, Oxford, 1899-1902, II, 497 f, and Meech, PMLA, XLVI, 201, n. Professor Meech includes the Ovide Moralisé in a triangular comparison but finds it impossible to determine whether either English version was influenced by the French. The versions of Chaucer and Gower appear to be related, but it is hard to say which poet was the borrower.

707 Semyramis, Semiramis, the mythical queen who was said to have built the walls of Babylon.

719-20 The gossip of the matchmaking women is an addition of Chaucer's.

725 Naso, Publius Ovidius Naso.

735 "Cover [imperative] the coal, and the fire becomes hotter." Cf Tr, ii, 538 f, n.

736 ten so wod, ten times as mad. Cf l 2291, below.

741 deere ymogh a myte, to the slightest extent, see Glossary, s.v. myte. With the phrase, which is rather strangely employed, cf CYT, VIII, 795.

745 The comparison to the confessional is Chaucer's. Ovid has simply "murmure mimmio" (l 70).

762 covered, recovered. Colde destructive, fatal, for this use of NPT, VII, 3256, and n.

785 Nymus, the husband of Semiramis and founder of Niveveh.

797 Yuympled, wearing a covering over her neck and about her face, like the wimple of a nun.

811 with dredful fot, "tumid pede" (l 100). The phrase occurs again in Knt, I, 1479.

917-18 Cf RR, 14145 (not closely parallel).

The Legend of Dido

The main source is Virgil's Aeneid, with incidental use of the Heroides, vii. In the treatment of the character of Dido the influence of Ovid is especially to be recognized. See Shannon, pp 196 ff. The Old French Roman d'Eneas, which combines Virgil and Ovid in a somewhat similar fashion, was probably known to Chaucer and may have been utilized in the legend.

For an earlier rendering by Chaucer of the story of Dido see HF, 151-382.

924 Mantua was Virgil's birthplace.

926 With the figure of the lantern of Dante, Purg, i, 43.

931 For Sinon's stratagem of the wooden horse see Aen, ii, 57-267.

934 Hector's ghost advised Aeneas to take flight (Aen, ii, 270 ff).

936 Ylaoun, Ilum, properly only another name for Troy, but taken by mediæval writers to mean the royal palace or citadel. Cf MLT, II, 289.

939 The death of Priam at the hands of Pyrrhus is related in Aen, ii, 533 ff.

940 Cf Aen, ii, 594 ff.

941 Cf Aen, ii, 723.

945 Cf Aen, ii, 738.

947 He had gone back to seek Creusa. (But Chaucer omits the incident of Creusa's ghost.)

950 ff Chaucer passed rapidly over the contents of Bk iii of the Aeneid.

959 Libie, Libya, on the northern coast of Africa.

958-1102 These lines correspond in general to Aen, i, 305-642.

971 an hunteresse, Venus in the disguise of an huntress.

978-82 From Aen, i, 321-24.

982 Yiukked up, with robe tucked up, "succinctam"

983-93 From Aen , 1, 325-40

994-1014 Cf Aen , 1, 341-414

1005 Sytheo, Sicheus The confusion of c and t is common in MSS The ending in -o is perhaps due to Italian influence of Inf v, 62 "Sicheo"

1022 Cf Aen , 1, 412, 516

1039 The audacity of this comparison is not to be explained away on the ground that Jupiter was in Chaucer's mind or that Virgil compares Dido to Diana Mediæval taste differed from modern in speaking of sacred persons and things Cf SqT, V, 555, and n

1047-60 Cf Aen , 1, 509-612

1048 wende han loren, supposed he had lost

1061-65 From Aen , 1, 613-14

1066-74 From Aen , 1, 588-91

1072 after Venus, taking after Venus, his mother

1086-1102 From Aen , 1, 617-42

1103-27 Chaucer here departs from Virgil and gives the description a decidedly mediæval cast

1104 swolow, probably "whirlpool" though the "mouth" of hell would make good sense

1110 Cf SqT, V, 294

1122 with floreyms newe ybete, together with florins newly struck

1128-49 From Aen , 1, 643-722

1153 With this brief remark Chaucer passes over Virgil's second book

1162-1351 These lines cover the ground of the fourth book of the Aeneid

1170-81 From Aen iv 9-29

1182 coude here good, see ML Epl, II, 1169, n, and Glossary under can

1183 In the Aeneid Anna does not definitely advise against marriage But, as Professor Shannon observes, her long series of rhetorical questions might be taken as indicating opposition

1187 Proverbial, see Haeckel, p 1, no 1

1188-1211 From Aen iv, 129 ff

1191 An huntynng, on hunting, a-hunting (as also in l 1211) The omission of the verb of motion after wol is idiomatic

1198 The comparison to paper was unusual Dafydd ap Gwilym applies it once to the fair skin of a lady ("llw papir," London, 1789, p 298)

1204 This line is nearly the same as KnT, I, 1502

1205 A htel wyr, a small bit

1212-31 From Aen , iv, 154-70

1213 Terms of stimulation and encouragement Go bet, go faster, hurry up, pryke thow, use the spurs, lat gon, let (the dogs) go

1218 ff Chaucer ignores the fact that according to the Aeneid the storm was prearranged by Juno and Venus

1231 gladnesse, perhaps Chaucer mistook Virgil's "letu" (iv, 169) for "letatie" or some form of the adj "laetus" ("letus")

1232-37 Chaucer adds this scene He emphasizes the falseness and fickleness of Æneas, and again ignores, or minimizes the importance of, the intervention of the gods

1242 Virgil's description of Fame, which Chaucer used in HF, 1360 ff is here omitted

1244 On the omission of the subject implied in what precedes see Gen Prol, I, 33, n

1245 Yarbas, Iarbas (Aen , iv, 196)

1254-84 Original with Chaucer

1272 devyses, heraldic decorations

1295-99 Cf Aen , iv, 351-59

1305 what woman, what sort of woman

1310 The sacrifice is in Virgil (iv, 452 ff), the saints' shrines (halwes) are Chaucer's mediæval addition

1311-24 There is little of all this in Virgil

1323 The appeal of pregnancy is suggested by Ovid, though Virgil intimates that there was no child

1331 Lavinie, Lavinia, (Aen , vii, 359) For the form, cf HF, 458, and n

1332 On the cloth and the sword see Aen , iv, 648 and 646

1338-40 From Aen , iv, 651-53

1346 hure norce, Barce, the nurse of Sicheus (Aen , iv, 632)

1352 myn auctour, Ovid The lettre is based upon Heroides, vii 1-8 Ll 1357 and 1360 are so closely paralleled in Filippo's translation of Ovid that it appears probable that Chaucer consulted the Italian version See PMLA, XLV, 114-15

1355 f Proverbial, cf PF, 342, n

The Legend of Hypsipyle and Medea

For the stories of Hypsipyle and Medea Chaucer went to Ovid's Metamorphoses, vii and his Heroides, vi and xi and to Guido Delle Colonne's Historia Trojana, Bk 1 He made most use of Guido He seems incidentally to have consulted the Argonautica of Valerius Flaccus, which he cites by name and he may also have used Statius Thebaid, v, and Hyginus, Fables, xiv and xv For detailed comparisons see Shannon, pp 208 ff The character of Medea, which (as Professor Shannon observes) bears some resemblance to that of Criseyde, was particularly influenced by Ovid's portrayal of her in the Heroides

1368-95 The introductory lines on Jason are not in the sources With ll 1371-72 may be compared Dante's Inf , xviii, 85, 91 ff

1371 releymyng, enticement, used primarily of calling back a hawk

1383 The figure of the horn possibly comes from Inf , xix, 5, where it refers to the public crying of the misdeeds of condemned criminals But the phrase Have at thee suggests that Chaucer had in mind rather the hunter's horn, sounded to start the pursuit of the game

1389 et, esteth (contr pres)

1396 Guido is clearly the right reading here, and not Ovyde. The Historia Trojana begins with the story of Jason, and Chaucer follows it, at least as far as l 1455

1397 Pelleus, Guido's spelling ("Peleus"), properly Pelias

1398 Eson, Aeson, the father of Jason

1416 "Without incurring blame in the accomplishment of his purpose"

1425 Colcos, Colchis. Though not really an island it is so called ("insula") by Guido

1438 Oetes, Guido's form for Aetes, king of Colchis and father of Medea

1453 Argus, the builder of the Argo

1457 The Argonautica of Valerius Flaccus, Bk 1, contains a long list of the Argonauts. Possibly Chaucer took this reference at second hand from Dares (De Exeicido Trojae Historia, 1) "sed qui vult eos cognoscere, Argonautas legat". But the accurate citation of the title supports the theory that he knew Valerius Flaccus at first hand, and the influence of the Argonautica is perhaps to be recognized also in HF, 1572 and Tr, v, 8. On the whole question see Shannon, pp 340 ff

1459 Philotetes, Guido's spelling for Philoctetes

1463 Lemnon, Lemnos. Cf Heroides, vi, 50, 117, 136

1467 Ysyphele, Hypsipyle, daughter of Thoas and queen of Lemnos. The account of her which follows contains circumstances not derived from Ovid and not in agreement with the narratives of Statius, Valerius Flaccus, or Lygnius. Chaucer may have invented them. He characteristically develops the rôle of Hercules

1479 In the ancient tradition the messenger was a woman (Iphinoe, according to Valerius Flaccus, ii, 327). The Lemnian women had killed all the men on the island except Thoas, whom Hypsipyle saved

1509 Cf Argonautica, ii, 351

1524 With Chaucer's use of Hercules as an ally and messenger of Jason, which is not paralleled in the authorities, Professor Shannon compares the part played by Achates in the story of Dido in the Aeneid. The substitution of a male messenger in ll 1479 ff, above, he suggests may be due to the fact that Chaucer had the same incident in mind

1526 ff This is a conventional description of a courtly lover. Cf, for closely similar phraseology, NPT, VII, 2913 ff

1529 The "three points" follow in ll 1530-33

1538 "Would God that I had given my blood and flesh, provided that I might still live, if only he had a worthy wife". This seems to mean "I would gladly give my flesh and blood to get him a worthy wife, if only I could live to see the outcome"

1546 To come to hous upon, to become familiar with 1558 Th'origynal, probably Heroides, vi, which is the letter referred to in l 1564. But it remains uncertain how much knowledge Chaucer had of the other accounts mentioned above

1580-1555 The account here is mainly based upon Guido's Historia, Bk ii

1582 Cf Guido, "scut appetit materia semper formam". But in Guido the application is made to the dissoluteness of woman

1590 Jacontos, Iaconites

1603-06 The description of Jason may be reminiscent of Dante's Inf, xviii, 85 ff 1609 as seems here to be employed in the unusual causal sense, "inasmuch as," "since", perhaps, however, it means "as if". For the reference to Fortune, or fate, cf Her, xii, 35

1661 Creon's daughter was named Creusa. See Her, xii, 53-54

1667 vassellage, prowess (here used ironically)

1670 Cf Her, xii, particularly ll 11 ff. Here again certain of Chaucer's phrases (ll 1673, 1675) point to the use of Filippo's Italian translation

The Legend of Lucretia

Chaucer refers both to Lavy (i, 57-59) and to Ovid (Fasti, ii, 685-852), but seems to have made use of the latter only. He probably cited Lavy merely for the authority of his name, as in the Physician's Tale, where the actual source was the Roman de la Rose. For a detailed comparison of the authorities see Shannon, pp 220 ff

1680-93 These lines form Chaucer's introduction to the story

1682 the laste kyng Tarquinius, Tarquinius Superbus

1690 The grete Austyn, St Augustine, who comments on the story in his De Civitate Dei, i, 19. Oure legende (l 1689) is doubtless the Legenda Aurea, which because of its familiar use would be not unnaturally accompanied by the "domestic our". The reference is wholly in keeping with the treatment of St Augustine by Jacobus Januensis

1694 From this point Chaucer closely follows Ovid, Fasti, ii, 721. Ardea, capital of the Rutuli, in Latium

1696 and lytel wroughten, and accomplished little

1698 "Tarquinius iuuenis", Tarquinius Sextus, son of Tarquinius Superbus. He did not occupy the throne

1705 Colatyn, not directly named in Ovid's account. Chaucer may have taken the name from Lavy or Augustine

1710 The location at Rome instead of Collatia may be due to a misunderstanding of Ovid, who is not very clear. Lavy is explicit about Collatia

1721 oure bok, Ovid, who mentions the wool at l 742

1725 how shal it be, apparently in the sense, "How is it said to be?". Cf the use of "soll" in German, and see HF, 2053, n.

1729 This line (as Skeat noted) is possibly due to a misunderstanding of Ovid's ll 751-52 "sed enim temerarius ille Est meus et stricto quolibet ense ruit"

1771 "Or an evil inclination, with malice"

1773 For this proverbial expression, which is in the source (l 782), and occurs in numerous forms, cf Tr, iv, 600-01, and Thop, VII 830-32 n

1778 ff The statement that Tarquin came secretly into the house of Lucrece is not consistent with either Ovid or Livy Professor Shannon suggests that Chaucer may have wished to emphasize her innocence

1781 stalke, move stealthily cf KnT I, 1479, CIT, V, 525, and Shakespeare's Lucrece l 365

1812-26 These lines are Chaucer's, Ovid says simply "Succubunt famae victa puella metu" (l 810)

1839-49 This also does not exactly correspond to anything in Ovid Ll 1847-49 are rather closely paralleled in Livy (i, 58), and perhaps afford the strongest argument for the view that Chaucer made use of that version of the story

1841 f Proverbial, cf Tr, iii, 114, n

1871 Lucretia's canonization here is not simply part of the device of the Legend As Skeat observes, it was probably suggested to Chaucer by the fact that Ovid tells her tale in the Fasti under the date (Feb 24) which was commemorated as "Fuga Tarquini Superbi" Thus she appeared to have a place on the calendar, like a Christian saint Professor Shannon notes further, as affording a kind of suggestion of the veneration of saints, that Brutus took oath by Lucretia's spirit, which would become a divinity to him ("perque tuos manes, qui mihi numen erunt") to drive out the Tarquins

1881 The reference is to the Syro-Phoenician woman (Matt xv, 28), unless Chaucer confused her story with that of the centurion (Matt viii, 10, Luke vii, 9)

The Legend of Ariadne

The sources have been pretty definitely ascertained The beginning is from Ovid, Met, vii, 456-58, viii 6 ff, and the conclusion from his Heroides, x For the main narrative Bech (Angl, V, 337 ff) and Skeat long ago noted parallels in Plutarch's Theseus, of which Chaucer might have known a Latin version, in Boccaccio's De Gen Deor, xi, 27, 29, 30, in Aen, vi, 20-30, and in Hyginus, Fables, xli-xliii (Cf also C G Child, MLN, XI, 482 ff, and Shannon, pp 228 ff) But Mr Meech (PMLA, XLV, 116 ff, and especially, XLVI, 182 ff, both cited here below by pages) has shown that most of Chaucer's modifications and expansions of Ovid's narrative can be explained by the Ovide Moralisé or Filippo's Italian translation of the Heroides (the introduction to the Epistle of Phaedra) To the former source he ascribes, besides various details, the account of the Athenian tribute and of Theseus' adventures in Crete, the introduction of Phaedra, and "the general content of some of the speeches of Theseus and the daughters of Minos" From the latter he would derive the reference to Daedalus, the betrothal of Phaedra to Hippolytus, and the drowning of Aegeus Various details, as Mr Meech suggests, may have come from glosses on Ovid He is perhaps too positive in excluding all influence of Boccaccio's De Gen Deor A contemporary source for the prison scene was recognized by Lowes in the Teseide (PMLA, XX, 503 ff) See the note to ll 1960 ff On the use of Catullus, suggested by Professor Shannon but highly improbable, see the note to ll 1891 f

1886 The confusion of Minos, the judge of the lower world, with Minos, the king of Crete, who was usually regarded as his grandson, has been traced to the De Gen Deor, xi, 26 Mr Meech (p 185) notes that the identification is made in numerous glosses on the Metamorphoses, and suggests that Chaucer found it in his copy

1887 The mention of the lot was perhaps due to Aen, vi, 431

1891 f Professor Shannon (pp 368 f) suggests that the idea of retribution sent upon Theseus by the gods (which is not clearly expressed by Ovid), may have come from Catullus, Carmen lxxv, 188-248, a poem which he thinks also influenced HF, 269-85 But it is Minos, not Theseus, upon whom the gods are here said to take vengeance and Chaucer does not develop at all Catullus's idea of poetic justice in the fate of Theseus See J A S McPeck MLN, XLVI, 299 ff (quoting G L Kittredge) Mr McPeck shows also (pp 295 ff) that the passage in the House of Fame is sufficiently explained by other parallels in Ovid and the Roman de la Rose Chaucer's knowledge of Catullus must be regarded as doubtful

1895 For the hundred cities of Crete cf Her, x, 67 and Aen, iii, 106 Possibly Chaucer had in mind the mention of them in the Filocolo (I, 297), where they are immediately associated with Minos

1896 ff Cf Ovid, Met, vii, 456 ff According to the ancient authorities Androgeus was killed because of envy of his victory in the Pan-Athenaic games Chaucer implies that it was from jealousy of his attainments in philosophy, an idea which he may have derived either from glosses or from the Ovide Moralisé The statement in the De Gen Deor, xi, 26 f, cited by Child (MLN, XI, 484) and Shannon (p 231), is not so explicit See Meech, pp 186 f, where reference is made to another account of the same tradition by Geoffroi de Vinsauf in his Documentum de Modo et Arte Dictandi et Versificandi (ed Faral, Les Arts Poétiques, etc., Paris, 1924, p 269)

1900-21 Here Chaucer abbreviates Met., viii, 6-151. As Mr Meech observes (p 187), he reshapes the story to make Scylla a good woman.

1902 Alcatheo, the citadel of Megara, from Alcatous, founder of the city. The name occurs in Met., vii, 443.

1904 Nysus, king of Megara, had a daughter, Scylla, who became enamored of Minos and in order to gain his love cut off the purple lock of her father's hair, on which the safety of his kingdom depended. Chaucer omits the details of the transformation of Nysus and Scylla.

1919-20 Perhaps due to the Ovide Moralisé (quoted by Meech, p 188).

1922-47 At this point Chaucer departs from Ovid. Many of the deviations can be explained by the De Gen Deorum. But they are also paralleled in Machaut's version of the story in his Jugement dou Roy de Navarre, ll 2707 ff., and the Ovide Moralisé which has been shown to be Machaut's source, and was probably Chaucer's. On the French version see de Boer, Rom., XLIII, 342 f., Lowes, PMLA, XXXIII, 320 ff., Meech, pp 189 ff. The full text of the Ovide Moralisé is not yet available in print for comparison, but Mr Meech gives extensive citations.

1928 The monster was the Minotaur, half bull and half man, that dwelt in the Labyrinth. Cf Met., viii, 155 ff.

1932 every thridde yeer, the usual statement is that seven children were sent yearly, and thus perhaps underlies l 1926. Chaucer may have got his idea of the three-year period from a misunderstanding of Ovid ('tertia sors annis domut repetita novenis,' Met., viii, 171), or of Servius on Aen., vi, 14. The Jugement dou Roy de Navarre makes the tribute annual, in the Ovide Moralisé the period is left indefinite.

1935 The statement about casting lots also appears to rest ultimately upon a misunderstanding of the line of Ovid just cited. The word "sors" there means "tribute," but it was misunderstood as "lot" in some of the glosses, and this conception reappears in various mediæval writings, including the Ovide Moralisé. See Meech, pp 190-194, f.

1944 Egeus, Aegæus, king of Athens.

1960 ff. In this device of Theseus's imprisonment, the entrance of Ariadne into the action, and the proposal that Theseus shall enter her service in disguise, Chaucer seems clearly to have been following the account of Palamon and Arcite in Tes., iii, 11 ff. (Lowes, PMLA, XX, 803 ff.) Cf also KnT, I, 1056 ff.

1962 foreyne, probably "privy," the ordinary sense of chambre foreyne. Skeat argues for the sense of "outer chamber" but this lacks support. Theseus was apparently imprisoned "in an oubliette that may have served also as the pit for the garderobe tower, the upper part of which belonged to the princesses' suite." See J W Draper, Est, LX, 250 f.

1966 All but two MSS here read Of Athenes, for which Skeat, on the basis of MSS Addit 9832 and R 3 19 only, reads In mochel murthe. It is likely that the ship was Chaucer's own, and that it was due, as Lowes has suggested, to the fact that the description here is really based upon the Teseide.

1969 Adryane, Ariadne. For the spelling cf HF, 407 and ML Prol, II, 87.

1985 Note the mixture of the two constructions I am woe and Woe is me.

2004 The device of the ball of wax or pitch which occurs also in Conf Am, v 5349, is derived from the commentators on Ovid (Meech, p 118, n). Bell compared the story of Daniel and the dragon (Dan xiv, 26, in the Vulgate, or Bel and the Dragon, 27, in the Apocrypha).

2010 ff. The gayler does not appear in the Metamorphoses or the Ovide Moralisé. Mr Meech (pp 117 f.) suggests that he was Daedalus, the builder of the Labyrinth, who according to a tradition not recorded in Ovid, gave Theseus "instruments for conquering the beast and the intricacies of its dwelling." The reference to the matter in Filippo's preface is not explicit, and Chaucer must have had some other source. The escape by ship may have been his invention, for according to the ancient tradition Daedalus fled from Crete on wings. See Met., viii, 183 ff.

2012 the hous, the labyrinth.

2064 shames deth, shameful death. Cf KnT, I, 1912, and n., and Tr, ii, 13.

2066 ff. This punishment was particularly associated with traitors. See the striking passage about Donegild in MLT, II, 784, and n.

2070 other degre, higher rank than that of page.

2075 a twenty, cf a ten or twelve, SqT, V, 383, A certeyn frankes, ShpT, VII, 334, and n. The idiom does not seem to be restricted to indefinite round numbers.

2099 youre sone, Hippolytus. This suggestion seems hardly consistent with the statement in l 2075 that Theseus was only twenty-three. Skeat thought Ariadne was jesting. But there is mediæval authority for the betrothal. Cf De Gen Deor xi, 29. Mr Meech (p 117, n.) cites also Giovanni dei Bonisgnori's paraphrase of the Metamorphoses (viii, 11), and Filippo's double preface to the Epistles of Ariadne and Phaedra. The incident is not found in the Ovide Moralisé.

2122 of Athenes duchesse, Theseus is called by Chaucer duc Of Athenes (KnT, I, 860 f.).

2130 And saved, and (have) saved. The construction changes.

2145 geth, goeth, the archaic form corresponding to AS "gæp."

2146-49 Cf Her, x, 71-72, 103, Met, viii, 172-73.

2155 Ennopyge, Oenopia, another name for Aegina Aeacus, the king was an old ally of the Athenians Cf Met vii, 472-89

2163 yle usually said to be Naxos But by Chaucer's account Theseus had passed Aegina For the description see Ovid Her, x, 59 ff, 83 ff The end of the legend is taken mainly from that epistle

2171-74 Cf De Gen Deor, x 49, xi, 29

2178 The reference to Aegeus's death might come from De Gen Deor (x 48) or from Filippo's preface See Meech pp 118-19 Chaucer does not tell the familiar incident of the black sail

2185-2217 Chaucer here follows rather closely Her, x The exact correspondences are noted by Shannon, pp 255 ff and Meech p 116 n

2186 From Her, x 12 Cf also Tr v, 223-24, where Chaucer follows Fil, v 20

2208-09 A mistranslation of Her, x, 53-54

2223-24 "In the sign of Taurus" clearly means when the sun is in that sign for the constellation Corone Borealis is almost opposite Taurus and comes to the meridian with Scorpio Similar instances of roughly locating a constellation are given by Tatlock (MLN, XXIX, 100-01) For the story that Bacchus out of pity placed the crown of Ariadne in the heavens see Ovid, Fasti iii, 461-516, and Met, viii, 176-82

The Legend of Philomela

The primary source is Ovid's Met, vi 424 ff Alongside of this Chaucer probably used the Ovide Moralisé (See Lowes, PMLA, XXXIII, 302 ff many of whose parallels are questioned by Shannon, pp 259 ff) The French story in question was identified by Gaston Paris (Rom, x, XIII, 399) as the Muance de la hupe et de l'aronde et del rossignol of Chrétien de Troyes, incorporated by the author of the Ovide Moralisé It has been separately edited under the title Philomena by de Boer, Paris, 1909 Chaucer used Ovid's Latin as the basis of his narrative supplementing it at many points by vivid details introduced from the French, some of the more significant of these additions are noted below The psychological discussion and elaboration peculiar to Chrétien Chaucer did not take over

Gower's version (Conf Am v 5551 ff) shows no use of the French text

The form of the name with n — Philomena for Philomela — is common to Chaucer and Chrétien, but it was also found in mediæval MSS of Ovid

2228 In MS B the words 'Deus dator formarum' follow the title They may come from some unidentified source which Chaucer was translating in the opening lines The general Platonic doctrine of the passage he might have derived from Boethius in met, 9, or from RR, 15995 ff, cf also

RR, 16729-34 (which Langlois traces to the De Planctu of Alanus de Insulis)

2236 From this world, regarded as the center of the universe, up to the outermost heaven (the Primum Mobile)

2244 At this point begins the account based on Ovid

2247 Pandion, king of Athens

2250 For the spelling Imeneus cf RR, 22004 (ed Michel)

2252 The reference to the Furies is in Ovid (l 430)

2261 say nat longe, had not seen for a long time

2291 For Beaute, the better supported reading, which corresponds to Ovid's "Divivitor forma" MSS FB have bounte (bounde), with which Professor Lowes compares Chrétien, 'Ne fu pas mauns sage que bele' (l 172) Tuo so ryche twice as rich Cf l 736 above

2307 In saying that Pandion suspected no malice Chaucer follows Chrétien's account (ll 544 ff) Ovid says "timutque suae praesagia mentis" (l 510)

2350 This statement that Philomela had learned to embroider in her youth is derived or inferred, from Chrétien It appears, at an earlier point in the French poem (ll 188 ff) in a long description of which Chaucer used only this significant detail

2352 radevore is uncertain both in meaning and in derivation Skeat's explanation that it comes from "ras de Vaur," stuff of Vaur is open to the twofold objection that "ras" is not known before the sixteenth century and that the proper form of the place-name seems to have been Lavaur The final -e, required by the rime with gore is also unexplained Lowes, who discusses the word in PMLA, XXXIII, 314, n, is even doubtful whether it refers to a stuff or to a design He also expresses uncertainty about the meaning of stol usually interpreted as "frame"

2360 a stamyn large (Ovid l 576, has "stamma") a large piece of stamyn or woollen cloth such as was used for shirts Cf Parst, X, 1051

2361 ff The description of the embroidery was probably added from Chrétien (ll 1120 ff), but his version is much fuller

2366 In Chrétien the messenger is a woman and in some MSS Ovid has the feminine pronoun 'illa' (Met, vi, 579) But, as Professor Shannon (pp 279 f) points out "ille" has the better authority and was doubtless the reading followed by Chaucer

2362 ff Chaucer omits the account of the vengeance taken on Tereus and of the transformation of Progne and Philomela

The Legend of Phyllis

Most of the material comes from the Heroides, ii But apparently both Chaucer and Gower, who tells the story in Conf Am iv 731 ff., used some other source. Certain features thought by Professors Child and Shannon to have been derived from Boccaccio's De Gen Deorum are held by Mr Meech (pp 119 ff) to be due rather to Filippò's translation.

2395 Cf Matt vii, 17, also Mh. Prol., VII, 1956, and n

2398 Demophon, usually known as Demophoon, son of Theseus and Phaedra

2400 The reference here and in ll 2446 ff to the treachery of Theseus is due to Ovid's allusion to the desertion of Ariadne (Her. ii, 75-76), which is made more explicit in Filippò's translation

2404 ff. The statement that Demophoon came to Rhodope on his return from the siege of Troy may have been derived from Filippò's introduction to the Letter. It is recorded also in introductions to the Latin Epistle and in the De Gen Deorum. For references see Meech, pp 119-20

2420 For wod, for mad, "like mad." On this use of for with an adjective see KnT, I, 2142, n 2422 Neither Thorus (the MS reading) nor Chorus (Thynne's reading) is known as a sea-god. Skeat suggested, very plausibly, that Chaucer was writing from misunderstanding or confused recollection of Aen. v, 823 ff.

Et senior Glauci chorus Inousque Palaeomon

Tritonesque cita Phorcique exercitus omnis, Laeva tenent Thetus et Melite Panopeaque virgo

2423 Phyllis's lond was Thrace, the ancient authorities disagree as to the name of her father. Both Chaucer and Gower make her the daughter of Lagurgus (Lycurgus), perhaps on the authority of Boccaccio, De Gen Deor. xi, 25. But Mr Meech (pp 119 f) shows that the same account appears in glosses on Ovid and in Filippò's preface to his Italian version of the letter. The idea may have originally arisen by inference from Her. i, 111

2434 chevisaunce, apparently here in the sense of "provision, substance"

2438 Rodopeya, the country near Rhodope, a mountain range in Thrace

2448 "As doth Reynard the fox, so doth the fox's son." For the general idea that animals stick to the nature of their kind cf ManCT, IX, 160 ff, and RR, 14027 ff

2496 From this point onward Chaucer follows Her. ii. Mr Meech shows (pp 120 ff) that there are verbal correspondences with Filippò's Italian translation in ll 2511, 2522, 2524, 2528, 2544 ff

2536 Ovid represents the ancestors as sculptured but Mr Meech cites two glosses which refer rather to painting. Ovid's "Aegidas," descendants of Aegaeus, Chaucer renders thyme olde auncestres, which corresponds to Filippò's translation ("tuoi antich")

The Legend of Hypermnestra

The main source is again Ovid's Heroides, xiv. But Chaucer confines his story to Hypermnestra and Lynceus disregarding the murder of the other brothers. He also departs from his original in a number of details. Some of these have parallels in Boccaccio's De Gen Deor. ii, 22, but Mr Meech (pp 123 ff) argues that they are all derived rather from Filippò's translation of Ovid.

2563 ff. Danaus and Aegyptus were twin brothers. The former had fifty daughters, the latter fifty sons. Fearing his nephews, Danaus fled with his daughters to Argos, but the sons of Aegyptus followed and asked for the girls in marriage. Danaus consented, but gave each daughter a dagger with which to kill her husband. Hypermnestra, however, spared her husband, who killed Danaus. In Chaucer's version Aegyptus and Danaus change places. The forms Danao and Lyno seem to be due to Filippò's Italian, though "Lino," for "Lynceus" also occurs in Lat. MSS of Ovid, and both forms are given in the De Gen Deor. Egyste (Egistes, l 2600) and Thypermystre may well enough come from either the Italian or the Latin.

The opening lines correspond closely to Filippò's translation.

2575 Filippò also says that Hypermnestra was the youngest of many daughters.

2576 ff. The nativity here described seems to have been introduced by Chaucer. For a detailed discussion of it, with citation of authorities, see Curry, pp 164 ff. To summarize briefly, the influence of Venus accounts for Hypermnestra's beauty and for the partial suppression of the malice of Mars, the conjunction with Jupiter caused her gentleness and fidelity, and the unfavorable position of Saturn was ultimately the influence that brought about her death.

2580 Wurdes, the AS "wyrd" meant "fate", the Middle English plural wurdes was occasionally used to translate Lat "Parcae" 2582 The forms of these adjectives are puzzling. Skeat's text, following some of the MSS, reads Pitouse, sadde, wise and trewe. Trewe is properly entitled to its final -e from AS, and wise (properly wis from AS "wis") seems to have acquired a Mid Eng -e (perhaps from the weak form), which accounts for the modern pronunciation of wise. But pitous and sad regularly had no -e in the strong nominative singular. Skeat's suggestion that the -e here is due to the treatment of the adjectives like French feminine forms is very dubious. The trisyllabic form pyetous (or piteous) keeps the rhythm without requiring any irregular -e's.

2584 Venus, Jupiter, Mars, and Saturna are here the planets rather than the gods.

2593 Mars his venum. This form of the possessive is familiar in Elizabethan English. On its development see L. Kellner, His.

Outlines of Engl Syntax, London 1892 §308

2597 For the association of Saturn with imprisonment see KnT I, 2457

2602 was spared no lynage, no consanguinity was a bar to marriage Chaucer seems to have had no authority for saying that the union was within the prohibited degrees

2603 Ovid tells of the marriage of the fifty pairs of cousins

2610 Verbal resemblances between Chaucer's poem and Filippo's Italian are noted by Mr Meech (pp 124 ff) in ll 2610-12, 2616, 2682 2706

2629 "Since my first shirt was made for me" a familiar formula, cf KnT, I, 1566, and n

2634 after thy wiser, according to thy superior in wisdom Cf l 2645

2638 This line has been held to come from Dante Inf vii, 64, but the parallelism is not striking unless good be emended to good

2648 Cf Tr, iii, 1200

2649 Ovid reads, in modern texts "mentemque calor corpusque relinquat" Chaucer's translation renders the variant "color," as does also Filippo's

2654 The knif corresponds to Filippo's "coltello" rather than to Ovid's "ensis" Here Chaucer is also in agreement with Boccaccio in both the De Gen Deor (ii, 22) and the De Clar Mul (ch xiii)

2656 ff The dream is not mentioned by Ovid Professor Shannon (p 294) holds Chaucer to have followed the De Gen Deor, but Mr Meech (p 126) shows that the information is supplied by Filippo's prefatory note

2668 ff Ovid (Her, xiv 42) makes only general mention of soporific wines With Chaucer's lines of KnT, I, 1472 Professor Emerson (MP, XVII, 288) suggested that he used the plural opies, because he knew of the two kinds of opium, meconum (μηκωνιον) and opium proper (opos, οπιον)

2694 devel, this idiomatic expletive has no correspondent in Ovid

2697 nedes-cost, necessarily (lit, "by a choice of necessity") Cf KnT, I, 1477

2705 The details of the escape seem to be Chaucer's addition

2723 It is a little surprising that the legend should have been left incomplete, when the story was finished and a very few lines would have sufficed to make the application Possibly the ending was written and lost More probably Chaucer left it to be added when he should continue the series

Short Poems

The poems here brought together are miscellaneous in character and have little in common except that they are short They also belong obviously to different periods of Chaucer's life But very few can be exactly dated and the order in which they are printed is only approximately chronological Information about the MS copies and early prints of each piece will be found in the Textual Notes A convenient table of the MSS and early editions showing which of the short poems (and also which of the longer works of Chaucer) are contained in each is given by Professor Koch, Chaucer's Kleinere Dichtungen pp 17 ff Most of the authorities for the texts have been made accessible in the Chaucer Society's prints of the Minor Poems (Series 1, Nos 21-24, 37-61, 77) Of modern editions of the poems (or of selections) the following deserve special mention J Koch A Critical Edition of some of Chaucer's Minor Poems, Berlin, 1883 Skeat, Minor Poems, Oxford, 1888, afterwards included in the Oxford Chaucer, the Globe edition, London, 1898, in which the short pieces were edited by Mr Heath, J B Bilderbeck, Selections from Chaucer's Minor Poems, London, 1895, O F Emerson, Poems of Chaucer New York, 1911, H N MacCracken, The College Chaucer, New Haven, 1913, M Kaluza, Chaucer-Handbuch für Studierende, Leipzig, 1919, and J Koch, Chaucers Kleinere Dichtungen Heidelberg, 1928 There is also an important discussion of the short poems in Brunsdorff's Chaucer Tradition The present editor has made use of all of these works, but he is especially indebted, both in his textual notes and his commentary, to the editions of Skeat, Heath, and Koch, and to Professor Brunsdorff's volume

An A B C

The A B C is translated from Le Pelerinage de la Vie Humaine by Guillaume Deguileville It is ascribed to Chaucer in four copies Lydgate also testified in his version of Deguileville, that Chaucer made such a translation, and left a space for it in his own text But the gap was never filled The piece has various titles in the MSS (See the Textual Notes) It is called Chaucer's A B C in the Fairfax MS (A b c) and by Speght, who has the following heading in his 1602 edition (fol 347) "Chaucers A B C called La Priere de nostre Dame made as some say, at the request of Blanch, Duchesse of Lancaster, as a praier for her priuat vse, being a woman in her religion very deuout" For the statement with regard to the Duchess Blanche no confirmation has been found If it is true, the poem must be dated between 1359 and 1369 In any case it is probably to be regarded as one of the earliest poems of Chaucer that are preserved It is thus noteworthy as a very early specimen of the English decasyllabic line See the comments of Sir G Young, An English Prosody on Inductive Lines, Cambridge, Eng., 1928, p 16 The French original, which was written about 1330, was published in the One-Text

Print of the Chaucer Society, pp 84 ff., and again in Skeat's Oxford Chaucer, I, 261 ff

4 For the familiar phrase "flower of flowers," which is not in Degulleville, cf LGW ProlF, 185

14 Cf MLT II, 852

15 theesene, the seven deadly sins

20 accoun, legal action, accusation For the idea of the stanza comparison has been suggested with I John in 20-21

24 Nere merci., were it not for mercy (lit if mercy were not, did not exist) Cf I 180, below

26 n'art on the use of ne after words indicating doubt, fear etc., see Tr, II 716 ff n

29 "Were the bow of justice and of wrath now bent" — as it was before the Incarnation For the figure, cf Ps vii, 12

38 The biblical figure of fruit is added by Chaucer Cf Rom vi, 4

50 bitter, Fr. "amere" There is here an allusion to the association of the name "Mara" with the Hebrew "mārāh," bitterness 54-56 The conception of hell as a place of stench recurs in HF, 1654 Cf Dante, Inf., vi, 12, vii, 127, xi, 5 The idea was common in mediæval literature See the examples cited by T Spencer in Speculum, II, 191 f.

59-61 Not closely paralleled in De Gulleville Cf Col., II 14

73 The high festivals of the Church are written in the Calendar with illuminated letters

81 De Gulleville, "La douceur de toy pourtraire Je ne pus" Perhaps Chaucer's MS read "douleur"

84-86 "Let not the foe of us all make his boast that he has, by his wiles of misfortune, convicted [the soul] that you have so dearly purchased"

89-91 For this familiar symbol of the virgin birth of PrT, VII, 468 The construction here appears to be confused

100 melodye or glee Chaucer took the Fr "arelire" in the sense of "melody," though in the original it means "money-box"

109 Cf Luke I, 38 (Vulg, "ancilla Domini")

110 "To offer our petition"

116 to uerre Fr "pour guerre" it was not in hostility that he wrought such a miracle for us

132 Reading and interpretation uncertain. See the textual note

149-50 Cf Gen III, 18

159 Chaucer introduces the English term, as in King's Bench, Common Bench

161 Xrustus The initial here, as in the French, is of course really the Greek Chi and not X

163 Longnus, more commonly called Longinus, the blind centurion who was supposed to have pierced the side of Christ Cf the Legenda Aurea, ch xlvi (ed Graesse, p 202) There is no reference to Longinus in De Gulleville

169 Cf Gen xxi Heb xi 19

177 Zech xiii, 1

The Complaint unto Pity

Entitled A Complaint of Pitee by Shirley in MS Harley 78, and attributed by him to Chaucer There is no conclusive evidence of date, but all the indications point to early composition perhaps at the beginning of Chaucer's Italian period See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes to the Complaint to his Lady, immediately following

The source if Chaucer had one is unknown Skeat suggested that the notion of personifying Pity came from Statius and he compared the struggle between Pity and Cruelty in the Thebaid xi But the parallel is remote In Statius Pietas checks the Furies in their attempt to bring on war and in Chaucer Pity is concerned with the affairs of love And a lady's Pity or Mercy toward her lover was commonly personified in the allegorical verse of Chaucer's age For instances where it is represented as destroyed or dead see Flügel in Angl. XXIII, 196 Professor Brusendorff (p 270), on the evidence of rather dubious parallel passages, argued for the influence of Dante and Petrarch

The Complaint unto Pity, like the Book of the Duchess, is held by some to refer to Chaucer's personal experience in love On this interpretation see the introduction and Explanatory Notes to the Book of the Duchess

The meter is the familiar rime royal, a seven-line stanza riming ababbcc The Pity may be the earliest example of this verse-form in English The general structure of the poem a narrative introduction followed by the Bulle (or complaint proper), resembles that of the Mars and the Aeneida and Arcite

14 For the figure of Pity "buried in an herte" Professor Brusendorff compared Petrarch's Canzoniere, Sonn, cxx But the conception of the death of Pity was not unfamiliar See the article of Flügel cited above

15 the herse, the bier The body is conceived as lying in state

37 ff The figures named are personifications of various qualities of the lady It is of no use to appeal to them since Pity is dead within her

54 put up, put by

57 The Bulle is divided into three terns or groups of three stanzas, each group ending with the same rime (seyne, l 77 peyne, l 98 peyne, l 119)

In this reference to the humble and reverential character of Pity Skeat finds a hint of the Thebaid, xi, 493, 467 But, as already remarked, the whole comparison with Statius's Pietas seems far-fetched

59 Sheweth, the word regularly employed in petitions. For illustrations from documents in Chancery and rolls of Parliament see Angl., XXIII, 204 Cf also PhysT, VI, 179

60 servant, apart from its general suitability as applied to a petitioner, the term is especially appropriate here in the sense of "lover"

64 ff The allegory here is not quite clear. The conception seems to be that Cruelty, under color of Womanly Beauty (i.e., in the lady's guise), has made alliance with Bounty, Gentleness, and Courtesy and usurped the place of Pity, which ought rightly to dwell in Gracious Beauty

76 "If Beauty and Bounty are not accompanied by Pity the world is lost"

92 Herenus quene For the variant readings see the textual note Herenus, which has the best MS support is usually taken to be an error or corruption for Hernes, the Erinyes, the three Furies (cf Tr, iv, 22). Chaucer's reason for calling Pity the queen of the Furies is uncertain. Skeat took it to mean that she alone was supposed to be able to control them, and he referred again to the struggle between Pietas and Tisiphone in Statius. Professor Lowes (MP, XIV, 723) has sought an explanation in the Inferno, ix, 44 ff, where Proserpine is represented as the "queen of everlasting lamentation," and the Furies ("le feroci Erine") as her handmaids. In Tr, iv, 789, he points out, the Elysian Fields are called the feld of pite and Chaucer may thus have connected the figure of Pity with the queen of Elysium. The association of ideas is possible, though by no means obvious. Flugel (Angl, XXIII, 205) rejected Herenus altogether and favored the emendation my heries quene. The Globe edition reads serenous, Professor Liddell's emendation. Koch adopts the reading vertuous (MSS Harl 78 and 7578, Add 34360)

110 Cf Anel, 182

119 This repeats l 2 Cf Anel 211, 350, also Wom Nob, 1 f, 31 f

A Complainnt to his Lady

In Shurley's MS Harley 78 and in MS Add 34360, which is apparently derived from it, this poem is entitled The Balade of Pytee and treated as a continuation of the Complainnt unto Pity. The two complaints are similar in thought and spirit. The second certainly, and perhaps the first, shows Italian influence, and both may be dated with probability very early in Chaucer's Italian period. Cf Lowes, MP, XIV, 724

The Complainnt to his Lady is a series of metrical experiments. Indeed it may be regarded as three distinct poems (or drafts of poems), and Professor Brusendorff (p 273) would have the parts printed separately, entitled simply Complainnts, and numbered I-III. But since there is a certain continuity in the thought, the traditional arrangement and Skeat's title have been here retained. The first two stanzas are in rime royal. These are followed by a passage (really two fragments) in terza rima, the earliest known example of that meter in English. Then the last division is in ten-line stanzas (also apparently the first instances in the language) resembling in structure the nine-line stanza of the Complaint in Aeneas, the poems are also occasionally similar in language and thought.

The subject of all the fragments, like that of the Complainnt unto Pity is unrequited love.

A number of emendations and conjectural restorations sometimes of whole lines, have been made by previous editors. For references to them see the Textual Notes.

18 The construction is doubtful. Apparently the sentence means, "And yet, though I were to die, I cannot tear it (i.e., love) out of my sorrowful heart." Skeat's emendation fro for yrt (or and) may be right.

31 Cf Anel, 222

37 my swete fo, cf l 58 below, Anel, 272, Tr, v, 228 and for the use of oxymoron in general, Tr i 411, n.

40 Cf KnT, I, 1565

43-45 For this commonplace reflection of Pity 99 ff, PF, 90-91, Bo, m, pr 3

I mis, Chaucer very seldom apocopes the verbal inflection in rime. To avoid the irregularity Koch would emend is mis

46 Cf Anel, 237

51 Cf Anel, 214

112 The conception of the lover as slain by his lady's cruelty was familiar. Cf Compl d'Am, 30 ff. Examples from various literatures are cited by T. Chotzen, Recherches sur la Poésie de Dafydd ab Gwilym, Amsterdam, 1927, pp 327 ff.

118 ff The last stanza is found only in MS Add 34360. Its authenticity is questioned by the Globe editor.

124 Cf KnT, I, 2392, and FrkT, V, 974

The Complainnt of Mars

Chaucer's authorship of the Complainnt of Mars is attested by Shurley in MS R 320, Trinity College, Cambridge, and also by Lydgate (Prologue to Bk i of The Falls of Princes), who refers to it as "the broche which that Vulcanus At Thebes wrouhte." In MS Harl 7333 it is entitled "The Broche of Thebes."

Shurley's heading further testifies that the poem was written at the command of John of Gaunt, and in a note at the close he adds that some men say the complaint "was made by [that is, with respect to] my lady of York daughter to the kyng of Spaygne and my lord of Huntynghoun some tyme Duc of Excestre." Then follows the Complainnt of Venus, at the end of which Shurley records the tradition that Granson made this ballade (that is, the French original) "for Venus resembled to my lady of York, answering the complaint of Mars" In five other copies (two in Pepys 2006, and one each in Fairfax 16, Tanner 346, and Selden B 24) the Venus follows the Mars, and the two are treated as a connected whole But each piece is also preserved separately, Mars in MSS Harl 7333 and Longleat 258, and Venus in MSS Ashmole 59 and Camb Univ Lib Ff 1 6 The printed editions from Thynne down combined the poems, until Furnivall argued for their separation in his Trial-Forewards (Ch Soc, 1871), and published them apart from each other in the Chaucer Society reprints Later editors have followed Furnivall's example Neither the English Venus nor the series of French ballades of Granson of which it is an adaptation appears to have any connection with the Mars or with the Lady Isabel of York

It is very doubtful whether even the Mars should be brought into association with the personal affairs of Isabel, though there can be little doubt about her character, for we have, besides Shirley's rubric, the almost contemporary report in Thomas of Walsingham's Ypodigma Neustriae (written about 1420) that she was "mulier mollis et delicata, sed in fine, prout fertur, satus poenitens et conversa" (ed Riley, Rolls Series, 1876, p 366) The association is accepted, somewhat hesitatingly, by Furnivall (Trial-Forewards, p 80) and Skeat (Oxf Chau, I, 65) and more confidently by Ten Brink (Litteraturgeschichte, II, 76) For argument against it, see Manly, [Harv] Stud and Notes, V, 124 ff, and Langhans, Untersuchungen, pp 237 ff It was recently reasserted, for both the Mars and the Venus, by Professor Brusendorf, who found in Holland's seduction of Elizabeth, the daughter of John of Gaunt, an explanation of the Duke's hostility Though he showed several passages in the description of Mars to be conceivably applicable to Holland, the whole theory remains very doubtful Mr Cowling (Chaucer, pp 60 ff), who rejects Shirley's application to Holland and Isabella of York, would explain both poems as referring to the affair with Elizabeth of Lancaster

Of course no secure evidence as to the date of the Mars is furnished by the allegorical interpretations, and other indications are hardly more decisive Professor Koch (Angl, IX, 582-84), on the basis of Turen's calculations of the conjunctions of Mars and Venus, decided upon 1379 as the year of composition But Professor Manly (pp 107 ff) proved the astronomical conclusions to be erroneous, and showed further that the exact conditions demanded by the poem were not fulfilled at any time between 1369 and 1400 The nearest approach to the situation described he found in the year 1385, but he concluded that it would be hazardous to draw any inferences from the astronomical data

For the mythological story of Mars and

Venus, see Ovid, Met, iv, 171-89 The astronomical data which underlie Chaucer's narrative have been carefully worked out by Skeat and Manly, to whose commentaries the following notes are largely indebted The story of the Brooch of Thebes (ll 245 ff) comes from the Thebad of Statius (ll 265 ff) Skeat conjectured that Chaucer introduced it into his poem by way of allusion to a tablet of jasper which the king of Armonie (Armenia) gave to Isabel and which she, in a will dated Dec 6, 1382, bequeathed to John of Gaunt The name Armonie, he remarked, is suggestive of Harmonia, the first possessor of the brooch In view of the doubt about the connection of the poem with Isabel, the identification of the brooch with a tablet in her possession is doubly difficult

The poem and the story (ll 1-154) are in Chaucer's customary seven-line stanza The complaint consists of sixteen nine-line stanzas, one introductory stanza and five terns, or sets of three stanzas, on different subjects

1 Proverbial "As fain as fowl of a fair morrow", of KnT, I, 2437

Professor Baskervill (PMLA, XXXVI, 594) has pointed out that the opening stanzas contain elements characteristic of the "aube" or "Tagehd, cf further Tr, iii, 1422 ff, and n"

2 Venus, the planet, regarded as a morning star Rowes rede, streaks or rays of light

7 The epithet, candel of jelosye is especially appropriate here, since it was Phoebus who discovered the amount of Mars and Venus and reported it to Vulcan

8 blewe, livid, pale This seems to be the only instance in Chaucer of the common Middle English confusing of blew (OF "bleu"), "blue," and blo (ON "blá[r]"), "gray," "livid"

9 "With St John for a surety", of SqT, V, 596

12 Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 52

13 With the reference here to St Valentine's Day and the choosing of mates of PF, 309, and n

29 The third heaven is the sphere of Mars, the outermost sphere (that of Saturn) being reckoned first In Tr, iii, 2 Chaucer counts from the earth outward, and the third heaven is that of Venus

30-31 These lines appear to mean that Mars had approached Venus, perhaps that he had come into a trine or sextile aspect with her (a friendly relation) From the mention of hevenysh revolucoun rather than planetary motion Professor Manly (p 114) draws the possible inference that mundane rather than zodiacal aspects are here referred to This supposition might explain how the nature of Mars is changed by Venus (ll 32-42) And the phrase as in hevene (l 50) might be intended to direct the reader's attention, from that point onward, to the zodiacal or celestial aspects or relations

51 lokynq, aspect probably used with reference to the favorable aspects trine and sextile

54 hur nexte paleys the nearer of her two houses, Taurus and Libra Mars was to pass out of Aries into Taurus, the nocturnal mansion of Venus

55 The apparent motion of Venus is about twice as swift as that of Mars Cf ll 69-70 and 129

58 Cf ll 107-08 The situation of Mars is bad because he is in a detrimental house and in solitude Taurus was in particular an unfortunate sign for Mars, and according to ll 66-67 no other planet welcomed him, that is, no planet in one of whose dignities he stood was in trine or sextile aspect with him 61 The same line occurs in NPT VII, 3160 — Chaucetelear addressing Dame Perletole!

66-67 Professor Brusendorff (pp 265-66) argued that these lines fit the situation of Holland in 1385, when he was in disgrace for having killed the son of the Earl of Stafford

72 When they be mette, that is when Venus enters Taurus

79 The chambre mentioned here and in l 85 may refer to some subdivision of the sign regarded as a house Manly (p 118) suggests very doubtfully that it means the second dodecatemoron ($17\frac{1}{2}$ - 20°) of Venus in Taurus For the rays of the sun are said to strike the chamber lightly as he enters the palace gate, and according to some authorities a planet is under the sun's beam when within seventeen degrees of that body

81 The sun enters the sign of Taurus In Chaucer's time the sun entered Taurus on April 12, the date mentioned below, in l 139

86 The colors of Taurus are red and citron The bulls were probably white because that is one of the colors of Venus

89 Venus, dreynt in teres, was a cold and wet planet, whereas Mars was hot and dry Cf ll 94-96

97 ff The description of Mars is traditional in astrological works Professor Manly (p 119) compares the armed figure given by Schoner, Isagogae Astrologiae Iudicariae, Nurnberg, 1551 p xxxiv

111 Venus had passed half the rays of Mars, that is, according to Manly's calculation (p 119), she had separated from Mars by about four degrees

113 Celenos, Mercury Venus was in the first two degrees of Gemini, which is the mansion of Mercury The meaning of tour is uncertain It does not seem to be a mere synonym for "mansion" (as Skeat suggests), and Manly (p 119) explains it as perhaps equivalent to "chariot" or "throne," as in the following passage from Ptolemy "Each planet is also said to be in its proper chariot, or throne, or otherwise triumphantly situated when it holds familiarity with the place which it occupies by two, or more, of the prescribed modes of connection" Gemini is Mercury's mansion and the first six degrees form a term which belongs to Mercury, thus these degrees are his by a twofold right

114 With voids cours, that is, Venus passed through the sign without coming into familiarity with any planet Emerson (PQ, II, 83) argues for the meaning "cunning, artful" a recognized sense of Fr 'voide.' The astrological explanation is the safer, but a play upon the double meaning of the word is possible

117 Venus is said to have livel myght because in her situation in Gemini she has few "dignities" and many "debilities" In technical language, she is peregrine (i e, in a place where she has no essential dignities) as well as solitary Consequently she flees into a cave (Lat "puteus") Skeat notes that the "putei" in Gemini are the degrees numbered 2, 12 17, 26, 30

120 Derk and smokynq seem to correspond to the terms "gradus tenebrosi" and "gradus fumosi" But Professor Manly (p 121), finding no such degrees assigned to Gemini, concludes that either Chaucer forgot the astrological details or allowed himself a poetic license Skeat took derk to mean merely "inauspicious" In any case there seems to be no implication that the light of Venus was diminished, the first four degrees of Gemini were all light ("lucidi")

Darkness is a characteristic common to hell and the classical Hades Smoke seems to belong more particularly to mediæval tradition References to both conceptions are collected by Dr T Spencer, Speculum, II, 189 ff

122 Venus is said to remain "a natural day" in the cave because her mean daily motion is $59' 08''$ — just a little less than a degree

127-28 The feebleness of Mars is due to the approach of the sun

129 steyre degree

144 chevache, journey by horse ride Here it may refer simply to the swift course of Mercury, or (as Manly suggests, p 122) it may have carried the meaning of "knightly expedition" Mercury is returning home after a year's absence, and welcomes the distressed lady to his castle

145 valqunse, explained by Skeat as an error for falance (fallance), more usually spelled fallance The word is found in Old French, but is not known to occur elsewhere in English It is apparently a translation of the astrological term "detrimentum" The "detrimenta" of Venus (the signs opposite to her mansions) were Scorpio and Aries, and the latter is probably here intended From that sign Mercury could see his mansion, Gemini

164 ff These rather obscure lines are probably to be understood in the light of two passages in Dante's Convivio ii, 5, 8, 9 The

"Intelligences" are there compared variously with the angels, the heathen gods, and the Platonic ideas, and their effects ("effetti") are explained as love ("amore"). Their lord ("sire") is declared to be God. Thus Chaucer's lines would mean that Mars was created by his lord (the God that sit so hye 1 218) to fulfill the end of love. See Lowes, MP, XIII, 30 ff.

185 hette, promised (instead of the usual form heet, perhaps by confusion with the passive, AS "hätte")

190 "Unless I receive favor, I shall never look upon her."

205 "They could readily give their head (their life) as a pledge"

219 other, or

245 The broche of Thebes, in the ancient account, is really a bracelet, made by Vulcan for Harmonia a daughter of Mars and Venus. It brought misfortune upon all women who wore it or coveted it.

273 of my devisoun, subject to my influence. For the phrase cf. KnT, I, 2024.

Rosamounde

The single known copy of Rosamounde follows the Troilus in MS Rawl Poet 163. At the end of both poems stand the names Tregentil and Chaucer, the former being apparently the signature of the scribe, and the latter his ascription to the poet. Professor Brusendorff (p. 439) questioned the value of the testimony, which he regarded as a mere imitation of the colophon of the Troilus. The title, Rosamounde, was adopted by Skeat, who first printed the ballade in Athen, 1891, I, 440. There are no definite indications of date, but the general temper of the poem is recognized as suitable to the period of the Troilus (1380-88). No source is known.

20 Tristram, Tristram, the ideal lover. Professor Lowes (Rom Rev, II, 128) compares Froissart, Cuevres, ed. Scheler, Brussels, 1870-72, II, 367 "Nom a Amans, et en surnom Tristrans."

Womanly Noblesse

The single copy, in MS Add 34360 (perhaps derived from Shirley), is headed Balade that Chaucer made, and there is no strong reason for doubting his authorship. The title, Womanly Noblesse, was given by Skeat. Professor Brusendorff (p. 277) expressed a preference for "Envoy to a Lady." In thought and sentiment the poem is conventional, and it contains no particular indication of date. The skillful handling of a difficult meter suggests Chaucer's middle period, probably after 1380.

12 After this line, to supply the missing rime and complete the stanza, Furnivall composed, Takeh me, lady, in your ober-saunce (Oxf Chau, IV, xxvi).

31-32 For the repetition of an opening line at the end of a poem cf. Pety, 119, and n.

Adam Scraweyn

In Shirley's MS R 3 20 this poem bears the superscription Chaucers wordes a Geffrey unto Adame his owen scraweyn. The lines themselves show clearly enough that Chaucer is addressing his own copyist. But further information about Adam seems to be lacking. Professor Brusendorff (p. 57), having found a record that a certain Adam Chaucer held the lease of a tenement in Smithfield conjectured that the scribe was a relative of the poet, which would explain, in his opinion, "the familiar strength of the curse!" It has also been suggested (MP, XI, 223) that Scraweyn was a proper name, but this is unlikely. Nor does the marginal entry "lechares" in Shirley's MS, seem to indicate Adam's surname, as suggested by Miss Hammond (See her Manual, p. 405, and MLN, XIX, 36). Professor Brusendorff observed that the word is added in a late hand (about 1500). In the absence of definite knowledge of his family name several scholars have sought to identify Adam with one or another of the scribes known to have lived in London at the period. Miss Ramona Bressie (TLS, 1929, p. 383) cites one Adam Stedeman, who was practicing as a law scrivener in 1384, but is not known to have been a copyist of MSS. Professor Manly (TLS, 1929, p. 403) mentions Adam Acton, but points out that he was apparently a limner. And Mr. B. M. Wagner (TLS, 1929, p. 474) adds a third possibility in the person of Adam Pinckhurst, mentioned in the records of the Scriveners' Company among some forty men who appear to have been of the Brotherhood of Writers of the Court Letter of the city of London between 1392 and 1404. If Pinckhurst was a member of the Brotherhood in 1392, Mr. Wagner observes, he would have been working as an apprentice as early as 1385, which was about the time of Chaucer's occupation with the Troilus.

The mention of the Troilus fixes the probable date of the poem about the middle of the eighties.

2 Boece, Chaucer's translation of Boethius, Troilus, his Troilus and Criseyde.

2-4 Skeat, following in part Dr. Koch's first edition, omits for (1 2), long (1 3), more (1 4), as overloading the meter.

The Former Age

The Former Age and the four poems which follow it are all ascribed to Chaucer in the MSS, and his authorship is generally accepted. They have been assigned to various dates between 1380 and the end of his life. They are all show indebtedness to Boethius, and it is probable that they were written after Chaucer's translation of the Consolation, and while he was still very much under its influence. But that influence persisted for many years. A few references, all rather indefinite to contemporary events are perhaps to be recognized in the poems, and some of these indicate a date considerably later than that usually assumed for the Boece. See the notes to The Former Age (l. 58 ff.), Fortune (l. 73), Truth (l. 22), and Lak of Stedfastnesse (introductory references).

The Former Age was first printed by Morris in the Aldine Chaucer (revised edition), 1870, under the title Aetas Prima (which is found in MS Hh 4 12). The present title, usually adopted in later editions, was taken from the second line of the poem.

The tradition of the Golden Age has been familiar in literature from antiquity. A thorough study of it has recently been undertaken as part of an investigation of primitivism in literature, by Professor A. O. Lovejoy and a group of associated scholars. However many expressions of the doctrine Chaucer knew his actual sources for the Former Age were apparently few. He drew chiefly upon Boethius, u, m 5, and made use also of Ovid's Met, 1 89-112, of R.R., 8355 ff., and possibly of Virgil's Fourth Eclogue, 32 f. For detailed comparisons see Skeat's notes and B. L. Jefferson, Chaucer and the Consolation of Boethius, Princeton, 1917, p. 134. References to the passages in Boethius, which can easily be compared either in the Latin or in Chaucer's Boece are not given below.

5 forpampred with outrage, spoilt by pampering with excess

6 ff. Cf R.R., 8364-78

9-10 Cf Met, 1, 101-02 and R.R., 8381-84

11 Cf R.R., 8373

12, 23 f. These lines, which are not exactly paralleled in the corresponding passages of Boethius or R.R., may contain reminiscences of Virgil's Fourth Eclogue, 32-33. But the ideas are expressed also in Met, 1, 97-109, 109, and it is not certain that Chaucer knew any work of Virgil except the Aeneid.

15-18 Cf R.R., 8379-80, 8388 f.

23-24 Cf Met, 1, 97-100

27-29 Cf Met, 1, 137-40

30 Cf Boethius, u, m 10 9 f.

33 ff. From John of Salisbury's Polycraticus, viii, 6 (ed. Webb, II, 255), or Jerome, Adv. Jov, n, 11 (Migne, Pat. Lat., XXIII, 300).

42-46 Cf R.R., 8393 ff.

48-63 Expanded in part from Ovid Cf particularly Met, 1, 128-31 (lack of faith), 113-15 (Jupiter), 151-53 (giants). For the characterization of Jupiter see also R.R., 20095 ff.

52 f. Cf R.R., 9522-34

54 Cf R.R., 8445-48

55 To follow l. 55 Skeat skillfully composed a concluding line to this stanza: Fulfilled erthe of olde curtesye. Other proposals are Yi hadden in this worlde the manstree (Koch), Of alle yfere, wolde hem lede and gye (Brusendorff, p. 293, n. 4).

58 f. According to medieval tradition Nimrod built the tower of Babel. Cf the Cursor Mundi, ll. 2212 ff. It has been suggested that he introduced here as a type of the ambitious Gloucester whose ascendancy in the years 1386 to 1389 was disastrous to many friends of the King. See Balderbek's edition of the Minor Poems, pp. 118-120.

61-63 Cf R.R., 9561-68

Fortune

Several MSS use the title Balades de vylage (doubtless an error for visage) sanz peinture.

The primary source of the poem is again Boethius, with incidental use of the Roman de la Rose and probably of Dante. For detailed analysis, with citations from Boethius, see Jefferson, pp. 57-60, 134-35, cf. also Loves, MP, XIII, 27, who has noted borrowings from Deschamps, to be discussed in a later publication. A double ballade of Deschamps, as Professor Brusendorff has observed (p. 242) presents a dialogue between Franche Volonte and Fortune, and may have afforded Chaucer a model. (See his Œuvres, II, 140 ff., nos. cclxxxvi-vii.) The use of Machaut's Remède de Fortune, mentioned by Dr. Jefferson, is more doubtful, as is also that of the dialogue between "Auctor" and "Fortune" in the prologue to Book vi of Boccaccio's De Casibus. On Chaucer's possible indebtedness to the latter passage, and also to a "Complaint against Fortune" (perhaps by Usk) see Brusendorff, pp. 244, n. 439. On the general idea of Fortune in Chaucer and Dante see H. R. Patch in the Thirty-Third Report of the [Cambridge] Dante Society, Boston, 1916, and in MLR, XXII, 377 ff., also his Goddess Fortune, pp. 18 ff., 30 ff.

The parts of the Consolation used in the poem are Book u pr. 1-4 and 8. Only the closer parallels are listed below.

On the date of the poem see the note to l. 73, below.

1-4 On the variability of Fortune Skeat compares Boethius, u, m 1, and Rom., 5479-82 (R.R. 4901-04).

7 The same line is quoted, as a newe Frenshe song, in Pars T., X, 248.

9 ff. Cf Boethius u pr. 8, 18-23. R.R., 4949-52, 5045-46, 4975-78, Rom., 5551-52, 5671-72, 5579-81.

13 f. Cf Boethius, u, pr. 4 70-72

17 ff. Socrates was familiarly regarded as a champion against Fortune. Cf R.R., 5845-50, 6887-90.

25 ff. Fortune is similarly represented as defending herself in Boethius, u, pr. 2. With ll. 25-26 cf. particularly Boethius, u, pr. 4, 57 f.

29-31 Cf Boethius, u, pr. 2, 11-15, 42 f.

32 On Thy beste frend see the note to l. 73, below. For the idea, cf. R.R., 8019-22.

33 Cf Boethius, n, pr 8, 18-22, RR, 4905-07 ff (Rom, 5486 ff and 5549 ff)

38 Cf Boethius, n, pr 4, 29 f

43 f Cf Boethius, n, pr 1 48-52

45 f Cf Boethius, n, pr 2, 43-45

47 "My teaching benefits you more than your affliction mures you"

51 Cf Boethius, n, pr 8, 18-22

56 Cf RR, 18979 f

57-63 Cf Boethius, n, pr 2, 3-25

65 ff Cf Boethius iv, pr 6, 30-32, v, m 1, 11 f It is to be observed that the Christian (and Dantesque) conception of Fortune appears here as in Tr, m, 617 ff, v, 1541 ff, Destiny is described in similar terms in KnT, I 1663 ff For further information see the note to that passage

71 Cf Boethius, n, pr 3, 45-47

73 The three princes are most naturally understood as the Dukes of Lancaster, York, and Gloucester In an ordinance of the Privy Council, passed on March 8, 1390, it was provided that no gift or grant at the cost of the King should be authorized without the consent of the three dukes, or of two of them In l 76 allusion seems to be made to the exact terms of the order The beste friend, in ll 32, 40, 48, 78, therefore appears to be the King himself If these allusions are correctly interpreted, the date of the poem can hardly be before 1390 Professor Brusendorff (p 439) put it as late as 1393-94 when he believed Clifford to have brought Chaucer the ballades of Deschamps If it were not for the evidence of the Envoy, Professor Patch, in view of the combined use of Boethius and Deschamps would date the Fortune shortly after the Boece and near the Prologue to the Legend He appears to harbor the suspicion that the Envoy was a late addition See his discussion in MLR, XXII, 381 ff If the poem refers to the earlier period, and is interpreted without the Envoy, the beste friend might of course be John of Gaunt (as argued by Koch, Kleinere Dichtungen, p 15)

Truth

The poem here called Truth bears the title "Balade de bon Conseil" (or some similar designation) in most MSS and early prints According to Shirley's statement (in MS R 3 20) it was made by Chaucer on his death-bed, and although the value of this testimony has been questioned, the ballade has usually been assigned to Chaucer's last years But there are considerations in favor of its earlier composition The puzzling word Vache in the envoy, as Miss Rickert has acutely observed (MP, XI, 209 ff) may be a proper name or a punning reference to one Li, as she suggests, the poem was addressed to Sir Philip (de) la Vache, a date between 1386 and 1390 appears probable (See the note on l 22) It should be added, however, that the envoy, which is preserved in only one MS (Addit, 10340), is held by some to be spurious and by others to have been written later than the rest of the ballade See the observations of H R Patch, MP, XXII 33, also Brusendorff, pp 246 ff

In its general thought Truth shows the influence of Boethius, though it does not follow closely any particular passages and Dr Jefferson goes rather too far in calling it an epitome of the Consolation In his careful comparison of the poem with the Latin treatise (Chaucer and the Consolation, pp 104 ff, 136) he designates as passages which had most influence on the ideas Bk ii, pr 4, 96-101 and m 4 in pr 11, 161-70, and m 11, and iv, pr 6 and m 6 But in some of these cases the resemblances are too general to be surely significant Other parallels, which illustrate particular passages in the poem, are mentioned below Biblical influence, direct or indirect, is also to be noted in both language and thought Professor Brusendorff (pp 251-52) prints two other specimens of ballades "de bon(e) conseil(e)," one in English and one in French The latter (from Shirley's MS R 3 20) contains a few phrases which resemble Chaucer's

Valuable explanatory notes on the text were published by E Flugel in Angl, XXIII, 209 ff

1 pres, apparently used here with special reference to the ambitious throng of the Court Flugel cites similar applications of Fr "la presse," which he equates with MHG "gedranc" Cf also the French ballade printed by Brusendorff (p 252)

2 The unusual personal use of Suffyce is probably due to the following Latin "Si res tue tibi non sufficient, fac ut rebus tuis sufficient" (quoted by Gower, Conf Am, v, 7735 ff, marginal gloss, as from Seneca, but actually from Caecilius Balbus, De Nugis Philosophorum, xi, 3, ed Woefflin, Basel, 1855, p 22) See Flugel, pp 212 ff He suggests further that the variant reading of three MSS, which gives suffyce its ordinary meaning, is due to Chaucer's own revision But this is unlikely The passage in Gower, which affords parallels to two or three of Chaucer's lines, was held by Professor Brusendorff (p 205) to have given the primary suggestion for the ballade

For the general doctrine of contentment, cf Boethius, n, pr 5, 42-44, m, pr 3, 51 f

3 Cf Boethius, n, pr 5, 9 f

7 John vii, 32 Professor Brusendorff (p 252, n) cites a number of mediæval works which celebrate the supremacy of Truth

8-9 Cf Bo, ii, pr 4, 74-76, and for the familiar figure of the wheel of Fortune Boethius, n, pr 2 27-29

11 Cf Acts ix, 5, Skeat, EE Prov, pp 59 f, no 143, Haekel, p 18, no 59

12 Apparently a variant of the fable of the earthen and brazen pots, see Fables of

Aesop, ed Jacobs, London, 1889, I, 260, II 227

15 Cf Boethius u pr 1, 46-48

17 ff Cf Boethius, i pr 5, 5-12, u pr 12, 26 f iv, pr 1, m 1, and pr 4, v, pr 1 and 2, m 4 and 5

The conception of life as a pilgrimage is of course a commonplace of biblical and Christian literature cf, e g, Ps cxix, 54, Heb xi, 13, I Pet u, 11

18 beste, perhaps an anticipation of Vache in the Envoy The comparison of man's lower nature with the beasts is altogether natural It occurs several times in Boethius, see iv, pr 3 54-66, iv m 3, v, m 5 Cf also similar expressions of Chaucer's in Tr, iii, 620 Fort, 68, KnT I, 1309

20 the heye way the main, sure road to the destination Cf Boethius i m 7, 23 f, iv, pr 1 32 f Lat thy gost thee lede, cf Rom viii, 4, Gal vi, 16

22 thou Vache The word vache, if taken as a common noun seems strange and unnatural Miss Edith Rickert in MP, XI 209 ff, made the convincing suggestion that it is a proper name and that the envoy is addressed to Chaucer's contemporary, Sir Philip (de) la Vache (1346-1408) She cites from official records many facts of his personal and family history His association with Chaucer is sufficiently established by his marriage to the daughter of Chaucer's intimate friend Sir Lewis Clifford During most of his life he enjoyed prosperity and preferment but from 1386 till 1389 (perhaps because of Gloucester's control of the government) he was apparently in disfavor He surrendered his office of Keeper of the King's manor and park of Chiltern Langley and accepted some foreign post From 1390 onward he was again prosperous He received lucrative appointments from the King, recovered the keepership of Chiltern Langley in 1396 and in 1399 was made Knight of the Garter If the ballade was written to bring him encouragement or consolation in misfortune the most probable date is shortly before 1390

Gentillesse

The entire text of Gentillesse is quoted as Chaucer's by Henry Scogan in his Moral Balade (MS Ashmole 59), and the ascription is repeated by Shirley in MSS Ashmole 59 and R 3 20 and by MS Harley 7333 (probably derived from Shirley) Even in the absence of such testimony the genuineness of the poem could hardly be doubted It is thoroughly Chaucerian in style and meter and the doctrine it sets forth is expounded in closely similar terms in WBT, III, 1109-64 See the note to that passage

The ultimate source of both passages is Boethius, m, pr 6 and m 6 But, just as in the case of Fortune, Chaucer was also influenced by Dante and the Roman de la Rose, and it is hardly possible to determine what he took from each authority See Loves, MP XIII, 19-27, and Jefferson, pp 94 ff It is noteworthy that for the discussion of gentillesse Chaucer drew on the Convivio of Dante, as well as on the Divine Comedy The chief treatment of the subject in the Roman de la Rose is ll 18607-896, it is more briefly discussed in ll 6579-92 Passages parallel to Chaucer (some of them not very close) are listed by Fansler Chaucer and the Roman de la Rose, p 221

1 The firste sok, surely to be taken (as by Scogan) as referring to Christ or God Cf WBT III, 1117 ff Professor Brusendorff (p 257), on the evidence of a passage in Lydgate's Thoroughfare of Woe, applied the term to Adam and Eve

5-7 Cf Boethius, u pr 6 11-13, m pr 4 17-19 Dante's Convivio iv, Canz 3 101-04, and perhaps the Filostrato, vii, 99 (noted by Brusendorff p 256)

15 ff old richesse, probably from Dante's "antea ricchezza" several times repeated in the Convivio (e g, iv, 3, 45 50, 54 iv 14 5) though "richeces ancienes" in RR 20313 is closely similar The phrase also occurs in WBT, III 1110 1118 The idea of riches is prominent in Dante's discussion For the general argument that gentility cannot be bequeathed of Boethius u pr 6 18-27 Purg, vii 121-23 (quoted in WBT III 1128 ff), Convivio, iv, chaps 13 14 RR 18619 ff

19-20 Cf WBT III, 1162-64 The idea is common to Boethius (u, m 6) and Dante (Convivio iv Canz 3, 112-19 and the commentary, iv, 20 47-57)

Lak of Stedfastnesse

In Shirley's MS R 3 20 Lak of Stedfastnesse is entitled 'Balade Royal made by oure laurale poete of Albyon in hees laste yeeres,' and the envoy is headed "Lenvoye to Kyng Richard" This is defended by Professor Brusendorff (pp 274 f) as the best title but Lak of Stedfastnesse, long ago adopted by Furnivall, has become current and is conveniently descriptive of the ballade According to MS Harley 7333 Chaucer sent the poem to Richard, "thane being in his Castell of Wndesore" On the basis of this statement and Shirley's heading most scholars have assigned the ballade to the last years of Richard's reign (1397-99) But the immediate occasion is quite uncertain and both the characterization of the age and the admonition to the sovereign would have been equally appropriate between 1386 and 1390 In fact there is a familiar passage of similar import in the Prologue to the Legend (F 373 ff G, 353 ff) The association of Lak of Stedfastnesse with the Boethius group also counts somewhat in favor of the earlier date The relation to the Consolation is not close, however, as in the case of the preceding pieces

Boethius's description of the "bond of love" which establishes faith and order in the universe (u, m 8) serves as a mere starting-point for Chaucer's denunciation of his unsteadfast age. The contrasted picture of the Former Age (Boethius, u, m 5) seems also to have been in his mind. The parallel passages are discussed in detail by Jefferson, pp 106 f, 136.

Professor Brusendorff (p 487) calls attention to several ballades of Deschamps (31, Œuvres, SATF, I, 113, 209 II, 31 234, II, 53) that have some similarity to Chaucer's poem.

4 Cf perhaps Boethius, u, pr 12 104

5 Cf Boethius, u, pr 5, 69

7 al us lost the words recur (with variations) in Tr, m, 1266, 1764, passages which go back, like this ballade, to Boethius, u, m 8. This is a more probable source than the refrain of Deschamps's ballade 234 ("Tout se destrunt et par default de garde," Œuvres, II, 63), suggested by Brusendorff (p 487).

21 For a spurious fourth stanza, from the Bannatyne MS, see Oxf Chau, I, 556.

The Complaint of Venus

The Complaint of Venus is a free translation or adaptation of three French ballades by Otes de Granson. The title is wholly inappropriate, and originated, perhaps with Shirley, in the belief that the piece was a pendant to the Complaint of Mars. According to the tradition which Shirley records, the Mars was written with reference to an intrigue of Isabel, Duchess of York, and the Duke of Exeter, and the French ballades of Granson were composed for Isabel in the character of Venus. This interpretation of the Mars has already been shown to be very dubious, see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on that poem. As for the Venus, two of the original French ballades are explicitly written about a lady and do not at all fit the supposed situation. The whole theory should therefore probably be rejected. Yet Skeat, who denied the connection of the Venus with the Mars, still argued in the Oxford Chaucer (I, 87) for the possibility that Chaucer made the translation from Granson for Isabel. The title Princesse in the first line of the envoy, he pointed out, would have been appropriate to her as daughter of Pedro, King of Castile. But the variant reading Princes introduces a new element of uncertainty. It is possible that the Venus, like the Fortune, was addressed to a group of princes, perhaps to the Dukes of Lancaster, York, and Gloucester. The subject matter, however, it must be granted is not particularly fitted for this destination.

The date of the Venus is unknown. If it was intended for Isabel of York, it must have been written before her death in 1392. On November 17, 1393, Granson received from Richard II an annuity of £ 126, 13 s 4 d, and about this time he and Chaucer may have been in personal contact. Chaucer's reference to his own advancing years (II 75 ff), though not to be interpreted too precisely, would have been most natural in the nineties. In the lack of decisive evidence these indications have led to the classification of the Venus with the later minor poems.

The ballades of Granson were printed by Piaget in Rom, XIX, 411-16, and again by Skeat in the Oxford Chaucer, I, 400 ff (below the English text). The date of their composition is unknown, but Piaget shows reason for assigning them to Granson's early years. Chaucer's version of the first is hardly a translation at all. Only five or six lines are adapted and those very freely. The second and third ballades are followed more closely.

Skeat inserted the following titles to indicate the subject of each part: 1 The Lover's worthiness. 2 Disquietude caused by Jealousy, 3 Satisfaction in Constancy.

22-23 The rime aventure honoure is not in accord with Chaucer's regular usage.

27 ff With the "symptoms" of love here mentioned of KnT, I, 1372 ff, and n.

32 "Granson, flower of the poets of France." The use of make, maker (like ποιητής, ποιητής) with reference to poetry was apparently not current until late in the Middle English period.

Otes (or Oton) de Granson was a knight of Savoy who had sworn allegiance to the King of England. According to Froissart he fought on the side of the English on several occasions. In 1391 he was charged with complicity in the death of Amadeus VII, Count of Savoy. In 1393 his estates in Savoy were confiscated, and he received a pension from Richard II. Then to prove his innocence he fought a judicial duel in France, in 1397, and was killed. For an account of him see Piaget, Rom, XIX, 237 ff.

Lenvoy de Chaucer a Scogan

The Envoy is attributed to Chaucer in all three MSS, Gg 4 27, Fairfax 16 and Pepsy 2006, and generally accepted as authentic.

Scogan is generally held to have been Henry Scogan (1361?-1407), lord of the manor of Haviles after the death of his brother, John Scogan, in 1391. He became tutor to the sons of Henry IV, and his only literary work is the "Moral Balade" addressed to them and written after the death of Chaucer. In that poem he quotes the entire text of Gentlesse, and refers to Chaucer several times as his "maistre."

Chaucer's Envoy is supposed to have been written in 1393 toward the end of the year (after Michaelmas 1 19). The deluge of pestilence (l 14) may well refer to the great floods of rain which fell in September and October. See Stowe's Annals, London, 1631, p 308 (quoted in Skeat's notes), and Walsingham, Historia Anglicana, ed Riley,

London, 1863-64, II, 213 At that time Scogan was only thirty-two years of age, and Chaucer's association of him with those that are too old for love must not be taken very seriously On this matter, and on the (erroneous) attribution of the Court of Love to Scogan, see Kittredge, [Harv] Stud and Notes, I, 109 ff

Both the identity of Scogan and the date of the Envoy, it should be added, have been called in question by Professor Brusendorff (pp 289 ff) He proposed to explain the deluge as a reference to a prolonged period of dampness and pestilence recorded by Walsingham (II 202 f) for the summer of 1391 Scogan, he held, was not Henry but his elder brother John, who died in 1391, perhaps a victim of the pestilence But there is no strong reason for applying the poem to the conditions of 1391 rather than 1393 and the argument that John Scogan's age fits the description (ll 31-32) better than Henry's counts for little in view of the manifestly humorous tone of the passage Moreover there is no such evidence of John Scogan's association with Chaucer as is furnished in Henry's case by his Moral Balade

1-2 With these lines have been compared two passages in Dante's Purgatorio (l. 46 and 76) But it may be questioned whether the broken statutes here were suggested by the "legga rotte" of the pt

3 the bryghte goddis sevene the planets On their relation to the floods see R. K. Root, PMLA, XXXIX, 59

7 error, probably the aberration or abnormality of the weather rather than the ignorance of the poet (as suggested by Skeat)

9 the fyfte sercle, the sphere of Venus
14 deluge of pestilence, pestilential deluge For the construction of KnT, I, 1912, n

15 the goddess, Skeat reads this goddess, "this goddess," i.e., Venus But the form goddess for goddesse in rime is hardly Chaucerian

21 erst, before For this idiomatic use of the superlative see KnT, I, 1566, n

28 Cf RR, 1876 ff

35 Grisel, "the old gray-haired man", or, if the reading renne be adopted for ryme, "the gray horse"

38-39 The figure is perhaps from the Anticlaudianus of Alanus de Insulis, close of the prose preface and l 3 of the verse preface (Migne, Pat Lat, CCX, 487-88) Alanus, Professor Kittredge has pointed out to the editor, may in turn have been echoing Ovid's Tristia, v, 12, 21 f

43 the stremes hed, marked "Windsore" in the MSS Similarly, against l 45 is written "Grenewich" (Chaucer's residence) But Professor Manly (New Light, pp 40 f) argues that Chaucer was probably living at North Petherton in 1393 The marginal reference to Windsor, he suggests, may date from the time of Henry VI, who spent much time there

47 It is uncertain what is meant by the reference to Cicero The editors have referred to Epist vi, ad Caecum and to the De Amicitia But it is possible as Professor R. C. Goffin has pointed out (MLR, XX, 318 ff) that Chaucer was quoting "Tullius" at second hand and really had in mind the citations on love of friendship" in RR, 4747 ff (Rom, 5285 ff)

Lenvoy de Chaucer a Bukton

The Envoy to Bukton is preserved in one MS, Fairfax 16, and there ascribed to Chaucer It was printed by Notary, 1499-1501 In the early editions of the collected works it was placed after the Bool of the Duchess and the name Bukton omitted in the heading and the first line Urry inferred that the poem was addressed to John of Gaunt But Tyrwhitt corrected the error (V, xiv), and most later editions have placed the Envoy among the minor poems (For details on this matter see Miss Hammond, pp 366-67)

Of the various Buktons whose names are preserved in records of Chaucer's time, two have been identified by scholars with the friend to whom Chaucer addressed the Envoy Sir Peter Bukton, of Holderness, in Yorkshire, and Sir Robert Bukton, of Goosewold, in Suffolk The former was suggested by Tyrwhitt, and his claims have been fully presented by Professor E. P. Kuhl in PMLA, XXXVIII, 115 ff, see also A. S. Cook, Trans Conn Acad, XX, 191 The case for Sir Robert has been stated by Professor Tatlock, Dev and Chron, pp 210 f and Professor J. R. Hulbert, Chaucer's Official Life, Menasha, Wis, 1912, pp 54 f From the fact that on March 14, 1397, indults were granted in Rome to "Robert Bukton, donsel, nobleman, and Anne his wife, noble woman, of the diocese of Norwich," to have a portable altar and mass before daybreak, Mr Tatlock reasonably infers that the young man cannot have been married later than Jan, 1397 And since the Envoy was written not earlier than October, 1396, he conjectures that the marriage was after that date But the second inference of course rests upon the assumption that the poem was addressed to Sir Robert No external evidence has been found of the date of his marriage, or, for that matter, of Sir Peter's, and the identification must consequently rest on other grounds Both men were prominent at court and may well have been known to Chaucer

Robert Bukton (d 1403) was an esquire of Queen Anne in 1391, and later an esquire of the King also an "armiger" and "scutifer" of Thomas de Percy He received royal grants of land in Suffolk and in 1394 was made constable (for life) of the castle of Eye He may have been one of the four King's justices of South Wales in 1390 He was several times member of Parliament from Suffolk between 1390 and 1401. In 1402-03 he was given a commission of array in Suffolk. In 1405 he became deputy in Ipswich and Colchester to Thomas Chaucer, the King's chief butler.

Peter Bukton (1350-1414) was a native and resident of Holderness in Yorkshire. He served in John of Gaunt's army in 1369, and in that of the earl of Buckingham in 1380 and 1384. By 1381 he was a knight of King Richard. In 1386 he testified, as did Chaucer and several friends, in the famous Scrope-Grosvenor suit. He accompanied the Earl of Derby to Prussia on his two expeditions in 1390-91 and 1392-93. During Henry's exile in 1398-99 he was one of the two managers of the Earl's estate, and upon Henry's accession he received various favors and honors. He was a guardian of the King's son, Thomas de Lancastre, member of the King's council (1401 and 1404), escort of the Queen on a visit to Denmark (1406), and twice mayor of Bordeaux (1411 and 1412). His long and close contact with the Lancasters brings him into association with Chaucer and it may not be without significance, as Professor Kuhl has had the keenness to observe, that his native region of Holderness is the scene of the Summoner's Tale.

The evidence as to the date of Chaucer's Envoy would permit its association with either Peter or Robert Bukton. The reference to the Wife of Bath's Prologue (l. 29) points at once to Chaucer's last years. And the mention, in l. 23, of capture in Frisse is very probably to be connected with the expedition against Friesland between August 24 and the end of September 1396. The ballade can therefore be dated with considerable confidence in that year. Although the exact date of Robert Bukton's marriage is unknown and no evidence has been found concerning Peter's, the approaching marriage of one of them — probably of Peter — was doubtless the occasion of the Envoy.

The allegations against marriage in the poem were, of course, familiar and traditional, and are not to be taken too seriously. For references to poems of Deschamps in the same vein, with comments on their lack of biographical significance, see Kittredge, MLN, XXIV, 14 f. He notes especially Balades 271 (Œuvres, SATF, II, 116), 340 (III, 54), 823 (IV, 343), and 977 (V, 217), to which Brusendorff (p. 487) adds 888 (V, 73). The passages cited are not necessarily to be regarded as having actually suggested Chaucer's Envoy, though no. 823, "Contre ceux qui se remariant," affords striking parallels.

1 Bukton is possibly addressed as marster because he was a lawyer. See Miss E. Rickert, Manly Anniv. Stud., p. 31.

2 John xviii, 38. With this use of a passage of Scripture in a humorous poem of SqT, V, 555, n.

8 eft, again. Chaucer's wife Philippa is supposed to have died in 1387.

10 On the bound Satan see MLT, II, 361, n. For the figure of gnawing one's chain of Tr, 1 509.

14 The comparison of marriage with prison occurs also in MercB, 28. For the particular figure of returning to fetters after release of John of Salisbury Polycratius, viii, 11 (ed. Webb II, 299, ll. 5-6). See Tatlock, MLN, XXIX, 98.

18 I Cor vii, 9.

19 Cf WB Prol III, 154-60. Brusendorff (p. 487) calls especial attention also to Deschamps's Balade no. 823, st. 2 (Œuvres, SATF, IV, 343 f.).

23 On the expedition against Friesland in 1396 see Froissart, Chronicles, tr. Johnes, Hafod, 1803-05, IV ch. 98-99. According to him the Frieslanders refused to ransom their countrymen when captured and put their own prisoners to death.

Chaucer's Envoy, on the evidence of this allusion to Friesland, has usually been dated after August, 1396, when the expedition began. But Professor Lowes (in MLN XXVII, 45 ff.) produces evidence that capture in Frisse was a commonplace comparison, and argues that it was "the state of mind which accompanied the preparations for the expedition which gave the allusion point." He would therefore put the poem before rather than after, the month of August.

25 proverbes, series of proverbs. The use of the plural is peculiar.

27 Proverbial, see Haecel, p. 51, no. 187.

28 Proverbial, see Skeat, EE Prov., p. 60, no. 144, Haecel, p. 26, no. 86.

29 Cf WB Prol. There is a similar reference to the Wife's discourse in MerchT, IV 1685.

The Complaint of Chaucer to his Purse

The Envoy to Chaucer's Complaint to his Purse can be very precisely dated. It must have been written between September 30, 1399, when Henry was received as king by the parliament, and October 3, when Chaucer received the royal grant of an additional stipend of forty marks. The poem itself, which is preserved without the Envoy in several MSS., was probably written earlier and may have been originally intended for Richard II.

The Complaint belongs to a familiar type of begging poems. Skeat cited an example by Machaut, addressed to John II of France (ed. Tarbé, Paris, 1849, p. 78), and another by Deschamps, written to Charles VI in 1381 (no. 247, Œuvres, SATF, II, 81). The latter somewhat resembles Chaucer's poem in thought and structure, though Skeat goes too far in calling it his model. Other examples of the type will be found in Miss Hammond's English Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, see especially pp 68, 149 f 174 ff Professor A S Cook (Trans Conn Acad, XXIII, 33 ff) noted several poems of Deschamps in a similar vein, and called attention in particular to a well known poem of the Chatelain de Coucy, 'A vos, amant, plus k'a nule autre gent Est bien raisons ke ma dolor complaigne" (ed Fath, Heidelberg 1883, pp 36 ff) — a genuine love-lyric, and not a begging missive — to which he held Chaucer's Complaint to allude But the parallels he notes are not convincing By whatever poem or poems it was suggested, Chaucer's complaint, with its humorous adaptation of the language of a lover's appeal to his mistress is certainly one of the happiest variations on the well-worn theme

10 colour, the yellow of gold coms

12 stere rudder

17 As Skeat and others have observed, this line implies that Chaucer wished to get away from London, perhaps to some cheaper place

19 shave as nye as any frere, "as bare of money as the tonsure of a friar is of hair" (Bell)

22 Brutes Albyon, the Albion of Brutus, the descendant of Aeneas who, according to the old chronicles, was the eponymous hero of the Britons See Geoffrey of Monmouth, i 16, (ed Griscom, London, 1929, p 249), Layamon's Brut, ii, 1243 ff

MINOR POEMS OF DOUBTFUL AUTHORSHIP

The pieces here classified as doubtful are, with the exception of the Proverbs not ascribed to Chaucer in the MSS, and the Proverbs, in Shurley's copy, have no ascription The different poems vary in excellence and in conformity to Chaucerian usage But none of them can be positively excluded from the canon on grounds of language or meter

A considerable number of other short poems are ascribed to Chaucer in MSS or have been printed among his works They are included in the lists of doubtful or rejected writings in Skeat's Oxford Chaucer, I, pp 27-48, and in Miss Hammond's Manual, pp 406-63 and a number of them are published in Skeat's supplementary volume of Chaucerian and Other Pieces The question of their authenticity is treated by Skeat in both the volumes cited, and Miss Hammond gives references to other discussions, of also Professor Brusendorff's section on Spurious Poems in his Chaucer Tradition, pp 433 ff The present edition includes all the pieces not rejected by the common consent of recent scholarship except two which should have special mention out of respect to the distinguished Chaucerians who have defended their authenticity These are the "Balade of a Reeve" and the "Balade of the Plough" They are both preserved in Shurley's MS Add 16165, and there is a second copy of the former in MS Harl 7578 In the Shurley MS the page which contains the end of the "Reeve" and the beginning of the "Plough" bears the superscription "Balade by Chaucer" Miss Hammond takes this to refer to the second ballade and argues in favor of Chaucer's authorship See MLN, XIX, 37 f, where she prints both poems Professor Brusendorff (p 279) has shown that the heading is more likely to refer to the "Reeve," which he regards as authentic He prints both texts of the poem, with a facsimile of Shurley's page which bears the superscrip-tion Both ballades were published in 1871 by Furnivall, who thought they might be Chaucer's See his edition of Jyl of Brentford's Testament, Ballad Soc, London, 1871, pp 34 ff The language of neither poem is positively incompatible with the theory that Chaucer was the author But both are so unlike his acknowledged works in tone and subject, and (as Professor Brusendorff admitted in the case of the "Reve") so inferior in style and technique, that the present editor has not even admitted them to the limbo of 'Doubtful Poems'

Against Women Unconstant

The ballade Against Women Unconstant (entitled by Koch Neue Fangelnesse) is ascribed to Chaucer on unknown authority in Stowe's edition (1561) In the three MS copies no author is named, but in two of them (Cotton Cleopatra D vii and Harley 7578) the ballade is closely associated with several genuine poems Professor Brusendorff (pp 203, 225, 441) declared it to be spurious But the language, meter, and subject-matter are all consistent with the theory of Chaucer's authorship Skeat notes particularly the resemblance of mood between Women Unconstant and Lak of Steadfastnesse

The general idea of the poem is similar to that of a ballade of Machaut (Voir-Dit, Soc des Bibliophiles Fr, Paris, 1875, p 309) The French refrain, "Qu'en lieu de bleu, Dame, vous vestez vert," is almost identical with Chaucer's, but beyond this the two poems have little verbal resemblance Moreover, the line of the refrain, in a close variant, occurs elsewhere in Machaut (Voir-Dit, I 4929), and may have been proverbial

7 Blue is the symbol of constancy and green of fickleness

8 Skeat compares James 1, 23-24, which is hardly parallel

12 Proverbial see Skeat, EE Prov, p 61, no 147

15 shryned, enshrined (like a saint)

16 Dalyda, Delilah Creseyde, Cressida Candace, Queen Candace of the Alexander romances See PF, 283 ff, n

20 Al light for somer, apparently with the implication of fickleness or wantonness The phrase occurs, in a wholly different context, in CY Prol, VIII, 568

Complaynt d'Amours

The Complaynt d'Amours or Amorous Complaynt was discovered by Skeat and first described and printed in part by him in Acad, XXXIII, 307 It is preserved in three MSS (Harl, 7333, Fairfax, 16, and Bodley, 638), all of which contain Chaucerian material, and the language is in general consistent with Chaucer's usage Occasional defects of meter might be due either to scribal mistakes (the copies are not very good) or to early composition Chaucerian turns of thought and expression (pointed out by Skeat and noted below) of course prove nothing as to authorship Professor Brunsdorff (p 437) declares the piece spurious

If genuine, the poem was probably early An unintelligible heading in MS H declares that it was made "at wyndesore in the laste May tofore Novembre" Nothing can be made of this date, but the reference to Windesore falls in very well with the fact that Chaucer became valet of the King's Chamber in 1367 The last stanza indicates that the immediate occasion of the poem was St Valentine's Day

The piece is a typical complaint for unrequited love Skeat notes a general resemblance to the complaint of Aurelius in FranklIT, V, 1311 ff, and to various complaints in the Troilus ll 85-86 are closely similar to ll 309-10 of the Parlament of Foules If either of these passages is derived from the other, the chances are that the Parlament is the later

1 Cf Tr, iv, 516

6 Cf Lady, 49

7 Cf Lady, 29, FranklIT, V, 1322

12 thilke spytous yle, the island of Naxos, where Ariadne was deserted by Theseus, here used as a symbol of despair Cf ML Prol, II, 68, HF, 416, LGW, 2163

17 ff Cf Lady, 88 ff

24 Cf Fort, 5-7

31 Cf Lady, 113

57 For the idea of Mars, 264 ff

70 Cf FranklIT, V, 1313

72 The formula is similar to that in Tr, iii, 1501, LGW, 1806, and Bal Compl, 4

81 "Sun of the bright star," etc., that is, source of light to Venus, the lover's star

85 ff See the introductory note, above, and cf further PF, 419, KnT, I, 1143-44

Merciles Beaute

In view of the Chaucerian contents of MS Pepys 2006, and of the thoroughly Chaucerian style and meter of the poem, Merciles Beaute may be accepted as authentic The title, used by Skeat and earlier by Todd (Illustrations of Chaucer, London, 1810, p 117), is found in the index to the MS

No definite source is known, though parallels to several passages have been pointed out in French Skeat remarks that the suggestion may have come from a roundel of Guillaume d'Amiens, printed in Bartsch-Wiese Chrestomathie de l'Ancien Français, no 67 a (Leipzig, 1920, pp 224 f) The similarity, however does not extend beyond the opening lines, and consists in a commonplace sentiment A more significant parallel to the first section is furnished by a virelay or chanson baladée of Deschamps (no 541, Œuvres, SATF, III, 382) For a detailed comparison see Lowes, MLR, V, 33 ff, where it is further suggested that Chaucer may have caught the word sodenly in l 1 from a marguerite balade immediately preceding (no 540) The third section of the roundel Mr Lowes regards as a humorous paraphrase of another poem of Deschamps, the rondeau which begins "Puis qu'Amour ay servi trestout mon temps" (no 570, Œuvres, IV, 29) But though the general theme of the two poems is the same, they differ totally in figures and phraseology Moreover, as several commentators have observed, the striking line, Sin I fro Love escaped am so fat (l 27), is exactly matched in another French ballade The response of the Duc de Berry to the Cent Balades begins "Puz qu'a Amours sus si gras eschape" His poem is otherwise quite unlike Chaucer's, but the resemblance between the two lines can hardly be accidental Either one poet is echoing the other, or both are quoting a common source De Berry's ballade is definitely dated by the editor between Oct 31 and Nov 6, 1389 (See Les Cent Ballades, ed G Raynaud, SATF, 1905, p 213)

On the structure of the roundel see PF, 675, n The first refrain of each part is printed here with two lines, as by Skeat and the Globe editor

1 For the idea, which was a familiar conceit in love poetry, cf KnT, I, 1096, and n

16 Daunger, disdain, fastidiousness

23 Cf Deschamps's Balade no 540, l 15 (Œuvres, III, 382)

27 On this line see the introductory note, above For the proverbial leanness of lovers Skeat cites Rom, 2681 ff (RR, 2543 ff)

28 It is possible, as Skeat suggests (MLR, V, 194) to omit in and take prison as "prisoner" For the recurring figure of imprisonment cf Buk, also Machaut, ed Tarbé, Rheims, 1849, p 133

Balade of Complaint

The authorship of the Balade of Complaint must be regarded as very doubtful. Skeat, who discovered the poem and printed it as Chaucer's in Acad XXXIII, 292, afterwards denied its authenticity (Canon, pp 63-64, 147). It was rejected by Professor Brusendorff (p 437) and not included in Koch's Kleinere Dichtungen. Though smooth and correct in language and meter it is loose in structure and wholly without distinction. Skeat notes a few resemblances in phraseology between it and some of the genuine poems but they are not particularly significant.

²⁰ here, if retained, means "to hear." The emendation dere may be right.

Proverbs

The Proverbs are ascribed to Chaucer in MSS Fairfax 16 and Harley 7578, though not in Shirley's copy (Add 16165). They may be his, though the rime compas (sbst) embrace (inf) is suspicious. For discussion on the question see Bradshaw, cited by Furnivall in Temp Pref to Six-Text edn, p 108, Koch, Chronology, Ch Soc, 1890, p 78. Skeat Canon Oxford 1900 pp 145 f and Brusendorff pp 284 ff (citing a proverbial quatrain of similar structure from Deschamps).

To the eight lines which may be Chaucer's are appended in MS Harley 7578 and in some modern editions two additional seven-line stanzas, which are certainly spurious. See Bell's edn, London, 1854-56, VIII 149 Morris's (Aldine) edn London, 1872, VI 303, and cf Angl, XXVIII, 16 f, 21.

⁴ Probably a saying of wide currency. Cf Li Proverbe au Vilain, ed Tobler Leipzig, 1895 p 20 no 44. On other parallels see Kittredge MP VII 479 Brusendorff, p 286, Langhans, Angl, LIV, 25 ff. Brusendorff's suggestion that Chaucer may have known a Bohemian version preserved among the sayings ascribed to Smil of Pardubic is interesting in view of the Bohemian relations of Queen Anne. But of course in the case of proverbs such a connection is hard to establish.

⁷ Cf the familiar French proverb "Qui trop embrasse, mal étirent." Skeat notes its occurrence at the head of a ballade of Deschamps (ed Tarbé, Rheims 1849 I 132 of SATF V, 383, with a similar proverb), and also its use by Chaucer in Mel, VII, 1215.

A TREATISE ON THE ASTROLABE

Among the works ascribed to Chaucer by Lydgate in the Prologue to Bk 1 of The Fall of Princes is "e tretas, full noble & off gret pris, upon thastlabre," which he made "to his sone, that callid was Lewis." The exact title is not given, but the subject is indicated as astronomy and astrology. The Treatise on the Astrolabe, which is assigned to Chaucer in at least four MSS (Dd 3 53, in a late hand, E Museo 54, Corpus Christi Coll, Camb, 424, and Ashmole 393), is by general consent identified as the work in question. "Little Lewis" is commonly supposed to have been Chaucer's own son. According to the colophon in MS Dd, 3 53, he was under the instruction of N (or R) Strode at Oxford, and this statement has some support in the facts that the problems are adapted to the latitude of Oxford, and that one MS (Bod 619) was apparently written by an astronomer of Merton College.

But "Little Lewis's" relation to Chaucer is not completely established. Apart from the testimony of Lydgate and the MSS of the Astrolabe no conclusive evidence has been found that Chaucer had a child of that name. The word some ("filium" in the Latin colophon) might apply to a godson or pupil, or even to a younger friend. So Professor Kittredge has suggested that the Astrolabe was written for the son and namesake of Chaucer's intimate friend, Sir Lewis Clifford. The date of the younger Lewis Clifford's birth is uncertain, but he is known to have died on October 22, 1391 — a fact which may explain why the Astrolabe was left unfinished. (For further support of this conjecture see Professor Kittredge's article MP XIV, 513 ff, also, on Sir Lewis Clifford and his family, an earlier article by the same scholar in MP, I, 6 ff, and W T Waugh's account of the "Lollard Knights," Scottish Hist Rev, XI, 55 ff.) Very recently a record has been discovered which includes the names of Lewis Chaucer and Thomas Chaucer scutifer, among the garrison of the royal castle of Carmarthen in 1403. Professor Manly draws the plausible inference that Lewis was the younger brother of Thomas, and the poet's son, and conjectures further that he was a godson and namesake of Sir Lewis Clifford. (The document has been printed in the West Wales Hist Rec IV 4 ff. For further discussion see Manly's article in TLS, 1928, p 430. In TLS 1928 p 486 Mr Walker Rye argues against the identification of either Lewis or Thomas as Geoffrey Chaucer's son. But his suppositions are quite as conjectural.)

The composition of the Astrolabe may safely be put in 1391 the year referred to in Part II, § 1. (Against Professor Samuel Moore, who argues for 1392 in MP, X, 203 ff, see Kittredge, MP XIV 513.)

Chaucer's exact source has not been determined. Most of the "conclusions" go back, directly or indirectly, to the Compositio et Operatio Astrolabu of Messahala, an Arabian astronomer of the 8th century. The description of the instrument is also little more than an amplification of Messahala's Chaucer's indebtedness to the Arabian was recognized long ago by John Selden (Preface to Drayton's Polyolbion, Drayton's Works London, 1876, I, xliii) and clearly established by Skeat. For the definitions and descriptive astronomy Professor Laddell holds Chaucer to have drawn on the De Sphaera of John de Sacrobosco where a good deal of the material, at least in substance is to be found. But there is little correspondence in language or arrangement between Chaucer's treatise and Sacrobosco's, and it seems probable that Chaucer worked with some other compilation. The second part of Messahala's work (the portion which is parallel to Chaucer's) is printed in Skeat's edition of the Astrolabe, Ch Soc, 1872 pp 88 ff., to which references are made. A colotype facsimile of Camb Univ MS I 3 3 of Messahala's Latin text accompanied by an English translation may be found in Gunther, Chaucer and Messahala on the Astrolabe, Oxford, 1929 (Early Science in Oxford, V). There are numerous editions of the De Sphaera. References are made here to that printed in Venice in 1478. Numerous works on the astrolabe are extant in MS, among them one ascribed to Sacrobosco and one to Nicholas Lynne. For a list see Houzeau et Lancaster, Bibliographie Générale de l'Astronomie I, Brussels, 1887, nos 3069-3320. Cf also R. T. Gunther, Early Science in Oxford, II Oxford, 1923, 202 ff (with photographic plates of various instruments).

In the notes which follow the editor has made free use of the valuable commentaries in the editions of Brae (London, 1870) and Skeat.

Prologue

1 some On the ambiguity of this word see the introductory note just preceding. For examples of its use by a tutor or adviser Professor Kittredge (MP, XIV, 515) cites The Babees Book, ed Furnivall, EETS, 1868, pp 27, 34, Henry Scogan's Moral Balade, Oxf Chau, VII, 237.

7 the philosofre Skeat quotes Cicero's Laelius c. xiii "Haec igitur prima lex amicitiae sancitur, ut amicorum causa honesta faciamus." But the sense is not very close to Chaucer's.

8 Professor Kittredge (p 516) argues that the use of friend here favors the supposition that Chaucer was not addressing his own son. Condescendith, accedes.

27 ten year The younger Lewis Clifford may have been anywhere from four to seventeen years of age in 1391. Skeat, on the assumption that Lewis was Chaucer's own son, conjectures that his mother was the Cecelia de Chaumpaigne who, on May 1 1380 released Chaucer from all liability "de raptu meo." But this involves an interpretation of "raptus" which is not now generally adopted. See the Biographical Introduction. 45 f Proverbial "All roads lead to Rome."

48 redith or herith The occurrence of this formula here, as well as in Chaucer's tales, is noteworthy. It implies, unless its use is purely formal, that even an educational treatise may have been read aloud. Cf also the Retractation X, 1051.

52 Cf HF, 861 ff.

65 This reference to "the King's English" is interesting as coming so soon after English supplanted French as the language of the sovereign and the court.

73 And with this swerd shal I sleen envie In thus deprecating envy in his Prologue Chaucer follows a long established literary convention. See Tr, v, 1786, n.

75 ff The firste partie, etc. Of the five parts here described Chaucer wrote only the first and a portion of the second. The third was intended to contain tables of latitude, longitude, and declination, the fourth was to treat the motions of the heavenly bodies, especially the moon, and the fifth was to teach general astronomical theory, apparently including matter which would now be called astrology.

84 portatif aboute, which can be carried about.

85 smalst, very small, perhaps a Latinism. Cf thebest, 1, 3, 2.

98 f On John Somer and Nicholas Lynne (or of Lynne) see, besides the articles in the DNB, A G Little, The Greyfriars in Oxford, Oxford, 1892, pp 245 f, M R James, A Descriptive Catalogue of the MSS in the Library of St John's College, Cambridge, 1913, p 269, R T Gunther, Early Science in Oxford, II, 60 ff.

Somer, who was a minorite of the Franciscan house at Bridgewater, made for Joan mother of Richard II, a calendar dated 1380 in certain MSS. At that time he was probably at Oxford. Other astronomical and astrological writings ascribed to him are cited by Little, pp 245 f. He is also credited with the authorship of a short chronicle of the Bridgewater house (Chronica quaedam brevis de conventu Ville Briggewater). A versification of parts of the Bible (Compendium Bibliae metricum) in the same MS as the chronicle and sometimes attributed to him, is said by Montfaucon to be anonymous. See Bibliotheca Bibliothecarum Manuscriptorum Nova, Paris, 1739, I, 46, no 1423.

Nicholas of Lynne was a Carmelite friar and lecturer in theology at Oxford. His calendar, which was composed for John of Gaunt in 1386, is preserved in the Arundel MSS 207 and 347. He was an astronomer of considerable reputation in the reign of Edward III. According to Houzeau and

Lancaster (I, 641, no 3218), a treatise on the astrolabe, ascribed to him exists in MS There is also a tradition, without sufficient support, that Lynne made voyages to the far north and presented charts to Edward III. See Hakluyt's Voyages Edinburgh, 1885-90, I, 93 ff., and Little's comments, p 245

Part I

§ 5, 12 principales On the French form of the plural see the Grammatical Introduction Cf sterras fixas, I, 21, 6, lettres capitals, II, 3, 57

§ 7, 7 nombres of augrym, Arabic numerals Cf MullT, I, 3210, n

§ 8, 14 Alkabucius Alchabitius (Al-Qabisi), 10th century The reference is to his Introductionum ad scientiam iudicalem astronomiae Differentia Prima

§ 10 The statements here are confused and partly erroneous In the first place the names of the months are Roman, not Arabic Secondly, Julius Caesar did not make the changes which Chaucer attributes to him He did give July 31 days but took none from February's 29, to which on the contrary, he added a 30th in the bis-sextile year It was Augustus Caesar who took 1 day (not 2) from February, to give August as many days as July It was only after this and other changes made in his reign that the calendar assumed the form in which Chaucer gives it

§ 11, 3 the A B C the so-called Sunday letters used in reckoning the ecclesiastical calendar

§ 12 Cf Messahala II 444 ff

§ 14, 6 the hors, Lat "equus," Arabic "Al-Faras" Messahala (I, 6 in Gunther II, 147, 201 f) says that the wedge was so called because it was sometimes made in the shape of a horse But the name may refer rather to its function For other applications of the term see NED s v Horse 3

§ 17 With this account of the Tropic of Cancer, which is not in Messahala, cf Sacrobosco, De Sphaera II 5 (fol b 4 verso)

9 Pitolome (St John's MS Ptolomeys almagest) On the Almagest, see MullT, I, 3208, n The reference here is to lib 1, table following cap 12 where the exact declination is given as 23° 51' 20" Skeat notes that the true value in Chaucer's time was about 23° 31' 12 tropos Gr τροπος, a turning ('converso," Sacrobosco, fol b 3 verso)

15 ff With this description of the equinoctial circle of Sacrobosco, II, 1 (fol a 7 recto)

21 the speer solide Chaucer had apparently used a globe to illustrate to Lewis the motions of the heavenly bodies See also, II 26, I, n

40 Sacrobosco II, 1 (fol a 7 verso) "Et dicitur anulus primi motus Unde sciendum quod primus motus dicitur motus primi mobilis hoc est nonae sphaerae, sive coeli ultimi," etc The Primum Mobile was sometimes reckoned as part of the eighth sphere, outside of the "firmamentum" of the fixed stars, and sometimes as the ninth sphere Chaucer, unless 8 is an error for 9 here, follows the former system, Sacrobosco, the latter In FranklT, V, 1283 Chaucer makes the Primum Mobile the ninth

50 ff With the description of the Tropic of Capricorn again of Sacrobosco, II, 5 (fol b 4 recto)

§ 18, 2 certeyn cercles that highten almycanteras Messahala (I 8), "circulus almuqantarath", Arabic 'Almuqantarāt' (pl, with article, of 'muqantarah") They are circles to indicate altitude On the best astrolabes they were marked for every degree of latitude, on Chaucer's only for every other degree

12 compounded by 2 and 2 The instrument was engraved with 45 circles for alternate degrees of latitude, instead of with the whole 90 The Arabians termed this smaller type of astrolabe "nisfi" as distinguished from one that was "tamm" complete

§ 19, 6 azimuth, vertical circles passing from the zenith through the horizon and indicating the position of any heavenly body in azimuth" (Arabic "as-sumūt" pl, with article, of "samt" way, direction)

11 cenyth of the sonne the point of the horizon denoting the sun's position in azimuth

§ 20, 5 On hours of planetes or "unequal hours," see, II 12 n

§ 21 In Skeat's note are the names of the stars marked in the diagram in MS Dd 3 53 which is reproduced as fig 2 Oxf Ch III For further information see Gunther, Early Science in Oxford, II 192 201 205 222 ff

14 The stars of the North are so called with reference to the zodiac, not to the equator Aldebaran and Algomeira are south of the ecliptic, but being north of the equator they rise north of the est lyne

22 arsen rather than the degre of her longitude rise earlier than the point where their meridian crosses the ecliptic

32 Chaucer does not reach this explanation of eclipses There is a brief statement of it in Sacrobosco, II, 2 (fol b 1 recto) IV 2 is entitled "De eclipsi Lunae" (fol d 5 recto)

41 The heavenly zodiac is 12° in breadth, with the ecliptic in the center But Chaucer's astrolabe shows only the northern half

59 The "zodiac" (Gr ζωδιον, diminutive of ζωον living creature) is so named because of the fancied resemblance of many of the constellations to various animals

63 ff The doctrines here referred to belong to what would now be called astrology and illustrations will be found in any standard treatise on the subject Skeat gives a general reference to Porphyrus Philosophus Introductio in Claudi Ptolemaei opus de affectibus astrorum, and cites extracts from a tract in MS, R 15 18, Trin Coll, Camb

101 almury (Arabic "al-mur'i," indicator), called also "denticulus" and "ostensor." The edge of the rete, near the head of Capricornus is cut down to a small projecting tongue or pointer

Part II

§ 1 Cf Messahala, ll 33 ff

Rubric his cours, Skeat her cours In Germanic grammar the sun is feminine, in Lat and Fr, masculine Usage varied in Mid Eng

7 In Chaucer's time the Sun entered Aries on March 12th Reckoned by the new style, the date is March 20-21st

8 I uolde knowe, I wished to know The past tense is appropriate from the point of view of readers who are afterwards to use the treatise Chaucer was probably writing in the year 1391, to which he refers

§ 2 Cf Messahala, ll 41 ff

2 the left syde, the left side of the body which would correspond to the right or eastern edge of the astrolabe

§ 3 Cf Messahala, ll 47 ff

42 For a long note inserted after ascendent in MS B¹ see the textual note

47 Alhabor (Arabic "al-abūr"), Sirius, the Dog-star

§ 4 This section, which deals with astrology, is not from Messahala

18 ff A "house" in astrology covers a space of 30° and corresponds to a sign of the zodiac Each planet has its "house" in a certain sign where its influence is held to be especially powerful Every house is divided into three "faces" of 10°, and the faces are also assigned to the various planets

34 ff An ascendant is fortunate when the so-called "lord of the ascendant," the planet to which the house belongs, is in the rising sign, or else in the succeeding one, with other planets in friendly aspect, where he may see the ascendant It is unfortunate if he is retrograde (that is, moving in a direction contrary to that of the sun in the ecliptic), or combust (that is, too near the sun), or joined with an evil planet in the same sign, or himself descending, or if other planets are in unfriendly aspect For an example of unfortunate conditions see MLT, II 295, and n Cf further Gen Prol I, 417, n

40 "the point where a planet (especially the moon) passed from the northern to the southern side of the ecliptic" (Skeat)

63 On Chaucer's own altitude toward astrology, cf FranklT, V, 1133, n

75 eleccion, choice of a favorable time for an undertaking See MLT, II, 312, and n

§ 5 Cf Messahala, ll 55 ff

§ 6 Cf Messahala, ll 72 ff This conclusion depends upon the fact that light of the sun reaches us when the sun is 18° below the horizon Nadr (Arabic, "nazir," opposite), a point in the heavens, or degree of the zodiac that is directly opposite to some other given point

§ 7 Cf Messahala ll 81 ff

§ 8 Cf Messahala, ll 96 ff

§ 9 Not in Messahala

2 the 2 chaptre before, really in § 6

5 day vulgar, the whole period of daylight, from the beginning of the morning twilight till the end of the evening twilight

§ 10 Cf Messahala, ll 91 ff

2 The term hours of planetes (not used here by Messahala) refers to an astrological supposition which is explained in ll 12 n

8 contenen 30 degrees of the bordure i.e. taken together, they equal two hours or one-twelfth of the equinoctial circle

§ 11 Cf Messahala, ll 104 ff

13 ff Chaucer never reached the fourth part of the treatise in which this explanation was to be made

§ 12 This section again deals with astrology and is not taken from Messahala According to the theory of "hours of planets" the first unequal hour of each day belongs to the planet for which the day is named Thus the first hour of Saturday belongs to Saturn The successive hours are then assigned to the various planets according to the order Sun, Venus, Mercury, Moon, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars The 22nd hour of Saturday will fall to Saturn, the 23rd to Jupiter, the 24th to Mars, and the first hour of Sunday to the Sun Chaucer makes rather elaborate use of the scheme for narrative purposes in the KntT See I 2217 ff, and n

3 The nadir of the sun is said to show the hour of the planet in the morning because that hour is conceived as "entering upon the west horizon" (ll 14 ff) In the evening the sun itself marks the hour and continues to do so all the night

§ 13 Cf Messahala, ll 122 ff

§ 14 Cf Messahala, ll 149 ff The procedure here is the reverse of that described in § 13

§ 15 Cf Messahala, ll 156 ff

§ 16 Cf Messahala ll 142 ff Logically this might be expected to precede § 14, as it does in Messahala

§ 17 Cf Messahala, ll 341 ff (which deal however, merely with finding the degree of a planet) The method is as follows Determine the altitude of the star before it souths and find the ascending degree of the zodiac Then find the ascending degree at an equal interval after it souths, when the star has the same altitude as before The mean between them will be the degree that ascends when the star is on the meridian Set this degree upon the eastern part of the horizon obliquus, and the degree which souths with the star will then be on the meridian line Skeat notes that this method is liable to considerable error because it does not distinguish between right ascension (reckoned from the equator) and longitude (reckoned from the ecliptic) The error is slight when the observations are taken very close to the meridian

3 take an assendent, as in u, 3

9 eny thyng the south westward, a little west of the south line

§ 18 Cf Messahala, ll 160 ff

1 the centre, the end of the metal tongue representing the star on the rete of the astrolabe

§ 19 Not in Messahala

10 north or south from the equinoxall, rather, from the ecliptic, as the rest of the discussion implies

§ 20 Cf Messahala ll 203 ff The declination of a given degree of the zodiac is the difference between its meridian altitude and that of the 1st point of Aries

§ 21 Cf Messahala, ll 236 ff The latitude of a given place equals the number of degrees between the zenith and the south point of the equinoctial circle The number of degrees from the pole to the northern point of the "horizon obliquus" is the same

§§ 22-23 Not in Messahala

§ 23, 30 ff Some MSS have here a set of observations calculated nearly for the latitude of Rome

§ 24 Cf Messahala, ll 232 ff

4 make a nombre, add together

§ 25 Cf Messahala, ll 215 ff

24 Several MSS give the more accurate reckoning $38^{\circ} 25'$, with its (inexact) complement $51^{\circ} 50'$ But Chaucer's own statement just below makes it probable that he used only the rough reckoning The true latitude of Oxford, Skeat notes, is between $51^{\circ} 45'$ and $51^{\circ} 46'$

§ 26 Not in Messahala It corresponds in substance to Sacrobosco's De Sphaera, iii, 1, 2

1 the spere solide is taken by Professor Liddell to refer to Sacrobosco's work But both here and in i, 17, 21 it is more likely to mean a globe such as Chaucer had used in some of his demonstrations to Lewis

5 These auctours, i.e. authorities (in general) On the generalizing use of these see KnT, I, 1531, and n

6 right ascension, to be carefully distinguished from "right ascension" as used in modern astronomy for longitude reckoned from the equator The reference here is to those signs which ascend more directly, that is, at a greater angle to the horizon than the rest See the further explanation in § 28, below

12-18 Ferther-over right orisonte these lines, which are essential to the thought, are omitted in nearly all the MSS

26 ascensions, "in the right circle, in modern terminology "right ascensions"

§ 27 Cf Messahala, ll 284 ff The problem is to determine how many degrees of the equinoctial pass the meridian with a given sign

§ 28 Cf Messahala, ll 292 ff The problem is to determine how many degrees of the equinoctial ascend while a given sign is crossing the horizon Cf § 26, above

32 The oblique, or tortuous, signs are said to obey the direct signs

§ 29 Cf Messahala, ll 152 ff

§ 30 Cf Messahala, ll 352 ff

Rubric by the way of the sonne is meant here the sun's apparent motion on any given day

§ 31 Cf Messahala, ll 176 ff

Rubric cenyth, zenith, not in the usual sense, but with reference to a point on the horizon

9 Seamen divided the horizon into thirty-two parts, as in the modern mariners' compass This information is not in Messahala

§ 32 Not in Messahala The problem is simply to find the sun's azimuth at a given time

§ 33 Cf Messahala ll 165 ff

Rubric cenyth, azimuth (as in § 31)

§ 34 Cf Messahala, ll 323 ff

5 upon the mones syde, i.e. in nearly the same azimuth as the moon

15 ff The moon's latitude is never more than $5\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ from the ecliptic, and this distance is commonly neglected in treatises or the astrolabe

§ 35 Cf Messahala, ll 361 ff A planet is said to have "direct" motion when it follows the succession of the signs of the zodiac, "retrograde" when it moves in the opposite direction

27 as in hir epicycle The moon was held to revolve in an epicycle about a center which itself revolved about the earth The motion of the center was supposed to be direct, that of the moon in the epicycle, retrograde See the Almagest iv 5, and ix, 5

§ 36 Cf Messahala, ll 372 ff For the definition of a "house" see u, 4, 18, n The present section and the following deal with the method of dividing the sphere correctly into the twelve houses

§ 37 Cf Messahala, ll 388 ff

§§ 38-40 Not in Messahala Mr R. T. Gunther (Early Science in Oxford, II, 203) has pointed out the similarity of § 38 to a section Ad meridian inveniendum in the De Mensura Horologii ascribed to the Venerable Bede § 38, 1 for werpyng, to provide against warping Cf For Percyng, Thop, VII, 862, n

§ 39 With the definition of the meridian line of Sacrobosco, u, 4 (fol b 2 verso)

25 ther chaungen her almykanteras, they differ in latitude

28 ff By longitude and latitude of a climat Chaucer means "length" and "breadth" respectively His treatment of "climates," or zones, is very brief Seven were regularly reckoned in his time, and they are discussed fully by Sacrobosco, iii, 9 (fol d 1 verso et seq) See further Gunther, II, 211 f

§ 40 The problem is to find with what degree of the zodiac a planet ascends, its latitude and longitude being known

21 upward, i e, inward, or northward, on the astrolabe

91 thou shalt do wel ynow may have been added by a scribe to finish the sentence See the textual note

Colophon — In MS Dd 3 53, according to Skeat, after houre after houre, the rest of the page is blank except for the following colophon "Explicit tractatus de Conclusionibus Astrolabu complatus per Galfridum Chauciers ad Filium suum Lodewicum, scolare tunc temporis Oxonie ac sub tutela illius nobilissimi philosophi Magistri N Strode, &c" The authority of this statement has been questioned by Gollancz, who suggested that the initial N should perhaps be read R, and that the whole note was a late and unauthorized explanation of Chaucer's dedication of the Troilus to Ralph Strode See DNB, s v, Strode, Ralph

§§ 41-46 The conclusions or propositions which follow are of doubtful authenticity They are preserved only in late MSS, the style is rather different from that of the body of the work, and they follow what appears to be the unfinished sentence in § 40 But they have been included here because their genuineness is not absolutely disproved and some of them illustrate certain points in Chaucer's writings They do not correspond exactly to the text of Messahala, though the substance of § 41 is similar to Messahala ll 483 ff, and that of §§ 42-43 to ll 497 ff

It may be further noted that §§ 44-45 refer to tables which showed the position of the planets on Dec 31, 1397 If these were real tables, and the date was not merely set down for purpose of illustration, it is unlikely that Chaucer would have been using them in 1391 The sections in question, then, if by Chaucer at all, were probably added several years after the main part of the Astrolabe was composed

§§ 41-43 By umbra recta, or "extensa" is meant the shadow cast on a horizontal plane by an upright object, umbra versa is the shadow cast on a perpendicular plane by a style which projects from it at right angles It is generally understood that for calculations by umbra recta the sun's altitude shall be greater than 45°, and by umbra versa, less than 45°

§ 41, 5 The reule here used is represented (in Skeat's drawing, Fig 1) on the back of the astrolabe It is divided into twelve parts Hence the calculations in the text are based upon twelve

§ 44 This conclusion and the following explain the use of tables calculated to show the position of a planet at any given date In those to which the author refers the basis of calculation was Dec 31 1397 The positions of the planets were shown for that date, and their changes of position indicated by the so-called tables of anni collecti et expansi The anni collecti showed the motion for collective periods of years (from 20 to 3000, according to the text), the anni expansi, for the shorter periods from 1 to 20

For an interesting reference to the use of such tables see Frankf V, 1275 ff

2 rote, root, the data used as a basis of calculation

§ 45, 2 Arsecheles tables, doubtless the Astronomical Tables of Arzachel (Ibn al-Zarqālī) There is a copy in Merton College MS 259, formerly the property of William Rede, Bishop of Chichester (d 1385) (Gunter, II, 384)

§ 46 This follows § 40 in MS B¹ Skeat prints five additional sections (numbered 41^a, 41^b, 42^a, 43^a, 42^b) which are generally conceded to be spurious

THE ROMAUNT OF THE ROSE

The belief that Chaucer translated the Roman de la Rose rests upon his own testimony in the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women, confirmed — if confirmation were necessary — by Lydgate's Prologue to Bk 1 of The Fall of Princes and a ballade of Deschamps (no 285, Euvres, SATF, II, 138) The only Middle English translation known to exist is the fragmentary poem here printed It is preserved in a single Glasgow MS, which lacks the beginning and has no ascription to any author Thynne included the work in his Chaucer of 1532 and it was long afterwards regarded as Chaucerian But modern criticism has questioned its authenticity It was rejected in whole or in part by Bradshaw, Furnivall, Ten Brink, and Skeat, whose changes of opinion are registered by Miss Hammond, pp 451-52 In 1890 Kaluza

(Acad, XXXVIII, 11) argued that the translation is really in three fragments (1-1705, 1706-5810, 5811-7696), and this conclusion has been generally agreed upon as a basis of later discussion But judgments have continued to differ on the question of authorship Kaluza assigned fragments A and C to Chaucer, and held B to be by another poet Skeat's final opinion was that fragment A alone was Chaucer's The authenticity of the entire poem was defended by Lounsbury, whose arguments were answered in detail by Professor Kitzredge At the opposite extreme from Lounsbury stands Professor Koch, who would deny Chaucer any part of the work

Most recently a new examination of the evidence was made by A Brusendorff in The Chaucer Tradition (London and Copenhagen, 1925, pp 308 ff) Rejecting Kaluza's division of the poem at line 1705 Professor Brusendorff recognized only two fragments (lines 1-5810 and 5811-end) Both of them in their original form, he held to have been written by Chaucer But he thought the text was handed down by a "transmitter" who depended on his memory and was able to produce only a fragmentary and mutilated copy Dialectal forms not proper to Chaucer he explained on the theory that the transmitter was from a northerly locality He believed Chaucer's translation of the Roman to have been complete, and pointed out passages in both Chaucer and Lydgate which he thought to be based upon portions of the work not represented in the existing fragments Holding that the transmitter, when his memory failed, resorted freely to composition, Professor Brusendorff undertook by the boldest sort of emendation to restore this supposed Chaucerian original

Such is the variety of opinion about Chaucer's authorship of the Romaunt, and the question can perhaps never be positively decided on the internal evidence which appears to be alone available Fragment A — to revert to the subdivision of Kaluza, which is still valid in spite of Brusendorff's criticism — accords well enough with Chaucer's usage in language and meter If there is no definite evidence in favor of Chaucer's authorship there is also no conclusive reason for rejecting it But fragment B, on the testimony of the dialect alone, can hardly be Chaucer's and the non-Chaucerian forms in fragment C, though fewer than in B, would probably be held evidence enough for the rejection of an independent poem It seems more reasonable to assign B and C to a second translator, perhaps a Northern Chaucerian, than to explain them as works of Chaucer corrupted in transmission In fact Professor Brusendorff's hypothesis of a transmitter by memory is a rather desperate measure to save the Chaucerian authorship of the whole poem

Full references on the question of authorship are given by Brusendorff, see also Miss Hammond, pp 451 ff, and Wells, pp 649 ff Of preceding discussions of the subject the following are representative T R Lounsbury, Studies in Chaucer, New York, 1892, II, Chap iv, G L Kittredge [Harv] Stud and Notes, I 1 ff, Kaluza, Chaucer und der Rosenroman, Berlin, 1893, and later articles in Est, XXIII, 336, XXIV, 343, Skeat, The Chaucer Canon, Oxford, 1900, pp 65 ff, J Koch, Est, XXVII, 61-73, 227-34, XXX, 451-56, A D Schoob, MP, III, 339 ff (a survey of the evidence)

Authors other than Chaucer to whom the translation has been ascribed are the writer of the Testament of Love, King James I of Scotland (for fragment B), and Lydgate (for fragments B and A) See Lindner, Est, XI, 172, Skeat, Canon, pp 84 ff, Lange, Est,

XXIX, 397 ff, Koch Est, XXVII, 61 ff, 227 ff

The English poem covers about one-third of the French Roman de la Rose, specifically lines 1-5154, 10679-12360 It is to be noted that the English fragment A does not contain the heresy against Love with which Chaucer is charged in the Legend of Good Women The passages in condemnation of women to which the God or Love might have objected are all in Jean de Meun's part of the French poem (i.e., after line 4058) Some of them are included in fragment B of the English, and some do not appear at all in the translation

The date of Chaucer's translation is not definitely known It must have preceded the Prologue to the Legend (circa 1386) and is usually assigned to the earliest years of his literary production Professor Brusendorff, because of the association of the work with the Troilus in the Prologue to the Legend, would date it near 1380 But he himself recognizes that the metrical form of the existing fragments is more like that of the Book of the Duchess than that of the House of Fame The influence of the French Roman is apparent in every period of Chaucer's work See Fansler, Chaucer and the Roman de la Rose, New York, 1914, Miss L Cipriani Studies in the influence of the Romance of the Rose on Chaucer, PMLA, XXII, 552 ff

Editions of the French poem have been numerous since it was first printed about 1480 The earliest to be based upon a comparison of MSS is that of Meon, 4 v, Paris, 1814 The editions of F Michel, 2 v, Paris, 1864, and P Marteau, 5 v, Orléans, 1878-80, rest upon Meon's A new critical text by E Langlois has recently been published by the SATF, 5 v, Paris, 1914-24 The parts of the poem which correspond to the English Romaunt were printed by Kaluza, mainly from Michel's text, parallel with his edition of the Glasgow MS (Ch Soc, 1891) Skeat (Oxf Ch, I, 93 ff) printed from Meon's text the portion which corresponds to fragment A References to the Roman made by recent editors and other investigators of Chaucer are usually to the edition by Méon (as in Skeat's notes) or to that of Michel (as in Fansler's study) Fansler (pp 240 ff) gives a table of correspondences in the line-numbers of Méon, Michel, and Marteau In the present edition references are to the text of Langlois

In the following notes as in the case of the Boece and other translations, no attempt is made at a detailed collation of Chaucer's text with his original The French version is cited only for the elucidation of the English References to the sources of the Roman are added for the convenience of readers who wish to trace further the history of the ideas Fuller information on the subject will be found in Langlois's notes and in his treatise, Origines et Sources du Roman de la Rose,

Paris, 1891 On illustrations in the MSS, which are of exceptional interest see A Kuhn, Jahrbuch der Kunsthistorischen Sammlungen des allerhochsten Kaiserhauses XXXI, 1-66, and E Winkler, Guillaume de Lorris der Roman von der Rose, Vienna, 1921

On the principles followed in the present edition of the English text, see the introduction to the Textual Notes on the Romaunt

1 With this whole discussion of dreams cf NPT, VII, 2922 ff., and n., HF, 1-52, and n.

7 Macrobes, Macrobius, the commentator on Cicero's Somnium Scipionis

9 undoth can mean either "expounds" or "relates" (Fr "escrist") In BD, 284 and NPT, VII, 3123, Chaucer speaks of Macrobius as if he were the author of the Somnium, an impression he might have derived from this line of Lorris But in PF, 31, he names Tullyus as the author

22 carriage, Liddell's emendation (Globe edn) of corage, Fr "pagee," toll

42 In this and later allusions to the lady for whom the poem was written the English simply follows the French The person intended by Guillaume de Lorris is unknown

61-62 Cf LGW Prose, 125-26, G, 113-14

63 Cf Alain de Lille, De Planctu Naturae (Migne, Pat Lat., CCX, 447 ff.)

71 The description which follows has many parallels in mediæval poetry For illustrations and possible sources see Langlois's note, which refers to O M Johnston, ZRPB, XXXII, 705 ff

98 aguler, needle-case (Fr "aguillier"), seems not to be recorded elsewhere in English

104 The sleeves were tightly laced or sewn with a thread Cf l 570, below Langlois notes several other examples from French poems See also his article in Rom, XXXIII, 405

118 Seyne the river Seine

119 strayghter wel away, much broader, Fr "plus espandue"

129 Beet, struck, bordered, Fr "batoit"

140 The images described were painted on the wall Langlois compares the garden wall in Floire et Blanceflor, ed Du Ménil, Paris, 1856, I, 71

149 For moveresse Globe reads meveresse Fr "moverresse" The Glasgow MS and Thynne have mymoresse, which may be due to the reading "meneresse" in certain Fr MSS (See Brusendorf, p 308)

191 smale harlotes, petty criminals For the generalizing use of these of l 411, below (Fr "ces"), see also KnT, I, 1531, n

235 perche, a horizontal pole, such as was put up in bedrooms for hanging clothes

233-34 Fr "Car sachez que mout li pesast Se cele robe point usast" The English does not quite correspond

247 ff The portrait of Envy is based upon Ovid, Met, II, 775 ff

276 for pure wood, from sheer madness Cf for hor, line 356, For mouste, line 1564, for wod, HF, 1747, for pure ashamed, Tr, II, 656 and see KnT, I, 2142, n

292 baggingly, askant, Fr "borgneiant"

325 tere hir swire, tear her throat This is not in the Fr

356 for hor "because (of being) hoary", possibly to be read for-hor, "very hoary" See KnT, I, 2142, n

358 synne, pity, Fr "pechiez"

363 Here again the English departs from the original Fr "Les oreilles avoit mosues," var "velues," (wrinkled? hairy?)

366 her hondes lorne Fr "E toutes lez denz si perdues" But some MSS read "maans," hands, for "denz," teeth

369 ff Cf ML P. ol, II, 20 ff

387 Cf "Tempus edax rerum," Met xv, 234 ff

413 don there write, cause to be written Fr "escrite" here used of portrayal in painting

415 Poope-holy, hypocritical, Fr "Pape-lardie" The original meaning of "papelard" appears to have been "glutton" (from Fr "paper," eat and "lard" bacon) The English form "pope-holy" is due to popular etymology

442 ay, ever (rather than the verb agh, ought, from AS "ah," as Skeat suggested)

446 Mat vi, 16

468 Job iii, 3

490 dawngerous, stingy, Fr "dangereus ne chuches" Langlois has "desdeigneus"

544 The opening of her yen clere, Fr "Li entriaux" i e, the space between her eyes Langlois in his note cites other instances where a "large entruel" is mentioned as a beautiful trait

564 werede upon, wore (upon her) For the construction of WB Prose, III, 559 n

579 journe, day's work, Fr "jornee"

593 With the allegory of Idleness as the porter of Love's garden Langlois compares Ovid, Rem Am, 139 "Otia si tollas, perere Cupidinis arcus"

611 The pictures were "full of sorrow and woe" to repel visitors

624 For this proverbial use of India cf ParT, VI, 722, and n

648 The comparison with the Earthly Paradise was familiar For other examples see Langlois's note 668 That other, used with a pl noun Cf line 991, below

676 of man that myghte dye, i e, of mortal man

684 sereyns, Sirens In Bo, I, pr 1, 75, Chaucer has mermaydenes for the Lat "Sirenes"

692 erst For the idiom of KnT, I 1566, n

720 reverdye, rejoicing, Fr "reverdie" The NED records no other case of reverdye, and perhaps the MS reading, reverye, should be retained (as in Globe)

766 Langlois cites another reference to songs of Lorraine in the Galerent, li 1171-72

768 tha contre, Orleans

791 Ne bede I, I would never ask

868 lakyng agreeable, Fr "plaisant" (Kaluza) Langlois reads "Que vos iroie je disant?"

892 amorettes, Fr "par fines amorettes," which may mean "by beautiful girls" The English fragment B (line 4755) has amourettes in this sense In the present passage Skeat interprets it with love-knots and argues that with cannot mean 'by' in this phrase and "with" in the rest of the sentence Langlois cites in this connection li 155-57 from the Jugement d'Amour "Cotes orent de roses pures, Et de violetes caintures Que par soulaiz firent amors" (Barbazan and Meon, Fabliaux et Contes, IV, 359)

915 archaungell titmouse? (Fr "messengers") The word is not known elsewhere in this sense 923 ff With the idea of the two bows and two set of arrows of Ovid Met, 1, 468 ff Langlois cites parallels from mediæval literature

997 The explanation here promised was never written

1007 Cf line 952, above

1014 byrde, bride (though the words may be of different origin), Fr "esposée"

1018 wyndred, trimmed? painted?, Fr "gugniee" Liddell cites "winrede brues" from the O E Homilies, 2nd Ser (ed Morris, EETS, 1873, p 213), where the meaning is apparently "ogling glances" That interpretation seems less likely here, though the Fr "gugnier" is ambiguous Cotgrave gives "gugner," to wink, and Godefroy has "gugn(ier)," meaning "parer," "farder"

1031 Sore plesaunt, etc, a difficult line The Fr has "Sade, plaisant, sperte e counte" Skeat emends Wys for Sore, and Kaluza suggests Sade Probably Sore is the correct reading and is used merely for emphasis Cf line 4305, below

1089 durst, needed The verbs dar and tharf were often confused Cf line 1324, below

1093 Frise, Friesland, added in the English Explained by A S Cook (MLN, XXXI, 442) as Phrygia rather than Friesland, which did not abound in gold He compares Rom de Thebes, 6630, but an English parallel would make his case stronger

1106 besaunt, a gold coin, named for Byzantium, where it was struck The weight was less than that of an English sovereign

1117 yagounces, jacinths or hyacinths Lydgate (Chorl and Eird, st 34, Mimor Poems, Percy Soc 1840, p 188) describes the yagounce as "Cyttryne of colour, lyke garnettes of entayle"

1152 Alexander is here a type of liberality, as King Arthur, in line 1199 below, is of chivalry

1158 sende, sent, Chaucer's usual preterite is sente

1182 adamauri, lodestone On its meanings see Knt I, 1990, n

1232 sukhenye Fr "sorqueme," a frock It was not made of hempen hards, but probably of fine linen

1235 rdled, gathered, or pleaded, like a curtain (OF "ridel") The Fr here has "cullie e jointe" and Langlois renders "cullie" by "ajustee"

1240 roket, here synonymous with sukhenye, now used of the short surplice or a bishop

1250 The lord of Windsor, when Guillaume de Lorris wrote, was Henry III His son Edward (afterwards Edward I) was born in 1239 Perhaps however the reference was not to contemporary history but to Arthurian romance Langlois cites Chgès, 1237 ff, and Rigomer, 13188 for the association of Windsor with King Arthur For the order of words in The lordis sone of Wyndesora of CIT IV, 1170 n

1314 olmeris, elms Fr "morners" (perhaps misread as "ormiers")

1324 See l 1089, n

1341 Skeat's emendation, wol shete (inf) meie (pres ind) provides correct rimes, but breaks the sequence of tenses Possibly shette is for a past participle shete(n), instead of the more regular sho e(n)

1353 Fr "Il n'est nus arbres qui fruit charge Se n'est aucuns arbres hisdeus, Don il n'ai ou un ou deus Ou verger, ou plus, se devient" That is to say, all kinds of fruit trees, except a few which would have been too hideous, were represented in the orchard The English misses the point

1369 greyn de parys, Fr "Graine de parevis" Skeat emends parys to paradys, but "greyn(s) de Parys" is recorded several times in Middle English It is a corruption of "graine(s) de parais (pareys pareis)," the popular form which existed in Old French alongside of the learned formation "graine de paradis" See Angl Berbl, XXIX, 46

1374 coynes, quins (whence, by misunderstanding of the plural, "quince")

1377 aleyx, the fruit of the wild service tree Fr "ales" No other case has been noted of the occurrence of the word in English

1383 With the tree list here of those in PF, 176 ff, and Knt I, 2921 ff

1414 condys, conduits Fr "conduiz" For the loss of the t in the English plural comparison may be made with avocas, the reading of several MSS, in PardT, VI, 291

1426 myster, need

1436 poudered, Fr "pipolee" (var "piclee")

1453 at good mes, from a favorable point, Fr "en bon leu" Cf line 3462 The figure is that of a good range, or shot, in hunting

1458 Peppyn, Pepin, king of the Franks, father of Charlemagne One French MS reads "Mais puis Karles le fils Pepin" (Langlois reads "Mais puis Charle ne puis Pepin")

1469 The source of the story of Narcissus is Ovid, Met., III, 356 ff 1537 warisoun, reward? By confusion of Fr "guerredon," with "guerison?"

1591 accuseth, discloses, Fr "accusent" (Kaluzs), Langlois has "encusent"

1604 to lgge upright, to be flat, i.e., to die

1610 Yblent, blinded? deceived? Fr "mis en rage" (Kaluzs), Langlois has "mis a glaiue"

1652 enclos, enclosed, a French form

1674 ron, bush? Fr "soz ciaux"

1705 According to the usual view, there is a break here in both rime and sense which marks the end of the first fragment Kaluzs put the division after line 1704, but it comes better, as Skeat showed, after line 1705 Various proposals have been made to complete the sentence Skeat suggested that a line had been lost, such as, Fulfil of barme, withouten doute, Liddell (Globe edn) that an original couplet with the rimes swete, adj swete, vb ("sweat"), or swete replete (for Fr "replenist"), had been corrupted in copying Professor W P Reeves (MLN XXXVIII, 124) would avoid the necessity of any emendation by taking dide (Th dyed) as dyed and giving it an unusual application to fragrance In the opinion of Professor Liddell the work of the second poet, if there is a change of authors, does not begin until line 1715 Professor Brusendorff (pp 320-21) argued that it is not necessary to assume any new fragment at all In a case of such complete uncertainty it is best to let the MS reading stand unaltered

Lists of imperfect rimes and other forms in fragment B which do not accord with Chaucerian usage will be found in Skeat's introduction, Oxf Ch., I, 4 ff Examples of the various irregularities are pointed out in the following notes

1721 botoun (misspelt bothom or bothum) is used in fragment B to translate Fr "bouton," which was rendered knoppe in fragment A

1728 On this conception of love entering the heart by way of the eye see KnT, I, 1096, n

1733 n [a] stounde, Fr "tantost"

1776 withouten were, without warning, Fr "senz menacer" Skeat notes that similar tags, like withouten doute, withouten were, are common in fragment B But in this instance the phrase has appropriateness and force

1785-86 desir ner, an imperfect rime Other examples are ll 2037-38, joynt queynt, 2441-42, desyr ner, 2779-80, desyr maner, 4181-82, ademant foundement, 4685-86, ler desir

1794-95 Not in the Fr Apparently a proverb or quotation Cf lines 2084 ff, below

1802 The third arrow is here named Curtesie In ll 955 ff, it was called Fraunchise fethred With valour and with curtesye

1811-12 The rime hit (pp) hit (inf) is un-Chaucerian For other cases of the disregard of the final -e of the infinitive see lines 1873-74, 1939-40 1981-82, 2615-16, 2627-28, 2629-30, 2645-46, 2755-56, 3099-3100

1813-14 Another irregular rime, in which the final -e of the weak preterite, wroughte, is clipped

1818 ner, positive, as in line 1848 It is usually comparative in Chaucer But cf KnT I, 1439, n

1820 Fr "Qu'eschaudez doit eve doter" The translation gives the proverb in the form more familiar in English Cf CYT, VIII 1407, also Proverbs of Hendyng l 184 (in Morris and Skeat Specimens of Early English, II, Oxford 1872 p 40) See further Herrg's Arch., LXXXVIII, 376, Haechel, p 21 no 68

1847 Loose translation Fr "E durement n'abelssoit Ce que jou veote a bandon"

1849-50 I malady (for maladye) an example of the un-Chaucerian y ye rime Other instances are in lines 1861, 2179, 2209, 2493, 2737, 3241, 4145

1853-54 thore more, for thar mar, a Northern rime Chaucer's forms would be there and more

1906 Rokyn, apparently the same word as rouken, "crouch," "cower" in KnT, I, 1308 The line is not in the French

1928 lepande, a Northern participle

1965 "The healing of love must be found where they [the lovers] got their wound" Professor Liddell suggests that love is personal (= "lover") and should perhaps be plural The general idea that only the weapon that gives a wound can cure it — as in the Greek story of Achilles and Telephus — is familiar, and its application to love is not unusual

2002 sauff vouchs, vouchsafe

2028 The figure of the prison may be due, as Professor Liddell suggests, to the misunderstanding of Fr "aprison," instruction "Dedenz lu ne puet demorer Vilanie ne mesprison Ne nule mauvaie aprison"

2037 This was the regular posture of the vassal in doing homage

2038 made it queynt, bore myself with due ceremony, Fr "mout me fis comtes" For the idiom of line 3863, Gen Prol, I, 785, n

2044 taken, perhaps to be emended to tan (Northern), as Skeat suggests

2051 And, if

2076 disseise, dispossess

2077-78 justice, government? control? (punishment? Liddell) The translation is obscure and not quite parallel to Kaluzs

Fr text "Tel garnison i aves mise, Qui le guerroye a vostre guise" Langlois reads "Tel garnison i avez mise Qui le garde bien e jostise"

2088 For this conception of the key Langlois refers to Chretien de Troyes, Ivain, 4632 ff., Perceval 3810 ff

2092 loke and knette, locked and fast bound

2149-52 These lines, in the French, follow line 2144 and form part of a speech of the god of Love

2157-62 Not in the French

2161 poynth, punctuates, i e , in reading The MSS were not punctuated

2170 Romance, the French language

2181 f Cf WBT, III, 1158

2185-2202 Not in the Fr For the ideas of WBT, III, 1109 ff., which Skeat remarked may have suggested the passage to the translator of fragment B Brusendorff (pp 392 ff.) insisted that the parallels here and elsewhere strongly support Chaucer's authorship of the whole translation

2203 Cf Ovid, Ars Amat, II, 604

2206 References might be multiplied to passages in which Kay appears as the type of vilanye, or Gawain, of courtesy Langlois, in his note gives instances from Old French. On Gawain, cf SqT, V, 95 An example of Kay's rudeness may be found in Malory's Morte d'Arthur, vii, ch 1

2230 to thy power, to the extent of thy power

2255-84 With this counsel of Ovid, Ars Amat, I, 513-24

2263 sittand, the Northern form of the participle is here established by the rime

2269 sute so pleyrn, fit so closely smoothly

2271 The MS spelling awmere (awmere, Th) here is probably only a scribal error

2293 f Fr "C'est maladie moult courtoise, Ou l'en jeue e rit e envoise"

2301-04 Not in the Fr

2311-12 "If you are accomplished in any art, do not be distant and offish about performance" For the following counsel of Ovid Ars Amat, I, 595 ff

2323 Kaluza, in a foot-note proposed to emend foote to floyte (Fr "fleuter") Brusendorff (p 418) suggested also changing the third person to the second, for consistency

2326-28 Not in the Fr Among, adverbial, "from time to time"

2326 that thou make, apparently an independent hortatory subjunctive See the textual note

2329 scarce, miserly Fr "aver"

2349 ff Cf Horace, Ars Poet, 335 ff

2355 joyne, enjoin, Fr "enjoing"

2362 ff Fr "Vuel je e comant que tu aies En un seul leu tot ton cuer miers, Si qu'il n'i soit mie demis, Mais toz entiers, senz trichier" The reading and sense are both doubtful in the translation Skeat, keeping For trecherie, explains it "Against treachery, in all security" Liddell emends, Of trecherie, and interprets "half treacherous, half faithful"

The phrase halfen dool preserves an archaic form of the adjective in -n (from AS 'healfne dæl')

2367 For the ellipsis of the subject here cf line 2416, below

2386 maugre his, in spite of himself

2421 For this conceit of the separation of the lover's heart from his body Langlois cites Chigès, lines 5180 ff

2427 Cf the proverb "Ubi amor, ibi oculus," of which Langlois notes several versions

2463 lete, cease

2478 Proverbial, cf Tr, I, 449, n.

2497 ff Obscure and only partly paralleled in the Fr See the textual note

2522 The observance of secrecy was one of the fundamental principles of courtly love See NPT, VII, 2914 ff, n

2564 "Like a man defeated in war" The Fr differs "Come ome qui a mal as denz"

2573 "Castles in Spain" are still proverbial On the history of the expression see Morel-Fatio in the Melanges Proct, Paris, 1913, I, 335, cf also Haeckel, p 19, no 60

2592 Fro joye, MS The joye Skeat keeps The and makes joye the object c. langoure—a difficult construction

2604 warned, refused

2621 of hur, Liddell's suggestion, the MS reads on hur, Skeat and Globe on me

2628 luggen, a Northern form, which should perhaps be corrected since ly(e) occurs in rime below in lines 2629, 2645

2631 Fr "Gesurs est enuiseuse chose"

2641 contene, contain thyself? (Skeat), continue? (Liddell) Perhaps a mistake for contende, Fr "te contendas"

2643 This departs from the Fr "Se j'onques mal d'amer conu" (in the first person)

2660 score, crack, Fr "fendêtre"

2673 ff This departs from the Fr and is perhaps corrupt See the textual note to l 2676

With the use of relyk here and in l 2907 as a term of endearment cf LGW Prol F, 321, and n

2684 Cf Ovid, Ars Amat, I, 729, 733

2695 Cf Ars Amat, I, 251 ff

2709 mare (fare), a Northern form

2710 Cf Ars Amat, I, 357 ff, also the proverb "Out of sight, out of mind," to which Langlois cites numerous parallels 2738 ff The ideas are proverbial Langlois cites the Latin line quoted by Rabelais (Pantagruel, II, 41) "Dulcor est fructus post multa pericula ductus"

2755 Cf Ovid, Pont, I, 6, 37

2775 Fr "Esperance par sofrir vaint"

The French is nearer than the English to the proverb, "Qui patitur vincit"

2833-36 Not in the Fr The negative in line 2836 seems necessary to the sense 2840 Gaston Paris (Hist Litt de la France, XXVIII 373, n) took this to be an allusion to the lady of Fayel. But the identification is uncertain. Guillaume de Lorris appears, as Langlois notes, to be quoting the words of a song. The English version is free and considerably expanded. The lady's words, in the original, refer only to hearing speech about her lover. In the English, they include speaking herself about him, and thus of course is involved, in both versions, in the advice which follows about selecting a confidant.

2881 "Then shall he [go] further"

2884 With this allusion to the institution of "sworn brotherhood" of the story of Palamon and Arcite. See KnT, I, 1132, n

2951 "When the god of Love had taught," etc. The inversion is unusual

3043 ff Fr "Chasteé, qui dame doit estre E des roses e des boutons, Iert assaillie des gloutons Si que'le avoit mestier d'aie" The English translation departs from the original, perhaps through some confusion

3088 but it rises, unless it happen (?) Cf line 3115, where arise translates Fr "aveuir"

3130 The description of Dawnger is characteristic of the "villain," or peasant, as he appears in mediæval literature. Many features are also matched in the accounts of giants in the romances and chansons de geste. For illustrations see Langlois's note, also J M Vogt, The Peasant in Mid Eng Lit, unpublished Harv diss., 1923

3137 kraked, crooked? Form unexplained. Fr "le nés froncé"

3146 Proverbial, cf Haeckel, pp 40 f, no 139

3185 "I could not hold out against the pain" Not in the Fr

3205 ff Langlois compares, for the idea, Ivain, 1492 ff, and P Meyer, Recueil d'Antiens Textes, Paris, 1874-77, p 372. See also the remarks about Nature in PhysT, VI, 9 ff, and n

3233 Ne hadde, etc., if Idleness had not led thee

3253-54 Fr "E de Dangier neient ne monte Envers que de ma fille Honte"

3256 "Like one who is no sluggard" Fr "Con cele qui n'est pas musarde" For the idiom cf line 4235, below, also MLT, II, 1090, n

3269 ff Such references to the folly of love were commonplace in mediæval literature. Cf, for example, the speech of Theseus, KnT, I, 1785 ff, and n

3294 "And to leave off is a masterly course" Fr "Mes au lessier a grant mestrise" (Kaluza), "Mais a l'issir a grant maistrise" (Langlois)

3303 leve, believe, Fr "croit"

3326 in the payne, by torture Cf KnT, I, 1133

3386 Ferwery, very weary? Cf KnT, I,

3342, n.

3346 a Freend, a proper name in the Fr "Amis or non" It is apparently not to be so taken in the English

3373 The rime manace (with silent -e) caas is un-Chaucerian

3377 This departs from the French, which has the comparison (still proverbial)

"Je le conois come un denier"

3401 burdown, Fr "baston d'espine"

3422 That, perhaps to be emended to And, Fr "e"

3432 ff A commonplace sentiment Cf KnT, I, 1806, and n

3437 Obscure Fr "Mout trova Dangier dur e lent De pardonner son maualent" Skeat interprets fil, "condescended", Liddell, "failed"

3454 tall, unusual spelling for tale, which here rimes with all

3462 at good mes, at a favorable opportunity, Fr "en bon point" See the note to line 1453 above

3463 Cf Prov xv, 1, also passages cited by Langlois in his note to l 2627 (= Rom, 2775)

3489 ff Fr "E tant qu'il a certainement Veu a mon contenment Qu' Amors m'alement me jostise," etc

3502 bothen, Liddell's emendation of bothom, which Skeat refers to the botoun. But of the Fr, "Car l'une e l'autre me voudroit Aidier, s'eus pueent, volentiers"

3539 Cf Ovid, Ex Ponto, n, 9, 11

3548 Thus, this is

3604 dar, for thar, need See the note to line 1089, above

3674 Langlois compares Robert de Blois, Chast des Dames, ll 124 ff (Barbazan and Méon, Fabliaux et Contes, II, 188)

3687 f Proverbial. Langlois cites parallels from Latin and French. Cf Haeckel, pp 13 f, no 44

3715 of religiom, of a religious order

3733 Here and in line 3796 Liddell would give beaute three syllables. But this seems unlikely. The same question arises in the KnT, I, 2385

3774 The emendation mille, for MS wille, may be unnecessary. Cf Intro to MLT II, 49, n

3779 ff The vicissitudes of love made a common topic. Cf KnT, I, 1785 ff, and n

3784 The, emended to That by Brunsendorff, p 376

3795 Cf l 42, and n

3811 an Irish woman, Fr "Irese" (or "raise"), interpreted by some as "Irish," by others as the common adjective "iriose," "angry, a virago" Langlois (I, 192, n) suggests that the French poet intended a pun on the two words. The scornful mention of an Irishwoman is in keeping with the character often ascribed to the Irish in mediæval literature. For an extended account of the "Wild Irish" tradition see Professor E D Snyder MP, XVII, 687 ff

3826 Reymes, Rennes, in Brittany Am-

gas is apparently only a mistake for Meaux Fr Estre a Estampes ou a Miauz

3832 reward, regard

3851 hadde (that he) had as to have (?) A difficult ellipsis, but not impossible Cf MLT, II 1091, n Other editors supply [Ne] [Nor], perhaps correctly

3863 made it symple, behaved with simplicity Cf the note to line 2038, above 3878 Langlois compares Pamphilus de Amore l 417 "Sepius immeritas incusata fama puellas" (ed Baudouin, Paris, 1874) 3912 For the idiom to blere the eye, "begule, deceive," cf RoT, I, 4049, CYT, VIII, 730

3928 "I must (have) new counsel"

3931 f Proverbial Cf Tr, v, 1266 f

3978 A proverbial expression in French, of which Langlois cites examples

3995 f Possibly the -e of the inf with- stonde should be kept and londe allowed an (irregular) dat -e, so also in the case of stonde hond, ll 4091 f

4012-13 For very free emendation see Brusendorff p 331

4021 Fr "Estiez vos ore couchiez? Levez tost sus" etc

4030 "A churl changes his nature, ceases to play his part, when he is courteous" Fr
"Vilains qui est cortois enrage"

4032 A proverb in Fr Cf Li Proverbe au Vilain, 41 (ed Tobler, Leipzig, 1895, p 19) Other parallels are cited in Langlois's note See also Haekkel p 35, no 117

4096 me, one Skeat emends to men, which is perhaps more natural under the accent

4123 allas face (with silent e), an un-Chaucerian rime

4137-40 Not in the Fr The familiar sentiment might have been suggested by Tr, ii 1625 ff, or Boece, ii, pr 4, 7-10, or Dante, Inf, v 121 ff

4145-300 The English translation here shows a number of omissions and insertions, as compared with the Fr (ll 3797-936)

4176 skaffaut scaffold a shed on wheels which covered the approach of besiegers

4180 Langlois cites, for mediæval recipes for mortar, G Aneher, Hist de la Guerre de Navarre, ed F Michel in Collection de
Documents Inédits sur l'Hist de France, Paris, 1856 p 602, n In none of them, he adds is vinegar mentioned

4181-82 adament foundement, an imperfect rime

4191 Spryngoldes catapults (from OF "espringale") The Fr here has "perrieres" 4194 who i e, the men "who might be close at hand" Skeat emends, [whiche]

4199 maad brad, a Northern rime

4218 conestablierye, ward of the castle,
Fr "conestable," troop

4229 for stelyng, to prevent stealing

4235 "As being the one that causes all the strife" Cf l 3256

4247 Discordavanti, apparently due to a misunderstanding of the Fr "descorz" a type of chanson

4249 faulle make mistakes The reading fall (Cornevall) suggested by Liddell, is unlikely

4250 hornepipes pipes made of horn, Fr estives pipes of straw Corneuaile, probably Cornouaille a town in Brittany

4254 Since the abuse of women is here ascribed to Wikked Tunge it is not probable that the blame of Chaucer in LGW Prol F 322 ff, G, 248 ff rests especially on this passage

4279 garsoun, a mistaken rendering of Fr "garnison"

4286 ff With the description of La Vieille Langlois compares Pamphilus, ll 281-82, 425

4300 The phrase which became proverbial, is used by Chaucer Gen Prol, I, 476 See the note

4305 Cf l 1031, n

4322 I wende a bought, I supposed (myself) to have bought, Fr "Jes cuidoie avoir achetez"

4328 Fr "Que s'onques ne l'eusse eue"
There is an ellipsis of if after Thanne

4335 Langlois compares Ovid, Met, I, 269 ff Virgil Georg, I, 226

4353 A typical account of Fortune, and doubtless the source of various references to her in Chaucer See KnT, I, 925 f, n

4358 The reading turne (MS G and Globe) would have to be taken as a prothesis in the subjunctive

4389 Cf the proverb "Qu plus castgat, plus amore ligat"

4429 This ends Guillaume de Lorris's part of the poem Fr "Que je n'ai mais ailleurs fiance" Jean de Meun begins "E si l'ai je perdue, espair"

4441 what and, what if 4443 ff Cf Ovid, Her, xvi (xvii), 234, Langlois notes also the beginning, "Spes fallax," of the Elegia de Spe, Anthologia veterum Latinorum Poematum, ed Meyer, Leipzig, 1835, no 932

4475 Thus sounds proverbial Langlois compares Huon de Mery's Torneiement Antecrit, 1662 ff (ed Wimmer, Ausgaben und Abhandlungen, LXXVI)

4493 And yet moreover, Fr "Enseurquetout", of KnT, I, 2801, n

4495 ronne in age, advanced in age Cf
NPT, VII, 2821, and n

4499 enforced, enhanced, Fr "enforcera" 4527 my, MS faire, probably copied from next line, Fr "ma priere"

4532 love, appraise, Fr "De la value d'une pome" Liddell reads love, with rime of v and w

4559 cunne hym mangre, Fr "mal gré saver" Cf Kan hem thank, KnT, I, 1808 and n

4568 wynke, close the eyes (in sleep)

Cf NPT, VII, 3431

4634 grieved, or some similar word, must be supplied. Skeat has pyred, Liddell suggests harméd.

4651 Cf line 2037, above

4655 ff This description of Love is based upon Alanus de Insula, De Planctu Naturae, (Migne, Pat Lat., CCX, 455 f., quoted by Langlois)

4693-94 Not in the Fr

4705 fret full, fully furnished Cf LGW, 1117 Skeat mentions and rejects the emendation bret ful (= brum full)

4718 So MS and Th, doubtless to be emended by interchanging wisdom and kunning (Brusendorff, p 318) Fr "C'est sapience sans science, C'est science sans sapience" (Langlois var)

4732 without, on the outside, Globe, oute

4751 f slowe, moth (?) So Skeat But no other occurrence of the word in this sense seems to be known. He takes were to mean "wear away" But this does not suit the context. The Fr reads "C'est teigne qui rentz se refuse, Les pourpres e les bureaux use" Liddell conjectures that the Engl version followed a reading "caigne," which it rendered by slowe, vagabond

4755-56 Proverbial. See Cotgrave, s v, Amourette, also Rom., XIII, 533 Langlois cites several literary parallels 4764 Previous editors have either supplied ne or changed That to But. But for a similarly inconsequent construction see l 3774, above, and cf Intro to MLT, II, 49, n

4768 A reference to another passage in the De Planctu Naturae. Genus excommunicates every man who "legitimum Veneris obliquat necessum," or who "a regula Veneris exceptionem facit anormalam" (Migne, 482 A, cf 432 A). On the history of Genus as an allegorical figure see E C Knowlton, MLN, XXXIX, 89. In his character as priest of Nature he appears later in the Fr R.R. (ll 16285 ff) In Gower's Conf Am, he is the priest of Venus

4783 f Proverbial, see Haecckel, pp 3 f, no 12

4790 avouunt, ahead, advanced

4796 par cuer, by heart

4809 Langlois notes the similarity of this definition to that in Andreas Capellanus, De Amore, bk 1, caps 1, 2 (ed E Trojel, Copenhagen, 1892, pp 3-7)

4821-24 Not in the Fr Cf NPT, VII, 3344 ff

4831 paramours, adverbial, "with passionate love" Fr "Mais par amour amer ne deignent" Cf KnT, I, 1155, and n

4838 ernes, passion, desire Cf LGW, 1287

4840 ff Proverbial, cf Haecckel, p 54

4856 Proverbial, cf Haecckel, p 43, no 146

4859 Oure sectus, of our species, race

4875 fortened crece, destroyed increase, i e, abortion? So Skeat Liddell reads for iene crece. The couplet is not in the Fr

4884 The reference is to Cicero's De Senectute. See particularly chap xii

4917 doth, here apparently not causative, but used as in modern English

4943 Demande, on readings and interpretation see the textual note

5022 The translator seems to have forgotten the conclusion — "E qu'ele a sa vie perdue Se dou futur n'est secourue" Liddell suggests supplying Al her lyf she hath forlorn

5123-24 Not in the Fr Perhaps from HF, 1257 f (see n), cf also Intro to MLT, II, 20 ff and n

5136 "Love that was so grafted in my thought, destroyed Reason's teaching"

5151 f Stall proverbial, cf Tr, iv, 432 ff, n

5169-71 Obscure Fr "Mais esper que je comparrai Plus la haine au darenier, Tout ne vaille amour un denier" (Michel Reads "me" for "ne")

5201 Love of frendshipp friendly love Cf Tr, n, 371, 962, and, for the same construction, cf KnT, I, 1912 and n. With the definition of friendship Langlois compares Cicero, De Amicitia, chaps v, vi, xii, xvii 5223-24 Fr "Teus meurs aver deivent e seulent Qui parfaitement amer veulent"

5234-35 Proverbial "Satus erit qui petri" Langlois cites parallels from Latin and French 5259-60 A commonplace sentiment, if not exactly proverbial. Not in the Fr

5266 Another proverb, and not in the Fr: cf Haecckel, p 19, no 61

5274 moiste, used reflexively, unless Hc should be emended to It or That

5278 fered, fired, properly a Kentish form, though used by Chaucer and other writers for convenience in rhyme

5281 Cf De Amicitia, ch vi

5286 Here the reference to Cicero is explicit. The passages immediately involved are chaps xii, xiii, xvii 5290 Obscure. Perhaps "Unless it were too unreasonable" See the textual note

5311 ff Cf De Amicitia, chap xiv

5330 but, abides

5351 take, Fr "afuble"

5379 vce, with silent -s, making an un-Chaucerian rhyme with ways

5384 goot, goat, Fr "cers"

5399-400 wat (MS uote) estat, a Northern rhyme

5409 ff The argument here is based upon Boethius, n, pr 8

5417 cherish (mf) norrys, an irregular rhyme

5419 deles, Northern form of the third person singular

5443 maken it hool, perform it wholly (?) So Skeat

5445-46 Fr "Jusqu'au despendre les chemises"

5473-74 Perhaps And should be shifted from line 5474. Cf the Fr "E leur asset' come marrastre, Au cueur un douloureux emplastre"

5467 ff The sentence is not completed

5484 arn, the Northern form, for which Chaucer almost invariably has ben.

5486 Not in the Fr Cf Fort, 34, for the distinction between freend of effect and freend of chere (countenance). This supports the emendation to effect (MS Th affecte). See also ll 5549-50 below For full discussion of the Fortune passages see Brusendorf, pp 404 f 5493 "Misfortune leaves not one (remaining)" Or perhaps emend lat to leveih? Fr "remant"

5507 "In the voice in which they had flattered" (?) Skeat suggests that japerye, "mockery," would be more appropriate than flaterie Fr "a voix jolie"

5510 For this proverb which is not in the Fr, cf Tr, iii, 861 and n

5513 Cf Prov, xvii, 17

5520 Proverbial cf Haeckel, p 4, no 13

5523 ff Cf Ecdl s xxii, 22

5534 Cf Ecdl vii, 28

5535-36 "For there is no wealth which may be compared to friendship in respect to worthness"

5538 valoure value, Fr "valeur"

5540 Proverbial "Verus amicus omni praestantior auro" Langlois cites a number of variants See also Haeckel, pp 4 f, no 15

5552 Cf Fort, 10

5573 And if

5583 f Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 11, no

36 5590 mours (MS mavis), bushels, Fr "maus"

5649 Cf BD, 1167 The works of Pythagoras are lost Hierocles of Alexandria (5th cent) wrote a commentary on the Golden Verses Langlois suggests that the source of Jean de Meun's information was the commentary of Chalcoidius on the Timaues ch cxxxvi which says "Pythagoras etiam in suis aureis versibus Corpore deposito cum liber ad aethera perges, Eusades hominem factus deus aetheris alm" (ed Wrobel, Leipzig, 1876, p 198)

5659 ff From Boethius, i, pr 5, 5-19, v, pr 1, 7-12 Cf also Truth, 17, 19

5666 Both Jean de Meun and Chaucer translated Boethius

5672 Cf Fort, 25

5681 dispendiuh, a Southern plural form used here for the rime

5706 Cf Boethius, ii, m 2

5710 "To drink up the river Seine" Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 18, no 58

5739 ff Not in the Fr Lounsbury (Studies, II, 222) traced the pun on fy ("fier") to La Bible of Guot de Provins (in Fabliaux et Contes, ed Barbazan and Méon, II, 390) The rest of the word-play may turn on English syen or syken The point seems to be that fyuc goes from fyung, "trusting," to syung, "sighing" Skeat's interpretation of fy as "fie" and sy as "si" ("if") is less probable

5759 Proverbial Cf RvT, I, 4320 f, and n

5763-64 Cf the Pard Prol, passim (especially, VI, 407 ff)

5781 ff Langlois compares the Latin couplet 'Dives divitias non congregat absque labore, Non tenet absque metu nec desent absque dolore' J Werner, Lateinische Sprichworte und Sinnsprüche des Mittelalters, Heidelberg, 1912 p 22, no 117

5810 Here ends fragment B There is no break in the MS, but the translation passes from line 5154 to line 10679 of the French original In the omitted passage Reason continues her discourse, but fails to persuade the Lover to abandon the service of the god of Love The Lover then consults L'Ami, who advises him to approach Belacueil's prison by a road called Trop-Donner, constructed by Largesse L'Ami also instructs the Lover at length about the Golden Age, the corruption of society and his proper course of conduct toward his mistress and wife The Lover then approaches the castle, but Richesse bars his entrance The god of Love comes to his assistance, first convoking a council of his barons Fragment C begins with the account of the assembly

On the authorship of the fragment see the introduction to these notes Skeat gives in his introduction (Oxf Ch I, pp 3-11) lists of the departures from Chaucerian usage In the following notes examples are cited, but no complete collection is attempted

5837 To-Moche-Yevyng, Fr "Trop Donner"

5856 Farr-Welcomyng, called Bralacoul in fragment B

5857 Wel-Heelynge, Fr "Bien Celer"

5869 The rime entent present departs from Chaucer's usage He regularly has entente Other cases of the dropping of final e in rime are ll 6105-06 (atte last(e) agast), ll 6565-66 (urought, pl nought), and six instances of I or words ending in -y riming with words in which Chaucer regularly has a final -e, at ll 6111 f, 6301 f, 6339 f, 6373 f, 6875 f, 7317 f

5883 nedes, the translator has confused "besoignes," affairs, with "besonges," needs See also the textual note

5894 iam, a Northern form

5919 the rime hors wors departs from Chaucer's usage He rimes wors with curs (Ct Prol, I, 4349) and persors (BD, 813)

Other irregular cases in fragment C are force croce, ll 6469-70, pacience vengeance, ll 6429-30, Abstynance penaunce, ll 7481-82 (Chaucer's form being Abstynence), science ignorance, ll 6717-18 The last three instances, however, are exactly paralleled in the Fr

5954 Aphrodite, according to one account, was the daughter of Cronos and Euonyme The wife of Cronos was Rhea In the Roman religion Aphrodite was identified with Venus, and Cronos with Saturn

5966 pol, pool, Fr "La palu d'enfer" 5988 "Unless they spring up, increase (Fr 'sourdent') in his garner"
 6028-30 Cf KnT, I, 1951 f
 6041 f For thankynges Kaluza proposes thwackkynges (Fr "coles"), and Liddell would emend talkynges to wakynges (Fr "acoles") 6044 leve, remain? Fr "demourra"
 6068 kyng of harlates, king of rascals, Fr "reis des ribaux" This was the actual title of an officer of the court, a kind of provost-marshal See Meon's edition for references Skeat notes that the name was also jocularly conferred on any conspicuous vagabond 6083 lepe, desire, so in line 6093
 6111 lei, leads 6135 ff Langlois suggests that the description of Fals-Semblant may owe something to John of Salisbury, Polieraticus vii, ch 21 It served in turn as a model for Chaucer's portraiture of the Pardoner 6141 worldly folk, Fr "au siecle," which apparently means the secular clergy as opposed to the regular orders 6174 nedes, Fr "besoignes", of line 5883, above 6191 a croled brere one of the numerous figures of worthlessness See Gen Prol, I, 177, n The Fr has "un coutel troune" 6192 A familiar proverb "Cucculus non facit monachum" Cf Haeckel, p 39, no 133
 6198 kut, contraction of cutteth, Fr "trenché" Skeat suggests that Guile is said to cut them into thirteen branches because thirteen was the regular number of a convent 6204 Gibbe, a common English name for a tomcat, Fr "dans Tiberz," also the name of the cat in the Roman de Renard 6226 The reference here, as ll 6234 ff show, is to the laity, not to the secular clergy 6259 f For a wether the Fr has "dam Beln" and for a wolf, "Sire Isengrin," both names from the Roman de Renard 6264 wery, worry
 6281-83 A mistranslation of the Fr "E se d'aus ne la veaux resourre, Anceis les lasses par tout courre, Lasses! mais se tu leur comandas," etc The translator misread "d'aus" (var "d'eus") as "deus," and failed to see that the Church (in the second person) is subject of the whole passage 6282 in this colour, in this manner
 6290 stuffen, garrison, Fr "garnir"
 6319 Proteus, the sea god, whose power of transformation has given its meaning to the adjective "Protean" 6337 Robert, a gentleman, Robyn, a common man Langlois notes that in Le Jeu de Robin et Marion the knight is called Robert, and the shepherd, Robin 6338 Frere Menour, Franciscan, Jacoby, Dominican 6339 lotey, wench, Fr "compaigne"
 6341 Abstynence-Streynd, Fr "Astynance Contrainte."

6352 alle religounes, all religious orders 6354 "I take the worthless and leave the good" Fr "J'en lais le gram e preing la paille" (but some MSS transpose lais' and 'preing") Langlois notes that the expression occurs frequently in mediæval French 6355 [blynde], infinitive, Fr 'avugler' (Kaluza), "embraier" (Langlois)
 6371 f Liddell reads But where my sleight is aperceyved, Of hem I am nomore resceyved Fr 'Mais mes traiz ont aperceuz Si n'en sui mais si receuz' (Langlois does not include these lines in his text Kaluza includes 110 lines, corresponding to Rom, 6361-6472, which Langlois prints in his notes at line 11222 of the RR)
 6385 Onys a year, namely, at Easter See Parst, X 1027 6424 "Whose name is not Friar Wolf" Fr "frere Louvel" This is said, of course, in irony 6434 yele me my Savoyour, admit me to Holy Communion 6440 kepe not dele, care not to deal
 6452 this, this is See Prov xxvii, 23, John 1, 14
 6502 Proverbial Langlois (citing Recreuil Rawlinson, II, 191) compares "Mal done a sun vassal qui son coutel leche" 6528 A reference to the Aristotelian doctrine of the mean Cf LGW Prol f, 165
 6532 Prov xxx 8, 9
 6541 mycher, thief, Fr "herres"
 6552 Langlois cites Guillaume de Saint-Amour, De Periculis xi, pp 50 f He is mentioned by name in l 6763, below The references to Saint-Amour in the following notes are taken from Langlois
 6571 An allusion, doubtless, to the fine houses built by the mendicant orders 6573 ff Cf De Periculis, xi, p 48
 6583 The reference is to St Augustine's work, De Opere Monachorum The six lines of Kaluza's Fr corresponding to ll 6583-88 occur in only a few MSS and are held by Langlois to be an interpolation 6595 ff Cf Matt xix, 20 f, see also l 6653, below 6604 "Use his praying as a pretext for idleness" 6613 Fr "Car l'escriture s'i acorde Qui la verité nous recorde" 6615 Justinian the famous emperor of the Eastern Empire and compiler of the Code See bk xi, tit 25 (26), De Mendicantibus Valdis (cited in De Periculis ii, p 52)
 6631 Langlois notes that Guillaume de Saint-Amour uses similar caution about discussing the power of popes and bishops (De Periculis, ii, p 25)
 6636 Probably a reference to Matt xxii 14 But see also De Periculis, xi, p 52, and Collectiones Catholice Canonice Scripture, p 218 (ascribed to Saint-Amour) 6653 Matt xix, 20-21 Cf also De Periculis, xi, p 49 6654 the good-man, Fr "li preudon"

6661 ff See I Thess iv, 11-12 (quoted in De Periculis, xu, p 48)

6665 honden is a strange archaism for the period and dialect, perhaps to be emended to honde

6671 ff Cf De Periculis, xiv, p 67

6679 See Acts xx, 33 ff

6685 ff Cf De Periculis xu, pp 49-51

6691 St Augustine is mentioned here in only a few Fr MSS The correct text has "selonc le comant De l'escriture" Jean de Meun as Langlois notes, got both the quotation and the name of the author from Saint-Amour's De Periculis, xu p 48 and Responsiones pp 90-91 The instances that follow are of course not to be attributed to the ancient authority, but are Jean de Meun's own illustrations

6693 ff The Knights Templars were founded in 1119 the Hospitaliers circa 1087 Chanouns Regulars, as distinguished from secular canons are members of certain orders who follow a rule The White Monks were Cistercians, a reformed order of the Benedictines, the Black the unreformed

6712 Proverbial, cf Haecckel, p 36, no 119

6749 "In the rescue of our faith"

6763 William Seynt Amour a doctor of the Sorbonne in the middle of the 13th century, and a strong partisan of the secular clergy in their controversy with the friars Jean de Meun's debt to his Tractatus Brevis De Periculis Novissimorum Temporum has been indicated in preceding notes The book was condemned by Pope Alexander IV in 1256 and Guillaume was banished from France But the statement in ll 6769 ff as to the sympathies of the university and community of Paris seems to be substantially true For a fuller account of the episode see Langlois's notes (to ll 11506-13)

6782 The noble, Fr "Le vaillant ome"

6795 jozerie Fr "renardie"

6797 What devel, what the devil etc

6804 on her owne, Fr "dou leur"

6820 They do not scald them before skinning, as a butcher does a hog

6823 f Langlois compares Rustebeuf, Etat du Monde, lmes 43-46 (Œuvres, ed Jubinal, Paris 1874-75, II, 18)

6835 It cometh right, i e, it is replenished Cf Gen Prol, I, 705

6837 Cf Pard Prol, VI, 403

6838 See Gen Prol, I, 256, and n

6845 f Cf Pard Prol, VI, 443 ff

6861 byggys, Begunes, members of a lay sisterhood in the Netherlands Cf l 7254, n

6862 Fr "dames palatines," ladies of the court

6867 clad or naked, i e, under all circumstances See Gen Prol, I, 534, n

6871 ff On the prying inquisitiveness of the friars Langlois cites De Periculis v, p 32

6875 Ayens, in comparison with For the idea of the passage see De Periculis iv,

p 12

6888 Matt xxiii, 1-8, 13-15

6907 sadde, heavy (in physical sense)

6911 bordurs, phylacteries, Fr "phylacteres"

6923 ff Langlois compares De Periculis, xiv p 69

6926 as oon, Fr "par acort"

6948 oure alder, of js all Cf Gen Prol, I 586, and n

6971 brokages, match-making

6973 executour executor of wills Langlois cites Rustebeuf, Vie dou Monde, ll 144-45 (Œuvres II, 42)

6993-94 Cf De Periculis i p 21

6998 John the Baptist because of his austere life in the wilderness was regarded as the founder of asceticism

7010 Matt vii, 15

7013 lambren, an interesting archaic form from AS "lombriu" (Cf "children" from "cildru") Chaucer's plural was apparently lambes

7017 Cf Matt xxiii 15

7022 bouger, Fr "bougre" sodomite (Th bourgerons MS begger) For the association of heretics with Milan Langlois cites Li Tornoiement Antecrist ll 2772 ff, and the Chrorique Métrique of G Guart, ll 255-56 (in Buchon Collection des Chroniques Nationales Françaises, VII, Paris, 1828, p 35)

7037 me (Th we) pragy, Fr "Par trestouz les sanz que l'en preie"

7043 calevers, pears named (probably) from Cailloux in Burgundy See Langlois's note to l 11746, also Barbazan et Meon Fabliaux et Contes, Paris, 1808, II 279, n 2

7057 smerten, smart for, Fr "Ou sera puniz dou mesfait"

7059 ff "But if a man owns a castle, even of inferior construction, and gives the friars acceptable gifts, they will quickly release him"

7063 vounde ston, Fr "Ne li chaust ja de quel pierre" For vounde Skeat suggests founde or founded If vounde is right, it is probably a form of founde(n), preterite participle of find perhaps used here for building-material "found" or "provided" in the neighborhood

7064 "Wrought by the mason's square and according to pattern" Fr "Fust senz compas ou senz esquerre"

7076 equivolences, Fr "equivolances" (Kaluza) — a form which seems also required by the rime in English (Langlois "equivolences") Skeat interprets it "equivocations", Langlois, "des arguments équivolents", 7096 Cf De Periculis viii, p 38, and see Langlois's note to RR 11796 The true date is 1254 (not 1255, as given in both t.e Fr and the Eng texts) In that year the Minorite Gérard de Borgo San Donnino published under the title Evangelium Eternum sive Spiritus Sancti, the Concordia Novi et Veteris Testamenti of the Abbot Joachim He prefixed to Joachim's work a Liber Introductor-

ius in Evangelium Eternum This gospel of the Holy Spirit, it was claimed, was to supersede the gospel of the Son, as preserved in the New Testament The Liber Introductorius was condemned by Alexander IV upon representations made by the theologians of the Sorbonne 7108 "In the parvis, or porch, before the Cathedral of Notre-Dame"

7118 Fr "Ne cuidiez pas que je vous moque"

7134 False-semblant means that the book has been suppressed for a time by the friars, to be brought forward again when Antichrist, their leader, shall appear Langlois notes that the Introductorius was actually lost

7172 The English lacks a couplet, necessary to the sense, which would translate the Fr "Par Pierre veaut le pape entendre"

7215 my moder, i e., Hypocrisy

7254 beggers, Fr "beguns" The Beguns (or Beguards) were members of lay brotherhoods which arose in the Low Countries They got their name from Lambert Begue Skeat suggests that the description here really applies to the Franciscans, or Gray Friars

7259 quale pipe, inaccurately translated, Fr "Houseaus froncz e larges botes, Qui ressemblent bourse a caillier" (a net for snails?)

7286 Prov xxvi, 11, cf also II Pet ii, 22

7287 Cf the Pardoner's remark, PardT, VI, 918

7300 See I 6068, above, and n

7312 ff Proverbial Cf "Le loup mourra en sa peau, qui ne l'escorchera vii" (cited with other parallels by Langlois)

7323 Streynd-Abstynance, Fr "Contrainte Astenance"

7346 batels, battalions

7386 Cf Rustebeuf, Diz des Règles, II 168 f (Œuvres, I, 231), La Romans de Baudun de Sebourg, vii, 351 (ed Boca, Valenciennes, 1841), Triumphe des Carmes, II 94-100 (Langlois)

7391 Rev vi, 8

7401 burdown, staff, Fr "bourdon"

7406 sayni, for ceyni, girt (like a Franciscan)? Or to be emended to saynt, pale? Fr "qui bien se ratourne" 7413 squerly, like a squire? Fr "Après s'en va son escuier" (Kaluza) (Langlois "Emprés s'en va senz escuier")

7420 Coupe-Gorge, Cut-Throat

7453 On Jolly Robin, the dancer, see Tr, v, 1174, and n

7454 Jacoby, a Dominican Cf Freres preachours, I 7456

7457 beren, would sustain Fr "Mauvaisement l'ordre tendraient, Se tel menestrel estaient"

7459 ff The Augustinians, Franciscans (Coraileres), and Carmelites (Carmes), together with the Dominicans, were usually reckoned as the four orders The Sacked Freres were the Friars De Penitencia, also called di Sacco from the form of their robe

7465 ff Cf HF, 265-66

7490 ff Matt iv, 19, Luke v, 10 For its use by friars cf SumT III, 1820

7505 Cf Manct, IX, 332 ff

7511 f Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 16, no 51

7517 Cf II 3815 ff, above

7544 Proverbial, cf Haeckel, p 39, no 132

7576 Fr "cul (var "puis") d'enfer," meaning, doubtless, with either reading, "the pit of hell" The Fr "cul" may have led the English translator to introduce the idea which appears in the Sum Prol, III, 1665 ff For further information on the matter see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes to Sum Prol

7579 with myschaunce, here, as frequently, a curse

7607 f This sounds proverbial Langlois compares Gautier de Coincy, Les Miracles de la Sainte Vierge, ed Poquet, Paris, 1857, col 662, ll 594 f Cf Haeckel, p 39, no 134

7634 "Though one pierced him with a spear" (reading me for Thynne's he) Fr "S'en le deust tout vii larder"

7643 The maugre, the blame

7662 jolyly, apparently an adverb of emphasis, Fr "bien"

7677 ff With the friar's claim here cf Gen Prol, I, 218 ff, and n

TEXTUAL NOTES

THE CANTERBURY TALES

Authorities — At least eighty-three (or, if the Morgan fragment of the Pardoner's Tale be counted, eighty-four) MSS of the Canterbury Tales, either complete or fragmentary, are known. With them may be reckoned also six early prints—two by Caxton (Cx¹ Cx²), two by Pynson (Pyn¹ Pyn²), one by Wynkyn de Worde (Ww), and Thynne's (Th) — though they are of little value for the establishment of the text. The relations of the prints to each other and to the MSS have been examined by Professor W. W. Greg, PMLA, XXXIX, 737 ff. From the collation of a short passage of the Knight's Tale he concludes that Cx¹ alone ranks with the MSS as an authority. Its text is poor, having been derived from an inferior copy resembling Trinity College, Cambridge, MS R 3 15. In Cx² alterations were made by comparison with a MS of uncertain affinities, and the four succeeding prints were all derived, directly or indirectly, from Cx², with supplementary use of unidentified MSS. Miss M. Kilgour, PMLA, XLIV, 186 ff., tries to show that the authority used was British Museum MS Additional 35286, or one closely related to it. Wynkyn de Worde's edition, according to information furnished by Professor Manly, was derived partly from Cx², and partly from a different source, probably a MS.

The list of MSS follows. The editor is indebted to Professor Manly for information about several, which have either been recently discovered or are imperfectly described in previous lists. Photographic reproductions of all the MSS have been brought together by Mr Manly at the University of Chicago for use in the preparation of his critical edition. This will contain an account of the authorities, as well as a full registration of variant readings. Until this complete information is available, descriptions of most of the MSS may be found in Miss Hammond's Manual, pp 163 ff. Another list, not quite complete, is given by Koch in his edition of the Pardoner's Prologue and Tale, Chaucer Society, 1902, and another, not including fragmentary copies, will be found in Manly's edition of the Canterbury Tales. The names by which certain copies are known have varied from time to time with changes of ownership. Those here adopted are the same as those to be employed in Mr Manly's critical edition. He very kindly supplied the editor with the list, and it is hoped that this uniformity of names and abbreviations may be a convenience to the users of both texts. The eight of the more extensive and important MSS from which the Canterbury Tales have been printed in full by the Chaucer Society, the text of each, wherever defective, being pieced out from other sources, are designated by stars

- Ad¹ Additional 5140, British Museum
- Ad² Additional 25713, British Museum
- Ad³ Additional 35286, British Museum (formerly Ashburnham 125)
- Ad⁴ Additional 10340, British Museum (a fragment quoted from memory)
- Ar Arundel 140, British Museum (Melbeec only)
- Bo¹ Bodley 414, Bodleian
- Bo² Bodley 686, Bodleian
- Bw Barlow 20, Bodleian
- Ch Christ Church 152, Oxford
- Cn Cardigan MS, now the property of the Brudenell estate
- *Cp Corpus 193, Corpus Christi College Oxford
- Ct Chetham 6709, Chetham's Library, Manchester
- *Dd Dd 4 24, University Library, Cambridge (perhaps formerly Hodley or Hoadley)
- Dl Delamere MS, property of Boies Penrose III, Esq
- Do Douce d 4, Bodleian (a single leaf, containing General Prologue, I, 298-368)
- Ds¹ Devonshire MS, property of the Duke of Devonshire
- Ds² Devonshire fragment, property of the Duke of Devonshire
- Ee Ee 2 15, University Library, Cambridge (Man of Law's Tale only)
- *El Ellesmere 26 c 12, formerly Lord Ellesmere's, now in the Huntington Library, California
- En¹ Egerton 2726, British Museum (formerly Haistwell, and probably a Chandos MS)
- En² Egerton 2863 British Museum (formerly the Norton, later a Hodson MS)
- En³ Egerton 2864, British Museum (formerly the Ingilby, later a Hodson MS)
- Ft Fitzwilliam (McClellan, 181), Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge (formerly Ashburnham 127)
- *Gg Gg 4 27, University Library, Cambridge

- Gl Glasgow MS, Hunterian Museum
V 1 1
- Ha¹ Harley 1239, British Museum
Ha² Harley, 1758, British Museum
Ha³ Harley 7333, British Museum
*Ha⁴ Harley 7334, British Museum
Ha⁵ Harley 7335, British Museum Ha⁶ Harley 1704, British Museum (Process's Tale only) Ha⁷ Harley 2251, British Museum (Process's Tale only) Ha⁸ Harley 2382, British Museum (Process's Tale and Second Nun's Tale) Ha⁹ Harley 5908 British Museum (a fragment)
- He Helmingham MS, property of the Tollemache estate
- *Hg Hengwrt 154 (or Penarth 392) National Library of Wales, Aberystwyth
- Hk Holkham MS, property of the Earl of Leicester
- Hn Huntington (H M 144), Huntington Library, California (formerly Hurth, Melbee and Monk's Tale only)
- Ht Hatton Donat 1, Bodleian
- I I 3 26, University Library, Cambridge
- Kk Kk 1 3, University Library, Cambridge (a fragment)
- *La Lansdowne 851, British Museum
- Lc Lichfield 2, property of Lichfield
Cathedral
- Ld¹ Laud 600, Bodleian
Ld² Laud 739, Bodleian
- Ll¹ Longleat 257, property of the Marquess of Bath
- Ll² Longleat 29, property of the Marquess of Bath (fragments of the Parson's Tale)
- Ln Lincoln 110, property of Lincoln
Cathedral
- Ma Manchester English 113, John Ry-lands Library (formerly Hodson 39)
- Mc Professor McCormick's MS, now property of the University of Chicago (formerly Ashburnham 126)
- Me Merthyr, property of the Rev L C
Simons Merthyr Mawr, Wales
(part of the Nun's Priest's Tale)
- Mg Morgan 249, Morgan Library, New York (formerly Ashburnham 124)
The last leaf contains an additional fragment of the Pardoner's Tale
- Mm Mm 2 5, University Library, Cambridge (formerly Ely)
- Ne New College, Oxford, D 314, deposited in Bodleian
- Nl Northumberland MS, property of the Duke of Northumberland
- Np XIII B 29, Royal Library, Naples (Clerk's Tale only)
- Ox¹ Manchester English 63, John Rylands
Library (part of Oxford)
- Ox² Oxford, property of A S W Rosenbach Co., New York (part of Manchester English 63)
- Ph¹ Phillips 6570, formerly owned by Mrs Fenwick, Cheltenham, now property of A S W Rosenbach Co., New York
- Ph² Phillips 8136, also a Cheltenham MS, formerly Canby, property of A S W Rosenbach Co., New York
- Ph³ Phillips 8137, also a Cheltenham MS, property of A S W Rosenbach
Co., New York
- Ph⁴ Phillips 8299, also a Cheltenham MS,
now H M 140, Huntington Library, California (Clerk's Tale only)
- Pl Plumpton MS, property of G A Plumpton Esq., New York (formerly Phillips 9970, a single sheet containing fragments of the Merchant's Epilogue, the Squire's Prologue, and
the Franklin's Tale)
- Pp Pepys 2006 Magdalene College, Cambridge (Melbee and Parson's Tale)
- Ps Paris MS, fonds anglais 39, Biblio-theque Nationale
- *Pw Petworth MS, property of Lord
Leconfield
- Py College of Physicians, London
- Ra¹ Rawlinson Poetry 141, Bodleian
Ra² Rawlinson Poetry 149, Bodleian
Ra³ Rawlinson Poetry 223, Bodleian Ra⁴ Rawlinson C 86 Bodleian (parts of the Proress's Tale and the Clerk's Tale)
- Ry¹ Royal 17 D xv British Museum
Ry² Royal 18 C ii, British Museum
- Se Arch Seiden B 14, Bodleian
- Si Sion College, London, Arch L 40 2
E
- Sl¹ Sloane 1685, British Museum
Sl² Sloane 1686, British Museum
Sl³ Sloane 1009, British Museum
- St Stoneyhurst B XXIII, Stoneyhurst College, Lancashire
- To¹ R 3 3, Trinity College, Cambridge
To² R 3 15, Trinity College, Cambridge
To³ R 3 19, Trinity College, Cambridge (Monk's Tale only)
- To Trinity 49, Trinity College, Oxford

In the foregoing list are included all the MSS that have been discovered by the diligent search of Professor Manly, Miss Edith Rickert, and their associates. Still other names appear in early lists, but it is often impossible to determine whether they represent lost copies or are identical with some of those mentioned above. Thus Miss Hammond (p. 165) cites from Bernard's Catalogi references to Clarendon, Hodley (or Hoadley), Worseley, and Gresham College MSS, and Urry mentioned Chandos and Ely copies which he used for his edition. Several of these have been identified more or less positively with known MSS, and some account of them will be found in Miss Rickert's communication to TLS, 1931, p. 1028. In the same article Miss Rickert makes inquiry about a number of MSS, possibly still in existence, the identity of which is entirely unknown

Of the MSS enumerated above several have not been described with any fulness, a few contain short fragments not exceeding one or two tales, and others are decidedly incomplete. Eight of the more important as already indicated, have been printed in full by the Chaucer Society. The Ellesmere copy and the edition of Thynne (1532) have been published in facsimile. Thus nine of the authorities are accessible as a whole. From forty-four of the remaining MSS, together with the two editions of Caxton and that of Thynne, specimen passages covering the Doctor-Pardoner link and the Pardoner's Prologue and Tale have been printed by the Chaucer Society. From eight other MSS, which lack the Pardoner's Tale — namely, S¹ Ra¹ Mc Ha¹ (completed by Ha²) Np Hk Ph¹ (completed by Ha²) and Ll¹ (completed by Ma¹) — specimen passages have been printed covering the Clerk's Prologue and Tale.

Full information as to the readings and classification of all copies will be supplied for the first time by Professor Manly's edition. But valuable tentative studies, based upon the published materials, have long been available, and served for the guidance of the present editor. On the basis of the specimens and the complete reprints named above fifty-five authorities have been classified by Zupitza and Koch in the following groups. The abbreviations and designations of groups are those employed in the present edition.

- α — El Hg Pγ
 β — Dd En¹ Ma¹ Ds¹ En² N¹ Ch Ad¹ γ — Gg Ph¹ Bo¹
 δ — Ha¹ Ha² Ad² Ps ε — Se Ht, and the original of the Pw-group, which includes Pw En² Bw Ln Ha² Lc Mg F¹ Ry¹ Ry² Ld¹ Ld² Bo¹ Ph² Ph³ Mm Sl¹ Dl Ra² To ζ — Tc¹ Ra² Gl Ad², and the original of the Cp-group which includes Cp La Sl² Tc² Ne Ha² He Ii Cx¹ Cx² Th

The relations of the MSS within the several groups are fully discussed in Zupitza's and Koch's prefaces to the specimens, and their conclusions are further exhibited in a chart drawn up by Professor Liddell, Specimens, Pt iv, p. xlvii. The results of their investigations have been criticized by various scholars. See, for some of these comments, Miss Hammond's Manual, p. 169, and for an extensive re-examination of the whole question, The Chaucer Tradition, by Aage Brusendorf, Oxford 1925. Professor Brusendorf's treatise is especially valuable for the information it supplies about unpublished MSS. A very acute criticism of the Zupitza-Koch classification, laying stress upon evidences of contamination in various MSS, was privately printed by the late Sir William McCormick, and the editor is indebted for copies to Lady McCormick and Miss Janet Heselune.

It is by no means certain that the Zupitza-Koch classification is valid in all particulars even for the Pardoner's Tale, and how far the same classification holds for other tales will be made clear by Professor Manly's collations. Zupitza and Koch gave too much weight, in the data they used for evidence to trivial variations in spelling, and, as McCormick argued, they made too little allowance for contamination of which Koch takes more account in his later work on the eight published MSS (Chaucer Society, 1913). But there is general agreement, for the Pardoner's Tale, about the primary division of authorities into the six groups mentioned above, and so far as the published MSS are concerned, the same grouping seems to hold in the main throughout the work. A few instances where MSS depart from their usual class will be noted in the list of variant readings. It is further clear that classes α and ζ, which include the great majority of authorities belong to an inferior type (B), and they have so many common errors that they can be safely traced to a single source. Classes α, β, and γ, on the other hand, which usually agree in superior readings (type A), are not definitely united by errors in the Pardoner's Tale. In the other tales the printed representatives of these groups — MSS El Hg Dd Gg — agree in a fair number of inferior readings, but the evidence hardly proves that there was a single archetype. Professor Brusendorf, who examined a dozen unpublished copies of the Num's Priest's Tale, left the point undecided. The relation of α, β, and γ to one another is also a matter of dispute. Koch, from the evidence of the Pardoner's Tale, argued for a combination of α and β, as against γ, Brusendorf, on the basis of his collation combined α and γ. But in both Hg and Gg there is evidence of contamination with type B. Class δ (Brusendorf's "London group") occupies a curiously intermediate position between types A and B. Koch includes it with B, but allows for extensive contamination with A (perhaps especially with γ). Brusendorf, on the contrary, classed it with the superior type (his "all-England tradition"). Since in the tales as a whole the errors common to Ha¹ Cp Pw La are too numerous to be satisfactorily accounted for by contamination, Koch's classification of δ with type B is here adopted. On all these disputed questions new light may be expected from Professor Manly's edition.

In addition to the readings of the nine published authorities, there are recorded in the following notes many variants from two unpublished copies to which the editor has had access the Cardigan MS, which he was generously allowed to collate while it was temporarily in the possession of President MacCracken of Vassar College, and the Morgan MS, which was very kindly placed at his disposal by Miss Belle da Costa Greene of the Morgan Library. The Morgan copy, as shown by the Pardoner's Tale specimen, belongs to the Petworth group (class ϵ). The Cardigan MS, which was long inaccessible to scholars, has recently been described by Miss Clara Marburg in PMLA, XLI, 229 ff. She prints the text of the Pardoner's Prologue and Tale, and shows that the MS belongs to Class β , being most closely related to Ma¹. The common ancestor of the two MSS was apparently contaminated with type B.

In accordance with the opinion and practice of all recent editors, the Ellesmere MS has been made the basis of the text, and preference has ordinarily been given to the readings of type A. B has been followed only where it corrected errors in A or offered readings so superior intrinsically that they demanded adoption. The editor's practice with regard to unique readings of Ellesmere or of Harleian 7334, which often present difficult problems, is discussed in the section on textual method in the General Introduction. It may merely be added here that independent authority, that is to say, access to a good copy in addition to its own archetype, might be assumed not unreasonably in the case of several individual MSS or groups. Thus Brusendorff argued that groups β and δ both derive some readings from a source superior to the common ancestor of all the MSS. He does not make this claim for the peculiar unique readings of Harleian 7334, which are discussed in the General Introduction. But in the case of Ellesmere he admits the possibility of independent authority for readings peculiar to that MS alone. They may have been derived from Chaucer's own MS, or from an excellent copy now lost. Ellesmere as a whole, however, cannot be held to be a direct copy of the ultimate original. For the existence of a few errors common to all or nearly all MSS suggests that one or more copies intervened between the author's original and the source of A and B.

There is great variation in the MSS with respect to the order of the tales and the presence or absence of connecting links, and a tentative classification based upon these data was made by Miss Hammond, Manual, pp 169 ff. It does not correspond altogether with the genealogy constructed by Zupitza and Koch from the study of the text. For MSS which are classified together for their textual readings do not always agree in arrangement. Thus Hengwrt, which is closely related to Ellesmere in Koch's group α , has the tales in a disordered and inconsistent sequence partly resembling that of the Petworth group. And the arrangement of most of the best MSS (classes α , β , and γ) is shared by members of groups δ and ϵ . The conditions are very complicated and do not admit of a simple explanation. They point to contamination, to the exercise of scribal independence, and possibly to a limited circulation of separate tales. An ingenious attempt to reconstruct the successive stages in the arrangement was made by Skeat in The Evolution of the Canterbury Tales, Chaucer Society, 1907. His conclusions are re-stated, with modifications, in his monograph on the Eight-Text Edition of the Canterbury Tales, Chaucer Society, 1909. For additional information see R. L. Campbell, Extra-Textual Data for a Classification of the MSS of the Canterbury Tales, Univ of Chicago Abstracts of Theses, Humanistic Series, V, 453 ff., also Professor Manly's introduction to his edition, pp 77 ff. A study by C. Robert Kase, Observations on the Shifting Positions of Groups G and DE in the Manuscripts of the Canterbury Tales (in Three Chaucer Studies, New York, 1932) came to hand too late to be used by the present editor. The complete solution of the problems connected with the arrangement of the tales may be expected when Professor Manly's investigation is finished. Until that is done, it will not be possible to write a satisfactory history of the text of the Canterbury Tales, and in the present edition nothing of the sort has been attempted. The matters in question have been discussed only when they relate to practical decisions about the inclusion or exclusion of doubtful passages or the order of the tales.

Questions concerning the genuineness of the various links will be taken up in the notes. One general problem of arrangement — and perhaps the only one of serious interest to the reader — may be mentioned here in conclusion. The order of tales which has the overwhelming support of the best MSS is the following: Fragments I (Group A), II (B¹ = Man of Law), III (D), IV (E), V (F), VI (C), VII (B² = Shipman-Nun's Priest), VIII (G), IX (H), X (I). But by this arrangement a reference to Sittingbourne (forty miles from London) in the Wife of Bath's Prologue is made to precede a reference to Rochester (thirty miles from London) in the Monk's Prologue. To correct this obvious inconsistency the editor of the Six-Text reprint, on the authority of a single inferior MS (Arch Selden B 14) combined II (B¹) and VII (B²) and assigned the Man of Law's Epilogue to the Shipman, printing it as the Shipman's Prologue. He also moved up Fragment VI (the tales of the Physician and the Pardoner), which comes after V in all MSS (even following VIII in some copies), and placed it after II-VII (his B) to fill out the tales of the second day. Now there is no real support for this order in the MSS, and no reason for supposing that Chaucer adopted it. The Selden MS, which is the sole authority for combining II and VII, puts II-VII (B) between V and VIII, and VI between VIII and IX. If Chaucer had ever reached the final revision of the tales he might himself have made the shifts of the Six-Text editor, but there is no evidence that he intended to do so. And there are so many small discrepancies in the work that the misplacing of Rochester and Sittingbourne may be regarded as a slip of Chaucer's own which he left uncorrected. He not only failed to complete the tales, but he never made a final arrangement of what he had written, or worked out a consistent scheme for the pilgrimage. Under the circumstances an editor must now choose between keeping the arrangement of the best MSS with all its imperfections, or of making the unauthorized adjustment adopted in the Six-Text and several succeeding editions. The former is undoubtedly the sounder procedure. It was in fact recommended by Skeat in his Evolution of the Canterbury Tales, pp. 27 ff. (although he afterwards defended the superior authority of the Harleian arrangement), and it has been recently adopted in Koch's edition and in Manly's selections. It reverts, moreover to the venerable tradition of Tyrwhitt. In spite, therefore, of certain inconveniences in departing from the system of groups used in references in the prolific Chaucer "literature" of the past fifty years, the Ellesmere order has been followed in the present edition.

The position of Fragment VI (C) is of course largely independent of the question just discussed. In the MSS it always occurs late — in the superior Ellesmere class after V — and it was shifted by the Six-Text edition to follow II-VII (B¹-B²) in order to fill out a programme of tales for the second day. But it is now recognized that in view of the incompleteness of the work it is not worth while to try to make a consistent time-table for the pilgrimage. On other grounds it has been proposed to put VI before II (against the consistent testimony of the MSS) or to put VI-VII immediately after II (thus preserving the combination VI-VII which appears in every MS except Selden). See Shipley, MLN, X, 130, XI, 145, and S. Moore, PMLA, XXX, 116. There are reasons for both these suggestions which would deserve the consideration of an editor who thought it justifiable to make a new editorial arrangement. But they are not decisive enough to warrant a departure from the Ellesmere order.

In the citations below references are simply to the nine authorities followed unless special mention is made of others. Thus Type A will refer to MSS El Hg Dd (or En¹) Gg, Type B to MSS Ha (i. e., Ha²) Cp Pw La and Thynne's edition (Th), a will be used for El Hg, and ζ for Cp La Th. Specific references will be made in each case to Cn and Mg, for which the editor's collations are incomplete. The former belongs to Type A, the latter to Type B. The references to Tatlock are (unless otherwise specified) to the Harleian MS 7334, Chaucer Society, 1909, references to Manly are to his selections from the Canterbury Tales. No attempt will be made to record minor variations in spelling among MSS which show verbal agreement.

FRAGMENT I

The General Prologue

8 halve | halfe Ha Pw Th, rest (incl Mg) half. Final -e is metrically necessary, and the pronunciation with υ is probable.

40 weren Ha (also Ha²), rest (incl Mg) were.

60 armee (armeye, etc) El Pw ζ (also Se Cx²), arwe Hg (Sheat Eight-Text Edition, p. 55) En¹ Gg Ha (also Cx¹), Mg ambiguous (arme or arwe).

120 semitte Pw Ha (flourish?) Cp (?), rest (incl Mg) semt.

179 reccheles | Cloysterles Ha.

252^a b This couplet occurs only in Hg among the printed MSS. It is also in Th, and (Tatlock, p. 23) in Ld² Tc¹ Ch Ha² Py. Probably genuine, though perhaps canceled by Chaucer.

338 verranly Ha, rest (incl Cn Mg) verray, verrey, etc.

363 Ha Weren with uss ecke clothed in oo lyvere.

396 I-drawe Gg, rest (incl Cn Mg) drawe.

430 Rufys Cn Pw Mg (?), Rufys Gg, Rusus Hg Dd Ha Cp La, Russus Th (?), Rusus El.

435 ypreved | I-proved Ha, preysed Cn, rest (incl Mg) proved (provod).

509 semitte Cn Ha Cp, rest (incl Mg) semt.

510 chauntere B (exc Mg Th), chauntre a Gg Cn (chauntry) En¹ Mg Th.

514 noght a | no Ha (perhaps correctly).

516 to senful man nougth Ha, rest (incl Mg) nat (nought) to (with) sinful man (men) (Cn nat with symple men, Ld¹ (Tatlock, p. 9) nat to dispoules).

559 greet | wyde Ha.

607 I-shadewed Gg Ha, rest (incl Cn Mg) shad (o) wed.

697 semitte Cn, rest (incl Mg) semt (sometimes with final flourish).

714 the murverly a Gg, so mery and so loude En¹ Cn, ful meryly Ha, so meryly Pw Mg ζ .

715 shortly El Ha, rest (incl Cn Mg) soothly (perhaps correctly, but cf MLT, II, 428).

741 that Ha, rest (incl Cn Mg) om.

752 han been Ha, rest (incl Cn Mg) been.

764 saugh nat | ne saugh Ha.

782 I wol yeve you | smyteth of Ha.

791 oure a Pw Mg La Sl¹, youre Dd Cn Ha Cp, others Th.

803 myselven Ha Cp Pw La S¹, myself a Dd Cn Mg Goodyl gladly Ha 829 I Ha Cp Pw La S¹ Mg, a om, if ye it
Dd Cn

The Knight's Tale

943 yslawe Cn Ha, rest (incl Mg) slawe 992 housbondes El En¹ Ha Th, freendes
Hg Gg Cp Pw La, lordes Mg
1031 This Palamon and his felawe Arcite
El Cn Gg Ha, Dwellen this P and eek Arcite
Hg Cp Pw Mg La (perhaps correctly),
Dwellen thise P and his felawe Arcite En¹, Dwelleth P & his felowe Arcite Th
1039 fynere El Cn Gg Ha, fairer Hg En¹
Pw Mg Cp Th, ferresle La 1212 o Dd, rest (incl Cn Mg) or 1248 helpe Hg Gg Ha Cp Pw Mg La, heele El Dd Cn Th
1323 lete I I lete Ha 1376 Buforen Buforen(e) all MSS Th, in Ha, rest om, his has ouen(e) El Dd Cn Gg
1424 long El Dd Cn Gg Ha, strong Hg
Pw Mg S
1573 after he El, afterward he Hg En¹ Gg Cp Pw Th, he afterward La, afterward
Ha Mg
1595 for Cn Ha, rest (incl Mg) or 1614 le(e)f Hg Gg Ha Cp, rest (incl Cn Mg) leve (pl or sbj) 1637 Tho Cn Ha, rest (incl Mg) To (They gan to chaunge colour En¹) 1906 And on the gate west(e)ward in memorie Cn and (Tatlock, p 30) Ad³ To,
On the Weste gate in memorie I (Tatlock)
And westward in memorie En², And a estuward also in memorie Mg, And westward in the mynde and in memory Ha, rest And on (of, in) the west(ward) (side) in memorie 1986 gate A (incl Cn), gates B (incl Mg) 2030 twynes a, twyned(e) Dd Cn Gg Cp
Pw Mg Th, twyne Ha La
2037 sterres Cn Ha and (Tatlock, p 30)
Ch Bo¹ Ad³ Ha³, rest serres, certres (Mg), cercles, septres, storyes, etc 2049 depeynted was Ha, rest (incl Cn Mg) was depeynted (Th paynted), Skeat em was depeynt
2060 peynted all authorities (Gg corrupt) Skeat em peynt Ha⁴ Ha³ (Tatlock, p 10, n 1) om yow (perhaps correctly) 2142, 2144 for old(e), for blak, written separately in all eight MSS, also in Cn Mg
Th
2202 And a, rest (incl Mg) or The Cn reading, pley best and synge, suggests that dauncen in the other MSS may have been incorrectly repeated from the line before 2385 the beautee the gret beute Ha I (Tatlock, p 30), the fayre beaute Th
2488 But El B (incl Mg), And Hg Dd Gg Cn
2681-82 Om El Hg Gg, here printed from Cp 2683 was El Cp Pw La Mg, she was

Hg Dd and (Brusendorff, p 112) En¹ Py (As she was), Cn Therefore she was all his in chere and herte, Ha³ And was al his as by chere of herte (Brusendorff), Tyrwhitt em
And was all his in chere, as his in herte, Koch em And was al his in chere as in hir
herte

2684 furie a Gg Mg, fyr(e) Dd Cn Ha
Cp Pw La
2725 O El Dd, On Gg, One Th, rest (incl Cn Mg) A
2770 Metrically suspicious Possibly a headless line, perhaps to be em to [ne] may, may [now] or [no longer] may endure 2801 Ha om for 2834 renunge(e) Cn Gg Pw Mg Th, reundung(e) Dd Ha Cp La 2840 chaunge(n) bothe Hg Dd Cn, torne
Ha, rest (incl Mg) om 2892 that weren Ha, rest (incl Mg) om, Cn stedes grete and lilye white (perhaps correctly)
3015 And nat eterne be withoute lye Ha 3036 The which Ha, rest (incl Cn Mg)
That 3059 the Dd Cn B (incl Mg), rest om 3090 the Knight Hg Dd S and (Brusendorff, p 98, n 1) Ha⁵ Ad³, ful right
El Gg Ha
3104 also Ha Ch (Tatlock), rest (incl Mg) so, Cn And he here ageyme so gently

The Miller's Prologue and Tale

3170 me (m') athynketh a Dd Cn Cp La Ha, me thynkyth Gg, me for-thenketh Pw Mg
Th
3176 yeere a, rest (incl Cn Mg) (to) here
3236 eek Ha, rest (incl Cn Mg) om 3238 broyden a, rest (incl Cn Mg) (y) bruded, embrouded, enbrauded 3322 Schapen with goores in the newe get Ha (conceivably Chaucer's revision, as Tatlock remarks, p 20) 3451, 3457 astromye a Cn, arstromye La, rest (incl Mg) have full form (also La Cn, l 3457)
3483 seynte Cn Ha, rest (incl Mg) seint
(some with final flourish) 3485 verye a Gg Cp Pw Mg La, verray
Ha, mare Dd Cn Th
3486 wentestow(e), wentest thou a Cp Pw Mg La, wonestow, wonest thou, etc Gg Dd Ha Th, Cn uncertain Seinte Hg Gg Ha Cp La, seynt El Dd Pw Mg Th 3571 broke El Pw Mg Cp, rest (incl Cn) breke
3624 His owne hand he made Hg Dd Pw Mg S, El om he, With his owene hand he made
Cn Gg, His owne hand than made Ha
3643 wery of Pw Mg, verray Cn Gg Dd
Ha (perhaps correctly) 3709 pa a Dd Gg Cp Pw Mg (compayne Ha La), ba Cn and (Skeat) Ha⁵ I Tc¹ Ra¹ Ra² Bo¹ Ld², As helpe me God and swete
seynte Jame Th
3721-22 In El Th, rest om

3770 viratoot(e) a Cp Pw Mg, veritot(e)
Dd Cn La Th, verytrot Ha, merytoi Gg

The Reeve's Prologue and Tale

3906 half-wey(e) A ζ, passed Ha Ii (Tatlock, p 5, n), almost Pw and (Tatlock) Ra¹ Lc

3941, 3959 Symkyn] Symekyn (Ha only) would give relief from awkwardly short lines Cf Janekeyn (El only) in WB Prol, III, 303 Skeat's deynous seems impossible

3953 (y) bounde(n) El Gg Ha Pw, wournde(n) Hg Dd Cn Mg ζ

4027 boes El bihoves Hg Dd Cp Mg, bihoveith Cn ζ falles Ha, muste Gg

4028 fool] fon Ha In the following dialogue some MSS have more dialect forms than El It is hard to determine how many were intended by Chaucer

4064 laus a Cp La, lo(o)s Dd Gg Ha Mg, loce Th louse Cn Pw

4085 Lay] Leg Ha

4089 f fon speeden hem anon Ha (possibly Chaucerian?)

4111 fooles] fonnes Dd En¹ (Brusendorff, p 90) Cn

4118 Koch em [han] hym bresoght (omitting they) to avoid rare weak pret ind without -e He makes a similar correction in FranklT, V, 1273

4134 na(ne) Dd Ha Cp Mg no(ne) a Gg Cn Th, no(wh)it(e) Pw La

4166 two El Gg, a Hg Dd B (copied from line above?)

4171 comphne La, rest (incl Cn Mg) complyng, complyng(e), cowplyng, copl

4254 makes Dd Ha, rest (incl Cn Mg) maketh Ga Ha

4255 wat mysgaa Dd and (Brusendorff, p 91, n 1) Ad¹ (dialectally more consistent)

4256 lyes alsua Dd and (Brusendorff, p 91, n 1) Ad¹

FRAGMENT II

The Introduction to the Man of Law's Tale

4 ystert a Dd Cn, expert Ha² ζ Pw Mg, om Ha

5 eightetethe] xviiith Hg, eyenthe Mg, eyghte (xviii^e) ζ Ha² Pw, eight and twentithe El, xviii Cn, eight and twenty Dd, threthenthe Ha

37 now of] and holdeth Ha only

47 But Dd Cn En² Ad¹, That a Gg Pw ζ Mg

The Man of Law's Tale

185 cerously a Dd Cp Pw Mg Th, ceretynly Gg, so ryally Ha, curously La, so curously Cn

497 wook] avok Ha Skeat inserts [thai] for the meter

621 Skeat inserts [ful] for the meter

791 til] unto Ha, to Dd Pw, Skeat em until

882 eeh], inserted by Skeat for the meter, is supported by Cn

1060 alle Ha, rest om

The Man of Law's Epilogue

Lines 1163-90, which constitute the so-called Shipman's Prologue, are not found in the published MSS of Type A They have been printed by the Chaucer Society (Six-Text Edition, pp 11* ff, 167) from 23 MSS and additional copies have been reported as occurring in MSS Ln Py En² Fi Gl Ne Dl Ph² Mc and in Cr¹ Cx² See Tatlock, Harl MS 7334, p 22, n 2, Brusendorff, p 70, n 2, Manly, CT, pp 570 ff, and C R Kase pp 32 ff, in Three Chaucer Studies, N Y, 1932 (not fully utilized by the editor) On the authenticity of the passage and its assignment to the Shipman see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the ML Epil The present text is based upon Cp, compared with the other printed MSS

1174 Now Ha Ha² Th Ra¹ Ra² Ra³ Ht Tc¹ Tc² Ha Ry¹, rest How

1179 Shipman Se, Som(p)nour Ha and (Tatlock, Manly) Ra² Ry¹ Ln Py Mc, rest Squer, Swyere, etc

1189 phislyas] so most MSS (var philias, fisleas, etc), (of) phisik (var sp) Ra¹ Ra² Tc² Ht Th, phiscians Mm

FRAGMENT III

The Wife of Bath's Prologue

For spurious links connecting the Wife's Tale with the Merchant's and the Squire's see the Textual Notes on the Merch Epil and the SqT

44^{a-c} These lines occur in Dd Cn and (Manly, p 576) Ch Cx² Ds¹ En¹ He Ma Ne Ry¹ Se Si Tc², and (Tatlock, p 23, n) Ii They are probably genuine, but whether Chaucer added them late and meant to keep them, or wrote them early and meant to reject them, is uncertain They are here printed from Dd

44^f scoleryng Dd, scolyng Cn, scoleryng Ch (Tatlock p 23, n), Skeat, following Tyrwhitt, has scoleryng (incorrectly)

59 Wher(e) can ye seye (seen) Hg Dd Cn Pw Mg ζ Whanne saugh ye evere El, Whan sawe ye Ha

75 up for Hg Dd Gg La Pw, up of El (perhaps correctly, cf "bravium virgin-tatis"), uppe fro Cp, upon Ha

260 For this line Cp Pw La Mg have Thus sawtow, Wernard, God yave thee meschaunce

303, 383 Janekeyn El, rest (incl Cn Mg) Jankyn, Jenkyn

361 so moot I thee] though queynte he be
Ha

368 maner Cp Pw La, of thy Ha, of these
Gg, om a Dd Cn Mg Th

575-84 Om in many MSS

595 For Janekyn, in all authorities, perhaps we should read Janekyn, since oure is very improbable

604 seinte] seint all MSS, dame Th

609-12 Om in many MSS Brusendorff (p 56) suggests transposing the passage to a position after l 618

619-26 Om in many MSS

660 sawe a Cn Gg Ha Mg Th, lawe Dd
Cp Pw La

717-20 Om in many MSS

The Wife of Bath's Tale

881 but a Dd Ha Cp Pw La Mg and (Manly, p 584) 26 others, no(n) Gg Cn Th and (Manly) 13 others

941 like El Dd Gg Th, like Hg Cn Ha, like Cp Pw La Mg

1112 us] nis Cp Pw (perhaps correctly, to avoid hiatus)

The Friar's Prologue and Tale

1295-96 In Ha this couplet stands between ll 1308 and 1309

1324 wete Dd, Skeat adopts wher that, from Cp Pw (also Mg) Perhaps we should insert best, with Ad¹ En² (Brusendorff, p 110, n 3), or ought, with Ha⁵ Ad² (Brusendorff)

1329 hys a Cn Gg Th, her(e) Dd Ha Cp
Pw La Mg

1377 Ro(o)d(e) for Dd Cp Pw La Mg
Ha Th, etc (27 in all, acc to Manly), Wente
for Gg Ps (Manly), Redy for Gi Ni Ra² Ry¹ (Manly), For El Hg Cn En¹ (Brusendorff, p 79, n 3, 21 in all, acc to Manly)

1406 and pleye(n) Hg Dd Cn En¹ Gg Ha
Ha¹ Ha⁵ Ad², hwe wey(e) El Pw ζ Mg

1426 eke Dd Ha (avoids hiatus)

1428 laborious Dd Cp, rest (incl Cn Mg)
laborous (with hiatus)

1445 and Gg, rest (incl Cn Mg) om
(right Dd)

1647 and is supplied after Crist by some editors for the meter Ha reads Povel But Chaucer may have permitted a pause or rest in such a list Cf Prol Mel, VII, 951

1663 these somonours hem a Dd, this (oure)
Ha Somonour hum B (incl Mg) Gg

The Summoner's Prologue and Tale

1692 that] than Ha Pw (perhaps correctly, but of l 1856)

1887 mountayne Hg, rest (incl Cn Mg) mount(e)

2004 Ha inserts spurious couplets after ll 2004, 2012, 2037, 2048

2015 e(e)k(e) El Cn Gg Pw Mg Th, certes Hg Dd Cp La; also Ha

2201 what] all what Pw (perhaps correctly, since it improves the meter) Or read hered? or what [that]?

2224 Certes it was a shrewed conclusoun
El

2289 dyd or Th, or elles Ha Skeat em or [as] Pi(h)olome La Ha² Mg Th, rest (incl Cn) Protholome(e), the corrupt form, which would make the extra word metrically unnecessary

FRAGMENT IV

The Clerk's Prologue and Tale

For the Clerk's Prologue and Tale use has been made of the eight additional MSS printed in the Chaucer Society Specimens, namely Si Ra¹ Mc Ha¹ (and for the Prologue, Ha⁵) Np (supplemented by Ad³) Hk Ph⁴ (and for the Prologue, Ha²) and Li¹ (completed, where defective, from Ma)

31 Petrak(e) El (Perak) Hg Si¹ Dd Cn
Cp Pw La Ha² (Patrak) Ma Mg, Petrark(e) Ha Si Mc Ra¹ (Petark) Ha⁵ Ad² Hk Th The division of authorities is almost identical in l 1147, below

137 lynage Dd Cn Ha Cp Pw La Si Mg Ra¹ Mc Ha¹ Ph⁴ Li¹ Th lyne El Hg (hgne), lyf Gg Np, Hk corrupt

199 sute El Hg Np, cite Cp La, syth Mc sight(e) Cn Pw Gg Dd Ha Si Ra¹ Ph⁴ Li¹ Ha¹ Th, sigh Mg

266 last El Hg Cn Gg Cp Np La, laste
Mg, lasteth Dd Ha Pw Th Si Ra¹ Hk Ph⁴, lasted Mc

429 homlynesse Cp La Ha¹ Hk (Lat
"domestica"), humblinesse Ph⁴, rest (incl Cn Mg) humblinesse, humblesse, etc

508 ye(e) El Hg (in margin) Dd Cn Ha
Pw Mg Th Si Ra¹ Mc Np Ph⁴ Ma, the(e) El
Hg (in text) Gg Cp La Ha¹, you quod shee Hk

537 Second al om El Cn Cp La Th Np
Ma Ra¹ Mg

552-53 kisse blisse El Cn Ma, rest (incl Mg) blisse kisse (Lat "exosculans benedixit")

590 Panyk Ha Cp Ha¹, Paynyk Mc, Panyyd Ra¹, rest (incl Cn Mg) Panyk(e), Panye (Lat "Panico")

667 youre] oure Cp La Mg only, Lat
"nostro", perhaps a deliberate change by Chaucer

764, 939 Panyk(e) Ha Cn Cp Ra¹ Mc
Ha¹, rest (incl Mg) Panyk(e), Pany(e)

867 your] my Si Np El Hg Dd Ha Gg
(my)

868 your] so Ra¹ Mc Ph⁴ Cp La, rest (incl Mg) my(n)

915 he] she Ra¹ Mc, om Gg

996 jane Dd Cn Gg Pw Cp La Th Ha Si
Ha¹ Np Ma Hk Mg, vane El Hg Ra¹ Mc, vane Ph⁴

1067 disposed Dd Cn Pw Th Ra¹ Mc Ma
Hk Mg, purposed Ha Si Cp La Np Ph⁴ supposed El Hg Gg Ha¹

1088 God thanke yt you Hg Cn (thanked)
Dd Ha Th Np Ma, God thanke you Gg Ph¹ Mg, God I thanke yt you Si Cp Ra¹ Mc, God I thanked (thank) you La Fw, good Lord I thanke you Hk, I thank yt you Ha¹, that thank I you El

1181 trust Hg Dd Cn Gg Np Pw Ll¹ Mg
Ha³ Ph⁴ Th, hope El Ha Si Ra¹ Mc Ha¹ Cp La

The Host's Stanza

Lines 1212^{a-f} are preserved in El Hg Py
Dd Cn Gg Se Bo² Bw Ne Ch Te² Ln
Ha² Ha³ Ry² Ad¹ En¹ Ma Np En² Th. (See
Miss Hammond, p 303 and Tatlock, p 23, n.) They are probably part of a canceled link, originally intended to follow l 1169. But since they are without doubt genuine, it seems best to leave them standing in the text. Brusendorff (p 76) argued that it was Chaucer's final plan to retain the stanza, for humorous relief, between the Envoy and the Merchant's Prologue.

In a number of MSS CIT is followed by FrankIT, and eight of them (Bw Ha² Ld² Lc Mg Ry² Sl¹ Nl) contain the following spurious link (printed by Manly, p 84)

*I have a wyf quod oure Ost though she pore be Yt hath she an heap of vices lo
For of hir tonge a moche shrewre is she
For to my wille the contrary wol she do Therof no force lat alle suche thinges go
But write ye what in counsaill be it said Me reweth sore that I am to hir taid*

*Sure Frankeleyn cometh nere zif yt youre wil be
And say ys a tale as ye are a gentilmn
It shal be don trevely host quod he I wol you telle as hertely as I can Holdeth me excused though I unworthy am
To telle you a tale for I wol Not rebell Azenst youre wille a tale now wol I telle*

Pw has a longer form, and the link also occurs in various forms in several MSS in which FrankIT follows Mercht

The Merchant's Prologue and Tale

1228 lven Se, rest (incl Cn) lyve (metrically less satisfactory)

1306-06 Om Cp La and (Brusendorff, p 66) Ra³ Ne Te¹ Te² Sl² Ha³ Ad¹ En², also, as Professor Tatlock has informed the editor by letter, Ln, in other MSS the couplet appears in various forms, nearly all manifestly spurious. Tatlock suggests that Chaucer wrote only And if thou take a wyf, the remainder having been pieced out by scribes.
The version in the text is that of El Gg.
Other forms are given below, as noted by Skeat, Oxf Chau, V, 354, Brusendorff, pp
65 f, and Tatlock's letter. Professor Brusendorff made the variants in this passage a basis for classifying the MSS

And if thou take a wyf in thyn age coold Ful lightly maist thou be a cokewoold (Se)

And if thou take a wyf [she wole destroye Thy good substance, and thy body annoy] (Hg bracketed words written on a blank in lighter ink. Tatlock thinks the hand is different, but contemporary)

And of that thou take a wyf be (wel) (v)-uar Of oon peril which declare I ne dar (Ha Ps Ha³ Bo²)

And if thou take a wyf (that) to the (is) untrew

Ful ofte tyme it shal the (sore) r[e]we (Pw En²
Mg Ha³ Ha² Ld² Lc Ld¹ To Ii Mm Ry²
Sl¹ Th, also editions of 1550 and 1561)

*And of thou take a wyf of heye lynage
She shal be hauteyn and of gret costage* (Dd Cn En¹ Ry¹ Ch)

*And if thou take a wyf
And lye in disese and langour al thr lif* (Ht Ra²)

*And of thou take a wyf and she be faire
By-uar the thanne of the repaire* (Bw, obviously mended by WBT, III, 1224)

*And if thou take a wyf in dede
In sorow and care thr lif shallow leede* (Py)

1307 things A (exc Cn, om Gg) s sithe(s) B (incl Mg) Cn

1358-61 Om El

1417 twenty (xx) a Gg, sixtene (xvi) Dd
Cn Ha Cp Pw La Mg, fyffene Th

1421 thirty (xxx) a Dd Cn Gg Pw Mg
Th, twenty (xx) Ha Cp La

1514 stopen a, schapyn Gg, stopen Dd
Ha Th Cp Mg, stowyn La Cn, stowpeth Pw

1686 ye [we] Hg Dd Cn, adopted by Skeat, who puts ll 1684-87 in parentheses, taking them out of Justinus's speech. Tatlock (Dev and Chron, p 204) defends the reading of the majority of the MSS

1780 as Ha, rest om

1824 thakke Dd Cn Ha Cp Th, thilke a Gg
Pw La Mg

1888 abyden Hg Dd Gg Ha Cp Mg, byden Cn Pw La Th

2127 love Dd Cn En¹ (adopted by Tyrwhitt), rest (incl Mg) he

2194 my lord that ben my lord Dd Cn
(perhaps correctly)

2230 So (with var, acc to Brusendorff, p 99) Ha² Ad² (ethena) Ps (Sithe) Sl² (Ethea), Cn (Citha) Mg (Cecura), Cp Pw La and (Brusendorff) Ld¹ Ld² Bw Ra³ Se Mm Te¹ En²
Ry¹ Ry² Sl¹ read Proserpyna El Dd Gg Ha
Th and (Brusendorff) Bo² En¹ En² Ad¹ Ch read Ech after other right as any (a) lyne, apparently a scribal substitute for the lost line Hg has Whos answere hath doon many a man pyne, Py Walking to and fro in the gardyne (Brusendorff) — both manifestly corrupt. For an argument in support of the reading in the text see Brusendorff, pp 99 f, citing Claudian, De Raptu Proserpinae, ii, 72 (variant) Koch reads Sacra

2240 [tales] in no MS, inserted by Globe, Skeat inserts [stories]

2405 (y) sailed a Dd, (y) stabled Sl¹ Se
Pw La Mg Th

The Merchant's Epilogue

2420 Now swich a wyf! Alle evel wyres Pw and others, referring to the Clerk's Envoy, which preceded in the Petworth arrangement

2424 the soothe] the soth Pw Cn La, a soth a Dd Ha Se a sothe Ha^s

2425 Pw and other MSS read By mony ensamples it proveth well, removing the reference to the Merchant

2440 In a considerable number of MSS Mercht is followed by WBT. Three of them (Bw Ld² Ry²) contain the following spurious link (as printed by Manly, p 84)

*Oure Ost gan tho to loke vp anon Gode men quod he herkenyih euerychon
As euer I mote drynke wyn or ale
This marchant hath itole a mery tale
How Ianuarie hade a lether Iape
Hys wif put in hys hooode an ape
But here of I wil leue of as noue Dame wif of bath quod he I pray you Telle vs a tale now next aftir this Ser ost quod she so god my soule blis
As I fully therto wil consente
And fully it is mayn holly entente
To don you alle disport that I can
But holdith me excused I am a woman
I can not rehersen as thuse clerkes can
And right a non she hath hir tale bygune*

FRAGMENT V

The Squire's Tale

12 ff Here and elsewhere throughout the Tale the name is spelled Cambyuscan in a (apparently) Dd, Cambuscan in Cn Th, Cambynskan B (exc Th) Gg

20 pitous] pitous Hg (Pretous and just and euere moore yliche), pitous Cn 201 of B (incl Mg), a A (incl Cn, Gg as fayr as)

265 Aldran Hg Dd Cn (apparently), rest (incl Mg) A(V) Adrian

266 Second this Ha, rest om

330 by Ha, rest om

346^s Between Part 1 and Part 2 MSS
Cp Pw and (Manly, p 83) Gl Ha² Lc Mg Mm Ry² have the unexplained inscription
The Stag of an Hert, possibly an enigmatic reference to the name of the scribe of the MS in which it originally appeared

455 love El Gg, rest (incl Cn Mg) we

517 sounnen Hg Gg, rest (incl Cn Mg)

522 here A (incl Cn), ham B (incl Mg)

523 Lackang in Ha

650 Pyes! And pyes a Dd Tyrwhitt, with this reading, transposed ll 649-50, perhaps correctly. But Manly notes that most MSS do not have And

In Cp La Sl² (Manly, p 83) WBT immediately follows SqT, and La contains the following spurious conclusion

*Bot I wil here noue maake a knotte
To the tyme it come next to my lotte
For here be felawes behinde an hepe treulye
That wolden talke ful busilye
And have her sporte as welle as I
And the dare passeth fast certailye
Therefore oste taketh noue goode heede
Who schall next tell and late him speede
Than schortly ansewarde the wife of Bathe
And swore a wonder grete hothe
Be goddes bones I wil tel next
I will nouht gloue bot saye the text*

The Franklin's Prologue and Tale

For a spurious Clerk-Franklin link see the Textual Notes on the Host's Stanza, IV,
1212^{a-5}

726 to me En¹ Cn Pw Th, me to Cp La
Sl¹ Mg, a om me

801 Pennmark(e) Cn La, Denmarke Th, rest (incl Mg) Pedmark(e)

999 f This couplet is moved down to follow l 1006 in Ha² Ps Bw Ha³. That order is preferred by Brusendorff (pp 103 f) and Manly, and may represent a genuine tradition

1161 wouke El, day Hg Dd Gg, yeer 5
Pw Mg

1273 Koch inserts hath, to avoid the un-Chaucerian rime of a weak pret with a form in -t

1430 a Cp La Mg Th, rest om Skeat reads henseiuen, but all MSS have (t) henself.
The Cn reading, slowen, would also mend the meter

1455-56, 1493-98 Only in El Ad³ (Tatlock, p 23, n) and (1455-56) Th, but apparently genuine

The following short spurious link, connecting the Franklin's Tale with the Physician's Tale, was printed by Tyrwhitt

*Ye let that passen, goud our Hoste, as now Sire Doctour of Physike, I prey you, Tell us a tale of som honest matere
It shal be don, if that ye wol at here,
Said this doctour, and has tale began anon
Now, good men, quod he, herkeneth everich on.*

FRAGMENT VI

The Physician's Tale

On MSS in which the Physician's Tale is preceded by the Canon's Yeoman's Tale, and for two spurious links connecting the two see the Textual Notes on the CYT

16 A(p) pelles a Dd Th, Ap(p)ollus Cn

Ha. Sl¹ Cp Pw La, Appollo Mg Zanzus (or perhaps Zanzus) a Dd Cn, Zeusis Th, rest (incl Mg) Zephrus

49 as Sl¹ Pw Mg ζ rest om (Possibly to be read wise Pallas, as in a Cn)

59 dooth a Dd Cn, do(o)n(e) B (incl Mg)

Gg 92 bitrayseth a Dd bitray(e)th B (incl Mg)

Gg Cn Cf MhT, VII, 2380

94 moj two El Ad¹ Pw Sl¹

103-04 Om El

238 leyser a Dd Cn, leve Gg B (incl Mg)

The Words of the Host

For the Pardoner's Tale and the introductory passages the forty-six additional authorities published in the Chaucer Society's Specimens have been available, also Koch's (critical edition, Ch Soc, 1902, which was based upon them

291 advocat] advocas(s)e Sl¹ Pw and 15 other B authorities (perhaps correctly), So falle upon his body and his bones Ha Cp La and 12 other B authorities

292 The devel I bekenne hrm al at ones Ha Cp La and 10 other B authorities

297-98 In Cn Ha Cp La and 16 other B authorities They are regarded as spurious by Koch and Manly. If genuine, they may belong between ll 293-94. Several MSS insert them after l 300. Brusendorff (pp 101 f) suggested that Chaucer meant to cancel them and composed later ll 299-300 (not found in Ha Ps Lc Mg) to take their place

299 Cp La and 4 other ζ MSS, also Cx¹ Cx² Th, have this spurious line But herof wol I nat procede as now

300 for nearly all A MSS, om B MSS (also Ma Ds¹ Cn)

305-06 yurdones Galones most A MSS, so(u)rdenes Galanes Pw and most B MSS

313 cardynacle El Hg Dd and 4 others, rest (incl Cn) cardiacle (some corrupt)

319-20 Ha Ha⁵ Ps Ad³ read

Tel(le) us a tale (for) thou canst many oon Hit s(c)hal be don quod he and that ano(o)n

326-27 Ha Ha⁵ Ps Ad³ read

*Gladly quod he and sayde as ye s(c)hal heer(e)
But in the cuppe wil I me bethynke*

Both these couplets were held by Brusendorff (pp 102 f) to be genuine but rejected readings

The Pardoner's Tale

492 Senec] Seneca Ha, Senekes Tc² Mm Pg³ Th. The nine-syllable line may be emended by adopting either of these readings or by following a number of B MSS which read eek good(e) wordes

522 That they Cx¹ Cx², They Ha and 9 others, That Py Tc¹ Ra³ Gl, rest (incl Cn) (That) ther Cf ParsT, X, 820 that (thei) ben

598 yholden Cp La and 3 other B MSS

This avoids the hiatus, unusual with Chaucer but here occurring in two successive lines

636 suere] seye El Ha

659 lete (Late) most A MSS (incl Cn), Leveth Gg Ha Cp Pw La and most B MSS

736 in Py Dd Ha Cn Th and 17 others rest om

747 if] yf Gg Cn and 11 others (perhaps correctly, to avoid hiatus)

777 kep] hede En¹ Ds¹ En³ Ad¹ Nl Tc¹ and ε (exc Se) what that Hg Dd Ch Ad² Mm, rest (incl Cn) what (perhaps correctly)

826 that right El Hg Dd Cn Gg and 4 others thou right Cx² right 5 MSS. Most authorities read and that or and thanne. The best MSS show a broken construction, with the imv aris(e) after that. Possibly Looke-whan means "whenever" (MLN, XXXI 442), in which case and that anoon ("and no delay") might follow, and the imv would be regular 871 botelles] botels El Hg Py Ha La and at least 15 others. Skeat keeps the shorter form and inserts of without MS support

928 miles] townes B (exc Se Cx²) Ma Cn

944 the] my El Gg and 4 others

In sixteen MSS (Pw Bw En² F¹ Ha² L¹ Ld² Lc Mg Ra² Ry² Sl¹ Bo¹ Mm Gl Ht) there is a spurious link connecting PardT with ShrpT. See Manly, p 85. The passage is printed from nine MSS in the Six-Text Edition, x² f (Specimen u of Moveable Prologues). In Pw the text is as follows

*Nowe frendes sende our hoost so dere
How liketh you by John the pardonere
For he hath unboleded wel the male
He hath vs tolde right a thrifty tale
As touching of mys-gouvernaunce
I prey to god yewe hym good chaunce
As ye han herd of these retourres thre Now gentil Marynere hertely I preyre the Telle vs a good tale and that right anon
It shal be done by god & by seint John Sende this marinere as wel as euer I can
And right anoon his tale he bygan*

MS La alone has the following, also spurious

*Bot than spak oure Oste unto Maister schipman Maister quod he to vs summe tale tel ye can Where-unthe ye myht glad that this company
If it were youre plesereng I wote vele sekurlye Sertes quod this Schipman a tale I can tell
And the[r]-fore herkeneth hyderward how that I wil spell*

FRAGMENT VII

The Shipman's Tale

131 here Gg, rest om

262 shankes A (incl Cn) Th, shankes Ha Cp Pw Mg La

214 Quy (est) la B (incl Mg), Who (us) there A (incl Cn) (apparently from a gloss) 228 tweye (tweyme, two) B (incl Mg, exc.

Th), ten A, Th Scarsly amonge twenty twelve shal thrive

331 sheeld a Gg, she(e)ldes Dd B (incl Mg), scutes Cn

350 ar A (incl Cn) Ha, be(n) Pw Mg ζ

359 yow A (incl Cn), har(e) B (incl Mg)

432 my B (incl Mg), thy Hg En¹ Cn, oure El

434 Tarlynge a En¹ Pw Mg, Tarlyng Cn, Toylng Cp La, Talyng Ha Sl¹ Th

The Proress's Tale

564 your(e) Ha Pw La Mg Th, oure A (incl Cn) Cp (perhaps correctly)

636 masse Cp Pw La Mg, the masse A (incl Cn) Ha Th

676 ben B (incl Mg), leyn A (incl Cn)

The Prologue and Tale of Sir Thopas

691 al a Gg, rest om

805 In Dd only among the published MSS, also in Cn and (Skeat) Ry¹

835 For now Pw ζ Mg, rest (incl Cn) om (perhaps correctly) Manly cites Sir Bevis, l 3, for such a short verse

881 was | it was El (perhaps correctly)

The Prologue and Tale of Melibee

951 Marke Th Cn (and possibly El Ha Ry² Cp Pw, which have a flourish after -k) The ending is of doubtful support in grammar Either insert and or leave the line with one syllable lacking Chaucer may have found such a rest or pause unobjectionable in a list Cf FrT, III, 1647, PF, 380 The lack of an unaccented syllable within a line is not uncommon in Lydgate

1062-63 Not in MSS The passage, which is necessary to the sense, was supplied by Tyrwhitt and the Six-Text edition from the French Melibée Cf Le Ménager de Paris, ed Pichon, Soc de Bib Fr, Paris, 1846 I, 193

1070 and he book om El, the text follows Hg

1223 conseillours | conseil Ha Th (perhaps correctly), Fr "conseil" (Ménager, I 203)

1276 encreesceden A (incl Cn) Pw Cp La and (Tatlock, p 5, n 1) 22 other MSS entrededen Th Mg and (Tatlock) Lc Han shewede you Ha and (Tatlock) Ld¹, proposid Bo¹ (Tatlock), hadden Ii (Tatlock), Fr "adjousterent" (Ménager, I, 206)

1324 From Hg El om

1335-36 apertymeth toures Cp La, rest om And grete edyfyces supplied from the Fr (Ménager, I, 209)

1433-34 Missing in all MSS and Th, supplied by Tyrwhitt and the Six-Text edn from the Fr (Ménager, I, 214)

1445 strong A (incl Cn) Pw Th, straunge Cp La, strayt Ha, Fr "fors" (Ménager, I, 215)

1497 Gregorie | Poul Ha, Fr "Gregore" (Ménager, I, 218)

1556 which housbonde om El Gg Cp Pw La

1560 al(l)o(o)ne Gg Cn B, al alloone a Dd

1576 sokyngly Gg Cn B, sekyngly a Dd

1643 ark a Dd Cn, are Pw, rest ben

1664 if he be El, rest (incl Cn) if it be

The French words are from Le Ménager I, 226, they are not represented in any of the published MSS of the English or in Th

1678 thyng | thynges Dd Ha

1777 And he seuth remissoun om El Dd Cn Gg Th wholly, Hg Ha Cp in part, from Pw Fr "et dit autre part cellui est presque innocent qui a honte de son péchié et le reconnoist" (Ménager, I, 231)

The Monk's Prologue and Tale

1889 my | the Cp La Th and (Brusendorff p 69, n 4) Sl¹ Ha² Te¹ Mm Fl Ch Py, this Sl¹ and (Brusendorff) Ad¹ En² Ha² Miss Hammond (p 258) takes the to be the original reading and my to be Chaucer's own revision

1895 For B, om a Dd Cn

1957-58 El om

2055 Cuser a, suser Ha, Sythur Gg Pw La, cyder Cp, sydur Cn, suder Mg

2272 ff Odenak(e) B (Th Odenat, Mg Odonake), Onedake A (incl Cn)

2325 Petrak El Hg Dd Gg Cn La Mg and (Brusendorff, p 119, n 2) En¹ En² Ad¹ Ad² Petrarke Cp Pw Th, Perark Ha See textual note on Cl Proh, IV, 31

2333 maden Mg, rest (incl Cn) made, maad

2340 fe(e)ldes A (incl Cn), fe(e)ld(e) B (incl Mg)

2363 Bjforen | all MSS have Bjfore, Bjform(e)

2380 bitrayed a Gg, bitrayed B (incl Mg) Cn Cf PhysT, VI, 92

2426 spak(e) a Dd Cn Th, saugh, sawe segh, etc Ha Cp Pw La Sl¹ Mg Line deficient, Globe inserts ne

2438 but a Dd Cn Th, save (sauif) Ha² Ha Cp Pw La Mg

2467 [south] north A (incl Cn), om B (incl Mg) The emendation seems necessary to the sense Koch suggests, however that Chaucer wrote Noth (for Noithus, which is mentioned along with "septem triones" in the passage in Boethius which lies behind the English text)

2544 ful B (incl Mg, exc Th), om A (incl Cn) Th (perhaps correctly, with the reading fyre, as in Cn Pw La Th)

2563 Globe inserts ne to avoid hiatus

2720 Valere Th (Valery), Valarren Ha, rest (incl Cn Mg) Valerius (metrically difficult) Koch objects to Valere here on the ground that it seems to mean in Chaucer the author of the Epistola ad Rufinum See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes on the WBT

2721 word and ende all MSS and Th doubtless a corruption of ord and ende See the explanatory note on this line

The Nun's Priest's Prologue

A shorter form of this link, omitting ll 2771-90, is found in Hg Cp Pw Mg and several other MSS (See Miss Hammond, p 241 f Cn has the full form) In l 2767 Ad¹ En² Tc² Cx² read Hoste for Knyght, possibly representing Chaucer's first intention

2783 als Ry¹ Dd Ha, also El Cn Ry² Sl¹ Ad¹ La Mg Th

2786 als El Dd Sl¹ Ry¹ La Mg Th, also Ha Ry² Ad¹, eke Cn

2792 or Pw, o Hg Dd Cn, rest (incl Mg) om

The Nun's Priest's Tale

2821 stape a stope(n) En¹ Sl¹ Cn Ha Cp Pw, stoupe La Mg, ystep Th

2870 En¹ Th insert a couplet

*He fethered her an hundred tyme a day
And she hym pleseth all that ever she may*

2896 recche A (exc Cn) Th, rede Ha Cp Pw Mg La, dressyn Cn

2925 drede(n) A (exc Cn) Th, dreme(n) Cn B (incl Mg, exc Th)

2984 aucour a Dd Cp Pw La Mg, aul(c)tour(y)s Gg Cn Th, aucourte Ha

3036 went(e) as at were Hg Gg Ha, as it were El Th, went for Dd, went to Cn, as he went(e) Cp Pw La Mg

3042 he lith Dd Pw Cn ζ (incl Mg), heere he lith a Gg, he lith heer Ha

3076 But Dd Cn, rest (incl Mg) But herken(e)(th) (Alexandrine?)

3155 venymous B (incl Mg) Dd Cn, venymes a Gg

3189 passed i-passed Dd Cn

3386 So fered for the Dd, So fered for a, So aferde for Cn, So were they fered for Ha, For they so sore a ferde were of the dogges Th, For fered for Gg, Sore afer(e)d(e) for Cp Pw La Mg

3395 shrulle | shull(e) El Dd La Cn (per-haps correctly)

3418 the cok Dd Cn, rest (incl Mg) he (Ha reading yggon to fill out the meter)

The Nun's Priest's Epilogue

This occurs in Dd Cn Ad¹ Ry¹ Ch Th and (Tatlock, p 23, n) Ds¹ En¹ En² Ma It is printed by the Chaucer Society from Dd Ad¹ Ry¹ Ch, the present text is based on Dd, collated with the Six-Text print and with Th The passage is doubtless genuine, but seems likely to have been canceled to avoid repetition of material in the Monk's Prologue Six more lines (surely spurious) are added in several MSS to join the NPT to the SecNT They are found in Cn and (Miss Hammond, p 170) En² Ad¹ Ma and are here printed from Cn

*Madame and y durst y wold you pray
To telle us a tale y furthering of our way
Then myght ye do unio us gret ease Gladly q^d she so that y myght you please
You and this wurthy company
And began her tale ryght thus full sobyrlly*

3462 another] the Nunne Cn Ad¹, another man Th

FRAGMENT VIII

The Second Nun's Prologue and Tale

18 encrees B (exc Mg) Cn, n'encrees a, ne encrees Dd, noon encrees Mg, Gg corrupt

139 or B (incl Mg Sl¹), and a Dd Cn

277 Valerians | Cecches MSS (incl Cn Mg) Th, Lat "Valerian"

363 ap(p)osed Ha Cn Mg Th, rest op-posed (also good mediæval usage)

The Canon's Yeoman's Prologue and Tale

The Canon's Yeoman's Prologue and Tale are not in Hg, they are supplied in the Six-Text edition by Lc (of the Pw group, according to Zupitza's classification)

562 hors B (incl Lc Sl¹ Mg), hakemey(e) El Dd Cn

564-65 Om El

Prima Pars inserted to correspond to the later headings found in El 803 purpos of El Dd Cn, craft of that Gg B (incl Lc Mg)

855 End of Dd, supplemented in Ch Soc edition by En¹

881 brat(e) El En¹ Cn Th, bal(he) Gg B (exc Th, incl Mg)

1100 Metrically harsh, perhaps to be emended, Consumed han and wasted or Consumed and wastid have(n)

1171 terued En² Cn, rest (incl Mg) terned(e), torned, turned, etc Cf l 1274

1238-39 Om El En¹ Cn Ry¹

1274 terve El, ter(e) Cn, rest (incl Mg) terne, torne, etc (as in l 1171)

1283-84 The prest supposede nothing but wel, But busned him faste and was wonder fayn B (exc Ha, incl Mg Lc) Ha has the A (incl Cn) reading in a later hand

1303 werk | hert(e) El En¹ Cn

1427 What | What that the all MSS and Th (which would make an Alexandrine verse)

In many MSS CYT precedes PhysT, and 17 of them (Bw Bo¹ En² F1 Ht I Ld² Lc Mm Mg Ra² Ry¹ Ry² Sl² Bo² Py Se, acc to Manly) contain the following spurious link (printed by him, p 86)

Whan that this yoman his tale ended hadde
Of this fals Chanon whiche that was so badde Oure host gan seye trewely and certain
This preest was bagiled sothly forto sayn
He uenyng forto be a philosophre
Tel he right no gold lefte in his cofre
And sothly this preest hadde a luder rape
This cursed Chanon putte in his hood an ape
But al this passe I ouer as now
Svr doctour of physik I pray you Tell vs a tale of som honest matere
It shal be don yif that ye wole it here
Sarde this doctoure and has tale began anon
Now goode men quod he herkeneth everychon

MS La alone has the following link, also spurious

Nowe trewly quod oure Oste this is a pratt tale
For latel mervelle it is that thou lokest so pale Seithen thou hast medeled with so many thinges
With bloweing at the cole to mette bothe brochez and ranges

And others many Jewels dar I undertake
And that thn lorde couthe vs tel of we myht hm oueretake

Bot lat hm go a deuel waye the compangny is newer the wers

And al suche fals hal lotes I sette not be hem a kers

Bot latt pas ouere roue al thes subtiltees
And vme worthi man tel us summe veritees

As ye worschepful Manster of Phisike Telleth vs somme tale that is a cronkye
That we may of yowe leren sum write Quod the Manster of Phisik a tale that I finde write

In cronkye passed of olde tyme
Herkeneth for I wil tel it yow in ryme

FRAGMENT IX

The Manciple's Tale

147 in ydel El Gg, rest (incl Cn Mg) for nocht

173 yif Gg, if a Cn Pw, if that En¹, whan
Ha Cp La Mg Th

FRAGMENT X

The Parson's Prologue and Tale

5 Foure] so (Tatlock, p 20, n 3) Ch Ad¹, ten (x) all published MSS (La corrupt) Th Cn Mg and (Tatlock) 19 others, thre I (Tatlock)

11 I me(e)ne A (incl Cn) Pw Mg ç, equivalent in 20 other MSS (Tatlock, p 20, n 3), in mena Ha Ld¹ (Tatlock), in menes Ry² (Tatlock)

73-74 In the MSS this couplet — apparently through scribal error — follows l 68

190 ther dignitee om El, printed from Hg.

232 lost Ha² Cp Pw Mg La, left a En¹
Th

254 in so much Th, rest (incl Cn Mg) nocht (nat) so much (which is harder)

273 And therfore manere Gg Th, rest om

281 for oure felonies El Th, by oure felonies Hg En¹ Cn Gg Ha Pw Mg (vlenyes)
Cp La, Vulg "propter scelera nostra"

290 End of Cp, supplemented in the Six-Text edition by Se

365 Koch would supply the love of before thalke worldly thinges, thus improving both grammar and sense

387 spryng(e) of Hg Th, spryng(e) of El En¹ Ha² Pw La, spryngers of Ha, of hem spryng(e) Se

390 De Superbia here Hg before l 387 El La, part of longer title in Ha² Pw, rest om

443 Laban and Pharao interchanged in all MSS Th The error may possibly be Chaucer's

475 Remedium etc after spryng(e) El En¹ Se, in margin Gg rest om

511 End of Hg, supplemented in Six-Text edition by Ch

616 be-traysyn Gg, betray Th, betrayeth
En¹, rest (incl Cn) betray(s)ed Tyrwhitt (followed by Skeat), apparently without MS support reads betrayed [God, and this, flaterers betrayen] man, etc The Latin supports the shorter reading "Sub spe enur oculu ad modum Jude hominem tradit hosti bus suis" (K O Petersen, Sources of the Parson's Tale, Boston 1901 p 55)

630 A Mg, rest (incl Cn) I

649 sygne synne El Gg

670 broghte] and broght(e) all MSS Th Scourge Ch, scoure with El, rest (incl Mg scoure (perhaps correctly), beate Th

698 that seeth receraint om El

748 is the thraldom El Ch En¹ Cn Hg
Th, is thral to Se La, hath more (his) hope in (his) thraldom Pw Ha² Mg Perhaps to be read (with Skeat) is in the thraldom, but Eph v, 5 reads "aut avarus, quod est idolorum seruitus" (so Peraldus, Petersen, p 67)

858 bussches eds em for beautees all MSS benches Th

869 centesimus fructus secundum Ieroni num contra Iovinianum Ha

955 David] Daniel El Gg Th, Lat
"David" (Petersen, p 78)

965 til byshap om El Gg En¹

983 Ezechiel all authorities, but Ezechias is meant (Is xxxviii, 15) Of course the error may have been Chaucer's, and may even have stood in his source

1000 and no El Gg Th, and in no Ch and at no En¹, and is in no Se Pw Mg La and not Ha

1051 etc by mesure, Ha alone repeats etc, making two items instead of one, Lat "largitas, laetitia, hora, et mensura" (Petersen, p 29)

Chaucer's Retraction

Printed by the Chaucer Society from El Ad¹ Ha² Se (supplemented by Ht) Pw La Ha En¹ (completed in a modern hand) also found in Cn and (Tatlock, PMLA, XXVIII 525, n) Ry² Bo¹ Ra² Ra³ Ne I Mm Tc² Lc that is, in all MSS thus far described which have the immediately preceding part of the Parson's Tale unmutated. But it is not in Th

Rubric So (with slight variations) El Ha² Se Pw En¹, Hic capit Autor licenciam Ad¹, Composito huius libri hic capit licenciam suam La, Preces de Chauceres Ha

1086 xx Cn, xxv (25) El En¹ (late hand) Ad¹ Ha² Se Pw, xv La 29 Ha

1092 Qui cum patre &c El, written out fully in Ad¹

THE BOOK OF THE DUCHESS

Authorities three MSS and Thynne's edition

F Fairfax 16 Bodleian
B Bodley 638, Bodleian
T Tanner 346, Bodleian
Th Thynne's edition, 1532

All these copies have been printed by the Chaucer Society. On their relations see J Koch, Angl., IV, Anz., 95, M Lange, Untersuchungen über Chaucer's Boke of the Duchesse, Halle, 1883, and Mr Heath's introduction in the Globe edition, p xxxii. F and B are, as usual, closely related, and in the case of this poem offer the best text. T belongs to the same group with the source of F and B. Th apparently stands by itself.

The present edition is based upon F, corrected by comparison with the other authorities. Numerous ungrammatical forms (chiefly bad final -e's) have had to be corrected and the spelling has been normalized to bring it into general conformity with that of the Ellesmere MS of the Canterbury Tales. With regard to certain special problems see the Introduction on the Text. The authorities agree in supporting many readings which are either unsatisfactory in sense or metrically inferior to most of Chaucer's verse, and such readings have been sparingly corrected. Perhaps the editor has erred on the side of conservatism, but it appeared unsafe to indulge in wholesale emendation to improve the text of an early poem in a meter of rather rough and free traditions. Skeat's text is much more freely corrected. The important emendations of the various editors are recorded below.

23 thus em Skeat, Koch, MSS, Globe

73 founden em Skeat, Koch to avoid hiatus, MSS, Globe founde

76 of of Alcyone F Th, probably a gloss taken into the text

80 erme yerne F Th, emendation for rime

82 [he dwelleth] Skeat, Globe, he taried Koch, her thoughte F Th (apparently repeated from l 81)

91-94 Globe transposes these couplets

120 [knowen] knowe(s) MSS, om Skeat, Globe, Koch to avoid hiatus.

128 tooke, read took? But the form may be subjunctive

158 no thing em Skeat Globe, Koch noht MSS (which looks like corrupt repetition)

185 axed] MSS and axed (asked)

204 nam] MSS am, followed by Globe, Skeat Koch em nam, restoring the usual idiom

206 Skeat supplied [look] to mend an unusual construction. But the independent subjunctive (retained by Koch) is a possible idiom. Cf MerchT, IV, 1942. Globe transfers for from l 207 (metri gratia)

334 Of Skeat, Koch, MSS, Globe And

338 gilde F, Koch, gyldy(e) B Th, gyltr T, Skeat, Globe em gilden

383 over shot Th, ovyrshotte B, overshet(te) F T (perhaps correctly)

391 crepte] so Globe, Koch, Skeat em creep (Chaucer's more usual form)

437 relehened] Skeat em for rehene, MSS, Globe, Koch

480 After l 479 Th inserts And thus in sorowe lefte me alone. To preserve the customary numbering the next line is called l 481. Thynne's linc, with its un-Chaucerian rime (aloon for alone), is held by Skeat, Globe to be spurious. If it is genuine, possibly (as Professor Koch suggests) l 478 should follow it. This would give the rime sequence aab, but the order seems unnatural.

495 was Skeat, Globe is MSS, Koch

584 That] so Globe, Koch Skeat Thogh

586 hym] so Globe, Koch, Skeat hit, to avoid unnatural change of gender

599 song Skeat, Globe, Koch sorowe MSS

660 the mad(de) MSS, which makes the line suspiciously long

681 she my fers MSS, Skeat, Globe, Koch my fers she, for the meter

721 syn] good sive MSS, Koch, ys om Skeat, good om Globe

734 Skeat inserts a' after fals. Read false Th T (with morganic -e)?

802 So Koch, Skeat And al my thoughtes varynye, Globe That tyme, and thoughtes varynye

829 so] and so MSS

832 as T, al B F Th

855 on] so Globe, upon Skeat, Koch

905 Skeat, Globe om whit, Koch trans-poses fresh and rody — both changes being made to improve the meter Here and at ll 942, 948 there is a marginal note "blanche" in Stowe's hand

932 ther supplied by Skeat, Globe, Koch 942 So Koch, whit (Globe om) again overloads the verse and may be wrong, Skeat om pure

943 or MSS, Koch, and Skeat, nor Globe
948 White, the -e is clipped in the verse, but may be correctly written as the weak ending of the adjective

959 pure sewynge pure om Skeat, nere pursewynge (e) Globe, Koch

1020 wolde not so Globe, Skeat, Koch noide

1028 to Skeat Koch, into MSS, Globe
1029-30 Carrenar war Carrenare ware MSS but the singular form of the adjective seems to be required

1039-40 blesse Th, rest blusse The rare form blesse (accepted by Koch) rimes properly with goddesse Skeat em goddesse to lusse, Globe goode lusse, to rime with blisse 1041 and everdel(e) MSS, Globe Skeat

And I hrs hoolly, everydel (so Koch, retaining and)

1075 treuly om Skeat 1126 Skeat supplies [right] before tho
1133 lnewe F T Th, supported by the meter, though knew (as in B) is the regular strong preterite indicative Possibly this is subjunctive in indirect question

1147 not never MSS
1173 the om MSS, editors supply
1188 nam am MSS, emendation to conform to the usual idiom

1234 to om Skeat
1266 And MSS, Lange, p 20, That (to follow so)

1285 al (2nd) Skeat, Globe, Koch em alle 1315 homwardes Globe em, hom(e)wardes MSS, Skeat supplies [quikly] after gan, Koch faste

THE HOUSE OF FAME

Authorities three MSS and the editions of Caxton and Thynne, grouped as follows

- a* { B Bodley 638, Bodleian
F Fairfax 16, Bodleian
b { P Pepys 2006, hand B, Magdelene College, Cambridge (ends at l 1483) Cx Caxton's edition, 1483
Th Thynne's edition 1532

All the texts are accessible in the Chaucer Society reprints Th derived from Cx but made use of other authorities

Mr Heath held b to be superior and based the Globe text on P as far as it reaches (See his introduction, p xiv) Brusendorff (p 153 n) also expressed a preference for b

The present editor finds the readings of a preferable in the majority of cases, and has consequently made F the basis of his text The same choice was made by Willert (ed HF, Berlin, 1883) Skeat and Koch, and is supported by Miss Hammond in MLN, XXIII, 20 But as a matter of fact, whichever group is adopted a good many readings of the other have to be substituted In this text, too, as in the Book of the Duchess, the readings of all MSS are unsatisfactory and considerable emendation is necessary Though the spelling of F does not conform altogether to that of the best MSS of the Canterbury Tales and the Troilus, most of its peculiarities (such as the double vowels in too, froo, loo, mee, etc) have been allowed to stand Forms that appear inconsistent with Chaucer's usage have been corrected, and inflectional endings have been made regular In several instances -n has been silently added to infinitives to break a hiatus or mend the rhythm

Professor Koch's readings are cited from Chaucers Kleinere Dichtungen

Book I

Title The House of Fame F B P Th,
The book of Fame made by Gefferey Chaucer,
Cx

40 (to) have visions b, avisions a 63 now F B P Th, Koch, Cx om, Skeat, Globe vide

75 me(n) clepeth a, that men clepe(n) b
115 forgo, possibly to be read as two words for go, "because of having gone"

119 sleep so Koch, Skeat, Globe sleep 127 olde a, gold(e) b
143 sunge b, say a

153 Skeat, Globe, Koch supply That before with The ellipsis of the subject relative here is certainly difficult though perhaps not impossible

160 Polytes Th, Polite F B, Plite P, Plyto Cx

184 not Skeat [but] noot, Globe, Koch ne wot

237 Globe, Koch transpose his folk he shulde

244 Al(le) that b, That that a
285 or (before double) om a P (perhaps correctly pryvy double, "secretly double"?), fals pryvyd or Cx

329 [I] supplied by Skeat, Globe 347 myn b, your(e) a

362 Al, Skeat, Globe, MSS But al, But perhaps repeated from l 361

370 him Th, rest om 397 lo a, loke b

399 Enone a, Oenone b
428 grete b, a om

478 any sturyng so Globe, Koch, steryng any Th, Skeat

Book II

- 536 smote a, smyte β (Machaut "mist", see expl n tol 534) To β, of a 543 in a, at β
 603 To do] so Koch, Skeat, Globe to done
 618 Venus [goddesse] Skeat, [dame] Venus Globe The line may be headless, but it is suspiciously short Koch retains it 675 And of β, Of a The β reading makes the unusual dative folke unnecessary 718 way β, care a 756 Ther as β, As ther a 786 nede a, nedes β
 797 Wydder a, Brod(d)er β
 817 another em Willert, Koch in other β, other a 827 same place Globe, sum place stude F, som stude B, some stede Th, Skeat the man-srown, Koch every stede P Cx om ll 827-64 872 [Quod he] supplied by Skeat, Globe, Koch supplies right after A 896 gan Skeat, Globe, gan to Cx Th, to F B P, Koch (conceivably an historical infinitive, but unlikely) 911-12 And seide seyst thou eny token Or ought thou knowest yonder down P, And seyde seest thou eny token Or ought that in the (this) world is of spoken Cx Th, a om
 919 wreche F B Th, wryght Cx P
 946 gonne] goome P, rest gan Lounce a, daunce P Cx, prauuce Th 950 ferde a, fer(e) β 957 grete β, mochul a 961 alwey upper β, upper alwey for a 1044 byten B Th, beten F P, greve Cx
 1066 Seynte] seynt MSS
 1079 verrey P, very Cx Th, were a

Book III

- 1114 site] cye P, cye Cx Th B, citee F
 1124 alum de] almyde F, a lymed Cx Th a thynge of a, Skeat, Globe em almyed, "aligned", but Bradley (Athen, 1902, I, 563 f) argued that the original reading was probably alum de (Fr "alum de glace," crystallized alum). This is accepted by Brusendorff (p 163, n) and Koch 1161-62 Lines transposed in a Th
 1170 no a Th, the P Cx Reading doubtful, compas (noun) ought not to have final -e Either emend the rime-word to plas, or take no as "nor" and compas as infinitive 1177 All MSS om craft in l 1177, β inserts in l 1178, from which the editors have transferred it 1189 Babewynnes Skeat, Globe, Koch em, Rabewynnes B, Rabewyures F, Babe-wyures P, As babewyures Cx, As babeurines Th
 1227-28 Lines transposed in a Ateris a, Cytherus β, Koch Cytharis ("Name eines Spielmanns?") 1228 Pseustus a, Presentus P, Proserus Cx Th

- 1303 they hatte a the hackyng(e) β 1304 full of B, om F, and β 1351 Ful P Cx, rest Fyne
 1355 lusty and riche a Th riche lusty P Cx 1372 So β, This was gret marvaylle to me a Perhaps originally This was gret marcaylle to me, she (Globe footnote) 1390 on bestes a, on a(n)best(e) ben β
 1415 Thus] And thus MSS, And om Skeat, Globe, Koch
 1425 hy and all om, supplied by Globe from Th, l 1426, Koch inserts ful, greef [and hy] Skeat 1483 Skeat supplies [dan] before Virgile, comparing l 1499 1515 olde β, al of the olde F, of the olde B 1551 yet β, ryght a 1568 messenger(e) B Cx, messangere F, messenger Th, masynger P, spellings vary throughout HF, the older form (without n) has been adopted 1595 forih a, fast(e) β
 1623 And thou dan Eolus quod she β, Have do(o)n Eolus let se(e) a, cf l 1765, below 1686 pot] pot(te)ful a Th, pyt ful Cx, pitteful P To avoid over-long line editors om of or ful (perhaps repeated from l 1687)
 1702 clew a, turned β
 1717 lyven em Skeat, Globe, lyen a Th, Koch, be P, om Cx 1725 Al so a Th, Koch, And so P Cx, Globe, Skeat So keneley a, kynd(e)ly β 1726 so a, That their fame was blowe a lofte Cx Th, P om 1735 a β, a om
 1738 achieved a Th eschewyd P Cx Lestes a, bestes P Cx, questes Th 1761 gwwe a Th, blowe P Cx 1765 let se a, quod she β, cf l 1623, above 1779 wher(e) β, or a 1781 rought(e) a thought β 1783 sweynt(e) a, slepy β 1803 beloweth a, belleth β 1812 traytery(e) a, trechery(e) β 1813 grettest Willert, Skeat, Globe, gret(e) MSS, Koch (Perhaps to be emended The grettest harm and unlikkednesse) 1823 lepyng(e) a Th, crepyng(e) P Cx 1824 choppen a, clappa(n) β 1843 End of P
 1895 mene of a, ment of Th, mente Cx
 1897 wiste Skeat, Globe, Koch, wote MSS
 1908 [thus] supplied by Skeat, Globe, Koch om line 1926 et styl Th, rest still(e) (h) et 1940 hottes Skeat, Globe, Koch, hattes a Cx, hutches Th 1944 So β, B om, F starts the line As ful this lo (perhaps preserving a correct but uncompleted text) 1948 roof Cx, rofe Th, rove F, rone B perhaps a real dative 1962 reste Skeat, Globe, Koch, restes MSS
 1967 wyndes a, wether β and] and eke MSS

2004 gynne a, the gyn(ne) ß (Possibly the gyn, "the device," riming with therin)

2009 these MSS, Globe, Koch, but these is not regular, Skeat em surche

2017 frut Skeat, Koch (very doubtful), frot F, foot B, swote Cx Th, Globe Rote, "root," is another possible emendation

2018 languysshe Cx Th, laugh a

2026 here anoon a, anoon om ß, anoon here Skeat, Globe, Koch transpose (for the meter)

2036 From ß, a Koch regards the line as spurious and suggests Many a thousand in t route

2049 Metrically suspicious, Skeat em the other for he, Koch supplies sure before quod

2076 tydyng Cx Th, mouth a, Skeat uord, Globe, Koch thyng Read ech tydyng?

2079 spärke a, sparcke ß

2081 ysprong(e) a, up spronge ß

2083 [tri] and MSS

2090 drauwe ß, Skeat, Globe, thraue a (so Koch, who interprets it "eilen," hasten)

2094 Rest missing in Cx, which adds, however, 12 lines apparently spurious See below

2104 oon [of us] two Koch, that oon [of] two Skeat, Globe, on(e) two F Th, that oon B

2152 nose and yen B, Globe, noyse an hyghen F, noyse on hyghen Th, Skeat, Koch nose on hye (perhaps correctly)

2156 [nevene] Skeat, Koch, Whiche that y nat (naught) ne kan MSS, ne wot, ne kan, Globe

2157 Cx adds at end

*And wyth the noyse of them wo
I sodeynly awoke anon tho
And remembryd what I had seen
And how hye and ferre I had been In my ghoost and had grete wonder
Of that the god of thonder
Had lete me knowen and began to wryte
Lyke as ye have herd me endyte
W hefor to studye and rede alway
I purpose to doo day by day
Thus in dremyng and in game
Endeth thys lytyl book of Fame*

Th alters the first three lines

*And therwithal I abraide
Out of my slepe halfe a frayde Remembrng wel what I had seen*

ANELIDA AND ARCITE

Authorities eight MSS of the whole poem and four of the Complaint alone, all of which together with Caxton's edition, are printed by the Chaucer Society

1	F	Fairfax 16, Bodleian	}	both written by Shrieley
		B			Bodley 638, Bodleian
		HI ¹			Harley 372, British Museum
2	T	Tanner 346, Bodleian	}	both written by Shrieley
		Ff			Cambridge University Library, Ff 1 6
3	L	Longleat 258, in the possession of the Marquis of Bath	}	both written by Shrieley
		D			Digby 181, Bodleian
1	HI ²	Harley 7333, British Museum (copied from Shrieley)	}	both written by Shrieley
		R			Trinity College, Cambridge, R 3 20,
ß	Add	Additional 16165,	}	both written by Shrieley
		P			British Museum
2	Ph	Pepys 2006, Magdalene College, Cambridge	}	both written by Shrieley
		Ph			Phillipps 8299, Cheltenham (contaminated with a MS of the a ² type, perhaps with L)
	Cx	Caxton's edition 1477-8? (perhaps contaminated with HI ²)

Ll 290-98 are omitted in ß Ll 351-57 are in MSS T D L F only, this portion of the text is based upon T MSS Ff R P Ph contain only the Complaint

A thorough investigation of the MSS of the Anelida will be found in Mr Joseph Butterworth's uncompleted dissertation on the Textual Tradition of Chaucer's Minor

Poems The editor has had the advantage of consulting this study It confirms the accepted view as to the classification of the authorities, but shows that in group ß¹ MSS R and Add have a common source as opposed to MS HI² It also adduces evidence, not previously noted, that Caxton's text is a contamination of ß¹ and ß²

Neither of the archetypes a or ß affords a clearly superior text Perhaps there is a slightly larger number of good readings in ß But, for orthographical reasons, MS F has been taken as the basis of the present text and ß readings have been substituted where they appear more probable The spellings in F have occasionally been corrected when they depart from the prevailing usage of the best Chaucer MSS, and a number of final -e's have been supplied for grammatical regularity A few variants peculiar to F, B, and HI¹ (*a*¹) present a special problem They are sometimes accepted as representing a version due to Chaucer himself Several of them are tempting and one or two are manifestly superior to the critical text But taken all together they are hardly sure enough or important enough to prove the author's revision of the poem, though some of them may represent corrections that stood in his original manuscript See ll 223, 229, 236, 257, 269, 278-79, 318, 331, 334, 349

31 token a, tokenyng ß

53 eeruch other to eche other to Cx, yche other for to HI¹ (perhaps correctly)

59 slayn MSS Read slawen? or slaym

[was]? But proude (weak) is regular with the proper name Campaneus Carpaneus L T For Capaneus, conceivably Chaucer's error

- 63 care α , fare β
 68 dwell(en) α , wonnen (women Cx) β 76 is ther, read ther is (L, Globe) or nis ther (Koch em) to avoid hiatus?
 77 worlde, final -e doubtful, though possible as dat Perhaps to be read worold (disyllable) 82 hath] bothe α^1
 85 Arcute all MSS om
 91 trusted] trusteth HI² T Read trust (Skeat, Globe), or truste (Koch)?
 98 As α , Al β
 112 hit dud her ese β , hit dud her herte an ese (var) α 119 heste β , herte α
 132 So β , For so α
 143 of β for α
 149 kende β , the kende α
 171 Craumpyssheth] Al craumpisshed HI², Craumpysed alle Add 174 Noon β , Ne noon α
 182 never α , not (nought) β 183 hum HI² Cx, rest hum up (T om hum)
 185 dredeth B D L Add, dred hit F T HI², drad HI² Cx 193 fee α mete β
 198 Arcute] fals Arcute T D L (and HI¹ later in margin) 199 dere herte β , her dere herte α
 209 with α , of β 223 called] cleped α^1 only 229 Now is he fals, alas! and causeles] Alas now hath he left me causeles α^2
 236 For to] That I ne α^1 241 ferther wol I never be founde α , (for) ther shal (I) never be founde β Both apparently mistake founde (infinitive) for founde (past partic of finde)

- 250 And α^1 Ph
 257 cause! causer α^1
 264-65 But for I was so pleyn, Arcute, In al my werkes, much and lyte β 268 thas! the α^1
 269 Alas! ye! And als ye HI² P Cx (also), of me α^1 , Of my wo ye Add, And of my sorowe Ph
 278 come α^1 β (exc Ph) turne T D Ph L Ff And yt be pleyn T D L P Ph HI², and be al pleyn α^1 , and be pleyn R Ff, and be thou playn Cx and me pleyn Add 279 And than shal this, that now is mis, be game! And turne al this that hath be mys to game α^1 286 be (n) α Ph, lye lym lyth β (exc Ph)
 300 deth α , dye β foul α Ph, cruel (α) β (exc Ph) 301 qu(e)les α , causeles β
 303 Yow rekketh not α , Than wol ye larughe β 309 hold! kepe HI² Add R Ph Aper!? Averyll HI² Add R P, rest Appryll(e) (var sp)
 316 renne α , fle(e)(n) β
 318 seyd oght amys, I prey α^1 , rest oght seyde out of the way (var sp) α^1 avoid identical contains author's correction to avoid identical rime
 319 al aweye α , half aweye β 331 proffen! swere yet α^1
 332 and merc me to preye α , and love me til I (he, ye) deye β 334 thinke β , this α^1 , such α^2 α^2 346 seyd α^1 α^2 , telle R, rest say 349 so! to α^1

THE PARLIAMENT OF FOWLS

Authorities fourteen MSS and Caxton's early print, all accessible in the Chaucer Society reprints

- B Bodley 638, Bodleian
 D Digby 181, Bodleian
 F Fairfax 16, Bodleian
 Ff Cambridge University Library Ff 1 6
 Gg Cambridge University Library Gg 4 27
 H Harley 7333, British Museum
 Hh Cambridge University Library Hh 4 12
 J St Johns College, Oxford, LVII
 L Laud 416, Bodleian
 Lt Longleat 258, in the possession of the Marquis of Bath
 P Pepys 2006, Magdalene College, Cambridge
 R Trinity College, Cambridge, R 3 19
 S Arch Selden B 24, Bodleian
 T Tanner 346, Bodleian
 Cx Caxton's edition, 1477-78

Koch, Angl., IV, Anz., 97, and afterwards completely by Miss Hammond, University of Chicago Decennial Publications, First Series, VII, 3-25 According to Miss Hammond the authorities fall into the following groups (with changes of lettering)

Type A $\left\{ \begin{array}{l} \alpha \text{ Gg Ff} \\ \beta \text{ H R S Hh Cx} \\ \gamma \text{ P J L} \end{array} \right.$

Type B $\left\{ \begin{array}{l} \delta \text{ F B} \\ \epsilon \text{ T Lt D} \end{array} \right.$

Groups α , β , and γ belong to a type A, of which Gg is the best representative verbally, though its spellings, here as in the Canterbury Tales, the Legend of Good Women, and the Troilus, depart considerably from prevailing Chaucerian usage. Groups δ and ϵ belong to a second general type B.

Miss Hammond's results were criticized in turn by Koch in Herrig's Arch., CXI-CXII, 64 ff., 299 ff., 46 ff. See also his Versuch einer kritischen Textausgabe von

These were partially classified by Professor

Chaucers Parlement of Foules, Berlin, 1904 Koch's classification, which puts P with Hh, Cx, and S, and separates them all from H and R, assumes a double source for Ff, and in general makes extensive allowance for contamination

Skeat used F (of Type B) as the basis of his edition. But Koch, and the Globe editor, Mr Heath, have agreed in regarding the A type as slightly superior. Miss Hammond finds the authority of the two groups to be about equal. Professor Root's suggestion (JEGP, V, 189-93) that Type B contains the results of Chaucer's revision lacks adequate support (See Tatlock, Dev and Chron., p 44, n 2). The present text is based upon MS Gg with occasional normalization of its peculiar spellings. The special problem which is raised by the unique readings of Gg is discussed in the Introduction on the Text. In the notes which follow are recorded the most important departures from Gg and retentions of Gg readings as against a "critical" text. Extended lists of variant readings are given by Professor Koch in his critical edition and in his Chaucers Kleinere Dichtungen

Title So Gg, The Parliament of Foules H P B Lt D, The Parliament of Briddes FT, Here foloweth the parlement of Byrdes reducyd to love, etc R, Of the assemble of the byrds on Senn Volantins day L

2 so hard, so sharp] so sharp so hard Gg Ff L J

5 has wonderful Type A, has (or a) dreadful Type B (which inserts so before with)

26 (as) of this Type A, of my first Type B

35 sey(n) Type A, telle Type B

39 u] he all MSS al Cx H Hh P S T D F B Lt om R, rest of

54 Nas [Gg Cx, Meneth Ff H R, and Type B (mornyth D), Ment Hh L P, In J, Was S

65 So Cx Hh P S H R J L, Skeat, Globe, And was sumdel dissevable and ful of harde grace Gg, And was sumdel ful of harde grace Type B Ff (but om ful). Koch em And sumdel fals and ful of harde grace. Possibly Chaucer intended And dissevable and ful of harde grace

82 And that foryevyn is his weked dede Gg (possibly a case of the use of that to repeat th)

117 north-north-west] north nor west Gg, north(e)west R Ff. See explanatory note

133 sped] hy Ff and Type B

170 wente in] that as Gg

214 Wille] wel Gg S, whill H, whele Ff (Boccaccio says "Voluttade," which may have been corruptly written "Voluntade," or mistaken for that word by Chaucer)

215 file] wile Gg Cx J Ff Hh P S, vyle R, wyl H

216 touchede R Cx B, ordanyt S, rest couched(e)

221 don (1st)] go(n) Type B By force] before Gg Ff and Type B Compare Teseide, vii, 55 "Di fare altrua a forza far folia"

305 cast(e) Gg Ff, tast Cx, rest craft

313 eyr Gg Ff, rest see

353 foules] fyles R, bryddis Ff

356 clothes Gg, rest fetheles

364 old all MSS Koch em cold

379 the vicarel] vicarye Gg

380 Skeat, Globe, Koch insert and before moyst, metri gratia. But the "Lydgatian" movement, with the missing unstressed syllable, should perhaps be allowed. See the textual note to Prolog Mel, VII, 951

381 numbers Gg, membris Ff, mesure S, rest noubre (sing) (Bo, iii, m 9, 21 has nombrs proporcionables)

389 All MSS exc Gg Ff prefix With. The Gg reading is better metrically, and the broken construction is not without parallel

391 late] breke Gg

455 fullonge Gg, al hole S, rest alone

490 drow Gg, rest wente

507 spede] profit Gg J Take R, rest take on (me)

511 sayr] good P and Type B (T om)

551 sityngest Gg, best sityng S, rest sityng

567 love another] take a nothr Gg

573 wit] mygh (=myght) Gg

594 doke] goos H R J P S (perhaps correctly, since the remark agrees perfectly with the former speech of the goose)

613 rewtheles em Skeat, Globe, reufuller Gg, routhfull P, rest reufull(e), some with a weak -e, which is metrically possible but makes unsatisfactory sense

632 I (1st)] ut R H Cx Ff J Certis Gg, rest om

637 hit om Gg (which improves the meter), That it ought to be to you a suffisaunce B (perhaps correctly)

641 everch other H R Ff P and Type B, a nothr lyvs Gg, eny othir J (with like before as)

647 gon Gg, rest don

659 terceletis] tersellis Cx Koch reads tersels because eagles, not falcons, are meant. But the distinction is doubtful

672 goddesse] queen Gg

680-92 The roudel is complete only in Gg, in a later fifteenth-century hand. It is partly preserved in J and D. The title Qui bien aime (a) tard oubble, which takes its place in Cx R F B, seems to refer to a tune (the note that was made in France). On the French song see further the explanatory note to l 677

697 I] In Gg (perhaps correctly, compare KnT, I, 1512, In hope that I som grene gete may)

Colophon. The title Parlamentum Avium is found in Gg Ff T F B read Explicit tractatus de congregacione volucrum die Sancti Valentini, etc. D Lt Here endith the Parlement of Foules, Cx Explicit the temple of bras. See Schick, ed Lydgate's Temple of Glas, EETS, 1891, p xvii

BOECE

Authorities ten MSS and the early prints of Caxton and Thynne, classified (with one exception) by the Globe editor as follows

α	C ¹	Cambridge University Library Ii 1 38
	A ²	Additional 16165, British Museum
	H	Harley 2421, British Museum
	B	Bodley 797, Bodleian
	Cx	Caxton's edition, 1477-78
	Th	Thynne's edition, 1532
β	C ²	Cambridge University Library Ii 3 21
	Hn	Hengwrt 393, Peniarth
	A ¹	Additional 10340, British Museum
	Sal	Salisbury 13, Salisbury Cathedral
	Auct	Auct F 3 5, Bodleian (Bk 1 only, somewhat altered)

On the "revamped" text of Auct see Liddell, Acad., XLIX, 199, and Miss Hammond, English Verse between Chaucer and Surrey, Durham, N.C., 1927, p. 393. The tenth MS, Phillips 9472, is cited by Skeat (Oxf Chau., II, xlv), but no account is given of it. C² and A¹ have been published by the Chaucer Society. A collation of Cx, which belongs to Group α but shows contamination with Group β, was printed by Kellner in ES² XIV, i ff. Bk 1, m 1 of Sal was printed in Engl., II, 373, it resembles A¹. Th seems to follow Cx closely.

Groups α and β differ very little in their text. C¹, which was followed by Liddell (Globe), seems also to the present editor slightly the best, and this edition is based upon a photograph of that MS. Comparison has been made with A¹ C² Cx (Kellner's collation) and Th, and account taken of such other variants from other MSS as are recorded by Liddell. Readings of Cx are cited only when explicitly noted by Kellner or Liddell though it is fair to assume that in many passages not listed by Kellner Cx agrees with A¹ and C². Readings from the French translation (ascribed to Jean de Meun) are from Liddell. Citations of the Latin original are from the edition of Peiper, Leipzig, 1871.

Although the orthographic system of C¹ differs considerably from that of the MSS followed in the Canterbury Tales and the Troilus, its spellings have been kept except when they might be regarded as downright errors. Final -e's and inflectional endings have been corrected when necessary.

Book I

m 1, 17 arn C¹ C² Cx Th, ben A¹
 19 of myn emþrð C¹ C² Cx Th, upon myn emþy A¹ pr 1, 62 corn(e) C² Th, cornes C¹ A¹ A², Lat "segetem"

63 heres C¹ C² Cx Th, the heres A¹ (perhaps correctly)

m 2, 1 man C² A¹, this man C¹ Cx Th (perhaps correctly, though the reference is general in the Lat)

15 nombrs C¹, nombre C² A¹ Th, Lat "numerus"

35 fool C² Th, foul(e) C¹ A¹ A² H B Cx, Lat "stohdam", Fr "fole"

m 3, 2 forlete(n) C¹ Th, forlefte(n) C² A¹ Cx

14 kave Cx Th, kaves C¹ C² A¹, Lat "antro" pr 3, 6 byholde C² A¹, byhelde C¹ Th, Lat "respicio"

7 house Cx Th, houses C¹ C² A¹, Lat "laribus"

63 Soronas C¹, Soranos Cx Th, Sorans C² Sorancus A¹

73 tempestes C², tempeste A¹, om C¹ Cx Th

87 pales C², paleys C¹ Th, palays A¹, Lat "vallo" Cf Bk 1, m 4, 19

m 4, 10 wrihth C¹ Cx Th, writth C², wircheth A¹, Lat "torquet"

12 thonder leit C¹ Cx Th, thonder ly(g)ht C² A¹ pr 4, 16 sege C¹ A¹ Th, sete C², Lat "sedem"

22 Gloss q(uasi) d(iceret) non C¹ A¹

26 gerdouns C¹ C², guerdon A¹ Th, Lat "praemia"

29 confermedest C¹, conformedest C², emfo(u)rmedest A¹ Th, Lat "sanxisti"

73 tourmentid A¹, turmentyden C¹ C² B Cx Th (perhaps a grammatical slip of Chaucer's, though the Lat has "verabat")

201 by C² A¹, of Cx Th, byfore C¹, Lat "a G. Caesare"

268 studie C² A¹, studies C¹ Th, Lat "studium"

289 was A¹ Th vs C¹ A² H B, om C²

307 but (y)of (that) C² A¹ Cx Th, but that C¹, Lat "nisi" pr 5, 22 f vs lord he vs lord B, that is lord C¹ C² A¹ Th (and apparently the rest of the MSS, possibly the superfluous that is Chaucer's) pr 6, 14 [folhe] Liddell's conjecture, MSS fortune, Lat "fortuna temeritate", Fr "fortunele folhe"

40 f [thoru] supplied by Liddell, chymynge s(c) hymyn A¹ Th, [and] Liddell's conjecture for is of the MSS, Lat "velut hiant valli robore"

85 felonus felouns (possibly felonus?) C¹, and so in several other instances

95 norissung Cx Th, norysynges C¹ C² A¹, trust B, Lat "fomitem" (Peiper, Obbarius, edn, Jena, 1843), Liddell cites "fomentum," apparently from a MS

100 but to the resoun shone om C¹

110 f that derknesse and that derknesse MSS

m 7, 20 four(e) C² A¹ Th Hn om C¹

Book II

pr 1, 30 and desprisen C² Hn Cx Th, om A¹ C¹

m 1, 13 laugheth A¹ Th, leygheth C¹, lys-sheith C², Lat "ridet" pr 2, 37 [hem] supplied by Liddell from Fr, perhaps unnecessary B om of and reads to have for that thou hast

64 After azeth vi [Wystestow nat thanne my maneris?] is supplied by Liddell from Lat and Fr pr 3, 25 and ajust(e) B (avuse) Cx Th, om C¹ C² Hn A¹, Fr "austerai"

65 fulfildest and fulfildest C¹ C² A¹ Th (Both Skeat and Liddell om and, doubtless correctly)

70 feffedest C² A¹ Th, feddestow C¹

93 seld(e) Cx Th, yelde MSS, Lat "rara" Similar confusion of s and y (z) in m, n 3, 18 pr 6, 24

94 fortunous A¹ Th, fortunes C¹, fortune C² Lat "fortutus"

98 thar A¹, ther B, dar C¹ C², dare Cx Th Possibly [thee] should be inserted, as Liddell suggests pr 4, 50 eldefader eldyrfadyr C² (two words? So printed by Th and Skeat)

78 delices delites C², Lat "delicias"

110 as A² Cx Th om A¹ C¹ C²

122 [is] supplied by Skeat and Liddell from Lat "nihil est miserum"

m 4, 15 sie C¹ C² A¹, sete Hn Cx, seate Th, cite(e) A² H B; Lat "sortem sedis amoense" pr 5, 166 desert desertes C²

193-94 So C¹ (and Liddell), C² A¹ A² Hn om is (also Skeat), is for his wikkednesse the more Cx Th, of his wikkednesse the more B pr 6, 112 as of wil C² A¹, of wil C¹, oft times A², and contrare om Cx Th

m 6, 17 hude C² Th, hude C¹ A¹ pr 7, 3 haddē hadden C¹ C² A¹ Th (The grammatical slip may have been Chaucer's or the scribe's)

8 hst that C² A¹, hst it C¹, leste Cx Th, A² om that (Skeat supplies [him]), taking leste as a verb, Liddell follows MSS, and interprets hst as the conjunction "lest")

53 conteneth coveyeth C² (and Skeat), Lat "habeat"

181 of noon othir thyng, ne of no glorye C² Hn Cx Th, A¹ om whole sentence

m 7, 5 se(e)te C¹ A¹ Th, cyte C² Lat "situm" Perhaps read sie (with Skeat)? So also in m, pr 2, 3 m 8, 17 heven(e) C¹ Cx Th, hevenes A¹ C², Lat "caelo"

Book III

pr 1, 17 that (after herbyform) om A¹ C², perhaps correctly But that weren may be for that (they) were.

pr 2, 3 seete] cyte C², Lat "sedem" C¹ n m 7, 5

126 [ne] Liddell, [nat] Skeat, Lat "nam non esse anxiam," &c pr 4, 49 ff C¹ A² B H Cx om wykked and the foulere and A² B H om so much more, Hn C² om in before so mochel C² Hn A² B place the uhuch folk after reverence, A¹ alters the passage

m 5, 2 corages C¹ Cx Th, corage A¹ C², Lat "animos"

m 6, 11 thow C¹ C² A¹, ye Hn H B Cx Th, Lat "spectes" pr 7, 23 Eurypides Th, Eurypides H, Euridyppus C¹, Euridyppus A¹, Eurydyppus C², Lat "Euripidis" (gen)

pr 8, 54 of (the), before feblesse, A¹ Cx Th, or C¹ C² (corrupt) pr 9, 66 After *thynge*s C¹ inserts so that there ne be amonges hem no difference (probably miscopied from the sentence below)

126 honours C² A¹, honour C¹ Cx Th, Lat "honoribus"

187 lyknesses C², lyknesse A¹ C¹ Th, Lat "imagnes"

213 founded C¹ Th, founden C² A¹, Lat "fundatur"

m 9, 1 soovere and] sovereigne and H Cx Th, om C² A¹ Hn, Lat "sator"

31 [and] supplied by Liddell, Lat "Quae cum secta duos motum glomeravit in orbis, In semet reditura meat mentemque profundam Circut," &c pr 10, 79 the fader Cx Th, the prince C¹, this prince C² A¹, Lat "hunc patrem"

82 Liddell, following the Lat and Fr, suggests the insertion, after ful, of or wenestow that he hath at naturely in himself

110 hvr C¹ A² H Cx Th, hvs A¹ C² Perhaps Chaucer used the singular, following the Lat construction

161-62 [men ben maked just] supplied from Lat and Fr

200 [of] supplied by Liddell from Fr pr 11, 237 hyen to C¹ Cx Th, hyen C¹ A¹

m 11, 36 wyndes C¹ Cx Th, wynde C²

41 depe C¹ Th, depte C² pr 12, 147 disposid(e) C¹ C² A¹ Th, Skeat disposede (perhaps correctly), Lat "disposit"

Book IV

pr 1, 43 abayschynge C¹ Th, an embassynge A¹ C²

75 arysen A¹ Th, areisen C¹ C²

m 1, 1 I have for thy C¹, I have forsothe C² A¹, Than for thy Cx Th, Lat "Sunt etenim"

10 areiseth C² A¹, arysith C¹ Th pr 2, 187 awey om C¹ A² H B, awey C²

242 undvrstonde C¹ C² A¹, understonde(s) A² B H Cx Th

m 2, 12 floodes C^o A¹, flood C¹ A² H B Cx Th, Lat "fuctus" 18 tyranys] A¹ tyrauntis, perhaps correctly, Lat "tyrannos" pr 3, 30 rejoyse(e) C¹ Cx Th, rejoyse C², rejoyseth A¹, Lat "laetaretur" pr 4, 33 power C¹, mowynge C² Th, mowynge A¹ 34 thre C¹ A¹ the C² H Cx, theyr A², her Th, Lat "triplici infortunio" 49 shrewednesse A¹ Th, shrewednesses C¹ C² pr 5, 30 confusoun C¹ A¹, conclusion C² Th Lat "confusionis" pr 6, 172 fro C² A¹ Th of C¹
389 to men C¹ H A² B for men Th, for man Cx, to man C², to no man A¹, Lat "hominum" 414 or thinges C¹ Cx Th, om C² A¹, of thinges A² H

Book V

pr 3, 46 ytrawayled C^o A¹ Th (C¹ ytrawaled, unjoined), trawaled H Cx Liddell takes y as "I" Lat "quasi vero laboretur", Fr "nous travaillons" 186 [iher] supplied by Liddell from Fr m 4, 57 hur(e)lith C² A¹, hurieth C¹ A¹ hurieth H Cx Th pr 6, 33 discrestith C¹, disencrestith C² A¹ H Cx Th A² B Fr "descaist" 130 previdence C¹ (Th¹ indistinct), previdence C², providence A¹ 298 quod she C¹ Cx Th, quod I C^o om A¹ Lat "(B) Mimime (P) Omne namque," &c Liddell is perhaps right in reading No, quod I No, forsothe, quod sche, but there is nothing in the Lat which strictly corresponds to the second part

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Authorities Twenty manuscripts (four containing only brief fragments) and three early prints

A British Museum, Additional 12044 (incomplete)
Cm Campsall, Doncaster
Cp Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, 61
Cx Caxton's edition, c 1483
D Durham V n 13 (Bishop Cosm's Library)
Dg Dugby 181, Bodleian
Gg Cambridge University Library, Gg 4 27
Hl¹ Harley 2280, British Museum
Hl² Harley 3943, British Museum
Hl³ Harley 1239, British Museum
Hl⁴ Harley 2392, British Museum
Hl⁵ Harley 4912, British Museum (incomplete)
J St John's College, Cambridge, L 1
Ph Philipps 8250, Cheltenham
R Rawlson Poet 163, Bodleian
S¹ Arch Selden B 24, Bodleian
S² Arch Selden Supra 56, Bodleian
Th Thynne's edition, 1532
W Wynkyn de Worde's edition, 1517

Short fragments are preserved in Trinity College MS R 3 20 (Bk 1, 631-37) and Cambridge University Library Ff 1 6 (Bk ii, 302-22), (both printed in the Ch Soc Odd Texts, Appendix, pp ix-xii) and in R 4 20 and the Ellesmere Lydgate MS (printed by MacCracken in MLN, XXV, 126 f). Two other fragments (v, 1443-98), preserved on strips of vellum in a book-binding, are described in the Report of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, VI, 331-35. Two unidentified MSS, apparently of the Troilus, which belonged to the library of the Duke of Burgundy in 1467 and 1487, are cited by Miss Hammond in MLN, XXVI 32 from Barrois, Bibliothéque Protogographique, Paris, 1830. There is an early print by Pynson (1526), but it is derived from Caxton and has no independent value.

Of the complete, or nearly complete, texts the following seven have been printed in full by the Chaucer Society: Cm Hl¹ Gg J Cp Hl³ Hl² (the last named in parallel columns with Rossetti's translation of the Italian original). From the remaining nine MSS and the editions of Caxton and Thynne Specimen Extracts have been edited by McCormick and Root, and Thynne's text is also accessible in Skeat's photographic facsimile of his edition. In addition to this printed material, the present editor has made use of a complete copy of A, which was presented to the Harvard Library by Dr Furnvall. And he has also taken account of the variant readings from unpublished MSS printed by Sir William McCormick in the Globe Chaucer and by Professor Root both in his edition and in his volume on the Textual Tradition of Chaucer's Troilus (Chau Soc, 1916). Root's appendix contains a valuable list of corrections of the Chaucer Society reprints.

The relations of the Troilus MSS are very puzzling, and the problem of editing has been discussed above in the Introduction on the Text. According to the investigations of McCormick and Root there are three discernible states of the text, α , β and γ , which represent either two or three distinct versions. The three types are distributed as follows among the different MSS and editions

a	{	Ph	(partly β)
		Hl ²
		Hl ⁴
		W

β	{	Gg	(partly α)
		Hi ¹	(partly α)
		J	(partly α)
		R	(partly γ and α)
		Hi ²	(partly γ)
γ	{	S ¹	(occasionally contaminated with α or β) (corrupt and marked by Northern dialect)
		Cx
		A
		D
		S ²
		Dg Cp
Cm
Hi ¹	(partly α and β)
Th

For reasons stated in the Introduction on the Text, Type γ has been adopted as authoritative by the present editor. Of the three best MSS, Cp, Cm, and Hi¹, the first has been made the basis of the text. Variations between it and Cm or Hi¹ are on the whole unimportant. Such readings of Types α and β as seem of literary interest or editorial significance are recorded in the notes that follow. It was the editor's original intention to give a much longer list of variant readings. But for such detailed information scholars can now consult the complete apparatus in Professor Root's admirable edition. It should be observed that the letters α, β, and γ, as here employed, do not stand regularly for the same MSS, but designate the readings of the supposed three versions as restored by McCormick and Root. The classification of the MSS, as indicated above, varies in different parts of the poem. After iv, 430, for example MS J changes from β to α. It is even questioned whether the β readings represent a single version or revision of the text. On the general character of the revision see, besides Root's discussion, Tatlock, Dev and Chron, Ch Soc, 1907, pp 1 ff, Kittredge, The Date of Chaucer's Troilus, Ch Soc, 1909, pp 30 ff, Brunsdorf, pp 167 ff.

In the matter of orthography the editor's method has been similar to that pursued in the Canterbury Tales. Since the Corpus MS, like the Ellesmere, represents a good scribal tradition, its spellings have been generally preserved. Grammatical errors have been corrected, especially incorrect final -e's, as have also a few forms which appear not to be consistent with Chaucer's usage. Inflectional endings have occasionally been supplied when necessary for the meter or for clearness of meaning. But no attempt has been made at the regular restoration of unpronounced final -e's, which are omitted rather more freely in the Corpus MS than in the Ellesmere. The present text of the Troilus, then, like that of the Canterbury Tales, gives on the whole a faithful reproduction of the practice of a good Chaucerian scribe.

Book I

- 9 Furie] wight α
 13 A woful wight to han] Unto a wofull wrighte α 19 if this may don] myght I do ynt α, ynt myhte I do Hi¹
 24-28 α
Remembre you of olde passid hevynesse
For goddis love and on adversitee
That other suffren thynke how somtyme that ye Fownde how love durst you displese
Or ellis ye wonne hym with to grete ease 33 That I have] He yeve me α
 44 That God hem graunte ay good] On (In Hi²) love that God hem (them Hi²) graunte α
 46 Love] hem α, them Hi² Hi¹
 57 It is wel wai] knowe(n) thyng is α (exc Hi²)
 63 By Paris don] Ful besily α (exc Ph) Wroughten] didn α Hi⁵
 78 For which for to departen] Wherefor to departe α α 83 In trust that he hath] Hoping in hym α, (Ital "Da lui sperando") 85 The norse] Gret rumour α (Ital "Fu romor grande")
 88-91 α
With her foos and wined to be wrokyng
On hym that falsly had his trouthe brokyn
And sworn that he and al his lxn at onys
Were worthy (to be) brent bothe fell and bonys 93 Al unwist] Unknowyng α
 96 Ne in al this world she nyst (not) what to rede α
 101 So fair was none for over every wight α
 104 doth γ, is β Hevenyssh perfil] perfil hevenly α
 108 for sorwe and fere] for pure fere α
 111 With chere and voys ful pytous and wepyng α (Ital "E con voce e con vista assai piotosa")
 118 Forth with meschaunce] To sory hap α (Ital "con la ria ventura") 137 no thyng softe] al (as Hi⁴) unsoft α
 150-51 α
The old usage (For al Hi⁴) nold they of Troy lettyn
As for to honour her goddis and (to) loute 157 lusty] joly α
 159 sondry] meny α
 163-67 α
In general went every manere wight
That thyrffy was to heryn her servise
And that so meny a thousand lusty knyght
So meny a fressh mayde and lady bryght
Ful wel byseyen the meste meyne and leeste 167 both(e) moeste meyne Cp, both most meyne Hi¹, bothe meene meste Cm, men bothe mest A, bothe moste menne D, bothe most mene S¹, the meste meyne Ph, the meste mene Hi⁴, the most and eke Hi², bothe (the or tho) meste (moeste) J Gg Hi³ Th Root (Text Trad p 44) holds that meyne, which stood in the a text, meant meynes "retinue," and was deleted in revision. But it may be the adjective meene, mean "intermediate between messe and leste, and the revision is by no means certain.

169 Among these other folk] Among the which(e) a (Ital 'tra' quali')

176 As was Criseyde, as folk seyde] As she was as the seydyn a

183, 215 Thus] Dawn a

195 God woot] O (a) lord a

202-03 a

O verrey folys may ye no thing se Kan none of yow yware by other be

206-09 a

But troue ye not that love tho lokyd row
For that despit and shop to bene ywrokyn
Yes certen loves how was not ywrokyn
For be myn heed he hit hym atte fulle

255 Refuseih] Ne grucchiuh a 257 Behr is the wand (bond) a

259 hym] love β

274 And sodenly for wondyr he wez astogyned (with variants) a Th

276 mercy] verrey a

324 has γ S¹ Th Cx, the J Gg H¹ Ph H¹
H¹ H¹ (Ital "al palazzo")

342 But told y which were the worst y leve a

345 Or elles] For good or a

363 a (before temple) Cm and Cp H¹
A J Gg H¹ Th, at R, in the H¹ Ph H¹ S² Dg, om Cx

395 a (corrupt) perhaps read But eke save (that) in our spech is difference

403 If he be a

442 day by day γ, day fro day a β (Ital "di giorno in giorno")

458 and Cm A Gg H¹ Th W, in S² Dg, rest om Perhaps to be read whom to serven
I labour (to whom to serven D)

466 Thus Cm H¹ D H¹ S¹ Ph W, has Cp
A J H¹ Gg Th (perhaps correctly)

483 the Grekes] al the Grekes a

540 to] mo a H¹ R Th

563 wo (to) γ R, rest sorwe

640 may ben only glad] wot(e) what gladnes is a J Gg H¹ Th

682 final a R Cx Th H¹, finally Cp Cm
H¹ A J Gg H¹ (probably wrong)

747 H¹ Ph H¹ H¹ Cx Th om a (perhaps correctly)

755 But lete me myn unfortune waylyn (my fortune bewaylen H¹) a

773 No, certes brother] Why no parde svr a
Th

786 a has Sisyphus (in various spellings) for Tityus (Ticius)

796 a resoun] o word, (ye) a Th

904 Cm D J R H¹ Th om second that (perhaps correctly)

914 mucche] monche(n) a

949 The lile useth white smoth and soft a

976 wyse γ Th S¹ J, old(e) a R, rest om 1001 moost] mostie H¹ Cx, to grewe (or to-grewe?) γ (exc D S¹), ay grewe J R S¹, grewe

H¹ Gg H¹ D Cx Th Root's reading, moste
(vb) has foos grewe, is very difficult

1002 wise γ (om A), grete a β

1074 the J Dg D H¹ H¹ H¹ A Th, tho
Cp Cm H¹ S¹ H¹

1075 a-day Cp H¹ S¹ J, rest that day

Book II

40 doyn] delyn a

46 seid] don a

69 Tereus H¹ R Cx, Treux Cp Cm D Dg
S¹ S², Tereuz J, Tryeux H¹, Terous H¹, Thereus Ph H¹ Th, Treux A, Tereus H¹
The rime Tereus thus in LGW, 2315 shows that Chaucer knew the correct form

86 γ S¹ read With al youre faire bok and (al) the companye, Cp adds faire before companye, rest om faire Possibly Chaucer meant to revise, as in text With al youre fayre bok, and companye

110 barbe γ S¹ a, rest wympe

115 By God! by Joves Ph H¹ H¹ Gg H¹
The latter reading may be right, Tatlock, p 5, n 3, defends it on the ground that Chaucer's revision elsewhere does not destroy local color

128 I (interjection) so spelled in Cp Cm H¹ A J Gg, eghe Cx Th, om H¹, y leve it not yurs H¹

248 fremde A D, fremed Th, rest frende, frende, etc

253 eghen down γ a, look down for β

339 ye Cp Cm H¹ A Gg, rest we

403 grow(en) γ J R Th, rest wax(en), wox

406 Nece γ S¹ Th, rest om

434 is a γ were β

478-79 Ne love a (no) man that can no wright ne may Aye(?)ns has wv(le) a

482 drede] dredde (pret ?) Cp Th A (possibly right)

516 af(f)er J R, after A D Gg H¹ H¹ H¹ Cx Th, thereafter Cp Cm H¹ S¹ S² Dg, yn a fere Ph H¹ (Ital "Io non gli era vicin")

603 wax (wex, woxe) a Gg H¹ Th, rest was 615 yates] lats H¹ only

636 weldy γ a, worthy β

675 frist] tho a Th

677 hur(e) hert(e) Ph H¹ H¹ S¹ Dg Cx, rest om herie (R Th var)

734-35 Men lovyn wymmen al this town(e) about(e) Be they the wors (whi) nay without (yn) dout(e) H¹ Ph Gg H¹ Th A (late hand over erasure)

736-38 Ek (Yt) wot I wel he worthy is to have Of women in this world the thurstyeste A S ferforth as she may hr honour save J R H¹

738 That woman is no (x) she H¹ Ph Gg
H¹ Th

745 noon γ rest no man

777 why A Gg, wex J, rest wey(e), way (H¹ corrupt)

800 dremen] dsmen A S¹ Gg H¹ Ph H¹ Th Either reading makes good sense, but dremen is supported by m. 585, below

860 hym (hem) J R HI² Ph HI⁵ Th, it Cp Cm A HI¹ HI³ Gg The next line favors the personification

884 sike all MSS Th Sheat would emend to site, to avoid the assonant rime

922 Of love which that made his (her HI² Ph) herte gay J R Gg HI³ HI⁴

956 trou(en) γ Th, rest trust(en) in (on, to) (trostyn Gg)

1083-85 But that was wfenel (endles) for ay and o And how he wolde in trowth alwey hym holde And his adieu made and gan it folde J R HI² HI⁴ Ph Gg HI⁵ Gg (enfeyned)

1093 This Pandare up therwith and that bytyme a J R Gg HI⁵

1095-97 And seide sepe ye (ynl) and it is pryme And gan to jape and seide thus myn herte So fresh it is though love do it smerte a J R Gg HI⁵

1108 it thoughte as thogh HI² Ph HI⁵ R S¹

1196 that ye wool that he wrote HI² Ph (possibly the first form of the line)

1202 sat γ Th HI³ S¹, rest fel (HI⁵ knelud lowe)

1225 γ HI³ om ay

1240 lue om γ (exc A) S¹ (For the omission of the, possibly correct compare the variant playde tho leoun, 1, 10⁷⁴)

1291 shame γ S¹ HI¹ Th, rest speche (perhaps correctly)

1333 encrees of encreseth J Gg HI⁵ D McCormick suggests the very likely emendation enresse (subj 3 sing)

1347 thuse γ (exc A D) HI³, rest, his(e) (perhaps correctly)

1429-30 So γ (exc D) S¹ HI³, rest But tel me how (for) thou woost of this matere I myghte best awailen now lat se (A corrupt)

1624 helpe γ HI³, rest frend(es)

1663 yow me Cp Cm HI¹ S² Dg, it Gg R HI⁴ Th

1665 his thus γ S¹ Cx (perhaps correctly)

1669 alwenes γ HI³ rest algate

1749 Lest(e) HI² HI⁵ R Th, Last HI³ D Alias, HI⁴, Thus Cx, rest Las(se)

Between ll 1750 and 1751 a single MS, R, inserts the following

Complened ek heleme of his siknes

And feithfully that pitee was to heere

For ye must outhur chaungen your face

That is so ful of mercy and bountee

Or elles must ye do this man sum grace

For this thyng foloweth of necessytee

As sothe as god ys in his mageste

That crueltee with so benygne a chier

Ne may not last in o persone yfere

The first two lines are 1576-77 repeated. The word vacat, written against them in the margin, may indicate that the lines are to be canceled, or that the rest of the stanza is missing. The unique stanza which follows has every appearance of being genuine. But it is uncertain where Chaucer wished it to stand, or whether he meant to preserve it. McCormick, who first printed it (in the Furnivall Miscellany, Oxford, 1901, p 297), suggested that it represents Chaucer's first intention, for which he afterward substituted ll 1737-50. It does not seem to be in place after l 1750, and still less so near l 1576

Book III

17 hym hem all MSS (incorrectly)

28 hym HI² Cx, hyt Ph, om HI⁴ rest it Perhaps we should keep it and read joye

56 kan gan Cm HI¹ HI² Ph HI⁴ Cx

58 shorte sor(e) J R Cx

90 resons γ HI³ Th, werkes Gg HI⁵ R, rest wordes

101 ferforthly seythfully γ Th HI³

110 wrethlike herte γ HI³ S¹ HI⁴ Cx (probably carried over from l 109, but cf, in S87)

158 softely γ HI³ Th, rest sobrelly (Gg sekyrly)

189 merveille Cm Cp HI¹ S² Dg, rest miracle

230 mery γ Th HI³, rest blisful

256 So γ HI³ Th S¹, rest (var sp) Thow woost ths selven what I wolde meene (R combines the two)

269 For that man is unbore γ HI³ Th HI² Ph R, rest For nevere was ther wight

282 So γ HI³ HI⁵ S¹ Gg Th, The preye ich eft (al)though thou sholdest deye a J R Cx (Root, Text Trad, p 178, suggests that the "return to the original reading" was deliberate)

303 Hawh mad Hastow mad(e) γ HI³ S¹ Th Gg HI⁵

354 lyketh γ S¹, rest listeth (var sp)

371 wright man J R Cx

427 good(e) γ HI³ S¹ Th, rest wyse

442 I nyl nat seyn that though he lay(e) (ful) softe β

455 So as they durste In every thing J HI⁴ R S¹

461 grace space a Gg HI⁵ J

489 man a γ HI³ Th, wright β

490 than, he, withouten drede to don his frend to spede β

503 Neigh half this book An hundred vers β

518 out of doute as hym thought β S¹

525 wrste thoughte β S¹

528 Now Thus β S¹

529 fremed wild(e) β HI³ S¹

535 gret γ HI³ S¹ Th, rest his

546 helpen in this nede ra, that he wolde hym spede β

554 come ra HI³, there β

568 And she agayne gan to hym for to roune β

572 Most MSS and Th have thurste, thorste, durste, etc, S¹ HI³ thurst, Skeat thurfte (with acc pron)

573 myghte sholde β HI⁴ S¹, men om HI³

588 and do now for I do β

589 ys γ S¹ HI³, Cx tho, HI² Ph HI⁴ om rest this

591 soule fel β

- 598 And of her wymmen wel a nyne or ten a
- 601 Thurgh out an hole with yn a litil steve a
- 604 But to the point now] But now to purpos β But to the poynt whan that Gg
- 626 That made(n) such a reyn fro heve(n) avale a
- 635 For-whi] For Nece β
- 636 For γ Th, rest Now (And HI³ S¹)
- 668 And there I seyde] And al withinne β
- 672 That is it tyme for to gon to reste (with var) β
- 677 And alweye in this meene while it ron β
- 702 werk] th ng β
- 705 blasful] seint(e) β
- 712 blisful γs, seynt
- 759 secre] lute(l) β
- 773 holde in love] holde(n) longe β
- 800-01 Gan therwith al aboute hir herte colde
- And with a sik she sodeymly answerde* β S¹
- 882 bounte] wisdom J HI⁴ R, wysely Cx
- 937 and that we han] and this matere β, and that ye han Gg Th HI³
- 945 al] as β
- 958 kouthe] myghte β
- 971 fynde] wol J HI⁴ R, rede Cx
- 1096 certeyn] alwey β
- 1101-02 Allas Iwys] Iwys Allas β
- 1115 wete] ek(e) β
- 1136 This light, nor I, ne] I nor this candel HI⁴ Me thynk this candel R
- 1163, 1177 And she] Crusede β
- 1165 bought γ HI³ Th, rest wroght(e)
- 1203 blisful γ S¹ Th, rest bryghte
- 1214 ofte] al day β
- 1218 al] now β
- 1225 of] when β, of HI¹
- 1239 hym] al β
- 1245 Was] Is β
- 1258 that] you β, the Cm
- 1260 which] that β, As I that J, Than I that HI³, As I which Cp HI² Cm Th
- 1264 For] And β
- 1280 which] whom β
- 1283 that] thus β
- 1284 to so swete a wight] to you (my) lady bryght β
- 1295 you be] do you β, thou be Gg (over erasure), be to you HI³
- 1307 at suffiseth, thus] thus suffiseth which β
- 1316 Fellen] They felle J HI⁴ HI³ Cx
- 1323 al ne kan I] no man kan it β
- 1324-37 These stanzas come after l 1414 in J HI³ R S¹ Cx, and stand in both places in HI⁴ Root (Text Trad, pp 157, 167) argues that the β position is the revised one because of the echo of telle in ll 1323 and 1324, and because of the change in the β reading of l 1415
- 1324 soth us] how al β
- 1327 al holy has] the gret of β
- 1329 any word] any thing β, my world Gg
- 1334 at al] hem hool β

- 1348 it] this β
- 1354 swich] this β al the A
- 1360 an hundred] a thousand β (Ital "Mille")
- 1362 wo] sorwe β
- 1375 Creche HI³ Gg (crache) adopted by Root as variant of "cratch" to scrape together Other readings are keche J Cm Cx Th techte Cp A D HI³ HI⁴, theche HI¹ S¹ R Ph
- 1392-93 To techen hem that covetise is vice And love is vertu thogh men holde it nyce β
- 1395 wel] ful β (Cx fully)
- 1399 swich] that β
- 1402 thing γ (exc A) Th, rest uo
- 1415 But whan] whan that β, Ital "Ma poth'e' galli udrio Cantar" Root (Text Trad, p 169) notes that the change may have been made to avoid the repetition of But after the shifing of ll 1324-37
- 1418 bemes] stremes β
- 1420 that anoon, Skeat would emend to than anoon, to avoid the difficult ellipsis
- 1441 For thurgh thy rakel hyng out of Troye β
- 1451 nyght and love] love and nyght β
- 1455 why sekestow] what sekestow (m) β
- 1464 sonne, Titan] same tyme than HI³
- Gan he] wolde* he β
- 1473 The welle and roote] The verray rote β
- 1482 biteth Cp A D S² Th, bulleth HI³, brenneth Cm, rest streyneth (Ital "strigne") Syn] so HI² and om so before streyneth
- 1492 rght] thus β
- 1496 douves] hawkes β (defended by Root, Text Trad, p 171)
- 1524 wordes as γ Th, rest roys as thogh (thogh)
- 1561 I trowe, hve hedes ake] for god our (h's) (hrr) hed may ake β
- 1563 mury] bryght(e) β
- 1576 chargeth] nedeth β D
- 1582 fully] hoolly β
- 1595 An hundred] A thousand β
- 1600 Flegeloun] Contour HI³, Conchyton R Cochta Cx, Concion HI³ (all corruptions of "Coeytus," an inappropriate substitution in β, not likely to be due to Chaucer)
- 1622 That I shal seyn] For love of god β
- 1643 this matere ofte] al day this thng HI² Ph Gg HI³ A Stere HI³ R S¹ Cx, rest tere
- 1645 God woot] By god β
- 1703 Prouis (Pyrous) HI³ Ph A Th, others Prous, Purus, Pwora, Prwors, Pureys, Ovid "Pyros"
- 1720 alwey, out of drede] ay without(en) drede β
- 1744-71 Troilus' Song om HI² Ph (inserted later in Ph)
- 1745 heven(e) a γ (exc A) HI³ Th, hevenes β
- 1748 knetteth γ S¹ Th (HI³ kennyth), rest endytyth (endueth, enduh), Boethius "dictat" But knetteth translates "nectat," which is in the immediately preceding clause in Boethius Both verbs occur in Chaucer's translation of the passage (Bo, ii, m 8, 25 ff) Endyeth, which represents the more literal rendering, may have been Chaucer's first version, afterwards revised in γ

1754 Holden Hold(en) in, J R Cx Gg Hl^s Ph, Hl^s corrupt, Boethius "Foedus perpetuum tenent"

1820 The γ MSS show confusion as to the point at which Book III ends. In Cp Cm Hl^s the colophon is wrongly placed after IV, 28 D S², on the other hand, end Bk III, at l 1806

Book IV

7 the moue] a moue β , Hl^s om a 25 Mars] god Hl^s Hl^s Ph Hl^s (the first reading?)

37 fighten] issen J, issu Ph, perhaps Chaucer's first version from Ital "uscii"

39-40 This is the order of γ S¹ Th Hl^s, rest trape

57-59 So (with variants) Cp Cm Hl^s A D S² Hl^s Ph Th, To Pryamus at his requeste Hl^s Hl^s (a grei request), J Hl^s R S¹ Cx (= β) read (with var)

But natheles a trewe was ther take
At grekys (or grei) requeste and tho they gonnen trete

Of prisoners a change for to make

Ital

"Chiese Priamo triegua, e fughi daga,
E cominciassi a trattare infra loro Di permutar prigioni quella fiata"

The reading of Hl^s or Hl^s is closest to the Italian and may well represent Chaucer's first version, which seems (as Root argues) to have been twice revised. The β version looks like the latest, but it is not clearly due to the author. The change of the request from Priamo to the Greeks may have been made under the influence of Benoit and Guido

87 leste A D Hl^s S¹ S² J Cx Th, le(e)ste Cp Hl^s, rest lost(e)

102 right soone, douteles] for that is douteless α

105 have al this hevynesse] am broght in wrecchidnes α

114 feithfully] sikerly α

123 That they wol bryngel] They wol eft bryngel β

126 of Trewe shal ben set on-fre] shal ynt be set (up) on a fire β

131 socour] mercy α

132 sorwes] sikes β

139 save-guarde] sauf conduyt α , some gan sende Hl^s

143 Let] Gan α (is to holde after let due to the fact that gan was the original auxiliary?)

156 lordes wolde unto us] other lordes wolde β

160 th'eschaunge of here] (the) grauntinge α

197 trewe γ , S¹ Th, rest soth

212 To ylde anon for Antenor Crisseyde α

222 bad] dede α

238 woodnesse] distresse α

247 So wepyn that they semyn welles tweye α Ital "Forte piangesno, e parean due fontane", ed Paris, 1789, Piangono si che paion due fontane")

258 wonder is] wel onethe α (Ital "ap-pena")

261 the (pron) A D S¹ S², ye Th, rest thus (Ital "t ho io fatto")

280 ever(e) γ Th, rest alwey

282 whider me] whiderward β

286 gerful] gery α

290 What] How α (Ital "come")

295 What shal I don] What I may don γ Th (Ital "Che farò io")

296 On lye] In wo α

300-01 Ne hevynys lyght and thus (I) in derknesse

My(n) woful lyf wel enden for (yn) distresse α , Ne see no lyght and thus in derknesse

My sorowful lyfe wyl enden in distresse Hl^s

306 out of myn herte, and lat us anon and do myn herte α

326 yowre luf] ye α

341 peynes] sorwes α

347 yelden] chawngen α

359 For sorwe of this] Ny dede for wo α

365 woful] sorweful α

373 Neugh ded for smert] For crewel smert α

386 For] O α

388 Strawnger] Strenger(e) Hl^s Gg Hl^s Ph Cx α (exc Hl^s)

397 falte] fond α

398 lokyn] castyn α

404 on or two] two or thre α , one or twey

Th

409 If] What α

418 shal] moot β

430 don] make α

445 What Pandarus syn I have hir be-lyght α

464 wyght] man α

491-532 Om Cp, here printed from Cm

498 Nay god wot γ Th, Nay nay god wot β , Nay Pandarus α . Perhaps the headless line in γ is due to corruption

499 But douteles for aught that may bifalle α

506-07 Or deth me slowe I wolde han ywen here But now his comyn α J Hl^s (om Hs) Gg Ph Hl^s (Ital "Morte, tu mi sarai tanto soave")

532 fare γ Cx Th Ph S¹, rest care

537 wepyn] sorwe α

560 lette] honour α

581 For why in love is ltel hertes reste α

590 cortensly] precously α , preciently R, curyously Cx (with some support from Ital "sottalmente")

594 in blame a lte(l) yfounde γ Th, (a) lte(l) in blame yfounde α , in blame a ltel stounde β

596 shame unto yow] rape in my dom α

602 weyneth] fleeth fro(m) α Cx (Ital "e' timidi rifiuta")

630 spede] have α

644 if that Jove] any aungel α

647 why thow art thus gon α

674 set] bset α

680 in towne, and] in townes a 696-98 For al this while her herte (tyme here thouzt Gg) on oother thyng is God wot her advertence is elliswhere a

706 So that she wende anon right for to dye a 708-14 Om γ doubtles by mere oversight here printed from J

724 tales] wordes a (Ital "parole")
 747 Wo worth that day and namely that nyght a

750-56 In a this stanza follows l 735 (a position which corresponds to the order of the Filostrato), and begins

*The salte teeres from her eyen tweyne
 Out ronne as shoure in apryl ful swithe
 Her white drest she bet and for the peyne*

757 What shal he don what shal I do also a 762-63 And corsed be that day which that Argyve Me of her body bar to ben on lyeve a

767 lyves] oother a 770 rooteles] ertheles a 781 setten] holden a
 790 That highte Elisos] Ther Pluto regneith a

793 chaunged] yolden a 794 sorwful] woful a 819 hure herte gan] for wo she gan a 820 sorwe] shame a (Ital "vergogna")
 823 hous] chambre a

828-29 Myn em Pandare of joyes mo than two Was cause causyng first to me Craseyde a

835 alle worldly blisse] every worldly joye a 843 woful] sorwful a
 854 Thus] This message Cp HI¹ S² D HI⁴

The Root (Text Trad, p 187) suggests that Chaucer may have written This message which thi Troilus the sente

867 ek hure] other a 868 lith now Craseyde] for hem she lith a 876 wel a R S¹, rest om
 881 ertheith] worldly a
 882 So γ S¹ Th, rest (with variants) As he that shortly shapeth him to deye (Ital "Il qual del tutto in duol ne vuol morire", ed Paris, 1789 "Che cerca disperato di morire") The γ reading repeats l 357, above, — whether erroneously or by Chaucer's intention is uncertain

891 And ek the beste as my wot kan comrehende a 903 this] has a Cx
 906 To sen hym in that wo that he is vnne a (Ital "di veder Troilo affitto")

910 beteth Gg HI³ Ph HI⁴ Cx Th, rest he beteth (so Root interpreting, "that [vital] spurt which he is assailing in my heart")

915 hastily] softly a, shortly Ph
 924 So lef] Lat be a
 950-52 So all but Ph HI³, which read

*He fast made hys compleynt and his moon Besykyng hem to sende hym other grace
 Or fro thys worlde to doon hym some pace*

Root suggests (Text Trad, p 218) that the change was made when stanza 155 (ll 1079-85) was added

953-1085 The whole soliloquy is omitted in HI³ Ph HI⁴, and all but the last stanza is omitted in Gg J. The passage is added later in Ph and J (in J by the original scribe). For a detailed account of the MSS at this point see Root, Text Trad, pp 216 ff. They indicate pretty clearly that the soliloquy was inserted after the main body of the narrative was composed

1038 his om Ph S² (making a better line metrically)

1093 many a yer] al (of, often in) thy lyf a 1097 Lat be, and thynk right thus] Kanstow nat thinke thus a 1099 Right so in love] In love also a (etc Gg)

1113 Destourbe al this] Stymt al this thing a 1129 peyne] sorwe a 1131 toke, and after] hente and softe a 1133 Wher that he was] What for to don a

Cx
 1138-39 So butre teris wep(te) nat thurgh the rynde The woful Murra wrien as I fynde a

1165 in nothyng] in no cas a 1183 hem] folk a J HI³
 1199 low or hye] forth in hye J a 1214 Lady] herte J a 1218 to glade] conforte J a (Ital "la confortò"), to gladder HI²

1222-23 Ayem into her herte al softe wente So at the laste a

1250 al here blisse ylorn] her joyes alle lorn a

1251 Seyng allas that evere they were born a

1294 in effect] fynal(Dy a 1301 As in thys cas lat dryve it oute of mynde HI³ only (In this and several other unique HI³ readings which follow Root (Text Trad, p 216) suggests that we have a record of the text in its most primitive form)

1304 Ful cruelly oure hertis wolde anoye HI³ only

1312-13 Considereth now that tyme it is of treue

Ye may not faulle of myn estat to here HI³ only 1321 erste Cp HI³, rest erst. Perhaps the form in -e is used here and in HF, 512

1322 That we shul (wyl Ph) everemo togeddre dwelle a, That I may have a liberte to dwelle HI³

1325 That for the beste] Of pournaunce HI³ only

1336 as wyd] as muche a, as brode HI³
 1363-65 In hoste amonge the Grekys ever in fere

*Hat nyl not bee and gode soo wysly rede
 My soule as ye have cause noon to drede HI³ only (Ital "Ed a che far tra' Greci mi terrebbe Che come vedi son sempre nell' arm")*

1388 (second half) — 1409 (first half)
 Om Cp, here printed from Cm

1392-93 To doo the wrathe of pyramus to passe

Towards hym and don hym stonde in grace HI³ only

- 1402 If that I lye| Yf thys be les HI³ only 1404 In myddys hys werk HI² only 1411 Whan he f-om Delphos to the Grelys sterie HI¹ only 1442 Shal I never as in thys worlde have joye HI¹ only
 1654 no cause| no thought a, No thing HI³

Book V

- 8 gold-ytressed, an emendation, most MSS gold(e) tressed, golde dressed A, gold tresses S¹, Auricomus tressed HI², Gg lacks leaf
 9 shene HI² HI⁴ R S¹, cleene J Ph, clere γ HI² Cx Th 60-61 α β transpose
 67 valeyē| wallys R only, HI³ wey, Ital "vallo" (mustranslation by Chaucer?) 107 Whan this was don γ Th, rest Whan tyme was 181 fader fer| fadres tent HI³
 202 nothyng| no wight a, non man Gg (over erasure)
 211 walwrth Gg HI⁴ Cx, waltryth R whyleth J, swellith Ph, rest wayleth or waleth
 245 langour| γ S¹ Th, rest longyng(e)
 412 wene γ S¹ Th, rest sey(n) (Ital "diria")
 436 largesse| prowesse γ S¹ Th (apparently wrong in this context)
 565 γ S¹ Th Lo yonder saugh ich myn owene lady daunce (probably an error in γ)
 594 o (= one) A J HI⁴, on Gg, a Cp Cm HI¹ HI³ HI² Th 655 Lat(h)ona so all MSS, Cx Th read Lucyna
 726 nedede Cm, rest neded, nedeth No| none Cp Gg A Read either nedede no or neded none
 924 lord γ S¹ Th, rest king (Ital "re") 992 nevere yti I Ph HI⁴ Cx, nevere yti ne Gg, I never yti J, I never HI² HI³ R, I never(e) er(e) γ Th (possible, but metrically harder)
 1095 punysshed| published HI² R Ph Cx Th
 1213 the Cp Cm HI³ Ph D, rest om

1233-74 Om Cp printed here from Cm 1413 As ye γ S¹ Cx Th, rest As she 1498 The following Latin argument of the twelve books of the Thebaid is inserted in the MSS (exc HI⁴ R) after l 1499, where it breaks the continuity of the text Skeat shifted it to a position after l 1484 HI² contains an additional line "Fervidus ypomedon timidique in gurgite mersus" The text is that of Cp, with a few corrections

"Associat profugum Tideo primus Poly-mytem, Tidea legatum docet insidiisque secundus,
 Tercius Hemoniden canit et vates latitantes, Quartus habet reges ineuntes prelia septem,
 Mox furie Lenne quinto narratur et angus,
 Archymon bustum sexto ludique leguntur,
 Dat Grayos Thebes et vatem septimus um-bris, Octavo cecidit Tideoe spes vita Pelasgis,
 Ypomedon nono moritur cum Part(h)onopea, Fulmine percussus, decimo Capaneus super-peratur,
 Undecimo sese permunt per vulnera fratres, Argivam flentem narrat duodenus et ignem"

1502-04 And how Ypomedon with bloody wounde
And ek (om Gg) Parthonope in litel stownde
Ben slayn and how Cappaneus the proude
 J Gg only This (as Root, Text Trad, p 239, observes) is either corrupt, or it is the original version corrected later on reference to Statius

1618 Come| comen R, so also Skeat and Globe, with avoidance of headless line

1631 La vostre C added by HI¹ D S² and editors

1807-27 These three stanzas are omitted in HI² HI⁴ and inserted later, on an inset leaf in Ph For a discussion of the reasons, with the conclusion that the passage was not present in Chaucer's earliest draft of the poem, see Root, Text Trad, pp 245 ff

1809 eghth(e) J (vz) R (vz²) Cx (sygl t), rest seenthe (Ital "ottava")

1866 Trine unite us from oure cruel foone HI² R only

THE LEGEND OF GOOD WOMEN

Authorities twelve MSS and one early edition, as follows

- A¹ Additional 9832, British Museum
 A² Additional 12524, British Museum
 A³ Additional 28617, British Museum
 B Bodley 638, Bodleian
 F Fairfax 18, Bodleian
 Ff Cambridge University Library Ff 1 6
 Gg Cambridge University Library Gg 4 27
 P Pepys 2006, Magdalene College, Cambridge (hands B and C)

- R Rawlinson C 86, Bodleian
 S Arch Selden B 24, Bodleian
 T Tanner 246 Bodleian
 Th Thynne's edition, 1532
 Tr Trinity College, Cambridge, R 3 19

Several of these MSS are fragmentary R contains only the Dido, and Ff only the Thisbe P has ll 1-1377, A¹ has ll 1-1985, A² ll 1640-end, A³ nine fragmentary passages All the texts have been printed by the Chaucer Society

Incomplete and tentative classification of the MSS was made by Skeat and by Pollard in the preparation of their editions. More detailed studies have been published by Kunz Das Verhaltis der Handschriften von Chaucers Legend of Good Women, Berlin, 1889, by Bilderbeck, Chaucer's Legend of Good Women, London, 1902, by Amy, The Text of Chaucer's Legend of Good Women, Princeton 1918, and by Koch, in Angl XLIII, 197-244, XLIV, 23-71. See also his edition of the text, in Chaucers Kleinere Dichtungen, Heidelberg, 1928. Differences in the conclusions of Amy and Koch are set forth in detail by Amy, in JEGP, XXI, 107 ff. Their most important disagreement is in the estimate of MS Gg, which Koch regards as the earlier version. In the opinion of the present editor Dr Amy's conclusions are substantially correct. They were also approved by Professor Brunsdorff, Chaucer Tradition, p 137, n 5. For a few corrections of the Chaucer Society reprints see Amy, p 103.

MS Gg stands by itself, since it contains the sole copy of the revised version of the Prologue. The other MSS fall into two groups

- α
 $\left\{ \begin{array}{l} 1 \text{ Tr A}^1 \\ 2 \text{ S A}^2 \\ 3 \text{ Ff P R A}^3 \end{array} \right.$ β
 $\left\{ \begin{array}{l} 1 \text{ F B} \\ 2 \text{ T} \end{array} \right.$

Thynne's edition runs mainly with Group β (standing closest to T), but shows contamination with Group α . Group α^3 seems to be composite, deriving in part from β and in part from Gg or a lost MS. The relation of Gg to the two main Groups is not certain, but on the whole it stands nearer to Group α . Throughout the Legends, and particularly in the first six it offers unique readings which have been held to indicate that Chaucer's revision went beyond the Prologue. See Bilderbeck, pp 36 ff. The matter is by no means clear. But in the opinion of the present editor the readings in question are probably scribal variants. Compare also Amy, p 101, n.

In the present edition the text of the earlier (F) version of the Prologue is based upon the Fairfax MS because of its superior orthography, but the readings of Group α are given the preference. The text of the Legends is based upon MS Gg, corrected by critical comparison of Groups α and β . Readings of Gg, even when unsupported, have been given serious consideration and sometimes accepted. For although Chaucer's revision seems not to have gone further than the Prologue the MS has special authority because of its independent derivation from his working copy. For the revised (G) Prologue, Gg is naturally the sole authority, and is made the basis of the text. But it is often difficult to determine whether variations between its readings and those of the other MSS represent deliberate changes or merely scribal variants. Some unique readings of Gg are manifestly errors, and some readings which it shares with one or more MSS of Version F seem so clearly inferior that they have been corrected by the editor. But many other variants, whether peculiar to Gg or shared with other MSS are of a doubtful character. They may be scribal errors in Gg, or inferior readings of the first version inadvertently kept in revision, or variants in the first version which Chaucer deliberately approved and retained. In view of the peculiar authority of Gg, it has seemed safest to preserve such readings, and to call attention to the more important of them in the notes. The spelling of Gg, which departs widely from the usage of most Chaucer MSS, has been normalized throughout, that of MS F has required very slight correction.

Prologue, Version F

(Variants which are clearly due to the revision will not be listed here)

1 tymes α F T, (sythes β Gg, (apparently not a case of revision) Have I Tr Gg S A¹, I have T F B Th

50 sightie] all sight

67 Suffisa(u)nt β Th, Sufficient Tr S, Suffica(u)nt A¹ P

196 stryf Tr S A¹ (also Gg), rest thing

221 fyne β Tr S P, fyn (ϵ) and A¹ (also Gg). Perhaps fyne is a mere spelling, though the form with final -e occurs in Chaucer. This seems unlikely to be a case of revision.

261 for love Tr A¹ S (also Gg), of love β P Th

338 seynt all MSS, possibly to be emended to seynte, though the headless line is equally probable.

387 half-goddes] Langhans, Untersuchungen, p 209, emends unnecessarily, to a goddes half.

404 sorwefull] drededeful β P

427 sithen S only, rest is (which is metrically suspicious)

493 shal charge his servants] his servants charge Tr A¹ only. A tempting reading for both versions, but perhaps due to scribe's mending of meter.

529 flourous F Th only (probably the first reading), rest floures (which was retained in Gg)

Prologue, Version G

6 helle or hevene Gg (also Tr), hevyn or helle S rest hevne or yn helle (Perhaps a mere scribal variant retained in Gg)

16 say Gg (also Tr), perhaps we should read saugh with S P β ? Both forms are common in Chaucer MSS, but say (sey) seems best established in rime

34 make Gg, rest maketh The Gg reading may be an error, but is retained as being possibly an intentional subjunctive from mayne Gg only mere spelling

51 gynneth begynnys Gg (dialectic and probably scribal)

111 surmountede Gg, Version F has surmounteth (not a certain case of revision)

116 th' atempre the tempre Gg only (a tempre Tr A¹)

127 Meter suspicious, read somē, or insert layes (Skeat)? The next twelve lines in Gg are very defective. It looks as if Chaucer's revision had been either left incomplete, or had been badly corrupted by a scribe

128 Meter defective in Gg, insert Moy (Skeat) or adopt reading of Version F (Globe) It is not certain that there is any revision here

131 [They] That Gg, Skeat, with awkward construction Globe [And]

132 For on At Gg only, probably an error, rather than a deliberate variant

135 The honour and the humble obeysaunce Gg only This makes no sense, and the reading of Version F has been adopted (so Globe). Very likely a real alteration is concealed in Gg, Skeat em They dide honour and humble obeysaunces

137 Ryght on to love and to natures Gg only Metrically defective, longing (so Globe) is supplied by comparison with Version F (that longeth), Skeat supplies plesing, Langhans, Untersuchungen, p 104, would read Ryght as yt longeth to love and to nature, Dide eche of hem as othir creature

138 Defective in Gg and not paralleled in Version F Skeat supplies doth wel cryaturys and natures (l 137) are hardly possible, Version F has nature cure The whole passage is corrupt

144 loken Gg loke

149, 152 flourys Gg (also Tr A¹ S P), flourys β Hence not a deliberate revision Chaucer simply used a MS of the type which had substituted floures

153 fyn and Gg (also A¹), rest fyne

157 the Gg, her Version F, perhaps revision

159 Of Gg, In Version F, probably error in Gg

192 world Gg, wyde world Version F Perhaps a scribal omission in Gg

213, 218 Eek Gg only, And Version F Perhaps not revision

317 worthyeste Skeat em for worthyere Gg

412 besynesse holynes(se) Version F Apparently revision

440 And Gg, I Version F Perhaps deliberate revision

451 put put me Gg F T only

472 tyme lyf Gg F only, probably a mistake allowed to stand in revision

Legend of Cleopatra

Heading Martiris appears in F B T only, but is probably due to the author, though neglected in revision

641 rennyth Gg, ran Th, and F B T, raf Tr, rase A¹, than S, ihenn P There is MS support for renneth or ran The former is favored by the authority of Gg and the sequence of tenses, and the grammatical difficulty is removed by the emendation renne

Explicit, etc, from F throughout the poem

Legend of Thisbe

Headings from F throughout the poem

718 That tho was in that lond Estward dwellynge Gg only, most other MSS That est(e)ward in the world was tho dwellynge (Possibly revision?)

724 called Gg α, cleped β

794 hast(e) Gg Ff P, rest lykunge

882 she he Gg A¹ P

890 my Gg (myn, corrected) Ff only, rest thy (which is wrong unless something has fallen out, as Globe suggests)

Legend of Dido

928 In Naso and Eneydos Gg only, rest In thyn Eneyde (Ovide S R) and Naso (Possibly revision)

944 olde ouene Gg

964 called clepud Gg

1107 ornementes Gg Tr A¹, rest pavement(e)s

1126 Thus can this honorable quene hre gestis calle Th Gg F B T (his gistes) Tr S (gan) A¹ (ganne to calle) P (gyftes) R (gafe gyftes alle) No MS reading can be right

Skeat em Thus can this noble quene her gestes calle, but noble is unsupported and calle is strangely employed

Globe Thus gan this queene honoure hvr gestes talle, also suggesting Thus gaf this noble queene hvr gistes talle

Talle for calle is a likely restoration on palaeological grounds, but it introduces a word which occurs only once elsewhere in Chaucer, and which is there used in a doubtful sense

Dr Amy (p 63) suggests the reading in the text, meaning "Thus, her guests have every reason to call this queen honorable"

But the order is unusual

1145 take Gg α, make β Th

1160 2nd to comyth Gg only (Possibly revision)

1166 waketh, walweth waylith and sche Gg only (Possibly revision)

1170 dere leve Gg (Possibly revision)

1171 drem slep Gg only

1175 therwithal ek thereto Gg, withal F B T, therwith Th R

1187 thng Gg P R, rest wyght

1217 These bestys wilde Gg only, The wild(e) hertes β Th The wild(e) bestes P R, These wild(e) bestes Tr S A¹

1238 Metrically suspicious Skeat em to been his wyf Koch om the first And 1269 And wastyng Gg only And plesen

Tr A¹, And T S, rest To (defective)

1283 land than of] landes than Gg (om a before quene) Possibly revision

1338 Globe em Jone for Jupiter, which is the reading of all MSS In Tr S A¹ the line is mended by the omission of swete but this translates the Latin "dulces" (Aen iv, 651), and is not likely to have been inserted by a scribe It looks as if Chaucer wrote the alexandrine

1339 unbynd me] and brynge it Gg

1360 contraure] contrar S, rest contrary(e), contrarious(e)

Legend of Hypsipyle and Medea

1382 sehte Gg A¹, s'aight(e) F B only, seeyte A³, seite F set(t) Tr S duseyte Th

1396 as (and) Gundo Gg a, and (as) Ovyde β

1404 gentlesse F B T S Th A², rest gentil-
nes(se)

1538 almycht S only, perhaps a scribe's emendation, but the short line seems impossible

1545 was] was mad Tr only

1605 a leoun] lyo(w)n F T S

1607 the art and craft Tr S A¹, craft and art β , the craft and art Gg Th (extra syllable?), the Craffte A³

1647 stynten β , stynted stymt a Gg

1659 chefe traitour F B T S Th, rest theef
(and) traitour with variations

Legend of Lucrece

1682 And A² only (And especially), rest om The short line is metrically possible, but does not follow l 1681 naturally unless here is there emended to the 1716 pryvely Tr A¹, rest ful prvely (perhaps correctly)

1725 to] sore Gg (possibly revision)

1764 new(e) F T Th B A², now Gg S A², om A¹ Tr

1836-1907 Om Gg, printed from F, but with corrected readings

1879 himselwe] all MSS himself(e), metrically difficult

1881 that a, the lond β

Legend of Ariadne

From F as far as l 1907

1936 Unto Minos Tr A¹, To Minos β S A² A, To Theseus Gg only Possibly

Chaucer wrote the wrong name here and in l 1964, compare the slip in l 1966

1964 Mynos] King Mynos S only, Thesius
Gg only (cf l 1936)

1966 Of Athenes] In moche(II) myrth(e)
Tr A¹, Of the towne Th Lowes suggests that the slip was Chaucer's and was due to the Teseide See the explanatory note

1967 happede] happd (happed) Gg and all MSS (exc S happmit) Either the full form happede or happed ther (Tr A¹) would mend the meter

1971 compleynnyng(e) Gg Tr A¹ A² S, com- pleynt F T B A³ Th

1995 he dar his lyf (to) kepe Gg a, his lyf
(he) dar kepe β

2020 drede] stede β

2053 men] man Gg (which is grammatically possible, see CIT, IV 212, n)

2069 go S, goth Gg Tr A² A³, mot go β (Reading very doubtful)

2075 a Gg, rest om

2083 lene Gg β A³, leve A² S, let Tr

2086 leve Gg A² F B, lyve S, lene T A³ Th, gramt Tr

2094 no profre Gg a, no(t) profyt β

2138 was performed] so all MSS, Skeat, Koch em performed was, for the meter

2160 newe] noble β

2186 gropeth] graspeth Gg Tr, gaspeth
A²

2215 shyp or boot Tr only, any bove S A², bot(e) noon β , boote A³, boot ne Gg (clearly wrong)

Legend of Philomela

Heading from F (which reads formatorum, corruptly)

2261 say Gg Tr rest saugh (saw)

2286 she loveth (loved) Gg a, har longeth β -

2291 beaute] bownte B, bounde F

2324 he Gg, rest om that Gg only, rest a 2359 2nd that] Tr S, rest om (a possible reading, taking by as conjunction in the sense of "by the time that")

Legend of Phyllis

2422 Chorus Th, Thorus, Thora MSS.

See the explanatory note

2470 A^{3]} And F T B

2506-07 Om Gg, here printed from F

Legend of Hypermnestra

2606 utterly] witery F B T

2612 fyre] fyry out Gg (perhaps correctly)

2666 costrat(e) Gg a, costral(e) β

SHORT POEMS

The textual authorities for the Short Poems have nearly all been published by the Chaucer Society. References to them and other reprints, and to previous discussions of the relations of the MSS, are given below for each poem. Readings from the Leyden MS (Vossius 9) are taken from a copy made by the present editor in 1896 and never published. The editor has made free use of the editions of Skeat, Heath, and Koch, and of the textual observations of Professor Brusendorff in his Chaucer Tradition. He would also express grateful acknowledgments to Mr. Joseph Butterworth for having communicated to him some of the results of an exhaustive study, which is not yet completed, of the MSS of the minor poems.

Since the authorities used for the text of the Short Poems often depart from the orthographical practice of the best Chaucer MSS, it has seemed best to the editor to normalize the spelling of these pieces.

An A B C

Authorities thirteen copies in MS and Speght's edition, all printed by the Chaucer Society

1	F	Fairfax 16 Bodleian
		B Bodley 638, Bodleian
		H ¹ Harley 7578, British Museum (fragmentary)
2	P	Pepys 2006, Magdalene College, Cambridge (two copies, both fragmentary)
		Gg Cambridge University Library Gg 4 27
3	Sp	Speght's second edition, 1602
		Ff Cambridge University Library Ff 5 30
1	G	Hunterian Museum, Glasgow, U 3 12
		J St John's College, Cambridge, G 21
		L Laud Misc 740, Bodleian
		S Sion College, London, Arc L 40 2
2	A	Additional 36983, British Museum (formerly Bedford)
		E 44

MS Harley 2251 (H²), British Museum, appears to belong to Group α , but shows signs of contamination. The copies in Ff J G L S occur in a prose translation of Deguillville's Pelerinage de la Vie Humaine.

Group β offers the better text, Ff, with corrected spellings, is made the basis of the present edition.

35 Unto mercy hastow receyved me H² α
 39 me wel chastyse S only, me chastyse Ff A, rest (destroying the rime) That but thou er that day correcte me (my folse J)

- 45 wille β , wit H² α
 83 bothes Ff G Gg, bather J, both(e) F L
Youre bothes, though supported by good MSS, is a strange construction. Perhaps the reading should be youre bother (supported by J), as in Tr, iv 168
 86 Convict Convicted H², Committee J
 132 is his H² α , it is (hys Ff margin) β Koch em (perhaps correctly) hat his ('hits, strikes his') and compares Fr "Son chastoy si fiert a hie" 146 deprived all but J L (privied)
 163 All MSS insert suff(e)red apparently repeated from l 162 Pughte eds em prughte (perhaps correctly)
 181 bryght Gg Sp only

The Complainnt unto Pity

Authorities nine MSS, all published by the Chaucer Society, and Thynne's edition, 1532 (Th) available in Skeat's facsimile. The MSS are classified as follows

α	A	H ¹ Harley 78, British Museum (by Shurley)
		Additional 34360, British Museum (formerly Philipps 9053, copied from a Shurley MS)
		H ² Harley 7578, British Museum
β	Ff	Fairfax 16, Bodleian
		B Bodley 638, Bodleian
		T Tanner 346 Bodleian
		Cambridge University Library Ff 1 6
L	Longleat 258, in the possession of the Marquis of Bath
		R Trinity College, Cambridge, R 3 19

Th apparently belongs to Group β . According to the Globe editor, Ff is derived from T, and R shows contamination of the sources of L and of T and Ff. But both these opinions are questioned by Mr. Butterworth in his unpublished study of the MSS. Group β has a somewhat better text, though frequent corrections have to be made with the aid of Group α . F is taken as the basis of the present edition. References to Ten Brink are to his critical edition of the poem in the Chaucer Society's Essays, Part II, (n d), pp 165 ff.

- 9 a tyme sought α , sought a tyme β Th 21 nas was MSS Th, but Chaucer's usual idiom seems to have demanded a negative Cf l 105
 24 hold β Th, have α
 41 Ten Brink, Skeat, Koch, and Globe insert and before drede
 50 Then leve (we) alle vertues save only Pite β Th 52 So A H¹, alle om H², Confedered by bonde and (by) cruelte β (Unto Cruelle Th)

- 61 yfalle] Th only (yfal), rest fall(e) 67 lo] A H¹ only Koch, following Ten Brink, reads [ne] shulde 70 hight(e) a us hgh (hy) β Th (us hys Ff), Grace your grace β Th
 76 wanien] want(e) all MSS 79 With you benigne and faire creature a 80 your(e) β Th, now cure a 83 that perulous β Th, these (of thoo) persones a 89 than a (exc H²), also β Th H² 92 herenus (heremus, herenius?) β Th, vertuous(e) a, serenous Globe em 93 tenderly β Th trow(e)ly a 96 the H¹, the hevy H¹ A, so β Th
 105 [ne] supplied by Ten Brink Cf 1 21 117 ye] β (ye) yet, Now pte that I have sought so yore a 300 a

A Complaint to Hrs Lady

Authorities two MSS, Harley 78 (H) and Additional 34360 (A), formerly Philipps 9053, both of the British Museum, and both printed by the Chaucer Society under Shurley's title, The Balade of Pte, and Stowe's edition (St), 1561 The copy in H was written by Shurley, that in A seems to be derived from it but contains an additional stanza at the end St closely resembles H The spelling of all is very bad, and is normalized in the present text A number of verbal corrections have also been accepted, though fewer than in Skeat's edition On the MSS see Koch Est, XXVII, 41 ff (with textual notes), and Kleinere Dichtungen p 22, Miss Hammond, Angl, XXVIII, 25 f, and Brusendorff, pp 272 ff

- 1 nighes] so all copies, Skeat nicht
 14 This line is repeated by Skeat at the beginning of the terza rima, to get a rime for fulfille (l 16) The sense is also incomplete in the sentence beginning with l 15 16 [he] never wol Skeat, wol never he Globe, MSS wol (wil) never all copies 18 yul] so all copies, Skeat [fro]
 22 After this line Skeat supplies For this day in hir servise shal I dye, from Mars 189
 23 Before this series in terza rima Skeat supplies, from Pity, 22, 17, and Anel, 307
Thus am I slawn, with sorwes ful dyverse, Ful longe agoon I oghte have taken hede 25 youthel] so all copies, Koch em thought 32 Skeat suggests Than al this worldes richest (or riche) creature
 41 [ee] supplied by eds
 43 I mis] so all copies, Koch would em us ms, for the grammar 50-57 In all copies this stanza has but eight lines Skeat supplies after l 51 Yow rekkeht never wher I flete or sunke, and after l 53 For on my wo you deyneth not to thanke Cf Anel, 181-82
 71 fayner noon] all copies no(o)n fayner

- 72 you] all copies your(e)
 73 io [you distresse] Skeat, to your (e) hyennesse all copies, Koch em hevynesse 92 nil] all copies ne wil
 114 verrayly] so verrayly MSS, verely St, Skeat, Koch [man than me], to avoid the false rime
 117 to be] so H St, trawly A (which removes the false rime)
 118-27 The last stanza is found in A only 120 [is] Supplied by Skeat 123 you myghte] so A, Skeat, Koch myghte youw

The Complaint of Mars

Authorities eight MSS, all printed by the Chaucer Society, and two early editions that of Julian Notary (1499-1501), printed by the Chaucer Society and that of Thynne (1532), available in Skeat's facsimile edition The classification is as follows

- | | | |
|---|----|--|
| a | F | Fairfax 16, Bodleian |
| | L | Longleat 258, in the possession of the Marquis of Bath |
| | T | Tanner 346, Bodleian |
| | Th | Thynne's edition |
- | | | |
|---|-----------------------------|---|
| β | Pb | Pepys 2006 (Hand B, complete) Magdalene College Cambridge |
| | S | Arch Selden B 24 Bodleian |
| | N | Julian Notary's edition |
| | Pe | Pepys 2006 (Hand E, fragmentary) |
| | R | Trinity College, Cambridge, R 3 20 |
| H | Harley 7333, British Museum | |

S appears to be contaminated with an a MS resembling L The readings of the archetype β are in most cases superior to those of a But no single MS of this group is very satisfactory F therefore, because of its general conformity to the spelling of the best MSS of other pieces, has been used as the basis of the present edition, but the readings of Group β have ordinarily been given the preference

- 1 foules β (exc fooles R, floures H), lovers a, of Pb N R S On F H, in T Th, at Pe
 17 you your] so S, you a R, ye your N, rest om youw
 19 This line stands before l 17 in F, before l 18 in Th 54 and ther abyde Pb N R S, and abide Pe, ther abide H, (for) to abyde a 67 ther β, a om
 68 wo β, sorowe a
 141 al alone Pb N (metrically easier)
 146 doth (dud) β, maketh a
 191 than pleyne R, rest om than, com-pleyne S, pleyen Pb 207 depraven β (exc depaynen S) Th, departen a (exc Th)
 227 made a N S, make R maketh Pb

To Rosemounde

Authority a single copy in MS Rawlinson Poet 163, Bodleian, reproduced in facsimile in Skeat's Twelve Facsimiles of Old English Manuscripts, Oxford, 1892 The spelling is here normalized

11 semly] Skeat em, MS semy sma] em Skeat, MS fynall

21 refreyd be] MS be refreyde (with be above the line), Skeat transposed

Womanly Noblesse

Authority a single copy in MS Additional 34360, British Museum first printed by Skeat in Athen, 1894, I, 742 The title is Skeat's The spelling is here somewhat normalized The readings from MacCracken are taken from his College Chaucer, pp 565-66

Subheading Chaucer] Chaucer MS (See Miss Hammond, Angl, XXVIII, 4)

5 womanly] Skeat suggests em wyfly
10 [you] suppi by Skeat, probably correctly

12 After this line the editors insert a line as follows [I pray yow, do to me som dahaunce] Skeat (Athen), [Tatheth me, lady, in your obseauce] Furnivall (adopted by Skeat, Oxf Chau, IV, xxvi), [Take my seruce in gre, and nat greuaunce] MacCracken

15 [loke] Skeat [lo] MacCracken humb- [ely] Skeat em, MS humbly, And [hoveth humblely] Globe

17 peynes for MS, for om Skeat 21 don] Skeat em (Oxf Chau, IV, xxvi), MS do

24 And thynkth be raison that MS, Globe (which suggests em Me thynkth), And thynk resoum Skeat (Stud Chau)

25 for til do the MS, the om Skeat

29 myr] Skeat em, MS my

Adam Scraweyn

Authorities only one MS Shurley's R 3 20, in the library of Trinity College Cambridge Stowe's edition (1561) also has the piece in a text essentially identical with Shurley's, though different in spelling Both copies are printed by the Chaucer Society Shurley's MSS are often untrustworthy in verbal detail, and in the present poem some previous editors have omitted long in l 3 and more in l 4, which on metrical grounds are open to suspicion Skeat, for the same reason, omits for in l 2 The spelling here is normalized

The Former Age

Authorities two MSS, I 3 21 and Hh 4 12, both in the Cambridge University Library, and both printed by the Chaucer Society The former is superior, and is made with normalization of the spelling, the basis of the present text

3 the frutes MSS Skeat, Globe om the 42 MSS om second in 44 parfyt joye reste and quete I, parfite joy and quete Hh

55 After this line there is a line missing Skeat proposes [Fulfulled erthe of olde curtesye], Koch [Yr hadden in this worlde the mastris], MacCracken [And Charite, thise houde hem beter gye]

Fynt &c from Hh

Fortune

Authorities ten MSS and the editions of Caxton and Thynne (Th), classified as follows

α	I	Cambridge University Library I 3 21
β	{	A Ashmole 59, Bodleian
	{	H Harley 2251, British Museum
	{	R Trinity College, Cambridge, R 3 20
γ	{	F Fairfax 16, Bodleian
	{	B Bodley 638 Bodleian
	{	P Pepys 2006, Magdalen College, Cambridge
	{	Ld Lansdowne 699, British Museum
	{	Leyd Leyden University Library Vossius 9
	S	Arch Selden B 10, Bodleian
	Cx	Caxton's edition, c 1477-78

Th, which apparently belongs to Group γ, is available in Skeat's facsimile edition All the rest except the Leyden copy which most nearly resembles Ld and S are printed by the Chaucer Society The Leyden readings from a copy made by the editor, are included in the following citations MS I is decidedly the best and contains a number of superior unique readings It is therefore made the basis of the present text

8, 16, 24 thee I only, rest om
9 light I only, rest si(σ)ht 11 mochel I only, rest moche, mych, muche whirlyng I rest t(o)urnyny(e) 30 why wolt thou I, rest thou shalt nat
36 derkyd I, rest derh(e), dark, etc 64 After l 64 all copies have a wrong rubric (Le plentyf in I) 72 Ld S Leyd om Lenvoy
76 I only, rest om hne
77 And] That I R

Truth

Authorities twenty-two MS copies and the editions of Caxton and Thynne (Th) The classification (on which see Koch, EST XXVII, 13 ff and Kleinere Dichtungen p 33, and Brusendorff, p 245) is as follows

- a { A¹ Additional 10340, British Museum
Ph Philipps 8299, property of T F Fenwick, Esq, Cheltenham
- { Gg Cambridge University Library Gg 4 27
C Cotton Cleopatra D vii, British Museum
E Ellesmere MS, Huntington Library, San Marino, Calif
A² Additional 22139, British Museum
- { F Fairfax 16, Bodleian (two copies designated F₁, F₂)
R Trinity College, Cambridge, R 3 20 (two copies, designated R₁, R₂)
Ld Lansdowne 699, British Museum
S¹ Arch Selden B 10, Bodleian
H Harley 7333, British Museum
S² Arch Selden B 24, Bodleian
Kk Cambridge University Library Kk 1 5
Hat Hatton 73, Bodleian
Lam Lambeth Palace Library 344 (a copy of Hat)
Cp Corpus Christi College, Oxford, 203
Cx Caxton's edition, ca 1477-78

Unpublished

- A³ Additional 36983, British Museum (formerly Bedford)
Pep Peyps 2006, Magdalene College, Cambridge
Leyd Leyden University Library Vossius 9

C Brown (Register of Mid Eng Relg Verse, II, Oxford, 1920, No 515) adds, with a query MS Philipps 11409 (unpublished) this MS and Pep are unclassified Th, which apparently belongs to Group γ is available in Skeat's facsimile edition. Eighteen copies are printed by the Chaucer Society. Lam was published by H N MacCracken in MLN, XXIII, 212 ff. A³ resembles F, Leyd resembles Ld and S¹. The Leyd readings here cited are from a copy made by the editor. Groups α and β have a similar text, superior in general to that of γ . The present edition is based upon A¹, the only MS which contains the Envoy. For an argument against the authority of A¹ see Brusendorff, pp 246 ff

2 the thy good F₁, the thyme owne Ph, thun oven thung A¹, unto thy(n) thung Gg C, (un)to thy good(e) E γ (exc F₁ Cx), (un)to the good Leyd Cx Th, unto thy luyngne A²

6 Reule a Ld Leyd Kk (line shifted) S¹, Rede Cp Cx Th, Werke β , Do R₁ R₂ Hat S² H F₁ F₂ Lam

7 thee Ph A² γ Leyd Th, om A¹ Gg E C

8 Tempest a Gg E C, Restreyne A², Ne study Cp, rest Peigne

10 Gret(e) reste Gg A² γ (exc Cp Kk) Leyd Th, Meche rest Cp For gret reste E C Kk Muche uele a

11 Bewar also γ (exc Cp, which has a different line) Leyd Th, Bewar therefore a And eek bewar β (exc A², which has a different line)

19 Knowe thy contre a β , Lyft up thyne ene Kk, Lyfte up thy hert Cp, rest Looke up on hys and

20 Holde the heye wey a β Weyne (Weyne) thy lust γ Leyd Th

Gentillesse

Authorities nine MSS and the editions of Caxton and Thynne (Th). The nine copies published by the Chaucer Society are classified as follows

- { C Cotton Cleopatra D vii, British Museum
Add Additional 22139, British Museum
H¹ Harley 7578, British Museum
H² Harley 2251, British Museum
R¹ Trinity College, Cambridge, R 14 51 (first stanza only)
Cx Caxton's edition, ca 1477-78
- { R² Trinity College, Cambridge, R 3 20
 β H³ Harley 7333, British Museum
A Ashmole 59, Bodleian

Th (which belongs to α) is available in Skeat's facsimile edition. Cambridge University Library MS Gg 4 27 1 (b), listed by C Brown, Register of Mid Eng Relg Verse II, No 2143, is unpublished and unclassified. Group α is superior, MS C, which is one of the earliest and best, is taken as the basis of the present text. The β MSS are by Shirley or derived from his copy

1 gentyllesse A R², rest gentylmes(se)

2 (that) claymeth A R¹ H² Cx Th that covoyteth Add, desireth C R² H¹ H³

6 saufly H² Cx (apparently Chaucer's regular form), rest savely

20 heyre him A, Eyre suche H², rest have plural Skeat, metri gratia, transposes him his heir

Lak of Stedfastnesse

Authorities twelve MSS and Thynne's edition (1532). Eight of the MSS fall into the following groups

- { R² Trinity College, Cambridge, R 3 20
 α { H² Harley 7333, British Museum

- { F Fairfax 16, Bodleian
H² Harley 7578, British Museum
 β { A Additional 22139, British Museum (lacking the Envoy)
C Cotton Cleopatra D vii, British Museum

- { R¹ Trinity College, Cambridge, R 14 51
 } B Bannatyne MS, Advocates Library,
 Edinburgh, 1 1 6

MS Hatton 73 (Hat), Bodleian, apparently belongs to Group a, but has certain readings which may be due to contamination with γ . These nine MSS and Thynne's print are published by the Chaucer Society MS Lambeth Palace Library 344 (L) agrees closely with Hat. For its text see H N MacCracken, MLN, XXIII, 214. A copy in the Mariland Folio MS (Pepys 2553) Magdalene College, Cambridge (M), printed in Ancient Scottish Poems, ed J Pinkerton London, 1786, pp 271 f, is related to B both show Scottish dialect features. The last three stanzas occur in MS 432 Trinity College, Dublin, but are unpublished. See C Brown, Register of Mid Eng Relig Verse II, No 2059. The Envoy alone occurs, in identical form, at the conclusion of two copies of Lydgate's Prayer for King, Queen, and People, in MS R 3 21, Trinity College, Cambridge (R³), from which it is printed by MacCracken, loc cit. The Dublin copy and R³ have not been classified. Thynne's edition (Th) shows use of both β and γ . See the analysis by L H Holt, JEGP, VI, 419 ff, with the comments of Brusendorff, pp 275 f, and Koch, Kleinere Dichtungen, p 35. The γ text is inferior to the other two. Of a and β neither is consistently superior, but in most cases β readings are given the preference in the present text.

- 4 dede β γ Hat L M Th, werke a
 5 lyk(e) β B M Th, oon a Hat L, els R¹ 10 For among us (now) β R¹ Th, Among us now B M, For now a dayes a Hat L Rubric Envoye to Kyng Richard R², rest (L) envoy(e)
 28 wed β R¹ Th, drive a Hat L R³, brvng B, leid M

The Complaint of Venus

Authorities eight MS copies (one fragmentary) and the editions of Julian Notary and Thynne (Th). The nine copies available in the Chaucer Society prints are classified as follows

- { A Ashmole 59, Bodleian
 } R Trinity College, Cambridge, R 3 20
 } F Fairfax 16, Bodleian
 } T Tanner 346, Bodleian
 { Ff Cambridge University Library Ff
 } 1 6
 N Julian Notary's edition, 1499-1501
 Pb Pepys 2006 (Hand B), Magdalene
 } College, Cambridge
 Pe Pepys 2006 (Hand E), Magdalene } College, Cambridge (II 45-82 only)
 S Arch Selden B 24, Bodleian

Th (which often agrees with β) is available in Skeat's facsimile. Group β offers the best text, and F is adopted as the basis of the present edition. Group a, which is preferred by Heath, appears to the present editor to be inferior both verbally and orthographically to the Fairfax MS.

- 5 on F Ff S only, but it prevents hiatus 8 For (Sith) he is croppe and roote of gentyllesse a
 15 assure F Ff S N, ensure a T Pb 22 oght(e) I blesse wel β , oght I wel (to) blesse Ff S N, ought I blesse Pb, ought me wel to blesse a 27 fasten β , rest fastyng (perhaps correctly)
 30 often β Ff N Pb, ofttymes R, oft tyme S ofti sythes A hev(e) a S Pb, rest vsage 31 Play(e) all copies, but Fr "Plandre" (see explanatory notes)
 63 wil I not β , wold(e) (I) not γ , ne shal never a
 71 lay this lay all exc N
 73 Prynccesse a Pryncces β 81 Skeat proposes for the meter To folowe in word the curiosities

Lenvoy de Chaucer a Scogan

Authorities three MSS Gg 4 27 (Gg) of the Cambridge University Library, Fairfax 16 (F) of the Bodleian, and Pepys 2006 (P) of Magdalene College, Cambridge, and the editions of Caxton, 1477-78 (Cx), first three stanzas only, and of Thynne, 1532 (Th). The first four copies have been printed by the Chaucer Society, Th is available in Skeat's facsimile edition. There is no clear evidence for a classification of the MSS. Cx and Th correspond most nearly to P. The three MSS are of about equal value, F is taken as the basis of the present text.

- 15 the goddess this goddis F only 16 rekelnesse F Th, rek(e)lesnes(se) Gg P Cx probably for rakelnesse 28 hem F Gg Th, hem P (possibly correctly, referring to the arrows)

Lenvoy de Chaucer a Bukton

Authorities MS Fairfax 16 (F), Bodleian, Julian Notary's edition, 1499-1501 (N) and Thynne's edition, 1532 (Th), all printed by the Chaucer Society. The text is practically the same in all three. MS F is the basis of the present edition.

In N the poem has the following superscription: Here foloweth the counceyll of Chaucer touchyng Maryag &c whiche was sente to Bucketon &c

- 20 wives] wifes F these F Th, the N 27 Unwys] Unwysse all copies. The final -e is perhaps correct, cf the Mod Eng pronunciation

The Complaint of Chaucer to his Purse

Authorities eight MSS and the editions of Caxton and Thynne (Th) The variations are slight and the classification of the texts is therefore uncertain The following seven copies, printed by the Chaucer Society, appear to fall into two groups

- α { F Fairfax 16, Bodleian
 Ff Cambridge University Library Ff 1 6
 H¹ Harley 7333, British Museum
 H² Harley 2251, British Museum
 β { A¹ Additional 22139, British Museum
 P Pepys 2006 (Hand E), Magdalene
 College Cambridge
 Cx Caxton's edition, 1477-78

MS Additional 34360 (A²), British Museum, formerly Philipps 9053, also printed by the Chaucer Society, is closely associated with H², but not derived from it MS 176, Carus College, Cambridge (C), contains the first two stanzas only, which were printed by MacCracken in MLN, XXVII, 223 f It apparently belongs with Group α Th (unclassified) is available in Skeat's facsimile Mr Butterworth, in his unpublished study, expressed doubt whether H¹ H² and A² belong in Group α or in Group β H² A² and A¹ agree in lacking the Envoy

In the present edition, as in the Globe, the text is based upon MS F Brusendorff (pp 253 f) gave the preference to A¹ He also preferred the French title, La Complainte de Chaucer à sa Bourse Voide, which occurs in P

7, 14, 21 Be(e)th α , Be β Th
 25 oure harmes H¹ Ff, harmes P Cx Th myn harme F

POEMS OF DOUBTFUL AUTHORSHIP

Against Women Unconstant

Authorities three MSS and Stowe's edition, 1561 They are apparently related as follows

- α F Fairfax 16, Bodleian
 β { H Harley 7578, British Museum γ { C Cotton Cleopatra D vii, British Museum
 St Stowe's edition, 1561

The copy in C is printed by the Chaucer Society, variants from the other copies are registered by Skeat (Oxf Chau, I, pp 409 f) and the Globe editor Type α is superior, the C text has here been corrected by comparison with it

Title From St A Balade which Chaucer made agaynst woman unconstaunt

4 have lynes F, to lyne have C St, have lyne and H

6 ay so F, ay St, ever so H C

8 nothang F, rest that nothang

16 Bet eds em for MSS Better

17 stant] MSS stondesth

Complaynt d'Amours

Authorities three MSS, Harley 7333, British Museum (H), Fairfax 16, Bodleian (F), and Bodley 638, Bodleian (B) None of these copies has been printed exactly, but Skeat (Oxf Chau, I, 411 f) gives a text based upon H and records numerous variants of F and B The Globe edition also used H as a basis F and B are, as usual, in close agreement Their readings appear to be on the whole inferior to those of H, but occasionally deserve the preference The spelling of H (probably written by Shirley or copied from him) is bad and has been normalized here, as also by Skeat and the Globe editor

4 right thus] so F B, right om H, Skeat
 Globe

9 Nay em Koch, Ne MSS, [For] Skeat

14 best] so H, om F B

24 sing(e) F B, say H

25-28 F is incomplete and B corrupt

45 oon H, a F B

47 But MSS, But [why] Skeat

55 so H, all(e) F B

66 sorwes F B, shoures H

69 unkonnyng F B, unknowynge H

70 word] Skeat, Globe words, an unlikely form Read [un]to? Without some emendation the line is defective

76 So H, on you have playmed F B

82 Alwey in on F B, And I ay om H

86 foughel H foule B, soule F, Skeat foul (monosyllabic, as regularly in Chaucer), supplying [ther]

90 evermore MSS, [for] evermore Skeat,

Koch

Mercules Beaute

Authority a single copy in MS Pepys 2006, Magdalene College, Cambridge, printed by the Chaucer Society The repeated lines are not written out in full in the MS

1 Youre yen two] Youre two yen MS But in ll 6 and 11 it reads Youre yen &c, and the line is quoted in the form Your eyen two in the poem To my Sovrain Lady, attributed to Lydgate (See Skeat, Oxf Chau, VII, 281)

28 Skeat suggested (MLQ, II, no 5, p 38) the omission of in for the sake of the meter Then he interpreted prison as "prisoner," an established Mid Eng meaning of the word, but one for which authority is lacking in Chaucer

30 this and that MS, Skeat, Globe read this or that (without comment)

36 [ther] Skeat em, this MS

A Ballade of Complaint

Authority a single MS, British Museum Additional 16165, written by Shirley It was first printed by Skeat in Academy, XXXIII, 292 Except for the spelling, which is regulated here, as by previous editors, the copy appears to be correct

Proverbs

Authorities three MSS, printed by the Chaucer Society, which fall into two groups, as follows

- α { F Fairfax 16, Bodleian
 α H Harley 7578, British Museum β A Additional 16165, British Museum (written by Shirley)

F is taken as the basis of the present text

A TREATISE ON THE ASTROLABE

Authorities twenty-two MSS, complete or fragmentary, are listed by Skeat, and on the basis of the order of the sections the majority are classified by him in two main groups, as follows

- | | |
|-----------------------------|--|
| Dd ¹ | Cambridge University Library Dd 3 53 |
| | Cambridge University Library Dd 12 51 |
| Cp | Corpus Christa College, Cambridge, 424 |
| R | Trinity College, Cambridge, R 15 18 |
| M ¹ | E Museo 54, Bodleian |
| A ¹ | Ashmole 391, Bodleian |
| B ¹ | Bodley 619, Bodleian |
| R ¹ | Rawlinson Misc 1262, Bodleian |
| J | St John's College, Cambridge, E 2 |
| A ² | Ashmole 360, Bodleian |
| Dg | Digby 72, Bodleian |
| R ¹ ² | Rawlinson Misc 3, Bodleian |
| β | Additional 23002, British Museum |
| Eg | Egerton 2622, British Museum |
| Sl ¹ | Sloane 261, British Museum |
| Sl ² | Sloane 314, British Museum |

Skeat left unclassified

- | | |
|------------------|----------------------------------|
| M ² | E Museo 116, Bodleian |
| A ³ | Ashmole 393, Bodleian |
| B ² | Bodley 68, Bodleian |
| Add ² | Additional 29250, British Museum |
| Ph | Phillipps 11955, Cheltenham |
| Brus | Brussels 1591 |

Miss Hammond (p 359) notes that Bernard's Catalogue mentions a Hatton MS which does not appear in Skeat's list Still another MS (Pl), apparently not to be identified with any of the preceding, was in the library of the Earl of Ashburnham (Appendix no CXXIII) It was once the property of Sir Kenelm Digby, and now belongs to Mr G A Plumpton of New York It contains diagrams of eclipses for 1417-33, and is probably to be dated in that period The editio princeps of Thynne (Th) falls with Group β, Brae's edition (Br, London, 1870) followed three MSS of the same group (Add¹ Sl¹ Sl²)

Skeat's edition (Chau Soc, 1872, Oxf Chau, III) is based upon Dd¹, with which M¹ is in close agreement Professor Liddell, in the Globe edition, made a further classification of five MSS of Group α According to him B¹ has the best text and stands apart, Dd¹ and M¹ form a sub-group, Dd² and R¹ form still another, more closely related to the second main group, β Since most of the MSS are still unpublished, the present editor has not undertaken to verify this classification in detail But he has based his text upon a photograph of B¹, which he has compared throughout with readings of Dd¹ as recorded by Skeat and with the β readings as represented in the editions of Thynne and Brae For the introduction comparison has also been made with Mone's print of the Prohemie from the Brussels MS (QF, I 550 f), and for § 39 of Part u use has been made of the version of R¹ printed by Skeat (Ch Soc, pp 68 f, Oxf Chau, III, 237 f) Through the kindness of Mr Plumpton his MS has also been collated by the editor, and many of its readings are noted below Account has also been taken of the numerous variant readings recorded by Brae, Skeat, and Liddell

It should be added that in some MSS of both Chaucer and Messahala the text is accompanied by valuable illustrative drawings MS Dd¹ has a particularly fine series of over sixty, which may well correspond to illustrations in Chaucer's original copy For reproductions see R C Gunther, Chaucer and Messahalla on the Astrolabe, Oxford, 1929 (Vol V of Early Science at Oxford) Mr Gunther also gives colotype facsimiles of the Latin text of Messahala's treatise, with the accompanying drawings

Title Tractatus de Conclusionibus Astro-labii Dd¹ (colophon), Tractatus Astrolabii Cp.
The conclusions of the Astrolabe Th, The Conclusions of the Astrolabe compiled by Geoffrey Chaucer newly amended Sl¹ Pl has none but at the end Explicit tractatus Astro-labii. A distinct title Brede and milke for childeren is found in Bl¹ Bl² M¹

Part I

§ 1, 5 the rewle Bl¹ Pl¹ Th Br, thy rewle Dd¹
§ 3, 2 thakkest Bl¹ Dd¹ M¹, the thakkest(e)
J Pl¹ (and Rl¹ margin) Th Here, and frequently afterwards, Dd¹ adds And for the more declaracion, lo here thy (or the) figure

The following spurious sentence precedes § 3 in A² Add¹ Sl¹ Sl² Th, and is substituted for § 3 in Br The moder of thyng Astrolabye is threkyt by the brunkes, that is the utmost ryng with degrees and al the myddle within the rynges shal be thinner, to receyve the plates for dyners chymates, and also for the rethe, that is shape in maner of a nette, or els after the webbe of a loppe

§ 5, 8 centre Rl¹ Rl² Pl, hool Bl¹, oriental A¹ Bl² Brae's MSS Th, + M¹ Dd¹, (centre was conjectured by Br)

§ 10, 7 were clepid thus Bl¹ Pl, were cleped in Arabiens Dd¹, were yeven Rl¹ Pl, ben con-sideryd A¹ Rl², taken (o)her names Th Br

8 lordes Arabiens Bl¹, clerkys Arabiens
Rl² A¹ (var), Arabiens Bl² A², Emperours
Pl Th Br, lordes Dd¹

25 Bl¹ contains a Latin note correcting Chaucer's statement

§ 12, 8 ff Umbra Recta and Umbra Versa are erroneously interchanged here in the MSS (ex Sl¹), either by Chaucer or by an early scribe Sl² has the error corrected in the margin

§ 17, 2 3 principal Rl¹ pl, 3 tropical M¹
Dd¹, tropik Bl¹, threes J Th Br

40 gurdel of the first moeving, or ellis of the first moevable Bl¹, gurdel of the firste moeving, or ellis of the angulus prami motus vel prami mobilis Dd¹ gurdal of the first Pl, midway of the firste mevyng or els of the sonne Th Br

43 The figure 3 here seems to be an error for 9 Perhaps [unth] should be inserted before spere in l 47 Sacrobosco supports both corrections

§ 21, 19 Bl¹ inserts after Aldeberan the words Menkar Algezze (Algense?) cor Leonis and notes that they are found on the Merton College astrolabe

87 8 speer here, as in § 17, 43 above, apparently a mistake for 9 speer

95 streught Bl¹ Th Br, strait Pl stret Dd¹

Part II

Skeat prints from J Latin headings to the propositions

§ 1, 11 knowe Bl¹ Dd¹ Pl, knew A² Bl²
Th Br

16 knowe Bl¹ Dd¹ Pl knew Bl² Rl² Th Br Between § 2 and § 3 a spurious short section which merely repeats § 1 is inserted in late MSS and in Th Br

§ 3, 42 Bl¹ inserts after ascender the following long note, which corresponds to Mes-sahala's paragraph 'De noticia stellarum incognitarum positarum in astrolabio' (Skeat Chau Soc edn, p 98) Nota That by this conclusion thou may knowe also where ben at that same tyme alle othir sterres fixed that ben sette in thyng Astrelabie, and in what place of the firmament and also her arising in thy orzonte, and how longe that thes wol ben above the erthe with the Arke of the nyght And loke evermore how many degrees thou fynde emy sterre at that tyme sitting upon thyng Almy-canteras, and upon as many degrees sette thou the rewle upon the altitude vt the bordere and by the mediacion of thy eye through the 2 smale holes shall thou se the same sterre by the same altitude ajorseid And so by this conclusoun may thou redely knowe which is oo sterre from a nother in the firmament, for as many as ben in the Astrelabie For by that same altitude shal thou se that same sterre, & non othir, for there ne wol non othir altitude accorde theto (Skeat, Chau Soc edn, p 81, Oxf Chau, III, 360 f)

49, 52 12 degrees Bl¹ M¹ Dd¹ (corrected to 18), 18 degrees Pl A² Th Br Rl¹ (added in a later hand in l 52, Luddell) 60 9 of the clokke Bl¹ M¹, 8 (altered from 9) Dd¹ Pl Sl¹ 5 Rl¹, 7 A² Bl² Rl² Th Br

61 10 degrees Bl¹ M¹, 2 degrees Dd¹ (altered from 10) Rl¹ Pl, 11 degrees A² Bl²
Rl² Th Br

63 10 degrees of Scorpius Bl¹, 23 degrees of Libra (corrected from 10 degrees of Taurus) Dd¹, 20 degrees of Libra Rl¹ Th Br, 10 degrees of Taurus M¹

§ 4, 13-16 degre than hath which that is the Bl¹ only

28 25 degrees all MSS 15 degrees (Pl om figures entirely), but Brae cites Ptolemy's Tetrabiblos in, 12 "vignit quinque"

§ 5, 5 by 3 and 31 so Dd¹ Pl, by 2 and 2 Bl¹ Rl¹ Rl² Dd¹ R, by 2 A² Th Br, left blank in M¹

§ 10, 8 30 Bl¹ Dd¹ Pl Br, 360 degrees A²
Bl² Rl² Rl¹ Sl¹ Th

§ 11, 17 ariste arysing Th Br, rysunge Pl, arise Bl¹ Dd¹ (difficult to construe, perhaps subj For the emendation arist of § 12, 16)

§ 13-18 follow § 21 in many authorities (namely in those of Luddell's Group 7 A² Eg M² Add¹ Bl² Rl² Th Br)

§ 17, Rubric Add¹ Sl¹ Sl² A² Th read latitude, J has latitudinem, Br em altitude But longitude, as in Bl¹ Dd¹ Pl, is clearly right

10 cacche Bl¹ Th Br hath Dd¹ M¹, take A²
Pl, sett Bl²

40 (the) sute Bl¹ Dd¹, the syght Rl² Pl Th
Br, that it syteth A² Bl²

45 sute Bl¹ Dd¹, syght Rl² Pl Th Br sythyng A²

§ 19 Rubric his dwelling Bl¹ Dd¹ Pl, his orizonte Rl², the orizonte Th Br, ejus orizon J

§ 22 Rubric oure countre B¹ Dd¹, the countre M¹, oure centre Rl² Pl Th Br, nostru centru J

20 place B¹ Dd¹ S¹ Br, planete M¹ A¹ B¹ S¹ Add¹ Rl¹ Rl² Th, planete place Pl

§ 23, 30 ff This example is adapted to the latitude of Oxford in B¹ Dd¹. The rest (Liddell's Group β Rl¹ Dd² γ) have a set of observations yielding a latitude about that of Rome 56 48] 62 21 Pl Th 32 21 Br

§ 25, 24 ff B¹ A² B¹ insert and 25 minutes after 38 degrees and read (with minor variants) so leweth there 51 degrees and 50 minutes that is the latitude. This is an evident attempt, says Liddell, to make the problem fit the latitude of Oxford exactly, but the following sentence implies that the calculation was only rough

29 as thou might preve om A¹ A¹ Rl¹ Rl¹ Dd² Th Br as y might prove Dd¹ thow might preve the same B¹ thow might preve the M¹

41 ff The text follows B¹ (which, however, reads 17 for 10) M¹ Dd¹. Acc to Liddell the remaining MSS (his Group β, including also Pl), except for some contamination read 10 degrees of Leo almost 56 of height at noon declinacoun 18, abate 18 than leweth 38

§ 26, 12-18 Ferther-over right orizonte om Dd¹ Pl Th Br, and "nearly all the MSS" (Skeat)

§ 28, 36 end B¹ and (apparently) Brae's MSS others heved, heed, &c

§ 30 Rubric altitude latitude B¹
18 Liddell's Group β (including Pl) adds for on the morowe wyl the sonne be on another degre etc

§ 33, 3 Azumut(e) B¹ Dd¹ M¹ Rl¹, manute(s) Dd¹ Pl Th Br

After § 36 the MSS vary. The text follows B¹ Dd¹, with which M¹ Rl¹ agree. Rl² ends with § 35, B¹ with § 36. Other (late) MSS insert a number of spurious conclusions either between § 35 and § 36 or after § 40

§ 37, 16 by thy label lith in the zodiak B¹, by thy label in which degree of the zodiak Dd¹ (Sk adds is), by ths (the) label in the zodiaks Pl Th Br

§ 38, 12 fro the centre amiddes B¹ fro the centre Dd¹, fro the yvn Pl, fro the pyn Rl¹ Add¹ S¹ Th, om S¹ Br

34 f than the nadir of the south lyne is the north lyne Dd¹, than is the south lyne the north B¹, the oppositise that is southe and northe Th Br

After § 36 B¹, which closely resembles Dd¹ M¹, becomes very inaccurate. § 39 is corrected in the text by the aid of Rl¹, which Skeat prints in full

§ 39, 29 f I-like distant from the equinozial Rl¹, like distant from the lyne meridional B¹, y-like distant by-tyene them alle Dd¹, whole sentence om Pl Th Br. Sacrobosco reads 'Longitudo autem climatis potest appellari linea ducta ab oriente in occidentem aequae distans ab aequinoctiali" (Venice, 1478, fol d 4 recto)

34 evene direct ageyns the pool artyke Rl¹ Dd² Pl Th Br evene directe ageyns from north to south B¹ Dd¹ M¹, Sacrobosco "versus polum arcticum" (fol d 3 verso)

§ 40, 10 ff The figures in the text follow Dd¹. B¹ makes the longitude of Venus 1° of Capricorn and its latitude 4° north and then concludes that it ascends with 8° of Capricorn — an impossible result. In Pl Rl¹ Th Br the figures are not filled in, but Brae gives them (from S¹) in footnotes

46 2 degrees the number, om in MSS, is supplied by Skeat

47 6 degree in Dd¹, 8 degree fro B¹, figure om Pl Th Br

57 ff B¹ makes the latitude of Jupiter 2° south and its ascendant the 8° of Pisces, Dd¹, 3° south and 14° of Pisces. Either of these computations works out roughly with the globe. S¹ inserts 3 for the latitude and 6 for the ascendant

88 her longitude Pl Th Br, hs B¹ Dd¹ M¹ Rl¹

91 thou shalt do wel ynow (e) Pl Dd² J Th Br, om most of the best MSS, which stop short with houre — In B¹ § 46 follows in the next line

Supplementary Propositions

The sections which follow are lacking in the best MSS (exc § 46, found in B¹), and are of doubtful authenticity. The text of §§ 41-43 follows J (as printed by Skeat) compared with Th Br. P¹ has §§ 41-43, but with figures corrupt. A few variants from other MSS are recorded by Skeat, §§ 44, 45 follow Dg (as printed by Skeat), § 46 follows B¹, corrected by the aid of such variants as Skeat notes. The spelling in all six propositions has been somewhat normalized. Five other sections, generally recognized as spurious, are printed by Brae (pp 60 ff) and by Skeat (Chau Soc edn, pp 57 ff, Oxf Chau, III, 230 ff) and numbered 41a, 41b, 42a, 43a, 42b

§ 42, 20 f 10 is 10 feet so Th (corrupt) Br, om J, supplied by Skeat from Add¹ Dg Dd² Eg

23 ff The figures are badly confused in the MSS. Thus, in ll 23 f J has 6 for 2 and 4 for 3, and in ll 25 f interchanges 2 and 6 and omits and 2 is 4 partes of 12. Several modes of emendation might be adopted, but the reading of the text, proposed by Skeat, is simplest and best

§ 44 17 f or what or om Dg J, supplied by Skeat from A¹ Add¹

19 wryt Skeat's em (wryte) for wreten Dg 35 lasse Skeat's em for passid Add¹ Dg A², om J

THE ROMAUNT OF THE ROSE

Authorities MS V 3 7 in the Hunterian Museum, Glasgow (G) edited by Kaluza, Chaucer Society, 1891, and Thynne's edition of 1532 (Th), accessible in Skeat's facsimile edition and in the Chaucer Society reprint (1911). The two authorities are independent but closely similar. The present text is based upon G, completed and corrected by Th. Some eleven leaves appear to have been lost from G. The spelling in the text is corrected to conform to grammatical standards. In particular the numerous ungrammatical final -e's have been removed. But in view of the doubtful authorship of the poem strict Chaucerian usage has not been restored. Although final -e's may not have been pronounced in rime in Fragments B and C, they have not been removed if they are etymologically justified in both rime-words of a couplet. Apart from inflectional adjustments the orthography of G has been allowed to stand, even where Thynne's edition has spellings more nearly in accord with those of most Chaucer MSS. For the same reason the editor has very sparingly adopted emendations to improve the meter. Many lines are easy to mend, as Skeat and other editors have done, by supplying words or changing their order. But in verse that is either non-Chaucerian or the work of Chaucer's youth it is hardly justifiable to introduce the smoothness of his later technique.

No record will ordinarily be made here of cases where missing words are supplied from Th, or of obvious corrections of the text. Instances of the latter (such as falle calle for fal cal, ll 13 14) are numerous and most of them have been made in earlier editions. Attention will be called, however, to doubtful readings and noteworthy emendations, whether adopted or rejected. Many readings common to several modern editions are simply credited to "eds," without any attempt to trace the history of the emendations.

Citations of the French original are made from Langlois's edition (SATF, 1914-24), except where other readings seem better to explain the English. The English text, as Langlois remarks, for the most part follows the French so closely that it ought to be possible to identify the translator's French MS, if it is still in existence. But Langlois himself does not furnish, either in his treatise on Les Manuscrits du Roman de la Rose (Lille, 1910) or in his edition, enough data to fix with certainty even the place of the MS in his classification. Kaluza printed Michel's French text in parallel columns with the English, substituting for many of Michel's readings variants which corresponded more closely to the translation. Of the readings in which the English is there shown to depart from Michel a large number are not registered at all by Langlois, others have been adopted in his critical text, and many others occur in more than a single group of MSS. The group most often concerned especially in the earlier part of the translation is that designated by Langlois as L. In Fragment C, group F is frequently a possible source. Of the variants recorded by Kaluza, it may be further noted, the proportionate number differs considerably in the different fragments. These facts suggest that the fragments were based upon different MSS, and to that extent support the prevalent opinion that they were the work of different translators. But it is of course possible that a single MS, like many of those examined by Langlois, was the product of contamination.

For textual notes and emendations by Professor Lange, see Angl XXXV, 338 ff, XXXVI, 479 ff, XXXVII, 146 ff.

1-44 From Th, om G

4 that false ne bene Th, ne false been Skeat. Globe suggests to falseen ben, Fr "mençonger."

6 warraunt [Skeat waraunte (appaunte) perhaps correctly]

22 carage Globe, corage Th, Fr "paage" (= "toll")

37 [the] inserted for meter, Globe [wil I], Fr "je vueil"

66 hath had G Th

103 leve Th, swete G, Globe suggests neve, Fr "novele". The reading leve would make the best rime (stevens). But the weak adjective is not natural.

138 enclosed was G Th, Skeat enclos it was (cf l 1652)

149 moveresse eds, Mynoresse G Th Fr "moverresse"

196 myscounting eds, myscoverting G Th Fr "mesconter"

211 fade Globe, Fr "maigre", sad(d)e G Th

240 [down] supplied by eds, Gl suggests hengde

248 peynted G Th Skeat peynt

256 Skeat inserts [ful] and Urry right for meter. Than] Globe That, Fr "Ice"

275 [wo] om G Th, supplied from Fr "duel"

277 so breketh Skeat to-breketh

298 se eds yse, perhaps correctly Cf 1 1401

299 fawr or worthi fawrer or worther G

307 Skeat [as] of lenesse

333-380 From Th, om G

379 [er] eds, Fr "anz", Th om

401 in [with] Skeat, withan Urry

442 ay(e) G Th, Skeat [sha] (to correspond with Fr)

444 face grace G Th, Fr "vis"

451 wolde G, holde Th, perhaps correctly

483 [ywrought] wrought G Th

485 laddre ladders G, ladders Th, Fr "eschiel"

501 woide woide G Th, but the correction seems necessary

505 god kepe it fro care G Th, Skeat god [it kepe and were], Lange God [it kepe fro were], to obtain a Chaucerian rime

516 [o]-where Skeat, where G Th, Globe suggests there Kaluza suggests any where

520 Ful For G Th, Fr "mout", Globe For-wo, "very weary" On for- as a prefix see KnT, I, 2142, n

532 [so] felys eds, perhaps correctly

535 and oft al Th, and of G, Fr "par maintes foiz escoutat"

567 [in honde] supplied by eds, Fr 'en sa main"

586 mayde(n) eds may G Th

602 Alexandrym of Alexandryne G Th, perhaps the English translator's mistake Fr 'terre Alxandrins," var 'terre as Sar-radins"

603 be possibly to be omitted, Fr "Fist aporter"

645 inne [ther]inne eds, perhaps rightly

657 places G Th, Lange place (Angl., XXXVII, 161)

662 and and [of] eds

673 wel G me Th, Fr "bisan" whan Th, that G, Globe than, Fr "quant"

684 clepe G Th, Skeat clepen, perhaps correctly

716 vargonyng Th yarlonyng G

720 reverdye reerye G, revelrye Th, Fr 'reverdie"

749 make couthe make G Th (couthe repeated from l 747?), Globe om And

761 made G Th, eds make (Fr "faire"), perhaps correctly

773 Skeat henten [hem], Globe suggests casten and [hem] hente

791 bode Skeat, bode G Th (apparently corrupt)

798 to God G Th, Skeat, Kaluza om to for meter

801 Globe Come [here], Fr "ça venez", Skeat Come [near]

861 Kaluza [Brown and] bent, Globe her [broune] brouns, Fr "bruns et enarchiez"

865 wot not I shal descrye G Th

879 and G Th, Skeat om and supplies [o] before be

923 After two G Th have full wel devyseed, which is not in Fr and overloads the meter

932 Eds om ful, Fr "de bone (var 'gente') facon"

959 sheten] shoten G Th, but of l 989

960 right G Th, Kaluza conjectures ngh, Fr "de près"

978 al Globe, as G Th, Fr "toute"

984 on G Th Skeat of 1007 As] And G Th, Fr "Aun come", Skeat As [was]

1010 Skeat as [as]

1018 wyndred] so Skeat to correspond with l 1020, wyntred G Th

1026 Kaluza toucheth, thought G Th, Skeat thinketh Fr "ouche"

1031 Sore G Th, Fr "Sade," var "Sage", reading doubtful Skeat reads [Wys] and conjectures also Quent or Fine Kaluza says "perhaps read Sade"

1037 word] wert G Th, Fr "par faiz ne par diz"

1043 leste Globe, best(e) G Th, Fr "li gaignor e li menor"

1058 pruk(h)e Skeat, Kaluza, prile G, prill Th, Globe suggests thrill perhaps correctly

1063 Han hyndred and ydon Th, An hundrid have do G The reading of the couplet is doubtful Fr "Manz prodomes ont encuzez Li losengier par lor losenges"

1065 And make] And maketh Th, Have maad G

1080 ameled] amyled Th, enameled G

1089 durst] Skeat [thurte] But for confusion of dar and tharf of ll 1324, 3604

1166 craftely Th, trustely G

1188 Sarsynesh] Sarlynys(s)h(e) G Th, Fr "sarrazinesche," var "sarradinesche"

1231 elles ell G, al Th

1236 a G Th, Skeat oo perhaps correctly

1232 [Youthe] Ten Brink (Chaucer Studien, p 30), And she G Th, Fr "Jonece" 1303 thus] that G Th, Fr "ensu"

1313 loreres] loreys G, laurelles Th, Fr "loriers"

1314 olmeris Th, olmeris G, Fr "mori-ers", Globe suggests that olmeris was due to "mori-ers" being read as "ormers"

1315 ended Th ended G, which Skeat prints y-ended, perhaps correctly

1324 durst G Th Skeat [thurte]

1334 had hym bende et eds, had(de) hym bent G Th

1341-42 hadde me shette mette G had me shete mete Th, Skeat [wol] shete, and in l 1343 [wol me greven] It is barely possible that shete is a strong past part from sheten, though the normal form is shote(n)

1348 in al(l) the gardyn G Th, Kaluza proposes al the yorde in, which Skeat adopts Cf l 1447

1363 almanders Skeat, almandres G Th, almanderes Globe, Fr "alemandiers"

1365 uxen G Th, weren Th

1369 parys G Th, Fr "Graine de paradis," var "parevis"

1387-1422 From Th, om G

1447 [w] supplied for the sense, Skeat, Kaluza read [yerde in], as in l 1343

1453 shoten Th, Skeat shete, perhaps correctly

1534 comfoti] comforte G Th (possibly infinitive, though more probably the noun)

1538 For G Th, Globe Fro, Fr "de la meschine" Globe suggests further that the translator confused Fr "guerredon" with "guerson" (varisoun)

1581 flour] foule G Th, Fr "flors"

1593-94 he Skeat, Kaluza, ye G Th, Fr "il"

1608 lovyn eds, laughyn G Th, Fr "d'amer"

1623 brddes] brdde G, byrde Th

- 1644 The vertu and [the] strengthe] The vertue(s) and strengthes G Th 1663 be] me G Th, Fr "fusse" 1683 [a] supplied by Kaluza, Fr tut"
 1705 Sentence incomplete and rime (with l 1706) imperfect Various emendations are possible (filde for dude, replete (swete) for aboute), but the usual view is that a second translator begins at this point See the introduction to Explanatory Notes 1713 mych G, perhaps (here and elsewhere) to be read moch(e), as in Th 1733 [a] Globe, Kaluza [that] 1750 [that] Globe, it G, om Th
 1766 certainly Skeat, Kaluza, certis evenly G Th, perhaps correctly (= "certainly in equal measure") 1771 a Skeat, thus Globe, hus G Th
 1797-98 seyne peyne G, fyne pyne Th Perhaps an imperfect rime (fyne peyne) 1814 felt(e) Skeat, Globe, lefte G Th 1848 it mighte Skeat, perhaps correctly, Globe suggests ner or nerwe 1892 So Th, That he hadde the body hole made G (in later hand) 1913-14 Transposed in G Th
 1924 softenyng] softyng G Th
 1965 love] Skeat lovers, perhaps correctly 1984 Written by a later hand on a line originally left blank 2002 of] Skeat suggests to 2006 kyss probably to be read kese (Kentish) for the rime
 2024 And also] Globe em Nede is, to complete the sense 2038 Skeat suggests quont for rime
 2067 susprised G Th, Globe, Skeat em sursprised, but the other form occurs, though rarely 2074 Skeat supplies [it] before turne, perhaps correctly 2076 dissense] desese G, dise Th, Fr "dessaism" 2092 jowelles] jowel(l) G Th 2116 degre(e) G Th eds gree
 2141 [erre] supplied by Urry, om G Th, Skeat [sunne], Fr "assis hors de voie" 2261 Eds supply [hem], perhaps correctly 2285 Fard] Farce G Th, Fr "farde" 2294 laughth] knowth G Th, Fr "rit"
 2302 pleyeth Skeat, Globe, pleymeth G Th
 2326 that] Globe [set] that But the hortatory that, like Fr "que," is used in Middle English Cf BD, 206 and the textual note 2333 kan Globe, ben G Th Fr "sot" 2336 lones eds, londes G Th
 2341 swich gift eds, thus swyf(f)te G Th, Gl suggests After so riche gift, Fr "apres si riche don" 2365 Of Globe, For G Th, Skeat For trecherie, [in] sikernesse
 2395-2442 From Th, om G
 2413 As] A Th, Fr "Ausu come"
 2427 sende] sene Th, Fr "enveier"
 2473 Thou Kaluza, Thought G Th

- 2497-99 Text apparently corrupt Gloe suggests [though] thou But [that] (for But yll) which corresponds pretty well with Fr "Car se tu n'en peusses traire Fors solement un bel salu Si t'eust il cent mars valu" Skeat But yll
 2532 [thy] om G Th, Fr "ta" 2563 a-bred] a bred Th, abrode G 2564 forwerreyd] forwerede G, forwerede Th 2569 sene eds, se G Th 2592 Fro Globe, The G Th Globe punctuates why nyl ye me socoure Fro joye?
 2617 not eds, woie not G Th
 2621 of] om G Th, Fr "de h uns regarz" Skeat A loke on [me], perhaps correctly 2623 lyggen G Th, eds lye, which is supported by rimes in ll 2629, 2645 2650 weder eds whrder G Th
 2675 whom Skeat, Kaluza, whan(ne) G Th, Fr "De qui," var "De quoi" 2676 This departs from Fr, Kaluza suggests Thou kisse the dove er thou go away Fr "Au departir (var 'Au revenir') la porte baise" 2682 walyng Globe, walkyng G Th, Fr "veillers" 2752 yet eds, that G Th, Fr "toutes-voies" 2775 caccheth] em for cacche G Th, Skeat [to] cacche Globe hath 2783 bonde Globe, londe G Th, Fr "Iceste te garantira, Ne ja de toi ne partira" 2796 Thenkyng G Th, Skeat, Kaluza Thought
 2824 ben] not ben G Th, Fr "seroies" 2833 [hem] me G Th, apparently an error anticipating l 2845 2917 they eds, thou G Th
 2921 [he] supplied by Skeat 2934 the eyen Globe, they G Th, Fr "u uel" Skeat they that [that] 2968 hegge G Th, Globe em haye because this form occurs later See ll 2971, 2987 3007 2992 [I be] supplied by eds, Globe I ou warrante may [I], which is closer to Fr "Je vos i pus bien garantir" 3029 [no] good Skeat, good [ne] Globe 3035 Line apparently defective Skeat supplies [On lyve], perhaps read Y-brought forth (Urry) 3125 Before growe G Th have late it, eds om (probably repeated from l 3124) 3127-28 The rime is doubtless to be read wer ber, though a subjunctive bere is possible
 3136 From Th, but doubtless corrupt, om G 3137 kerked G Th, meaning doubtful, perhaps "crooked" (keroked) as Morris and Skeat suggest, Fr "Le nes froncié, le vis hieus" 3150 [it] G, he Th, Fr "je" 3175 haye Globe, hayes G Th, Fr "la hae" 3179 [wof] Skeat, Globe [not], Morris [wiste]

3264 seyne] Skeat feyne, perhaps correctly

3274 a clerk] eds om a, Fr "s'il est clers"

3294 Kaluza em G Th And to love of his great maistr(e), Fr "Mes au lessier (var a l'issir) a grant mestrise"

3319 taughte eds thought G Th

3331 chastith Globe, Skeat om that

3429 al your wil, suggested by Bell, elles well G al wel Th, Fr "Toutes voz autres volonteiz"

3433 sith(en) eds, sichen G suche Th, Fr "pus qu'il me siet"

3450 So Globe, I ony tyme to passe G, Fr "Se tu passes jamais", Th, Skeat In any tyme to passe, perhaps correctly

3454 tall = tale, with final -e apocopated for rime

3482 Something omitted? Morris, Skeat [haral] Globe [rad]

3489 demyng G Th Globe demyng, perhaps correctly, Fr "E tant qu'il a certamenement Veu a mon contenten Qu'Amors malement me justise"

3490 That] That G Th In G the line is added in a later hand

3491 That] Than(ne) G Th

3502 bothen] so Globe, bothom G Th Skeat botoun But there is no mention of the Rosebud here in the Fr

3522 he] ye G Th, Fr "il"

3525 is] is G Th

3566 hym] Globe hem, Fr "ses enuiz"

3595-3690 From Th, om G

3604 dare Th, Skeat [har]

3643 God ut olesse] the god of blesse Th, Fr "Deus la beneje"

3694 Thought Skeat, Though G Th

3697 renyng, eds em for rennyng G Th

3698 to me Skeat, come G Th

3710 hertes eds, heri(e) is G Th

3751 to eds, ye G Th

3774 nille] wille (wyl), G Th (perhaps correctly)

3851 In G Th, eds [Ne] in, perhaps correctly

3895 trecherous] trechours G Th, but the rime word is enyous Globe trechours envy, ou[r]s

3907 lowde eds, lowe G Th

3923 Counsel I [not take] newe, y-wis Skeat

3942 To eds, Do G Th

3943 T'enclose eds, Than(ne) close G Th

3979 ashamed eds, shamed G Th

3998 Fr "S'ele le cuillot en haine," which Globe suggests may have been misread as "Se belacuel l'art en haine"

4137 wel the more Globe, welthe, the more G Th

4177 Skeat, Kaluza supply [For], Fr "car"

4188 Rosers] Roses G Th, Fr "rosier[s]"

4194 who G Th, Skeat [whiche]

4214 parti] e, Globe em for parte G Th

4272 waketh eds, walketh G Th Cf 1 2682

4285 Ther eds, Which(e) G Th

4291 expert eds, except G Th

4293 Skeat [lovers] wyle

4322 wende a bought eds, went aboute G Th, Fr "Jes cudioe avour achetez"

4339 tylyer] tylyers G, tyllers Th, Fr "au vilain"

4366 change eds, charge G Th

4372 ual(le) eds, wol(e) G Th

4416 corajous (coragious) G Th and Skeat, Kaluza, Globe em curious

4472 stounde G Th, Globe suggests wounde

4478 [me have] supplied by Skeat, Kaluza from Fr "A ver me lat"

4510 symply G Th Globe symplely

4527 my Globe, favre G Th, Fr "par ma priere"

4532 love G Th (= "value"), Globe reads love (in same sense), taking w as Northern way of writing v

4550 lord eds, love G Th, Fr "mon seigneur"

4561 (y) of God wille eds, yeve good will(e) G Th Fr "se Deu plaist"

4617 not G Th, perhaps to be emended to niste (pret)

4634 grevid supplied by Urry, Skeat pynd, Globe harmd (note) Some such word appears necessary

4689 [wite] Globe, Skeat [here lerne], Fr "savras"

4705 A trouthe eds, And thurgh the G Th

4712 away to we(a)re G Th, Globe alwey to ware, "always to be avoided"

4721 sike eds, like G Th

4722 thurst or thrust (= "thrust") eds trust(e) G Th, Fr "seif"

4723 Eds em An for And here and in 1

4725 perhaps correctly

4725 hunger eds, angre G Th, Fr "fain"

4736 [stat] Skeat, Globe, stedefastnesse Kaluza, Fr "estaz"

4755 be(n) eds (= Fr "sont"?), by G Th

4764 That] But Skeat, Globe inserts [ne], but neither change may be necessary See the explanatory note

4793 [I] supplied by eds, er ever G Th, but Fr has "devant," and rime word is fer

4796 par cuer, from Fr, by partuere G Th

4807 diffyne ut ere(e) eds, diffyned he(e)re G Th, Fr "defenur onques"

4812 which eds, with G Th

4846 What man Kaluza, That what G Th, That [who] Skeat, What wight Globe

4871 This hath sotilled Globe, This hadde sotille G, This had subtil Th, Fr "Ainsinc soutiva"

4892 tyme Skeat, perell G, parel Th

4935 youthe, his chamberere eds, youthes chamb(e)re G Th, Fr "Jennece sa chamberere"

4943 Demand(e) eds, And mo(o) G Th Fr "demant" Globe suggests that mo may mean "ask," or be a corruption of a word with that meaning Cf I 5290

- 4955 can eds, gan G Th
 4960 neither G Th, eds ne, perhaps correctly 5004 stont eds, stondith G Th
 5051 she eds, so G Th, perhaps we should read sho (a Northern form) 5068 But Skeat, Kaluza That G Th
 5085 they eds to G Th But the anacoluthon is possible 5107 herberedest than eds, herberest hem G, herborest Th, Fr "reuces" 5117 thy youth(e) eds, by thought G Th, Fr "ta jouvente" 5144 alway Skeat, ay(e) G Th, al day Globe 5165-66 Bracketed words, supplied by Skeat, seem necessary Rubric (following 5200) Amustre eds, Aunstet G Th 5223 Bracketed words supplied by Skeat 5283 his eds, this G Th
 5284 wel Globe, wol(e) G Th, Fr "a dret" 5287 Man Globe, And G Th, Skeat, Kaluza [A man] 5290 So G Th and Skeat, Globe em But of the more, "Unless the request," etc (comparing moo, I 4943) 5292 causes Th, cause G, Skeat [cases]
 5353 Hidith G Th, Skeat It hit (or hidith) 5360 greweth eds, greueth G Th both times (which may represent greweth or greweth) 5389 Doubtful line, Skeat To kepe [it ay is] his purpose, Globe To kepen alway has purpos 5401 For G Th, Globe (note) Full, Fr "Mout" 5408 all Th, it all G, Skeat [is] al, Globe at all 5451 Skeat supplies [greet] before spekyng
 5452 ther-of eds, che(e)r(e) of G Th 5452 Eds insert [is] or [his], perhaps correctly 5544 fallyng eds, fablyng G Th, Fr "cheanz" 5556 doth eds, depe G Th
 5569 yove Globe, yow G Th, Skeat [ywev] 5577 receyeth eds, perceyeth G Th, Fr "receit" 5585-86 So Globe, G Th read For (Lor G) he that hath mycches tweyne Ne value in his demerque, Fr "Car teus n'a pas vaillant deus miches", Skeat hath [but] Ne [more] value
 5598 [is] Skeat, that G Th
 5611 nought Skeat, not G nat Th 5620 Globe supplies Or, Fr "Ou esper qu'il ne pense point," etc 5627 [is] Skeat, [that] Globe
 5638 nought eds not G, nat Th, Globe suggests But suffrit frost as hot ne ware, Fr "Amz vrient li freit e li chaut" 5641 taketh eds, take G Th
 5643 Skeat, Globe [the] deth, perhaps correctly

- 5649 Pythagoras Th, Pictgoras G 5700 more eds om G Th Fr 'plus 5701 ymogh have eds, though he hath G Th, Fr "assez aqus" 5755 shewen Skeat, Kaluza shewing G Th Globe An for And 5855 kepeth G Th, Skeat, Kaluza kepeth, perhaps correctly 5879 [at] al eds, al(l) G Th, Fr "dou tout" 5883 Al my nedis eds, As my nede is G Th, Fr "A mes besoignes achever" 5942 fully eds, jolyly G Th
 5958 sikerere Kaluza, Globe, s(e)urere G Th 5959, 6006 leaute eds, beaute G Th
 5976 Eds om ful, perhaps correctly
 6002 guede eds, grede G Th
 6041 thankynges G Th, Kaluza thwakkynges, Fr "colees" 6042 talkynges G Th, Globe suggests wakynges, Fr "acolees" 6165 surch Skeat Kaluza, which(e) G Th, Fr "teus" 6174 nedes eds, nede G Th, Fr "besoignes" 6264 the G Th, ther Globe, Fr "leur sanc" 6281 Fr "E se d'aus (var "d'eus" translated as "deus") ne la veauz rescurre" 6317-18 Bracketed words supplied by eds following Fr Mais tant est fort la decevance Que trop est grief l'aparevance "But so slugh(e) is the aperceyving G Th, I 6318 om G, That al to late cometh knowynge Th (which appears spurious) 6341 Streymed eds, and reymed G Th, Fr "Contrainte" 6342 Skeat [y-lyeyned], perhaps correctly
 6354 lete eds, be(a)te G Th, Fr "J'en lais" 6355 [blynde] folk [ther] Skeat, To joly(e) folk I inhabit G Th, Fr "Por gens avugler (var 'embacler') i abat, Je n'en quer, senz plus, que l'abat" 6359 wre Globe, were G, beare Th bers Skeat, Urry, Fr "Mout est en mei muez li vers" 6372 Om G Th, supplied by Morris, Skeat, etc from Fr, Globe But where my sleight is aperceyved, Of hem I am nomore resceyved
 6425 cheveys G, chuse Th, Fr "chevir" (Kaluza) 6469 with force G Th, Skeat with [the] force, Kaluza suggests "by seint Joce" and compares WB ProL, III, 483
 6515 mot eds, not G Th
 6532 thritithe, eds em for thrititene G Th, the reference is to chap xxx 6541 Globe supplies [is] after Unnethe
 6565 hvr eds, the(v)r G Th (a Northern form) 6606 Blyme Globe, Ben somtyme in G Th, Fr "Entrelaissier", Skeat, Kaluza Somtyme [even] 6653 ther Globe (note), om G Th, Skeat wher, Kaluza though, Fr "la ou"

6688 From Th, Globe reads nede is, G has, in later hand over a blank space, And wote but only done that

6711 his G Th, read this (= "these," Fr "les") as in Globe

6786 From Th, G has in late hand Of thyngs that he beste myghte Perhaps endute should be substituted for write

6810 [hur] eds, om G Th, Fr "leur"

6823-24 robbed gyled eds, robbyng, gylng G Th, Fr "lobez," robez

6911 bordurs Globe, burdons G Th, Fr "philateres"

7013 ff In G Th ll 7110-58 are misplaced before ll 7018-109, and ll 7159-208 after ll 7209-304

7022 bouger Kaluza begger G, Th Skeat bougerons, Globe bougerons Fr "bougre"

7029 [these, or] Skeat these that G Th Fr "Ou herres ou symoniaus"

7056 our Skeat, his G Th, Globe, Fr "S'il ne nous a bien procurez" Possibly his is right, his frendship meaning "friendship or favor for him"

7063 wounde G Th is of uncertain meaning Skeat suggests founde or founded See explanatory note

7076 Read equipolaunces? Fr "equipolences" ("pitances")

7092 From Th, om G, which has in later hand Of al that here axe juste their dome

7109 Om G That they ne myght the booke by The sentence pleased hem uel trewly To the cople if ham talent toke Of the Evangelystes booke Th, the second and fourth lines of which seem to be spurious L 7109 is printed as emended by Skeat, Globe Fr "Qui lors aveir ne le peust, A transcrivre s'il l'i pleust"

7116 troubler(e) G Th, Globe trouble, Fr "plus trouble"

7137 never Kaluza, no more Th, more G

7145 ne eds, no G Th, possibly correct (= "nor")

7172-73 Apparently lines are lost here corresponding to Fr "Par Pierre veaut le pape entendre" Skeat inserts two lines thus changing his numbering for the remainder of the poem

7197 ynowe] ynough G Th (metrically suspicious)

7219 maistres eds, mymystres G Th, Fr "nous reions"

7235 comunably G Th, Kaluza suggests comunly

7252 Skeat, Globe supply it, Kaluza suggests despit

7315 al defyle Th, alto defyle G, possibly to be emended al tofyle (Kaluza)

7316 nal Kaluza, wol(e) G Th, Fr "ne triche e lobe"

7334 Thankyng Th, Thankyth G, Kaluza and on his knees gan loute

7366 grathe eds, gracche G Th, Fr "s'atourne"

7383-7574 From Th, om G

7387 deyse eds, deysed Th, Fr "devis"

7442 thanne Th, eds [as] than(ne), perhaps correctly

7486 dusty eds, doughty Th, Fr "poud-reus"

7546 Eds [for] to reprove, perhaps correctly

7634 me (the impersonal me(n)?) he G Th, Globe, ye eds

7660 doth eds, wote G Th, Fr "fait"

GLOSSARY

GLOSSARY

THE following glossary is not a complete Chaucer dictionary. Limitations of space have made it impossible to record Chaucer's entire vocabulary, or to register any considerable number of the occurrences of words and phrases. But it has been the editor's intention to include all words which, by reason of changes of form or meaning, need to be explained, and references are given in many places to notes in the body of the book which supply additional information. The glossary in Skeat's Oxford Chaucer gives a fuller list of words and many citations, and the Concordance of Professors Tatlock and Kennedy records every occurrence of all but a few of the commonest words.

Grammatical forms, except the regular endings that are easily recognized, are fully registered here. Thus the principal parts of strong verbs and of irregular weak verbs, and exceptional forms like the contracted third singular of the present indicative, are all noted, also the more common of the stereotyped phrases in which the dative ending of nouns is preserved. Nouns and adjectives of which Chaucer used two forms in the nominative — one with -e, and one without — are entered with an -e in parentheses (bliss(e), cler(e)).

It has not been possible to register the very numerous varieties of spelling that occur in the text. In the case of common words the orthography has been normalized in accordance with the system long familiar to readers of Skeat's text. Long e and o are doubled in monosyllables (meed, good) and written single in longer words (meten, gode). The sound of long i is usually represented by y, and that of short i by ɪ. The diphthong ou is written with u rather than w, and sh (or ssh) is used instead of the frequent sch of the MSS. But no attempt has been made to regularize the spelling of the diphthong ai, er (saint, seint, saynt, seynt), and if the reader fails to find a word entered under one form he should look under the others. The same procedure may sometimes be necessary, for example, in the case of the variation between an and aun (dance and daunce), ɪ and y (ycleped and ycleped, royally and royally, ken and lyen), ou and ow (toun and town), or sh and sch (shal and schal). Cross references have been given for spellings that present real difficulty, and words of rare occurrence are entered in the glossary in the forms in which they appear in the text. This method makes the orthography of the glossary inconsistent, but has been adopted as a practical compromise for the convenience of the reader.

To aid the reader in pronunciation, long open e and o have been printed with a hook (ē, ō). The difference between the open and close sounds of these letters is explained in the grammatical introduction.

Parentheses are used here, as in the grammatical introduction, to indicate letters or syllables that may or may not be written.

A

A, prep, on, in, by

A, int, ah!

A, vb, have (shortened form)

A, An, the indefinite article, sometimes meaning "one" (of which it is in origin an unemphatic form), al a, the whole of a. On idiomatic use with numerals, etc., an eighte, a certein, see ShipT, VII, 334, n.

Abassen, abash, disconcert. See Abasshen.

Abak, aback, backwards

Abandoun, sbst, lack of control, freedom, vn abandoun, fully, without check or restraint

Abasshen, abash, make afraid. See Abais-sen.

Abaten, abate, lower, put down, reduce Abaundonen, abandon, devote

Abawed, Abawed, confounded, disconcerted, amazed

Abaysschinge, amazement, bewilderment

Abaysshed, pp, cast down

Abayst, see Abais-sen

Abbey(e), abbey

Abc, alphabet

A-begged, a-begging. See Pard Prol, VI, 406, n.

Abeggen, Kentish form of Abyen

Abet, abetting, aid
 Abeyen, see Abyen
 Abhominable, abominable, hateful Abit, see Habit
 Able, capable, fit adapted deserving Abylyng, enabling lifting, fitting Aboght(e), see Abyen Abogd, delay, abiding, continuance Abogd, see Abyden
 Aboute, adv , about, around, in turn, been aboute, go about, set out, undertake Aboven, adv , above, hence, in good plight or fortune
 A-bred, adv , abroad
 Abreggen, abridge, shorten
 Abreyden, pt abreyd (str) and abreyde (wk) , awake, start up, break out Abrochen, broach
 Abroqd, abroad, wide open Absenten, abstain, refrain
 Abusound, abuse, deceit, witchcraft, shame, scandal Abyden, pt sg abogd, pl abiden, pp abiden, abide, dwell, await, expect, watch for, endure, stop, be still Abydinge, expectation, delay
 Abyen, pt aboghte pp aboght, pay for, atone for, buy dearly, suffer, undergo See Abeggen, Abeyen Accesse, attack of fever
 Accident, occurrence, incident, especially, an unusual occurrence or appearance, in philosophy, a property, attribute, or outward appearance as opposed to essential nature or substance (See PardT, VI, 537, n)
 Accidie, sloth (one of the Deadly Sins)
 Accioun, action, accusation
 Accomplisen, Accomplishen, accomplish, comprehend Accord, concord, agreement peace Accordance, concord, harmony
 Ac(c)orden, reconcile, compose agree, sut, befit, concern (?), grant, allow, consent Accusement, accusation
 Accusen, accuse, blame, reveal, disclose
 Achat, purchase
 Achatours, purchasers, caterers
 A-checked, checked, hindered Acheven, achieve
 Achoken, choke
 Acloyen, overburden
 A-compas, round about in a circle
 A-cquld, adj (probably from pp), cold, chilly Acord, Acorden; see Accord, etc
 Acordable, harmonious
 Acorn(e)s, acorns, fruits
 Acorsen, see Acursen
 Accounten, reckon, consider, take account of, value
 Acoyen, quiet, allay, coax, caress
 Acquittance, release, deed of release
 Act, act, deed, pl , records
 Actif, active
 Acursen, Acorsen, curse
 Acustumaunce, custom, habitual mode of life

Adama(u)nt, Athhamaunt, adamant, loadstone Adawen, awake, recover
 A-day, in the day, by day Adjeccioun, addition
 A(d)minystren, administer
 Ado, to do (lit at do)
 A-down, downwards, down, below, at the bottom Adowryng, adoration
 Adrad (pp of adreden), afraid Adressynge, directing Adversaire, adversary
 Adversarie, sbst and adj , adversary, hostile Advertence, attention, heed
 Advocacies, pleas
 Afer, afar
 A-ferre, Kentish form of A-fyre, afire Aferen, pp afere(e)d frighten Affect, desire, feeling
 Affecciou, affection, devotion
 Affermen, affirm, agree upon, establish Affiance, trust
 Affilen, file, make smooth Afforced, forced Affounden, founder, perish
 Affray, terror, fright, quarrel, fray
 Affrayen, terrify, arouse, pp affrayed, terrified afraid, roused, excited Affyen, trust
 Afore, Aform, adv , before, formerly Aforeyyn, opposite, over against Afright (pp of afrighten), frightened
 After, adv , afterwards
 After, prep , after (of time or place), according to, for, in expectation of, towards, for (i e , to obtain)
 Afyn, adv utterly, completely
 A-fyre, see Fyr
 A-game, in sport, in mockery
 Agasten, pt agaste, pp agast, terrify, deter, take fright Agayn, Ageyn, adv , again, in reply, in return Agayn(es), Ageyn, prep , against, opposite to or contrary to, towards so as to meet, before, in the presence of, towards (of time), just before, in comparison with Agayn-ward, backward, back again
 Ageyn, see Agayn
 Ageyn-coming, return
 Agilten, pt agilte, pp agilt, offend, be guilty, sin
 Agon, pp agon, agg, go away, depart, die Agreeblely, complacently pleasantly Agreeblete, agreeableness, equability
 A-gree (lit in gree), in favor in good part
 A-greef, in grief, sadly, amiss, in vexation Agreggen, aggravate
 Agreven, aggrieve, vex
 A-grief, see A-greef Agropps, pt of Agrysen
 Agroted, surfeited, cloyed
 Agrysen, pt agrops, pp agrysen, shudder, tremble, dread, feel terror Agu, ague
 Aguler, needle-case
 A-heigh, on high, aloft

Aiel, grandfather
Ajournen, adjourn
Ajugen, pp ajuged, judge
Aken, ache
Aketoun, acton, a short sleeveless tunic, worn under the hauberk Aknownen (pp of aknqwen, acknowledge), conscious, I am acknowledge, I acknowledge Akornes, see Acorn(e)s Akyngge, aching, pain
Al, awl See also Oules
Al (occasionally Alle), adj, all, every, gen sg alles-, in alles kinnes, of every sort, gen pl aller, alder, alther oure aller, of us all, used also in composition with superlatives, as in alder-best, best of all, al a, the whole of a, at al wholly, at all, in al, entirely al and som, the whole and every part, al and somme, one and all
Al, adv, wholly, quite, altogether, al only, merely, simply, al thus, just so Al, concessive conj, as in al be (it), al were (it), etc
Alambik, Lambic, alembic
Alaunt, large dog, wolf-hound
Alayes, alloys
Albificacioun, albefaction, whitening
Al-day, always, continually, at any time Alder, Alder-best, Alder-firste, etc, see Al
Alderman, alderman (either the municipal officer or the officer of a guild) Allegement, alleviation Aleggen, see Alleggen
Alemandres, almona trees
Alembyk, see Alambik
Alenge, see Elenge
Aley, alley
Aleys, service-berries
Algate(s), in every way, wholly, by all means, at all hazards, anyhow, nevertheless Alienen, alienate
Alighten, pt alighte, pp alight, alight Alkaly, alkali
Alkamystre, alchemist
Alleggeaunce, alleviation See Alleggen (2)
Alleggen (1), allege, adduce Alleggen (2), allay, alleviate Aller, see Al
Alliaunce, Alyaunce, alliance, marriage, kindred Allowen (1), allow, admit Allowen (2), applaud, praise
Allye, ally
Allyen, vb, ally one's self, supply with aid Almesse, alms Almest, almost
Almury, the denticle or point on the rete of an astrolabe Almykanteras, small circles of declination in the celestial sphere, parallels of altitude Aloes, aloes, the resin or wood of the agalloch, lignea loes, lignum aloes Alofte, aloft, on high
A-londe, on land, ashore Along on, along of, because of, owing to Al-only, see Alqonly Alqon(e), alone, alone of, without

Alqonly, solely, only, alone
Alqsen, praise, commend Al-out, outright altogether
Al-outerly, all utterly wholly, absolutely Alpes, pl bull-finches
Alsç, Als, adv, all so, also, besides Alsç, Als, As, conj, as Alswa, Northern form of Alsç
Alther, see Al
Altitude, in astronomy, the elevation of a celestial body above the horizon Alum glas, crystallized alum
Al-utterly, see Al-outerly
Alwey, always, continually, all the while, anyhow (= algate(s)) Alyaunce, see Alliaunce
Alyne, in a line
Alyve, alive (from on lyve)
Amadrides, hamadryads
Amalgamyng, forming an amalgam Amanusen, see Amenusen
Amasen, amaze
Amayen, pp amayed, dismay
Ambages, circumlocutions equivocations, ambiguities Ambel, amble, a walking pace, an ambel, in an ambling pace Ambes as, double aces
Ambiere, an ambling horse
Amelen, pp ameled enamel Amendment, amends
Amenden, make amends, improve, succeed, surpass Amenusen, diminish, lessen, grow less Amercimentz, exactions, fines
Ameven, Amo(e)ven, move, change
A-ruddes, adv, in the midst Amidde(s), prep, amid, in the midst of Ammonicioun, designation, pointing out Amoeven, see Ameven
Amonesten, admonish, advise, recommend Among, adv, therewith, meanwhile, all the while, ever among, every now and then Amonges, adv, sometimes, variously Amonten, see Amounten
Amoretes, sweethearts, love-knots
Amorwe, on the morrow, in the morning
Amo(unt)en, amount amount to, mean Amoven, see Ameven
Amphibologies, ambiguities
Amy, friend
An, prep, on an heigh, an hye, on high Ancille, handmaiden
Ancre, anchor
And, conj and, if Anes, once (Northern dial)
Anexen, see Annexen
Angerly, cruelly
Angle, geometrical angle, corner, cogn, in astronomy, angular distance from the meridian in astrology the four "houses" at the cardinal points of the compass
Angle-hok, fish-hook
Angre, anguish, anger
Angren, enanger, vex
Angry, wrathful, irritable, cruel
Angussh, anguish, anxiety

Anguss(h)ous, anxious, sorry, causing or feeling distress Angwisschen, wound, cause pain
 Anhangen, pp unhanged, unhanged, hang Anientissen, annihilate
 A-night, in the night
 A-nightes, by night
 Anker, anchoress
 Anlaas, anlace, a short, two-edged knife or dagger
 An(n)eren, annex, attach Annueleer, a priest who celebrates anniversary masses, known as "annuals" Annunciat, pre-announced, foretold Anqon, adv , at once, forthwith
 Anqon-right(es), immediately
 Anoy, annoyance, vexation, trouble, torture, sadness Anoyful, annoying, tiresome
 Anoyng, injurious
 Anoynt, Enoynt, pp , anointed
 Anoyous, annoying, tiresome, disagreeable, harmful Anslet, short jacket See Hainselin
 Answer, answer
 Answeren, answer, correspond to, be suitable for, be responsible for Antartik, antarctic, southern Antphoner, antiphony, anthem-book Antony, fyr of seint, erysipelas Anvelt, anvil
 Any, Eny, Ony, any
 Any-thing, used adverbially, at all, in any degree, for anything, on all accounts, at all hazards
 Aornement, adornment
 Apallen, make pale, pallid, weaken, pp ap(p)alled, pale, weakened, languid Aparailen, vb , apparel, prepare, adorn, clothe (one's self) Aparaille, apparel, ornament Aparceyven, see Aperceyven
 Apas, see Pas
 Apassen, pass, pass away
 Apayen, satisfy, please, yvel apayd ill pleased Apayren, impair, injure, grow worse, perish Apaysen, see Ape(i)sen
 Ape, ape, putte in the mannes hood an ape, made a fool of him See Intro to PrT, VII, 440, n
 Apeiren, see Apayren
 Ape(i)sen, appease, pacify, mitigate, settle Aperceyven, perceive, conceive Aperceyving, perception, observation
 Apert, open, manifest, also adv
 Apertena(u)nt, appertaining, belonging to, suitable Apertenen, appertain, belong
 Apetuten, vb , seek, desire Apiken, trim, adorn
 Apocalyps, apocalypse
 Apouten, appoint, determine, resolve, settle (one's self) Apossen, see A(p)psen
 Apotecarie, apothecary
 Apparaunt clear distinct

Apparence, appearance, seeming, apparition, false show Apperen, appear Appert, see Apert
 Appetyt, appetite, desire Appieren, see Apperen Applien, apply, be attached to Ap(p)osen, appose, question
 Apprentys, adj , unskilled, like an apprentice Appreven, Approven, approve, confirm as true Appropren, vb , appropriate
 Approver (var reading), approver, informer Approwour, steward, bailiff, hence, agent Apreynten, imprint
 Aprouch, approach
 Aqueytable, approachable, affable
 Aqueynten, pt aqueinte, pp aqueint(ed), acquaint Aquyten, requite
 Aracen, eradicate, uproot, tear away
 Araisen, see Areisen
 Aray, array, dress, arrangement, order, state, condition
 Arayen, array, dress, adorn, order, appoint Arbitr(i)e, will, choice Arblasters, men with crossbows Arch, see Ark
 Archangell, titmouse
 Archewyves, arch-wives, strong, assertive, dominating wives (or women) Ardaunt, ardent
 Areden, counsel, advise, explain, interpret, divine Areisen, raise, exalt, praise
 Aresonen, engage in reasoning or argument
 Arest, arrest, detention, delay, restraint, rest (for a spear) Aresten, arrest, stop
 Aretten, impute, ascribe
 Arewe, in a row, one after another Argolle, crude tartar
 Argument, argument, astronomical term for a mathematical quantity from which an other may be deduced Aright, aright, well, properly, exactly, certainly Arist, rising
 Ark, Arch, arc, with various uses in astronomy, as for the arc of the horizon from sunrise to sunset, or the apparent distance traversed by the sun in a given period
 Arm, arm, dat phr by arme
 Arme, army, armed expedition, "armada" Armonyak, ammoniac
 Armony, harmony
 Armure, armour
 Armurers, armourers
 Armpotent, powerful in arms
 Arn, are, see Ben
 Arqqs, see Arysen
 A-roume, at large, in an open space
 A-rowe, in (on) a row, in succession.
 Arowe, see Arwe
 Arracen, see Aracen
 Arrerage, arrears
 Arretten, see Aretten.

- Arryfrage, coming to shore Ars-metrike, arithmetic (from Lat "ars metrica," due to misunderstanding of arismetica," from αριθμητική) Arst, see Erst
 Art, art, skill
 Artelries, engines for discharging missiles
 Arten, urge, constrain
 Artificial, artificial, day artificial, in astronomy, the length of the day from sunrise to sunset Artik, arctic, northern Artow, art thou
 Arwe, Arowe, arrow
 Arysen, pt sg arqqs, pl arisen, pp arisen, arise, stand up
 As, as, also in combination, as that, as (as though, as that) used in place of modern construction with "as if", frequently employed as an expletive with imperatives or subjunctives as lat, as keep, as go we, also with advs and adv phrases as nowthe, as in her tyme On these last uses (now felt to be pleonastic) see KnT, I, 2302, n, and Gen Prol, I, 462, n
 As, ace See also Ambes as Asay, see Assay
 Ascapen, Escapen, escape
 Ascaupe(s), as if, as if to say, perhaps See SumT, III, 1745, n Ascencioun, ascension, ascending degree (in astronomy), ascent, rising (in alchemy)
 Ascenden, ascend, rise from the horizon (astronomical term)
 Ascendent, ascendant, the degree of the ecliptic that is rising at a given time Ascry, outcry, alarm
 Aseurance, assurance
 Ashamed (pp of ashamen), ashamed, put to shame, humiliated Aslaken, diminish, assuage Aslepe, asleep See Sleep
 A-slope, aside, awry
 Asonder, A-sundir, asunder, hence, diversely
 Aspe, aspen tree
 Aspect, aspect, in astronomy, the angular distance between two planets
 Aspen, adj, of an aspen tree, also sbst Aspre, harsh, sharp, bitter, vexatious, angry, fierce, irritated Aspye, sbst, spy
 Aspyen, vb, spy, see
 Assaut, assault
 As(s)ay, trial, attempt, test, quality, temper Assayen, try, endeavor test, prove Assse, ass
 Assege, sbst, siege
 Assegen, besiege
 Assessee, assembly
 Assesbling, union
 Assent, assent, consent, agreement, opinion
 Asseth, enough, sufficiency, satisfaction
 Asshe (1), ash-tree
 Asshe (2), pl asshen, ashes, ash (of a burnt substance)
 Asshy, sprinkled with ashes
 Assoilen, absolve, pardon, pay, discharge (a debt), loosen resolve, explain Assouling, absolution
 Assuren, feel sure, trust, rely, assure (another or one's self), make sure or secure, pp assured, assured, self-possessed etc Assyse, assize, session, judgment, order, position
 Astat, state
 Asterten, escape (trans or intrans), withdraw (?), desist (?)
 Astonien, pp astomed, astoned, astonish, confound Astoren, pp astored, store, provide Astrelabie, Astrolabie, astrolabe Astrologien, astrologer, astronomer
 Astronomie, also perhaps Astromye, astronomy, astrology
 A-sundir, see Asonder
 Asure, sbst, assurance, protestation
 Asure, azure
 Aswagen, assuage, mitigate, reduce, diminish
 Asweved (pp of asweven), dazed, put to sleep
 A-swone, see Aswown
 Aswown, fainted, in a swoon (from AS pp "aswogen") Also a form a-swowne (and a-swone), as if from dat phr on swowne But the sbst is not recorded early
 At, at, by, with, with respect to, from (a^s at) In numerous phrases at erste, at first, at on, at one, at shorte wordes, briefly, at regard with regard, at ye, at the eye, hence, visibly Ataken, pp atake(n), overtake Atasten, taste
 Ataynt, see Attenen
 Atazir, influence See MLT, II, 305, n
 Atemprounce, temperament, temperance, moderation, adjustment Atempren, temper, regulate, control (refl)
 Athinken, displease, impersonal, cause to regret or repent
 At-ones, at once, at the same time
 Atqon, at one
 Atreden, outwrit, surpass in counsel
 Atrennen, outrun
 Attamen, pp attamed, broach
 Atte, at the, used in adv phrases, atte fulle, beste, leste, etc
 At(t)ainen, attain, reach, achieve, pp at(t)ain, apprehended, experienced
 At(t)empre(e), temperate, moderate, mild, modest discreet Attendaunce, attendance, attention
 Attenden, attend, belong, pertain, attach itself See also Entenden Athamaunt, see Adama(unt)
 Attour, array
 Attricioun, attrition, in theology, a state of imperfect sorrow for sin (less complete than contrition) Attry, poisonous, venomous
 A-tweyn, in twain, in two
 A-twinne, apart
 Atwixen, betwixt
 A-two, in two, in twain
 Atyr, attire, dress

Aucto(u)r, author, maker, creator
Auctoritee, authority, text (of scripture, etc.), authoritative statement Audience, audience, assembly, hearing Aughte, see Owen
Augrym, algorism Arabic numerals See Mult, I 3210, n Augurye, augury
Auncessour, ancestor
Auncestre, ancestor
Auncetrye, ancestry
Angel, angel
Aunten, adventure, risk (sometimes refl)
Auntrous, adventurous Autentyk, authentic Auter, altar
Autoritee, see Auctoritee
Autour, see Aucto(u)r
Autumpne, autumn
Availen, avail, be of avail, aid, prevail
Avalen, fall down, sink, doff, take off Avantage, advantage
Avarous, avaricious
Avancen, advance, promote, aid, benefit, be profitable Avault, vaunt boast
Avault, adv, forward, in advance
Avauten, vb refl, vaunt, boast one's self, extol Avautour, boaster
Avenaunt, graceful, comely, pleasant, friendly, convenient Aventaille, ventail, front or mouthpiece of a helmet Adventure, adventure, chance luck, fortune, circumstance, accident, misfortune danger, of aventure, per aventure, by chance, on aventure, in case of accident or misfortune, in aventure, in the hands of fortune Avisee, see Avyse
Avisioun, vision, dream
Avout(e)rye, adultery
Avow, vow
Avowen, vow, acknowledge, declare Avowther, adulterer
Avoy, fie
Avys, advice, counsel, opinion, consideration
Avyse, adj, deliberate
Avysement, consideration, deliberation, counsel determination observation, attention Avysen, consider, deliberate observe, often refl, avysed, considered, deliberate, forewarned Awat, watch, observation, watchfulness, waiting, ambush, plot Awaiten, await, watch, observe, lie in wait (for) Awaken, pt awook, pp awaked, awake, wake, rouse one's self, resume speech or action Awaytour, her in wait
Awen, own (Northern dial)
A-wepe, a-weeping, in or into tears
A-werke, at work See Werk
Aweye, away, out of the way, from home See Wey(e)
Aweyward, backwards

Awhapen, amaze, confound
Awmener(e), purse for alms Awook, see Awaken
Awreken, pp awreken, awroken, avenge
Awrie, awry, on one side Awroken, see Awreken
Axen, ask, seek, require Axes, see Accesse
Axing, asking, question
Ay, aye, ever, ay whyl that, all the time that Ay-dwellinge, everlasting, perpetual Ayein, agamst, over against, opposite to Ayein, agam, back, in reply
Ayein-ledinge, returning, leading back Ayeinward, again, back again, on the other hand Aylen, ail
Ayr, heir, see Eyr
Azmut, azimuth

B

Ba, kiss, see Pa
Baas, base
Babeunes, see Babewynnes
Babewynnes, baboons, grotesque figures, gargoyles Bachelor, bachelor, young knight or aspirant to knighthood, bachelor of law, arts, etc Bachelrye, bachelor-hood, collective young men, candidates for knighthood Bacoun, bacon
Bacyn, basin
Bad, see Bidden
Badde, bad
Badder, worse
Baden, see Beden, Bidden
Bagge, purse
Baggen, look askew, squint Baggepye, bagpipe
Baggingly, squintingly
Bailye (1), castle wall, enclosure Bailye (2), jurisdiction, custody
Bak, back, clothing for the back, coarse cloak or mantle
Bake-metes, baked meats, pasties
Baken, pp ybaken, bake
Bakhalf, back side (of the astrolabe)
Bak-side, back side (of the astrolabe)
Balade, ballade See LGW Prol F, 417, n
Balauce, balance, suspense, uncertainty
Bale, bale, sorrow, misfortune
Balke, balk, beam
Balled, bald
Band, see Binden
Bane, slayer (orig personal), destruction Banes, bones (Northern dial)
Bar, see Beren
Barbe, barb, a piece of plaited linen reaching from the chin to the waist Barbre, barbarian
Bare, bare, desolate, insufficient, barren of results, useless Baren, see Beren
Bareyne, barren
Barge, barge, ship
Barm, bosom

- Barm-cloth, apron
Barre, bar, transverse metal strips on a girdle, buckle or saddle Barred, furnished with bars
Barringe, adorning with bars (in heraldry)
Basilicok, basilisk
Bataile, battle fight battalion troop
Batailed, battlemented, notched with indentations Batailen, vb, battle, fight Bate, strife
Bateren, batter
Bathe, both (Northern dial)
Bathen, bathe, bask (refl)
Baud, adj lively, joyous, gay
Baude, bawd
Bauderye (1), jollity, mirth
Bauderye (2), bawdry
Baudy, dirty
Baume, balm
Baundon, power, control
Bawdryk, baldric, belt
Bay, bay-colored
Bayard, a horse's name (from the color)
Be-, for words with this prefix see also Bi- and By- Beau, fair (Fr)
Beautee, beauty
Bebled, covered with blood
Beblotten, blot
Bed, bed, dat phr on (to) bedde
Bedel, beadle, officer
Beden, pt sg bed, pl beden, baden, pp beden, offer, direct, tell, command See also Bidden
Bedes, beads
Bedoten, make a fool of Bedrede, bedridden
Bee, pl bees, been, bee
Beechen, made of beech
Beek, beak
Beem, balk, beam
Beer, see Beren
Beest, beast, animal, beest royal, Leo (the zodiacal sign) Beet, see Beten
Begger, beggar, Beguun, hence mendicant
Beggester, beggar (properly feminine) See Gen Prol, I, 241, n Behewen, pp behewen, hew, carve Bekken, nod, beckon
Bel, fem bele, fair (Fr), bel amy, fair friend (formula of address) Belle, bell
Belwen, bellow
Bely (1), belly
Bely (2), bellows
Beme, trumpet
Ben, to be, for inflection see the Grammatical Introduction
Benched, provided with benches
Bend, band, in heraldry, a horizontal band across a shield Bendinge, providing with heraldic bends Bendiste, contr of Benedicite
Beene, bean
Benedicite, bless ye (the lord), apparently contracted into both ben'cite and ben'diste
Beene-straw, bean-straw
Benigne, benign, gracious Benison, benison, blessing
Bent slope, hillside
Beraft, see Birgven
Berd, beard, make a (his) berd, deceive, delude, in the berd, face to face Bere (1) sbst, bear
Bere, (2), sbst, bier
Ber(e) (3), sbst, pillow-case, also pillwe-beer
Beren, pt sg bar, beer, pl baren beren pp (y)bpren, bear, carry, possess, etc, pierce, conduct (one's self), bore down, overcome by testimony, beren on honde, assure (him), assert (to him), accuse, bear witness against See MLT, II, 620, n
Berie, berry
Berien, bury Berken, bark, pp borken, shrieked, screamed
Berne, barm, yeast
Bern(e), barn
Beryle, beryl
Besaunt, bezant (gold coin of Byzantium), cf also besaunt-wright
Bespreynt, see Bisprengen
Bestial, like a beast, stupid
Bestialtee, nature or condition as a beast Besy, see Bisy
Bet, adj and adv, better
Beten, pt sg bet, pl bet(t)en, pp beten, bet, beat, smite, hammer, flap, scourge, ornament, decorate, embroider
Beten, remedy, heal, mend, improve, kindle Beth, are, see Ben Betraysynge, betrayal See Bitraisen
Bever, made of beaver
Bewar, beware
Beyen, buy, dial var of Byen
Bibben, imbibe
Bicched, cursed (lit "bitched"), bicched bones dice See PardT, VI, 656, n Biclappen, clasp, enclose, catch Bicomen, pt sg bicom, pl bicomen, pp bocomen, become, go, depart Bidaffed, fooled
Bidden, pt sg bad pl baden, beden, pp bidden, beden (from AS "buddan"), sometimes confused with Beden (q v), offer, from AS "beodan"), ask, request, pray, command, direct Bidding, request
Bidelven, pp bidolven, bury Biden, see Byden
Bidewen, bedew
Bifallen, pt sg bifal, bifal, pp bifallen, befall, happen Bifallinge, befalling, coming to pass
Bifor(e)n, adv, before, in front, in a favorable position, first, of old Bifor(e)n, prep, before Bifornseyd, aforesaid
Bigamy, bigamy, marrying twice See WB Prol, III, 33, n
Bigeten, pt sg bigat, pp bigeten, beget

Biginnen, pt sg bigan, pl bigonnen, pp bigonnen, begun Bigoon (pp of bigoon, lit "gone about," "surrounded"), provided ornamented established, etc, wel bigoon well provided contented, happy, fortunate, uo bigon, wretched, distressed, cf also sorowfully bigon, wers bigon
Bigylen, beguile, deceive Bihalve, behalf
Bihaten, hate, detest
Bihelden, see Biholden
Biheste, behest promise, command
Biheten, Bihöten, pt sg bihette, bihöghte pp bihöght promise Bihöghte, see Biheten
Bihunde(n), behind
Biholden, Bihelden, pt sg bihield pp bihölden behold look upon Bihoof, behoof, profit, advantage, dat phr til behove
Bihöten, see Biheten
Bihove, see Bihoof
Bihovely, helpful, necessary
Bihoven, befit, suit, be necessary (Used both personally and impersonally) Bijapen, jest at, play trick upon Biker, quarrel
Biknöwen, pt sg biknew, pl biknewen, pp biknöwen, acknowledge, confess, I am biknöwen I acknowledge Bilafte, see Bilöven
Bilden, build
Bilder, builder, hence, as adj, used for building
Bile, bill (of a bird)
Bilefte, see Bilöven
Bilieve, belief, faith, creed
Bilöven, believe
Bilöven, Bilöven, pt bilefte, bilafte, remain, stay Blinnen, Blinnen, cease, stop
Bille, bill, petition, writ, letter
Bimönen, bemoan, used reflexively Binden, contr pr 3 sg bint, pt sg band, band, pl bounden, pp bounden, bonden, bind, fasten Binding, constraint
Binimen, pp binömen, take away
Bint, see Binden
Biquethen, pp bequethen, bequeath Bisraft, see Biröven
Biröven, pt birafte, birafte, pp biraft, biröft, bereave, take away, rob, deprive, prevent, restrain Biscorned, scorned
Bisechen, Biseken, pt biso(u)ghte, pp biso(u)ght, beseech, implore Bisemare, shame mockery, scorn
Bisetten, employ, bestow, apply, establish, fix Biseye, Biseyn (pp of biseen), beseen, provided, in goodly, richely biseye, in good plight, of good (splendid) appearance, etc, yvel biseye, ill-looking Bishenden, injure, ruin
Bishetten, shut up

Bishrewen, beshrew, curse (usually in a mild imprecation) Bisien, busy (one's self), employ, trouble, disturb Bisily, busily, attentively, eagerly, completely, well Bisinesse, business diligence, industry, labor, work, occupation, careful attention care, anxiety Bismokede, soiled with smoke
Bismotered, besmattered, marked with spots of dirt etc Biso(u)ght(e), see Bisechen Bispet, pp, spit upon Bispotten, bespot, smirch
Bisprengen, pp bispreynt, sprinkle, bedew Bisted, pp, placed, bestead beset, hard pressed, endangered Bistowen, bestow, place dispose, spend Bistryden, pt sg bistrogd, bestride Bisy, Besy, busy, industrious, active attentive, careful, anxious Bisyde, beside, near, bisyde his leve, without his leave Bisydes, besides on one side Bit, contr of biddeth
Bitaken, pt sg bitook, pp bitaken, betake, commit entrust, deliver Bitöchen, commit (to), give over (to) Biternesse, see Bitternesse
Bithinken, pt biho(u)ghte, pp biho(u)ght, bethink (often refl), think of, imagine, consider Bitit, contr of bitydeh
Bitook, see Bitaken
Bitor, bitter
Bitraisen, Bitraissen, betray
Bitrenden, contr pr 3 sg bytrend, encircle, twine around Bitternesse, bitterness, pl -es, bitter things Bitwix(e)(n), between Bityden, betide, happen
Bitymes, betimes, early Biwaren, spend, expend lay out
Biwepen, pt biwepie, pp biwopen, bewep, bemoan Biwreyen, Bewrayen, Biwryen, reveal, make known, betray Blake, black writing, ink (probably the wk adj used as a subst) Blakeberyed, blackberrying See Parö Proö, VI, 406, n Blaked, pp, blackened
Blamen, blame to blame, to be blamed See Gen Proö, I, 375, n Blandisen, fawn, flatter
Blankmanger (lit "white food"), creamed fowl or other meat stewed with eggs, rice, almonds, and sugar Blase, blaze
Blasen, blow
Blasten, blow (a trumpet blast)
Blaunche, white (Fr) See Fevere
Blechen, bleach
Blenchen, pt bleynite pp bleynt, blench, start back, turn aside

Blenden, contr pr 3 sg blent, pt blente pp blent, blind, deceive Blent, contr of blendeth
Blęren, blear, dim, blere hur ye, deceive ca-jole, hoodwink See RvT, I, 3865, n Blęring, dmmung, hoodwinking Blessen, blissen, bless used refl, cross one's self Blęven, see Blęven
Blew, blue, as sbst, blue clothing
Bleyne, blaun, blemish Bleynt(e), see Blenchen
Blinnen, see Bihnnen
Bliss(e), bliss happiness,
Blissed, happy
Blissen, see Blessen
Blundren, see Blundren
Blüg, blue, livid, smoke-colored Blosmen, blossom, bud
Blosmy, blossoming, budding
Blotte, blot, blemish
Blöwen, pt blew, pp blöwen, blow, fill with wind Blundren, flounder, rush heedlessly, fall into confusion Blynden, blind See also Blenden
Blythe, blithe, glad happy
Blyve, Bylyve (lit "by life"), quickly, soon, forthwith Boba(u)nce, boast, presumption Boce, Bos, boss, protuberance
Bocler, Bokeler, buckler
Böde (1), omen
Böde (2), abiding, delay
Böden, proclaim
Böden, see Beden
Body, body, person, corpse, my body myself
Boef, beef
Boes, (it) behoves (Northern dial)
Bokel, buckle
Bokeler, see Bocler
Boket, bucket
Boias, pl, bullaces
Bolden, grow bold
Bole, bull
Bolle, bowl
Bolt, bolt (of a crossbow)
Bolt-upright, flat on the back See Upright Bomblen, bumble, boom
Bon, good (Fr)
Bond, bond, obligation, band, fetter Bond, Bonden, see Binden
Bonde, bondman
Bonde-folk, -men, bondmen
Bone, boon, prayer, request Bontee, see Bountee
Böqd, see Byden
Boole armonyak, "an astringent earth brought from Armenia, and formerly used as an antidote and styptic" (NED)
Böqn, bone, ivory
Böqr, boar
Böqt, noise, outcry, boast, loud talk Böqt, boat
Boot, see Bote
Böqt, see Byten
Booteles, without remedy

Boras, borax
Bord, board, plank, table, meals dat phr to borde over borde(?), into shuppes bord on board
Bordel, brothel
Bordillers, brothel-keepers
Bordure, border, rim (of astrolabe)
Bore, sbst, bore, hole
Borel, Burel, coarse, lay, unlearned, as sbst, coarse woolen clothes Böre(n), see Bęren
Borken, see Berken
Bornen, Burnen, burnish, smoothe Borw, Borugh, pledge surety, uat phr to borue Borwen, borrow
Bos, see Boce
Bosard, buzzard
Bosses, bushes
Bösten, boast
Bote, good, profit, advantage (cf Mod Eng "to boot") help, healing, salvation, doth bote, gives the remedy
Botel, bottle (of hay)
Boterflye, butterfly
Böthe, both, your bothes, your bother, of you both Bothon, Bothun, see Botoun
Botiler, butler
Botme, bottom
Botoun, Bothon, Bothun, bud
Bougeron, sodomite
Bough, pl bowes, bough
Bouk, belly, trunk (of the body)
Boun, prepared, ready
Bounde, bound, limit
Bounden, see Binden
Bountee, Bontee, goodness, kindness, virtue, excellence Bountevous, bounteous
Bour, bower, bed-chamber, inner room, ladies' apartments
Bourde, sbst, jest
Bourden, jest
Bowe, bow
Bowen, pt bowed, bow, bend, yield Bowes, see Bough and Bowe
Box (1), box-tree
Box (2), blow
Box (3), box
Boy, knave, rascal
Boydekun, dagger (cf Shak "bodkun") Boyste, box
Boystous, rude, rough
Bracer, arm-guard (in archery)
Bragot, bragget, a drink made of honey and ale Braid, start, quick movement
Brak, see Břęken
Brasil, the red dye-stuff obtained from brazil-wood Brast(en), see Bresten
Brat, cloak of cloth
Braun, brawn, muscle, flesh (of the boar)
Branche, branch
Branched, adj, having many branches
Brayd, see Breyden
Břęde, breadth, space, on břęde, abroad

- Breden, breed, grow, increase, arise, originate Breech, breeches (orig pl of AS "bróc," but usually sg in Mid Eng) Breëd, bread
Breëm, bream, a fish with high arched back Breëth, breath
Breken, pt sg brak, pl breken, broken, pp broken, break, break off, wreck, broken his day, to fail to pay on the appointed day
Brekers, transgressors
Brekke, break, breach, flaw
Bremble-flour, bramble-flower, dog-rose Breme, furious, also adv
Bren, bran
Brennen, burn, be burnt, take fire, pp brend brent, burnt, forged, bright (as in brend gold), perhaps confused with burned, burnished
Brere, briar, breres, underwood
Bresten, contr pr 3 sg brast pt sg brast, pl brasten, brosten, brusten, bresten (?) pp brasten, burst, break, burst out, afflict Bretful, brimful
Bretherhede, brotherhood, fraternity, guild Breve, adj, brief, short
Brewen, pt sg brew, brew, contrive Breyden, pt sg breyde, pp brayd, browded, but also in str form broyden start, awake, bestir one's self, snatch, embroider Briberye, methods of stealing or cheating Brd, bird, young of birds
Brigge, bridge
Brighte, adv, brightly
Brike, trap, snare
Brim, brim, water's edge, dat phr to the brimme (?)
Brimme, fierce, cruel See Breme
Bringen, pt broghte, pp brought, bring, lead, conduct, introduce Brennen, burn See Brennen
Bnstiled, bristly
Brochage, mediation, contract
Broche, brooch, bracelet
Bröde, adv, broadly, plainly, far and wide, wide awake Broiden, pp broyded, braid See Breyden
Brokkinge, of uncertain meaning, perhaps, using a quavering or broken voice Brond(e), torch, firebrand Brod, brood
Brogd, broad, thick, large, enlarged
Broom, broom (the plant), pl bromes, bushes Brosten, see Bresten
Brotel, Brutel, brittle, fragile, frail, fickle, insecure, transitory Brouded, embroidered, braided, plaited from Fr "brouder," confused with the native str pp browden (AS "brogden") Brouken, enjoy, use, profit by Browded, see Breyden
Browdyng, embroidery
Browe, brow, eye-brow Broyden, see Breyden
Brusten, see Bresten
Brutel, see Brotel
Bryben (Mod Eng "bribe"), steal, rob
Bryge, strife, contention
Buffet, blow
Bugle-horn, drinking-horn made from the horn of the "bugle" or wild ox Buk, buck
Bulden, build
Bulle, papal bull
Bulten, bolt, sift
Burdoun, ground melody
Burel, see Borel
Burgeys, burgess, citizen
Burgh, borough
Burlees, burial places, the Catacombs Burnen, see Bornen
Burnet, made of coarse brown cloth, also sbst, dress of such material Burthe, birth
Busk, bush
But, used as sbst, a but, an exception
But and, but if Butiller, see Botler Buxom, submissive, obedient
By-, for words with this prefix see also Bi-
By, prep, by, with respect to, concerning, by me, near, beside me, by proces, in process, by this, by now, already, by the morwe, by morning, by that, by the time that
By and by, one after another, in order, side by side, precisely Byden, pt sg boqd, pp brden, wait, stay Byen, pt boghte, pp boght, buy, pay for, redeem Bygn, Begun
Bylyve, see Blyve
Bynne, bin, chest
Bynt, Bunt, contr of brndeth
Byrde, maiden, lady Byreynen, rain upon
Byten, pt sg boqt, pp biten, bite, cut, sting, burn Bytunge, sbst, wound

C (see also K and S)

- Caas, see Cas
Cacchen, Kecchen, pt caughte, pp caught, catch, take, obtain, pull, draw, perceive, conceive Cadence, cadence, rhythmic prose (?) See HF, 623, n Catuf, captive, wretch
Cake, loaf (of bread)
Calcenynge, calcination
Calcinacioun, calcination Calculen, calculate
Calculus, calculator or pointer (of an astro-labe) Caleweis, pears (from Cailloux in Burgundy)
Calie, caul, hair-net, head-dress, maken hum an howe above a calie, make a fool of him Calme, calm
Cam, see Comen
Camaille, camel
Camelyne, camel's hair stuff
Camus, Kamus, low flat, concave
Can, Con, pl connen, pt coude, inf connen,

- understand, learn, know, know how be able, have skill or experience, can on governaunce, knows of government, conduct, can hir good knows her advantage (see ML Epil, II, 1169 n), can than!, owes or feels thanks, conne him maugree, show him ill-will
- Cancre, cancer
- Candle, candle, torch, star
- Canel-bögn (lit 'channel-bone'), collar-bone
- Canelle, cinnamon
- Canevas, canvas
- Cankerdort, see Kankedort
- Canon, canon, rule, table (of a calendar)
On "The Canon" of Avicenna see Pard T, VI, 889, n
- Cantel, portion
- Capel, horse, cart-horse, nag
- Capen, see Gapen
- Cappe, cap, sette hir aller cappe, made fools of them all
- Cardinacle, probably intentional blunder for cardiacle, disease or pain of the heart
- Careful, full of care, trouble, or sorrow
- Caren, vb, care, be anxious or troubled
- Carayne, carrion, dead body
- Carf, see Kerven
- Carriage, carrying off, upon carriage, in the way of carrying off, feudal carriages, feudal tolls imposed in place of service as carrier, hence, taxes
- Carl, man fellow, boor, rustic
- Carmes, Carmelites, White Friars
- Carole, carol, a dance, accompanied by song
- Carolen, dance or sing a carol
- Carpen, talk
- Carrik, barge, ship
- Cart(e), cart, chariot
- Cartere, carter, charioteer
- Cas (1), Caas, case, affair, condition, accident, chance, mischance, adventure, upon cas by chance, in no mannes cas, in no respect, set a cas, assume, suppose, to deyen in the cas, though death were to result
- Cas (2), case, quiver (for arrows)
- Cast, casting, throwing, turn, occasion, contrivance, device
- Castellad, castellated
- Casten, pt caste, pp cast, and once casten (as if str vb), throw, vomit, cast (accounts), conjecture, contrive, consider, plan, plot, refl, apply one's self, cast bi-forn, forecasted, premeditated, foreordained, cast out, overcome
- Casting, vomit
- Casually, accidentally
- Catapuce, caper-spurge (Lat "Euphorbia Lathyrus")
- Catel, property, goods
- Caterwawed, caterwauling See Pard Prol, VI, 406, n
- Cause, cause, reason, sake, benefit, plea (at law), in cause, to blame Cause causinge, philosophical term for First Cause (Lat "Causa Causans")
- Causer, causer, creator
- Cave, cave, technical for the astrological "puteus" See Mars, 117, n
- Cavillacioun, caviling
- Cedir, cedar
- Celebrable, worthy to be celebrated, honorable
- Celerer, cellarer, keeper of a cellar
- Celle (1), cell
- Celle (2), boarding, sill (Kentish form of syll)
- Centre, center, point on the rete of an astro-labe
- Cenyth, Senith, zenith point of intersection of an azimuth line with the horizon, the point of sunrise, the point of the sky directly overhead
- Cepre, seapter
- Cered, waxed
- Cenal (var Serial), of evergreen oak (Lat "Quercus cernis")
- Ceriously, minutely, in detail
- Certain, adj, certain, sure, a certain number or amount of (certain gold, a certain yeres, a certain holes), also used as sbst, a certain number, certainty
- Certain, adv, certainly, indeed
- Ceruce, white lead (compounded of carbonate and hydrate of lead)
- Ces(s)en, cease, cause to cease, stop
- Cetewale, zedoary, a plant of the ginger tribe
- Ceynt, cincture, girdle
- Ceynt, Saynt, adj from pp, girded, girdled
- Ceruce, white lead (compounded of carbonate and hydrate of lead)
- Chafen, irritate
- Chaffare, sbst, trafficking, trading, merchandise, wares, matter subject
- Chaffaren, vb, trade, traffic, barter
- Chair, see Chayer
- Chalangen, challenge, claim, arrogate
- Chalandre, calander lark
- Chalk-stoon, piece of chalk
- Chalons, blankets
- Chamberere, chambermaid, lady's maid
- Champartie, partnership in power, used by Lydgate and some later writers to denote rivalry, see NED
- Champioun, champion, fighting man, defender in judicial lists
- Chano(u)n, canon
- Chaped, mounted (with silver)
- Chapriet, chaplet, fillet, circlet for the head
- Chapeleyn, chaplain nonne chapeleyne, secretary and assistant to the Prioress See Gen Prol, I, 164, n
- Chapman, merchant, trader
- Chapmanhede, bargaining, trading
- Char, chariot
- Charbo(n)cle, carbuncle (the precious stone)
- Charge, load, burden, weight, care, responsibility, tax, importance, no charge, no matter, in his charge, if he be responsible
- Chargeant, heavy, burdensome.
- Chargen, load, weigh down, oppress, command, implore
- Char-hors, pl chariot-horses

- Charme, charm
Charmeresses, female charmers, workers with charms, witches Chartre, charter, document, agreement deed Chasteleyn, castellan, governor of a castle Chasteleyn, wife of a chasteleyn
Chasten, Chastien, chasten, teach, reprove, chastise Chasteyn, chestnut
Chastysen, chastise, rebuke, restrain Chance, chance, luck, destiny, incident, technical term in the game of hazard See ML Prol, II, 124, n
Chaunten, chant, sing
Chauntepleure, sing and weep, a song upon grief following joy, then, a proverbial term See Anel, 320 n
Chauterie, chantry, endowment to provide masses for the souls of the founders or others Chayer, chair, professor's chair, throne
Cheeke, cheek, cheekbone Cheep, market bargain, cheapness time of cheapness, greet cheep, good cheep, good bargain low price
Chees, see Chesen
Cheeste, quarreling, wrangling
Cheeven, thrive, succeed, finish, bring to an end Chek, check (at chess)
Chekkere, chess-board
Chekmat, checkmate
Chelaundra, see Chalaundra
Chepen, vb, trade, bargain
Chere, face, appearance, look, glance, behavior, good cheer, friendly greeting Cherete, see Chiertee Cherissen, Cherien, cherish
Cherl, churl, fellow, rough fellow, slave Cherubin, one of the cherubim Cherys, coll, cherries
Ches, chess
Chesen, pt sg chees, pl chqsen, pp chqsen, choose Cheste, Chiste, chest, box, trunk, coffin Chesteyn, see Chasteyn
Chevache, see Chyvachie
Cheveren, see Shyveren Chevesaile, ornamented collar
Chevisaunce, accomplishing, bringing to an end, resource, remedy, device, borrowing or lending money, dealing for profit Chevisen, Cheveysen, achieve, accomplish one's desire, succeed, manage (on one's behalf), settle one's cause
Cheveys, see Chevisen Chiche, see Chunche
Chidde, see Chyden
Chideresse, female scold See Chyden
Chidestere, female scold
Chieftayn (var Cheventeyn) chieftain Chiertee, Cherete, fondness, affection
Chike, chicken
Child, child, young man, fighting man, dat phr with childe Childly, childlike
Chilyndre, cylinder, sun-dial
- Chunche, Chiche, adj, miserly, mean, avaricious, also sbst
Chuncherye, miserliness
Chunchy, niggardly, miserly See also Chunche Chunche, church
Chirchehawe, churchyard
Chirche-reve, church robbery
Chirken, make a harsh or strident noise, chirp (like a bird) Chisel, chisel, perhaps also scissors
Chiste, see Cheste
Chit, see Chyden
Chiteren, chatter twitter
Chivalrye, chivalry, knighthood, valor, knightly deed or accomplishment, coll, a body of knights Chogh, Cow, chough
Choppen, chop, knock, strike
Chuk, chuck, noise made by a cock Chukken, cluck, make a clucking noise
Chyden, contr pr 3 sg chit, pt chidde, chide, scold, reproach, reprove, complain Chymbe, rim (of a cask)
Chymben, chime
Chymenee, chimney, fireplace
Chynyng, yawning, gaping
Chyvachie, Chevache, cavalry raid or expedition, feat of horsemanship, ride, course Cierge, wax-taper Cypre(e)ss, cypress also collective Circumscriven, enclose, comprehend
Circumstaunces, circumstances, accessory matters, accompaniments Ciser, strong drink
Citole, stringed instrument, somewhat like a zither Citrinacioun, citronising (in alchemy) Citryn, citron-colored Clad, Cladde, see Clothen
Clamb(en), see Chmben
Clapers, burrows (for rabbits)
Clappe, noise, stroke, thunderclap, noisy talk, chatter Clappen, clap, chatter, talk, knock, shut Clapping, chatter
Clarion, clarion, trumpet
Clarioning, music of the clarion
Clarre(e), drunk of wine, honey, and spices Claspen, clasp, tie
Clause, clause, sentence, agreement, in a clause, briefly Claw, pl claves, clowes, claw Clawen, pt sg clew, clawed, rub, scratch Cled(de), see Clothen
Cleer, Clere, clear, bright, well-sounding, free, noble, splendid (Lat "clarus") Cleerly, entirely
Cleernesse, brightness, glory
Clefte, see Cleven (1)
Clene, clean, pure, unmixed, also adv, clean, entirely Cleynesse, purity
Clepen, call, name, mention, clepen ayen, recall Clere, see Cleer
Clere, adv, clearly

- Cleren, grow clear, shine brightly
 Clergeoun, pupil, choir-boy See PrT, VII, 495 n Clergial, clerkly learned
 Clerk, cleric, one admitted to a religious order, ecclesiastic, scholar Cleven (1), pt clefte pp cloven, cleave, split, cut, clowe, cimped Cleven (2), Clyven, cleave, adhere Clew, see Clawen
 Clewe, clew
 Cley, clay
 Cleymen, claim
 Clifte, cleft chink
 Cliket, latch-key
 Climben, pt sg clamb, clomb, pl clamben, clomben pp clo(u)mben, clumb
 Clippen (1) embrace
 Clippen (2), clip, cut Clips, eclipsed, dim Clotted, club-shaped
 Cloisterer, member or resident of a cloister Cloke, cloak
 Clom, interj., mum, be still Clomb(en), see Climben
 Cloqs, close secret, closed
 Cloqth, cloth garment, covering Cloqthlees, naked
 Cloq, sbst, close, yard
 Cloqen, enclose
 Closing, enclosure, boundary
 Closure, enclosure
 Clote-leaf, burdock-leaf
 Cloth, see Cloqth
 Clothen, pt cladde cladde, pp clad, clad, clothe Clotered, clotted, coagulated
 Cloude, cloud, sky
 Cloumben, see Climben
 Clout, piece of cloth, clout rag
 Clouted, clothed in patched garments
 Clouted up
 Clove(n), see Cleven (1)
 Clowes, see Claw
 Clow-gelofre, clove-gillyflower, clove (the spice)
 Clustred, pp covered with clouds
 Clyf, pl clayes clayfes, cliff Clymat, belt or zone of the earth climates sets of almicanteras calculated for different latitudes Clyven, see Cleven (2)
 Clyves, see Clyf
 Coagulat, pp coagulated, clotted
 Cod, bag stomach
 Coempcioun, coemption joint purchase, the buying up of the whole supply of a commodity Coeterne, coeternal
 Cofre, coffer, chest, money-box coffin
 Cogge, cock-boat
 Coghhen, Coughhen, cough
 Collions, testicles
 Cok (1), cock, used to designate time, the firste the thurdde cok
 Cok (2), corruption of God See Manc Prol, IX 9, n Cokenay, cockney, effeminate fellow milksop Cokewold, cuckold
 Cokkel, cockle, used to translate 'zizania' Lat 'lolia' in Matt xiii ('tares' in the King James Bible)
 Cokkow, cuckoo
 Cold, cold, chilling, disastrous fatal See NPT, VII, 3256, n Colde, sbst, cold chill
 Colden, grow cold
 Cole, coal
 Coler, collar
 Colera, cholera, the humor (Lat)
 Colere, cholera
 Colerik, choleric, hence, hot-tempered
 Col-fox, coal fox, fox with black tips Collacioun, comparison, conference
 Collateral, subordinate lying aside from the main purpose Collect, pp, collected (in groups)
 Colour, color appearance, complexion excuse pretence way, manner figures of speech, fine phrases (technical term in rhetoric)
 Colpon, cutting strip, slice, hence, gathering, shred billet Columbyn, like a dove
 Com, see Comen
 Combren, pp combred encumber combred-world, one who encumbers the world Combust, pp burnt quenched (used technically of a planet which is too near the sun)
 Come, coming
 Comen, pt sg cam, com pl comen pp comen come come therby come by it obtain it, com of come off come along Comeven, Comm(o)even, move, instigate, induce Comlily, in a comely way
 Comm(o)even, see Comeven
 Com(m)une, common general, ordinary, in commune commonly generally used as sbst for "the Commons" commoners, commonwealth, common property technical term in law for common right
 Com(m)unely, publicly
 Com(p)aignable, companionable Compaignye, Companye, company companionship Comparysoned, compared Compas, compass, circuit circle circumference zone, circlet wreath, contriving, compasses circles or compasses tryne compas the threefold world (earth, sea, and heaven)
 Compassement, plotting contriving
 Compassen, plan, contrive draw with compasses, surround, enclose, study, observe closely comprehend Compassing, dimension, contrivance Compeer, fellow godfather, familiar friend comrade Compellen, compel bribe Compilatour, compiler
 Compleccioun, also -plex-, complexion temperament (mixture of humors in the system)

- Compleynen, complain, lament
Compleynt(e), complaint, technical term for ballad of complaint or lament Complisshen, accomplish
Complyn, comply evening service
Comporten, bear, endure
Composicioun, agreement, arrangement
Compotent, master of itself (translates Lat "su compos") Compounen, compound, compose, mix, temper, construct draw, mark Comprehenden, comprehend, consider, comprise, include in an explanation or description Comprenden, contr of Comprehenden
Compte, account
Comunabietes, communities
Comunably, commonly, usually Comunalte, Comynalte, empire, dominion, community, commonwealth Comune, see Commune
Comunte, community, common possession
Comyn, cummin
Comynalte, see Comunalite
Con, see Can
Conceite, conception, idea, thought, fancy, notion Concluden, conclude, include, summarize, succeed Conclusioun, conclusion, decision, judgment, summary, result (of an experiment), plan, purpose, end, fate, theorem, proposition (in mathematics)
Concorden, concord, agree
Concours, course result
Condescenden, condescend, stoop to agree upon, settle or fix upon settle down to, come to particulars, yield, accede Condiccioun, proviso stipulation, state of being (inner character as well as external circumstances), conduct state, circumstances, nature, sort, kind Condit, pl condys, conduit Conestablierye, ward of a castle (under a constable) Confederacye, conspiracy
Confed(e)red, confederate, joined together
Confermen, confirm, strengthen, decree
Confiteor, I confess (Lat)
Confiture, confection, mixture, preserve
Confort, comfort, pleasure Conforten, comfort, strengthen, fortify, encourage Confounden, confound, destroy, run, confuse, perturb, subdue Confus, adj (from pp), confused, abashed, confusedly mixed, disorderly Congeled, congealed
Congeyen, grant leave (Fr "congé"), dismiss Congregacioun, congregation, assemblage, gathering together Consaunce, cognizance, understanding, acquaintance Conjecten, conjecture, suppose, plot, conspire Conjoynen, pp conjoyni, compose, make up Conjunctioun, conjunction, technical in astrology for the apparent proximity of two heavenly bodies Conjuracioun, conjuring (in necromancy), conspiracy Conjuren, conjure, adjure, pray, beseech Connen, see Can Conning, adj, cunning skilful Conscience, feeling, sensibility, pity, sympathy Consecrat, contr pp, consecrated Conseil, council, counsel, advice, purpose, intention, secret, confidential adviser Conseilere, councillor, Roman consul Conseilour, counsellor, senator
Consentant, consenting, agreeing Consentement, consenting
Consentrik, concentric, having the same center or altitude Consequent, consequence, sequel Conservatyf, preserving See HF, 847, n Consevyte, see Conceite
Consistory, consistory, council, court Constable, governor
Constablesse, governor's wife
Constaunce, constancy
Constellacioun, constellation, cluster of stars, combination of heavenly bodies or influences Constreynance, constraint
Constreynen, constrain, compel, refl, contract (one's self) Constreynthe, constraint, distress
Construen, understand, interpret, divine, explain Consulers, consuls
Consumpt, pp, consumed
Contagious, contiguous
Contek, strife, conflict
Contemplaunce, contemplation
Contentance, countenance, appearance, demeanor, gesture, expression of feeling, self-possession pretence, fond his contentance, composed himself Contenen, contain hold together, remain, refl, bear, contain, maintain one's self
Continued, pp, followed, completed Contract, pp, contracted Contrare, adj, contrary, opposed, also subst, opponent, opposition Contrane, contrary
Contranen, oppose Contrarious, contrary, adverse Contre, country, fatherland, contre-folk, people of his country, contre-houses, homes See Anel, 25, n Controven, invent, compose Contubernyal, familiar, intimate Contunen, contain Convenient, suitable, fitting
Convers, converse, reverse
Conversacioun, conversation, way of living Converten, change (both trans and intrans), alter habit or opinion, swerve Conveyen, accompany, conduct, introduce Convict, contr pp overcome Conyng, cony, rabbit

- Cop, top, summit
Cope, cope, cape, cloak, canopy (of heaven)
Coper, copper
Copie, copy
Coppe, Cuppe, cup
Corage, heart, mind, nature disposition, desire, will ardor, courage encouragement Corbetz, corbels
Corden, accord, agree
Cordewane, Cordovan leather
Cordyler, Franciscan (so named from his girdle of rope) Corfew, curfew
Cormeraunt, cormorant
Corn, grain, crop, a grain (of corn), a corn-stalk, fig, the best portion Cornemuse, bagpipe
Corniculer, clerk, registrar
Corny, strong of corn or malt Corone, Coroun(e), Crown, crown, garland, crown of the head, tonsure, in astronomy, the Northern Crown Correccioun, penalty fine
Cor(r)igen, correct
Corruptable, corruptible
Corruppen, corrupt
Corrupcioun, corruption destruction
Cors, body, corpse
Corsednesse, abomination
Corseint (lit "holy body"), saint, shrine Corsen, curse
Corven, see Kerven
Cos, kiss
Cosin, cousin, also adj, akin, related, suitable Cosinage, kinship
Cost (1), cost expense
Cost (2) way, manner, course, quality, nedes cost, of necessity Costage, cost
Coſte, coast, region (of earth or sky)
Coſteyng, coasting
Costlewe, costly See PardT, VI, 495, n
Costret (var Coſtreſ), flask, bottle
Cote (1), cot, cote, room in a prison or dungeon
Cote (2), coat, jacket, coat-of-arms, skirt, outer garment Cote-armure, coat-armor, coat-of-arms
Cotidien, quotidian, daily
Couchen, place, lay down, lay flat, impose, lie low, cower, pp couched, set, laid, set with jewels Coude, see Can Counseil, see Conseil
Counten, count, reckon, account Countenance, see Contenance
Counting-board, table in counting-house
Countour (1), arithmetician auditor (or perhaps pleader?) See Gen Prol, I, 359 n Countour (2), abacus, counting-board, counting-house Countour-hous, counting-house
Countrepeisen, counterbalance, countervail, render equivalent Countrepleten, counterplead, argue against Countretaille, countertally correspondence (of sound), hence, reply, retort Countrewaiten, watch over or against Coupable, culpable
Coupe, cup
Couren, cower
Cours, course, course of life, in astronomy, orbit, in hunting, a run at the game
Courser, courser, steed
Courtepy, upper short coat
Court-man, courtier
Couth, Kouth, known familiar manifest Couths, see Can
Couthe, adv, manifestly, familiarly
Covetyse, covetousness bodily lust desire Covenable, suitable, fitting, convenient Covent, convent
Coverchief, head-covering, kerchief Covercle, pot-lid
Coveren, cover, recover
Covert, secret, hidden
Coverture, covering, concealment, disguise
Covetour, one who covets
Covyne, deceitful agreement, deceitfulness Cow (1), pl keen, kyn, cow Cow (2), see Chogh
Coward, cowardly
Cowardye, Cowardyse, cowardice
Coy, quiet, modest, shy
Coyen, make quiet, calm, cajole
Coynes, quinces
Crabbed, crabbed, cross, bitter
Cracching, scratching
Craft, skill, cunning trade, art, secret, might, power, contrivance Crafty, skilful, clever, intelligent Craken, utter loudly or boldly, sing harshly (like a corn-crake) Crampsshenn, cramp, contract convulsively Crased, cracked, broken
Creant (contr of recreant?), seith creant, acknowledges defeat Creat, created
Creauce, credence, belief, object of belief Creauuncen, borrow on credit
Crece, increase, progeny Creep, see Crepen
Crekes, tricks, wiles
Crepel, cripple
Crepen, pt crepp, crepte, pp creppen, crept, creep Crevace, crevice, crack Crew, see Crown
Crinkled, full of turns and twists
Crips, crisp, curly Cristen, Christian
Cristendom, Christianity, the Christian faith
Cristantie, Christian people
Croce, cross, crozier, staff, stuck Crois, cross
Croked, crooked, tortuous
Crokes, crooks, hooks Crokke, crock, pot
Crommes, crumbs
Crop, top, sprout new shoot, crop and rote, top and root, hence, altogether Cropen, see Crepen

Croper, crupper
 Cros, cross
 Croslet, crucible
 Crouchen, mark with the sign of the cross
 Crouden, push press
 Crouke, jug pitcher
 Crown, see Corone
 Crowned, crowned, hence, surpassing, supreme Croupe(r), see Croper Crowen, pt crew, pp crowen, crow Crownet, coronet
 Croys, see Crois
 Crul, curly Crydestow, contr of criedest thou
 Cryke, creek
 Cucurbites, chemical vessels for distillation Cuer, heart (Fr), par cuer by heart
 Culpe, guilt, culpability
 Culter, coulter (of a plough)
 Culver, dove
 Cunnen, see Can
 Cunning, Konning, cunning, skill, knowledge, learning, experience
 Cuppe, see Coppe
 Curacoun, cure, method of cure
 Curat, one entrusted with the cure of souls, parish-priest Cure, care, heed, charge attention supervision, diligence, cure, remedy, I do no cure, I do not care, busy cure, occupation busy employment or occupation, his lynes cure, his constant thought or care, honest cure, care for honor, self-respect, in cure, in one's power
 Curiositee, elaborate workmanship intricacy Curious, careful, diligent, skilful, eager, carefully or skilfully made, of strange or erudite interest (applied to magic) Currou, courier runner
 Cursednesse, wickedness, malice, shrewishness Cursen, curse, excommunicate Curtesye, courtesy
 Curteys, courteous, gentle compassionate
 Customere, adj, accustomed
 Custome, custom, pl, payments, customs duties Cut, lot
 Cutten, contr pr 3 sg cut, pt lulle, pp cutted cut, cut Cynk, cinque, five

D

Daf, fool
 Dag tag, shred of cloth, hanging point of a garment slashed at the lower margin, tag of a lace or shoe-latchet
 Daged, cut into tags or hanging peaks, slashed Dagginge, cutting into tags
 Dagoun, piece
 Dale, dale
 Dalf, see Delven
 Dabounce, social conversation, chat, gossip, playfulness, mirth, carressing, wanton toying Damageous, damaging, injurious Dame, dame, madame, mother, dam, good wife Damselle, damsel

 Dampnacoun, damnation, condemnation
 Dampnen, damn, condemn
 Dan, Daun, sr, lord (from Lat "dominus")
 Dar, pt pr vb, pt dorste, inf dorren durren, dare Daren, lie in torpor or terror, crouch Darreynen, settle a right or a claim to decide Dart, dart, given as a prize
 Daswen, daze, be dazzled
 Daun, see Dan
 Daunger, lordship, power, control, ungraciousness, disdain hesitation, offishness, the quality of being "difficile" See Gen Profl, I, 517, n Daungerous, imperious, disdainful, offish, "difficile," fastidiousiggardly sparing, grudging hard to please Daunten, daunt, terrify, tame, overcome Dawn, dawn
 Daweninge, dawn
 Dawing, dawn
 Dayerye, dairy
 Dayesye (lit "day's eye"), daisy
 Debaat, strife, conflict, war, debate
 Debaten, fight, make war, contend, quarrel Debonaire (lit "of good disposition"), gentle, gracious, courteous, meek, calm Deceivable, deceitful Declamen, declaim discuss Declinacoun, declination in astronomy, the angular distance from the equator Declynen, decline turn aside, in astronomy, possess declination Declyning, sloping
 Decoped, slashed, cut in openwork patterns
 Dede, pl dedes, dede, deed, act, dat phr in dede
 Dede, see Doon
 Deden, grow dead, torpid, stupefied Deucat, contr pp, dedicated Deduyt, delight, pleasure
 Deed, dead, torpid, sluggish Deedly, deadly, mortal, dying, deathly
 Deef, pl deve, deaf
 Deel, part, portion, share, bit, wht Deep, comp Depper, deep Deer, pl deer, animal Deereyng, darling
 Dees (1), see Deys
 Dees (2), Dys, dice
 Deeth, death, plague, pestilence, dat phr to deithe
 Defamen, dishonor
 Defaute, fault, defect, lack, in hunting, the check or stunt of the pursuit when the scent is lost Defence, defence resistance, covering, hindrance, prohibition, denial Defenced, defended
 Defendaunt, defence, in his defendaunt, in his defence (Fr "en son defendant")

- Defenden, defend, forbid
Defensible, helping to defend Defet (lit. 'undone'), injured, marred, disfigured
Defoulen, trample down, defile, disgrace
Defylen, bruise, maul
Defynen, define, pronounce, declare Degist, elaborate
Degisyne, elaborateness
Degree, step or tier (of a theater), rank, status, condition, horizontal stripe, degree of an angle or arc
Daignous, see Deynous
Dekne, deacon
Delen, deal, apportion, distribute, deal with, argue
Deliberen, deliberate Delicase, luxuriousness, voluptuousness, pleasure, delight
Delicat, delicate dainty, delicious Deliciously, delightfully, luxuriously
Delitable, delightful
Delituous, delightful, delicious Deliver(e), adj., active, agile, quick Deliveren, deliver, set free, do away with Delvernesse, activity
Delven, pt. sg. dalf, pl. dolven, dulven, pp.
dolven, delve dig Delyces, delights delicate feelings, loose pleasures, favorites
Delye, delicate, dainty, fine Delyten, give or take pleasure, sometimes refl.
Demaunde, question
Demeigne, see Demeynen Demem, deem, decide, suppose, judge, give a verdict, condemn Demeyne, domain, dominion, possession, ownership
Deme(y)nen, manage, conduct, handle, manipulate, express, exhibit Demonstratif, demonstrable
Denticle, pointer (on an astrolabe) Depardieux, in God's name or authority, by God (an oath, Fr. "de par Dieu") Departen, part, separate, divide, distinguish Departinge, separation, dividing, departure Depeynted, painted, depicted, stained Depper, see Deep
Depraven, calumniate Depressioun, angular distance below the horizon
Dere, comp. derre, dear, also adv.
Deren, hurt, injure
Derk, dark, inauspicious
Derke, darkness
Derken, Durken, become dark, make dark, be hidden, lurk Derne, secret
Derre, see Dere
Derthe, dearth
Des-, see also Dis- Descensioun, descension, in astronomy, the degree of the celestial equator which sets with a given heavenly body in astrology, the part of the zodiac in which a planet has least influence Descensories, in alchemy vessels used for distillation by descent Descernen, discern Desceyvaunce, deception
Deschangen, discharge, disburden Descryven, Discreven, describe Desert, adj., deserted, lonely Desert, Dissert, merit, deserving Desesper, despair
Desesperaunce, despair
Deseveraunce, see Disseveraunce
Desherten, disinherit
Deshonestee, dishonor unseemliness
Desirous, desirous, eager, ardent, ambitious Deslavee, immoderate inordinate dissolute Desordeyne, inordinate, disorderly
Desordinat, inordinate Desperren, despair, pp. desperred, filled with despair
Despenden, spend, waste
Despense, expense, money for expenditure
Desperaunce, desperation
Despitous, spiteful scornful, angry, cruel Desponen, see Disponen
Desport, amusement, diversion, sport merriment, mirth
Desporten, rejoice, cheer, entertain Despoyle, despoil, rob
Despyt, scorn, contempt, spite malice, ill-humor
Desray, disorder, confusion
Destempered, distempered Destnal, pertaining to destiny, destined, fatal Destourben, disturb, hinder, interrupt Destract, distract
Destroubled, Distourbled, disturbed
Destroyen, demolish, ruin, dissolve consume, kill, lay waste, ravage, disturb, harass Determinat, determinate, fixed, properly placed (on the astrolabe) Determinen, terminate, come to an end, determine, settle
Dette, debt
Deus hic, a blessing "God (be) here" (Lat.)
Deve, see Deef
Dever, see Devoir Devil, devil, used as a curse or expletive in various expressions how devil, what devil, a devil weye
Devocioun, devotion, devoted application Devoid, free (from), destitute (of) Devoiden, remove Devoir, Dever, duty, endeavor
Devyaunt, divergent turned aside Devyn, Divyn, diviner, astrologer
Devynen, see Divynen
Devynessee, female diviner Devys, device, contrivance, supposition, disposal, will, direction, heraldic device at point devys, with exactitude Devysen, devise, contrive, ordain plan, arrange, imagine, relate, describe, discourse.
Dewe, Duwe, due
Dextrer, war-horse
Deye, dairy-woman

- Deyen, see Dyen
Deynen, deign
Deynous, Deignous, disdainful, scornful
Deyntee, sbst (Fr dainté, L "dignitatem"), estimation, value, worth, delight, pleasure, a dainty, a delicacy Deyntee, adj, dainty, rare fine, superior Deyntvous, dainty
Deys, dais, platform, high table
Diapred, decorated with a small uniform pattern or fret-work Dich, ditch
Dichen, see Dyken
Diete, diet
Diffame, evil report
Diffamen, defame
Diffinicion, definition, exposition Diffinitif, definitive, final Diffusoun, diffuseness Diffyen, renounce, repudiate, challenge, defy Diffynen, define, conclude Diffyniss(h)en, define
Dighten, pt dighte, pp dight, prepare, make ready, equip, array, place ordain he with, also refl, prepare, betake one's self, hasten
Digne, worthy, honorable, suitable, disdainful, scornful
Dignitee, dignity, worth, rank, in astrology, the situation of a planet in which its influence is heightened or the advantages it enjoys when in such a favorable situation
Dilatacion, dilating, diffuseness Diluge, deluge
Dint, stroke
Direct (really a contr pp), directed, addressed, direct, in astrology, motion in the same direction as that of the sun in the zodiac
Dirken, see Derken
Dis-, for words with this prefix see also Disavauncen, set back, defeat Disaventure, misadventure, misfortune
Disblamen, exonerate, free from blame
Disceyven, deceive
Dischevele, disheveled, with loose or disordered hair Discipline, discipline, mortification of the flesh Disclaundenen, slander, reproach Discomfit, discomfited, disconcerted Disconfiture, disconfiture Disconfort, discomfort, grief, discouragement Disconforten, discourage Discorden, disagree
Discoveren, pp discovered, discovert, uncover, reveal, at discovert, unprotected Discreven, see Descryven
Discuren, discover, reveal Discussen, discuss, dispel Disdeinous, disdainful
Disencresen, decrease
Disee, discomfort, inconvenience, uneasiness, displeasure, disease, misery, sorrow, grief
Dissen, trouble, vex, distress
Disperat, desperate, without hope Disfigurat, disguised
Disgyesen, dress in new fashion, decorate, adorn, disguise, conceal Dishonest, dishonorable, shameful, unfair Unreasonable, unfaithful, immodest Disjoynt, difficult or perilous position, evil plight Dismal, unlucky day
Disobeysaunt, disobedient
Disordenaunce, violation of rules
Disparage, disparagement, disgrace
Disparagen, dishonor, misally Dispeired, see Despeiren
Displayen, display, spread Displeasance, displeasure, offence
Displeasunt, displeasing
Disposen, dispose, regulate Disposen, arrange, plan, purpose, pp disposed, prepared, ready, wel disposed, in good health Disposicion, disposition, state of mind, disposal Dispreisen, dispraise, blame, disparage Disputoun, argument, debate dispute Disrewely, irregularly, without rule Dissert, see Desert
Disserven, deserve
Disseverance, dissevering, separation
Disshewe, see Dischevele
Dissh-mettes, food cooked in dishes, pies, pastry Dissimulen, dissimulate, dissemble Disslaundenen, see Disclaundenen
Dissolucitonen, dissoluteness Dissolven, cause the death of, cause to disappear, undo, destroy Distant, distant, evens distantz (Fr pl in -s), equidistant Distemperance, inclemency
Distempre, distempered, enraged
Distempren, vex, be vexed Disteynen, stain, bedim Distincten, distinguish
Distoned, out of tune Distourbled, see Destroubled
Distreynen, seize, grasp, constrain, afflict, assess, tax Disturnen, turn aside Distyngwed, distinguished Ditee, ditty, discourse
Durne, diurnal
Divinistre, divine, theologian
Divisioun, act of dividing, distinction, difference, dividing line, detachment, company Divyn, divine, theologian
Divynales, divinations Divyne, sbst, divinity, theology
Divynen, guess, declare Divynour, diviner, soothsayer Doand, Northern form of pr p, see Doon
Dogere, doggerel, bad or trivial verse Dogge, dog
Doghter, pl doghtren, daughter Doke, duck
Dokke, dock (herb)
Dokken, dock, cut short

Dolven, see Delven
Dom, Do(u)mb, dumb
Domesday, doomsday
Domesman, judge
Dominauon, domination, control, ascendancy, used technically in astronomy and physiology Don, contr of do on, put on Dong, dung
Dongeoun, dungeon, keep-tower Don(n), see Dun
Dool, grief, lamentation
Dool, portion share halfen dool, half portion Doom, judgment, opinion, sentence, decision
Doon, pt dade, pp (y)doon, inflected inf to done, force, commit, fulfil do, act, cause, frequently used as a causal auxiliary with infinitives, do fecche, do come, dade don steen, also with participles, hath don you kept, don, put on, dade off, doffed
Dore, door, out at dore, out of doors
Dormant, permanent See Gen Prol, I, 353, n Dorren, see Dar
Dorste, see Dar
Dortour, dormitory
Doseyn, dozen
Dosser, basket to carry on the back Dotard, imbecile, fool, also adj
Doten, dote, become foolish, behave foolishly Double, two-fold, deceitful
Doublenesse, duplicity
Doucet, dulcet, sweet-sounding, sbst, dulcet (pipe)
Doumb, see Dom
Doun, down, feathers
Doun, hill, dat phr by dount
Doun-right, adv straightway Doutable, doubtful unstable uncertain
Doutance, doubt, perplexity
Doute, doubt, fear, peril, lack, out of doute, doubtless Douten, doubt, fear
Doutous, doubtful
Doutremer, from beyond the sea
Dowaire, dower
Down, bequeath give (as an endowment)
Downer, more downward farther down
Dowve, dove
Drad(de), see Dreden
Draff, draft, chaff
Draf-sak, sack full of draff
Dragoun, dragon, tail of the Dragoun, the Dragon's tail See Astr, II, 4, 40, n Drasty, filthy, worthless
Drat, see Dreden
Draught, drink, move at chess
Drawen, pt sg dro(u)gh, drow, drew, pl drownen, pp drawen, carry haul draw, incline, attract, bring forward or back recall move draw near, withdraw Drecchen, delay, tarry, be slow or tedious vex annoy Drecchinge, delaying prolonging
Drede, dread fear, doubt, withouten, or out of, drede, without doubt

Dredeless, adj, fearless adv without doubt Dreden, contr pr 3 sg drat, pt dredde dradde, pp drad, dread, fear, sometimes refl Dredful, dreadful terrible timid Drenchen, pt dreynte, drenite pp dreynt drenched, drown, be drowned, be overwhelmed Drenching, drowning
Drenhed, dreariness, sorrow
Dressen, address, direct, prepare, make ready, dress, array, set in order, often refl Drew, see Drawen
Dreye, Drye, dry
Dreyen, vb, dry
Dreynt(e), see Drenchen
Drogges, drugs
Dronkelawe, drunken, addicted to drink See PardT, VI, 495, n
Dro(u)gh, see Drawen
Dro(u)ghte, drought, thirst
Droupen, droop, hang low, be dragged Drovy, dirty, muddy Drow(en), see Drawen
Druerye, love, love-making, sometimes, wanton love Druggen, drudge
Dryen, dree, endure suffer
Dryven, pt sg droof, pl drwen, pp drwen, drive hasten, incite, continue, complete, include pass (time)
Duete, duty, debt
Dulcarnoun, puzzle, dilemma See Tr, III, 931 n Dullen, feel or make dull, stupefy, make of no effect Dulven, see Delven
Dun, dun-colored, dusty swarthy
Duren, endure, last, remain continue, survive Duresse, hardship
Durren, see Dar
Dusken, grow dark or dim, darken (trans)
Duwe, see Dewe
Dwale, sleeping potion, narcotic drink
Dwellen, pt dwelled, dwelte pp dwelled, dwelt dwell, remain, tarry, survive Dwelling, habitation, delay
Dwyned, pp, dwindled, wasted away
Dy, say (Fr)
Dyamaunt, diamond, adamant Dyen, Deyen, die
Dyere, dyer
Dyete, see Diete
Dyken, Dichen, make dikes or ditches Dys, see Dees (2) Dyte, see Ditee
Dyversen, diversify vary Dyversitee, diversity, variety

E

Ebbe, ebb-tide, low water
Ecclesiaste, divine, minister Ech, Ich, Ych, each
Echen, eke out, increase, enlarge, add, help, aid

- Echqon, each one
Echynns, sea-urchins
Edifien, edify, build up Eek, Eke, eke, also, moreover Eem, uncle
Est, see Eten
Effect, result, effect, deed, cause, reality, in effect, in fact, in result Eft, again later
Eft-son(e)s, immediately afterwards, very soon, hereafter again
Egal, equal, also adv
Egahtee, equality, equanimity
Egaly, equably, impartially Edge, edge, sword
Eggement, instigation
Eggen, egg on, incite, instigate
Egging, instigation
Egle, eagle, used by Chaucer as a generic term covering the goshawk, falcon, sparrowhawk, and merlin Egre, sharp, bitter fierce, acid, sour, keen also adv
Egremoyne, agrimony a plant
Egren, make eager, incite Eighe, see Eye
Eighte, eight, also ordinal
Eighteteene, eighteen Eightetethe, eighteenth
Eyr, Eyr, Air, air
Eisel, vinegar
Eke, see Eek
Ekko, echo
Elaat, adj., elate
Elacion, elation
Elbowe, elbow
Elde, age old age, lapse of time
Eldefader (var Eldefather), grandfather Elden, grow old, make old Eldres, Eldren, ancestors
Eleccioun, election, choice, in astrology, choice of a favorable time See MLT, II, 312, n
Element, one of the four elements (fire, air, earth, and water), in astronomy, one of the celestial spheres
Elenge, wretched, miserable
Elengenesse, sadness
Elevacioun, elevation, in astronomy, the altitude of the pole, or of any heavenly body, above the horizon Elevat, elevated
Elf-queen, fairy queen
Ellebor, hellebore
Elles, else, otherwise, in other respects
Elongacioun, angular distance
Elvish, elvish, mysterious, elf-like, absent in demeanor, not of this world Em-, for words beginning with this prefix see also En-
Embassadour, ambassador
Embassadrye, embassy, negotiation
Embelif, oblique, acute, also adv
Embelis(sh)en, embellish
Embossed, Embossed, embossed, raised, in knitting, covered with flecks or bosses of foam, hence, exhausted
Embracen, Enbracen, embrace, surround, hold fast Embrouden, Enbrouden, embroider Embusshementz, ambushes, ambuscades Emeraude, emerald
Emforth, to the extent or measure of, according to, in proportion to Emisperre, see Hemisper(i)e Empeiren, Enpeiren, impair, injure Emperesse, Emperyce, empress Emplastren, plaster over, bedaub Emplien, enwrap
Empoysonen, poison
Emprenten, Enprienten, imprint, impress Empressen, press, impress See also Impressen
Emprise, Enprise, enterprise, undertaking, purpose, design, difficulty, value, estimation, renew, conduct privilege, rule Empten, empty, exhaust wear out En-, for words beginning with this prefix see also Em- Enbatailled, embattled
Enbaumen, embalm, cover with balm Enbyng, imbibition, absorption Embosed, see Embossed
Enbracen, see Embracen
Enbrouden, see Embrouden
Encens, incense
Encensen, offer incense, cense Enchantours, enchanters wizards Encharged, imposed, laid upon Enchaunten, enchant Enchesoun, occasion, reason, cause
Enclqs, pp., enclosed
Enclynen, incline (before), bow down (to), respect Enclyning, inclination
Encomb(e)rous, cumbrous, burdensome
Encombrun, encumber, make weary, endanger, hinder, hamper, importune, vex, annoy Encorporing, incorporation
Encrees, increase, assistance Encresen, increase, enlarge, enrich Endamagen, damage, harm, imperil, discredit, compromise Ende, end, limit, point, purpose Ended, finite
End(e)long, adv., all along, lengthwise Endelong, prep., along all along, down along Endentunge, indentation, in heraldry, notching with regular indentations Endere, ender, he who, or that which, ends Endetted, indebted Ending-day, death-day
Enditement, indictment Endlong, see End(e)long
Endouted, feared
Endyten, indict, write, compose, dictate, relate Enfamyned, starved
Enfaunce, infancy, youth
Enfecten, infect
Enforcen, enforce, strengthen, fortify, compel gain strength, endeavor Enformen, inform, instruct.

Enfortuned, endowed with a power or a quality Engendrure, engendering, procreation, progeny, fraternity Engreggen, weigh down, burden
Engreven, displease
Engyn, Engun, skill, contrivance, device, machine Engyned, tortured, racked Enhabit, pp, inhabited, hence, possessed devoted Enhansed, exalted, elevated (above the horizon) Enhaunce, Enhaunsen, exalt, raise promote Enhorten, exhort
Enlacen, entangle involve
Enlangoured, made weak or pale with langour Enlumenen, illumine
Enlutng, daubing with "lute," clay, etc
Enoynten, pp e ioynt(ed), anoint Enpeiren, see Empeiren
Enprienten, see Emprienten
Enpryse, see Empryse
Enqueren, enquire
Enqueste, inquest legal inquiry
Ensaigne, ensign, standard
Ensa(um)ple, example, pattern warning, instance, illustrative story Ensaumpler, exemplar, prototype
Enseled, sealed, confirmed by seal Enspyren, see Inspiren
Ensuren, assure
Entaile, carving, intaglio-work, figure, description
Entailen, carve
Entalenten, stimulate, excite
Entamen, cut, hence, open (a conversation, etc)
Entecchen, stam, infect, endue with qualities good or bad
Entencoun, intention, purpose, design, meaning understanding, endeavor, diligence occupation, of entencoun, intentionally Entendement, perception, intention
Entenden, Ententen, attend, give attention (to), aim, apply one's self, look intently, perceive belong, pertain Entente, intent, intention attention, design, purpose, plan, endeavor, meaning Ententyf, attentive, careful, devoted Enter-, for words beginning with this prefix see Entre- Entraille, entrails inward parts
Entrechaungen, interchange exchange, confuse, mingle Entrecomunen, intercommunicate
Entredited, interdicted
Entree, entry, entrance, access Entrelaced, interlaced, intricate Entremedien, intermingle, mix
Entremes, entremets, intermediate course (at table)
Entremet(t)en, often raff, interfere, meddle Entren, enter

Entreparten, share
Entryken, ensnare, entrap, hold fast.
Entunen, intone
Entunes, pl, tunes
Entysing, enticing allurements
Envenymen, envenom poison infect Environn, roundabout
Environnen, surround, encompass, include, go round about Envrounge, circumference surface
Envoluped, enveloped, wrapped up
Envoy, epilogue or postscript of a poem (Fr "envoi") Envye, envy, desire, longing
Envyen (1), envy
Envyen (2), vie, strive Envyned, stocked with wine Eny, see Any
Episcle, epicycle, in astronomy, a small sphere or circle the center of which moves along the circumference of a larger one
Equacioun, equation, calculation, equal division Equinoxial, equinoxial circle
Equipolence, in logic, an equivalence between two or more propositions Er, adv, formerly
Er, conj, ere, before
Er, prep, before, as in er now, er that, er tho
Erant(e), errand
Erbe, herb, erbe yve ground ivy Erber, see Herber
Erche-, arch-, as in erchebisshop, erchedeken
Ere (1), ear, at ere in (one's) ear
Ere (2), ear (of corn), spike
Eren, plough
Erk, weary, wearied
Erl, earl
Ermen, grieve be sad
Ernest (1), Ernes, ardor (of love)
Ernest (2), earnest, pledge Ernestful, serious
Erratik, wandering
Erraunt, errant stray, wandering
Erren, err, transgress wander
Erroure, error, wandering, doubt, perplexity
Ers, buttocks
Erst, first at first, before, erst than, before, dat phr at erste
Erthe, earth, land, country
Eschaufen, burn heat, grow warm Eschaunge, exchange, interchange Eschew, Eschu, averse
Eschewen, Eschu(w)en, escape, avoid, shun Ese, Eyse, ease, pleasure, delight
Esement, easement, benefit
Esen, ease, relieve, entertain, set at ease
Espace, space (of time)
Especies, species, kinds varieties
Espaille, coil spies, espionage system Espirituel, spiritual Espieten, perform, carry out Espye, spy

Espyen, espy, observe, see, inquire Essoyne, excuse
 Est, sbst and adj, east, also adv
 Estable, stable
 Establen, establish, settle Establiszen, establish Establisshing, decree
 Estat, estate, state, rank, condition
 Estatlich, Estatly, stately, dignified, in accordance with rank Estatuts, statutes, ordinances Estoryal, see Historical Estraunge, strange
 Estres, inward parts, interior
 Esy, easy, moderate, slow, gentle Eten, pt sg etē, et, pl eten, pp eten, eat Eterne, eternal, also sbst
 Ethe, Eythe, easy
 Evangyle, Evangelhe, gospel
 Evel, see Yvel
 Eve(n), evening
 Even, even, equal, exact, moderate, tranquil, also adv, evene joynant, just adjoining Evene-Cristen, fellow Christian Even(e)-lyk, similar Even-tyde, evening
 Ever(e), ever, always, evere in oon, always alike, continually, consistently Everich, each, every one, every, everich a, each Everichoon, every one
 Every-dayes, daily
 Every-deel, every bit, altogether
 Evidently, by observation
 Ew, yew-tree, also coll
 Exaltacioun, exaltation, in astrology, the position in which a planet exerts its strongest influence Exaltat, exalted
 Exametron, hexameter
 Exces, excess, extravagance of feeling Excusa(s)cioun, excuse, plea
 Executour, executor
 Executrice, executrix, causer Exercen, exercise
 Exercitacioun, exercise Existence, actuality, reality
 Exorsisacions, exorcisms
 Expans, calculated separately See FranklT, V, 1275, n Experience, experience, experiment
 Expert, expert, skilled, experienced Expoun(d)en, expound, explain
 Expres, expressed, made clear, also adv
 Expressen, express, declare, relate Extre, axle-tree
 Ey, egg
 Eye, Eighē, Ye, pl eyen yēn eye, at ye, to sight manifestly Eyed, furnished with eyes Eylen, ail
 Eyr (1), see Eir
 Eyr (2) heir
 Eyrish, aerial
 Eyse; see Ese
 Eythe; see Ethe

F

Fable, fable, tale, falsehood, deceit
 Face, face, in astrology, the third part (ten degrees) of a sign of the zodiac Facound, eloquent
 Facoude, eloquence, fluency
 Faculte(e), capacity, power, branch of study, profession, official position Fade, faded
 Fader, Feder, gen sg fader, fadres, father, parent, ancestor, origination, pl fadres, Roman senators (Lat "patres conscripti")
 Fad(o)me, fathom
 Faille, failure
 Fail(l)en, fail, grow dim, cease pp failed, a adj, lacking, defective Famen, pt famie, see Feynen
 Fair, fair good, lovely, excellent, specious Faire, fairly, well, clearly, courteously, suitably, successfully Faire, fair market
 Fair-Semblaunt, Fair-Semblance
 Fairye, see Fayerye
 Falding, coarse woolen cloth, frieze, a garment of that material Fallaces, deceits
 Fallen, pt sg fel, fil, pl fellen, fillen, pp fallen, fall, befall, happen suit, befit, belong, pass into (some condition), prosper, fil of has accord, agreed with him Falsen, falsify, deceive, betray Falshede, falsehood
 Falwe, fallow, yellow, sbst pl falwes, fallow-ground Fame, fame, renown, rumor, report, good report
 Famil(i)er, Famul(i)er, adj, familiar, intimate, affable, also sbst Fane (var Vane), Fan, vane, weather-cock, apparently used of the revolving vane or bar in the game of quintain Fanne, fan
 Fantasyk, pertaining to the fancy
 Fantasye, fancy, imagination, delight, desire Fantome, phantom, illusion, dream
 Farcen, Farsen, stuff
 Fardel, load, bundle
 Farden, pant
 Fare, fare, procedure, business, stir ado, behavior, conduct, fortune, condition, welfare Fare-cart, traveling-cart
 Faren, pt ferde, pp faren, ferd, fare, go, walk, travel, proceed, depart, vanish, behave, succeed, take place, happen, be vel-farynge, well conditioned, well appearing, handsome See FranklT, V, 932, n
 Farsen, see Farcen
 Fascoun, fashion, shape, construction
 Faste, adv, closely, tight, near, close by quickly, hard, eagerly Fastnen, Festnen, fasten, fix, plant Fatten, fatten
 Fattush, plump

Faucon, falcon
 Faught, see Fighten Faunen, fawn (on)
 Faute, fault, defect
 Fawe(n), see Fayn
 Fawnes, fauns Roman deities of fields and herds
 Fay, see Fey
 Fayerye, Faurye, company of faires, land of faires, a fairy, magic, enchantment, a magical contrivance Fayn, Feyn, Fawe(n), glad, willing, fond, also adv
 Faynt, see Feynt
 Feble, Fieble, feeble, weak
 Feblesse, weakness
 Fecche, vetch
 Fecchen, pt Jette, pp fet, fetch, bring, reach, get Feden, pt fedde, feed Feder, see Fader
 Fee, reward, pay, possession, property,ief, fee simple, unrestricted possession Feeld, field plain
 Feend, fiend, devil, foe
 Feendly, fiendish
 Feer, fear, see Feze
 Feere, company See Fere (1)
 Feeste, see Feste
 Feet, feat, performance
 Feffen, enfeoff endow, put in possession
 Fers, see Fers, adj
 Faithful, faithful, believing (Christian)
 Fel, skun
 Fel, adj, comp feller, terrible, cruel, deadly, fierce Fel, see Fallen
 Fellow, fellow, companion, comrade, good fellow, boon companion, hence (sometimes), rascal Fellow(e)s, fellowship, company, partnership Felawschipsen, accompany Feidefare, fieldfare Fele, much, many Felefolde, manifold
 Felen, feel, perceive (by other senses, as well as by touch), experience, became aware, understand by experiment, investigate
 Felenous, see Felonous Fellen, fell, cause to fall, cut down
 Fellen, see Fallen
 Felliche, Felly, severely, bitingly
 Felnesse, fierceness, cruelty
 Felonous, Felenous, wicked, fierce, violent criminal, impious Felonye, crime, wickedness, injustice, impiety, treachery Feloun, adj, fierce, cruel, evil, wicked Felthe, see Filthe
 Femele, female
 Fen, chapter, subdivision See Par&T, VI, 889, n Fenel, fennel
 Fenix, phoenix
 Fer, adj, comp ferre, ferrer, ferther, sup ferrest(e), ferthest, far, also adv

Ferd(e), see Faren
 Ferd(e) (perhaps pp of feren used as sbst), fear, dat phr for ferde
 Fere, Feer, fear, terror, panic
 Fere (1), companion mate wife
 Fere (2), dat of feer, Kentish form of fyre, fire Fered, Kentish for fyred, fired, enflamed Feren, frighten, terrify
 Ferforth, far, as ferforth as as far as, as long as, exactly as if, to such a degree Ferforthly, completely, thoroughly, to such an extent Ferly, strange
 Fermacies, medicines
 Ferme, sbst, rent
 Ferme, firm, durable
 Ferren, confirm, make firm
 Fermerer, friar in charge of an infirmary
 Fermour, farmer of taxes
 Fern, adj, remote, distant, past, of ferne yere, of last year
 Fern, adv, long ago
 Ferre, Ferrer, Ferrest(e), see Fer
 Fers, queen (at chess), pl ferses, the chessmen Fers, Ferss, Fiers, adj, fierce Ferste, see Furste
 Ferthe, fourth
 Ferther, Ferthest, see Fer
 Ferther-over, moreover Ferthing, farthing, bit, small gift
 Fery, fiery
 Fesaunt, pheasant
 Fest, Kentish for fist
 Feste, feast, merriment; feeste maketh, pays court honors shows favor, have feeste of, delight in Festen, feast
 Festeynge, feasting, entertaining
 Festlich, festive, convivial
 Festnen, see Fastnen Fet, see Fecchen
 Fether, feather, wing
 Fethered, provided with feathers or wings Fetheren, tread (as a cock)
 Fette, see Fecchen
 Fetys, well-made, neat graceful, handsome Fevere, fever fevere terciane, intermittent fever, blanchche fevere, white fever Fewe, sbst and adj, few, not many, used, as in Mod Eng, with the article, a fewe welles, a wordes fewe
 Fey, Fay, faith, par ma fay, by my faith
 Feyn, see Fayn
 Feynen, Feignen, Faynen, pt feyned, feymte, feign, pretend dissimulate, sometimes refl Feynt, Faynt, adj, feigned Feynten, faint, weaken, enfeeble Feyntyse, deceit, guile
 Fiance, trust, confidence
 Ficchen, fix
 Fieble, see Feble
 Fiers, see Fers, adj
 Fifte, fifth
 Fige, fig fig-tree
 Fighten contr pr 3 sg fight, pt. sg faught, pp fo(u)ghuen, fight

- Figure, figure, shape, form, marking, appearance, figure of speech Figures, signify, symbolize Figuringe, form, similitude, figure Fikelnesse, fickleness
 Fil, see Fallen
 Filet, fillet, headband
 Fille, fill, sufficiency
 Fillen, see Fallen
 Filthe, Feithe, filth, shame, disgrace
 Finden, contr pr 3 sg find, pt sg found, pl, pp founden, find, discover, invent, provide provide for, in hunting, discover the game after it has begun to run
 Finding, provision
 Fined, refined, delicately made Fint, see Finden
 Firre, fir-tree
 Firste, Ferste, adj , first, with the firste, very soon Fit (1), canto, "passus"
 Fit (2), dangerous or exciting situation or experience, mood, feeling, bout, turn, spell Firthele, fiddle
 Fix, adj from pp, fixed, solidified, pl fixe, fixes (sterres) Flatour, flatterer
 Flaugh, see Fleen (1)
 Fla(um)be, Flawme, flame
 Flawnes, flaws, "a dish composed of new cheese, eggs, powdered sugar, colored with saffron and baked in small tins called 'coffins'" (Skeat)
 Flayn, see Fleen (3)
 Fled(de), see Fleen (2)
 Flee, pl fleen, flea Fleen (1), pt sg flaugh, fleugh, fley, fy, pl flouwen flyen, pp flou(e)n, fy Fleen (2), pt sg fleugh, fledde pp fled, flee, escape Fleen (3), pp flayn, flay
 Flees, fleece
 Fleet, see Fleten
 Fleigh, see Fleen (1) and (2)
 Flekked, flecked, spotted Flemen, banish
 Flemere, banisher, one who puts to flight
 Fleshly, adv, carnally
 Fleten, contr pr 3 sg fleet, float, bathe, flow, spread abroad, abound Flex, flex
 Fley, see Fleen (1)
 Fight, fight, dat phr to floghie
 Flikeren, flutter Flitten, flit, shift, pass away, flittinge, fleeing Flig, arrow
 Flokmele, in a flock or troop, in crowds
 Flood, flood-tide
 Floor, floor domain
 Floron, floret, petal
 Floteren, flutter, waver, fluctuate Flotery, waving, fluttering
 Flour, flower, choice part, supreme beauty or excellence, flourishing time, flour Flouren, flourish, bloom
 Flourette, floweret, bud
 Floury, flowery
 Flow(e)n, see Fleen (1)
 Flowte, Floyte, flute
 Flowtour, flute-player
 Floytyng, playing on the flute (?), whistling (?)
 Fly, see Fleen (1)
 Flye, fly
 Flyen, see Fleen (1)
 Fnesen, puff, snort
 Fo, pl foen, fees, foe
 Fode, food
 Foghten, see Fighten
 Foisoun, plenty, abundance
 Folde, fold, sheepfold
 Foled, foaled
 Folly, foolishly, idly
 Fol(o)wen, follow, imitate
 Foly, foolish, also adv
 Folye, folly, foolishness, silly thing, wantonness, dissipation Folyen, act foolishly
 Fomen, foe-men
 Fomy, foamy
 Fond, foolish
 Fond, see Finden
 Fonden, try, endeavor, attempt to persuade Fongen, receive
 Fonne, fool (Northern dial)
 Fool, fool, jester also adj Fool-large, foolishly generous Foom, foam
 Foon, see Fo
 Foore, path, track, trace of steps
 Foot, Fote, pl feet, foot, dat phrases to rote, to fete (pl), etc, extended use half a fote thikke
 Footen, dance
 Foot-hoet, "hot-foot" instantly
 Foot-mantel, foot-cloth, to wear over the skirt in riding
 For, for, in regard to, because of, for the sake of, against, to prevent, in spite of, knew for subtil knew to be subtle, for old mad, etc, because of age, madness, etc See Kn T, I, 2142, n
 Forage, fodder, food, winter-food
 Forbeden, contr pr 3 sg forbet, pt forbad, forbed, pp forbøden, forbid Forberen, pt sg forbar, bear, endure, forbear, forgive, disregard, spare, abstain, let alone
 Forbisen, instruct by examples
 Forblak (?), extremely black (?) See Kn T, I, 2142, n Forbøde, prohibition
 Forbøden, see Forbeden
 Forbrøken, pt sg forbrak, break off, interrupt Forbrused, badly bruised
 Forby, by, past
 Forcracchen, scratch severely
 Forcuten, cut to pieces
 Fordoon, pt fordide, pp fordoon, destroy, kill overcome Fordriven, driven about, scattered Fordronken (?), very drunken (?), in some

- places doubtless to be read for drunken.
See Mull Prol, I, 3120, n
- Fordrye (?), very dry (?) See SqT, V, 409, n
- Fordwyned, shrunken
- Forehed, Fornehed, Foreheved, forehead
- For(e)ward, promise, agreement
- For(e)wards, adv, forwards
- Foreyn, outer, exterior, extraneous
- Foreyne, sbst, "chambre foreyne," privy
- Forfare, perish
- Forfered, pp of forferen, afraid, terrified
Sometimes hard to distinguish from forfered, because afraid, or forferde from fear
See SqT, V, 527, n, also Ferd(e), sbst
- Forfeten, forfeit, do wrong
- For-fyn (?), very ingenious (?) See Tr, I, 477, n
- Forgaf, see Foryeven
- Forgat, see Foryeten
- Forge, pp, exhausted with walking (?) See HF, 115, n
- Forgon, pt foryede, pp forgon, forego, give up, lose
- Forgyft, forgiveness
- Fornehed, see Forhed
- For-hoor, very hoar (?) But see Rom, 356, n
- Forkerven, cut in pieces See Kerven
- Forlaft, see Forleven
- Forlesen, pp, forloren, lose
- Iorleten, pp forleten, leave, abandon, forsake, yield up, cease
- Forleven, pp forlaft, abandon, forsake
- Forliven, vb, degenerate, pp, forlived, ignoble, degenerate
- Forlong, see Furlong
- Forlor, see Forlesen
- Forlost, utterly lost
- Forloyn, signal that the dogs are far off from the game hence, a recall from the hunt
- Forme, Fourme, form, formality, lair (of a hare)
- Forme-fader, first father, forefather
- Formel, companion, mate (of a bird)
- Former, Maker Creator
- Formest, first, foremost
- Forn-cast, premeditated foreordained
- Forneys, Fournes, furnace
- For-ofte, very often
- For-old (?), very old (?) See KnT I, 2142, n
- Forpampred, exceedingly pampered
- Forpeyned, distressed
- Forpynd, tormented, wasted by torture or suffering
- Fors, Force, force, importance consequence no fors, no matter, do no fors, care not what fors, what matter
- Forsaken, pt sg forsook, pp forsaken, forsake, leave, deny, refuse, withstand
- Forseid, aforesaid
- Forshapen, transformed
- Forshrigt, exhausted with shrieking (but possibly to be read for shrught)
- Forslewten, waste idly
- Forslewthen, waste by sloth
- Forsluggen, spoil, allow to spoil
- Forsongen, exhausted by singing
- Forsothe, dat phr, forsooth, verily
- Forster, forester, game-keeper
- Forstraught, distracted
- Forswæren, pt sg forswor pp forsworen, forswear, swear falsely, sometimes refl
- Fortened, destroyed (?) obstructed (?)
- Forth, Furth, forth, further, forward out, still, continually tho forth, henceforth
- Forthinken, see Forthinken
- Forther, Further, further, more forward
- Forth(e)ren, Furth(e)ren, further advance, help, assist
- Forther-moor, furthermore, moreover
- Forther-over, furthermore, moreover
- Forthinken, pt forihoghle, displease, seem wrong or unfortunate, regret
- Forthright, straightforwardly
- Forthward, forwards
- Forthwith, also, therewith
- Forthy, therefore, for that reason, no(gh)t forthy, nevertheless
- For to, prep, with inf, to in order to, for to dye, though one were to die See KnT, I, 1133, n
- Fortræden, pp, fortroden, tread down, trample upon
- Fortut, fortuitous
- Fortunel, accidental
- Fortunen, happen befall, render fortunate, interpret favorably, in astrology, to choose a fortunate combination of influences See Gen Prol I, 417, n
- Fortunous, fortuitous
- Forwaked exhausted with watching
- Forwandred, spent with wandering
- Forward, foremost
- Forward, sbst see For(e)ward
- Forwelked, withered, wrinkled
- Forweped, exhausted with weeping
- Forwered, worn out
- Forwerreyd, put down in battle, defeated
- Forwery (?), very weary (?) See PF, 93, n
- Forwe, see Furwe
- Forwhy, therefore, why because
- Forwiten, pt pr forwo(gh)t foreknow
- Forwiting, foreknowledge
- Forwo(gh)t, see Forwiten
- Forwounded, severely wounded
- Forwrapped, wrapped up, covered
- Foryaf, see Foryeven
- Foryat, see Foryeten
- Foryede, see Forgon
- Foryelden, yield in return repay, reward
- Foryeteinesse, forgetfulness
- Foryeten, Forgeten, contr pr 3 sg foryet, forjet, pt foryat, fogat, pp foryeten, forjeten, forget
- Foryeven, pt sg foryaf, forgaf pl foryeten, pp forywen, forgive
- Fostren, foster, bring up, nourish, feed, cherish
- Fote, see Foot
- Fote-bræde, foot-breadth
- Fother, load, large quantity
- Foudre, thunder-bolt
- Foul, Fow(e)l, sbst bird
- Foul, adj, foul, vile, filthy, wretched, ugly, disgraceful

Foule, dav, foully, wickedly, disgracefully, meanly, hideously Foun, young deer of first year, for metaphorical use, see Tr, i 465, n Fondement, foundation
 Founden (1), see Fonden Founden (2), found, establish Foure, four Fourmed, formed, shaped
 Fournays, see Forneys
 Fow(e)l, see Foul Foynen, thrust, parry
 Fraknes, freckles
 Franchise, liberty, privilege, nobleness, bounty, generosity, frankness Frank, franc (French coin)
 Frankeleyn, franklin
 Frape, troop company, pack
 Fraten, see Freten
 Fraught, pp, freighted
 Fraynen, see Freynen
 Free, free, noble, generous, liberal, lavish, gracious Freedom, freedom, liberahy
 Freÿle, frail, fragile, transitory Freund, pl friends and (perhaps) friend, friend Freÿlete, frailty
 Frem(e)de, strange, foreign, wild Fren-des, see Freund
 Frenesy, frenzy madness
 Frenetik, frantic
 Frenge, fringe, border
 Frere, friar
 Fresen, freeze
 Fressh (and perhaps fresshe), fresh, bright, lively, bold Fresshe, adv, freshly, newly Fresshen, refresh
 Fret, ornament
 Freten, contr pr 3 sg frēt, pt pl frēten, fraten, pp frēten, eat, devour, consume, swallow up Fretted, Fret(t), decorated set Freynen, Fraynen, ask, inquire Fro, from
 From, conj, from the time when Fröten, rub
 Fröthen, froth, become covered with foam
 Frounce, wrinkle
 Frounces, pp frouncēd, wrinkle, show wrinkles Frownt, front countenance
 Fructfyen, be fruitful
 Fructuous, fruitful
 Fruit, Frut, fruit essence, result Frutestere, fruit-seller (properly fem)
 Fulfillen, fulfill, fill full, satiate, satisfy, complete, perform Fulliche, fully Fulsomnesse, fulness abundance, excess Fume, vapor
 Fumetere, fumitory
 Fumositee, vaporous humor (arising from the stomach)
 Fundement, foundation, fundament
 Fural, furious, tormenting

Furlong, furlong, short distance, race-course, brief period of time Furre, fur
 Furred, trimmed with fur
 Furring, trimming of fur
 Furth, see Forth
 Furth(e)ren, see Forth(e)ren
 Further-over, see Forther-over Furwe, Forwe, furrow
 Furye, fury (the monster), rage
 Fusible, susceptible of being fused
 Fustian, fustian, thick cotton cloth
 Futures, sbst pl, future events or times Fyf, Fyve, five
 Fyle, file
 Fyn, end, aim, result, death
 Fyn, fine, refined, delicate, superior, excellent pure, absolute, of fyne force, from sheer need, necessity
 Fynch, finch, pulle a fynch, see Gen Prol, I, 652, n Fyne, adv, finely, closely, excellently Fynen, finish, end, cease
 Fynt, see Finden
 Fyr, fire, dat phr on fyre, a-fyre, fur of Seint Antony, erysipelas Fysicien, physician
 Fyve, see Fyf

G

Gabben, mock, he speak idly, boast Gabbyng, lying Gadeling, vagabond, idle fellow
 Gad(e)ren, gather
 Gad(e)ring, gathering, accumulation
 Gaillard, Gaylard, gay, joyous, merry
 Galaxye, the Galaxy, Milky Way
 Galen, sing, cry out, exclaim Galentyne, galantine, a sauce
 Gahngale, a flavor prepared from sweet cyperus Galiones, medicines See Words of Host, VI, 306, n Galle (1), gall, metaphorically, envy
 Galle (2), sore spot
 Galoche, shoe
 Galon, gallon
 Galpen, gape
 Galwes, gallows
 Game(n), pl games, game, sport, fun, amusement, joke, jest, contest Gamen, impers vb, please Gan, see Ginnen
 Ganen, yawn
 Gapen, Capen, gape, open the mouth, gasp, stare Gapinges, greedy desires Gappe, gap
 Gargat, throat
 Gansoun, defense, deliverance, healing garrison Garleek, garlic
 Garnement, garment
 Garner, Gerner, garner, granary
 Garnisoun, defense, garrison See also Gansoun

- Gas, Northern dial for gooth
 Gasty, terrible
 Gastnesse, terror
 Gat, see Geten
 Gate (1), gate, door See also Yate
 Gate (2), way, wise See also Algate(s), Othergate
 Gat-tothed, with teeth set wide apart See
Gen Prol, I, 468, n
 Gaudé, trick, prank, pretense, toy, gaud
 Gaudé, dyed with weld
 Gauded, furnished with gauds, i e., beads
 See Gen Prol, I, 159, n
 Gauren, gaze, stare
 Gay, joyous, merry, wanton, bright, lively, showily dressed
 Gaye, gayly, finely
 Gaynen, Geynen, gam, profit, avail Gaylard, see Gaillard
 Gayler(e), jailer Gaytres beryis, berries of the gay-tree or gait-tree, or dogwood Geaunt, giant
 Gebet, gibbet
 Geen, pp of goon (Northern dial)
 Geery, changeable See Geře (2) Gees, see Goos
 Geesten, tell a tale, a ge te, used perhaps with reference to metrical form in Pars Prol, X, 43, see n
 Geeth, see Goon
 Gemme, gem
 Gendres, kinds
 General, general, liberal, broad, in general, generally, universally, in a company Generally, everywhere, as a general principle
 Gent, refined, exquisite, genteel, slender, graceful
 Gent(e)rye, gentility, nobility, rank mark of good birth
 Gentl, adj, gentle of birth or character noble, excellent, worthy, well-bred, charming, mild, tender, also sbst Gentlesse, gentleness of birth or character nobility, courtesy, high breeding, delicacy, slenderness
 Geomance, divination by figures made, commonly, on the ground See KnT, I, 2045 n Geometriens, geometricians Gerdonen, see Guerdonen
 Gerdoun, guerdon
 Geře, (1) equipment apparel, gear, armor, utensils contrivance property Geře (2), change, changeful manner, vacillation (Perhaps the e is close in Gere, Gerful, etc)
 Gerful, changeable
 Gerl, gurl, young person of either sex
 Gerland, Gerlond, garland Gerner, see Garner
 Gesse, guess, doubt Gessen, guess, suppose imagine, judge of Gessing, opinion, estimation Gest, guest
 Geste, occurrence, exploit history, tale, romance, romance-form, perhaps with special reference to alliteration See Prol Mel,
 VII, 933, n
 Gestours, Gestours, story-tellers Get, see Jet
 Geten, contr pr 3 sg get pt sg gat, pp geten, get, obtain, beget Geven, see Yeven
 Geyn, gam, profit
 Geynen, see Gaynen
 Gif, if (Northern dial)
 Giggis, quick movements Gigginge, fitting the arm-strap (Fr "guge") to a shield
 Gilde(n), of gold golden Giler, see Gylour
 Gilt, guilt, sin
 Gilt, adj, gilt golden Gilt(e)legs, guiltless
 Giltif, guilty
 Gin, device, contrivance, engine of war, trap, snare
 Gingen, jungle
 Ginnen, pt sg gan, pl, pp gonnen, gunnen, begin, undertake, also as mere auxiliary for past time (= did) Gipsar, purse, pouch, game-bag Girdel, girdle, in astronomy, central line or great circle
 Girden, contr pr 3 sg girt, pp girt, strike, pierce
 Girdistgde, waist
 Gurl, see Gerl
 Gisarme, a weapon battle-ax or halberd
 Giste, stage of a journey See Tr II 1349, n Giterne, cittern guitar
 Giternen, play on the guitar Gladen, gladden, cheer, comfort, console, rejoice
 Gladere, gladdener
 Gladly, gladly willingly fain by preference, commonly as a general rule See NPT,
 VII, 3224, n
 Glaren, glusten, shine stare Glasen, glaze, furnish with glass, glase his houwe, give him a glass cap, a useless defense See MkT, VII, 2372, n
 Glede, live coal
 Gledy, glowing, burning (as a coal)
 Glee, music, entertainment, instrument
 Gleem, gleam
 Glenten, glance
 Gleyre, white (of an egg)
 Gliden, see Glyden
 Glhwen, glue, fasten Glood, see Glyden
 Glöse, gloss, marginal explanation, comment, exposition
 Glösen, interpret, explain, comment upon, flatter, cajole,
 Glotony, gluttony
 Glotoun, glutton
 Glowmben, look glum scowl frown Glyden, pt sg glodd pp ghden, glide, slip;
 pass, rise
 Glymsyng, glimpse, imperfect view
 Gnawen, pt sg gnaw, gnaw, eat Gnede, stingy person

- Gnodden, rub
Gnof, churl, lout, thief
Gnow, see Gnawen
Gobet, piece, fragment, lump Godhede, godhead, divinity
Godihede, see Goodihede(e) Godsib, see Gossib
Gold-bete, gilt, adorned with beaten gold, embroidered with gold See KnT, I, 979, n Gold-hewen, cut or hewn out of gold Goldlees, without money
Golee, gabble (lit 'throatful')
Golet, gullet, throat
Golardeys, jester, buffoon See Gen Prol, I, 560, n Gomme, gum
Gonfanoun, gonfanon, gonfalon, banner Gong, privy
Gonne, gun, cannon
Gonnan, see Ginnen
Good, sbst, property, wealth, goods, benefit, advantage, dat phr to gode, etc, can his good, knows his advantage, how to act or succeed, etc See ML Epil, II, 1169, n
Good, adj, good, dat phr for gode
Goodlich, kindly, bountiful
Goodihede(e), goodness, seemliness, beauty
Good-man, master, householder
Gooides, marigolds
Goon, pr 3 sg gooth, geeth, gas (Northern), pp gon, go, move, proceed, walk, roam, out gooth, goes off, is discharged (of a gun) See also Wenden and Yede
Gopre, gore or piece of a garment also the whole garment Goos, pl gees, goose
Goosish, goose-like, silly
Gooqt, spirit, ghost, soul, mind
Goot, goat
Gorge, throat
Goshawk, goshawk
Gossib, Godsib, fellow sponsor in baptism, spiritual relative, intimate friend Gossomer, gossamer
Gostly, spiritually, mystically, devoutly, truly See Tr, v, 1030, n Goter, gutter
Goune, Gowne, gown
Gourde, gourd
Goute, gout
Gouvealle, mastery, control
Gouvernaunce, government, rule, control, subjection, management, care, self-control, demeanor Governeresse, female governor, ruler, mistress
Grace, rarely Gras favor, grace, mercy, pardon, honor distinction, graces, thanks, harde grace, sory grace, ill favor, disfavor, severity, misfortune, etc (often in imprecations)
Gracious, gracious, agreeable, acceptable Grathen, see Greythen
Grame, anger, grief, harm
Grange, granary, barn
Granteu, grant, consent, fix, settle upon Grant mercy, Gramercy, much thanks Grapnel, grapnel
Gras (1), Gres, grass
Gras (2), see Grace
Graspen, grope
Grauge, Grault, etc, see Grange, Grant, etc Grave, grave, pit
Gravel, gravel, pl gravelis, sands
Graven, pp graven, dig, bury, engrave Grayn, Greyn, gram, corn, grain (of paradise), cardamom, pearl, dye (made of the cochineal grain), in grayn, of a fast color Graythen, see Greythen
Grece, Græsse, grease
Gree (1), favor, good will Gree (2), degree, rank, supremacy
Greef, grievance
Greæt, comp gretter, sup grettest, great, chief, principal, the grete, the chief or essential part Grehound, greyhound Greithen, see Greythen
Grene, green, fresh, vigorous, flourishing, palld Grenehede, greenness, wantonness Grennyng, grinning
Gres, see Gras (1)
Greten (1), greet
Greten (2) lament (Northern dial)
Gretter, Grættest, see Greæt
Grève, brushwood, pl branches, thicket
Greven, grieve, vex, harm, aggrieve Greyn, see Grayn
Greythen, Greithen, Graythen, prepare, make ready, dress, clothe, adorn Grifphon, griffin
Grinden, contr pr 3 sg grint, pt sg grond, pp grunden, grind Grinding, toll for grinding
Grinten, pt grynt(e), gnash (with the teeth)
Grisel, gray-haired old man
Gris(e)ly, terrible, awful, horrible Gröbben, grub dig Groff, see Gruf
Gronen, grumble, complain
Grome, man
Grond, see Grinden
Gropen, grope, try, test, search out Grot, particle, bit
Grote, groat (Dutch com)
Ground, ground, foundation, texture (of cloth), dat phr to grounde Growen, pt sg grew, growed, str pp growen, grow Groyn (1), snout (of swine)
Groyn (2), murmur, complaint Grucchen, grumble, murmur at Gruf, face downward, groveling Gruwel, gruel
Gryl, hobble
Grynt(e), see Grinten
Gryntyge, gnashing (of teeth)
Grypen, seize, grasp Grys, sbst, a costly gray fur
Grys, adj, gray
Guerdonen, Gwerdonen, Gerdonen, reward

Gunnen, see Ginnen
 Gyde, gude
 Gyden, gude, direct, conduct, instruct, govern
 Gyderesse, conductress
 Gyen, gude direct, control, govern
 Gyle, gule decent, trick
 Gylour, Galer, beguiler, deceiver, trickster Gyngbreæd, gingerbread
 Gype, frock, smock
 Gypoun, tunic (worn under the hauberk)
 Gyse, guse, manner, way, plan
 Gyser, gizzard, liver
 Gyte, apparently dress, gown, or mantle, whereas OF "guite" meant hat (Godefroi, s v)

H

Ha, contr form of Have Haberdasshere, seller of hats and miscellaneous small wares Habergeoun, Haubergeoun, hauberk, coat of mail Habit, habit, disposition, mood, bodily condition, practice, dress, religious garb Habitable, habitable space, niche
 Hab(o)undaunt, abundant, abounding Habunden, abound
 Habyten, inhabit
 Hacches, hatches
 Had(d)e, see Haven
 Haf, see Haven
 Hainseln, short jacket
 Hare, see Heyre
 Hakeney, hackney, horse used for ordinary riding or hauling, an old horse Halden, Northern form of Hoiden Halen, draw, pull, attract Half, sbst, pl halves, side, part, behalf, a Goddess half in God's name (adjuration) Half, adj, wk and pl halfe, halve, half, halve cours, half-course, halvendel, half (part)
 Half-goddes, Halve goddes, demi-gods
 Halke, corner, nook, hiding-place
 Halle, hall dining-hall, parlor
 Halowen, halloo, set on the dogs with the halloo Halp, see Helpen
 Hals, neck, throat
 Halsen, conjure, implore
 Halt, see Halten and Hoiden Halten, contr pr 3 sg hall, halt, lmp, go lame
 Halve goddes, see Half-goddes Halve(s), see Half, sbst and adj
 Halvendel, see Half, adj
 Halwe, saint, halwes, shrines or relics Halwen, hallow consecrate
 Halyday, holy day, religious feast day, holiday (The combined and uncombined forms were freely confused in early English)
 Ham, Northern dial for Hoqm
 Hameled, mutilated, lamed See Tr, II, 964, n
 Hamer, hammer
 Hampred, hampered, burdened

Han, see Haven
 Handbræde, hand's breadth
 Handwerk, handiwork created things
 Hangen, Hongen, pt sg heng, pl hengen, pp hanged, hang, hang down linger Hap, chance, luck good fortune, occurrence Happen, happen, befall Happenen, happen
 Happy, fortunate
 Hard, Herd, hard difficult, callous cruel, of hard, with difficulty, herd-hered, hard-hearted Harde, tightly, firmly
 Hardely, Hardily, boldly, certainly surely, without hesitation Hardiment, Hardement, boldness
 Hardinesse, boldness, fool-hardiness, insolence Hardnesse, hardship, cruelty, affliction Hardy, bold, brave, rash, sturdy Hardyng, hardening, tempering
 Harlot (common gender), low fellow, rascal, thief Harlotrye, low or evil conduct, wickedness, ribaldry Harm, hurt, injury, grief, suffering, misfortune, broken harm, petty injury or annoyance (?) See MerchT, IV, 1425, n Harneised, equipped, armed mounted Harneys, Herneys, armor, outfit equipment, provision, privy members, plough harneys, plough fittings Harpe, harp
 Harpour, harper
 Harre, hinge
 Harrow', help', a cry of distress
 Harwen, harry, despoil
 Haryen, drag, pull violently
 Hasard, hazard, a game of dice
 Hasardour, player at hazard, gamester Hasardrye, playing at hazard, gaming Hasel, hazel, haselwodes shaken, a proverbial phrase for what is obvious, no news See Tr II, 890, n Haspe, hasp
 Hastif, hasty
 Hastow, hast thou
 Hat, hot (Northern form)
 Hatzen, see Hotten
 Hatrede, hatred
 Hatte, see Hotten
 Hatter, see Hoot
 Haubergeoun, see Habergeoun
 Hauberk, armor for breast and back, mail plates Haunche-boon, thigh-bone, haunch-bone
 Haut, abode, 'lmit' practice, skill Haunten, practice, be accustomed to, employ, resort to, frequent Hauteyn, haughty proud, arrogant loud Haven, Han, pt had(d)e, pp had, have, hold, keep, possess, take, obtain hath, impers; there is (Fr "y a"), hadde lever, had rather, would rather Havinge, possession
 Havor, having, possession
 Hawe (1), haw, hedge, yard.

Hawe (2), perhaps the same word as Hawe (1), haw, fruit of the hawthorn, hawe-bake, baked haws

Hay, hedge

Hayt, Heyt, get up! (in urging on a horse)

He, gen sg his, dat him, pl they, gen hwe dat hem, he, he he, thus one that one, hwm Arcute, that Arcute See KnT, I, 1210, n On his as substitute for the genitive ending of a noun (Mars his venum) see LGW, 2593, n

Hed, see Hyden

Hede, heed

-hede, less often -heed, abstract suffix, equivalent to -hood, as in wommanhede, youthhede, etc

Heden, head, provide with a head

Hēd, Hēved, head, source, beginning, maugree hwr hēd, in spite of all she could do, dat phr for hwr hede (?)

Hē(e)f, see Heven

Hēld, see Hōlden

Hēlp, see Helpen

Hēpp, heap, large quantity, crowd, host, dat phr to-hepe, all together

Hēer, hair

Heer, Here, here

Heer-agayns, against this

Heer-biforn, before this

Heerdis, 'hards,' coarse flax

Heer-forth, in this direction

Hēer-mele, a hair's breadth

Hēet, see Hete

Hēet, see Hōten

Hēth, heath, heather

Hegge, hedge

Heigh, Hey, Hy, high, in heigh and lowe, in high things and low, in all respects (see Gen Prol, I, 817, n), an heigh, on high

Heighe, Hye, adv, high, on high, loudly, proudly

Heighly, highly, deeply

Heighte, Highte, height

Heiden, bend, incline

Helden, see Hōlden

Helden, see Hielden

Hele, heel

Hele, health, recovery, prosperity

Hēleles, out of health

Hēlen (1), pp heled, conceal

Hēlen (2), pp heled, heal

Helle, hell

Helm, helmet

Helmed, equipped with a helmet

Helpe, helper, assistant

Helpen, pt sg halp, hēlp, pp, holpen, help, aid, heal, cure

Helpy, helpful

Hem, border, phylactery

Hemisper(1)e, hemisphere

Hend(e), ready to hand, convenient, handy, pleasant, courteous, gentle

Heng(en), see Hangen

Henne(s), hence

Henten, contr pr 3 sg hent, pl hente, pp, hent, seize, obtain, catch, get

Hentere, filcher

Hepe, hip of the dog-rose

Hepen, heap, accumulate, augment

Heraud, herald

Herauden, proclaim like a herald

Herbe, Erbe, herb

Herber, garden, arbor

Herbergage, abode, lodging

Herbergeour, Herberger, provider of lodgings, host, harbinger

Herberw(e), lodging, dwelling, inn, harbor

Herber(w)en, take shelter or harbor, lodge

Herby, hereby, with respect to this, hence

Herd (1), see Hard

Herd (2), haired

Herde (1), herd

Herde (2), Hierde, herdsman, shepherd

Herd(e), see Heren

Herde-gromes, herdsman

Herdesse, Hierdesse, shepherdess, proctress

Her(e) (1), Hir(e), her (pers pron)

Her(e) (2), Hir(e), her (poss pron)

Her(e) (3), Hir(e), their (poss pron)

Here-agayns, -ayeins, against this, in reply to this

Here and howne, explanation doubtful See Tr, iv, 210, n

Her(e)myte, hermit

Heren (also close ē), pt herde, pp herd, hear

Heren, praise, honor, worship

Herken, hearken

Herknen, hearken

Herne, corner

Herneys, see Harneys

Heroner, falcon for herons, also adj

Heronsew, heron-shaw, young heron

Herse, hearse

Hert, hart

Herte, gen sg hertes, herte, heart, courage, beloved, herte roote, root (bottom) of the heart

Hert(e)ly, heartfelt, hearty, of true heart

Herten, see Hurten

Herte-spoon, the spoon-shaped depression at the end of the breast-bone

Herynge, praising, praise

Heste, behest, command, promise

Het, pp, heated

Hete, heat, boiling surge, passion

Hēten, see Hōten

Heterly, violently, fiercely

Hēthen, heathen

Hethen, hence (Northern dial)

Hēthenesse, heathendom

Hēthyng, contempt

Hette, see Hōten

Hēved, see Hēd

Heven, pt sg haf, hē(e)f, hēved, heave, lift

Heven(e), gen sg hevenes, hevene, heaven, one of the spheres, metaphorically for joy or glory

Hevenys(s)h, heavenly

Hevy, heavy, sad, difficult

Hevyen, weigh down, make heavy

Hevynesse, heaviness, sorrow, slowness, torpor, indolence

Hewe (1), Huwe, hue, complexion, appearance, pretense

Hewe (2), domestic servant
Hewed, hued, colored Hewen, hew, cut
Hey, hay, grass
Hey, comp Heyer, etc., see Heigh
Heyen, rise
Heyne, wretch
Heyre, Haire, hair-shirt, also adj Heysoge, hedge-sparrow
Heyt, see Hayt
Hid(de), see Hyden
Hider, hither
Hidous, hideous, terrible, ugly
Hielden, Helden, pour out, shed
Hierde, see Herde (2) Hierdesse, see Herdesse
Hight(e), see Hoten
Highte, see Heights
Highten, adorn, delight
Hil (perhaps Hille), hill
Hindrest, hindmost
Hir(e), see Her(e), in various meanings Hires, hers
Hirnia, hernia
Hirs, theirs
His, his, its sometimes used with gen of proper name, Mars his, often pluralized (huse) in the MSS Historal, Estroyal, historical Hit, it Hit, see Hyden
Ho, interj stop! hold!, also subst Hochepot, hotchpotch, mixture Hoked, hooked barbed Hoker, scorn disdain
Hokerly, scornfully
Hold, hold, grasp, possession, stronghold castle
Holden, contr pr 3 sg halt, holt pt sg heed pl helden, pp holden, hold, keep, continue, remain firm, restrain, esteem deem account holden in honde cajole, put off with promises See HF, 692, n
Hole, hole
Holnesse, holness sanctity, religious form or sect Holly, Hoolly, wholly Holm, holm-oak, evergreen oak Holnesse, integrity
Holour, lecher, adulterer, ribald Holpen, see Helpen
Holsom, wholesome, healing
Holsomnesse, health
Holt, see Holden
Holt, plantation
Holughnesse, concavity
Holwe, adj hollow, also adv
Homager, vassal
Hommen, hum
Homycide, murderer, murder, manslaughter
Hond, hand, dat phr on (in) honde beren on honde, accuse, testify against, assure persuade, holden in honde, cajole put off with false promises or hopes See Beren, Holden
Honest, honorable, worthy, decent respectable, appropriate to persons of standing

Honestee, honor, virtue (of a woman), good or honorable character, rank, dignity Honestete, honor, modesty, neatness Hongen, see Hangen
Hony, honey, a term of endearment
Hony-comb, honeycomb, used also as a term of endearment Hook, hook, sickle, crozier
Hoql, adj, whole, sound, in health, unwounded, perfect, entire, also adv
Hoqm, home, also adv, home, homewards Hoqmnesse, domesticity, familiarity
Hoqmly, belonging to house or home familiar, informal native Hoqr, hoary white-haired Hoost, host, army
Hoqt, comp hotter, hatter, hot, fervent, violent, voracious Hoopen, hope, expect, suppose, think, sometimes transitive Hoper, hopper
Hoopen, hop, dance
Hoppesteres, dancing-girls, used as adj, shyppes hoppesteres See KnT, I, 2017, n
Hoord, hoard, store, store-house, avarice Horn-pipes, pipes made of horn
Horowe, adj pl, foul filthy scandalous
Hors, pl hors, dat phr on horse, horse, a name for a wedge on an astrolabe Hors, adj, hoarse
Horsly, horse-like, with the qualities of an excellent horse
Hose, pl hosen, hoses, hose, covering for feet and legs Hospitalers, Knights Hospitaliers
Host(e), Qst(e), host, innkeeper Hostel, hostelry
Hostesse, Q(q)stesse, hostess
Hostiler, innkeeper, servant at an inn
Hote, adv, hotly
Hoten, Haten, Heten, pt heet hatte hette, hughte, pp hoten, hught command, promise, most commonly used in the passive sense of AS "hatte," be called, named Hotte, basket carried on the back Hound, dog
Houndfish, dogfish
Hoopen, whoop
Hour (var Oure), hour
Hous, house, in astronomy, the "mansion" of a planet (a sign of the zodiac), or a division of the celestial sphere See MLT, II, 295 n
Housbonde, husband
Housbondrye, household goods, economy, economical use (of) Hous(e)len, house adminster the eucharist (to) Hovent, hover, abide linger about wait in readiness How, adv, how how that, however it be that How, interj, ho!
Howne, unexplained word See Tr iv, 210, n
Howve, hood, sette his howve, make a fool of him See Gen Prol, I 536 n Hulstred, covered, hidden, concealed Humb(e)ly, Humblely, humbly

Humblesse, humility, meekness
Humblynge, humming, low murmur or growl Hunte, hunter, huntsman
Hunteresse, huntress
Hurt(e)len, push, dash together
Hurten, contr pr 3 sg hurt, hurt, harm
Hust, pp hushed, silent, used also as mv Huwe, see Hewe (1)
Hy, see Heigh
Hyden, contr pr 3 sg hst, pt hdde, pp hd, hed hide, conceal, be hidden Hye, haste, in phr in hye, in haste Hye, adv see Heighe
Hyen, hie, hasten, bring quickly, often refl
Hyene, hyena
Hynde, hind
Hyne, hind, servant, farm laborer
Hyre, hire, payment, reward, ransom

I (see also Y)

I-, common verbal prefix (AS "ge-") For words beginning with this prefix see Y- I, Ich, Ik, pron, I
I, interj, Ey!
Ichchen, itch
Ich, see I, Ech
Idus, ides
If, Yif, if, commonly if that Ik, see I
Il, evil (Northern dial)
Il-hayl, bad luck (Northern dial)
Iike, same See Thulke
Ill(e), adv, evilly, ill
Ilyk, see Yliche
Immoevabiete, immobility
Impen, graft
Imperie (var Emperie), government, rank
Impertinent, irrelevant
Impetren, ask for, impetrate
Importable, intolerable
Impossible, Inpossible, impossible, also sbst Impressen, impress, make an impression, imprint
In-, for words beginning with this prefix see also Im-, Em-, En-
In, inn, lodging, dwelling Inche, inch
Inclyned, bent
Inconstance, inconstancy
Inconvement, sbst, inconvenience Inculus, an evil spirit supposed to be upon persons in their sleep, and to have intercourse with women Indeterminat, indeterminate, not marked on the astrolabe
Indifferently, impartially Indignacion, contemptuous behavior or treatment, anger (against evil or injustice), hence, rebellious wrath
Induracoun, induration, hardening Inequal, unequal, on hours ineguales see KnT, I, 2271, n, and Astr, n, 8 and 10
Inestmable, invaluable, beyond estimate
Infect, not valid, defective (title), dimmed
In-fere, together (lit "in company")

Infermetee, Infirmite, infirmity
Infirme, weak insufficient
Informacions, instructions, directions
Infortunat, unfortunate, inauspicious Infortune, ill fortune
Infortuned, ill-starred Infortuning, unfortunate condition or situation
Ingot, ingot, mould for metal Inhelden, Inhelden, pour in Injure, injury
Inke, ink
Inly, inwardly, intimately, greatly, completely, perfectly
In-mid, into, amid Inne, adv, in, within Innen, vb, house, lodge
Innerest, innermost
Inobedience, disobedience
Inordinat, immoderate, excessive
Inset, pp, implanted
Insighte, insight, understanding Inspiren, quicken, breathe upon Instance, presence, instance, request, suggestion
Intercept, pp, intercepted Intervalle, interval
In-til, unto, as far as Into, into, unto Intresse, interest
Introductone, sbst, introduction
In-with, within, in Ipocryse, hypocrisy
Ipocrite, Ypocryte, hypocrite
Ire, ire, anger, irritability Iren, iron
Irous, angry, wrathful Irregular, a monk or "regular" who violates the rules of his order Issen, issue
Issue, outlet, result Iwis, see Ywis

J

Jade, jade, cart-horse, draught horse Jagoune, jacynth or hyacinth (precious stone)
Jalous, see Jelous
Jambeux, leggings, leg-armor
Jane, small coin (named from Genoa)
Jang(e)ling, idle talk, dispute
Janglen, jangle, chatter, babble Jangleresse, female prattler, chatterbox Janglerye, chatter, gossip Jape, jest, joke, trick, butt, laughingstock
Japen, jest, play a trick
Japerie, joking, buffoonery
Jape-worthy, laughable, ridiculous Jargon, talk
Jaunyce, jaundice
Jeet, jet
Jelous, Jalous, jealous
Jet, Get, contrivance, fashion, mode Jeupardye, see Jupartye
Jewel, Jowel, Juwel, jewel.

Jewerye, Jewry
 Jo, come to pass (?), fit (?), suit (?) See Tr,
 III, 33, n
 Jogelour, juggler
 Jogelrye, jugglery
 Joignen, see Joynen
 Jolif, Joly, jolly, merry, lively, pretty Jolily, in jolly fashion, merrily neatly, emphatically, very well (colloquial) Jolitee, jolity, merriment, sport, happiness, passion, lust
 Joly, see Jolif
 Jompren, jumble
 Jossa, down here
 Jouken, lie at rest remain
 Journee, day's work or march, journey
 Jewel, see Jewel
 Jowes, jaws
 Joye, joy
 Joynant, adjoining
 Joynen, Joignen, join, enjoin
 Joynure, union
 Jubbe, vessel for ale or wine Jugen, Juggen, judge, deem Jug(ge), judge, referee Juparten, jeopardize, endanger Jupartye, jeopardize, jeopardy, peril, problem at chess
 Jurdon, chamber-pot
 Jurisdiction, jurisdiction
 Justen, joust, tourney Justyse, justice, judgment, administration of justice
 Juwel, see Jewel
 Juwise, Juyse, justice, judgment, sentence

K (see also C)

Kalender, calendar, hence, directory, example, model
 Kalendes, Kalends first day of the month, hence, beginning, introduction
 Kamus, see Camus
 Kankedort (var Cankerort), an unexplained term apparently meaning a state of suspense, or difficult position See Tr, II, 1752, n
 Karf, see Kerven
 Kaynard, dotard
 Kecchen, see Cacchen
 Kechil, small cake
 Keen, see Cow
 Keep, sbst, care, heed, notice, in phr taken keep Kek, see Quek
 Kemben, pt kembde, kempte, pp kembd, kempt, comb
 Kemp, coarse, stout
 Ken, Kentish for Kin
 Kene, keen, sharp, bold, eager, cruel Kene, adv, keenly
 Kennen, perceive, discern teach, show Kepen, keep, preserve, take care of, intend, care to, regard, reck Kernel (1), seed, kernel (of a nut)
 Kernel (2), battlement
 Kers, cress (symbol of worthlessness)

Kerven, pt sg carf, karf pl corien korfen, pp corien korien carve cut, pierce Kervere, carver
 Kessen, Kentish for Kissen
 Keveren, cover, recover
 Keye, key, rudder (Lat "clavus") Kid(de), see Kythen
 Kiken, peep gaze
 Kiken, kick
 Kin, kin, kindred race, kind, som kinnes alles kinnes, nosl unnes, of some every no kind Kinde, sbst, nature, race stock species sort, natural disposition, of karde, by nature
 Kinde, adj, kind, natural also adv
 Kindely, natural, also adv
 Kinrede, kindred family relatives birth Kirked (?), crooked (?)
 Kirtel, kirtle
 Kissen, Kessen, hiss
 Kitte, see Cutten
 Knakkes, tricks, evil ways Knarre, knot in wood, hence, stout, sturdy fellow
 Knarry, knotted, gnarled Knave, boy, page, servant, peasant, knave- child male child
 Kneden, knead
 Knee, Know, knee, dat phr on knowe
 Knelen, kneel
 Knetten, Kentish for Knitten
 Knewe(n), see Knöwen
 Knuten, knit, join, wed, gather together
 Knobbes, knobs, pimples Knok, knock
 Knoppe, bud
 Knopped, fastened with a button (knoppe) Knotte, knot, difficulty, gist or point of a story
 Know, see Knee
 Knowleche, Knowliche, knowledge
 Knöwen, pt sg knew, pl knewen, pp knöwen, know, make known, disclose Knowinge, conscious, aware, knowinge with me, my witnesses
 Knowlechen, acknowledge Knowleching, knowing
 Knyf, knife, dagger
 Konning, see Cuning
 Korfen, Korven, see Kerven
 Kukkow!, cuckoo!
 Kyde, kid
 Kymeln, shallow tub
 Kyn, see Cow
 Kynde, see Kinde,
 Kyte, kite (bird)
 Kythen, pt kythed kydde, pp kythed, kyd, make known, show, display, declare

L

Laas, see Las Labbe, blab, tell-tale
 Labben, blab tattle, gossip
 Label, rod or rule on the front of an astrolabe.
 Laborous (var Laborous), laborious

- Labouren, labor, toil, take pains
Lacche, snare, spring
Laced, caught entangled Lacerte, muscle
Lache, lazy, slack, dull
Lachesse, indolence Lad(de), see Leden
Laddre, ladder
Laden, load cover
Lady, gen sg lady, lady
Laft(e), see Leyen (1)
Lak, lack, defect, want, fault, blame
Lake (1), lake, pond
Lake (2), fine linen cloth
Lakken, find fault, disparage, fall short, lack (impers)
Lambic, see Alambik
Lambren, see Lomb
Lame, lame, feeble, halting, afflicted (in mind)
Lampe, thin plate
Lampes, pl lamps
Land, Lond, land, country, dat phr to (on) lande, upon lond, in the country
Lang, long (Northern dial)
Langour, languishing, weakness, sickness, slow starvation Langouren, languish
Lanterne, lantern
Lapidaire, "Lapidarium," treatise on precious stones
Lappe, flap, corner, fold, edge (of cloth), wrapper, lap Lappen, enfold
Large, large, broad, liberal, generous, lavish, free, at his large, free, "at large"
Large, adv, freely
Largely, fully, broadly speaking Largenesse, liberality
Largesse, liberality, bounty
Larke, lark
Las, Laas, lace, leash, string, snare, entanglement Lasse, Lesse, adj, less, also adv
Lassehe, lash, stroke
Last, load, burden, hence, a great number Laste, last, lowest (?), basest (?) See Bo, II, pr 5, 54, n Lasten, contr pr 3 sg last, pt laste(d), last, endure, delay, extend Lat(en), see Leten
Late, late, tardy, slow, also adv
Laterede, slow, tardy Lathe, barn (Northern dial)
Latse, latice
Latitude, breadth, especially the breadth or a climate, the angular distance of a body from the ecliptic, the distance of a place north or south of the equator Latoun, latten, a mixed metal compounded chiefly of copper and zinc Latter, adv, later, more slowly
Laude, laud, honor, praise, laudes, pl, lauds (the canonical hour)
Laughen, Lauhwen, Leighen, pt sg lough, laughed pp laughen, laughed, laugh Launcegay (lance + Arab "zaghāyah"), a slender lance of hard wood Launcen, Launchen, push, throw one's self, rear Launde, glade clearing in the forest (used for hunting-ground)
Laure, Laurel, Laurel, Lorer, laurel-tree Lauriol, spurge-laurel Laus, see Loos
Laven, draw up (water), exhaust, i e, answer (a question) perfectly Lavender(e), laundress
Laverokkes, larks
Lavours, lavers, basins
Lawe, law, custom, a religious system, body of religious faith Laxatyf, laxative
Lay (1), lay, song
Lay (2), law, belief, creed
Lay, Lay(e)n, see Lyen (1)
Laynere, strap, thong Layser, see Leyser
Lazar, leper
Lèche, physician
Lêchcraft, leechcraft, medicine, medical skill Lêcher, healer
Lechour, lecher
Leden, contr pr 3 sg led, pt ledde ladede, pp, led, lad, lead, conduct, draw, carry, guide, govern, continue, pass, spend, bring about Leden (lit "Latin"), language, speech, talk Leden, leaden
Lêed, sbst, lead, a caldron
Lêef, see Leyen (1)
Lêef, pl leves, leaf
Leef, Lief, comp leever, leefer, sup leevest, hef, dear, beloved, pleasant, agreeable, ful leef were me, I should like, also sbst Leefful, see Leveful
Leefsel, Levesel, the bush used as a sign of a tavern, leafy arbor Lêek, leek
Leep, see Leyen
Leere, flank, loin, properly flesh, muscle (AS "lira," ON "lær") Lêes (1), leash
Lêes (2), false, untrue, also sbst, deceit, fraud
Lêes, see Lesen
Lêesse, pasture
Lêeste, least, atte leeste, atte leeste weye, at the very least Leet, see Leten
Leful, see Leveful
Legende, life of a saint or martyr, sad tale, story Leggen (1), see Leyen
Leggen (2), see Alleggen (2)
Leid(e), Leyd(e), see Leyen
Leigh, see Lyen (2) Leigheth, see Laughen
Lemaile, see Lumaille
Lemes, flames, rays
Lemes, see Lim
Lemman (leaf-man), lover, sweetheart (of either gender), concubine

Lendes, loins
Lene, lean, slender, weak
Lēnen (1), lend, give, grant, allow, vn lenning, as a loan Lēnen (2), lean, incline
Lēnesse, leanness
Leng, adv, longer
Lenger, Lengest, see Long
Lengthe, length
Lengthing, lengthening, inf lengthen
Lente, Lent
Leonesse, honess
Leonyn, leonine
Leopart, Leopard, Lybard, leopard
Leos (Gk λεος) people
Leoun, Lyoun, lion
Lēpand, Northern pr p of Lēpen
Lēpen, pt sg leep, leap, spring, run, run about, exercise Lēred, learned
Lēren, teach, learn
Lerne, learn, teach
Lesen, pt sg lees, pp lōr(e)n, lose, destroy, loren, forlorn, wretched, wasted Lēsinge, lie, falsehood, deceit
Lesinge, loss
Lēsse, see Lasse
Lēsse(n), lessen, diminish
Lest, Kentish for lest, see Listeth Lest, Kentish for Lust
Lēste, least
Lesteth, Kentish for Listeth
Let, see Lēden, Leten, Letten
Leten, Laten, contr pr 3 sg let, mv let, lat, pt sg leat, pl leten pp leten, laten let allow, yield, leave, abandon, forsake, omit desist, deem, consider frequently used in a causative sense with an infin, let calle, also combined with the causative don, let don cryen
Lette, hindrance, delay
Lette-game, "let-game," one who spoils or hinders sport
Letten, contr pr 3 sg let, pt sg lette, letted, pp let, hinder, thwart, cut off, conceal, delay, be hindered, wait hesitate, cease, desist
Lett(e)rure, literature learning
Letuare, electuary, remedy
Lēve, leave permission
Lēveful, Lē(e)f(f)ul, permissible, allowable Lēven, mv 2 sg le(e)f, pt sg lefte lafte pp left, laft, leave let alone abandon forsake permit, grant, cease, omit, desist, refrain, remain Leven, believe Leven, see Liven
Levene, flash of lightning
Lever(e), comp of Leef, me were lever, hadde I lever, etc., I had rather, had hure levere, she had rather Levesel, see Leefsel
Lewest, see Leef
Lēwed, ignorant, unlearned, coarse, rude, wicked, wanton Lēwednesse, ignorance, coarseness
Ley, see Lven (1)

Leyen, Leggen, pt leyde, pp leyd lay lay up lay out expend bet pledge Leyser, Laysler, leisure, opportunity, deliberation Leyt, flame (of a candle), also in thonder-leyt lightning Label, written statement or accusation Licenciat, a man licensed by the pope to hear confessions and administer penance Liche, adj, like also adv
Liche-wake, wake over a corpse
Licoryce, Lycorys, liquorice Licour, liquor, moisture, juice
Lief, see Leef
Lift, Left, adj, left
Lige, Liege, Leege, hege, subject, vassal Ligeaunce, allegiance
Liggen, see Lven (1)
Light, light (of weight), light-hearted, joyous, fickle, trifling, active, nimble, lightly clothed, transitory, easy (to do)
Lighte, adv, brightly, brilliantly Lighten (1), pt lighte, make light alleviate, render glad or cheerful, feel light or glad Lighten (2), pt lighte, alight, descend
Lighten (3), pp light(ed), shine, illumine Lighter, adv, more lightly, more easily Lightly, lightly, carelessly, joyfully, easily, quickly, equably Lightnen, lighten, clear, illumine Lightnesse (1), brightness
Lightnesse (2), levity, agility
Lightsom, lightsome, gay, cheerful
Ligne, line
Ligne-aloes, wood of the aloe
Likeros, lecherous, licentious greedy, gluttonous, eager, desirous, base vile Lile, lily
Lilting-horn, horn for playing a hit
Lim, pl lum(m)es, limes, limb
Limaille, Lemaille, Lymaille, metal filings Limutacioun, a friar's limit
Limtour, a friar licensed to beg within a definite limit Linage, lineage, race, descent, birth, family, kinsfolk, consanguinity Lippe, lip
Lipsen, hsp
Lisse, relief alleviation, comfort solace Lissen, assuage, relieve, alleviate List, see Lust
List(e), see Listeth
Listen, listen, hear
Listes (1) lists (for a tournament)
Listes (2), wiles, devices
Listeth, Lesteth, Lusteth, impers vb, usually with dat, contr pr 3 sg list lest, lust, pt liste, etc., it pleases also pers, is pleased wishes, hum liste it pleased him he wished, me list right evyl, I had no desire to Litarge, litharge protoxide of lead
Litargye, lethargy
Litel, comp lasse lēsse, sup lēgste, little, into litel, within a little, almost Litestere, dyer
Lith, limb

- Litherly, adv , ill
 Liven, Leven, hve
 Liveres, hvery
 Lxt, see Lyen (2)
 Lode, load
 Lodemenege, pilotage
 Lode-sterre, lodestar, polar star
 Lqdman (var Lqdesman), pilot Loft, ar, height, loft, upper room, dat phr on lafte, aloft on high, in the air, kepte on lafte, sustained Logge, lodge inn, resting-place Logged, lodged
 Lohne, rope, tether
 Loken, look, regard, see, behold, consider, contemplate, take heed, looke who whan, what, whoever whenever, etc See WET, III, 1113, n and cf wayte what
 Loken, vb wk , lock up Loken, str pp of louken, lock Loking, look, gaze, glance, appearance aspect, countenance, power of sight
 Lollere, loller, Lollard
 Lomb, Lamb, pl lombren, lambren, lamb
 Lond, see Land
 Long, sbst, lung
 Long, adj, comp lenger, sup lengest, long, tall, high Long, prep , "along of" because of, long of the fyr-making, because of the fire Longe, adv , long at great length Longen (1), long for, desire
 Longen (2), be appropriate to, befit, belong, concern Longitude, the distance between two given meridians, the distance on the ecliptic from the vernal equinoctial point to a circle perpendicular to the ecliptic and passing through the heavenly body whose longitude is required, a line parallel to the equator which measures the length of a climate Looft, pl loves, loaf
 Lohne, loan
 Lqes, praise, fame, report
 Loos, Laus, Lous, loose, free
 Looth, loath, loathsome, hateful, me were looth, it would be displeasing to me, I should be loath (to do it), etc , also sbst Looth, adv , unwillingly, with dislike Loothly, hideous, ugly
 Loppe, spider
 Lopwebbe, cobweb
 Lorden, rule over as lord
 Lordings, srs, gentlemen
 Lordshipe, lordship, rank, rule, control, authority, post of authority, patronage
 Lqre, lore, learning, knowledge, instruction, doctrine, experience Lorel, wretch, worthless fellow Lor(e)m, see Lesen
 Lqer; see Laure
 Los, loss, runn, cause of perdition
 Los, see Loos
 Losenger, Losengeour, flatterer
 Losengere, flattery
 Losenges, lozenges, small diamond-shaped figures (commonly used as bearings in heraldry)
 Los(i)en, pt loste, pp lost, lose Lost, sbst , loss
 Loteby, paramour
 Lothen, loathe
 Lotunge, lurking
 Loude, adv , loudly
 Lough, adj , low
 Lough, see Laughen
 Louren, lour, frown
 Lous, see Loos
 Louten, bend, bow down, do obeisance
 Love-dayes, days for settling disputes by arbitration
 Love-drury(e), passionate love, affection Loveknotte, love-knot (an intertwined device)
 Lqves, see Looft
 Lovyers, lover See Gen Prol, I 80, n
 Low(e), Lough, Lawe, low humble, small contemptible, wretched Lqwe, adv , low, humbly, in a low tone softly
 Lowen, appraise, value
 Lowke, confederate, accomplice
 Luce, luce, pike
 Lufsom, lovely, amiable
 Lunare, lunary, moon-wort
 Lure, lure or bait for a hawk enticement Lurken, lurk, he concealed (not necessarily with the idea of ambush, see NED, s v) Lussheburghes, pl , spurious coins
 Lust, Lest, List, pleasure, delight, desire, wish interest, thing which gives delight Lust(eth), see Listeth
 Lusthéd(e), Lustnesse, joy, delight, cheerfulness, vigor Lusty, lusty, joyous, happy, pleasant, vigorous Luxures, pl , lusts
 Luxurie, lust, licentiousness
 Luxurious, lecherous, outrageous, excessive Lyard, gray
 Lybard, see Leopart
 Lycorys, see Licoryce
 Lye, lie
 Lyen (1), Ligen, pt sg lay, ley, pl layen, pp , leyn, layn, lie, recline, remain, lodge, reside, belong or pertain (to) Lyen (2), 2 sg pres lyzt pt legh, tell a lie Lyen (3), blaze, flame
 Lyes, pl , lees, dregs, sediment
 Lyf, gen sg lyves, dat phr on (to, of) lyve, acc lyf (also lyve, by extension from dat ?), pl lyves, life, lifetime, lyves, gen sg used as adj, living, alive
 Lyfode, livelihood, means of support Lyfly, adj , lively, bright, vivid Lyfly, Lyvely, adv , in a lively or lifelike way Lyken, please, often impers , us lyketh yow, it pleases us with respect to you, rarely personal, like, enjoy, find agreeable Lykinge, adj , pleasing, thriving Lykhiéd(e), likelihood Lykly, similar probable, likely to occur, apparently able or fitted

Lyknen, lken, compare Lyknesse, likeness, parable
 Lym, lme, quicklime
 Lymaille, see Limaille
 Lymen, cover with birdlime, hence, ensnare, catch Lymere, humber, tracking-hound, which was kept on a lime or leash Lymrod, lme-rod
 Lynde, linden-tree
 Lyne, line, lineage
 Lyne-right, exactly in a line with Lyonesse, see Leonesse
 Lyoun, see Leoun
 Lystes, see Listes (1) and (2)
 Lyte Lite, little, also adj., little, small, slight, and adv Lythe, easy, soft delicate Lyve Lyves, see Lyf

M

M', me (before a vowel)
 Ma(a)d, Ma(a)de, see Maken
 Ma(a)t, dead (the lit sense, from Arab 'mât'), checkmated, defeated, subdued, dejected, exhausted Madden, go mad, be mad or angry
 Mader, sbst, madder
 Magestee, Majestee, majesty
 Magistrat, magistracy
 Magnificence, great and generous well-doing, magnanimity (see Pars I, X, 736), splendor, glory Maheym, maim, maiming
 Maille, mail-armor
 Maister, master, lord, doctor (of divinity, law, etc.), maister-hunte, master of the game or of the hunt, maister streite, towr, town, temple, etc., chief street, tower, etc
 Maistresse, mistress, governess
 Maistrise, strength, power, domination Maistrye, mastery, control, superiority, skill, a masterly performance, art, elegance, for the maistrye, surpassing all others, hence, extremely Majestee, see Magestee
 Make, sbst, mate, match, opponent, husband or wife Makeleßes, unmatched, peerless
 Maken, pt maked(e) ma(a)de, pp maked, ma(a)d, make, produce, compose, write, pretend, counterfeit, cause
 Makere, maker, composer
 Making, poetry, composition
 Malapert, forward, impudent
 Male (1), bag, wallet
 Male (2), male
 Malefice, maleficent act or device
 Malencohe, black bile, one of the humors Malencolyk, melancholy
 Malgre, see Maugre(e)
 Malice, wickedness inclination to evil, ill-will, spite Mahsoun, curse
 Malleable, malleable
 Malt, see Meiten

Maltalent, ill-humor, ill-will resentment
 Malvesye, malmsey, a sweet wine named from Monemvasia in the Morea and originally obtained from that place or the neighborhood Man, pl men, man mankind, hero servant, retainer, used indefinitely (sometimes in the unemphatic form men) men seith, they say (Germ "man sagt"), as man that, like one who Manace, menace threat Manacen, Manasen, menace, threaten Mandement, summons
 Mane, techel, phares, for Heb 'Mene, mene, tekhe, upharsin' (Dan v, 25)
 Maner, manor
 Manère, Mâner, manner, method, way conduct, deportment, courtesy, kind, sort, as in maner wight, maner thinges (used without of), maners, pl, manners (Lat "mores")
 Mangonel, engine for casting stones and other missiles Manhede, manhood manliness
 Manly, adv, boldly, in manly fashion
 Mannish, like a man, unwomanly, human, also adv
 Mansioun, abiding-place, dwelling, in astrology, the daily positions of the moon, or the sign (or signs) of the zodiac in which a planet exerts especially great influence Mansuete, meek, mild, courteous
 Mansuetude, meekness, gentleness
 Mantel, mantle, cloak, foot-mantel, riding skirt Mantelet, short mantle
 Many, many, often used directly with a sg noun many knight many a knight Manye, mania
 Mappemounde, map of the world
 Marchal, Marshal, marshal Marchandyse, merchandise, trading Marcha(unt), merchant
 Marcial, martial, warlike
 Marcien, Martian, having the temperament of one subject to the planet Mars Mar(e), adj and adv, more, greater (Northern dial) Mareys, marsh
 Marie, interj, 'marry!', by St Mary!
 Mark (1) Merk, mark, point, spot, race, sex, sign, image
 Mark (2), Marc, a monetary unit of the value of 13 s 4 d (two-thirds of a pound)
 Market-betere, loafer or swaggerer in a market Markus, marquis
 Markussesse, marchioness
 Marle-pit, marl-pit
 Marren, mar, disfigure
 Martyre, martyrdom
 Martyren, make a martyr of torment
 Mary, marrow, pith
 Mary-bones, marrow-bones
 Mase, maze, labyrinth, state or position of bewilderment Masednesse, amazement, bewilderment*

- Maselyn, mazer or bowl of maple-wood Masen, be in a state of bewilderment, pp mased, stunned Masse, Messe, mass
Masse-peny, offering for a mass
Mast (1), mast of a ship
Mast (2), mast, fruit of various trees, acorns and beechnuts Masty, sluggish ("fatted on mast")
Mat, see Ma(a)t
Matere, Matere, matter, subject, affair, business, material, theme subject-matter, cause
Matins, morning-prayers
Maugre(e), Maigre, ill-will, reproach, also as prep, in spite of Maumet, idol (corruption of "Mahomet") Maumetrye, Mohammedanism, idolatry
Maunciple, manciple, steward of an inn or college Mavis, song-thrush
Mawe, maw, stomach
May, see Mowen
May, maiden
Mayde(n), maiden, gurl
Maydenhed(e), maidenhood, virginity Maymen, Meymen, maim injure Mayntenen, maintain, uphold Maysondeu, hospital (Fr "Maison Dieu") Meche(l), see Muche(l)
Međe, meed, reward, bribe, pl to medes, for reward
Mede, Meeth, mead, a drink made from honey Med(e)len, mix mangle, dye, stir up, meddle Medewe, meadow Mediatour, messenger, go-between Medlee, cloth of mixed weave, used as adj Medler, medlar (the fruit)
Meel, meal
Meelide, meal-time
Meeth, see Mede
Meğre, meager, slender
Me(g)nee, see Meynee
Meke, meek, also adv
Meken, become meek, have mercy, make meek, mollify, refl, humble one's self Mele, meal (of flour)
Melk, milk
Melle, Mille, mill
Melten, pt mail, pp molten, melt Memorial, adj, preserving in memory Memory, memory, state of consciousness Men, see Man
Menden, mend, gain, profit
Mendience, mendicancy
Mendynant(y)z, mendicants
Meñe, means, course, instrument, mediator, go-between intermediary, middle state or course of action Meñe, middle, mean, intermediate Menelich, moderate
Menen, pt menie, menede, pp ment, mean, intend, say, declare, signify Menour, Minorite
Menstralce, see Minstralcey
Ment(e), see Menen
Mentes, plants of mint
Menyver, miniver
Mercable, merciful
Mercurie, mercury (quicksilver)
Mercy, mercy, thanks, graunt mercy, many thanks Mere, mare
Meridian, adj, southern, exactly on the meridian Merdie, midday
Meridional, southern Meritorie, meritorious
Merk, see Mark (1)
Merken, brand
Merhoun (var Emerlion), merlin, small falcon Mermayde(n), mermaid, siren
Mersshy, marshy
Merveille, Mervaille, marvel
Mery(e), Murye, Myrne, merry, glad, gay, pleasant Meryte, merit, deserving, reward
Mes, range, distance, at good mes, at good, favorable range for a shot Meschaunce, mischance, misfortune, bad conduct, evil condition, with meschaunce, ill luck to him (a frequent curse) Meschief, Meschief, Mischeef, misfortune mshap, harm, trouble
Meşel, leper
Meşelrie, leprosy
Message, message, errand, messenger
Messenger, Messenger, messenger
Messagere, sending of messages
Messe, see Masse
Meste, most, highest, superl of Muche(l)
Moche(l), etc
Mester, Myster, occupation, office, service, what myster men, what sort of men Mesuage, message, dwelling-house
Mesure, measure, moderation, temperance Meşuren, measure
Met, measure of capacity
Met, see Meten and Meşen
Meşe, meat, food
Meşe, meet, fitting suitable, equal Meşely, well-proportioned
Meşen, pt mette, pp met, meet (trans and intrans), arrive at the point (of), succeed (n)
Meşen (1), contr pr 3 sg met, pt mette, pp met, dream
Meşen (2), measure
Meşing, meeting
Meşing, dream
Meşte, see Meşen, Meşen
Meşen, see Moeven
Mewe, Muwe, mew, coop, pen, hiding-place Meymen, see Maymen
Meynee, Me(g)nee, household, retinue sut, army, crew, company, assembly Meynt, Meynd, pp, mixed, mingled Meyntenauce, demeanor Mich(ol), see Muche(l)
Midel, adj, of moderate height
Mighte, see Mowen
Mikel, see Muche(l)

Milde, mild
 Milksop, bread sopped in milk, hence, weakling Mille, see Melle
 Milne-stones, mill-stones
 Minde, see Mynde
 Ministre, minister, officer
 Minnresten, admnister
 Minstraiyce, minstrelsy, music, musical instruments
 Miracle, miracle, wonder, legend, pleyes of miracles, miracle-plays Murre, myrrh
 Murthe, Murthe, mirth, joy, amusement
 Mis, adj, wrong, bad, amiss, also sbst and adv
 Misacounten, miscount
 Misaunter, misadventure
 Misavysen, vb refl, act ill-advisedly Misbedden, pp misbedden, offer evil, injure, insult Misbleve, suspicion of deception
 Misbleved, adj, infidel, also sbst Misbedden, see Misbedden
 Misborn, pp, misbehaved
 Miscarien, miscarry, go amiss, come to harm
 Mischeef, see Meschief
 Misdemen, misjudge
 Misdeparten, divide amiss
 Misdrawynge, way of drawing apart
 Misericorde, mercy, pity
 Misese, discomfort, trouble, harm
 Misessed, troubled, disturbed Misfallen, pt sbj mysfalle, misbefall, happen amiss (for) Misforyven, pt misforyaf, misgive
 Misgqn, pp, misgqn, miswent, go amiss or astray Misgovernaunce, misconduct
 Misgyed, misguded See Gyen Mishappen, happen ill (for), also personal Misknqwynge, sbst, ignorance
 Misknqwynge, adj, ignorant
 Misleden, mislead, misconduct
 Misledynge, misdirection
 Mislyen, pt mislay, lie in an uncomfortable position
 Mislyken, displease
 Mislyved, of evil life, wicked treacherous Mismetren, scan wrongly Missen, miss, fail, approach an end, lack, want Misset, pp, misplaced, badly timed Misseyen, speak amiss, speak evil (of), slander Missitten, pt missat, be out of place, misbecome Misspeken, pt misspak, speak amiss
 Mistaken, pp mistaken, make a mistake, transgress Mister, see Mester
 Mistrye, ministry calling, vocation
 Mistihede, mystery
 Mistornen, turn aside, mislead
 Mistyden, be unlucky
 Miswanderynge, erring, going astray
 Miswent, see Misgqn

Miswey, adv, astray
 Misweyes, by-paths
 Miswryten, miswrite
 Mitayn, Miteyn, mitten glove
 Mixen, dunghill
 Mo, adj comp, more, greater, another, others, na mo, no others, none else, also adv
 Mochel, sbst, size
 Moche(1), see Muche(1)
 Mocioun, motion, proposal, feeling, desire Moder, mother, the thickest plate of an astrolabe Moeble, adj, movable, also sbst, movable possessions Moedes, moods, strains (of music)
 Moerdre, see Mordre Moevable, movable, impressionable, changeable, the firste moevable, the "primum mobile" Moeven, Meven, move, stir up, begin, disturb Moevere, mover, cause
 Moiste, moist, new (not worn), fresh (not stale)
 Mok(e)ren, hoard up
 Mokerere, miser
 Moleste, molestation, trouble
 Mollificacioun, mollifying, softening
 Molten, see Melten
 Mone, moon, position of the moon
 Mqne, moan, complaint
 Mqnen, bemoan lament
 Monesten, admonish
 Mon(e)th, month
 Monyour, comer
 Mood, state of anger, thought Moornen, mourn, yearn for Moot (1), note of a horn or bugle Moot (2), motion (of a heavenly body)
 Moot, pt pr vb, 2 sg most, pt moste may, am permitted, must, shall, am obliged (to), frequent in adjurations so moot I thee so may I prosper, sometimes impers, us moste
 Mo(o)te, mote, atom
 Moraltee, morality, moral writing, the moral (of a fable or tale)
 Mordre, Moerdre, murder
 Mqre, sbst root
 Mqre, adj comp greater, larger, higher (in station), also sbst, and adv
 Mqreover, besides, in addition still further, and yet moreover, translates Lat "ad haec" Mormal, sore, gangrene
 Morne, morning
 Morter, mortar, bowl of wax with a wick, later, a thick candle (NED) Mortfyen, mortify, deaden in alchemy, produce change by chemical action Mortreux, thick soup, stew (properly pl of mortrel, but used also as sg)
 Morwe(n), morning, morrow
 Morwenynge, morning
 Morwe-tyde, morning-time
 Mosel, muzzie

Most, Moste, see Moot
Mōste, greatest, chief
Motren, mutter
Mottelee, motley, parti-colored cloth
Motyf, motive, suggestion, idea
Mountance, amount, quantity, value
Mourdaunt, chape or tag (of a girdle)
Mous, pl mys, mouse
Moustre, pattern
Moveresse, starter up (of quarrels) Mowe, grunace
Mowen, pt pr vb, sg may, pl mouwen, wk pt mighie, be able, have power, be permitted, sometimes used absolutely, without dependent inf
Mowis, bushels
Mowlen, become mouldy, decay
Mowynge, ability
Moysoun, harvest, crop, growth
Moysty, new (ale)
Muable, mutable; changeable
Mucchen, munch
Muche(1), Moche(1), Meche(1), Mich(el), Mikel, adj, much, great, also adv
Mullok, heap of refuse, confused pile
Multiplicacio(u)n, multiplication, technical for alchemy, the art of transmuting baser substances into silver and gold Murrierly, more merrily See Mery(e)
Murmuracion, murmuring Murthe, see Murthe
Murye, see Mery(e)
Musard, musar, hence, sluggard, dolt
Muscie, mussel
Musen, consider, be in a study, gaze intently Muwe, see Mewe
Muwet, mute
Mycche, loaf of bread
Mycher, thief
Myle, mile, myle wey, space of a mile, also used as a measure of time (twenty minutes)
My(n), my, mine
Mynde, Minde, mind, memory, recollection, sound mind, sanity, reason Mynen, mine, undermine Mynnen, remember, mention
Mynour, miner
Mynten, intend
Myne, see Mery(e)
Mys-, for words beginning with this prefix see Mis- Mys, see Mous
Myster, see Mester
Myte (1), mite (small Flemish coin), something without value Myte (2), mite (the insect)

N

Nʹ, contr for Ne before a vowel
Na, no (Northern dial), na mo, na more, no more, no other Nacioun, nation, perhaps also birth (Fr "naissance") Nadde, contr for Ne hadde
Naddre, Neddre, adder, serpent

Nadir, the point of the ecliptic opposite to the position of the sun Naillen, Naylen, nail, fasten Naken, pp naked, make naked, strip, naked bare, plain, destitute, wretched Naker, kettle-drum
Nale, in atte nale, at the ale (-house)
Nam, see Nimen
Name, name, title, reputation Namely, Namelich(e), especially Namq, Namqre, see Na
Nappen, take a nap, nod
Nar(o)we, adj, narrow, tight, close, small also adv
Nat, not
Natal, presiding over nativities
Nat forthy, nevertheless, notwithstanding Naught, nought, nothing Naught, not Nave, nave (of a wheel)
Navele, navel
Navye, Naveye, navy, fleet
Nay, adv, may, no, also subst, denial Naylen, see Naillen
Nayten, refuse, deny
Ne, not, ne, neither nor, occasionally used, where it would not be in Mod Eng, after vbs of neg meaning See Tr, II, 716, n
Nece, niece, cousin
Necessen, compel
Neddre, see Naddre
Nede, need, necessity, extremity, emergency, peril, matter of business, specific need or necessity (esp in pl) Nede(s), adv, needs, necessarily Nedeful, needy
Nedeless, needless, unnecessary, also adv
Nedely, necessarily, of necessity
Neden, be needful or necessary, commonly impersonal, us neded, we should need Nedes-cost, of necessity
Neen, no (Northern dial)
Ne(e)r, adv, nearer, comp of Neigh, but sometimes used as pos Neet, pl, neat, cattle Negardye, see Nigardye
Neghen, see Neighen
Ne(igh), Ney, Nygh, Ny, adj, comp ne(e)r, ner(r)e sup nexte, near, nigh, also adv
Neighbour(e), neighbor
Ne(ighen), Nyghen, draw near, neigh it nere approach it more closely Neither nor neither, neither the one nor the other Nekke, neck
Nel, see Nil
Nempnen, name
Ner, see Ne(e)r
Nercotikes, narcotics Nere, contr of Ne were Nerf, nerve (sinew)
Ner(r)e, see Neigh
Nether, lower
Net-herd, cow-herd
Netherest, nethermost
Nevenen, warhe; mention
Neveradel, never a bit, not at all

Never(e), never Newew, nephew
 Newe, new, fresh, of newe, anew, also adv
 Newefangel, fond of novelty Neweliche, recently
 Newe-thought, Inconstancy (personified)
 Nexte, adj sup, nearest, next, last, easiest, see Neigh
 Ney, see Neigh
 Nigard, miserly, niggardly, also sbst
 Nigardye, niggardliness
 Night, night, dat phr oy nighte, a nighte, by night the phr to-night may mean the present night (now passing), the night following the present day, or the night just past See NPT, VII, 2926, n
 Nighten, become night, grow dark Nighter-tale, night-time
 Nigromancier, necromancer
 Nil (Ne wil), Nel, will not Nillynge, refusing, not wishing (to be) Nimen, pt sg nam, pp, nomen, take, put Niste (Ne wiste), knew not, see Witen
 No, neg adv, no, perhaps also nor See HF, 1170, n Noble, a com (worth 6 s 8 d)
 Noblen, ennoble
 Noblesse, nobility, nobleness, rank, magnificence, conduct worthy of a nobleman Nobleye, nobility, noble rank, splendor, collectively, an assembly of nobles
 Noel, Nowel, birthday, hence, Christmas Noght, not, not at all, by no means, noght but for, only because Nokked, notched
 Nolde, contr of Ne wolde, see Wil(e)
 Nombre, NOMBRE, number, quantity, sum Nomen, see Nimen
 Noncerteyn, see Nouncerteyn
 Nones, nonce, in the phrases for the nones with the nones, properly for (with) then ones, where then is the dat of the demonstrative pron or article, for the nones, for the time or occasion, on the spur of the moment, for the special purpose, then (merely for emphasis) very, exceedingly, sometimes only a colorless tag (see Gen Prol, I, 379, n), with the nones provided only, on condition that See also Qnes
 Nonne, gen sg nonnes, nonne, nun Nonnerye, nunnery
 Nonn, none, no
 Noot, contr of Ne woot, see Witen
 Norice, Norys, nurse
 Norcen, Norssen, Norishen, nourish, raise, bring up, foment Noriss(h)inge, nourishing, nutriment, sustenance, up-bringing, growth Nonture, see Nourtire
 Nor(r)y, pupil
 Nortelrye, nurture, education
 Nourtire, nourishment, nurture, breeding, good manners Norys, see Norice
 Nose-thurles, nostrils
 Noskynnes, from nones kynnes, of no kind, see Kin

Nost, contr of Ne wost, see Witen
 Not, closely cropped or shaven, not heed, head with hair cut short
 Not, contr of Ne wot, see Witen
 Notabilitee, notable fact or observation
 Notaries, scribes
 Note (1), note, mark, musical note or tune (on the kringes note see MillT, I, 3217, n) musical notation, by note according to notes, or in concord, all together
 Note (2), business, task
 Note (pronounced nôte) nut Noteful, useful
 Notemuge, Notemugge, nutmeg
 Nother, neither
 Nothing, adv, not at all, in no degree, for nothing, on no account Notificacioun, hunt
 Notifyen, indicate, make known, declare, take note of Nought, see Noght
 Nouncerteyn, uncertainty also adv
 Noun-power, impotence, powerlessness
 Nouthe, now (lit "now then"), as nouth, at present Novelrye, novelty
 Novys, novice
 Now, now, now and now, now and then, from time to time Nowche, setting for jewels, clasp, jewelled ornament also an ouche
 Nowel, see Noel
 Noy, hurt, injury
 Noyen, annoy, vex, injure
 Noyous, annoying, troublesome
 Noyse, outcry, report, evil report
 Noysen, make a noise, cry out Ny, see Neigh
 Nyce, ignorant, foolish, weak, wanton, careful, scrupulous Nycete, ignorance, simphety folly, lust, foolish or trivial conduct, shyness, scrupulousness Nyfles, trifles, silly stories
 Nygh, Nyghen, see Ne(i)gh, Ne(i)ghen
 Nympe, nymph

O

O, see Oon
 Obedient, obedient, in astronomy, the eastern signs of the zodiac, regarded as subject to the western signs See Astr, II, 28 Obeisaunce, obedient Obeisaunce, obedience, act of obedience, submission, or attention Obeysshyng, obedience, submission Obeysynge, obedient Object, adj, presented
 Obligacioun, bond surety
 Obligen, oblige, compel, obligen to, impose an obligation on Observaunce, observance, duty, ceremony attention, head, respect, homage Observe, observe, pay regard or heed, favor Occan, ocean
 Occupyen, take possession of seize upon,

- occupy, inhabit, take up, fill, hold to, follow closely
- Octogamy, marrying eight times
- Of, prep., of, from, by, concerning, with regard to, because of, as a result of, during (of at a tyde, of al my lyf), sometimes in a partitive sense (Of smale houndes had she)
- Of, adv., off, away
- Offence, injury, harm, discomfourt, hindrance, guilt
- Offencioun, Offensioun, crime, offence, injury, damage
- Offenden, offend, injure, attack
- Offertorie, offertory (said or sung during the collection of the offering in church)
- Office, office, secular employment, duty, function, natural property, place of office, houses of office, storerooms devoted to household service
- Offrynge, offering of alms at the altar, contribution in church
- Of-newe, newly, lately, of late anew, again
- Of-showven, shove off, repel
- Of-taken, taken off, removed
- Ofte, adv., often, sometimes also adj. in early English, as perhaps in the phrases ofte sylhe(s), ofte tyme, oftentimes
- Ofthowed, pp., thawed away
- Oght, Ought, Aught, ought, anything, sometimes used as adv., at all
- Oghte, see Owen
- Oulle, oil
- Okes, see Ook
- Olifaunt, elephant
- Olyve, olive-tree
- Olyver, olive-tree, olive-yard
- Omehe, homily
- On, on, upon, at, in, with regard to, toward, against
- Onde, envy
- Onen, unite, complete
- Ones, once, of one mind, in agreement, atones (North atanes), at one time See also Nonnes
- Onethe, see Unethe(s)
- Onliche, only
- On-lofte, see Loft
- On-lyve, see Lyf
- Ony, Anything, see Any, etc
- Oo, see Oon
- Ook, oak
- Oon, Oo, O, one, one single, one and the same, one continuous and uniform, that oon, the one, ever in oon, always alike, continually, after oon, according to one standard, uniformly good, oon and oon, one by one, at oon, at one, in agreement, oon the faireste, one of the fairest (see CIT, IV, 212, n.)
- Oostesse, see Hostesse
- Ooth, oath
- Op(e)nen, open
- Open-ers, fruit of the medlar
- Open-headed (var -heveded), bare-headed
- Ope, opium, opiate
- Opposen, oppose, accuse (of), appose, examine
- Opposicion, opposition, in astronomy, the relation of two planets when they are 180° apart
- Oppressen, oppress, suppress, violate
- Or, oar
- Or, conj., ere, before
- Or, prep., before
- Or, conj., or See Other, conj.
- Oratorie, oratory, chapel or closet for private devotions
- Ord, point, beginning See Word
- Ordal, ordeal
- Ordnaunce, Ordinaunce, arrangement, order, regulation, command, preparation, provision, plan, determination
- Ordenee, Ordeyne, well ordered or regulated, symmetrical
- Ordeynen, ordain, order, determine, provide, prepare, appoint
- Ordeynly, in due order, conformably
- Ordeynour, ruler
- Ordinat, ordered, regulated, in due order
- Ordre, order, law, class, set, orderly tabulation, religious (monastic) order, by ordre, in order
- Ordred, ordained, in (clerical) orders
- Ordure, filth, mire, rubbish
- Ore, favor, mercy, grace
- Ore, ore (of metal)
- Orfrays, orphrey, gold embroidery, braid, or fringe
- Organs, organ (formerly pl.)
- Orgon, organ (construed as pl. in NPT, VII, 2851.)
- Orisonte, horizon
- Orisoun, orison, prayer
- Orlog(ge), horologe, clock
- Orphelin, orphaned
- Orpiment, orpiment (trisulphide of arsenic)
- Osanne, Hosannah
- Ost, host, army
- Ostage, hostage
- Ost(e), see Host(e)
- Ostelementes, furniture, household goods
- Ostesse, see Hostesse
- Otes, oats
- Other, adj., second, other, different, recent (thus other night), that oon that other, the one the other
- Other, Outher, conj., either, or
- Othergate, otherwise See Gate (2)
- Other-way(e)s, otherwise, diversely
- Otherwhyle, Outherwhyle, sometimes Otherwyse, on other terms or conditions
- Ouche, see Nowche
- Ought, see Oght
- Oughte, see Owen
- Oule, owl
- Oules, pl., awls, spiked irons
- Ounce, ounce, small bunch or portion
- Ounded, wavy
- Ounding, sbst., adornment with wavy lines
- Oundy, wavy
- Our(e), pron., our, oure(s), ours On the special use in phrases of intimacy (the "domestic our") see ShupT, VII, 69, n.

Out, adv, out, completely, fully, out and out, entirely, out of, without, out of Out, interj, alas!
 Out-bræken, break out
 Out-bresten, burst out Out-bringen, express, utter Out-drawe, pp, drawn out
 Oute, away, out, disclosed, made known, uttered Outen, put forth, show, utter, offer
 Out(e)reste, see Utt(e)reste Outerly, see Utterly Outermost(e), uttermost
 Outfleyinge, flying out Outhees, outcry, clamor, alarm Outher, see Other, conj Outlandish, foreign Outlawe, outlaw
 Outrage, excess, inordinateness, violence, cruelty, injustice, wrong Outrageous, excessive, immoderate, superfluous, violent, over-bold Outrance, excess, to (into) outrance, beyond all limits, to the utmost Outrayen, Outreyen, be outrageous, excessive, fall into a passion Outrely, utterly, absolutely, entirely Outridere, rider abroad, an officer of a monastery who rode about to inspect granges Outslyngen, cast out
 Out-springen, pt -sprung, spring forth, come to light, spread abroad
 Out-strecchen, pp, -straught, stretch out Out-take(n), excepted Out-twynen, twist out utter Out-wenden, come forth, proceed
 Out-yede, went out See Yede
 Over-, prefix to denote excess, cf overgreet, overhaste, overlight, overlonge etc Over, adj, superl queresst(e), upper Over, adv, very, exceedingly Over, prep, above, besides, beyond, exceeding Overal, everywhere, in every respect, overalther, wherever, over al and al, beyond every other Overblowe, pp, blown over, past Overbyden, outlive
 Overcomen, pt sg quercum pp quercomen, overcome, defeat, come to pass Over-gilt, gilded over Overgoon, pass away, overspread, trample upon Overkerven, cut across, cross Overlad, pp, overborne, brow-beaten (lit "over-led") Overloken, look over Overlyen, overlie, lie upon Overmacchen, overmatch
 Over-oid, too old, out of date
 Overpassen, surpass, exceed, overstep Overraughte, reached over (horses), urged on Overshaken, shake off
 Oversheten, pp quershoten (var quersheten), overrun the scent (in hunting)

Qversloppe, upper or over-garment, gown cassock Qverspreiden, contr pr 3 sg -spra' pt -spradde, spread over cover Qverspringen, overpass Qverstrecchen, stretch or extend over Qverswimmen, swim or float over or across Qvert, over, open
 Qverthrowen, pp qverthrowen, be overthrown, ruined Qverthrowinge, sbst, overturning destruction Qverthrowinge, pr p used as adj headlong, overwhelming, headstrong, revolving Qverthwart, across, crosswise, askance, opposite Qvertymeliche, adv, untimely Qverwhelmen, turn or roll over Qverwhelven, overturn, agitate
 Qwen, pt pr vb, pt o(u)gh'te ough'te, owe, own, possess, be under obligation, ought, often used impersonally, him (her, us) ogh'te, it behoved him, etc Qwen, Qw(e)ne, own
 Qwh, interj, alas!
 Qwher, Qwghwhere, anywhere
 Qxe, pl oxen, ox
 Qynement, outment
 Qynon, onion

P

Pa, kiss, see also Ba Paas, see Pas
 Pacen, see Passen
 Patience, patience
 Page, page, servant attendant in service or in training for knighthood, boy Paillet, pallet
 Paire, Peire, Peyre, pair, set, series (not necessarily two in number as a peure of bedes)
 Paisible, see Pesible
 Palais, Paleys, palace, mansion (in astrology)
 Palasie, palsy
 Palasyn, belonging to the palace or court
 Pale, perpendicular stripe
 Paleis, Paleys, see Palais, Palis Palen, render pale
 Palestal, pertaining to wrestling or athletic games
 Palfrey, palfrey, riding-horse
 Palis, Palays, paling, palsade stockade
 Palled, aphetic form of ap(p)alled pale, weak, languid Palmere, palmer, originally a pilgrim to the Holy Land, then used for pilgrims more generally Palynge, adorning with heraldic pales or stripes Pan, bran-pan, skull
 Panade, large knife, cutlass Panne, pan
 Panter, fowling net
 Panyer, panner, bread-basket
 Papeer, Papor, pepper

- Papejay, Papingay, Popinjay, popinjay, parrot or woodpecker Papelard, hypocrite
Papelardye, hypocrisy
Paper, Papir, paper, account-book
Par, Per, by (Fr "par")
Parage, birth, lineage, rank
Paramentz, Parementz, rich hangings or clothing Paramour, sbst, paramour, concubine, love-making Paramour(s), adv, for love (Fr "par amour"), with passionate or romantic devotion, passionately See KnT, I, 1155, n Paraunter, Paraventure, peradventure, perhaps Par cas, see Percas Parcel, part, small portion Parchemyn, Parchemyn, parchment
Parcier, see Cuer
Pardee, Pardieux (lit "by God"), a common oath or asseveration certainly, verily Pardoner, pardoner, seller of indulgences Paregal, fully equal Parementz, see Paramentz
Parentele, relationship, kinship
Parfey, Parfay, by (upon) my faith
Parfit, Perfit, perfect
Parfournen, Perfournen, perform, execute, complete, fulfil, be equivalent to Parisshe, parish
Parisschen, parishioner
Paritone, pelitory of the wall
Parlement, parley, deliberation, decree, parliament Parodie, period, duration
Parsener, Parsoner, partner
Part, party side, share
Parten, divide into parts, separate, depart from, take leave, depart, disperse, share, participate (in), partynge felawes, sharing partners
Partener, partner, partaker
Partles, without part or share
Partnich, partridge
Party, adj, mixed, variegated (cf "parti-colored") Partye, part, portion, share, side, partusan, party Parvys, porch, room above a church-porch
 On other possible meanings see Gens Prol, I, 310, n
Pas, Paas, pl pas, pace, step, gate, yard, distance, grade, degree, goon a paas, walk at a footpace, thousand pas a mile Passage, passage, way, period (of time)
Passant, excelling, surpassing Passen, Pacen, surpass, excel, outdo, conquer, pass by, pass away, depart Passing, surpassing, excellent
Passioun, passion, suffering, passive impression or feeling Pastee, pasty
Patente, letter patent, papal license Paternoster, the Lord's prayer Patren, recite the paternoster
- Patrimoine, patrimony
Patroun, patron, pattern
Paunche, paunch
Pawmes, palms (of the hand)
Pax, the "osculatorium," used at mass for the "kiss of peace"
Pay, pleasure, satisfaction
Payen, pay, satisfy, please, appease Payen, adj, pagan
Payndemayn, fine white bread
Payne, see Peyne
Peche, peach
Peçok, peacock, peçok-arwes, arrows with peacock's feathers Pecunial, pecuniary Peer, see Pere
Pe(e)rie, pearl
Peert (aphetic form of apert), forward, saucy, bold Pees, peace
Peire, see Paire
Peiren, impair, damage
Pekke, peck (measure)
Pel, peel, small castle
Peler, see Pile(e)r Pelet, pellet, cannon-ball
Penaunt, penitent
Pencil (1), pencil, brush
Pencil (2), Pensel (for penoncel), small pennon or streamer, lady's token borne by a knight Penitancer, confessor who imposes penance Penitence, penance
Penne, pen
Penner, pen-case
Penoun, pennon, ensign of knight-bachelor Pensel, see Pencil (2)
Peny, pl penyes, pens, penny, money
Penyble, painstaking, inured (to pain)
Pepr, see Papeer
Peple, see Poepel
Percas, Par cas, perchance
Percely, Persly, persley
Percen, pierce, stab
Perchance, perchance, probably, doubtless Perche, perch, bar, horizontal rod Parchemyn, see Parchemyn
Pere, peer, equal
Peregryn, pilgrim, foreign Pere-jonette, early pear
Peres, pears
Perfit, see Parfit
Perfournen, see Parfournen
Perissen, perish, destroy Perled, studded with drops like pearls
Perree, Perrye, jewelry, precious stones
Pers, adj, Persian blue, blue-gray, also sbst, cloth of that color Persaunt, piercing, keen, sharp Perséveren, endure, continue Persone, Persoun, person, parson
Pertunacie, pertinacity
Pervinke, Pervenke, periwinkle
Peßen, sbst pl, peas
Peßen, vb, appease
Peßible, Paisible, peaceable, gentle, tranquil

- Pestilence, pestilence, plague, harm, disaster (common in curses)
 Peter, a common oath, by St Peter!
 Peyne, Payne, pain, grief, distress, trouble, care, effort, toil, penalty, pain of torture, in the peyne, under torture Peynen, usually refl, take pains or trouble, strive, endeavor
 Peynten, pt peymte, peymted(e), pp peymt(ed), paint color smear over Peyntour, painter
 Peynture, painting
 Peyre, see Paire Peytre, poultry, collar for horse (originally breast-plate of horse in armor)
 Phares, see Mane
 Phusias, word of uncertain form and meaning See ML Epil, II, 1189, n Phutonissa, Phutonesse, pythonesse, witch
 See FrT, III, 1510, n
 Pich, pitch
 Pichen, pt pyghte, pitch, prick, pierce
 Pietee, Pietous, see Pitee, Pitous Piggesnye (lit "pig's eye"), a flower (perhaps the trillium), then, a term of endearment
 See MillT I, 3268, n
 Pighite, see Pichen
 Piken (1), pick, pick at, adorn, despoil
 Piken (2), peek, peep
 Pikerel, young pike
 Pilche, outer garment with fur Pile(e)r, Peler, pillar, column, used as adj, supporting, propping up
 Piled, pp used as adj, deprived of hair, bald See Pillen Possibly, in some passages, the adj means covered with pile or hair
 See RvT, I, 3935, n
 Pilen, pillage, plunder, rob
 Pillen, rob, plunder, peel
 Pilour, pillager, robber, spoiler
 Pil(o)we, pillow
 Pilwe-beer, pillow-case
 Piment, spiced and sweetened wine Pin, pin, brooch, thin wire, hangeth on a joly pin, is in high spirits (original meaning uncertain)
 Pinchen, pinch, pleat, pinchen at, fig, find fault (with), blame
 Piper, piper, used as adj, suitable for making pipes
 Pissemyre, pissure ant Pistel, epistle, letter, message, communication
 Pit, Put (North dial), pit
 Pit, see Putten Pitaunce, pittance, allowance of food to inmates of a religious house, gifts Pitee, Pietee, pity, a pity Pith, strength, vigor, marrow Pitous, Pietous, pitiful, merciful sorrowful, mournful, piteous sad, pitiable, excusable
 Place, Plas, place, manor-house
 Plage, region, quarter, direction Plane, plane-tree
 Planete, planet
 Plantayn, plantain
- Plante, Plaunte, plant slip, piece of cut wood staff cudgel
 Plas, see Place
 Plat, flat, blunt, downright certain, plain,
 also adv
 Plate, plate (used in armor), the sight on the rule of an astrolabe Playn, Pleyn, even, smooth, flat, clear, plain also adv
 Ple, plea
 Pleadour, pleader, lawyer
 Pleđen, Pleten, plead argue, sue at law
 Plegge, pledge
 Plein, Pleinen, Pleinte, see Pleyn, etc
 Plentee, plenty, plenitude, fulness, abundance
 Plentevous, plenteous, plentiful Plesauce, pleasure, delight, happiness, amusement, kindly or pleasant behavior, pleasing object or experience
 Pleßen, please
 Pleten, see Pleđen
 Pley, Play, play, sport, game, entertainment, delusion, joke, jest, amorous or wanton dalliance
 Pleyen, play, be amused or playful, rejoice, amuse one's self, take a holiday, play (on an instrument)
 Pleyn (1) (Lat "plenus"), full, complete,
 also adv
 Pleyn (2) (Lat "planus"), see Playn Pleynen (sometimes refl), complain, lament, make complaint (against), whanny (as a horse)
 Pleyner, plenary, full Pleynte, plaint, complaint, lament Plicchen (? var of plukken), pt plughte, pp plight, pluck, pull, draw or tear out Plight(e), see Plicchen and Plighten Plighten, pt plughte pp plight, plight, pledge Plhten, fold, turn backward and forward
 Plough, Plough, plough
 Plomet, plummet, weight
 Plom-rewle, plumb-rule
 Plo(u)ngen, plunge
 Plowman, ploughman
 Plowmes, plumes Plungng, stormy, rainy (lit "plungng" or "causing plunges")
 Plyt(e), plight, unhappy state or condition
 Pocok, see Pęcok
 Poepie, Peple, People, Puple, people, populace
 Poeplish, popular, pertaining to the populace Poeste, see Pouste
 Poesye, poetry
 Point, point, position, part, end, tag, object state, condition, in good point, in good condition, at point devys, exactly, to perfection, point for point in every particular Pontel, stylus writing implement Pointen, stab, pierce, point, describe.
 Poke, bag
 Poken, poke, nudge, incite
 Poket, small bag
 Pokkes, pocks, pustules
 Pqlax, pole-axe, battle-axe

- Pollut, pp, polluted
 Polyve, pulley
 Pome-garnettys, pomegranates
 Pomel, top
 Pomely, dappled, marked with round spots like an apple Pumpe, pomp
 Pool (1), pole, staff
 Pool (2), pole, northern or southern point of the heavens or of the earth's surface Pool, pool
 Popelote, doll, pet, darling
 Popet, puppet dainty little person Popler, poplar-tree, also collective Poplexye, apoplexy
 Poppen, adorn, trick out
 Poppere, small dagger
 Poraille, poor people
 Porche, porch
 Pore, see Povre
 Porfure, porphyry (used as a mortar)
 Porisme, corollary
 Portatif, portable
 Porte-colys, portuculis
 Porter, Portour, porter
 Porthors, portesse, breviary Portreytour, portrayer
 Ppse, cold in the head
 Ppsen, suppose, assume for the sake of argument
 Posicoun, thesis, supposition, hypothesis
 Positif, positive, positif laws, law of decree or enactment, as opposed to natural law Possen, push, toss
 Possessioner, member of an endowed religious order
 Post, post, support, pillar Postum, imposthume, abscess Potage, soup
 Potente, staff, crutch
 Potestat, potentate
 Pothecharie, see Apotecarie
 Pouches, pouch, bag, pocket
 Poudre, powder, dust, gunpowder, poudre-marchant, a flavoring powder
 Poun, pawn (at chess)
 Poupen, puff, blow
 Pouren (1), pore, gaze steadily, pore over, examine closely, peep Pouren (2), pour
 Pous, pulse
 Pouste, Poeste, power
 Povre, Pore, Poure, poor, also adv
 Povrelche, Poureliche, Povrely, Pourely, Porely, poorly, in poverty Pownage, pannage, food for swine
 Pownsonen, pierce or punch with holes, stamp Poynant, Poinant, Pugnaunt, poignant, pungent, hot with spices Poynt, Poyntel, Poyuten, see Point, etc
 Praktisour, practitioner Prauncen, prance, run about Praye, sbst, see Preye Preambulacioun, preambing
 Præcen, see Præsen
 Præchen, preach
 Præchour, preacher
 Precious, precicus, valuable, fastidious, over-nice Predestinat, pp predestinated Predestinee, predestination Predicacioun, preaching, sermon
 Pref, Proef, Preve, proof, test, experience, experiment, with yvel preef, bad luck to you (a curse)
 Præes, press, crowd, throng, stress of battle, write in prees, push one's self, compete, take a risk See also Presse, the relation of which to Præes is not quite clear
 Præesen, see Præsen
 Preest, priest
 Preferren, have preference or precedence over, precede Preignant, urgent, pressing
 Preisen, praise, appraise, estimate, prize, esteem Prenostik, prognostic
 Prente, print
 Prenten, print, imprint
 Prentis, apprentice
 Præsen, press forward, throng, constrain, hasten Present, adv, presently, at once, also adj Presentarie, ever-present
 Presently, at present, at the moment
 Presoun, Prison, prison
 Presse, instrument for pressing, cupboard, clothes-press, linen-press, mould, on presse, under a press, suppressed, low-spirited
 See also Præes
 Præssen, see Præsen
 Pressure, wine-press
 Prest, adj, ready, prepared, prompt Pretenden, aim, tend, seek after Preteri', past time
 Pretorie, the Pretorian cohort, the imperial guard
 Preve, see Pref
 Proven, prove, approve, exemplify, test, undergo a test, succeed
 Prevetee, see Privetee
 Prev(e)y, see Privee
 Prev dence, foresight
 Preye, Praye, prey
 Preyen, Prayen, pray, beg, beseech
 Preyere, Prayere, prayer
 Preynen, see Proynen
 Preys, praise
 Preysen, praise
 Priskasour, hunter on horseback
 Prikinge, pricking, spurring (a horse), hard riding, tracking the hare by footprints Prikke, prick, point, dot, small mark, pin's point, degree, pitch, critical moment sting, omcuture, stab
 Prik(k)en, pt prighte, priked, prick, spur incite, rouse, ache Prime, prime, the canonical hour (beginning at 6 A.M.), then the period from six till nine (ending at high prime, prime large) Principal, principal, chief, cardinal.
 Pris, see Prys
 Privee, sbst, privy

Privee, Privy, Prev(e)y, adj., privy, secret, private, intimate, closely attendant, also adv
Privetee, privacy, private affairs or counsel, secrecy, private apartments, private parts Probleme, problem
Proces, process, proceeding, matter, argument, story course of time or events Procuratour, Procourtour, proctor, agent, attorney, collector of alms Proef, see Preef
Proeven, see Preven
Prohemye (var Proheme), proem, prologue Prolacioun, utterance Prollen, prowl, search widely Prologe, prologue, prelude Pronouncen, pronounce, declare, announce Prophecye, prophecy
Prophete, prophet
Propre, own, especial, peculiar, complete, perfect, handsome, comely, well formed or grown Proprely, properly, fitly, appropriately, naturally, exactly, literally Propretee, peculiar property, individual character or characteristic, quality, possession, property
Prosen, write in prose
Prospectyves, perspective-glasses, lenses, magic glasses to reveal the future
Prospere, prosperous
Provende, provision, stipend, allowance
Proverb, proverb, saying
Proverben, pp provenbed, said in proverbs Provost, prefect, praetor, magistrate
Provostrye, office of provost, praetorship Prow, profit, benefit, advantage
Prowesse, prowess, valor, excellence, profit
Proynen, Preynen, prune, trim, make neat Pryde, Pruyde, pride
Pryen, pry, peer, gaze, spy
Prymerole, primrose
Pryme temps, beginning, the spring
Prys, price, value, worth, excellence, praise, esteem, reputation, prize, reward Publsshhen, publish proclaim Publysshchen var Publsshhen, refl vb, repopulate themselves be propagated Pugnaunt, see Poynaunt
Pullayle, poultry
Pullen, pull draw, pluck, pulle a finch, see Gen Prol I, 65, n Pulpet, Pulpit, pulpit
Pultrye, poultry
Puniss(h)en, Punycen, punish Puple, see People
Purchacen, Purchasen, purchase, buy, procure, acquire obtain, win, contrive, provide, bring about, transfer by conveyancing Purchas, gain acquisition, proceeds of begging or stealing Purchasour, conveyancer, or purchaser of land for one's self Pure, adj. pure, very, utter also adv
Puren, cleanse, pp pured, refined, very pure Purified, trimmed at the edges

Purple, purple
Purprise, enclosure, precinct
Pursevaunt, pursuivant
Pursu(y)t(e), pursuit, perseverance, continuance, prosecution Purtreyen, Portreyen, draw Purveyable, provident, careful
Purveyaunce, providence, foresight, provision, equipment
Purveyen, provide, foresee
Put, see Pit
Put(e)rie, whoredom
Putours, procurers
Putten, contr pr 3 sg put pt putte, pp putt (North dial put) put, lay, suppose, take for granted, impose, set, add, settle, establish Pye, magpie
Pyk, pike (fish)
Pykepurs, pick-purse Pyled, see Piled
Pyn, pine-tree
Pyne, pain, torment, suffering, place of torment, toil, effort
Pynen, torture, examine by torture, suffer, grieve, pine away Pypen, pipe, whistle, play on a pipe, make a faint or squeaking noise, hiss, pypping-hoot, piping-hot Pyrie, pear-tree

Q

Qua(a)d, evil, bad
Quaille, Quayle, quail
Quaken, pt quook, pp quaked, quake, tremble, shiver, shake Quakke, hoarseness
Qualm, plague pestilence, death, loss, damage
Quappen, shake, toss, heave beat, palpitate Quarel, arrow or square bolt used with the cross-bow Quarele, Querele, quarrel complaint Quarter-night, nine o'clock, when a quarter of the night is gone Quarteyne, quartan fever
Queint, see Queynt
Quck, Kek, quack (of a duck or goose) Quellen, kill smite
Quemen, please subserve Quenchen, pt queynte pp queynt, quench extinguish, put an end to Quene, queen
Queue, quean concubine Querele, see Quarele
Querne, hand-mill
Querrour, quarry-worker
Questmongeres, questmen, jurymen
Quethen, pt quod, say, declare, quethe hm quyte cry hm quit, commonly restricted in use to pt quod quoth
Queynt(e), see Quenchen
Queynte, sbst pudendum Queynt(e), adj. strange, curious, curiously contrived elaborate ornamented, neat artful, sly, graceful, make it queynt(e) be offish or disdainful, make it strange or difficult, also, show pleasure or satisfaction Queynte, adv, skilfully artfully

Queyntelyche, adv, strangely, curiously, cunningly, skilfully Queyntyse, finery, ornament, elegance
Quete, quiet rest
Quik, alive, lively, quick ready, intelligent Quishin, cushion
Quitly, adv, freely, entirely Quit(te), see Quyten
Quod, see Quethen
Quoniam, pudendum
Quook, see Quaken
Quynnye, "a part in music, one octave above the treble" (NED) Quyrboilly, boiled skin (leather)
Quystroun, scullion
Quyten, pt quite, pp quit, reoute repay, reward, recompense, ransom, set free, discharge, quyte hwr uhyle, repay her tyme (or trouble)

R

Raa, roe (North dial)
Raby, rabbi
Racyne, root
Rad(de), see Ređen
Radevore, tapistry See LGW, 2352, n
Raffles, raffles
Raft(e), see Reven
Rage, rage, madness folly, passion, violent grief or desire, blast, violent rush Ragen, indulge in amorous or wanton dalliance Ragerye, wantonness, passion
Rakel, rash, hasty
Rakelnesse, Rekelnesse, rashness
Raken, pp raked y-reken, rake
Rake-stele, rake-handle
Raket, the game of rackets
Raklen, behave rashly
Ram, ram, Aries (in the zodiac)
Ramage, wild
Rammush, ramlhke (in odor)
Rampen, romp, rear, behave violently Rape, haste
Rape, adv, quickly
Rapen, vb in phr rape and renne, seize and carry away Rascaulle, mob
Rasour, razor
Rated, pp, berated scolded (of uncertain etymology)
Rathe, adv, quickly, soon, early Rather, adj, former, earlier, also adv, sooner, more willingly Raughte, see Rechen
Raunsoun, ransom
Raven, rave, be mad, act or speak madly
Ravishen, Ravysen, seize, snatch, appropriate, carry off, take greedily, ravish, violate Ravyne, ravening, greediness, rapine, plunder, theft prey Ravynour, Ravyner, plunderer

Ravysable, ravishing, eager for prey Ravysen, see Ravishen
Rayed, striped
Real, Rial, regal, royal Realme, Reaume, Re(a)wme, Rejme, realm Realte, royalty
Rebating, abatement
Rebekke, old woman See FrT, III, 1377, n
Rebel, adj, rebellious
Rebounden, rebound, return
Recchelees, reckless, careless, regardless of duty or discipline See Gen Frol I, 179 n Recchen, Rekken (1), pt ro(w)ghie, rock, care, heed Recchen (2), interpret expound
Recete, receipt, recipe
Receyven, Resceiven, Resseyven, pp received, receive, in astrology, appued to a planet which is favorably situated with respect to other planets
Rechasen, chase, pursue
Rechen, pt reghie, raughte, reach touch, stretch out, deliver, hand over Reclaymen, bring a hawk to the lure entice Recomaunden, Recomenden, recommend, command, commit Recomforten, Reconforten, comfort or encourage again
Recompensacioun, recompense Reconciled, Reconsiled, reconciled, reconsecrated Reconforten, see Recomforten
Reconsien, reconle
Reconysaunce, recognizance
Record, record, report, testimony
Recorden, record witness, bear in mind, remember, call to mind
Recours, recourse, return, resort, orbit
Recoveren, Rekeveren, recover, regain, get, heal, retrieve Recoverer, recovery, remedy
Recreaundise, cowardliness
Recreaunt, recreant, confessing himself defeated, cowardly Recured, recovered
Red(de), see Ređen
Reddour, severity, rigor, harshness
Rede, adj, made of reed (musical instrument)
Ređeless, without counsel
Ređely, Ređily, readily, soon, easily, truly Ređen, contr pr 3 sg ređ, pt redde, radde, pp red, rad, read, advise, counsel, interpret, study, describe, give an account of Redouten, fear, respect, revere
Redressen, amend, reform, assert, vindicate, refl, rise again
Reducen, sum up
Ređy, ready, prepared, dressed, at hand
Ređed, advice, counsel, plan, help, remedy, profit; adviser, helper, dat phr to rede, I can no rede, I am at a loss, without counsel
Ređed, adj, red, also sbst Reeft, rift
Reęs, haste, rush
Refect, pp, refreshed, restored Referren, refer, bring back, reduce Refreynge, refrain, burden

Refreyden, cool down, grow cold Refreynden, bridle, curb Reft(e), see Reven
Refus, pp as adj , refused, rejected
Refut, Refuyt, refuge, safety
Regal, regal, royal, pl as sbst , royal attributes Regalye, royal rule, authority
Registre, register, list, table of contents
Rehercen, Rehersen, rehearse, repeat, enumerate Rehersaille, rehearsal, enumeration Reheten, cheer, console, encourage Reighte, see Rechen
Re(i)gne, Reine, Reyne, kingdom, realm, rule, government Re(i)gnen, Reynen, reign, rule, rule over, prevail in Reine, see Re(i)gne
Rejoyen, rejoice
Rekelnesse, see Rakeinesse
Reken, reek, smoke
Rek(e)nen, reckon
Rekeveren, see Recoveren
Rekken, see Rechen (1)
Relay, set of fresh hounds (or horses) posted to take up the chase Relees, release, relief, ceasing, out of relees, without ceasing Releevynge, remedy
Relenten, melt
Reles(s)en, release, give up, relieve, remit, forgive Releven, relieve, revive, recompense, restore (to life, wealth, etc) Religoun, religion, religious life, a religious order, or the life of the member of one Religious, pious, belonging or devoted to a religious order, also sbst , a monk or nun Reime, see Realme
Remede, Remedye, remedy
Remembren, remember, remind, come to mind, call to mind, sometimes refl Remena(u)nt, remnant, remainder, rest Remeven, Remoeven, Remu(w)en, remove Remorden, cause remorse, vex, trouble Remounten, strengthen, comfort
Remuable, changeable, variable, capable of motion Remu(w)en, see Remeven
Ren, run (imv)
Renably, fluently, readily
Renden, Renten, pt rente, pp rent, rend, tear Rendren, render, recite Renegat, renegade
Reneyen, deny, renounce
Renge, rank, file
Renged, pp , ranged in rows
Rennen (1), pt sg ran, pl and pp ronnen, run, go, be current, spread, flow, continue Rennen (2), see Rapen
Renomed, renowned Renomee, renown
Renoun, renown
Renovelance, renewal

Renovellen, renew be renewed
Rente, rent, tribute revenue, regular income Rent(e)(n), see Renden
Repair, resort
Reparen, Repeyren, repair go betake one's self, resort to, return, go home, dwell Repeled, pp , repealed
Repentaunt, penitent Repeyren, see Reparen
Repleccioun, repletion Repleet, replete, full Replenys(h)en, replenish, fill
Reportour, reporter, narrator, judge, referee (?)
Rep(p)licacioun, folding, reply, retort, with-outen repphaccoun, without reply being allowed Rep(p)lyen, reply, object Repreef, see Repreve
Reprehencioun, reprehension, reproof
Reprehenden, reprehend, reproach blame Reprevable, reprehensible, discreditable
Repreve, Repreef, reproof, shame, reproach Repreven, Reproeven, Reproven, reprove, reproach, blame, discredit, stultify Repugnen, be repugnant (to) Requerable, desirable
Requeren, require, demand, ask, seek, beg, entreat Requeste, request
Resalgar, realgar, disulphide of arsenic Resceiven, see Receyven
Resc(o)us, rescue, aid, support
Rescowen, rescue, save Resemblable, similar Resen, shake, tremble
Resolgen, flow out, melt, dissolve, be held in solution Resonable, reasonable, ready of speech Resort, resource
Resoun, reason, right, correct way, argument, speech, opinion, cause, consideration, regard, estimation, order (technical term in rhetoric)
Resounen, resound
Resport, regard, respect
Respyt, respite, delay
Respyten, hesitate, delay, refuse Resseyven, see Receyven
Reste, rest, repose, time of repose
Resteles, adj , restless, also adv
Resten, rest, remain, repose Restreynen, restrain, cut short Ret, see Reden
Retenue, retinue, suite, troop
Rethor, orator, rhetorician
Rethorien, adj , rhetorical, also sbst Rethoryke, rhetoric
Reto(u)nen, return, revolve, bring back Retraccioun, retraction, something withdrawn Retreten, treat again, reconsider
Retrograd, retrograde "moving in a direction contrary to that of the sun's motion in the ecliptic" (Skeat) Reule, Rewle, rule, revolving plate or rod,

- on the back of an astrolabe, used for measuring and taking altitudes
- Reulen, Rewien, rule, guide, control
- Reuthe, Rewthe, *Routhē, ruth, pity, compassion, lamentation, a pitiful sight or occurrence
- Reve, reeve, baliff
- Revel, revelry, minstrelsy
- Revelour, reveller
- Revelous, given to revelry
- Reven, pt refte, rafte pp refst, raft, rob, plunder, take away, bereave
- Reverdye (var Reverye), joy, delight
- Reverten, bring back
- Revesten, clothe agam
- Revøken, recall
- Reward, regard consideration
- Rewde, see Rude
- Rewe, row, order, line, a-rewe, by rewe, in order, one after another
- Rew(e)ful, rueful, lamentable sad, also sbst
- Rewel-boon, ivory (perhaps that of the narwhale)
- Rewen, rue, be sorry, have pity, do penance (for), sometimes impers
- Rewle, see Reule
- Rewlich, pitiable
- Rewme, see Realme
- Rewthe, see Reuthe
- Reye, rye
- Reyes, pl, round dances
- Reyn, Rem, ran, ran-storm
- Reyne, see Re(i)gne
- Reyne, rem, bridle
- Reynen (1), pt ron, reyned, ran, rain down
- Reynen (2), see Re(i)gnen
- Reynes, pl, reins, kidneys, loins
- Reysen (1), raise, build up, obtain, exact
- Reysen (2), make a raid or military expedition (with special reference to Prussian campaigns)
- Reysyns, grapes
- Rial, see Real
- Riban, ribbon
- Ribaned, adorned with ribbons or gold-lace
- Ribanynge, ribbon-work, trimming or border of silk
- Ribaud, laborer, coarse or ribald person
- Ribaudye, ribaldry, coarse jesting
- Ribube, term of contempt for an old woman, probably an application of ribibe, ribible, fiddle See FrT, III, 1377, n
- Ribble, Rubible, rebeck, lute or fiddle
- Riche, rich
- Richesse, riches, wealth
- Riden, see Ryden
- Ridled, plaited, gathered in folds
- Riet, rete, or net, of an astrolabe
- Right, right, justice, pl, rights, true reasons, at alle rightes, in all respects, have right, be in the right (Fr "avoir raison"), right circle, circle perpendicular to the equator
- Right, adv, just, exactly, completely, very, extremely
- Rightful, rightful, lawful, correct, just, perfect, rightful age, best age, prime
- Rightwis, righteous, just
- Rigour, rigor, severity
- Rinde, rind, bark, skin
- Ringen, pt sg roug, pl and pp rongen rungen, ring, resound
- Riot, see Ryot
- Rioten, indulge in wanton or riotous living
- Riotour, riotous liver
- Risshe, rush
- Rist, see Rysen
- Rit, see Ryden
- Rivelyng, puckering
- Rivér(e), river, river-bank, hawking-ground
- Robbour, robber
- Roche, rock
- Rochet, Roket, outer garment, smock-frock, cloak
- Rode, complexion
- Rode, rood, cross
- Rody, ruddy
- Roggen, shake
- Rogh, pl rouve, rough
- Roghthe, see Recchen (1)
- Rougnous, Roynous, scurvy, rotten
- Roket, see Rochet
- Rok(ke), rock
- Rok(k)en, vb, rock
- Rolle, roll
- Rollen, roll, revolve, turn over, talk over, discuss
- Romblen, see Rumblen
- Rømen, roam, wander, travel, go
- Røn, rose-bush
- Røn, see Reynen (1)
- Rønd, round
- Rong(en), see Ringen
- Rong, sbst, rung
- Ronnen, see Rennen (1)
- Røp, roe
- Røpd, see Ryden
- Roodde-beem, beam which supports a cross
- Røof, see Ryven
- Roof, dat rove, roof
- Røgre, uproar
- Røgs, see Rysen
- Røgst, roast meat
- Røpen (pp, of ripen, repen), reaped
- Røren, roar, resound, lament loudly
- Røsen, rosy, made of roses
- Røser, rose-bush
- Røse-røed, red as a rose
- Røsten, roast
- Røte, a stringed instrument
- Rote, root, source, basic principle, in astronomy, a number written opposite a date as a basis for calculation of corresponding quantities for other dates, in astrology, the "epoch" of a nativity
- Roten, rotten, corrupt
- Roten, rot, cause to rot
- Roughte, see Recchen (1)
- Rouken, cower, crouch
- Roulen, roll, gad about
- Roum, room, space, dat phr a-roume
- Roum, Rowm, spacious, roomy
- Rouncy, carthorse, nag, strong, powerful horse

Rounde, roundly, easily, freely, with full tone Roundel, roundel, roundelay, small circle Roundnesse, roundness, orbit
Rounen, whisper
Route, rout, company, band, number, flock
Routen (1), assemble
Routen (2), roar, make a noise or murmur, snore
Routhes, see Reuthe
Rove, see Roof
Rowe, row, line, ray
Rowe, roughly, angrily, also adj pl (see Rogh) Rowm, see Roum
Royalliche, royally
Roylen, roll, wander, meander
Royne, roughness
Roynous, see Roignous
Rubee, rubv
Ruble, see Ribible
Rubryfing, rubefaction, making red Rubriche, rubric
Ruddock, robin
Rude, Rewde, rude, rough, poor, humble, boorish, also sbst Rudehche, rudely, roughly Ruggy, rough
Rum, ram, ruf, meaningless words used to illustrate alliteration
Rumble, rumbling sound, rumor
Rumblen, rumble, make a murmuring noise Rungen, see Ringen
Rusen, make a detour to escape the hounds Ryal, see Real
Ryden, contr pr 3 sg rit, pt sg roqd pl and pp riden, ride, lie at anchor, ryden out go on an expedition, go out on a tour of inspection
Ryding, procession, jousting
Rym, rime
Rymen, rime
Rymeyed, rimed
Rympled, wrinkled
Ryot, Riot, riotous or wanton living, debauchery extravagance Rype, ripe mature seasonable
Rys, twig spray
Rysen, contr pr 3 sg rust, pt sg roqs, pl and pp risen, rise, arise
Ryte, rite, observance
Ryven, pt sg roaf, pierce, cut, tear, thrust

S (see also C)

Saaf, see Sauf
Sachel, satchel bag
Sacrifyen, sacrifice
Sacnlege, outrage or violence upon sacred persons or things, applied to sorcery in Bo 1, pr 4, 279 ff
Sad, heavy, firm, stable, steady, fixed settled, sober, earnest, serious, staid, sorrowful, discreet Sadel, saddle
Saffronen, color or flavor with saffron, used figuratively in Pard Prol, VI, 345

Saffroun, saffron
Sailen, assail, attack
Saillour, dancer
Sak, sack bag
Sakked Freres, Friars of the Sack
Sakken, pp sakked, put in a sack
Sai, shall (North dial)
Sal armonyak, sal ammoniac See CYT, VIII, 798, n Salewen, Salu(w)en, Salowen, salute Sal peter, saltpeter, rock-salt
Sal preparat, prepared salt
Sa tartre, salt of tartar, carbonate of potash Sa(l)vacoun, salvation, safety, without any sa(l)vacoun, without saving any Salwes, willow-twigs, osiers Samit, samite, silk
Samon, salmon
Sang, song (North dial)
Sangwyn, blood-red, also sbst, red cloth Sanz, Sa(u)ns, without Sapience, wisdom
Sarge, serge
Sarpler, canvas sack
Sarsynesh, Saracen
Sauf, adj, safe, secure Sauf, Save, prep save, except Saufly, Savely, safely, with safety Saugh, see Seen
Sa(u)le, North form of Soule
Sa(u)ns, see Sanz
Sauter, psalter
Sautrye, psaltery Savacioun, see Sa(l)vacoun
Save, a decoction of herbs (Lat "sapa" = "mustum coctum" Ducange)
Save, prep save, except save your grace saving (keeping safe or intact) your grace Save-garde, safeguard safe-conduct Savely, see Saufly
Saverous, pleasant agreeable Savoren, see Savo(u)ren
Savory, pleasant
Savour, savor, flavor, smell odor, pleasure, interest
Savoured, perfumed
Savo(u)ren (var Savoren), impers taste smell pers, enjoy, relish care for Sawcefleem, having pimples or eruptions (Lat salsum phlegma) Sawe, saw, saying, word, speech Sawen, Say, see Seen
Sayen, essay, endeavor
Sayn, see Seyen, Seen
Saynt, see Ceynt
Scabbe, scab, a disease (of animals)
Scaffold, Scaffaut, scaffold shed on wheels, used sometimes for a stage, also to cover the approach of a battering-ram
Scalle, a scabby disease
Scalled, having the scall, scabby Scantlon, pattern
Scanttee, scantiness, scarcity
Scapen, escape
Scarmishyng, skirmishing
Scarmuch(e), skirmish
Scars, scarce, niggardly

Scathe, harm, misfortune, that was scathe, that was a pity Scatheless, harmlessly
 Sch-, see Sh-
 Science, science, knowledge, wisdom, a branch of learning, learned composition Sclat, slate
 S(c)laundre, slander, scandal, disgrace Slave, slave Sciendre, slender, thin, poor
 Scochoun, escutcheon
 Scoleryng, schooling
 Scole-matere, matter for the schools, scholastic question Scole-ward, school-ward, toward school
 Scoleyen, study, attend school
 Scomes, scums, foamings
 Scpre, hole, crack
 Scorkien, scorch shrivel Scornen, scorn, deride, jest at Scripture, writing, inscription, passage, text, used especially of Holy Scripture Scrit, writ, deed
 Scriveyn, scribe
 Scryvenyssh, like a scrivener Sechen, Seken, seek Secree, sbst, secret
 Secree, secret, trusty, confidential, able to keep secrets, also adv
 Secte, sect, company, religion
 Seculer, layman
 Seden, bear seed
 See (1), sea, fulle see, high tide
 See (2), seat, seat of power
 Seed-foul, birds living on seeds
 Seek, see Sik
 Seel (1), bliss, joy
 Seel (2), seal
 Seen, pt sg s(e)y, say, seigh, sigh, saugh, pl seyen, sawen, syen pp seyen seyn, sayn seen, inf infin to sene, see, behold, look
 Seer, sere, dry
 Se(e)stow, seest thou, see Seen Seet, see Sitten
 Seeth, see Sethen
 Sege, seat throne, siege
 Seggen, see Seen
 Seigh, see Seen
 Seignorye, doman, dominion
 Sein, see Seyen
 Seintuarie, sanctuary, holy object, relic
 Seisen, see Sesen
 Seistow, sayest thou, see Seyen
 Seken, Sechen, pt so(u)ghie, pp so(u)ght, seek, search, seken to, resort to, press towards, return to seke upon, attack, harass, to seke, to be sought, hard to find, at a loss, at fault
 Seker, Sekur, see Siker Sekernesse, Sikernesse, security
 Selde(n), seldom
 Seled, sealed
 Seinesse, happiness, bliss
 Sellen, pt solde, pp sold, sell, barter Sely, happy, blessed, innocent, good, kind, poor, wretched, hapless Semblable, similar

Semblance, semblance, appearance, resemblance
 Semblaunt, semblance appearance
 Semlihed, seemliness, gracefulness
 Sem(e)ly, seemly, comely, becoming, pleasing, also adv
 Semen, seem, appear, often impers
 Semes, seams
 Semcope, short cope, half-cope
 Seminge, seeming, appearance, to my seminge, in my judgment
 Semsound, half-sound
 Sen, since See Sin
 Senatorie, senatorial rank
 Sencer, censor
 Sendal, thin silk
 Senden, contr pr 3 sg sent, pt sente, pp sent, send Sene, inflected inf of Seen, see Sene, adj, visible, apparent to be seen Sengen, pp seynd, singe, broil Sengle, single Senuth, see Cenyth
 Sensibilities, perceptions
 Sensible, perceptible Sensyng, censuring (with incense)
 Sent, Sente, see Senden
 Sentement, sentiment, feeling, passion, sensibility, susceptibleness Sentence, meaning, significance, contents, subject, theme, opinion, decision, judgment, verdict, sentence Septemtrional, northern Septemtrion, north
 Serchen, search, visit, haunt Sereyns, sirens
 Sergeaunt, sergeant See the description of the Man of Law in the Explanatory Notes to Gen Pro
 Serial, see Cerial
 Serie, process, sequence of thought, argument
 Sermonen, preach, harangue Sermoning, discourse, argument
 Servage, servitude
 Serva(u)nt, servant, lover
 Serviable, serviceable
 Servisable, serviceable, willing to serve, useful Servitude, servitude
 Servyse, service, religious service, musical performance Sesen, Seisen, seize, possess (tech legal term), pp sesed seized, possessed Sesoun, season, prime Set, see Setten
 Sete, seat, throne
 Seten, see Sitten
 Setewale, see Cetewale
 Sethen, pt seeth, pp soden, seethe boil Setten, contr, pr 3 sg set, pt sette, pp set, set, put, appoint, suppose, imagine, reckon, count, care, esteem, stake (in a game), sette her carpe, made fools of them, wel set, seemly, suitable Seur, sure, also adv
 Seurly, surely
 Seur(e)tee, see Sur(e)tee

Sewen (1), Su(w)en, pursue, follow, ensue
 Sewen (2), see Sowen (2)
 Sewes, juices graves, broths Sewynge, conformable, similar Serte, sixth
 Sexteyn, sacristan
 Sexti, sixty
 Sey, Seyen, see Seen
 Seyen, Seggen, say
 Seyl, sail
 Seyn, see Seen
 Seynd, see Sengen Seynt, samt, holy Shaar, plough-share
 Shad, Shadde, see Sheden
 Shadowing, shadow, shaded spot
 Shadwe, shadow
 Shadwed, shadowed, shaded Shaken, pt sg shook, pl shoken, pp shaken, shake Shal, pt pr vb, pl shul(len), pt sholde, shulde, shall, must, is to, ought to, owes Shale, shell, husk
 Shalemyes, shawms, reed-pipes
 Sham(e)fast, modest, shy, ashamed
 Shamen, put to shame, make ashamed Shap, shape, form, privy member
 Shapen, pt sg shoop, pl shopen, pp shapen, shape, make, devise, contrive, plot, prepare, provide, intend, dispose (used especially of fate)
 Shaply, shapely, suitable, likely Shar, see Sheren
 Sharp, sharp, keen
 Sharpe, adv, sharply, shrilly Shaven, pp shaven, shave
 Shawe, wood
 Sheden, pt shedde, shadde, pp shad, shed, pour, diffuse, distribute, divide Sheef, sheaf
 Sheild, shield, French coin ("ecu")
 Shelden, Kentish form of Shilden
 Shenden, pt shente, pp shent, harm, injure, defile, destroy, ruin, spoil, disgrace, reproach, scold, come to harm, be injured
 Shendshipe, shame, disgrace
 Shene, bright, shining, fair, beautiful, also adv
 Shent, Shente, see Shenden
 Shepe, see Shipe
 Shepne, Shipne, stable, shed
 Shere, pair of shears
 Sheren, pt shar, pp shpr(e)n, shear, cut Sherte, shirt
 Sherynge-hokes, shearing-hooks (to cut ropes in a sea-fight)
 Shet, see Shetten
 Shete, sheet
 Sheten, pp shoten, shoot
 Sheter (lit "shooter"), fit for shooting
 Shethe, sheath
 Shetten, Shuten, pt shette, pp shet (Kentish), shut close, fasten, clasp Shewen, show, appear, portend, see, behold (far to shewe) Shewinge, sbst, showing, exhibiting, evidence, demeanor

Shewinge, evident
 Shiften, provide, ordain, distribute, assign Shilden, Shelden, shield, defend, forbid Shimmering, shimmer, glimmer Shine, shin Ship, ship, dat phr to shippe
 Shipe, Shepe, hire, reward
 Shipne, see Shepne
 Shurreve, sheriff
 Shuten, pp, defiled, foul Shuten, see Shetten
 Shutting, shutting
 Shode, parting of the hair, temple
 Shoken, see Shaken
 Sholde, see Shal
 Sholder-boon, bone of the shoulder-blade
 Shonde, shame, harm
 Shoo, pl shoos, shoon, shoe
 Shooq, see Shouven
 Shook, see Shaken
 Shoon, see Shoo
 Shoon, see Shynen
 Shoop, Shopen, see Shapen
 Shoppe, shop
 Shor(e)n, see Sheren
 Short(e)ly, briefly, in short Shot, arrow, dart, missile Shoten, see Sheten
 Shot-wyndowe, window with a hinge or bolt Shour, shower, attack, onslaught
 Shouven, pt sg shoof pl and pp shoven, shove, push, advance, bring into notice Shredden, shred, cut
 Shrewe, wicked person, scoundrel, wretch, ill-tempered person, shrew, also adj Shrewed, wicked, cursed Shrewen, beshrew, curse
 Shrifte, shrift, confession
 Shrighte, see Shryken
 Shrill (var Shyll), shrill
 Shrimp, small, puny creature
 Shroqf, see Shryven
 Shryken, Skryken, pt shrighte, shriek Shryne, shrine
 Shryned, enshrined, canonized
 Shryven, pt sg shroqf, pl and pp shrwen, shrive, confess Shulde, Shul(len), see Shal
 Shyned, see Shynen
 Shynen, pt sg shoon, shymed(e), pp shymed, shine Shynken (var Skyuken) pour out Shyvere, thin slice Shyveren, Cheveren, shiver, break
 Sib, related, akin
 Sigh, see Seen
 Sight(e), sight, look, foresight Sights, see Syken
 Signal, sign, token
 Signe, sign, proof
 Signet, signet-ring
 Signifaunce, significance, signification
 Sik, Seek, Syk, sick, ill
 Siker, sure certain, safe secure, also adv
 Sikeren, assure
 Sikerer, comp of Siker Sikuch(e), Sikly, sickly, ill, with ill will,

- sakly berth*, bears with difficulty (Lat 'aegre fert')
- Simulacroun, simulation, dissimulation
- Similitude, similitude, comparison, likeness counterpart, statement, proposition
- Simply, simply
- Simplesse, simplicity, unity
- Simplicitee, simplicity
- Sin, since
- Singen, pt sg sang, song, pl and pp songen, sing, recite
- Singularitees, singular parts, particulars
- Singular, single, particular, separate, private, peculiar, especial
- Singularly, singly
- Sinken, pt sank, pl and pp sonken, sink, cause to sink
- Sinne, sin
- Sire, sire, father, master, svr (usually without final -e) svr, a title in address
- Sisoures, scizzors
- Sit, see Sitten
- Site, site, situation
- Sith, adv, afterwards, thereupon
- Sith, since
- Sithe, scythe
- Sithen, conj and adv, since
- Sitten, contr pr 3 sg sit, pt sg sat, segt, pl seten, pp seten, sit, dwell, remain, be situated, suit befit, affect
- Sitting(e), North dial sittand, fitting
- Sixe, six
- Sixte, sixth
- Sk-, see also Sc-
- Scaffaut, see Scaffold
- Skale (1), scale (for measuring), graduated line or arc
- Skale (2), scale (of a fish or reptile)
- Skant, sparing niggardly
- Skale, reason, cause, argument, claim
- Skilful, reasonable (both pers and impers)
- Skullynge, reason
- Skrysten, see Shryken
- Skrype, scrip, bag, wallet
- Skulle, skull
- Skye, cloud
- Slaken, slacken, loosen assuage, appease, abate, cease, desist omit
- Slak(k)e, slack, loose, slow, late, soft
- Slaughtre, slaughter, murder
- Slaundre, see S(c)laundre
- Slawen, Slayn, see Slæen
- Sled, sledge, carriage
- Slæen, Slæon, pt sg slow(h), slough, pl slowen, pp slayn, slawen, slay, destroy extinguish
- Sleep, see Slepen
- Sleep, sleep, dat phr on-slepe, aslepe, asleep
- Sleere, slayer
- Sleigh, Sley, Sly, Sligh, skilful, artful, subtle, crafty, sly, deceitful, skilfully contrived
- Sleighte, Slighte, sleight, craft, cunning, skill, dexterity, numbness, trick, device, plan
- Slepen, pt sg sleep, slepte, pl slepen, slepten, sleep
- Slepy, sleepy, sleep-inducing, soporific
- Slewthe, Slouthe, sloth
- Sley, see Sleigh
- Slider, slippery
- Sligh, see Sleigh
- Slighte, see Sleighte
- Slingen, pt slong, sling, fling (one's self)
- Slt, see Slyden
- Slogardye, Slogardrye, sluggishness, sloth
- Sloggy, see Sluggy
- Slombren, slumber
- Slombry, sleepy
- Slong, see Slingen
- Slou, sloe
- Slouon, see Slæen
- Sloppe, loose over-garment
- Slough, Slow, slough
- Slough, adj, see Slow(e)
- Slough, see Slæen
- Slouthe, see Slewthe
- Slow, see Slough, sbst, and Slæen, vb
- Slowe, sbst, moth
- Slow(e), Slough, slow slack, slothful, idle
- Slowen, Slowh, see Slæen
- Sluggy, sluggish
- Sly, see Sleigh
- Slyden, contr pr 3 sg sht, slide, move, pass away
- Slyding, sliding, slippery, unstable
- Slyk, sleek, smooth
- Slyk, such (North dial)
- Smal, small, little, high, thin (of the voice), also sbst, a smal, a little, but smal, but little
- Smal, adv, little
- Smalish, smallish
- Smatren, smatter, defile
- Smert, adj, smart, quick, sharp, painful
- Smert(e), sbst smart, pain
- Smerte, sharply, smartly, sorely
- Smerten, smart, feel or cause pain or grief, suffer
- Smeten, see Smyten
- Smit, see Smyten
- Smithed, forged
- Smitted, smutted, sullied
- Smok, smock
- Smokees, without a smock
- Smoot, see Smyten
- Smoterliche, besmirched, sullied (in reputation)
- Smothe, smooth, also adv
- Smyten, contr pr 3 sg smut, pt smoot, pp, smuten, smeten, smute, strike, strike off
- Snare, snare, noose, trap
- Snawen, Snowen, snow, abound
- Snubben, chide, rebuke (lit "snub")
- Snorten, snort, sniff
- Snoute, snout, nose
- Snow, snow, argent (in heraldry)
- So, adv, so, to such a degree
- So (that), conj, provided that, whereas
- Sobre, sober, grave, demure
- Sobrenesse, sobriety
- Socour, Socours, succor, help
- Socouren, vb, succor, help
- Soden, see Sethen
- Sodeyn, sudden, quick, prompt, forward

Softe, soft, also adv
Softly, softly, gently, quietly Soght(e), see Seken
Sojour, sojourn, dwelling
Sojournen, sojourn, dwell, tarry, remain
Soken, toll
Sokyngly, gradually, slowly
Sol, Sol (Lat.), the sun
Solacen, cheer, comfort, amuse, refresh
Solas, comfort, consolation, amusement, entertainment, pleasure, rest Sold, Solde, see Sellen
Solempne, formal, ceremonious, pompous, splendid, important of public character, impressive, distinguished, festive merry Solempnitee, pomp, ceremony
Soleyn, solitary, unmade, sullen
Solsticium, solstice, "the point of the ecliptic most remote from the equator" (Skeat)
Som, pl som(m)e, indef pron and pronom adv., some, one, a certain one, som som (correlative), one another, al and som, alle and some, all and each, one and all, has tenth the som, one of ten, he and nine others
Somdel, somewhat
Somer, summer the warm season (sometimes including spring)
Som(m)e, see Som
Somnour, summoner, apparitor Somonce, summons
Som(p)nen, summon Somnolence, somnolence Somtyme, once, sometime, sometimes Sond, sand
Sonde, sending message or messenger, vilitation Sonded, sanded
Sondry, sundry, various Sone, son
Sone, soon, straightway, at once Song, Songen, see Singen
Sonken, see Sinken
Sonne, Sunne, sun
Sonner, sooner
Sonnish, sun-like, golden Sool, sole, single Soor, sore, wounded, sad
Sooth, true, wk form as sbst, the sothe, dat phr for sothe
Soothfastnesse, truth
Sooty, sooty, soiled with soot
Soper, Souper, supper
Sophistrye, wicked cunning Sophyme, sophism, subtlety, deceit
Sop(p)e, sop (of bread)
Sore, sore, wound, pain, misery
Sore, adv, sorely, ill, badly, strictly, closely, eagerly ardently Sormounten, Sour-Sur-, surmount, surpass Sort (1), lot, chance, destiny, divination Sort (2), sort, kind, class Sorted, allotted
Sorwe, sorrow, mourning, sympathy, in imprecation, with sorwe
Sorwen, sorrow
Sory, sorry, sorrowful, sad, sore, wretched, ill, unlucky, also adv

Soster, see Suster
Sote, see Swete
Sotel, see Sotil
Soteltee, subtlety, cunning, device
Soth-sawe, true saying proverb
Sotil, subtle, skilful, subtly woven, thin
 See also Subtil
Sotted, besotted, foolish
Soudiour, soldier
Soughe, Sowe, sow Sought, Soughte, see Seken
Soule, Sowle, soul
Souffre, sulphur
Soun, sound, boast, vaunt
Sound, unhurt, in good health
Sounden, make sound, heal
Sounen, sound, play upon (an instrument) utter, mean, signify, declare, proclaim, rehearse, sound or speak like, sounen in (to into), tend toward, make for, be consonant with See Gen Prol, I, 307, n Soupen, sup
Souper, see Soper
Souple, supple, pliant yielding Souplen, bend, make supple
Sour, sour, bitter, cruel
Sourden, arise, originate, be derived Soure, sourly, bitterly Sourmounten, see Sormounten
Sours, source, upward leap or flight
Souter, cobbler
Souvenauce, remembrance
Soveraynetee, Sovereyntee, sovereignty, supremacy Sovereyn, adj., supreme, chief, very high, superior in astrology the western signs of the zodiac, regarded as superior to the eastern, also sbst, sovereign, lord master, lady, superior Sovereyntee, see Soveraynetee
Sowdan, sultan
Sowdanesse, sultanness
Sowded, fastened united, hence, confirmed Sowe, see Soughe
Sowen (1), pp sowen, sow
Sowen (2), Sewen, pt sowed sew Sowken, suck, cheat, embezzle
Sowle, see Soule
Sowled, endowed with a soul
Sownen, see Sounen
Sowres, sorrels, bucks
Space, space, room, space of time, opportunity, the space meanwhile (?) Spak, Spaken, see Speken
Span, see Spinnen
Spanne, span
Span-newe, span-new, new as a chip just cut (ON 'span-nyr') Sparen, spare, leave unhurt, cease, refrain, also reflex, be haughty, reserved offish Sparhawk, see Sperhawk
Sparke, spark
Sparkle, small spark
Sparre, spar, wooden beam
Sparred, Sper(r)ed, barred, sparred, fastened Sparth, battle-axe Spaunysshung, expanding, extending

- Spaynel, spaniel
 Spece, species kind, sort
 Speche, speech, discourse
 Spectacle, glass, eye-glass
 Speculacioun, contemplation
 Speden, speed, succeed, prosper, cause to prosper, hasten, expedite, accomplish Speed, success, help, benefit, advantage dat phr for commune spede, for the good of all Spēken, pt sg spak, pl speken, spaken, pp spoken, speak Spell, story, narrative, incantation (in night-spell)
 Spence, buttery
 Spere, spear
 Spere, sphere, orbit, globe
 Spereð, see Spared
 Sperhawk, sparrowhawk
 Sperme, seed
 Sper(r)ed, see Spared
 Speten, see Spitten
 Spewen, spew, vomit
 Spiced, spiced, over-fastidious, scrupulous
 See Gen Prol, I, 526, n
 Spicerye, mixture of spices oriental goods (including fruits, cloths, and other products)
 Spie, sbst, spy
 Spillen, spill, waste, destroy, kill, perish
 Spinnen, pt sg span, pl sponnen, spin Spir, spire, stalk stem, shoot sprout Spirit, spirit, on the tech use in physiology see KnT, I, 2749, n, in alchemy, see CYT, VIII, 820, n
 Spitel, hospital
 Spitous, spiteful, malicious, inhospitable
 Spitten, Speten, spit
 Sponnen, see Spinnen
 Spore, spur
 Spornen, Spurnen, spurn, trample on, kick, trip one's self, stumble Spousaille, espousal, wedding
 Spouse, spouse, husband, wife
 Spousen, espouse, marry
 Sprang, see Springen (1)
 Spraynd, Spreynd, see Springen (2)
 Spreðen, pt spradde, pp sprad, spread, open, cover disperse Sprengen, see Springen (2)
 Spring (1), beginning, first growth, dawn
 Spring (2), lively dance
 Springen (1), pt sprang, sprong, pp sprongen, spring, leap, spring up, rise, spread, increase, sprongen, advanced Springen (2), Sprengen, pp spreynd, spraynd, sprinkle, scatter, sow Sprong, Sprongen, see Springen (1)
 Spryngoldes, catapults
 Spurnen, see Spornen
 Squames, scales
 Square, square
 Squaymous, squeamish
 Squieren, play the square to, attend
 Squerly, like a square
 Squyer, squire
 Squyre, carpenter's square, rule for measuring Stablen, establish Stableness, stability
 Stablissen, establish Stadie, stadium, race-course
 Staf, g sg staves, staff, stick, shaft of a car or wagon (?) See Anel, 184, n Staf-slyng, sling, attached to a staff or handle Stage, place, position
 Staire, see Steyre
 Stak, see Stiken
 Stakeren, stagger
 Stal, see Stelen
 Stalke, stalk, stem, piece of straw, upright of a ladder
 Stalken, stalk, move or walk stealthily or slowly, creep up Stall(e), stall
 Stamin, tammie, coarse cloth of woolen or worsted Stampen, bray (in a mortar)
 Stanchen, see Staunchen
 Standen, see Stonden
 Stank, pond, pool
 Stant, see Stonden
 Stapen, Stopen, pp, as adj, advanced (lit "stepped") Stare, starling
 Starf, see Sterven
 Stark, strong, severe, downright Startlynge, Stertlynge, starting, leaping, skit-tish, making a sudden movement Staunchen, stanch, satisfy
 Steðe, stead, place
 Stede, stead
 Steðfast, Stid(e)fast, steadfast Steel, steel, dat phr of stele
 Steep, large, protruding (eyes)
 Steer, bullock
 Steeren, steer, control
 Steked, see Stuken
 Stele, handle, end See Rake-stele
 Stelen, pt stal, pp stolen, steal, steal away Stellfyen, transform into a constellation Stemen, shine, gleam
 Stenten, see Stanten
 Steppes, foot-tracks
 Stere (1), helm, rudder
 Stere (2), pilot, helmsman
 Stereleçes, without a rudder
 Steren, Stren, stir, move, instigate, excite, provoke Steren, steer, control
 Steresman, steersman
 Sterling, sterling (the monetary unit)
 Sterne, Sterne, stern, violent Sternely, sternly
 Sterre, star, planet, constellation
 Stert, start, at a stert, in an instant
 Sterten, Sturten, contr pr 3 sg stert, pt sterte, sturte, pp stert, sturt, start leap, move quickly, depart, leave suddenly, depe ystert in lore, far advanced in learning
 Stertlynge, see Startlynge
 Sterven, pt sg starf, pl and pp storven, die, die of hunger
 Stevens (1), voice, sound, talk, fame, report
 Stevens (2), time, occasion, appointment

Stewe (1), Stuwe, fish-pond or tank
 Stewe (2), Stuwe, Styve, stew, heated room, closet, small room, brothel Stewe-door, closet-door
 Steyen, see Styen
 Steyre, Staire, stair, staircase, degree
 Stuborn, stubborn
 St(d)e fast, see Stedfast
 Sterne, see Sterne
 Stuf, stuff, strong, hard, bold
 Stuken, pt stak, stiked, sleked, stick, stick fast, stab, pierce, fix, insert Stukke, stick, twig, paling
 Stule (1), stile (for climbing a barrier)
 Stule (2), style (in writing)
 Stillatorie, still Stulle, adj, still, silent, also adv
 Stungen, pp stongen, stung, pierce
 Stunken, pt stank, stank
 Stunten, Stenten (originally causative), stunt, cease, leave off, stop, stay, cause to cease, restrain Sturen, see Steren
 Stropes, stirrups
 Sturt(e) (n), see Sterten Suth, anvil
 Stod(en), see Stonden
 Stok, stock, stump, block, post, race, origin
 Stoken, stab, pierce
 Stokked, pp, put in the stocks
 Stol, stool, chair, frame for making tapestry or embroidery Støle, long robe, stole (of a priest)
 Stomak, stomach, appetite, compassion (cf "bowels of mercy")
 Stonden, Standen, contr pr 3 sg stont, stant pt sg sto(o)d, pl stoden, pp stonden, stand, take a position, stick fast, abide (by), be set up or fixed in place
 Stongen, see Stungen
 Støgn, stone, rock, gem
 Størr, perhaps also Støre, store, stock, possession, live-stock, value estimation Stoor, great, strong Stopen, see Stapen St'orial, historical Storie, story tale, history, a narrative portion of the history (Lat "historia") Storven, see Sterven
 Stot, stallion, horse, heifer (as term of abuse for old woman)
 Stounde, space of time, season, short time, moment, hard time, pain, fierce attack Stoundemele, from hour to hour, from time to time, also adj, momentary Stoupen, stoop, droop
 Stour, battle, combat
 Stout, proud, obstinate, strong Straight, see Streight
 Straken, move, proceed, straken forth, return homeward from the hunt, or sound the horn to announce the return
 Strange, see Straunge
 Strangenesse, strangeness, estrangement Stranglen, strangle, choke, kill by strangulation, destroy Straught(e), see Strecchen.

Straunge, strange, foreign, external estranged, distant unfriendly unusual difficult, in astronomy a star not represented in the rete of the astrolabe or the degrees in the equator and ecliptic not belonging to a given star
 Strawen, pp strawed, strew Strayte, strait
 Strecchen, pt streighte, straughte pp streight, straught, strecched, stretch, extend reach Strēe, straw
 Strēm, stream, river, current, beam (of light)
 Streen, stram stock, race
 Streight, Straight adj from pp stretched extended, straight, also adv, see Strecchen Stret, strait, narrow, small scanty, mean, strict, with streite suerd, with drawn sword (Lat "strictus") Streite, strictly, tightly closely Strong, strung
 Stronger, Strengest, see Strong
 Strongthe, strength, force, slee with strongthe, kill in the chase with horses and hounds (Fr "à force")
 Strepn, strip
 Strete, street, road
 Streynen, stram, press, constrain, force, compress, hold confine Streyt, see Stret
 Strike, hank, bunch (of fax)
 Strøk, see Stryken
 Strompet, strumpet
 Stronde, strand shore
 Strong, comp strenger sup strongest, strong, difficult, hard Stronge, strongly, securely Strooff, see Strøyven
 Strøok, stroke
 Strouten, spread out
 Stroyer, destroyer
 Stryf, strife, quarrel
 Stryke, stroke, mark
 Stryken, pt strøok, stryked, pp straken strike, stroke, strike out, run Strøyven, pt strøof, pp straven, str ve, fight, oppose, vie Stubbes, stubs, stumps
 Stubble-goes, an old goose fed on stubble Studie, study, meditation, eager desire, endeavor, library
 Studen, study give heed, deliberate, be in perplexity, wonder muse Stuffen, garrison, supply with defenders and munitions
 Sturdy, cruel harsh, stern firm
 Stuwe, see Stewe (1) and (2)
 Sty, pig-sty
 Styen, Steyen, rise mount Styve, see Stewe (2)
 Styward, steward
 Suasioun, suasion, persuasiveness
 Subdeķne, subdeacon
 Subgit, subject
 Subjeccion, subjection suggestion
 Sublymatones, vessels used in sublimation Sublymed, sublimated

Substance, substance, the essence of a thing (tech., as opposed to accident, see ParāT, VI 537, n.), the majority

Subtil, subtle, skilful, finely wrought See also Sotil

Subtil(i)tee, subtlety, skill, craft, device, trick, specious argument

Succident, in astrology, a succedent house See Astr, n, 4, 34, n

Sucre, Sugre, sugar

Suen, see Sewen

Suertee, see Sur(e)tee

Suffisaunce, sufficiency, contentment

Suffysen, suffice, be able, suffyse unto, be satisfied with (?)

Suffrable, patient

Suffraunce, patience, endurance, longsuffering, permission, receptivity

Suffraunt, patient, tolerant, also subst

Suffren, suffer, endure, permit, submit

Suggestioun, accusation, suggestion

Sukkenye, short frock, smock

Summitten, submit, subject

Sunne, see Sonne

Superfice, Superficie, surface

Supplyen, supplicate, pray

Supportacioun, support

Supprysen, Susprysen, surprise, take possession of, overcome

Surcoete, surcoat, outer coat

Surement, assurance, pledge

Sur(e)tee, Seur(e)tee, Su(e)rtee, surety, security careless confidence

Surfeet, surfet

Surmounten, see Sormounten

Surplys, surplice, loose robe

Surquadrie, Surqudrye, arrogance, presumption

Sursanure, a wound healed over on the surface

Surtee, see Suretee

Surveiaunce, surveillance

Suspeccioun, suspicion

Suspect, sbst, suspicion

Suspect, adj, suspicious, suspected

Susprysen, see Supprysen

Sustenen, sustain, maintain, preserve, uphold, hold up, endure

Sustening(e), sustenance

Suster, Soster, g sg suster, pl sustren, sustres, sister

Suwen, see Sewen

Suyte, Sute, suit, kind, dress, array

Swa, so (North dial)

Swal, see Swellen

Swalowen, see Swelwen

Swappe, swoop (of a bird of prey)

Swappen, strike, dash, fall

Swar, see Sweren

Swartish, dark, swarthy

Swatte, see Sweten

Swayn, young man, servant

Sweigh, motion, sway

Swellen, pt sg swal, pp swollen, swell

Sweller, inflater

Swelten, die, faint

Swelwen, Swalowen, Swoiwen, swallow

Swerd, sword

Sweren, pt sg suor, swar, pl sworen, pp sworen, sworn, swear

Swete, Sote, Swote, sweet, also subst

Sweten, pt swatte, sweat

Swetter, comp of Swete

Swety, sweaty

Sweven, dream

Sweynt, pp of swenchen, tired out, exhausted, slothful

Swich, such, idiomatic, swiche seven, seven times as many See BD, 408, n

Swimmen, pt pl swommen, swim, be filled with swimming things

Swink, labor, toil

Swinken, pp swonken, labor, toil

Swire, neck, throat

Swolow, gulf

Swoiwen, see Swelwen

Swommen, see Swimmen

Swoning(e), Swowninge, swooning

Swonken, see Swinken

Swoot, sweat

Swor, Swor(e)n, see Sweren

Swote, see Swete

Swo(u)gh, Swow, sough, low sound, sigh, groan, noise (of wind, etc.), swoon

Swounen, swoon, faint

Swow, see Swo(u)gh

Swowne, swoon

Swythe, quickly, as swythe, immediately

Swyven, copulate, lie with, play the harlot

Sy, see Seen

Sy, if (Fr "si")

Sycamour, sycamore

Syen, sink, descend

Syen, see Seen

Syk, sbst sigh

Syk, see Sik

Syken, pt syked, syghte, sigh

Sykatoun, a costly cloth See Thop, VII, 734, n

Sylvre, silver

Symonyals, simoniacs

Symonye, simony

Symphonye, term used for various musical instruments, commonly for a tabor

Synwes, sinews

Syre, see Sire

Sys, Sis, six, sys cunk, six-five (one of the best throws in hazard)

Syten (var of Syken), grievance See Tr, II, 884, n

Syth, time, pl sythes, sythe (orig gen or dat pl, preserved in phrases), afte sythe, oftentimes

Syve, sieve

T

T', abbreviation of To, before vowels

Taa(n), North dial for Taken

Taas, heap, pile

Tabard, loose coat of laborer, herald's coat-of-arms See Gen Prol, I, 20, n

Tabernacle, tent, shrine

Table, table, tablet, plate (of an astrolabe),

- pl tables, the game of backgammon, table dormant, see Gen Prol, I, 353, n
- Tabour, tabor, small drum
- Tabouren, drum
- Tache, Tecche, blemish, defect, quality, characteristic
- Taffata, taffeta
- Tailleage, Taylage, tax
- Taille, tally, an account scored upon notched sticks
- Tallyng, reckoning, credit business dealings
See Shap T, VII, 434, n
- Takel, apparatus, gear, weapons, especially arrows
- Taken, pt sg took, pl token, pp taken, take, seize, give, offer, hit, ref., betake (one's self), take place, happen, taken keep, take heed
- Tal, meek (?), humble (?), or quack (?), prompt (?)
- Tald, North dial for told, see Tellen
- Tale, tale, story, narration, enumeration
- Talen, tell a story, talk, converse, discuss
- Talent, wish, desire, appetite, longing
- Talke, talk
- Tame, tame
- Tapinage, hiding, sneaking
- Tapiten, cover with tapestry
- Tappe, tap
- Tappestere, female tapster, barmaid
- Tapycer, weaver of tapestry
- Tar, see Teren
- Tare, tare, weed
- Targe, shield, protection
- Tarren, tarry, delay, waste, cause to delay
- Tart, adj., tart, pungent
- Tarte, sbst., tart
- Tartre, tartar, oille of tartre, cream of tartar
- Tasseled, provided with tassels, fringed
- Tast, taste, relish
- Tasten, test, try, feel, experience
- Taught, Taughte, see Tęchen
- Tatarwagges, tatters
- Taverne, tavern
- Taverner, innkeeper
- Taylage, see Tailleage
- Taylagier, tax-gatherer
- Tecche, see Tache
- Techel, see Mane
- Tęchen, pt taughte, teched, pp taught, teach, inform, show tell
- Tellen, pt tolde pp tolde tell relate, reckon, compute account, esteem
- Teme, see Theme
- Temen, bring
- Tempesten, perturb, refl., distress one's self violently
- Tempestuous, tempestuous
- Temple, temple inn of court
- Tempre, see At(t)empre(e)
- Tempren, temper, moderate, control, in alchemy, adjust the heat for melting
- Temprure, tempering, mixing
- Temps, tense, time, at prime temps, at first, the first time
- Temptour, temptor
- Tene, grief, sorrow, trouble vexation run destruction
- Tenour, tenor, general purport drift
- Tente, tent
- Tentify, attentively
- Tercel, male eagle
- Tercelet, Terslet, male falcon or hawk
- Terciane, tertian, recurring every third (i.e., alternate) day
- Tęre, sbst., tear
- Tęren, pt lar, pp tor, tear, scratch treat (a matter), stir up an issue (?) See Tr, III, 1643
- Terms, tarins, siskins (a kind of finch)
- Terme, term, set time, period, end, goal, boundary, limit, phrase, tech term, jargon in terme, with formal accuracy, a portion of the zodiac (see Frankl T, V, 1288 n)
- Terme-day, appointed day
- Termynen, determine, set down in definite terms
- Terrestre, terrestrial
- Terslet, see Tercelet
- Terven, flay strip, skin
- Tery, teary, tearful
- Tester, head-armor (of man or horse)
- Testes, vessels for assaying metals
- Testif, testy, headstrong, irritable
- Tęte, teat
- Textuel, learned in texts, well-read
- Teyd, tied bound
- Teyne, thin metal rod or plate
- Th', frequent abbreviation of The before vowels, less frequently used for These
- Thakken, stroke, pat
- Thank, sbst., thanks, gratitude, adv gen his (my) thanks, of his (my) will, willingly voluntarily, can thank, owes (lit 'knows')
- thanks, feels gratitude
- Thanken, Thonken, thank
- Than(ne), then
- Thar, impers vb, pt thurte, thurte, it is necessary On confusion with forms of dar, durst, see Rom, 1089, n
- Thar, adv, there
- That, rel pron., that, whom, that which
- That, conj., that, so that as, because, also used to repeat if, when etc (see Pars Prol X, 39, n)
- The, old instr of the demonstrative, as in the bet, the better etc
- Thedam (var Thedom), success
- Theech, Theek, see Theen
- Theef, thief robber criminal
- Theen, thrive, prosper, so theech, so theek, as I hope to prosper
- Theffy, like a thief
- Thefte, theft
- Theme, Teme, theme, text, thesis
- Then, than
- Thenken, Thenchen, sometimes Thunken, pt tho(u)ghte pp tho(u)ght, think, consider, intend, sometimes apparently confused with Thunken, seem
- Thenne, Kentish for Thunne
- Thenne, then
- Thenne(s), thence

- Theorik, theory, theoretical explanation
Theraboute, thereabout, thereupon, concerned with that matter Ther-agayns, Ther-ayeyns, Ther-geyn, against that, in reply to that Theras, there, where, whereas wherever Therbefore, Therbiforn, before that, beforehand, previously Therby, thereby, by it, to it, near it
Ther(e), there, where, wherever, whereas wherewith, on the idiomatic use with optative clauses of blessing and cursing see KnT, I, 2815, n
Ther-geyn, see Ther-agayns
Theroute, out from it thence, outside Therwhyle(s), while, meanwhile Thew, habit, custom, quality, virtue thewes, morals, manners (used by Chaucer only in pl)
The-ward, to, toward thee
Thewed, possessed of qualities, virtues, etc., wel thewed of good character or habits Thuder, thither
Thucer-ward, thither
Thikke, thick, stout, substantial, frequent, repeated, also adv
Thikke-herd, thick-haired
Thikke-sterred, thickly covered with stars Thulke, that, that same that very such Thing, pl thing, things, thing, wealth property, affair, deed, legal document, religious service or rite, poem or other production, for any thing, in spite of everything, at any cost
Thinken, pt tho(u)ghte, impers vb, seem, me (har, him) thinketh, it seems to me (her, him)
Thinken, occasionally used for Thenken
Thinne, Tenne, thin, slender, poor, feeble, meager, scanty Thurien, pp, thurred, thrilled, pierce Thus, contr of this is Tho (1), pron, those Tho (2), adv then Thogh, though yet, still, however
Thought, Thoughte, see Thenken, Thinken Thought, thought, anxiety, care Thoughtful, anxious, moody Tholen, suffer, endure
Thombe, thumb
Thonder, thunder, thonder-dvnt, thunder-clap, stroke of lightning, thonder-leyt, thunder-bolt, flash of lightning
Thondren, vb, thunder
Thonken, see Thanken
Thorgh, see Thurgh
Thorn, thorn, thorn-tree, hawthorn Thor(o)ugh, see Thurgh
Thorp, Throp, village
Thought, Thoughte, see Thenken, Thinken
Th(o)urgh-girt, struck through Thral, thrall, slave, subject, also adv
Thralien, enthrall, subject
Thraste, see Thresten
Threden, vb, thread
Thred, sbst, thread
Threpen, assert, affirm positively Threshfold, threshold
Thresshen, thrash
Thresten, pt threste, thraste, thrust, push Threten, threaten Thretty, Thritty, thirty Threw, Threwen, see Throwen
Thridde, third
Thrift, success, prosperity, welfare, used in adjuration, by my thrist!
Thrift, profitable serviceable, provident Thrilled, see Thurien
Thringen, pt throng, pp thringen, press thrust, throng Thrستن, pt thruste, pp thrust, thrust against, support Thrittene, thirteen Thritty, see Thretty
Throf, see Thryven
Throgh, see Thurgh
Throng, see Thringen
Throp, see Thorp
Throstel, Thrustel, throstle, song-thrush Throte, throat
Throte-boile, Adam's apple
Throwe, tame, while, short time
Throwen, pt sg threw, pl throwen, pp throwen, throw, cast, twist, turn Throwes, throes, torments Thringen, see Thringen
Thrustel, see Throstel
Thrustel-cock, throstlecock, male thrush
Thrye(s), thrice
Thryven, pt throf, pp thriwen, thrive, prosper, grow, flourish
Thurfte, see Thar
Thurgh, Thorgh, Thro(u)gh, Thor(o)ugh, Thurw, through, commonly used as prefix Thurghfare, thoroughfare
Thurghout, throughout, out through, all through Thurgh-shoten, shot through Thurgh-soght, searched through, thoroughly examined Thurrok, sink (in ship's hull)
Thurst, thirst
Thursten, thirst, both pers and impers
Thurte, see Thar
Thurw, see Thurgh
Thwitel, large knife
Thwyten, pp thurten, whittle, carve Tid, see Tyden
Tidif, pl tidyves, tidy, a small bird
Tikel, unsteady, unstable Tikelnesse, instability, unsteadiness Tiklen, tuckle
Til, prep, to (North form), til and fra, to and fro Til, conj, till, until Tilien, till, cultivate
Tihere, tiller
Tambre, tambrel, tambourine
Tipet, Typet, tippet, cape
Tiptoon, tiptoes
Tissu, Tissegw, tussie, a band
Tittering, hesitation, vacillation Tixted, learned in texts

To- (1), prepositional prefix, as in to-forn, before
 To- (2), prefix indicating separation, destruction, or emphasis as in to-bresten, to-hewen
 To, pl iqqn, iqqs, toe
 To, contr. of toon in the toon, that one Tobeten, beat severely
 Tobreken, break in pieces See Breken
 Tobresten, burst or break in pieces See Bresten Tocleven, cleave in twain See Cleven (1)
 Todasshen, dash in pieces
 Tode, toad
 Todrawen (1), draw toward one, allure
 Todrawen (2) pt pl todrowen pp todrawen, tear apart, distract Todryven, drive apart, scatter See Dryven Tofofn, prep and adv., before Togeder, Togider, Togedre(s), Togidre(s), together
 Toght, taut (probably pp of togen, tow, draw) Toqon, disperse But see LGW, 653, n
 To-hepe, together, into a heap
 Tohewen, pp, tohewen, hew in pieces Token, see Taken
 Toknen, mark, designate
 Tojld, Tojde, see Tellen
 Toilen (1), take toll
 Tollen (2), Tullen, attract, allure
 Tombe, Toumbe, tomb
 Tombestere, dancing girl
 Tomelten, melt away
 To-morwe, tomorrow
 Tonge, Tunge, tongue, speech, language
 Tonged, tongued
 Tonges, tongs
 Tonne, tun, cask
 Tonne-gret, as big as a cask Toq, see To Took, see Taken
 To(o)l, weapon, instrument Toqn, see To
 To(q)n, one in the toon, that one, the one Toquaken, quake, tremble very much Toracen, tear into pieces
 Torche, torch
 Tord, turd piece of dung
 Torenden, rend in pieces, distract Toret, see Tourette Tormenten, Turmenten, torment, torture
 Tormentise, torment
 Tormentour, tormentor, executioner, also adj Tormentrye, Turmentrye, pain, torture Torn, see Teren
 Torn, turn
 Tornen, Turnen, turn return, shape in a lathe
 Torney, tourney
 Torombelen (?) rumble heavily, crash (LGW, 1218, probably to be read to rombelen)
 Tortuo(u)s, tortuous in astronomy, the signs of the zodiac which ascend most obliquely See MLT, II, 302 n Toscatered, scattered dispersed
 Toshaken, pp, shaken to pieces, tossed about

Toshenden, pp toshent, destroy utterly Toshiheren, pt toshar, cut in two Toshivered, broken to pieces
 Toshireden, cut into shreds Toslitered, slashed with cuts
 Tosprenden, spread apart, open (perhaps to be read to sprenden, see LGW ProI F, 202)
 Tosterten, start asunder, burst
 Tostoupen, stoop down (? probably to be read to stoupen, see FrT, III 1560) Toswinken, labor hard (probably to be read to swinken?, see PardT, VI, 519)
 Totar, see Toteren
 Totelere, tatler, also adj
 Toteren, pt tolar pp toir(c)n tear in pieces Tother, in the tother (that other) the other Totreden, tread down, trample under foot Toty, dizzy
 Touchen, touch, reach, touch on, concern
 Touchinge, sbst, touch
 Touchinge, pr p, touching, as touchinge, with reference to concerning Tough, tough, hard, troublesome, on make it tough see Tr, u, 1025, n Toumbe, see Tombe
 T(o)umblynge, transitory, perishing, unstable
 Toun, town, farm, dat phr in (at, out of etc) toune
 Tour, tower, citadel, in astronomy, mansion Touret, turret
 Tourette, Toret, ring, swivel-ring to attach a dog's leash to the collar
 T(o)urneynge, fighting in a tournament Tourneyment, tournament
 Toute, buttocks
 Towayle, towel, cloth
 Towinden, pt towond, break in pieces
 To-yere, this year
 Trace, Tra(a)s, trace, trail, procession Tracen, trace, follow, go Trad, see Traden
 Tragedie, tragedy, tragic story See Mk ProI VII, 1973, n Traisoun, Tresoun, treason
 Traitorye, Traiterye, treachery Transmewen, Transmuwen, transmute transform Transporten, transport, extend Trappe, trap, snare, trap-door
 Trapped, furnished with trappings
 Trappures, trappings (for horses)
 Trasshen pp trashed, betray Traunce, trance state of partial insensibility study, fit of musing Trauncen, tramp about Travaille, Travel, labor work, pains
 Travallen, labor, toil, endeavor, suffer, travel, journey Trave, wooden frame for holding horses
 Travel, see Travaille
 Travers, curtain screen
 Trayen, Traysen, betray Trays, traces Traysen, see Traysen Trayteresse, Traytousse, traitress.
 Treble, triple
 Trechour, traitor

Trède-foul, treader of fowls
 Trèden, contr pr 3 sg trèt, pt sg trad pl and pp treden, tread, step, copulate (of male bird)
 Trèdyng, treading, procreation
 Tree, tree, wood, the cross
 Treget, jugglery, trickery, gule, trap, snare Tregetour, juggler, magician
 Tregetrye, trickery
 Tremour, tremor
 Trench, trench, alley cut through shrubbery
 Trenden, revolve
 Trentals, series of thirty masses for the dead
 Trepeget, trebuchet, machine for hurling large stones Tresor, treasure, wealth
 Tresorerer, treasurer
 Trespoun, see Traisoun
 Trespacen, Trespassen, trespass, transgress, sin
 Trespas, trespass, wrong, fault, sin
 Tresse, tress, braid of hair
 Tressen, dress or plait the hair
 Tressour, head-dress
 Trèt, see Trèden
 Trètable, tractable, yielding, docile, affable Trètee, treaty, agreement, discussion
 Trèten, treat, tell of, relate, write, speak, discourse Trètys, Trètice, sbst, treatise, story, treaty, contract Trètys, adj, well formed, graceful
 Trewe, Truwe, sbst, truce
 Trewe, adj, true, faithful, honest, also adv Trew(e)liche, Trew(e)ly, truly, certainly Trewe-love, true-love (herb paris)
 Treye, "tray," three Triacle, remedy
 Trichour, treacherous
 Trillen, turn, twirl Trinitee, the Trinity
 Trippen, dance
 Trist, trust
 Triste (var Tristre), sbst, tryst, hunting station where the Bowman stands to shoot the deer Tristen, Trusten, Trosten, trust, trust to Troden, see Trèden
 Trogh, trough
 Trompe (1), trumpet
 Trompe (2), trumpeter
 Trompen, sound the trumpet
 Trompou, trumpeter
 Tronchoun, truncheon (of a spear)
 Trone, throne
 Tropik, turning-point, solstitial point
 Trosten, see Tristen Troublable, disturbing
 Trouble, adj, troubled, turbid, dim, troublous, tempestuous, anxious, vexed
 Tr(o)ubly, cloudy
 Trouthe, truth, troth, promise, fidelity
 Trowandyse, see Truaundyse Trowen, trow, believe, think Truauuding, idling, shirking
 Truauundyse, Trowandyse, fraudulent begging, knavery, idleness

Truauunt, vagabond idler, rogue Trubly, see Tr(o)ubly
 Truffles, truffles
 Trussed, packed
 Truwe, see Trewe, sbst Trycen, draw, drag pull Trye, excellent, choice
 Tryne compass, the threefold world (earth, sea, and sky) Trype, small piece
 Tubbe, tub
 Tuel, Tuwel, pipe, chimney, hole
 Tullen, see Tollen (2)
 Tumblen, tumble, perform athletic feats Tumblynge, see T(o)umblynge
 Tunge, see Tonge
 Turmenten, see Tormenten
 Turmentrye, see Tormentrye
 Turnen, see Tornen
 Turtel, turtle-dove
 Turves, pl of turf, turf
 Tuwel, see Tuel
 Tweye, two, twain
 Tweyne, twain
 Twicchen, pt twighie pp twight, twitch, draw pull, twight, distraught Twinnen, separate, part in two, set out, depart Twiste, twig, tendril
 Twisten, twist, wring, torture
 Twe(s), twice
 Twyn, twine
 Twynen, twine, twist
 Tyde, time, hour, season, tide of the sea
 Tyden, pp tid, betide, happen
 Tydif, see Tidif
 Tyle, tile, row of bricks
 Tylynge, tiling, tillage
 Tymbestere, female tumbrel-player
 Tyne, brewing vat, cask
 Typet, see Tipet
 Tyren, tear, rend
 Tythere, payer of tithes
 Tytled, dedicated

U

Unagreeable, disagreeable, miserable
 Unapt, indisposed
 Unaraced, unbroken untorn
 Unarysed, unadvised, unaware, unpremeditated, reckless, foolish Unbityden, fail to take place
 Unbodien, leave the body
 Unbokelen, unbuckle
 Unbpre(n), unborn
 Unbounden, pp, unbound, separated, divorced
 Unbrent, Unbrend, unburnt
 Unbroyden, unbraded
 Unbuxumnesse, unobmissiveness
 Uncircumsript, unbound
 Unclosed, unfastened, unenclosed
 Unclosen, become open Uncommitted, not entrusted (to one)
 Unconnyng, Unconnyng, ignorant, unskilful foolish

- Uncouplen, let loose (the hounds)
 Uncouth (lit "unknown"), strange, alien, foreign, marvelous, curious Uncouthly, strangely, strikingly Uncovenable, unfit, unseemly Uncunninge, see Unconninge Under, under, among Underfongen, undertake
 Undermeles, undern-times See Undren Undernimen, pt undernomen, pp undernomen, understand, perceive, reprove Underpicchen, pt underpighie, stuff, pack full beneath
 Underput, pp, subjected Undersporen, thrust under, pry up Understonden, pt sg understood, pl under- stoden, pp understonden understand, know
 Undertaken, pt undertook, pp undertaken, undertake, conduct an enterprise, declare, warrant, dare say
 Undigne, unworthy
 Undon, pt undide pp undon, undo, un-fasten, come undone, unfold, disclose Undren, a designation of time, of shifting application, originally, the third hour, nine o'clock in the morning also used for noon, sometimes, apparently, for mid-forenoon, the time of the morning meal, and later, for mid-afternoon
 Uneschuable, inevitable
 Unese, lack of ease, discomfort, trouble Unethe(s), Unethe(s), hardly (lit "uneasily"), scarcely at all, with difficulty
 Unfestlich, un festive, not in festival times
 Ungiltig, guiltless innocent
 Ungrobbed, not digged around Unhap, mishap, misfortune
 Unhardy, cowardly
 Unheele, sickness, misfortune
 Unholsum, sick, weak
 Unhyden, disclose reveal Universe, in universe universally Universitee, universality, the universal Unjoignen, Unjoynen, disjoin Unkinde, unnatural, cruel, ungrateful Unkniten unknit
 Unkonninge, see Unconninge
 Unkorven, uncut
 Unkouth, see Uncouth
 Unkunnings, see Unconninge
 Unlaced, disentangled Unleful, Unlefeul, not permissible, illicit Unloven, cease to love
 Unlust, disinclination
 Unlykly, displeasing
 Unmanhod, unmanly deed
 Unmeke, not meek, proud Unmete, unmeet, unfit displeasing Unmighty, unable, impotent Unmoevable, immovable
 Unnesten, leave the nest
 Unethe(s), see Unethe(s) Unordred, not belonging to a religious order
 Unparrygal, unequal
- Unplitable, unreasonable (? Lat 'mexplicatbilis")
 Unplyten, unplat, unfold explain, evolve (Lat "explicit")
 Unpurveyed, unprovided
 Unrelsed, unrelieved
 Unremoved, unmoved
 Unright, wrong, injury
 Unsad, unsettled
 Unsavory, displeasing
 Unscience, false knowledge, error
 Unselly, unhappy unfortunate
 Unset, unappointed Unshethen, unsheathe remove Unshetten, pt unshette, pp unshett, unlock Unshewed, unconfessed
 Unslakked, unslacked (of lime)
 Unsolempne, uncelebrated
 Unso(u)ght, not sought, ready at hand
 Unsome, not sown
 Unsowen, unsew
 Unspeedful, unprofitable
 Unsperd, unspared, unbolted Unstaunchable, inexhaustible
 Unstaunchd, insatiate Unstraunge, not strange, used of the familiar stars represented on the rete of an astrolabe
 Unswellen, decrease in fulness
 Unteyen, untie, set free
 Unthank, the opposite of thanks a curse Unthrif, lack of profit, wastefulness, nonsense
 Unto, prep, unto, conj, until Untold, uncounted Untressed, unplanted, unarranged, with hair loose
 Untratable, inexorable
 Untrue, untrue, also adv
 Untristen, distrust
 Untrust, sbst, distrust
 Untyme, in untyme out of season Unwar, unaware, unexpected, accidental
 also adv
 Unweelde, Unweeldy, unwieldy, hard to move or control, weak Unwemmed, unspotted
 Unwened, unexpected
 Unwist, unknown uninformd
 Unwit lack of wit folly
 Unwiting, Unwot, etc, see Witen
 Unwryen, uncover, disclose
 Unyolde i, without having yielded Up, adv, up, open up and down, in all respects, in every way Up, prep, on, upon Upborn, borne up valued
 Upbounde, bound up
 Upbreyden, upbraid, rebuke
 Updressen, set up, make ready Updrow, see Drawen
 Uphaf, lifted up, see Heven Uphepyng, heaping up Upon, prep, on, upon, besides, against, also adv
 Uppe, up open
 Upper, adv, higher

Uppereste, adj , uppermost
 Up-plight, pp plucked up, pulled up Upright, Upryght, adv , upright, supine Uprist, contr of upryseth
 Upriste, up-rising
 Up-so-down, upside down
 Upspringen, rise, spring up Upsteren, Upstürten, start up, arise
 Up-yaf, see Yeven
 Up-yolden, see Yelden
 Urchoun, hedgehog
 Urne, urn
 Usaunce, custom, usage
 Usaunt, accustomed, addicted
 Usen, use accustom, be accustomed, wont
 Using, use
 Us-self, Us-selve, ourselves
 Usure, usury Utter, outer
 Utt(e)reste, Out(e)reste, outermost, farthest, supreme Utterly, Outerly, utterly, entirely

V

Vache, cow, beast
 Valen, avail
 Valaunse, perhaps used for a sign of the zodiac opposite the mansion of a given planet See Mars, 145, n Valerian, valerian, a medicinal herb Valwe, Value, value
 Valey(e), valley
 Valour, worth, valor
 Vanishen, vanish, disappear, shrink up, waste away Vapour, vapor, mist, influence
 Variaunce, variation, difference
 Vasselage, Vasselage, prowess
 Vavasour, sub-vassal, substantial landholder
 See Gen Prol, I, 360, n
 Veel, veal
 Vekke, hag, old woman
 Veluet, velvet
 Vendable, vendible, venal
 Venerien, influenced by Venus
 Venerye, hunting
 Vengen, revenge
 Vengeresses, avenging goddesses
 Venim, venom, poison, corruption, malice, dye
 Venjaunce, Vengeaunce, vengeance
 Venquissen, Venquissen, vanquish Ventusinge, cupping (in surgery)
 Ver, the spring
 Veray, see Ver(r)ay
 Verdegrees (var Vertgrees), verdigris Verdit, Vordit, verdict
 Verger, orchard
 Vermayle, vermillion
 Vernage, a strong, sweet white wine of Italy
 Vernished, varnished, smeared with a glossy substance
 Vernycle, a reproduction of the sacred handkerchief which bore the miraculous impression of Christ's face

Ver(r)ay, Verrey, true, real, exact, just, apparently not used as adv by Chaucer Ver(r)ayly, -liche, Verreyly, -liche, verily truly Verrayment, verily, truly Verre, glass
 Verrey, see Ver(r)ay
 Vers, pl vers, verse, line
 Versifour, versifier, poet
 Vertu, virtue, power efficacy, efficiency, mental faculty, magical influence, valor Vertuous, possessing virtue or power, efficacious, capable, holy Veye, a word of uncertain meaning See MillT I, 3485, n Vessel, vessel, coll , plate (Fr "vaisselle") Vestiment, clothing
 Veyne, vein, sap-vessel, selen every veyne, try every means, touchd on som good veyne, approached in an advantageous way
 Veyne-blood, letting blood at a vein
 Veze, rush, blast
 Viage, voyage, journey, expedition, undertaking Vicar(e), Viker, vicar, deputy, deputed ruler Vigile, wake
 Vigilyes, vigils, meetings on the eve of a festival Viker, see Vicar(e)
 Vileins, villainous, rude, sinful
 Vileinye, character or conduct of a villain or churl, vile, shameful deed, harm, wrong, coarse or unfitting speech, reproach, disgrace, rudeness, discourtesy
 Vinolent, full of wine, addicted to drinking wine Violes, pl , vials, phials
 Virelay, ballad with a return of rime See LGW Prol F, 417, n Virtoot, swift movement (?)
 Virtrate, hag
 Visagen, put a face (on it), disguise
 Vitaille, coll , victuals, provisions, also pl , vitailes
 Vitailen, provide with victuals
 Vitailier, victualler
 Vitremyte, woman's cap or headdress See MkT, VII, 2372, n
 Vitriole, vitriol
 Voide, "voidee," light dessert, with wine and spices
 Voide, solitary, void
 Vouden, Veyden, make void, frustrate, remove, expel, empty, quit, depart Vordit, see Verdit
 Vois, Voys, voice
 Volage, volatile, flighty, wanton
 Volatyl, coll , fowls
 Voltor, pl voltures, vulture Volunte, will, desire
 Volu(e)r, night-cap, woman's cap
 Vouchen, call, declare, used by Chaucer only in the phrase vouchen sauf, pt vouched sauf, vouchsafe, grant, permit Vounde (?), dial form of founden, pp, found (?), hence, excellent (?) See Rom, 7063, n

Vulgar, day vulgar, the "artificial" day with the morning and evening twilight added, cf also vulgar nyght
 Vyce, vice, fault, error, defect

W

Waast, waist
 Waat, wot, knows (North dial)
 Wacche, watch, sentinal, also abstr, watching, lying awake Waden, wade, advance with difficulty, go, pass, descend, enter Waf, see Weyen
 Wafereres, makers of wafer-cakes, confectioners
 Waget, watchet, light blue
 Waiten, wait, watch, seek occasion, expect, observe, attend
 Waken, pt wokk, pp waked, wake, be, or remain, awake, keep awake, carouse, rouse one's self, resume speech or action
 Wake-pleyes, funeral games
 Waker, watchful, vigilant
 Waking, being awake, watching, vigils, period of wakefulness Wallet, wallet
 Walked, sbst, walking, go walked, gone a-walking See Paré Prol, VI, 406, n Walken, pt welk, walked, pp walked, walk, roam, go Walowen, see Walwen
 Walsh-note, walnut
 Walwen, wallow, roll, tumble, toss, cause to roll
 Wan, see Winnen
 Wanges, molar teeth
 Wang-tooth, molar tooth (lit "cheek-tooth") Wanhope, despair
 Wan(i)en, wane
 Wanten, want, lack, fail, be lacking
 Wantown, wanton (lit "ill-governed"), undisciplined, unruly, lascivious, lewd, sportive, merry See Gen Prol, I, 208, n Wantownesse, wantonness, affectation
 Wantrust, distrust
 War, ware aware, wary, cautious, discreet, prudent, ben war, beware, observe Waranten, see Warenten
 Warde, ward (abstr), guard, keeping, care
 Wardecors, body-guard
 Warderere, i.e. warde rere, look out behind Wardrobe, privy See Pr T, VII, 572, n
 Ware, coll, wares goods, merchandise Waren, vb, reflex, beware, avoid, make way for Warenten, Waranten, warrant protect Warangle, shrke, butcher-bird
 Warncen, see Warsshen
 Warren, curse
 Warsoun, payment, requital
 Warsshen, cure, be cured, recover Warly, warily
 Warnen (1), Wernen, warn, caution, notify, summon, invite

Warnen (2), Wernen, refuse, deny, forbid
 Warnestoren, fortify, garrison, provision Washen, pt wes(s)h, wis(s)h, pp wasshen, wash Waste, wasted, partially destroyed
 Wastel-breed, fine white bread See Gen Prol, I, 147, n Wastour, waster
 Watering, place for watering horses
 Wawe, wave
 Wax, Waxen, see Wexen
 Waxen, pt waxed, coat with wax Wayk, weak
 Wayken, weaken, diminish, grow weak
 Waymenten, lament
 Wayn, wain, wagon, car
 Wayten (1), lie in wait (for), beset, attend, escort wayten upon, observe watch, wayte what, whatever Wayten (2), show, put upon, inflict Webbe, weaver
 Wed, sbst, pledge, dat phr to wedde
 Wedden, wed, marry
 Wede, weed, garment, religious habits
 Weder, weather, storm
 Weel, well (cf Scottish "weel")
 We(e)lden, pt welte, weelde(d), wield, control, control one's self, move with ease Weeldinge, power control (lit "wielding") Weep, pt, see Wepen
 Weep, sbst, weeping, dat phr a-weep(e)
 Weeply, tearful
 Weerdes, see Wyerdes
 Weet, wet
 We(e)x, see Wexen
 Wegge, wedge
 Wehee, whinnying (of a horse)
 We(i)lawey, Weylawey, alas!
 Wel, well, many, much, used emphatically, as in wel royal, fully, completely (with numerals), wel nyne and twenty Welawey, see We(i)lawey Welde (1), power, control
 Welde (2), weld
 Weldy, weldy, active
 Wele, weal, well-being happiness, success
 Weleful, happy, prosperous
 Wel-faring, well-favored See Frankl T, V, 932 n Wel-Heelynge, Good-concealment
 Welk, see Walken
 Welked, withered
 Welken, sbst, welkin, heaven, sky
 Welken, vb, wither, waste away (Lat "emarcescere") Welmen, gush, well forth
 Weite, see We(e)lden
 Wel-willy, well-wishing, beneficent, benevolent
 Wem, blemish, hurt
 Wemmelēcs, without blemish, spotless
 Wenden, pt wente, pp (y)went, wend, go pass, pass away, depart Wene, supposition, doubt Wenen, ween, suppose, imagine Wenged, winged
 Went, Wente, see Wenden.

- Wente, sbst, path, passage, turn Wepen, pt weep, uepte, pp wepen, uopen, wept, weep Wepen, weapon
Werbul, warble, tune
Werchen, Werken, Wirchen, Wirken, Worchen, Wurchen, pt wro(u)ghte, pp wro(u)ght, work, act, ache, make, create, contrive, form, compose, perform its function (give relief)
Were, doubt, state of anxiety or uncertainty, withouten were, without doubt Were, wear
Werren (1), pt wer(e)de, wered, wear, bear on one's person, weren upon, have on Werren (2), ward off, defend protect Werk, work, dat phr a werke
Werken, see Werchen
Wernen, see Warnen (1) and (2)
Werning, hindrance, forbidding Werre, war, hostility, trouble
Werre, adv, worse
Werreyen, make war, oppose Werreyour, warrior
Wers, worse
Werste, worst
Werte, wart
Wery, weary, exhausted, tired (of doing something) Weryen, worry, strangle
Wesele, weasel
Wes(s)h, see Wasshen
West, west, dat phr by weste
Westen, turn toward the west
Westren, go toward the west
Wete, sweat, perspiration
Weven, pt waf, pp woven, weave Wex, wax
Wexen, Waxen, pt w(e)z, wax, wox, pp wazen, woxen, wax, grow, increase, become Wey(e), way, path, used adverbially (like "away") in go wey, do wey Weyen, weigh Weyer, the "weigher," the equator
Weyk, weak
Weyked, pp, weakened, feeble Weymentunge, Waymentunge, lamenting
Weyven, waive, put aside, neglect, abandon, turn aside
What, what, whatever, why, what!, somewhat, something, what what, partly partly, a litel what, slightly, somewhat Wheelen, wheel, cause to turn Whelkes, pumples, blotches Whelp, pup, cub
Whenne(s), whence Wher, where, wherever Wher, contr of Whether Whete, wheat
Whether, which (of two)
Whetten, pt whette, whet, sharpen Which, which, what kind of (Lat "quals") Whuder, whither
Whuk, which (North dial)
Whuppe, whup
Whuppelre, cornel-tree
Who, who, whoever, one who Why-er, erewhile, formerly Whyles (gen sg of whyle), whilst Whylom, whilom, formerly, once Whynen, whine, whunny
Whyt, white, innocent, specious, flattering, whyte monkes, Cistercians Widwe, widow
Wight, person, man, creature, tung, bit, wht
Wight, adj, active, swift Wighte, weight
Wiket, wicket-gate
Wikke, Wikked, wicked, bad, evil
Wilde, wild, wilde fyr, Greek fire, erysipelas, also a burning pudding-sauce
Wil(e), Wol(e), irreg vb, 2 sg pr wilt, wolt, pl wollen, pt wolde, will, wish, desire Wilful, willing, voluntary Winen, desire
Witow, contr of wilt thou
Wimpel, wimple, a garment of women, folded to cover the head, chin, sides of the face, and neck
Wimpen, cover (as with a wimple) Windas, windlass
Winden, see Wynden
Windy, unstable (like wind)
Winken, wink, shut the eyes, nod, sleep, try to sleep
Winnen, pt sg wan, pl and pp wonnen, win, gain, conquer, get profit Wingsinge, pr p, wincing, starting aside, skittish Wirchen, see Werchen
Wirdes, see Wyerdes
Wirken, see Werchen
Wis, see Ywis
Wisly, certainly, surely, verily Wissen, instruct, teach, tell, show, guide, direct Wis(s)h, see Wasshen
Wisshe, wish
Wist(e), see Witen
Wit, wit, mind, reason, understanding, knowledge, judgment, wisdom, opinion, wites, senses Witen, pt pr vb, sg w(e)st, w(e)it, pl witen, pt wiste, pp wist, know, discover
 See also Npot, Niste, etc With, with, by Withdrawen, pt withdrow(gh), withdraw, subtract Witholden, pp withholden, withhold, retain, detain, retain in service See Gen Prol, I, 511, n Withinne-forth, everywhere within, inwardly Withoute-forth, outwardly Withouten, without, besides, excepting Withseyen, gamsay, deny, refuse, renounce Withstonden, pt wisthstood pp wisthstonden, withstand, oppose Witung, knowledge
Witnessfully, publicly
Witterly, plainly, surely, truly
Wivere, wyvern, snake
Wlatsom, abominable, disgusting, heinous

Wō, woe, also adj, me is as wo For hym as evere I was for any man, LGW, 1985 f
 Wodebinde, woodbine, honeysuckle
 Wodeowvre, wood-pigeon
 Wodewale, green woodpecker
 Wodnesse, madness
 Wold, possession dat phr in wolve
 Wol(d)(e), see Wil(e)
 Wolle, wool
 Wol(le)n, Wolt(ow), see Wil(e)
 Wombe, womb, belly, the depression on an astrolabe Wond(en), see Wynden
 Wonden, cease, desist
 Wonder, adj, wonderful, strange, also adv
 Wonderly, -liche, wondrously Wondermōst, most wondrously Wonders, adv, wondrously
 Wone, wont, custom, abode
 Wonen, Women, dwell, inhabit, pp woned dwelt, accustomed, wont Wonger, pillow
 Woning, dwelling, habitation
 Wonnen, see Winnen
 Wood, woad
 Wood, mad, angry, for wood, because angry, hence, madly, furiously Wooden, be mad, rage
 Wook, see Waken
 Woon, resource, number, abundance, plenty, dwelling-place, retreat Woost(ow), Woot, see Witen
 Wopen, see Wepen
 Worchen, see Werchen
 Worcher, worker, maker
 Word, word, at shorte wordes, briefly, hadde the wordes, was spokesman Word and ende, corruption of ord and ende, beginning and end See MkT, VII, 2721, n Wort, wort, unfermented beer
 Wortes, herbs
 Worthen, pp worthen become, be, dwell get into or upon wel (wo) worth, may it be well (ill) with respect to Worthy, having worth rank, or standing, deserving, excellent (in a general sense)
 West(ow), Wot, see Witen Wouke, Wowke, Wyke, week
 Wounde, wound, plague
 Woven, see Wēven
 Woven, woo
 Wox(en), see Wexen
 Wrak, see Wrēken
 Wrak, sbst, wreck
 Wrang, wrongly (North dial)
 Wrastlen, wrestle
 Wrathen, enanger
 Wraw, angry, fretful
 Wrecche, wretch sorrowful person, also adj
 Wrecchednesse, wretchedness, misery, poverty, poor or miserable act or performance Wreche, vengeance, punishment, wretchedness Wreen, see Wryen (1)
 Wreigh, see Wryen (1)
 Wrēken, pt wrak, pp wrēken, wrōken, wreak, avenge

Wrench, trick, fraud
 Wresten, wrest, force, constrain
 Wreyen, Wrien, betray, disclose
 Wrighte, workman
 Wringen, pt wrong, wring, pinch, squeeze, drive, compel, force a way
 Wrōken, see Wrēken
 Wrong, wrong, had wrong, was wrong
 Wrong, adv wrong, amiss, astray
 Wrōot, see Wryten
 Wrōoth, wroth, angry
 Wroten, tear with the snout, root
 Wro(ugh)t, Wro(ugh)te, see Werchen Wryen (1), Wreen, pt wreigh, hide, cover, clothe, disguise, conceal Wryen (2), see Wreyen
 Wryen (3), turn, bend, turn aside
 Wryten, contr pr 3 sg writ, pt sg wrōot, pl and pp writen, write Wrythen, contr pr 3 sg wryth writhe wriggle, wreath cast forth wreaths or rings Wurchen, see Werchen
 Wurchung, Worchung, machination
 Wyde-where, far and wide
 Wyerdes, Weerdes, Wirdes, weirds, fates, destinies Wyf, gen sg and pl wynes, woman, wife, housewife, dat phr to wyve Wyfhōod, womanhood
 Wyke, see Wouke
 Wyld(e)nesse, wildness
 Wyle, wile, stratagem, subtlety
 Wyn, wine, wyn ape, see Manc Prol, IX, 44, n Wynden, contr pr 3 sg wynt, pt wond, pp wo(u)nden, wind turn, revolve, bend, direct, entwine, intertwine, wander about Wynd-melle, windmill (Kentish dial)
 Wyndren, trim
 Wyr, wire, bit
 Wys, wise, prudent, make it wys, deliberate, hold off etc See Gen Prol I, 785, n
 Wyse, wise, way, manner
 Wyte, blame, reproach charge, accusation Wyten, blame, reproach, accuse

Y (see also I)

Y, pers pron, I
 Y- I-, a prefix (AS "ge-," Germ "ge-") commonly used with past participles, rare, in Mid Eng, as a general verbal prefix (yseen, from AS "geseon") Participles in y- are not entered here separately from their verbs unless the forms might not be recognized or the meaning calls for special record
 Ya, see Ye
 Yaf, see Yeven
 Yald, Yalt, see Yelden
 Yare, ready
 Yate, gate
 Yaven, see Yeven
 Ybedded, pp, put to bed
 Ybenched, supplied with benches.
 Yblent, see Blenden
 Ybleynt, see Blenchen
 Ybliw(e)n, blown, rumored

Ybowed, diverted Ybrend, Ybrent, burnt
 Ycchyng (var Yecching), itching
 Ych, see Ech
 Ychaped, furnished with chapes or metal caps
 Yclenched, clinched, riveted Ycontinued, continuous
 Ycorven, see Kerven
 Ycrased, cracked, crushed, broken
 Ycrowe, see Crowen
 Ydarted, pierced with a dart
 Ydel, idle, vain, empty, in (on) ydel, in vain
 Ydolastre, idolater
 Ydole, idol
 Ydrad, see Dređen
 Ye, see Eye
 Ye, Ya, yea
 Yedding, song ballad
 Yede, pt sg, pl yeden, went, walked Yeer, rarely Yere, pl yeer, yeres, year, dat phr to yere, yeer by yere
 Yefte, see Yifte
 Yeldehalle, gildhall
 Yelden, Yilden, contr pr 3 sg yelt, yalt, pt sg yald pl yolden, yield, submit, pay, restore, requite, refl, betake one's self Yelding, produce
 Yeipen, boast
 Yelt, see Yelden
 Yelwe, yellow
 Yeman, pl yemen, yeoman
 Yemanly, in yeomanlike fashion
 Yen, see Eye
 Yerd, yard, garden
 Yerde, rod, stick, correction, yard (measure)
 Yerne, eager, lively, quick, also adv
 Yernen, yearn, long for, desire Yerning, yearning, longing, affection
 Yeten, pp yeten, pour, shed Yeven, Geven, Yiven, pt sg yaf, pl yaven, imv 2 sg yaf, pp, yeten, give Yevere, giver
 Yexen, hiccough
 Yfare, see Faren
 Yfere, see Infere
 Yfet, see Fechen
 Yfinden, pp yfounden, find Yfit, carried, whirled along Yfounded, founded, based, set on a foundation
 Yfreten, see Freten
 Yfrounced, wrinkled
 Ygerdoned, rewarded
 Ygeten, see Geten
 Yglased, glazed
 Yglewed, glued, fixed fast
 Yglosed, flattered
 Ygrave, cut, graven, engraved, dug up or out, buried
 Ygreved, grieved, injured
 Ygrunde, ground, sharpened
 Yharded, hardened
 Yheeren, hear
 Yherd, haired covered with hair
 Yhevied, weighed down
 Yhight, hight called Yif, if, see If

Yif, imv, give, see Yeven Yifte, Yefte, gift
 Yilden, see Yelden
 Ying, young (North dial)
 Yis, yes, more emphatic than ye, ya
 Yiven, see Yeven
 Ykempt, combed
 Yknet, Ykmit, knotted, joined together
 Yknownen, know discern, recognize See Knownen
 Ykorven, see Kerven
 Ykoud, known
 Ylad, Yled, see Leđen
 Ylaft, see Leven (1)
 Yliad, see Leyen
 Ylie, isle, island
 Ylet, hindered, obstructed See Letten
 Yleten, allowed, left See Leten
 Yleyd, see Leyen
 Yliche, Ylyk, like alike similar, also adv
 Ylissed, eased, relieved
 Yloren, lost See Lesen
 Ylost, lost
 Ylyk, see Yliche
 Ylyke, adv, alike, equally
 Ylymed, caught (as with bird-hme) Ymaad, Ymaked, made, caused Ymagerie, carved work
 Ymaginatyf, given to imagining, suspicious Ymaged, considered, deliberate
 Ymaked, see Ymaad
 Ymasked, enmeshed
 Ymedled, mixed, mingled, confounded Ymel, among (North dial)
 Ymeynd, mingled, mixed
 Ymp, graft scion
 Ympne, hymn, lyric poem
 Ymused, mused, reflected Ynde, indigo, blue
 Ynoh, adv, pl ynowe, enough, also adv
 Ynome, caught, seized, taken, overcome
 See Nimen
 Yok, yoke
 Yolden, see Yelden
 Yollen, Yellen, yell
 Yomanrye (var Yemanrye), yeomanry
 Yon, adj, yon
 Yond, yonder
 Yong, young
 Yonghede, youth
 Yore, yore, of old, long ago, for a long time yore ago(n) long ago Youling, howling lamentation
 Your, your, youre(s), yours
 Youthe, youth
 Youthhede, youth See -hede, suffix Ypiked, picked over Ypleynted, full of complaint
 Ypocras, a cordial drink
 Ypocryte, see Ipocrite Yprayed, bidden, invited
 Ypreved, proved
 Ypulled, plucked (of hairs or feathers)
 Ypurveid, foreseen
 Yqueynt, quenched See Quenchen
 Yquiked, quickened, kindled Yraft, bereft, snatched away See Reven

Yre, Ire, ire, anger
Yrēke (pp of rēken), raked together, covered up Yren, iron
Yrent, torn, taken Yronge, see Ringen
Yronne, see Rennen
Yse, ice
Yseen, pp yseye, yseyn, see, behold, look Ysene, adj, visible manifest Yseye, seen See Seen
Yshad, shed, scattered, spread abroad
Yshaken, shaken, quivering, sparkling Yshent, injured, ruined, blamed, humiliated
 See Shenden
Yshett, shut
Yshore, shorn
Yshove, shoved, borne about Ysmite, smitten, wounded
Ysounded, sunk
Ysped, sped, advanced, worked out See Speden
Yspreynd, sprinkled See Springen (2)
Ystalled, set in a seat, installed Ystonde, stood, been See Stonden
Ystorve, dead See Sterven
Ystrawed, strewn, bestrewn
Ystrike, struck
Ysweped, swept
Ythen, prosper, thrive

Ythewed, mannered disposed, wel ythewed, well-conducted Ythrogen, confined Ythringen, see Thringen
Ytressed, plaited in tresses
Yve, ivy, erbe yve, ground ivy
Yvel, adj evil, ill, also adv
Yvory, Yvoire, ivory
Ywar, aware
Ywent (1) gone See Wenden
Ywent (2), weened, supposed See Wenen
Ywet, wetted
Ywhet, whetted
Ywimpled, covered with a wimple
Ywis, Iwis, Wis, certainly, truly, surely, assuredly Ywist, known Yworthe, pp, become Ywoxen, grown See Wexen
Ywrapped, involved
Ywrithen, wreathed, wrapped about Ywroken, avenged See Wrēken
Ywronge, wrung forced See Wringen
Ywryen, concealed, hidden See Wryen (1)
Yyeve, Yyve, given

Z

Zēles, pl, zeals
Zēdiak, zodiac

PROPER NAMES

PROPER NAMES

A

Abigayl, Abigail, wife of Nabal (I Sam xxv) Absolon, Absalom, (1) son of David, (2) character in Mult
Achademycis, translating Lat "Academicus," the Academic school of philosophy Achaleous, Acheleous, Acheloys (gen), Achelous, a river in Greece, the river-god who took the form of a bull against Hercules Achate(s), companion of Aeneas
Achemenye, Persia
Achetofel, Achutofel, Achutophel (Ahitophel) See II Sam xv, 12
Achille(s), Achilles
Adam, (1) first man, (2) Chaucer's scrivener
Adoon, Adoun, Adonis
Adrastus, king of Argos, one of the seven against Thebes Adriane, Ariadne, daughter of Minos African, Scipio Africanus Major
Affrike, Aufrike, Africa
Agamennon, Agamemnon, Greek leader against the Trojans Agaton, Agathon (or Agatho) See LGW Prof F, 526, n
Agenor, father of Europa
Aglauros, sister of Herse, turned by Mercury to stone Alayn, see Aleyn
Albon, Alban
Albyn, probably Decus Albinus, a contemporary of Boethius
Albyon, Albion
Alcathoe, the citadel of Megara
Alcebiades, Alcipyades, Alcibiades
Alceste, Alcestas, wife of Admetus
Alcion(e), Alcyone or Halcyone, wife of Ceyx Aldebaran, Aldebaran, the star
Alduran, the name of a star See SqT, V, 263, n Alete, Alecto, one of the Furies Aleyn, Alayn, (1) Alanus de Insulis, Alan de Lille (c 1128-1202), (2) a character in RdT
Alfonce, see Piers
Algarsyf, a character in SqT
Algein, Algeiras in Spain
Algomeyse, the star α Canis Minoris Alhabor, Sirius, the dog-star
Ahsa(u)ndre, (1) Alexander the Great (2) Alexandria Aliso(u)n, Alson, (1) characters in WBT and Mult, (2) see Alys Alkabucus, Alchabitus, an Arabian astronomer of the 10th century See Astr, I, 8, 14, n

Alkaron, the Koran
Alla, Aella, king of Northumberland Almachius, Almache, a character in Se-NT
Almageste, the Almagest of Ptolemy See Mult, I, 3208, n Almena, Alcmena, mother of Hercules
Alnath, the star α in Aries
Alocen, Alhazen, Arabian mathematician of the 11th century, famous for discoveries in optics Alys, Alisoun, Alice, the wife of Bath
Ambrose, St Ambrose (c 340-97), bishop of Milan Amete, Admetus, king of Pherae in Thessaly and husband of Alcestas Amphurax, Amphiaraus, husband of Eriphyle, and one of the Seven against Thebes Amphoun, Amphion, king of Thebes and husband of Niobe Anaxogore, Anaxagoras, the Greek philosopher
Anchuses, father of Aeneas
Androgeus, Androgeos, son of Minos Andromacha, Andromache, wife of Hector Aneida See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes to Anel
Anne, (1) St Anna, mother of the Virgin, (2) Anna, sister of Dido Anselm, St Anselm (c 1033-1109), archbishop of Canterbury Anteclaudian, the Anteclaudianus of Alanus de Insulis, a philosophical poem Antecrist, Antichrist
Antenor(e), Anthenor, Antenor, Trojan warrior
Antheus, Antaeus, the giant wrestler, killed by Hercules Ant(h)iochus, Antiochus Epiphanes, king of Syria 175-64 B C Antigone, a Trojan maiden
Antonius, (1) Mark Antony, (2) Antoninus, or Caracalla, emperor of Rome, A D 211-17
Antony, seint, St Anthony, born in Egypt c 250 Antylegyus, Antiochus See BD, 1069, n.
Apia, Via, the Appian Way
Apus, Appius, a character in PhysT
Ap(p)elles, Appelles, celebrated Grecian painter, contemporary of Alexander the Great Ap(p)ollo, Apollo, the Greek divinity
Appollonius, hero of the romance Apollonius of Tyre Aquarius, Aquarie, a sign of the zodiac Aquilon, Aquilo, the north wind
Arabik, Arabic
Arab(y)e, Arabia
Aragon, a kingdom of Spain

Arcadye, Arcadia in Peloponnesus
 Archymoris, used as gen of Archemorus, a name applied by the Seven against Thebes to the child Opheltes, killed by a dragon and buried by the Seven Arcite, Arcite, a character in KnT
 Arcturus, Arctour, the constellation Bootes, also star α in Bootes Ardea, a town in Latium
 Arge, Argon, Argos
 Argeyes, Argives
 Argonautycon (g. pl.), the Argonautica, heroic poem of Valerius Flaccus Argus, (1) the hundred-eyed, (2) the bulder of the Argo, (3) Argus, see BD, 435, n Argyve, Argiva, mother of Cressida
 Aries, Ariete, the Ram, a sign of the zodiac Arionis harpe, Arion's harp, the constellation Lyra Aristochdes, the tyrant of Orchomenos
 Aristotle, Aristotle, Aristotles, the Greek philosopher
 Armoric(e), Armonica, Brittany, Armorican
 Arnold of the Newe Toun, Arnaldus de Villanova, or Arnaud de Villeneuve, 13th century Arpies, Arpus, the Harpies
 Arras, a town in France
 Arrus a character in the Epistola Valeri of Walter Map Arsehel, Arzachel See Astr, n, 45, 2, n
 Arthemise, Artemissa of Caria, who built the Mausoleum to the memory of her husband Mausolus Arthour, Artour, Arthur, king of Britan
 Artoys, Artois
 Arveragus, a character in FranklT
 Ascanus, Askanus, son of Aeneas Assuer(e), Assuerus, Ahasuerus
 Asye, Asia
 Athalantes doughtres, daughters of Atlas, the constellation of the Pleiades Athalus, Attalus III Philometor, king of Pergamus 138-33 B.C., father inventor of chess Athamante, Athamas, king of Orchomenos in Boeotia
 Ateris See HF, 1227, n
 At(t)halante, Atalanta
 At(t)henes (1) Athens, (2) the Athenians
 Attheon, Actaeon
 Attila, Attila the Hun
 Attrides, Atrides, son of Atreus, Agamemnon
 At(t)ropos, Atropos, the Fate
 Augustyn, Austyn, St Augustine (354-430)
 Aurelian, Roman emperor, A.D. 270-75
 Aurelius, Aurelie, a character in FranklT Aurora, (1) goddess of the dawn, (2) see BD, 1169, n Auster, the south wind
 Austyn, see Augustyn
 Averros, Averroes, Arabian physician and philosopher (12th cent.)
 Avycen, Avicenna (980-1037), Arabian philosopher, author of the Canon of Medicine

B

Babilan, Babylonian
 Babiloigne, Babiloyne, Babylon
 Bacus, Bacchus, Bacchus, the Greek divinity Baldeswelle, Baldeswell (Bawdswell) in Norfolk
 Ballenus See HF, 1273, n
 Balhasar, Belshazzar
 Barbarie, barbarian territory
 Barnabo, Bernabo, Viscount of Milan See MkT, VII, 2399, n
 Basile, St Basil (329-79), bishop of Cesarea Basilius, one of the accusers of Boethius Bayard, a name for a horse
 Behal, the devil
 Belle, the Bell, a Southwark inn
 Bellona, goddess of war
 Belmarye, Benmarin, a Moorish kingdom in Africa Benedict, Benet, St Benedict (c. 480-544)
 Bernard, (1) St Bernard, (2) see LGW Prol F, 16, n, (3) 14th cent physician See Gen Prol, I, 429, n
 Berwyk, Berwick-on-Tweed
 Bethulia, Bethulie, city of the Israelites besieged by Holofernes Beves, hero of the romance Sir Beves of Hamtoun Biblis, Byblis, twin sister of Caunus See Ovid, Met, ix, 453 ff Bilyea, Bilis See SqT, V, 1455 n
 Blanche, the Duchess of Lancaster
 Blee, Blean forest See CYT, VIII, 556, n
 Bobbe-up-and-down See Manc Prol, IX, 2, n
 Boece, Boethius
 Boetes, Boetes, the constellation
 Boghtoun under Blee See Blee
 Bole, Bull, the sign Taurus in the zodiac Boloigne, (1) Boulogne in France, (2) Bologna in Italy
 Boreas, the north wind
 Bradwardyn, Thomas Bradwardine (c. 1290-1349), theologian and archbishop of Canterbury Breseyda, Brixseyde, Briseis
 Bret, Briton, Welshman See HF, 1208, n on Glascuron Britaigne, Britayne, Briteyne, Brittany, Britan Brito(u)n, Briton, Breton
 Brixseyde, see Breseyda
 Brok, Brock, a horse's name
 Bromeholm, Bromholm
 Bruges, Bruges
 Brut, Brutus, legendary founder of the Celtic kingdom of Britan Brutus, (1) L Junius Brutus, consul in 509 B.C., (2) M Brutus, the so-called tyrannicide
 Brutus Cassius, see MkT, VII, 2697, n Bukton See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes to Buk
 Burdeux, Bordeaux
 Burgoyne, Burgundy

Burnel the Asse, Brunellus the Ass See NPT, VII, 3312, n Busirus, Busyrdes, Busiris, king of Egypt, slain by Hercules

C (see also K, S)

Cacus, Kacus, a giant slain by Hercules
 Cadme, Cadmus of Thebes, husband of Harmonia Calipsa, Calypso, nymph who loved Ulysses Calistopee, Calyxta, Callisto, an Arcadian nymph changed by Zeus into a bear and subsequently slain by Artemis Calkas, Calchas, the Trojan priest, father of Cressida in Tr
 Cal(l)iope, the Muse
 Calydoigne, Calydoigne, Calydon, ruled over by Oeneus, grandfather of Diomedes
 Calyxta, see Calistopee
 Cambalo, Cambalus, son of Cambuskan See SqT, V, 29 ff, n Cambises, Cambyeses, king of Persia
 Cambyskan, Cambuskan, a character in SqT See SqT, V, 12, n
 Campaneus, Cap(p)aneus, Capaneus, one of the Seven against Thebes Campayne, Campama in Italy
 Canace(e), (1) a character in SqT, (2) character referred to in ML Prol, II, 78 and LGW Prol G, 219
 Cananee, Canaanite
 Cancer, Cancr, a sign of the zodiac
 Candace, an Indian queen
 Cane, Cana
 Cantebregge, Cantebrigge, Cambridge
 Canyos, the Cann, the followers of Canus Canyus, Juhus Canus (or Canus) See Bo, 1, pr 3, 62, n
 Capricorn(e), Capricorn, a sign of the zodiac Caribdis, Charybdis, the whirlpool
 Carrenar, the Kara-Nor See BD, 1028, n
 Cartage, Carthage
 Cassandra, Cassandre, the daughter of Priam who had power of prophecy
 Cassidor(i)e, Cassidorus, Magnus Aurelius Cassiodorus
 Castor, twin brother of Pollux, with whom he is associated in the constellation of Gemini Catalogne, Catalonia a province of Spain Cato(u)n, (1) Cato of Utica, (2) Dionysius Cato, reputed author of the Disticha de Moribus ad Filium
 Catullus, the Latin poet
 Caucasus, Kaukasosus, a mountain range in southwestern Asia Caunterbury, Canterbury
 Caym, Cam
 Cecil(i)e, St Cecilia, who probably perished in Sicily under Marcus Aurelius between 176 and 180
 Cedasus, Soedasus, of Leuctra in Boeotia
 Cenobia, Cenobie, Zenobia, queen of Palmyra, defeated by Aurelian, A D 273
 Cerberus, the dog who guarded the entrance to the Lower World Cerce, Circes, Circe, mythical sorceress who charmed Ulysses

Ceres, the Roman divinity
 Cesar, Caesar
 Cesiphus, Sisypthus, possibly used for Tityus Ceys, Seys, Ceyx, husband of Alcyone Chaldeye, Chaldea
 Charles, Charlemagne
 Chauntecleer, name of a cock in NPT
 Chepe, Cheapside in London
 Chuchevasche, a fabulous cow See ClT, IV, 1188, n Chiron, the Centaur, tutor of Achilles
 Chorus, (1) Caurus, the northwest wind, a stormy wind in Italy (2) used as name of a sea-god, but see LGW, 2422, n
 Cibella, Cybele, the Greek divinity, mother of the gods
 Cienuus, Cyllennus, Mercury, born on Mt Cyllene Cinthia, Cynthia, another name for Diana Cipionus, see Scipionus
 Cypre, Cyprus
 Cipris, Cypride, Cypris, Venus
 Cirrea, Cirra, a town near Delphi and Mt Parnassus Cirus, Cyrus the Elder, founder of the Persian Empire
 Citha, Cithia, Scythia, Scythia
 Citherea, Cytherea, Venus
 Cithero(u)n, Mt Cithaeron, sacred to Bacchus and the Muses apparently confused with the island of Cythera, sacred to Venus
 Clare, St Clara or Clare (1194-1253), founder of the Franciscan nuns Claudian, Claudius Claudianus (4th cent), author of De Raptu Proserpinae Claudius, (1) M Aurelius Claudius, Roman emperor, A D 268-70, (2) a character in PhysT
 Clemence, Clemency, Pity
 Cleo, Cho, the Muse
 Cleopat(a)ras, Cleopatre, Cleopatra Cliternystra, Clytemnestra, wife of Agamemnon Colatyn, L Tarquinius Collatinus, husband of Lucretia Colcos, Colchis, country of the Golden Fleece Colle, (1) name of a juggler, see HF, 1277, n (2) name of a dog Cologne, Cologne
 Conigaste, Congastus, adversary of Boethius
 Constantyn, Constantanus Aier See Gen Prol, I, 429, n Coribantes, Corybantes, priests of Cybele Corynne, probably Corinna, a Theban poetess See the introduction to the Explanatory Notes to Anel
 Crassus, Marcus, the triumvir
 Creon, tyrant of Thebes
 Creseyde, see Cri(s)seyde
 Cresus, Croesus
 Creusa, wife of Aeneas
 Cris(s)eyde, Creseyde, Cressida, heroine of Tr
 Crisippus, Chrysippus See WB Prol, III, 670 ff, n
 Crist, Christ

Cristopher, St Christopher
 Cupide, Cupido, Cupid
 Custance, Constance, a character in MLT
 Cuthberd, St Cuthbert (d 687)
 Cymerie, Cimmer, a mythical people mentioned by Homer Cyprian, an accuser of Boethius

D

Dalida, Dehlah
 Damascien, Damascenus See Gen Prol, I, 429, n
 Damascie, saint, Pope Damasus I (336-84)
 Damyan, a character in MerchT
 Damysse, Damascene, used for Damascus
 Dane, Daphne
 Danao, Danaus, father of Hypermnestra
 Dant(e), Daunte, the Italian poet
 Dardanus, mythical ancestor of the Trojans Dares, D Frygius, Dares the Phrygian, or Trojan, to whom was ascribed a work on the Trojan war Darius, king of Persia
 Daunte, see Dant(e)
 David, Davit, king of the Jews
 Decorat, Decoratus, quaestor c 508
 Decrees, Book of, the Decretals of Gratian
 Dedalus, Daedalus, builder of the labyrinth in Crete Deiphobus, Deiphobe, Deiphobus, son of Priam, a character in Tr
 Delphos, Delphi
 Delphyn, the Dolphin
 Demetrius, king of Parthia
 Democion, Demotion See FranklT, V, 1426, n
 Demopho(u)n, Demophon (or Demophoon), the betrothed of Phyllis Denys, saint, St Denis (Dionysius), first bishop of Paris and patron saint of France
 Depeford, Deptford
 Dertemouthe, Dartmouth
 Deyscorides, Dioscorides, a Greek physician of the 2nd century Dianira, Dianire, Dejanira, wife of Hercules Dido, queen of Carthage
 Diogenes, Greek philosopher
 Diomed(e)s, (1) son of Tydeus, (2) Thracian king killed by Hercules Dite, Dictys of Crete, the reputed author of a work on the Trojan war Dives, the rich man in the parable Doneguld, a character in MLT
 Dorigen(e), a character in FranklT
 Duche, Dutch (German)
 Dunmowe, Dunmow
 Dunstan, saint, St Dunstan, archbishop of Canterbury in 959
 Dyone, Dione, mother of Venus

E

Eacides, Aeacides, grandson of Aeacus, Achilles Ebrayk, Hebrayk, Hebraic, Hebrew
 Ebrew, Hebrew

Ecclesiaste, Ecclesiasticus
 Echo, Ecuo, Ekko, the nymph, whose love for Narussus was not returned Eclympasteyr, see BD, 167, n
 Ector, Hector, son of Priam
 Ecuba, Hecuba, wife of Priam
 Edippus, Edippe, Oedipus, king of Thebes
 Edward, Saint, the Confessor
 Egeus, Aegeus, father of Theseus
 Egipt(e), Egypt
 Egiste(s), Aegyptus, brother of Danaus and father of Lynceus Eglentyne, the Prioress
 Ekko, see Echo
 Elcanor; see HF, 514 ff, n
 Eleaticus, translating Latin "Eleaticus," of the Eleatic school of philosophy Eleyne, (1) Helen of Troy, (2) St Helen Ehakum, Ehakum, a priest See Judith iv, 7 (Vulg) Elhcon(e), Mt Helcon in Boeotia Elish, Elisha
 Elhsos, Elysium
 Elpheta, wife of Cambuskan See SqT, V, 29 ff, n Eltham, in Kent
 Elye, Elijah
 Emeleward, to, towards the Aemilian Way
 Emelya, Emelye, Emilia, Emily, a character in KnT
 Emetreus See KnT, I, 2155-86, n
 Eneas, Enyas, Enee, Aeneas
 Eneydos (ie, "Aeneidos liber"), Aeneid Engelson, England
 Ennok, Enoch
 Ennopye, Cenopia, later Aegna
 Enyas, see Eneas
 Eolus, Aeolus, god of winds
 Epicurus, the Greek philosopher Epist(e)les, Epistles, used of Ovid's Heroides
 Epycureans, Epicureans
 Ercoles, Hercules
 Erphilena, Emphyte, wife of Amphiarus
 Ermony, Armenia
 Ermyr, Armenian
 Erro, see Herro
 Erudice, Eurydice, wife of Orpheus
 Escaphilo, Ascalaphus, changed into an owl by Proserpina Esculapius, Aesculapius, god of the medical art Eson, Eson, father of Jason Esperus, see Hesperus Ester, Hester, Esther
 Ethocles, Eteocles, brother of Polynices Ethiopean, Ethiopian
 Ethna Aetna
 Eva, Eve, the first woman
 Eufrates, Euphrates
 Euripidis, Euripides, the Greek tragic poet.
 Eurippe, Eurypus, a strait between Euboea and Boeotia Europe, Europa
 Eurus, the southeast wind
 Evander, early Trojan settler in Italy
 Ezechas, Ezechue, Hezekiah
 Ezechuel, Ezechel

F

Fabricius, C Fabricius Luscinus, Roman hero
Fawny (Lat "Fauni"), fauns, deities of fields and herds Femenye, the country of the Amazons
Ferrare, Ferrara
Feverer, February
Flaundres, Flanders
Flaundrysh, Flemish
Flegetoun, Phlegethon, the river of fire in the Lower World Flexippe, a character in Tr
Flora, goddess of flowers
Fraunceys, Francis
Frise, Friesland
Frydeswyde, seinte, St Frideswide Fynystere, Cape Finisterre
Fysshtrete, Fish Street

G

Gabriel, the archangel
Gaus Cesar, Caligula (in Bo, 1, pr 4)
Galathee, Galatea, heroine of the Latin dialogue Pamphilus de Amore See Mel, VII, 1556, n Galgopheye, probably the valley of Gargaphia in Boeotia Galice, Galicia in Spain
Galen, (1) Galen, the famous physician, (2) Gallienus, Roman emperor, A D 260-68
Galiones, drinks named after Galen Gallus, Symplicius, Sulpicius Gallus, consul at Rome in 166 b c Ganymede, Ganymedes, cup-bearer to Jove
Gatesden, John of Gaddesden (or Gateden) of Oxford, physician of the 14th century Gaudencius, mentioned in Bo, 1, pr 4, 126
Gaufred, Gaufride, (1) Geoffrey of Monmouth, (2) Geoffroi de Vinsauf See NPT, VII, 3347, n
Gaunt, Ghent, in E Flanders
Gawayn, Gaweyn, Gawan, knight of Arthur's court Gazan, Gaza
Gemini(s), the sign of the zodiac
Genelloun, Genylo(u)n, Ganelon the betrayer of Roland Gerland, Garland, a dog
Germanyn, Germanicus Gernade, Granada
Geroude, the river Gironde Gerveys, a character in MillT
Gilbertyn, Gilbertus Anghius, 13th century writer on medicine Gile(s), Seint, St Aegidius, St Giles, 6th or 7th century Gille, Jill
Glascurion, Glasgerion See HF, 1208, n Golias, Goliath
Go(o)dehuf, the Host's wife (?) See Mk. Prol VII, 1894, n Go(d)ond, Gottland, an island in the Baltic Sea Gower, the poet

Graunson, Sir Otes (or Oton) de Granson, the French poet See Ven, 82, n Grece, Greece, See of Greece, the Mediterranean Gregorie, seint, Gregory the Great (c 540-604) first Pope of that name Grekiyssch, Grekyssch, Grykyssche, Greek Greenewych, Greenwich
Grete See, the Mediterranean
Grisilde, Grisildis, Griselda, heroine of CIT
Guydo de Columpnis, Guido delle Colonne, author of the Historia Trojana
Gy, hero of the romance Guy of Warwick
Gysen, the river Gyndes in Assyria

H

Habradate, Abradates See FranklT, V, 1414, n
Haly, Hah See Gen Prol, I, 429, n Hanybal, Hannibal
Hasdrubal, king of Carthage in 146 b c Hayles, the Abbey of Hailes in Gloucestershire
Hebrayk, see Ebrayk
Hele, Eli (I Sam 1-iv)
Helowys, Heloise, wife of Abelard
Hemonydes the son of Haemon
Herenus, Herynes, Erinyes, the Furies, avenging deities Hereos, Eros See KnT, I, 1872, n Hermanno, son of Zenobia
Hermengyld, a character in MLT
Hermes, Hermes Trismegistus See CYT, VIII, 1434, n Hermus, a large river of Asia Minor
Hermyon, Hermione, daughter of Menelaus
Herodes, Herod
Herro, Erro, Hero, priestess of Venus in Sestus, beloved by Leander
Herry Bailly, Harry Bailly, or Bailif, the Host Hesperus, Esperus, the evening star
Hester, see Ester
Hierse, Herse, sister of Aglauros and beloved of Mercury Hogge, Hodge, nickname for Roger Holderness, Holderness
Homer, Omer, Homer
Horaste, a character in Tr
Horn Childe, hero of the romances King Horn, Horn Childe, etc Huberd, Hubert, the Friar Hugelyn, Ugolino of Pisa
Hugh, of Lincoln, the child martyr
Huwe, Hugh, name of a priest
Hulle, Hull

I (see also Y)

Idra, Idre, Hydra, the monster slain by Hercules
Ilyoun, Ihon, Troy
Imeneus, Hymenaeus, god of marriage
Inde, India
Indus, the great river of India

Innocent, Pope Innocent III Ipomede(u)n, Hippomedon, one of the Seven against Thebes
 Isaide, Isawde, Isoude, Isolde (or Iseult)
 Isaye, Isaiah
 Isiphule(e), Hypsipyle, daughter of Thoas, and deserted by Jason Isope, Aesop
 Isoude, see Isaide.
 Itayl(1)e, Italy
 Iulo, Iulus (or Ascanius), son of Aeneas Ixon, king of the Lapithae, chained to a wheel in the Lower World

J

Jaconitos, Jaconites, in Colchos
 Jakke, Jack
 Jame, Seint, (1) St James, (2) the shrine of Santiago at Compostela
 Jankin, Janekyn, Jerkin (dimin of John)
 Janicula, Janicle, a character in CIT Januarie, January, (1) the name of the month, (2) an old man in MerchT Janus, used for January
 Jason, leader of the Argonauts Jepte, Jephthah, son of Gilead (Judges xi-xii)
 Jeremye, Jeremiah, the Hebrew prophet
 Jerome, St Jerome (c 340-420)
 Jewerye, Juerie, (1) kingdom of the Jews,
 (2) Jews' quarter, Jewry
 Jhesus Syrak, Jesus, son of Sirach
 Joab, leader in David's army
 Joce, St Joce (Judocus), a Breton saint Johan, John
 John, a character in RiT
 John, seint, (1) St John, (2) St John the Baptist, (3) St John Chrysostom Jonas, Jonah
 Jonathas, Jonathan
 Joseph, son of Jacob
 Josephus, author of history of the Jews
 Jove(s), Jove, Jupiter Jovinan, St Jerome's adversary
 Jubaltare, Gibraltar
 Judas, (1) J Maccabeus, (2) J Iscariot
 Judith, slayer of Holofernes
 Juerie, see Jewerye
 Julian, St Julian, patron of hospitality, said to have lived in early 4th century
 Julius, (1) Julius Caesar, (2) July Junc, Roman divinity
 Jup(p)iter, Jupiter, (1) Roman divinity, (2) planet Justinus, a character in MerchT
 Juvenal, the Roman poet
 Juyl, July See also Julius

K (see also C)

Kacus See Cacus
 Kaukasous See Caucasus
 Kayrrud See SqT, V, 808, n
 Kenelma, seint, son of Kenulphus Kenulphus, king of Mercia See NPT VII, 3110, n.

L

Laban, father of Rachel (Gen xxix-xxx)
 Laboryntus, the labyrinth of Daedalus in Crete Lachesis, the Fate
 Lacidomye, Laocedaemon Ladomya, Laodomea, Laudoma, Laodamia, wife of Protesilaus Lameadoun, Lamedon, Laomedon, king of Troy
 Lamek, Lameth, Lamech (Gen iv, 19 ff)
 Lamuel, Lemuel (Prov xxxi)
 Laodomea, see Ladomya
 Latumyus See WB ProI, III, 757, n
 Latyne, Latinus, king of Latium
 Laudomia, see Ladomya Launcelot (de Lake), Lancelot of the Lake, knight of Arthur's court
 Lavina, see Lavyne (1)
 Lavyne, (1) Lavinia, Italian wife of Aeneas,
 (2) Lavinium, ancient town of Latium Layus, Laus, father of Oedipus
 Lazar, Lazarus
 Leandre, Leander of Abydos Lemnoun, Lemnos, a large island in the Aegean
 Lenne, see Astr ProI, 98 f n
 Leonard, St Leonard, patron saint of captives
 Leo, Leon, the sign of the zodiac Leouin, (1) see Leo, (2) the Book of the Lion, see Retractation, X, 1087, n Lepe, a town in Spain
 Lete, Lethe, river of oblivion in the Lower World
 Lettow, Lathuanna
 Lia, Leah, see SecNT, VIII, 85 ff, n
 Libra, a sign of the zodiac
 Libie, Libya
 Limote, probably Elymas See HF, 1274, n
 Lollius See HF, 1467 ff, n
 Longus, more commonly called Longinus
 See ABC, 163, n
 Looth, Lot
 Loreyn(e), Lorraine
 Louys, Lewis, probably Chaucer's son See the introduction to the explanatory notes on Astr
 Loy, Seinte, St Eligius See Gen ProI, I 120 n
 Luc, St Luke
 Lucan, the Latin poet
 Lucifer, (1) Satan, (2) the morning star
 Lucina, a name of Diana Lucrece, Lucretia, Lucretia
 Lucye, Lucia, Lucilia, wife of the poet Lucretius
 Lumbardes, Lombards
 Lumbardye, Lombardy Lybeux, hero of the romance Libeaus Desconus
 Lyde, Lydia
 Lydyens, the Lydians
 Lyeys, Lyas, Ayas, in Armenia
 Lygurge, Lycurgus, king of Thrace Lyma, error for Livia, who murdered her husband, Drusus Caesar (i.e., Drusus Junior)

Lyno, Lynceus, son of Aegyptus, and husband of Hypermnestra Lyyan, Giovanni da Lignaco (or Legnano), Italian jurist of the 14th century

M

Mabely, Mabel, a character in FrT
 Macedo, the Macedonian Macedoyne, Macidonye, Macidoynne, Macedonia
 Machabee, (1) Judas Maccabeus, (2) the books of the Maccabees Macrobes, Macrobeus, Macrobye, Macrobius, the Latin author
 Madrian, possibly St Materne or St Mathurin See MkT, VII, 1892, n Magdale(y)ne, Magdalene
 Mahoun, Makomete, Mahomet
 Maus, May
 Makomete, see Mahoun
 Malkyn, a girl's name
 Malle, Moll (name of a sheep)
 Malyne, Molly
 Manes, departed spirits inhabiting the Lower World See Tr, v, 892, n Mantoan, of Mantua in Italy
 Marcia, Marsyas (wrongly considered feminine by Chaucer)
 Marcia Catoun, Marcia, daughter of M Cato Utcensis Marcian, Marcien, Martianus Minus Felix Capella, a native of Carthage (5th century), author of "De Neystus Philological et Mercurn "

Marcus, March
 Marcus Tullius, Tulyus, Cicero
 Mardochee, Mordecai, in the Book of Esther Marie, sainte, (1) the Blessed Virgin, (2) St Mary the Egyptian
 Mark, St Mark
 Marmoryke, Marmarica or Barca, in northern Africa
 Marrok, Morocco
 Mars, Marte, the god of war
 Martyn, St Martin (c 316-400), bishop of Tours Massynisse, Masynissa, king of the Numidians Mathew, St Matthew
 Maudelayne, Maudeleyne, (1) Magdalen the name of a ship, (2) the treatise De Maria Magdalena, commonly attributed to Origen
 Maure, St Maur (Maurus), d 565
 Maurice, Mauricius, a character in MLT
 Maxime, Maximus, a character in SecNT
 Mecene, Messene (or Messenia)
 Medea, daughter of Aetes, king of Colchus Medes, inhabitants of Media in western Asia Megera, Megaera, one of the Furies
 Meian, Milayn Milan
 Meleagre, Meleager, who slew the Calydonian boar Melesie, Miletus
 Melibeus, Melibee, hero of Mel
 Meneiaus, brother of Agamemnon and husband of Helen of Troy

Mercenrike, the kingdom of Mercia Mercurye, Mercury, the Roman divinity
 Messenus, Misenus, Trojan trumpeter
 Metellus, see WB Prol, III 460, n
 Methamorphosios, Ovid's Metamorphoses See ML Intro, II, 93, n Michelmesse, Michaelmas
 Michias, Micah, Hebrew prophet
 Mida, Midas, wealthy king of Phrygia Middelburgh, Middelburg, in Holland
 M.layn, see Melan
 Minerva, the Roman divinity
 Minos, king of Crete
 Minotaur, monstrous offspring of Pasiphae and a bull Mirra, Myrrha, mother of Adonis
 Moses, Moses
 Monesteo, Mnestheus, a Trojan hero
 Morpheus, god of sleep

N

Nabal, an enemy of David (I Sam xxv) Nabugodonosor, Nebuchadnezzar
 Narcisus, Narcissus
 Narice, used by Chaucer for Ithaca (Boethius, iv, m 3, 1, adj "Neritu," var "Naricu")
 Naso, P Ovidius Naso, Ovid
 Nazarenus, the Nazarene
 Nembrot, Nimrod (Gen x, 8 ff)
 Neptunus, Neptune, the Roman divinity
 Nero, Neroun, the Roman emperor
 Nessus, a Centaur, slain by Hercules
 Newegate, Newgate prison
 Nicerates, Niceratus, put to death by the Thirty Tyrants Nichanore, Nicanor, (1) an officer of Alexander the Great at the time of his capture of Thebes, (2) a general defeated and slain by Judas Maccabeus
 Nicholas, a clerk in MULT
 Nynus, Ninus, traditional founder of Nineveh
 Noe, Noah
 Nonyus, Nonius, satirized by Catullus
 Northfolk, Norfolk
 Note, St Neot (9th cent)
 Nothus, Notus, the south wind
 Nowel, Noel
 Nowelis, humorous for Noes, Noah's Nynyvee, Nineveh
 Nyobe, Niobe
 Nysus, Nisus, king of Megara, father of Scylla

O

Octovyan, Octovyn, Octavian, (1) the Roman emperor Augustus, (2) see BD, 368, n Odenake, Odenathus, ruler of Palmyra, husband of Zenobia Oenone, wife of Paris before he carried off Helen Oetes, Aetes, father of Medea Oloferne, Olofernus, Holofernes, Assyrian king slain by Judith Olyver, Oliver friend of Roland

Omer, see Homer
 Ophion, Ophio, adversary of Boethius
 Oreb, Mt Horeb
 Orewelle, the river Orwell
 Origenes, Origen, early Christian writer
 Orion, Arion, an ancient Greek bard
 Orkades, the Orkney and Shetland Islands
 Orleans, Orleans
 Orpheus, mythical bard, husband of Eurydice Osenay, Oseneve, Oseney, near Oxford
 Osewold, Oswald, the Reeve Ovide, Ovid, the Latin poet
 Oxenford, Oxford
 Oyse, the river Oise

P

Padowe, Padua
 Palamon, a character in KnT
 Palatye, Palathia, probably Turkish Balat Palnurus, helmsman of Aeneas's ship
 Palladion, the Palladium, a statue of Pallas Athena Pallas, the Greek divinity
 Palmyrie, Palmyra, a celebrated city of Syria Pamphulus, Pamphiles Hero of the Latin dialogue Pamphulus de Amore See Mel, VII, 1556 n Pan, the sylvan deity Pandarus, Pandare, a character in Tr
 Pandion, king of Athens, father of Procne (or Progne) and Philomela Panik, name of an unidentified district in Italy
 Papyrian, Aemilius Papinianus, a celebrated Roman jurist, put to death by Caracalla Parcas (acc of Lat pl "Parcae"), Fates
 Paris, (1) the son of Priam, (2) the French city Parmanydes, Parmenides, Greek philosopher Parnaso, Parnaso, Mt Parnassus, the home of the Muses
 Parthes, Parthians
 Parthonope, Parthenopaeus, one of the Seven against Thebes Pathmos, the island of Patmos
 Paul, Poul, (1) St Paul, (2) St Paul's Cathedral
 Paulus, (1) Ludus Aemilius Paulus, the Roman consul, (2) St Paul Paulyn, Decius Paulinus, consul in 498
 Pavie, Pavia
 Pedmark, see Penmark
 Pegasee, the Pegasean (horse), Pegasus
 Pelleus, Peleus, king of Thessaly and father of Achilles Pemon, Piedmont
 Pene, the Punic Land
 Penmark, Pedmark, Penmarch, in Brittany
 Penelope(e), Penelopee, Penelope, wife of Ulysses Penneus, Peneus, river-god, father of Daphne Pepyn, Pepun, king of the Franks
 Perce, Persia
 Percien, Persien, Persian, pl., the Persians

Percyvell, hero of the romance Sir Percyvell of Gales Perkin, Perkin, a character in ChT
 Parnaso, see Parnaso
 Perotheus, Pirithous, friend of Theseus
 Perses, Persians
 Persien, see Percien Pertelote, Partlet, a hen in NPT
 Peter, (1) St Peter, (2) P Alfonse, Petrus Alphonus See Piers
 Petrak, Petrarch
 Petro, Pedro, Peter, (1) king of Spain, (2) king of Cyprus Phanye, daughter of Croesus
 Pharoo, Pharo, Pharaoh
 Phasipha, Pasiphae wife of King Minos of Crete and mother of the Minotaur Phebus, (1) Apollo, (2) the sun
 Pheuseo, a Trojan hero mentioned in Tr
 Phedra, Phaedra, wife of Theseus
 Pheton, Phaethon, son of Helios, the god of the sun Phidoun, Phidon, slain by the Thirty Tyrants Philustens, Philistines
 Philomene, Philomela, sister of Procne Phlostrate, Phlostratus, a character in KnT
 Philotetes, Philoctetes
 Phsiologus, Physiologus See NPT, VII, 3271, n Phtonissa, Pythoness, the witch of Endor Phutoun, the Python
 Phyllis, beloved of Demophon
 Pictagoras, Pithagores, Pittagoras, Pythagoras, the Greek philosopher Pierdes, the Muses, from Pieria, near Mt Olympus, or, daughters of Pierus Piers, Pierce, Peter, P Alfonse (or Alfonse) Petrus Alphonus, a Spaniard, author of the Disciplina Clericalis
 Pigmahon, Pygmalion
 Piramus, Pyramus, lover of Thisbe
 Pirus, Pyrois, a horse in the sun's chariot Pirrus, Pyrrhus, son of Achilles
 Pisces, a sign of the zodiac Pithagores, Pittagoras, see Pictagoras
 Pize, Pisa
 Placebo, a character in MerchT
 Plato, Platon, the Greek philosopher
 Pleyndamour, see Thop, VII, 897, n
 Pleynte of Kynde, the De Planctu Naturae of Alanus de Insulis Pluto, god of the Lower World
 Poilleys, Apulian
 Polphemus, Polyphemus, chief of the Cyclopes
 Polphete, Polyphoetes (?) See Tr, II, 1467, n Polite(s), Polites, son of Priam
 Polixena, Polixene, Polyxena, daughter of Priam, betrothed to Achilles Pollux, twin brother of Castor
 Polydamas, a Trojan hero
 Polymestore, Polymestor (or Polymnestor), king of Thracian Chersonesus, who fought at Troy Polymya, the Muse Polyhymnia

Polymyte(s), Polynices, son of Oedipus and Jocasta, one of the Seven against Thebes Pompe, Pompei, Pompeye, Pompeus, Pompey, the Roman general and triumvir Poo, the Po river
 Poperyns, Poperinghe See Thop, VII, 720, n
 Porcia, Portia, wife of M Brutus Portyngale, Portugal
 Poul, see Paul
 Priam, Priamus, king of Troy
 Priapus, god of fertility
 Proigne, Procne (or Progne), wife of Tereus and sister of Philomela Proserpyna, Proserpyne, Proserpina, wife of Pluto Protheselaus, Protesilaus, husband of Lacedaemona Pruce, Pruyse, Prussia, Prussian
 Prudence, wife of Melibueus
 Pseustus, Presentus (?) See HF, 1227, n Ptholome(e), Tholome, Ptolemy Puella, figure in geomancy Pycardie, Picardy

Q

Quyryne, Quirinus, Romulus

R

Rachel, wife of Jacob, and mother of Joseph Raphael, the archangel
 Rauf, Ralph, name of a priest
 Ravenne, Ravenna
 Razis, Rhazes, 9th-10th century physician of Baghdad Rebekka, Rebekke, Rebekah, wife of Isaac
 Rede See, Red Sea
 Regulus, Marcus, consul in 256 B C
 Remede of Love, Ovid's Remedium Amoris
 Renard, Reynard, common name for a fox
 Rennes, Rennes in Brittany
 Richard, kyng, Richard I Ripheo, Ripheus (or Rhipheus), a Trojan hero
 Robert, sir, name of a priest
 Robyn, Robin, a man's name
 Rochele, Rochelle
 Rodogone, Rhodogone, daughter of Darius
 Rodopeya, Rodopeye, Rhodope, a range of mountains in Thrace Roger, (1) the Cook, (2) Ruggieri, bishop of Pisa Romance of the Rose, French poem by Guillaume de Lorris and Jean de Meun Romulus, legendary founder of Rome
 Ronyan See Words of Host VI 310 n
 Rosarie, Rosarium Philosphorum, a treatise on alchemy by Arnaldus de Villanova Rosemounde, Rosamond
 Rouchestre, Rochester
 Rouncivale, see Gen Prol I, 670, n
 Rowland, Roland, hero of the Chanson de Roland Rubens, figure in geomancy
 Ruce, Russye, Russia

Rufus, a Greek physician of Ephesus in the time of Trajan (A D 98-117)
 Russell, reddish name of the fox in NPT
 Russye, see Ruce

S (see also C)

Sagittarius, Sagittarie, the Archer, a sign of the zodiac
 Salamon, Salomon, Solomon
 Saluce(s), Saluzzo
 Samaritan, the woman of Samaria
 Sampsoun, Samson
 Samuel, the Hebrew prophet Santippe, Santippo (Antipus?), a character in Tr
 Sapor, Shapur I, king of Persia (3d cent A D)
 Sarpedo(u)n, Sarpedon, a Trojan
 Sarra, Sarah, wife of Abraham
 Sarray, modern Tzarev in southeastern Russia Satalye, ancient Attalia, on the southeast coast of Asia Minor Sathan(as), Satan
 Satyr (Lat "Satyrus"), satyrs, wood-dieties Saturne, Saturnus, Saturn, (1) the Roman divinity, (2) the planet Sayne, see Seyne
 Scariot, Iscariot
 Scipoun, Cipouon, Scipio Africanus Minor
 Scithero, Cicero
 Scitha, see Citha
 Scogan, see the introduction to the Explanatory Notes to Scog Scorpio, Scorpoun, a sign of the zodiac
 Scot, a horse's name
 Semyrame, Semyramus, Semyramus, Semyramis, queen of Assyria Seneca, Senec, Senek, the Roman author
 Seneciens, the followers of Seneca
 Senior, the name of a book See CYT, VIII, 1450, n
 Septe, Ceuta in Morocco
 Septem Tryones, Lat "septentriones," the seven plough-oxen used of Ursa Major and Ursa Minor hence, the north Serapion, a physician See Gen Prol, I, 429, n
 Seryen, Syrien, Serian Chinese, a name derived from orp, silk-worm Seyne, Sayne, the river Seine Seynt Amour, William, French writer See Rom, 6763 n Seys, see Ceys
 Sheene, Sheen, now Richmond
 Sheffield, Sheffield
 Sibil(1)e, Sibyl, (1) the Cumaeen Sibyl, (2) Cassandra Sidyngborne, Sittingbourne
 Signifer, the zodiac
 Silla, Scylla daughter of Nisus of Megara Simon, Symoun, Symond, (1) St S the Canaanite (apostle) (2) S the Pharisee, (3) S Magus (see Acts vii, 9), (4) a character in RvT
 Socrates, the Greek philosopher

Sol, Lat for Sun, a name for gold Soler Halle, probably King's Hall at Cambridge

Somer, see Astr Prol 98 f. n
Sophie, daughter of Melibeus
Soranas, see Bo, 1 pr 3, 62, n
Soutwerk, Southwark
Spaigne, Spayne, Spain
Stace, Statius
Stilboun, see Parat, VI, 603, n
Stix, Styx, river of the Lower World
Stoyciens, Stoics
Stratford atte Bowe, Stratford at Bow
Strode, Ralph Strode See Tr, v, 1856, n (at end)

Strother, see RerT, I, 4014, n
Stymphalides, Stymphalis
Surrien, Syrian
Surye, Syria
Susanna, Susanne, Susannah
Swetonius, Swetoun, Suetonius, the Roman historian
Symacus, Symmachus, father-in-law of Boethius

Symkyn, Smkin (dum of Simon), a character in RerT

Symois, Simois a river near Troy
Symond, Symoun, see Simon Symphicus Gallus, see Gallus
Synay, Mt Sinai
Synoun, Sinon, who betrayed Troy into the hands of the Greeks Syrien, see Seryen
Syrius, Sirius, the dog-star
Sysile, Sicily
Sytheo, Sichaesus, Dido's husband

T

Tabard, an inn in Southwark Tagus, the river Tajo in Spain
Talbot, a dog
Tantalus, Tantale, father of Pelops Tarbe, Tharbe, a female character in Tr
Tarquinnus, Tarquyn, Tarquyny, Sextus, son of L Tarquinnus Superbus Tars, Tartary
Tartarye, Tartary
Tarte, Tartar
Taurus, Taur, Tawr, (1) a sign of the zodiac, (2) the constellation Tereus, husband of Procne Termagaunt, Termagant, a supposed heathen idol Tertulan, probably Tertullian (c 160-240)
Tesbee, see Thisbe
Tessale, see Thessalye
Teuta, queen of Illyria, 231 B C
Tewnes, Tums
Tharbe, see Tarbe
Thebes, (1) in Greece, (2) in Egypt
Thelophus, Telaphus, wounded and healed by Achilles's spear Theodomas, Thodamas, a Theban augur
Theodora, wife of Algarisf See SqT, V, 663, n

Theodoric, the Great, king of the Ostrogoths (A D 474-526), who condemned and executed Boethius

Theofraste, Theophrastus, author of the Liber Aureolus de Nuptus
Theseus, duke of Athens
Thesiphone, Tisiphone, one of the Furies
Thessalye, Tessale, Thessaly
Thetis, a Nereid, mother of Achilles
Thisbe, Tesbee, Tisbe, a Babylonian maiden, beloved by Pyramus Thoas, Toas, father of Hypsipyle
Thobre, (1) Tobit, (2) Tobias, son of Tobit

Tholome, see Ptholome(e)
Tholosan, of Toulouse (wrongly applied to Statius)

Thomas, (1) St T the apostle, (2) St T à Beket, (3) a character in SumT

Thopas, hero of Sir Thopas
Thymalao, son of Zenobia Thymeo, the Timaeus of Plato
Thymothee, Timotheus
Tiburce, Tiburtius, a character in SecNT
Ticuis, Tityus, tortured by vultures in the Lower World

Tisbe, see Thisbe
Titan, the sun
Titus Livius, Livy, the historian
Toas, see Thoas
Tolletanes (pl), of Toledo
Trace, Thrace
Tramysene, Tremessen (Tlemçen)
Trist(r)am, the lover of Isolde Triton, a sea god

Troian, Trojan
Troianyshe, Trojan
Troilus, hero of Tr
Trophee, see MkT, VII, 2117, n
Trotula, person of uncertain identification See WBT, III, 670, n

Trumpington, Trumpington, near Cambridge

Trygwille, Trigulla, adversary of Boethius
Tubal, Tubal-cain, son of Lamech (Gen iv 19, 22)

Tullus, (1) M Tullus Cicero, (2) Tullus Hostilius, king of Rome

Turkeys, Turkish
Turkye, Turkey

Turnus, king of the Rutuli who fell by the hand of Aeneas

Tybre, Tiber river
Tydeus, father of Diomedes

Tyle, Thule
Tyrene, Tyrrhenian, Tuscan

Tyresie, Tyresias, the Theban soothsayer
Tyne, Tyre

Tyro, of Tyre
Tytus, (1) see Titus, (2) for Dite (?), Dictys of Crete

U

Ulixes, Ulysses
Urban, Pope Urban I, A D 222
Ursa, Ursa Major

V

Valence, probably Valence near Lyons, France
 Valentyn(e), St Valentine
 Valeria, wife of Servius Valerian, a character in SecNT
 Valerius, Valerie, (1) Valerius Maximus, Latin author, (2) see LGW Prol G, 268 ff, n Venus, (1) the goddess, (2) the planet
 Venyse, Venice
 Verone, Verona
 Vesulus, Monte Viso, in the Maritime Alps
 Vincent, of Beauvais, 13th century author of Speculum Historiale etc Virgile, Virgilius, Virgil, the Latin poet Virginia, a character in PhysT
 Virginius, a character in PhysT
 Virgo, a sign of the zodiac
 Visevus, Vesuvius
 Vitulon, Witelo, Polish physicist of the 13th century
 Vulcano, Vulcanus, Roman divinity

W

Wade, see MerchT, IV, 1424, n
 Walakye, Wallachia
 Walter, a character in ClT
 Walys, Wales
 Ware, in Hertfordshire
 Watlynge Street, Watling Street, i e, the Milky Way Watte, Wat (for Walter)
 Wilkyn, a character in WB Prol
 William, (1) the Conqueror, (2) see Seynt Amour Wyndesore, Windsor

X

Xantippa, Xantippe, wife of Socrates

Y (see also I)

Yarbas, Iarbas, rejected suitor of Dido
 Ykarus, Icarus, son of Daedalus
 Yole, Iole, beloved by Hercules
 Ypermystra, Ypermystre, Hypermnestra daughter of Danaus Ypocras, (1) Hippocrates (5th cent B C), (2) a cordial named after him Ypolita, Hippolyte according to one tradition a leader of the Amazons and married to Theseus Ypotys, see Thop, VII 897, n
 Ypres, a city in Flanders
 Ysaac, Isaac
 Ysidis, Isis, an Egyptian divinity See HF, 1844, n Ysidre, saint, St Isidore
 Ysoude, see Isaude Ytacus, Ithacus, the Ithacan (Ulysses)
 Yve, St Ives See ShpT, VII, 227, n.

Z

Zacharie, Zakarie, Zechariah
 Zanzis (or perhaps Zauzis), apparently for Zeusis, the Greek panter Zeno, of Elea in Italy, b about 488 B C, may have perished in an attempt to deliver his native country from a tyrant Zepherus, Zephrus, Zephyrus (or Zephyr), the west wind