PREFACE

THE coins which are described in this volume are those found in Old Corinth during the excavation of that site by the American School of Classical Studies at Athens from the beginning of the work in 1896 until the end of the year 1929, excluding the even more numerous coins found by Mr. T. Leslie Shear in his Corinth excavations, which are to be published by him. It is based upon a card catalogue of all the coins, which contains, besides the descriptions as given in this report, the date and place of finding and page reference to the note-book of the finder. This catalogue, arranged by years, is at the School in Athens, but will ultimately find its place in the coin-room of the new Corinth Museum. The coins themselves are in the Numismatic Museum at Athens.

A beginning of a coin catalogue, summarizing the results of the earlier years of excavation, was made by Mr. C. A. R. Sanborn, when he was a member of the School in 1910-1913. This was replaced and added to by a card catalogue of coins from the earlier years of excavation on deposit in the Numismatic Museum at Athens by Mr. Alfred R. Bellinger, Fellow of the School in 1925-1926. Mr. Bellinger also made a card catalogue of coins found in 1925, and that catalogue, after careful revision, is included in the present report. It has since been published by Mr. Bellinger.¹ He also contributed the chapter on coins to the report of the excavations on Acrocorinth in 1926.² In the later work of making the catalogue two members of the School have given valuable assistance. When it was discovered that a large number of coins at the Numismatic Museum had not been cleaned, the task of cleaning was undertaken and carried through most cheerfully and efficiently by Miss Mary Zelia Pease, Fellow of the School in 1928-1929. Part of the catalogue of coins of the season of 1929 was made by Mr. Frederick Waage 3d, Agora Fellow of the School for 1929-1932. Hearty thanks are extended to these members of the School for their coöperation.

Much of the study of coins has been done at the Numismatic Museum in Athens, and the invariable kindness and helpfulness of the staff there, Dr. Oikonomos, Mr. Constantopoulos, and Mrs. Varoucha-Christodouloupoulou, is fully appreciated.

Thanks are also extended to Messrs. Hill, Mattingly, and Robinson of the British Museum, to Dr. Milne of the Ashmolean Museum, to Mr. Lloyd of the Fitzwilliam Museum, and to M. Babelon of the Cabinet de Médailles for the privilege of consulting their collections and for helpful advice. Especial gratitude is felt to Mr. Charles T. Seltman for his help and encouragement at the difficult beginning of the work.

To Mr. Newell and Mr. Noe, of the American Numismatic Society, the most sincere thanks are here tendered for their generous hospitality at the Museum of the Society in New York, and for their invaluable assistance in the last stages of the work. Mr. Newell kindly read the whole manuscript and made many valuable suggestions, and Mr. Noe gave freely of his time and experience in the preparation of the plates.

The catalogue was originally undertaken at the suggestion of Professor Edward Capps, Chairman of the Managing Committee of the School, and he has cheered on the work from time to time. The members of the Committee on Publications have fulfilled with promptness and care their strenuous task of seeing the work through the press. To them, many thanks.

The few separate publications of coins from single excavated sites have generally dealt with a shorter, and more or less homogeneous, period. Excavations of a city like Corinth, occupied almost continuously from earliest times of coinage to the present, offer considerable difficulty to the cataloguer, who must deal not only with Greek, Roman, and Byzantine coins, but also with those of the Frankish and Venetian rulers of a later time. The Turkish conquest has been taken as the end of the period covered.

Plates have been made from all the Greek types which are represented by specimens clear enough for the purpose, and from some which are very poor but represent new or variant types. Many are too bad for photographic reproduction, as the soil of Corinth seems to be especially destructive to bronze. A few non-Greek coins have been included: the two issued from the mint at Corinth by Villehardouin, and a few Byzantine types not previously identified, which, it is hoped, may be taken into consideration in the much needed study of the Byzantine period.

INTRODUCTION

THE COINS IN RELATION TO THE EXCAVATED AREA.¹

It is not the purpose of this report to discuss the deductions, historical, political, or economic, to be drawn from the coins found, but it is hoped that a mere list of them may prove of value to students of the history of Corinth. To numismatists, a report on the coins from the excavation of a city of great importance through the whole history of Greece may throw useful light on some of the problems in this field.

Although the excavation was begun in 1896 and has been continued from year to year, with an interval of nine years from 1916 to 1924, only a small fraction of the whole city has been touched. In the main, this small portion surrounds the old temple of Apollo, extending east and south in great stoas, with the fountain of Peirene, the Peribolus of Apollo and the Lechaemum Road, and westward to the Odeum and the fountain of Glauke. To the north, the Greek Theatre and its neighboring streets and buildings are included in the excavations by Mr. Shear.

In all this area a layer of earth, washed down from the slope of Acrocorinth, sometimes as much as twenty or twenty-five feet deep, lay over the Roman levels of the old city. In these upper layers, quite close to the surface, the excavator may come upon a few modern Greek and Turkish coins, or perhaps a very few Venetian coins of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, or one or two with the Greek legend Ionikon kratos combined with the lion of St. Mark on one side and Britannia on the other. These coins have not been included in this report.

Mingled with these, and below them for a considerable depth, are found the Byzantine coins which constitute more than half the total number found. They are distributed over the whole area. In several instances, large numbers of coins of a single emperor have been found together. Coins of John I, Romanus I, and Manuel I have been especially numerous in such "pockets". The term "pocket", as defined by the excavators, is applied to an unusual number of coins found together, but without a container and not in a mass, so that they cannot properly be called a hoard.

In this Byzantine layer occur also the denarii of the Frankish Princes of the Morea, who were masters of the Peloponnesus for nearly a century, and the small autonomous bronze coins of Corinth, with Pegasos and trident, which will be discussed later.

The Byzantine city was built in and on the ruins of the Roman city, and it is this latter which now lies partly open to view in the excavated area and from which the most important coins have come.

Julius Caesar rebuilt Corinth and settled it as a Roman colony in 44 B.C., a century after its destruction by the Roman army, and it remained a Roman colony until it was again destroyed by Alaric in 395 A.D. On the basis of the coinage, this long period is divided into two parts. During the first part, from 44 B.C. until the time of Septimius Severus and his family, with the exception of a short interval from the death of Galba to the reign of Domitian, the city had the right of coinage and, notwithstanding their Latin legends, the coins preserve the old Greek tradition. They have for reverse types true Greek gods, Poseidon, Athena, Aphrodite, Asclepius, Dionysus, and others, with their usual attributes; the city-goddess is Tyche with turret-crown, not Roma; the local legendary heroes, Bellerophon with Pegasus and the Chimaera, Ino with Melicertes, Melicertes with his dolphin, and Isthmus are regularly represented, and Pegasus flies through the whole series.

These coins are found, in no great numbers, in the earliest parts of the Odeum, Peirene, and the Peribolus of Apollo, in the Roman market, and other places where remains of the earlier Roman city have come to light. With these and above them, and mingling in some places with the Byzantine, are the coins of the second period, when Corinth had been deprived of the privilege of coinage and was using the imperial coinage of Rome.

Of the pre-Roman city almost no ruins have been found. Apparently when the Roman city was built what remained of the Greek city was destroyed. The few Greek coins occur in the same sections as the earlier Roman ones.

COINS OF CORINTH IN THE GREEK PERIOD

Only ten silver coins from the Corinthian mint have been found in the excavations. One of these is a stater of the well-known Pegasus type which has for symbol on the reverse the same archaic Zeus which appears on certain bronze coins to be discussed later.

Most of the Greek coins found, 286 in number, are the small Pegasus-trident bronze pieces. They come from all parts of the excavations and from all levels. They are now and then turned up by Corinthian peasants working in their fields.

The metallic composition of these coins,¹ added to the notoriously destructive soil of Corinth, results in rendering many of them almost, if not quite illegible. On less than a third can the symbols to right and left of the trident be made out with certainty, so that a classification or chronological arrangement of them seems difficult, if not impossible. Their number, however, and their general distribution indicate that they were minted in enormous quantities or, as is far more probable, that their period of use extended beyond the terminal date usually assigned to them. Mr. Shear, in the article previously cited, reports these coins as constituting "one of the largest groups". Of our total of 752 Greek coins of Corinth, including those issued in the Roman period, these coins show a percentage of 38. Although they appear in all layers, they are most abundant in excavations of the Roman level. It seems a logical conclusion that they were in circulation until the fall of the city in 146 B.C. The presence of very similar types of Pegasus and trident on early coins of the Roman period suggests that these coins were at least in existence, if not in circulation, down to the refounding of Corinth.

For the period during which Corinth was held by Macedon, Head recognized the local coinage of a few bronze pieces, four types in all.¹ Of these types only the last two appear in our list, with a total of seven coins. The scarcity of Macedonian bronze coins of the same period seems to indicate a distribution of small change quite inadequate for the use of a large city, even in one of its less prosperous periods. It might be argued that all the bronze coins, as well as the silver, were destroyed with the city, but the survival of so large a number of the Pegasus-trident type is against this assumption. The Corinthian mint was open during this period for the coinage of silver money, and the facts seem to indicate that the coinage of small bronze pieces was also going on.²

For the period during which Corinth was a member of the Achaean League, according to Head (loc. cit.) the only bronze coins struck at Corinth were Federal coins bearing the types of the League. Again the question arises, what became of these coins? Coins of Corinth, issued under the League, appear to be quite rare, both in museums and other collections and with dealers. None have been found in our excavations at Corinth, and in all only five coins of the League issued by other member states. Both Argos and Sicyon, the two most important neighbors of Corinth, had the right to issue municipal coins while in the League, and several cities of far less importance than Corinth had the same right.³ It seems only reasonable, therefore, to assume that Corinth also was permitted to continue the issue of its common bronze type for local use. Sir Charles Oman in 'Problems of the Later Coinage of Corinth', Num. Chron., 1926, p. 33, suggests that Corinth was permitted by the League to issue Pegasus staters of its old type.

Other small bronze coins of this period have not been previously recorded, but a small group of six coins of two similar types (nos. 14 and 15), the style and technique of which place them in the second century B.C., are here ascribed to Corinth. A specimen of no. 14, on which the symbols are not clear, is in the McClean collection (no. 6982), and was attributed by Grose to Mantinea. The obverse types of these coins are a head of Athena and a head of Apollo. On both reverses the central figure is a naked archaic Zeus holding a thunderbolt low in front in one hand and a long staff with stiff hanging fillets in the other. In the two coins of no. 14 Zeus is standing left, there is a Σ in front of him and a torch behind. These coins are slightly concave, clean-cut, and of good style. They are not from the same die. The four coins of no. 15 are not of so good a style, the Zeus is a little heavier and stiffer, and the technique not so fine. None of them is in good condition, and the symbols are not clear, but one, at least, has a torch, another shows part of a torch or a Σ . In this class, the Zeus faces right, and the attributes are reversed so as to bring the staff behind.

The Zeus of these coins suggests an archaic bronze statue, such, for instance, as may have stood in the temple of Zeus near the recently excavated temple of Asclepius where Pausanias saw a bronze statue of Zeus.¹ Copies of statues from temples occur on some of the Corinthian staters, and among them an archaic Zeus which seems to be a copy of the same statue as that represented on the coins in question. It is included by M. Adrien Blanchet in his 'Représentations de statues sur des statères de Corinthe',² and is mentioned by Head in B.M.C. (Cor.), pp. xxiv and xxvi in a similar list.³

These coins are without an indication of the city which issued them. That the Σ does not stand for the city appears from the fact that a similar coin in the Ashmolean Museum has A in place of Σ and a different symbol. These letters must therefore stand for the magistrate's name. Both Σ and A occur in this use on the Pegasos-trident type. It is possible that the absence of a city-mark is due to the fact that Corinth was, at the time of issue, a member of the Achaean League.

COINS OF CORINTH AS A ROMAN COLONY

A. COINS ISSUED UNDER DUOVIRI.

During the period of one hundred and thirteen years, from the rebuilding of Corinth as a Roman colony until the death of Galba, the coinage was under the direction of magistrates, elected annually and called duoviri, one or both of whose names appear regularly on their coins with the title II VIR . Every fifth year, when the census was taken, they were named Duoviri Quinquennales, the title generally appearing on the coins as II VIR QVIN .

A thorough study of the coins of this period was made in 1899 by Mr. Earle Fox,⁴ who eliminated many "ghosts" of early catalogues and arranged the series, so far as is possible, in chronological order. His arrangement is followed in this catalogue. All of his twenty-three classes and most of his sub-types are represented in our list of 224 coins. It is now possible to supply the missing name of the colleague of M. Ant. Orest. in class VII, as Cn. Pub. Regulus. The same name appears with that of L. Paconius Flam., who held office in the time of Claudius, about the year 50 (class XIX). This man is perhaps a descendant of the earlier magistrate.

Under his class VIII (p. 101, 16 b) Fox noted a coin of these duoviri with athlete and race-torch for obverse and reverse types, as mentioned in the catalogue of Rollin and Feuardent for 1862, but questioned the correctness of the description. Five examples of this type have been found, and it is catalogued as IX b. No coin of Fox's doubtful Class VIII 16 b, based upon Cohen's description, has come to light.

Our one coin of Class XII (= Fox XI, 19) shows the word ITER following the names, and there is no room for P R F before it (see PLATE II, 34). But this does not dispose of the question of prefects at Corinth. In Class XI (= Fox X, 18) Fox was inclined to take P R F as part of the name of Heius Pamphilus and to question the evidence for prefects acting as duoviri at Corinth (loc. cit., p. 93). That a prefect might serve as duovir is proved by an inscription which reads T M A N L I O T F C O L I V V E N C O A E D P R A E F I. D. I I V I R.¹ Mr. West suggests that Juvenus was acting as the personal representative of Tiberius, probably in the quinquennial year 32/3. The position of the P R F on the obverse side of the coin with I T E R and the official C O R is more suitable if it is a title, especially as, on one of our coins, there would be enough space for it after P A M P H I L O if it belonged to his name.

One new pair of duoviri is included in our list as Class V, represented by seven coins of three sub-types. They were found in various parts of the excavations from 1903 to 1929. The duoviri are M. Antonius Theophilus and P. Aebutius. The latter had previously been duovir with C. Pinnius under Mark Antony, whose head appears on their coin (Class IV). Of M. Antonius Theophilus Plutarch says (Antony 68, 3) that he was Antony's manager (διοικητής) at Corinth, to whom Antony, before Actium, sent his friends "to be kept in safety until they can make peace with Caesar". He continues, "This Theophilus was the father of Hipparchus, who had the greatest influence with Antony, was the first of Antony's freedmen to go over to Caesar, and afterwards lived in Corinth." Another passage of Plutarch (Antony 73, 2) mentions Hipparchus as already with Augustus before Antony's death. He appears twice as duovir, once with C. Servilius in Class VIII and again—I T E R—with M. Novius Bassus in Class IX. Probably Theophilus and Aebutius were appointed to office early in the reign of Augustus. The first quinquennial year of his reign was 24/3 and they may be assigned tentatively to that year. The coins are clearly of an early date. They are very small, especially in sub-class a (11 and 12 millimetres) in which the V I R is omitted on both sides and quinquennales is abbreviated to Q V and Q. In this group the dolphin and trident are similar to those on anonymous coins which have been ascribed to this period.

No coins of this class have C O R, and the absence of the city-name caused Imhoof-Blumer² to describe sub-classes b and c as "probably" of Pella. Sub-class c had previously been given by Mionnet³ to Parium. On the basis of Imhoof-Blumer's attribution, Fox gave a coin of sub-class a to Pella, revising the reading of the name.⁴ This coin from Fox's collection is now in the British Museum and the inscription is read as [M] A T H E O P L I I Q. It is interesting to read that the coin was forwarded to Fox 'as of Corinth'. One would like to know its provenance. Two specimens of sub-class c were bought in Corinth recently.

In all three sub-types the names, when given in full, are in the nominative. This is unusual, but there is precedent for it in one coin of Class XIV, d, which has both names in the nominative, although the ablative is the usual form.⁵ In Class XXIV the name regularly appears as Agrippae, but in one coin from the excavations it is Agrippa,⁶ so that whether it is nominative or ablative, it is a variant from the usual form.

M. Antonius Theophilus adds one more name to the long list of Greeks who held high office in Corinth under the Romans. According to Strabo (VIII, 6, 23), Caesar settled his new colony largely with freedmen—ἐποίκους τοῦ ἀπελευθερικοῦ γένους πλείστους. Probably many of these were Greeks. With the remnant of the old inhabitants who remained in the ruined city or returned to it after its destruction by Mummius, and, with other Greeks who were enfranchised by Roman emperors or their representatives and given citizenship in Corinth, they helped to maintain the old Greek spirit under Roman rule.

Of the duoviri who issued coins, at least ten appear from their names to be of Greek origin. Besides Theophilus and Hipparchus, M. Ant. Orest. was probably a Greek freedman of Mark Antony. The name C. Julius alone or with Greek cognomina, Nicephorus, Polyænus, and Hera, points to enfranchisement by Julius Caesar. Pamphilus and Chilo have Greek names. C. Memmius Cleander was probably enfranchised by P. Memmius Regulus, Governor of Achaëa under Caligula, and T. Claudius Anaxilaus had the emperor Claudius as his patron. A. P. Caninius Alexiadae f. Agrippa is named in two Corinthian inscriptions (West, loc. cit., nos. 65 and 66), indicating the Greek origin of this important family which furnished two duoviri.

Inscriptions found at Corinth give the names of other Greek duoviri, who apparently issued no coins. T. Claudius Dinippus (West, nos. 86-90) and Cn. Babbius Philinus (West, nos. 131-132) were both duoviri quinquennales. The famous Spartan family of the Euryclids was also honored in Corinth. C. Julius Laco, son of Eurycles, was duovir quin. in the time of Claudius, perhaps in the year 42/3, and his son Spartiaticus was II VIR QVINQ ITER before 50 A.D. (Cf. West, nos. 54, 67, 68.) Mr. West also suggests that the C. Julius Hera—who served with P. Aebutius Sp. f. as duovir qui. iter. under Augustus (Class X), may have been C. Julius Heraclanus, a relative, possibly the brother, of Eurycles.¹ These inscriptions furnish additional evidence in favor of the theory that money was not issued every year but only from time to time, as required.

A comparative table of the Classes as catalogued and Fox's list is added, with a few certain and some doubtful dates.

B. ANONYMOUS COINS

There is a series of small bronze coins from the Corinthian mint on which no names appear, either of duoviri or of emperor. These anonymous coins have on one side, and occasionally on both, the legend COR or CORIN; some of them have on one side the letters SE, others have COL. They include, as types, the usual Corinthian subjects, Pegasos, dolphin, trident, Melicertes, and Isthmus. They are linked by subject, inscription, size and general appearance with the smaller coins of the duoviri of the time of Augustus and later, and have been placed in this catalogue immediately after the coins with names of duoviri.

One extremely interesting group has a head of Poseidon and the inscription COL on the obverse and various athletes,—boxers, runner, and discus-thrower—on the reverse. On one of them, no. 87, the pose of the runner is like that on the coins of the duoviri Bassus and Hipparchus, Class IX, b. They were undoubtedly issued on the occasion of the Isthmian games and probably the duoviri coin above mentioned was minted on a similar occasion. Fox² attributed these coins to the time of Domitian, with a qualifying “probably”, on the basis of the inscription COL, but this appears insufficient ground for so placing them. In connection with the games Domitian issued coins of the same type as those of his successors, namely, large coins with ISTMIA in a pine-wreath on the reverse and the emperor’s head on the obverse. It is probable that coins of duoviri which have the magistrate’s names in a wreath (Classes IV b, VIII b, X, XI, XIII, XX c) have some association with the Isthmian games. All of these duoviri except those of Class XX, who acted under Nero, held office during the time of Augustus, and on the coins of the two earliest classes, IV b and VIII b, the obverse is a head of Poseidon similar to the one on the anonymous coins. It may be inferred that this fashion in coin-types was most in vogue during the time of Augustus and that the athletic types belong to this period.

C. FROM DOMITIAN TO GETA

The greatest value of the coins of this period is for the study of Corinthian sculpture and architecture. The Numismatic Commentary on Pausanias of Imhoof-Blumer and Gardner, published originally in the Journal of Hellenic Studies for 1885, 1886, and 1887, and illustrated by coins from the principal museums of Europe, is so complete that very few new types are to be added from our excavations. A glance through our catalogue, however, does perhaps bring out two points of interest. First, all the emperors used the same types, based frequently on a statue, doubtless in Corinth itself, as Imhoof-Blumer, Gardner and Blanchet¹ believe. Secondly, the coin-maker had great freedom in his representation of the statue or the building, as the coins vary considerably in detail. For example, Ino, a common type on Corinthian coins, appears with and without Melicertes in her arms, with Isthmus seated before her, and with a sea-god or a dolphin at her feet. Melicertes himself may be sitting or standing or lying on the dolphin, with or without the pine-tree which appears to suggest the pine-grove in which his shrine stood. Poseidon may be in the form of the great statue in the harbor of Cenchreae, or seated within a shrine. Isthmus with a rudder in each hand, Aphrodite with the shield as mirror, Artemis hunting, Nike and Tyche occur in fairly uniform presentations. But interesting variations occur. Nike may hold the purse of prosperity as in no. 227. Tyche, as city-goddess, may have the rudder of the commercial city instead of the patera (no. 209). Aphrodite may wear the turreted crown of Tyche as the city-goddess of Corinth (no. 218).

On the earliest coin representing the "armed Aphrodite" (no. 101, a coin of Domitian), the shield, though held in both hands, is resting on a pillar. The same pillar appears on a coin of Hadrian (N. C. P. pl. FF xvi), where the statue is represented in a temple. The question at once arises whether the original statue in the temple on Acrocorinth may not have had the pillar. Later coins have one or two Erotes before and behind the goddess, and on one of them the child is standing directly under the shield, which seems to be resting on his head.

Under the later emperors, especially Septimius Severus and his family, the die-cutters apparently strove to outdo their predecessors, and, since there were no new statues to copy, made groups by combining separate statues. Undoubtedly the group of Asclepius and Hygieia was a copy of a group in the temple of Asclepius which has been recently excavated (cf. Paus. ii, 4, 5), but Poseidon and Dionysus (no. 198), Hermes and Aphrodite (no. 208), Poseidon and Aphrodite (no. 218), were grouped together by the coin-makers from separate statues which sometimes appear alone on coins.

Even representations of buildings vary somewhat in detail. The circular temple of Melicertes appears with five equidistant columns (no. 111), with three columns on each side (nos. 151 and 152), or with two columns on each side (no. 186). Of extreme interest are the coins on which an attempt is made to present a complete scene. The most ambitious is one of Acrocorinth with the temple at its summit and trees and shrines at its base and Pegasus flying off (no. 181). One of the coins of Antoninus Pius (no. 149) represents the harbor of Cenchreae with temples at the sides, a statue of Poseidon in the centre, and ships coming in.

Two new types add to the problems of those who are attempting to reconstruct the Roman city. A coin of Septimius Severus (no. 192) represents the Scylla-fountain, already known from several coins, as in an architectural façade with steps leading up to it and an arcade, with statues, above. Another coin (no. 153) not previously published represents a small shrine under a palm-tree with a seated figure within, possibly Poseidon with a dolphin, and a worshipper approaching. A small temple of Poseidon, with Triton acroteria and a palm-tree beside it, is illustrated by Imhoof-Blumer in 'Choix de monnaies grecques', pl. II, no. 51.

Of distinctly Roman subjects there are but few. The genius of the colony is represented sacrificing at an altar on one coin of Domitian (no. 104) and two of Hadrian (nos. 123 and 124) and, without the altar, on one of Marcus Aurelius (no. 161). Victory is represented only once (no. 103), while Nike is one of the most frequent reverse types. Hadrian, Lucius Verus, and Commodus are shown on horseback with right hand raised, in the common Roman coin-type inscribed adventus augusti. Caracalla is represented riding down a fallen enemy and striking downwards with his spear, as in Roman coins of the profectio type. On this coin, however, the composition of the group is strongly suggestive of the coins which represent Bellerophon on Pegasus striking downwards at the Chimaera below, a common Corinthian coin-type.

D. CORINTHIAN TESSERAE

The term "tesserae" is here applied, somewhat loosely it is granted, to a small number of coin-like bronzes, belonging, it seems probable, to the early Roman period. There are two main types, but all alike have the obverse plain and the reverse type rather crudely stamped in a shallow and irregular incuse. They run from 19.5 to 21 millimetres in diameter.

One type bears a dolphin to right and the letters DD (decreto decurionum). This signature gives them at once an official value, as the decuriones ranked above the duoviri as municipal magistrates. The other type has a Pegasus flying right, similar to those on the anonymous coins, and with the same inscription COR. It therefore appears to be semi-official. The dolphin sometimes, but not always, has Melicertes lying upon it, and in one case the pine-tree which appears on the coins with emperors' portraits on the obverse (e.g. Antoninus Pius, no. 137) is present. A specimen in the British Museum has the pine-tree.

Fox¹ mentions two specimens in the Paris collection of an obverse with Pegasus and COR and "with a perfectly plain reverse". These two pieces probably belong here, and doubtless others have been overlooked or disregarded by cataloguers, as not being true coins.

These "tesserae" were found with the early Roman coins, eight of them in the Odeum. Others came from Peirene, from the Peribolus of Apollo and along the Lechaëum Road. They seem to have been used for some other purpose than money, and to have been authorized by the municipal senate as special limited issues, perhaps on the occasion of an athletic festival, to be used as admission tickets of honoured guests.

COINS OF GREEK STATES OTHER THAN CORINTH

The total number of coins from Greek states other than Corinth is not large, and their evidence presents little of general interest. A rather large proportion are from pre-Roman times. More than half of them come from the Peloponnesus. The neighboring city of Sicyon leads the list with 106 out of a total for the Peloponnesus of 266. Argos is next with 64, of which 50 are of the Roman period, and Patrae, the other Roman colony of the Peloponnesus, is third, with 24. It is noticeable that association with the West has left very little evidence in the coins, as there is only one coin from Italy, one from Syracuse, and one from Carthage.

ROMAN COINS

Three coins of the Roman Republic of the century when Corinth is assumed to have been in ruins after its sack by Mummius suggest the possibility of some contact with Rome before the rebuilding of the city, while coins of the later republic probably were brought by Caesar's men.

During the time when the colony had the privilege of coining its own money, no large number of coins from the imperial Roman mint were lost. Naturally most of the money in circulation was from the local mint. The reigns of Antoninus Pius and Marcus Aurelius show an apparent increase in intercourse with Rome, as well as a relatively large output of local issues. After the closing of the provincial mint, the city apparently lost its importance to some extent. Relatively few coins were found for the next century, although the reigns of Severus Alexander, Gallienus, Aurelian, and Probus yield more than the average number, and there is a noticeable increase from the time of Diocletian.

With the transfer of the government to Constantinople, under Constantine the Great, Corinth became more active and attained a high degree of prosperity, which reached its highest point in the long reign of Constantius II, whose coins appear in enormous numbers in Corinth, and, in fact, in all of Greece. This period of prosperity seems to have continued until the sack and burning of the city by Alaric in 395, after which, except for the coins of Arcadius, only dwindling numbers of Roman coins appear.

The Roman coins have been catalogued in as concise a form as possible, by giving the inscription and type of reverse, with references to Cohen and to Roman Imperial Coinage, as far as published. Where the inscription on the obverse differs from that of the reference, it has been noted. An attempt has been made to assign the various types to the mints, but as nearly all of the coins are in bad condition, the results are incomplete. The mint-marks, small and at the edge of the flan, are frequently missing or illegible. It does appear, however, that, for a time after the establishment of the earlier eastern mints, the coins found in Corinth come from western as well as eastern mints, but that, beginning with Constantine the Great, although coins from western mints still appear, there are increasing numbers from eastern mints, especially from Constantinople, Nicomedia, and Thessalonica.

It is of interest that of the many types listed by Cohen for the Constantinian emperors, relatively few were distributed in Corinth and these were small bronze coins, mostly of the military issues. For instance, only 31 types of Constantine I were found in the excavations at Corinth, while the 682 coins of Constantius II are distributed among 17 types. Of these coins of Constantius II, 44 are of the gloria exercitus type and 329 of the fel. temp. reparatio type with a soldier spearing a fallen horseman.

BARBAROUS IMITATIONS OF LATE ROMAN COINS, THE SO-CALLED VANDALIC COINAGE

When the British Museum Catalogue of the Coins of the Vandals, Ostrogoths, and Lombards was published by Wroth in 1911, the coins which he called Vandalic had been reported only from Africa and Sicily, with one hoard from South Italy. He therefore suggested that they were coined in Africa, after the settlement of the Vandals there in 429. He adds, "To the Vandal period they may well belong, but their issuers would seem to have been some tribe or people less civilized than the Vandals."¹

About one hundred partly legible coins of this class have been found in Corinth. As many more which have nothing visible on either side were rejected. That these could have been made in Africa, with which Corinth had no connection, is impossible. They must have been made at some eastern mint. They are found with the coins of the later Roman emperors, especially Valentinian II and Arcadius, whose types they frequently copy. Their general appearance is that of the small Roman coins, in fact, many of them look like old Roman flans re-used. Sometimes very small pieces, from five to ten millimetres in diameter, with nothing on them, and looking as if they had been cut down for use as "small change" are found with them.

The finding of these coins in Corinth in such numbers implies the presence there of the people who were using them. Now a great invasion of barbarians took place at the end of the Fourth Century, when Alaric the Goth overran the Peloponnesus and withdrew northward in 395, having sacked and burned Corinth. It seems reasonable to suppose that these barbarous coins were their money, made perhaps in the abandoned Roman mints to the north where old dies might be found for models and bronze ready for use.

BYZANTINE COINS

More than half of the total number of coins found in the excavations are Byzantine, and of these a majority come from the time of Alexius I, John II, and Manuel I, whose coins add up to the enormous number of 1500. In spite of the quantity of Byzantine coins found, there are practically no new types to be added to those listed in the British Museum Catalogue. There is one type, which is here ascribed to Alexius I (no. 126), which does not appear there. These coins are always badly struck, many of them apparently re-struck, but the head is certainly that of Alexius, though none of the specimens shows the determining inscription.

A bronze scyphate type of which 37 examples were found, all worn so much that the inscription is lost, is ascribed to John II on the basis of its similarity to a larger billon coin of that emperor (B.M.C., p. 562, type 6).

FRANKISH AND FOREIGN COINS

The earliest coins of the Villehardouin princes of Achaea were minted at Corinth, and the fine design of a castle-gate surmounted by the cross may be taken to be a conventionalized representation of the fortress on Acrocorinth (see PLATE X, 2). Schlumberger ascribes both this type and that with reverse of the Genoa gate to William Villehardouin between the year of his accession, 1245, and the year 1250, when he moved his court and mint to Clarenza. The numbers of coins of the two issues, 194 of the first and 137 of the second, seem disproportionately large as compared with 37 of those from the Clarenza mint unless it be assumed that Corinth sank suddenly into total inactivity with the removal of the court. Probably the city was less prosperous, but it is also possible, as suggested by Bellinger¹, that the Acrocorinth type was at least begun by Geoffrey Villehardouin II, second Prince of Achaea, and that William either continued his brother's type for a time or adopted the Genoa-gate type for his coins from 1245 to 1250.

Coins of the kings of France and of various French feudal lords and bishops attest the presence of French travellers in Achaea or, at least, the circulation of French money in Greece at this time. Eight English pennies of the short-cross and long-cross types, which were widely circulated in Europe during this period, are doubtless to be similarly explained.

Venice, the last state to hold Corinth before its final conquest by the Turks, issued a special coinage for her extensive Levantine possessions, and a few of these coins have been found scattered about the city.

HOARDS

Three hoards, all of late Byzantine times, and not of great importance, are recorded from Corinth excavations during the period 1896–1929.

The first, a hoard of seventy-four coins of Isaac I, was found on April 30, 1929, stuck together in a badly corroded mass, but without a container. The coins are of interest because all three varieties of the type described on p. 140, no. 108 (cf. PLATE X) were present.

The other hoards are French and belong, supposably, to the period of Frankish occupation of the Morea. One was a bag of money found in a Byzantine house, April 29, 1907. It contained, with a silver ring, 119 coins of the Bishops of Clermont, one of the Bishops du Puy, and one gold coin of Alexius I. (Cf. p. 156, nos. 35, 36, 37, and p. 141, no. 116.)

A smaller collection of coins was found on August 17, 1905, in dug earth, with bits of the cloth in which they had been put adhering to some of the coins. It consisted of five coins of Henry II of Saxony, minted in Lucca, and nine of the Bishops of Valence (p. 158, nos. 45 and 46).
